Morley, George (1597–1684), Bp. of *Winchester. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became rector of Mildenhall, Wilts, in 1641. He was ejected as a royalist in 1648 and was abroad until the Restoration, conducting services in many places for the Anglican exiles. Soon after his return (1660) he became Dean of Christ Church and later in the year Bp. of *Worcester. On 23 Apr. 1661 he preached the Coronation Sermon and in May took a prominent part at the *Savoy Conference. He was translated to Winchester in 1662. Despite his close associations with the *High Church party, his theology was *Calvinistic. His writings, however, were short and mostly occasional. He was a great benefactor, notably to the diocese of Winchester, and rebuilt Wolvesey Palace. He was also the patron of T. *Ken, whom he made his chaplain in 1665.

A. Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), 4 (1820), cols. 149–58. F. Bussby, 'An Anglican in Exile', CQR 156 (1965), pp. 426–38; id., 'George Morley, Bishop of Worcester 1660–62', Transactions of the Worcester Archaeological Society, NS 37 (1961), pp. 11–23; id., 'George Morley; Bishop of Winchester, 1662–1684', CQR 158 (1967), pp. 432–42. W. Hunt in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 74–8.

Mormons. The popular name for the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints'. They were founded in Manchester, New York, in 1830 by Joseph Smith (1805–44), who claimed to have been given, through a revelation, The Book of Mormon. This, together with the Bible and two other works, Doctrine and Covenants and The Pearl of Great Price, comprise the Mormon canon of Scripture. In 1843 Smith had another revelation sanctioning polygamy. In 1844 he was killed by a mob in Carthage, Ill., near the Mormon establishment at Nauvoo. Brigham Young (1801–77), an able leader and administrator, succeeded him as President of the Mormons and in 1847 moved their headquarters to Salt Lake Valley in Utah. The practice of polygamy brought them into conflict with the Federal Government until 1890, when Wilford Woodruff, then their President, advised his followers to conform to the law. In 1978 the priesthood was opened to 'all worthy male members . . . without regard for race or color', thus ending a ban on Blacks from full membership. In the 1936 US census Mormons numbered just under 775,000; by 1993 they claimed over 8 million members, of whom just under half were in the *United States of America.

The Mormons accept a modified form of the doctrine of the *Trinity, in which Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are believed to be three separate Gods united in a common godhead of purpose and perfection. Their teaching has a strong *Adventist element; they hold that Israel will literally be gathered together and the ten tribes restored and that Christ will personally reign over a new earth. They maintain that after His resurrection Christ ministered briefly in America and that Zion will be built in the W. hemisphere. They lay great stress on missionary activity, both in the USA and elsewhere, and each male is expected to devote two years to this work at his own expense. They control considerable resources, since members are expected to devote one tenth of their gross income to the Church. In addition to local churches (called 'wards'), Mormons build temples (45 by 1993), in which alone various ceremonies can be performed; these include marriages and baptisms for the dead. Mainstream Mormonism continues to condemn the practice of polygamy, but some breakaway groups engage in it, and it is official doctrine that the custom of plural marriage will be restored at the Second Coming. The largest offshoot is the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints', which has its headquarters in Independence, Missouri.

The Mormons use the AV of the Bible, with certain retranslations by Smith. The Book of Mormon first pub. at Palmyra, NY, 1830; A Book of Commandments, comprising revelations to Smith and others, pub. at Independence, Mo., 1833; it was enlarged as Doctrine and Covenants (Kirtland, Oh., 1835); The Pearl of Great Price, which comprises selections from Smith's writings, was first pub. in Liverpool, 1851; all these works are available in many edns. The large lit. on the Mormons incl. B. R. McConckie, Mormon Doctrine (Salt Lake City, 1958; 2nd edn., 1966); W. Mulder and A. R. Mortensen (eds.), Among the Mormons: Historic Accounts by Contemporary Observers (New York, 1958); N. F. Furniss, The Mormon Conflict 1850–1859 (New Haven, Conn., 1960); J. B. Allen and G. M. Leonard, The Story of the Latter-day Saints (Salt Lake City, 1976; 2nd edn. [1992]); L. J. Arrington and D. Bitton, The Mormon Experience: A History of the Latter-day Saints (New York and London, 1979); K. J. Hansen, Mormonism and the American Experience (Chicago [1981]); R. Gottlieb and P. Wiley, America's Saints: The Rise of Mormon Power (New York [1984]; repr. San Diego, New York, and London [1986]). J. Shipps, Mormonism: The Story of a New Religious Tradition (Urbana, Ill., and Chicago [1985]); P. L. Barlow, Mormons and the Bible: The Place of Latter-day Saints in American Religion (New York and Oxford, 1991).

On Joseph Smith, see Lucy Smith (mother), Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet and his Progenitors for many Generations (Liverpool, 1853); F. McK. Brodie, No Man Knows my History (New York, 1945; 2nd edn., 1971; London, 1963); R. L. Bushman, Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism (Urbana, Ill., and Chicago [1984]), with bibl.

Morning Prayer. See MATTINS.

Morone, Giovanni (1509–80), Bp. of Modena. He came of an old and distinguished family of Milan, where his father, Ieronimo Morone (d. 1529), was chancellor. In 1529 he was nominated Bp. of Modena by *Clement VII, but was prevented by the opposition of Cardinal Ippolito d'Este from taking possession of his see. After various diplomatic missions on behalf of the Pope, he became nuncio to Germany in 1536 and was present at the Diets of *Hagenau (1540), *Ratisbon (1541), and Speyer (1542). Like J. *Sadoleto, he showed considerable sympathy with the Reformers' grievances and tried to establish less embittered relations. In 1542 he was created cardinal and nominated with Paul Parisio and R. *Pole to preside over the forthcoming Council at *Trent, but though his reforming zeal did much to keep the prospect of the Council alive he did not eventually take part at the opening group of sessions. In 1557 he was incarcerated by *Paul IV in the Castel Sant'Angelo for supposed heresy on justification, the invocation of saints, and the veneration of relics. He was completely cleared of these charges under the more liberal *Pius IV, who employed him during the concluding sessions of the Council of Trent to win the goodwill of the secular powers needed to ensure the Council's success. In his later years he was employed on diplomatic missions to Genoa (1575) and Augsburg (1576), and in 1578–9, as Cardinal Protector of England, he took an active part in administering the *English College at Rome.

F. Dittrich (ed.), Nuntiaturberichte Giovanni Morones vom deutschen Königshofe, 1539, 1540 (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte. In Verbindung mit ihrem historischen Institut in Rom herausgegeben von der Görres-Gesellschaft, 1, Teil 1; 1892); W. Friedensburg (ed.), Nuntiatur des Morone, 1536–1538 (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, Abt. 1, Bd. 2; 1892); id. (ed.), Nuntiaturen Fabio Mignanelli's 1538–1539 und Giovanni Morone's Bischofs von Modena 1539 (ibid. 3; 1893); id. (ed.), Nuntiatur Giovanni Morone's Bischofs von Modena, 1539 Juli–Oktober (ibid. 4; 1893); L. Cardauns (ed.), Nuntiaturen Morones und Poggios, Legationen Farneses und Cervinis, 1539–1540 (ibid. 5; 1909); id. (ed.), Gesandtschaft Campegios, Nuntiaturen Morones und Poggios, 1540–1541 (ibid. 6; 1910). M. Firpo and D. Marcatto (eds.), Il Processo inquisitoriale del Cardinal Giovanni Morone (5 vols., 1981–9). Modern Life by N. Bernabei (Modena, 1885). G. Constant, La Légation du Cardinal Morone près l'empereur et le concile de Trent, avril décembre, 1563 (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 233; 1922). J. Grisar, 'Die Sendung des Kardinals Morone als Legat zum Reichstag von Augsburg 1555', Zeitschrift des Historischen Vereins für Schwaben, 61 (1955), pp. 341–87. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 10 (1911), pp. 575 f.; P. Paschini in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1420–4; H. Lutz in NCE 9 (1967), p. 1150, all s.v. See also bibl. to TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Morris, William (1834–96), English artist and author. He was educated at Marlborough and Exeter College, Oxford, where contact with the *Oxford Movement stimulated his interest in the Middle Ages. He studied Anglican theology, but, abandoning his plan to take Orders, he embraced the intellectual and social movement associated with the names of T. *Carlyle, J. *Ruskin, and C. *Kingsley. D. G. *Rossetti persuaded him to give up architecture and devote his energies to painting. In 1861 Morris took part in the foundation of a firm established to give artistic form to objects of everyday life. A series of romances, modelled on G. *Chaucer, and published under the single title, The Earthly Paradise (3 vols., 1868–70), established his literary fame. They were followed by poems and a free translation of the Aeneid (1875). In the following years he became increasingly convinced that the prerequisite of healthy art was a sound social life, and that this could be achieved only by the regeneration of society. In 1883 he became a member of the Democratic Federation and in 1884 the leader of the Socialist League, which sought to promote a social revolution and issued the periodical Commonweal. His *Dream of John Ball (1888) gives a philosophy of history. When his socialist ideas seemed destined to remain unfulfilled, he turned again to romances, dealing either with the remote past or the distant future. In 1890 he founded the Kelmscott Press. Morris's main ideal, to which all his various activities were devoted, was the reintegration of life and art, the unity of which he held had been broken up by the specialization and mechanization which had begun at the end of the Middle Ages.

Collected edn. of his works, 24 vols., London, 1910–15, with introd. by his daughter, M. Morris, in vol. 1, pp. ix–xxxi. Extracts from his writings also ed., with introd., by M. Morris (2 vols., Oxford, 1936). Letters, ed. N. Kelvin (4 vols. in 5, Princeton, NJ, [1984–96]). The primary authority is the Life by J. W. Mackail (2 vols., London, 1899). Modern studies by E. P. Thompson (ibid., 1955), P. Thompson (ibid., 1967; 3rd edn., Oxford, 1991), P. Henderson (London, 1967), J. Lindsay (ibid., 1975), and P. Faulkner (ibid., 1980). R. Watkinson, William Morris as designer (1967). C. Harvey and J. Press, William Morris: Design and Enterprise in Victorian Britain (Manchester and New York [1991]). W. S. Peterson, The Kelmscott Press: A History of William Morris's Typographical Adventure (Oxford, 1991). T. Scott, A Bibliography of the Works of William Morris (1897). J. W. Mackail in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 197–203.

Morrison, Robert (1782–1834), first Protestant missionary in *China. A native of Morpeth in Northumberland, he was apprenticed to a last-maker. He studied theology in his spare time. In 1798 he joined the *Presbyterian Church. He became a member of the *LMS in 1804, went to the Missionary Academy at Gosport, and, after studying medicine and astronomy, as well as some Chinese, was ordained and sent to Canton in 1807. Here with great difficulty he secured lessons in Chinese, which could not then be taught to foreigners. In 1809 he became translator to the East India Company. In 1814 he published a Chinese grammar and a translation of the NT, based partly on an old *Jesuit version. In 1818 he finished a translation of the OT, and in 1818 he founded the Anglo-Chinese College at Malacca (charter, 1820). His chief work, the Chinese Dictionary, appeared in 6 vols. in 1821 and remained a standard work for a long time. It was followed, in 1823, by the publication of the whole Chinese Bible in 21 vols. He also translated the BCP and a large number of hymns and tracts.

Memoirs of the Life and Labours of Robert Morrison, compiled by his widow, with critical notes on his Chinese works by S. Kidd (2 vols., 1839). M. Broomhall, Robert Morrison (1924). R. K. Douglas in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 111 f.

mortal sin. The traditional designation of the most serious category of sin (called in 1 Jn. 5: 16 'sin unto death'); in the RC Church it is now also officially described as 'grave sin'. Acc. to Catholic teaching such sin consists in a deliberate act of turning away from God as man's last end by seeking satisfaction in a creature. This frustration of God's purpose is held to involve the loss of sanctifying grace and eternal damnation, unless it is followed by adequate repentance. To fall into this category a sin must be committed with a clear knowledge of its guilt and with full consent of the will, and must concern a 'grave matter'. It is required that where circumstances allow every such sin committed after Baptism must be confessed to a priest; but if such confession is impossible, the desire to do so and an act of *contrition are sufficient for obtaining God's pardon. See also VENIAL SIN.

Mortalium Animos. The Papal encyclical, issued on 6 Jan. 1928, 'On Fostering True Religious Unity', which forbade RCs to take part in such reunion movements as *Faith and Order.

Text in AAS 20 (1928), pp. 5–16.

mortification. An ecclesiastical term used to describe the action of 'killing' or 'deadening' the lusts of the flesh through spiritual self-denial and the infliction of bodily discomfort. Fasting and abstention from pleasure are among the many means of mortification. It is because Christians have died with Christ in Baptism that they are bidden to mortify the works of the flesh (Rom. 8: 13, Col. 3: 3–5). Though M. *Luther protested that works were of no avail in putting the old nature to death, both he and other 16th-cent. Reformers insisted on a discipline of mortification as a consequence of the righteousness that comes through faith. See also ASCETICISM.

Mortmain. A term used for the condition of land that could not be alienated because it was held by an ecclesiastical or other corporation. Statutes of Mortmain, having as their purpose the setting of limitations on the Church's power of acquiring property, date from an early period. In England, ch. 43 of Magna Carta as revised in 1217 attempted to deal with the problem. The drastic Mortmain Act 1279 forbade anyone under pain of forfeiture to buy, sell, or receive lands or tenements and thereby cause them to come into mortmain (per quod ad manum mortuam terrae et tenementa hujusmodi deveniant quoquo modo). The laws, which met with indifferent success and were constantly evaded, were often re-enacted and altered. Of more recent statutes the most famous is the Charitable Uses Act 1735 (commonly known as the 'Mortmain Act'), which in 1736 imposed restrictions on the devising of property to ecclesiastical uses. Much of the law of mortmain was repealed by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act 1888, and the concept was finally laid to rest by the Charities Act 1960.

Text of the third issue of Magna Carta (1217), ch. 43, is repr. in W. *Stubbs (ed.), Select Charters and other Illustrations of English Constitutional History (9th edn. by H. W. C. Davis, 1913), p. 343; that of the Mortmain Act 1279, with introd., ibid., pp. 450–2; Eng. tr. of the latter in Gee and Hardy, pp. 81 f. (no. 28). L. Shelford, A Practical Treatise on the Law of Mortmain and Charitable Uses and Trusts (1836), esp. pp. 1–266, with Eng. tr. of the relevant statutes in appendix. S. [G.] Raban, Mortmain Legislation and the English Church 1279–1500 (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 17; 1982). On more recent legislation, O. D. Tudor, On Charities (5th edn., by H. G. Carter and F. M. Crashaw, 1929), pp. 413–72, with texts of the 1888, 1891, and 1892 Acts. W. Kahl, Die deutschen Amortisationsgesetze (1879). On mortmain in France, E. Magnin in DDC 1 (1935), cols. 468–71, s.v. 'Amortissement', with bibl.

Morton, Thomas (1564–1659), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at York and Halifax and at St John's College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1586 and taught logic for several years. In 1598 he became rector of Long Marston, near York, and later Dean of *Gloucester (1606), Dean of *Winchester (1609), Canon of York (1610), Bp. of *Chester (1616), of *Lichfield and Coventry (1618), and of Durham (1632). As a resident diocesan, he preached regularly and patronized preaching ministers. On the abolition of episcopacy in 1646 he was deprived and lived for the rest of his life in retirement. He was a well-known anti-Roman controversialist, among his numerous writings being Apologia Catholica (1605), prob. written with the assistance of J. *Donne; A Catholic Appeal (1609); Of the Institution of the Sacrament of the Blessed Body and Blood of Christ (1631); and De Eucharistia Controversiae Decisio (1640).

Funeral Sermon by J. Barwick, Dean of St Paul's, with Life of Morton appended (London, 1660). Another Life 'begun by R. B., Secretary to his Lordship [i.e. Richard Baddeley] . . . and finished by J. N., D.D., his Lordship's Chaplain [Joseph Naylor]' (York, 1669). P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), no. 206. K. [C.] Fincham, Prelate as Pastor: The Episcopate of James I (Oxford, 1990), pp. 88, 253–63, and 312. R. B. Prosser in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 160–6.

Moschus, John (b. c.550; d. 619 or 634), 'Eukratas', spiritual writer. In c.575 he retired from the world to the monastery of St Theodosius, near *Jerusalem. Later he journeyed widely, with his friend *Sophronius, the future Patr. of Jerusalem, visiting or settling at many notable centres of monasticism, among them Egypt, Mt. *Sinai, *Antioch, *Cyprus, and Rome. His 'Pratum Spirituale' (Λειμών, i.e. 'The Meadow') contains a large collection of anecdotes on the monastic life, derived from his personal experience and from communications of others. The book became extremely popular as a devotional manual and its text was continually added to and revised.

Gk. text, ed. F. *Ducaeus, in Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 2 (1624), pp. 1057–169, and J. B. *Cotelerius, Ecclesiae Graecae Monumenta, 2 (Paris, 1681), pp. 341–456; suppl. chs. from MS Par. Reg. 2464, pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 87. 2851–3112; Lat. tr. by A. *Traversari, orig. pub. Venice, 1475, repr. in PL 74. 119–240. Crit. text, with Eng. tr. and comm., by P. Pattenden in preparation; id., 'The Text of the Pratum Spirituale', JTS NS 26 (1975), pp. 38–54. Fr. tr. of the Pratum, with introd. and notes, by M. J. Rouët de Journel, SJ (SC 12; 1946). N. H. Baynes, 'The Pratum Spirituale', OCP 13 (1937), pp. 404–14, repr. in id., Byzantine Studies and Other Essays (1955), pp. 261–70; E. Mihevc-Gabrovec, Études sur la Syntaxe de Ioannes Moschos (Ljubljana, 1960); H. Chadwick, 'John Moschus and his friend Sophronius the Sophist', JTS NS 25 (1974), pp. 41–74, repr. in id., History and Thought of the Early Church (1982), no. 18. J. S. Palmer, El Monacato oriental en El Pratum Spirituale de Juan Mosco (1993). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 379–81 (no. 7376). E. Mioni in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 632–40, s.v. 'Jean (160) Moschus'; P. Pattenden in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 140–4, s.v. 'Johannes Moschus', with further refs.

Moses, the Founder and Lawgiver of Israel. Acc. to the *Pentateuchal narrative, he was born in Egypt at a time when Hebrew male children were under sentence of drowning and owed his life to being hidden in a basket and rescued by Pharaoh's daughter (Exod. 2: 1–10). After living the life of a shepherd in the desert for 40 years, he received a Divine commission to rescue the Hebrews from the bondage of Egypt (Exod. 3). After much opposition from Pharaoh, which was met by the infliction of the ten plagues on the Egyptians, on the night of the *Passover Moses led the people out of Egypt (Exod. 7–12). During the journey across the desert they frequently rebelled against Moses, but by his mediation they were given *manna for food and the Ten *Commandments to guide their common life. On reaching the Desert of Paran, Moses dispatched spies to the Promised Land. When exaggerated reports of the strength of the inhabitants were brought back, the Israelites again turned against Moses and incurred the Divine sentence that they should wander in the desert for 40 years. Later Moses and *Aaron, because of their unbelief, were told that they would not enter the Promised Land (Num. 20: 12). Moses, however, was granted a sight of it from Mt. *Pisgah. Shortly afterwards he blessed the tribes of Israel (Deut. 33) and died on Mt. Nebo in Moab.

Opinions on the reliability of this account range widely from those who would regard the narrative about Moses as substantially true to those who would deny his historical existence altogether (see PENTATEUCH). The great majority of biblical scholars would at least agree that some such commanding figure as Moses is presupposed by the unity of the Israelite tribes and that it is highly unlikely that the Hebrew people would have sought their beginnings in bondage unless such had been the fact. The dates assigned to Moses vary widely (see EXODUS).

In Christian tradition Moses takes a prominent place. In the Gospels he appears at the Transfiguration Scene as the Representative of the Law (Matt. 17: 3 and parallels). In Heb. 3: 1–6 his mission is compared on a lower plane with that of Christ. A Jewish tradition preserved in the 'Assumption of *Moses', acc. to which St *Michael and the Devil contested for the body of Moses, is alluded to in Ep. of Jude (v. 9). In later tradition he became the subject of many, often extravagant, legends.

Besides comm. on the Books of the Pentateuch and histories of Israel, E. Sellin, Mose und seine Bedeutung für die israelitisch-jüdische Religionsgeschichte (1922). M. *Buber, Moses (Oxford, 1946); E. Auerbach, Moses (Amsterdam, 1953 [Ger.]; Eng. tr., Detroit, 1975). H. Cazelles and others, Moïse, l'homme de l'alliance (special issue of Cahiers Sioniens, 1955). H. Schmid, Mose: Überlieferung und Geschichte (Beiheft zur ZATW, 110; 1968). R. Martin-Achard and others, La Figure de Moïse (Publications de la Faculté de Théologie de l'Université de Genève, 1 [1978]). H. Cazelles, A la recherche de Moïse (1979). G. W. Coats, Moses, Heroic Man, Man of God (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 57; Sheffield [1988]). I. Abrahams and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 12 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 371–411, s.v.

Moses, The Assumption of (Ἀνάληψις or Διαθήκη Μωυσέως). A composite Jewish work, written in Hebrew or Aramaic during the first half of the 1st cent. AD. It contained a speech of *Moses to *Joshua, prophesying the history of the Israelite nation, and probably also an account of Moses' death and taking up into heaven. It appears to have been the work of a *Pharisee who wished to protest against the rapid secularization of his party and recall it to the Law and the old ideals. It was soon translated into Greek, and a few phrases of this edition are probably preserved in Acts 7: 36 and Jude 9, 16, 18. Part of a Latin version, made from the Greek, survives; but for the rest, apart from one or two brief fragments, the work has been lost.

Lat. text discovered and pub. by A. M. Ceriani (ed.), Monumenta Sacra et Profana, 1, pt. 1 (Milan, 1861), pp. 55–64. Crit. edn. by R. H. *Charles, The Assumption of Moses translated from the Latin Sixth Century MS. (1897). Facsimile of Ceriani's text, with Fr. tr., notes and full introd., by E. M. Laperrousaz (Semitica, 19; 1970). R. H. Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 407–24; H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (ibid., 1984), pp. 601–16. J. Priest in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 1 (1983), pp. 919–34. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 278–88, with bibl. J. B. Frey in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 403–9, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament, 6', with bibl.

Moses bar Kepha (*c.*815–903), *Syrian Orthodox bishop. A native of Balad in Mesopotamia, he was educated at a nearby monastery. He was elected Bp. of Mosul *c.*863, and held office for about 40 years, taking the episcopal name of Severus. He is said to have written commentaries on most Books of the Bible; parts of those on Gen., the Gospels and the Pauline Epistles survive. He also wrote a number of homilies and treatises on liturgical subjects which are largely still unpublished.

Lat. tr. of De Paradiso, by A. Masius (Antwerp, 1569), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 91. 481–608; Exposition on the Liturgy ed. R. H. *Connolly and H. W. Codrington, Two Commentaries on the Jacobite Liturgy (1913), with Eng. tr. pp. 24–90; part of his Hexaemeron ed., with Ger. tr., by J. Bakoš, Archiv Orientální, 2 (1930), pp. 327–61, 460–91; Ger. tr. of complete text by L. Schlimme (Göttinger Orientforschungen, I. Reihe, 14; 2 vols., 1977). Comm. on Jn. ed., with Ger. tr., by id. (ibid. 18; 4 vols., 1978–81). Discourse on the Myron (Chrism), ed., with Ger. tr., by W. Strothmann (ibid. 7; 1973). Ger. tr. of De Anima by O. Braun, Moses bar Kepha und sein Buch von der Seele (Freiburg i.B., 1891). R. A. Aytoun, 'The Mysteries of Baptism by Moses bar Kepha compared with the Odes of Solomon', Expositor, 8th ser. 2 (1911), pp. 338–58, incl. Eng. tr. of text. J.-M. Vosté, OP, 'L'Introduction de Mose bar Kepa aux Psaumes de David', R. Bibl. 38 (1929), pp. 214–28. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 281 f. F. Graffin, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1471–3, s.v. 'Moïse bar Képha'.

Moses ben Maimon. See MAIMONIDES.

Moses of Chorene, author of an influential 'History of the Armenians'. Moses purports to be a pupil of St *Mesrob; if this were the case he would have lived in the early 5th cent. This traditional dating, though still accepted by scholars in Armenia, seems hardly credible, and the work, which is highly patriotic in character, is best dated in the late 8th cent. Other writings were later wrongly attributed to Moses, including the 'Book of Rhetoric' and the 'Geography'.

The 'History' was first pub. at Amsterdam, 1695; crit edn., Tiflis, 1913, repr. (with introd. by R. W. Thomson), Delmar, NY, 1981. Lat. tr. by W. and G. *Whiston (London, 1736); Eng. tr. by R. W. Thomson (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1978), with introd. (pp. 1–61) and bibl. (pp. 371–86). The collected works (Armenian text) attributed to Moses were pub. by the *Mechitarists of Venice in 1843 and 1865. On the 'Geography', R. W. Hewsen, 'On the date and authorship of the Ašxarhac'oyc' ', Revue des études arméniennes, NS 4 (1967), pp. 409–32.

Moses Maimonides. See MAIMONIDES.

Mosheim, Johann Lorenz von (1694–1755), ecclesiastical historian and divine. Educated at the University of Kiel, in 1723 he became professor of theology at Helmstedt and in 1747 at Göttingen, in the founding of which university he himself had taken an important part. His historical work was marked by a hitherto unprecedented objectivity and penetration and he may be considered the first of modern ecclesiastical historians. His Institutiones historiae ecclesiasticae (1726; Eng. tr. by J. Murdock, 1841) went through many editions and revisions. He was also an excellent preacher. His numerous writings include Sittenlehre der heiligen Schrift (5 vols., 1735–53), a Ketzer-Geschichte (2 vols., 1746–8), and De rebus Christianorum ante Constantinum Magnum Commentarii (1753).

K. Heussi, Die Kirchengeschichtsschreibung J. L. von Mosheims (1904); id., J. L. Mosheim (1906). B. Moeller, 'Johann Lorenz von Mosheim und die Gründung der Göttinger Universität', in id. (ed.), Theologie in Göttingen (Göttingen [1987]), pp. 9–40. J. S. Oyer in TRE 23 (1994). pp. 365–7, with bibl.

Moslems. See ISLAM.

Mosque of Omar. See DOME OF THE ROCK.

motet. A term, derived from the French mot ('word'), denoting, in church use, a type of polyphonic musical composition, occupying an important interpolative place in the liturgy. Although originating in French liturgical practice of the early 13th cent., the motet soon spread throughout Europe and flourished mainly in a secular form until the 15th cent., when its liturgical links were firmly re-established. The precise liturgical role of the motet has varied with time and place, although its predominant use has been at the *Offertory and *Elevation of the Mass. The medieval motet was designed for performance by a group of solo voices, and used a *plainsong melody as its constructional basis, but this became less in evidence as the form developed and other techniques were introduced. From the 15th cent. it became choral in style, and reached its peak with Josquin des Prés (*c.*1440–1521), O. de *Lassus, G. P. da Palestrina, and others. In the 17th cent. new developments included once again the use of solo voices and instrumental accompaniment. The motet declined in importance from the 18th cent., and by a motu proprio of Pope *Pius X (1903) attempts were made to encourage a return to the older unaccompanied practice. In the *Lutheran Church in Germany a vernacular form of the motet often used the chorale as its foundation, as in the examples of J. S. *Bach; in the post-Reformation C of E the motet's traditions were continued in the *anthem.

H. Leichtentritt, Geschichte der Motette (Leipzig, 1908). E. H. Sanders and others in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 12 (1980), pp. 617–47, s.v.

Mother of God. See THEOTOKOS.

Mothering Sunday. The Fourth Sunday in Lent, also known as Laetare Sunday. The name has been referred (1) to the custom in some parts of England of paying a visit to one's mother on this day; or (2) to the practice of visiting the cathedral or mother church on this day; or (3) to the words occurring in the traditional *Epistle for the day, 'Jerusalem . . . which is the mother of us all' (Gal. 4: 26).

Mothers' Union, the. An organization of women in the C of E, which aims at upholding 'the sanctity of marriage' and developing in mothers a sense of responsibility in the training of their children. The Mothers' Union was founded in 1876, originally as a parochial organization, by Mary Elizabeth Sumner (née Heywood, 1828–1921), wife of George Henry Sumner (son of C. R. *Sumner), then rector of Old Alresford, Hants. In 1885, after a speech by Mary Sumner at the Portsmouth Church Congress, the Bp. of *Winchester (Harold Browne) and the Bp. of Newcastle (Ernest Wilberforce) launched the Mothers' Union as a diocesan organization. The movement spread rapidly, the first branch overseas being founded in 1897. In 1882 the first number of the Mothers' Union Journal was issued (superseded in 1954 by Home and Family), to be followed in 1891 by Mothers in Council (edited until 1901 by C. M. *Yonge), which continued until 1951. In 1895 a Central Council was formed; this body framed a constitution and formulated the Union's objectives, which include the organization in every place of a band of mothers to unite in prayer and 'seek by their own example to lead their families in purity and holiness of life'. In 1909, after the Gorell Commission on Marriage, the Mothers' Union added to their object of upholding the sanctity of marriage an affirmation of 'the Christian principle of the permanence of the relationship between husband and wife'. The Union was incorporated in 1910 and granted a royal charter in 1926. In 1930 the first Overseas Conference was held, with 38 diocesan Presidents and 400 members from overseas. The Mother's Union now operates in 150 dioceses of the Anglican Communion, has over 750,000 members, and maintains some 250 workers overseas. It is growing rapidly in Africa. It has long been customary to admit spinsters to associate membership, and in provinces where the Canons on Marriage have been revised, the original membership rule about divorce has been waived. Since 1925 the headquarters of the Mothers' Union has been at Mary Sumner House in Tufton Street, Westminster.

Mrs H. Porter, Mary Sumner: Her Life and Work (Winchester, 1921; 2nd edn., London, 1928). J. Coombs, George and Mary Sumner: Their Life and Times (1965), esp. pp. 81–106; [W.] O. Chadwick, The Victorian Church, 2 (1970), pp. 192 f.

Mott, John Raleigh (1865–1955), American *Methodist. After studying at Upper Iowa and Cornell universities, he became student secretary of the International Committee of the *YMCA (1888), chairman of the executive committee of the Student Volunteer Movement, and then in 1895 general secretary of the World Student Christian Federation, for whose formation he was largely responsible. In 1901 he was appointed assistant general secretary of the YMCA. He is chiefly known for his zealous propaganda on behalf of missions, based upon the watchword 'The Evangelization of the World in our Generation', and he acted as chairman of the committee which called the first International Missionary Conference at *Edinburgh in 1910. His interest in the *Ecumenical Movement may be dated from this time; he took part in the '*Faith and Order' Conference at Lausanne in 1927 and was Vice-President of the Edinburgh Conference in 1937. In the same year he was chairman of the '*Life and Work' Conference at Oxford. He played a considerable part in the foundation of the *World Council of Churches and was elected Honorary President at its first meeting in 1948. His numerous books, relating to missionary work, include The Evangelization of the World in this Generation (1900), The Present-Day Summons to the World Mission of Christianity (1932) and his collected Addresses and Papers (6 vols., New York, 1946–7).

B. [J.] Mathews, John R. Mott: World Citizen (1934); C. H. Hopkins, John R. Mott 1865 1955 (Geneva and Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979).

motu proprio (Lat. 'on his own impulse'). A letter, addressed by the Pope either to the Church at large or to some part of it or to some particular persons, which has been written on his personal initiative and bears his personal signature.

F. Grat, Étude sur le motu proprio des origines au début du XVI^e siècle (Melun, 1945).

Moule, Handley Carr Glyn (1841–1920), Bp. of *Durham. He had a brilliant career at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1865. After a period as a master at Marlborough College (1865–7) he was ordained at Ely and acted for some years as his father's curate at Fordington, Dorset, returning temporarily to Cambridge from 1873 to 1877. On the establishment of Ridley Hall, Cambridge, in 1881 as a theological college on *Evangelical principles, Moule became its first Principal and was soon a leading influence for Evangelicalism at Cambridge. In 1899 he was elected Norrisian Professor of Divinity and in 1901 he succeeded B. F. *Westcott as Bp. of Durham, where he continued to promote Evangelical ideals. His writings include Outlines of Christian Doctrine (1889), Veni Creator (1890), Charles Simeon (1892), Philippian Studies (1897), Colossian Studies (1898), Ephesian Studies (1900), and Christus Consolator (1915).

J. B. Harford (ed.), Letters and Poems of Bishop Moule [1922]. Life by J. B. Harford and F. C. Macdonald (London [1922]). J. Baird, The Spiritual Unfolding of Bishop H. C. G. Moule [1926]. W. Lock in DNB, 1912 1921, pp. 390 f.

Moulton, James Hope (1863–1917), classical, Iranian, and NT scholar. The eldest son of W. F. *Moulton, he was appointed tutor at the Wesleyan College at Didsbury, Manchester, in 1902 and Greenwood Professor of Hellenistic Greek and Indo-European Philology at Manchester University in 1908. In 1915 he went to India to lecture on and pursue his studies of *Zoroastrianism. He lost his life through submarine action on the return journey in 1917.

In the field of the NT he did important work, esp. in bringing to bear on NT Greek the new evidence from non-literary papyri (the significance of which he had come to understand through the writings of A. *Deissmann). His brilliant 'Prolegomena' (vol. 1, 1906) to his Grammar of New Testament Greek embodied many of his conclusions. In conjunction with G. Milligan he began in 1914 the issue of his important Vocabulary of the Greek Testament, illustrated from the Papyri and other non-literary Sources (completed in 1930). His other works included Early Zoroastrianism (*Hibbert Lectures for 1912; 1913). The second vol. of his Grammar of New Testament Greek (vol. 2: Morphology) was posthumously ed. by W. F. Howard (1929); the work was completed by two further vols. on Syntax and Style respectively by N. Turner (1963–76).

Life by his brother [W. F. Moulton] (London, 1919). Short sketch by H. K. Moulton (son) and others (ibid., 1963). A. S. *Peake in DNB, 1912 1921, pp. 391 f.

Moulton, William Fiddian (1835–98), biblical student. Having entered the *Wesleyan ministry in 1858, he was at once appointed to a teaching post at Richmond College, which he held till 1874. In the latter year he became the first headmaster of the Leys School, Cambridge. He was one of the foremost authorities on NT Greek in his day. In 1870 he became secretary of one of the NT committees occupied on the RV, and work in connection with the RV filled a great part of his life. His published writings include a fresh Eng. tr. of J. G. B. *Winer's Grammar of NT Greek (1870) and, in conjunction with A. S. Geden, a Concordance (1897) to the Greek NT.

Memoir by W. F. Moulton (son), with ch. on his biblical work and opinions by J. H. *Moulton (London, 1899). Shorter sketch by G. G. Findlay (ibid., 1910). G. Le G. Norgate in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 204 f.

Mount Carmel. See CARMEL, MOUNT.

Mount of Olives. See OLIVES, MOUNT OF.

movable feasts. Annual ecclesiastical feasts which do not fall on a fixed date in the secular calendar, but vary acc. to certain determined rules. Thus *Easter Day is the first Sunday after the ('ecclesiastical') full moon between 21 Mar. and 18 Apr., and a number of other feasts fall at a fixed number of days or weeks from Easter. *Advent Sunday is the Sunday falling on or nearest to 30 November.

Mowinckel, Sigmund Olaf Plytt (1884–1965), OT scholar. He was born at Kjerringøy and educated at the Cathedral School in Bergen and at the Universities of Oslo, Copenhagen, Marburg, and Giessen. His entire teaching career was spent in the University of Oslo, where he was successively dosent (1917–22), professor extraordinarius (1922–33), and professor ordinarius (1933–54). Of his many contributions to OT study, the most noteworthy are related to the Psalms. In his Psalmenstudien (6 parts, 1921–4) the influence of H. *Gunkel's literary classification of the Psalms, and of V. Grønbech's interpretation of the thought and worship of 'primitive' peoples, is evident. The most influential of Mowinckel's hypotheses is that the Psalms which celebrate *Yahweh's kingship are parts of the liturgies of a pre-exilic festival in which the enthronement of Yahweh was annually celebrated, and that its themes provided the pattern of the later eschatological hope. He reiterated his views on the Psalter, with some modifications, in Offersang og sangoffer (1951; Eng. tr., The Psalms in Israel's Worship, 2 vols., 1962). In Han som kommer (1951; Eng. tr., He That Cometh, 1956) some of the results of his work on the Psalms are combined with those of his studies of prophecy (notably the problem of the Servant of Yahweh) and of the Son of Man to form a comprehensive survey of the *Messianic hope. He also made important contributions to the study of Ezra-Nehemiah—Statholderen Nehemia (1916), Ezra den skriftlærde (1916), Studien zu dem Buche Ezra-Nehemia (3 vols.; 1964–5), and to the problem of the *Hexateuch—Zur Frage nach dokumentarischen Quellen in Josua 13–19 (1946), Tetrateuch–Pentateuch–Hexateuch (1964), Erwägungen zur Pentateuch Quellenfrage (1964). Two posthumously published works are devoted to the early history of Palestine and of Israel—Palestina før Israel (1965) and Israels opphav og eldste historie (1967). He was responsible for the greater part of a translation (with commentary) of the Old Testament into Norwegian. His great academic achievement was combined with much practical service.

D. R. Ap-Thomas, 'An Appreciation of Sigmund Mowinckel's Contribution to Biblical Studies', Journal of Biblical Literature, 85 (1966), pp. 315–25; A. S. Kapelrud, 'Sigmund Mowinckel and Old Testament Study', Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, 5 (1966–7), pp. 4–29; J. Barr, 'Mowinckel, the Old Testament, and the Question of Natural Theology', Studia Theologica, 42 (1988), pp. 21–38; H. M. Barstad and M. Ottosson (eds.), 'The Life and Work of Sigmund Mowinckel', Scandinavian Journal of the Old Testament, 2 (1988), pp. 1–168, with bibl. pp. 95–168.

Mozambique, Christianity in. Portuguese occupation of the coast of Mozambique began in 1505 and spread up the Zambesi valley. From 1577 there were *Dominican missionaries, who were joined in 1610 by *Jesuits—at most, *c.*1630, some 25 of each. They included João dos Santos, OP, author of Ethiopia Oriental (Evora, 1609), a major account of Portuguese expansion in Africa in the 16th cent. The old Mozambique mission never had a bishop of its own but became a 'Perpetual Vicariate' in 1612. After the suppression of the Jesuits in Portugal (1759), followed by that of other religious orders (1834), Christianity almost died out. Missionaries began to return towards the end of the 19th cent., most notably the *Franciscans (1898), but no diocese was established until after the 1940 Vatican–Portugal Concordat. All bishops were Portuguese until after political independence (1975), but extreme tension developed between many missionaries and the colonial government in the previous ten years over repression of the nationalist movement. The *White Fathers took the unusual step of publicly withdrawing from the country in 1971 and a considerable number of priests (including one bishop) were imprisoned or expelled in 1972–4. After Independence the Marxist government at first took up a strongly anti-religious position and much Church property was confiscated, but relations were subsequently normalized. About half the population is Christian, of whom about three quarters are RC. A small *Presbyterian Church developed in the S. of the country as a result of the work from 1880 of the Mission Suisse, whose members included the outstanding ethnographer Henri-Alexandre Junod (1863–1934), author of the Life of a South African Tribe (1912–13; 2nd edn., 1927). In the N. the Anglican Church was built up by the *UMCA on the eastern shores of Lake Malawi. The Pentecostal *Assemblies of God now form the largest Protestant group.

Primary sources, with Eng. tr., in Documentos sobre os Portugueses em Moçambique e na África Central 1497–1840 (Lisbon, 1962 ff. [9 vols., covering period to 1615 by 1989]). W. F. Rea, SJ, The Economics of the Zambesi Missions 1580–1759 (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 39; Rome, 1976). A. Hastings, Wiriyamu (1974); id., A History of African Christianity 1950–1975 (Cambridge, 1979), pp. 202–4 and 210–14. J. Van Butselaar, Africains, Missionaires et Colonialistes: Les origines de l'Église Presbytérienne du Mozambique (Mission Suisse) 1880–1896 (Studies on Religion in Africa, 5; Leiden, 1984).

Mozarabic chant. The music of the Mozarabic rite has been preserved in many MSS from the 9th–11th cents., which enshrine chant possibly dating back to the early 8th cent. The neumes in which it is written, however, cannot now be read, because the Mozarabic chant had been ousted by the *Gregorian before the four-line staff came into use; hence the neumes are legible only to the extent of the number of their notes, but there is no means of determining the relations of tonal height within the notes of a neume, nor its melodic connection with the preceding or following neumes. A MS of San Millán de la Cogolla (printed by C. Rojo and G. Prado), however, has preserved some 21 melodies in legible notation of the Aquitanian type. At least two early chant traditions have been distinguished, those of Toledo and León, the latter exemplified esp. in the 10th cent. Antiphoner of León. Both the Mass and Office were provided with melodies varying greatly in style from the syllabic to the highly melismatic, resembling in this respect the *Ambrosian as much as the Gregorian chant. There exists at Toledo an extensive collection of melodies in a small collection of MSS dating from *c.*1500; these are written in staff notation with some rhythmic indications. There are blank staves for the priest's music and some of the congregational responses in the Ordinary and Canon of the Mass in the Missale mixtum published by Card. F. *Ximénez de Cisneros in 1500, and in some copies the chant has been added by hand. (This is reproduced, in a somewhat debased form, in the editions of 1757 and 1804.) The relationship between all this material and the earlier medieval traditions is a question that has not yet been satisfactorily resolved, though the 'Pater Noster' in the Missal looks ancient.

C. Rojo, OSB, and G. Prado, OSB (eds.), El canto mozárabe: Estudio histórico-crítico de su antigüedad y estado actual (Barcelona, 1929). The León Antiphoner was first pub. by the Benedictines of Silos at León in 1928; also ed. by L. Brou, OSB, and J. Vives (Monumenta Hispaniae Sacra, Serie Liturgica, 5. 1; Barcelona and Madrid, 1959); facsimile (ibid. 5. 2; 1953). G. Prado, OSB, 'Mozarabic Melodies', Speculum, 3 (1928), pp. 218–38. L. Brou, OSB, 'L'Antiphonaire wisigothique et l'antiphonaire grégorien au début du viii^e siècle. Essai de musicologie comparée', Annuario Musical, 5 (1950), pp. 3–10; id., 'L'Alleluia dans la liturgie mozarabe. Étude liturgico-musicale d'après les manuscrits de chant', ibid. 6 (1951), pp. 3–90; id., 'Notes de paléographie musicale mozarabe', ibid. 7 (1952), pp. 51–76; id., 'Le Joyau des antiphonaires latins. Le Manuscrit 8 des archives de la cathédrale de León', Archivos Leoneses, 8 (1954), pp. 7–114, and other arts. in this issue. C. W. Brockett, Jun., Antiphons, Responsories and other Chants of the Mozarabic Rite (Musicological Studies, 15; New York [1968]). D. M. Randel, The Responsorial Psalm Tones for the Mozarabic Office (Princeton Studies in Music, 3; 1969); id., An Index to the Chant of the Mozarabic Rite (ibid. 6 [1973]). I. Wortman in NCE 10 (1967), p. 60, s.v. 'Mozarabic Rite, Chants of'; D. M. Randel in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 12 (1980), pp. 667–75, s.v. 'Mozarabic rite, music for the'.

Mozarabic rite. The conventional name given to the liturgical forms which were in use in the Iberian Peninsula from the earliest times until the 11th cent. It is, however, a misnomer, for the term 'Mozarabic' is correctly applied only to that part of Spain which fell under Moorish rule after 711; but alternative names, such as Visigothic or Old Spanish, have not won general acceptance.

The early history of the rite is very obscure. From the conversion of the Visigothic King *Recared (589) until the Moorish invasion (711) we have the evidence of frequent national councils and of the writings of the Spanish fathers *Isidore (esp. his De ecclesiasticis officiis), *Leander, *Ildefonsus, and others. Much attention was then paid to the establishment and promulgation of a uniform rite for the Mass and for the Offices. The Fourth Council of *Toledo, for instance, in 633 decreed that there should be unus . . . ordo orandi atque psallendi . . ., unus modus in missarum solemnitatibus, unus in vespertinis matutinisque officiis (can. 2). The practice of composing Masses, notably by three bishops of Toledo, Eugenius II (646–57), Ildefonsus (657–67) and Julian (680–90), led to increasing elaboration and prolixity in accordance with the literary taste of the day. The only extant service-book dating from the period before the Moorish invasion is the Verona Liber orationalis, but it is probable that the MSS of the 10th and 11th cents. faithfully preserve, for the most part, the essential features of the 7th-cent. liturgy.

The replacement of the Mozarabic by the Roman rite was a consequence of the Christian reconquest of Spain. The Cluniac monks brought the Roman rite with them into Catalonia. In Navarre it was introduced into the abbey of San Salvador at Leyre in 1067, in Aragon into the abbey of San Juan de la Peña in 1071. At the Council of Burgos in 1080 it was prescribed for the kingdoms of Castile and León. On the reconquest of Toledo (1085) there was resistance to the abolition of the Mozarabic rite and it was allowed to remain in use in the six old parishes of the city. Its preservation in modern times is due to Francisco *Ximénez de Cisneros, who became Abp. of Toledo in 1495. He founded the Corpus Christi chapel in the Cathedral and endowed chaplains to use the Mozarabic rite. He also caused a Missal and a Breviary to be printed (1500 and 1502). In modern times there have been various attempts to introduce the rite more widely. In 1989 approval was given by the *Roman Congregation for Divine worship for the general use in the region of Toledo (and with the permission of the *Ordinary, throughout Spain) of a new Missale Hispano-Mozarabicum, revised on the basis of the oldest MSS and with regard to the reforms of the Second *Vatican Council.

The Mozarabic rite has close affinities with the *Gallican, though influences from North Africa and possibly Byzantium have also been detected. Distinctive features in the Mass include the use of the *Trisagion in Greek; a chant known as the 'Sacrificium' (corresponding to the *Offertory), followed by two prayers, of which the first, the 'Missa' or 'Oratio Admonitionis' is addressed to the people that 'they may be stirred to pray earnestly before God'; a long and elaborate 'Illatio' (corresponding to the *Preface), varying each day; the recitation of the (*Nicene) Creed immediately before (or, in one tradition, after) the *Lord's Prayer; and the *Fraction of the Host into seven (or according to the Missal of Ximénez, nine) pieces, representing the mysteries of the life of Christ, a practice found also in the *Celtic rites of the 10th and 11th cent. In the Office a distinction between the secular (ordo cathedralis) and monastic Office survived in Spain when it disappeared in the Roman rite. The secular Office consisted only of *Vespers and *Mattins, with selected Psalms or portions of Psalms, which were sung, with refrains, as responds and antiphons. The monastic Office in its developed form appears to have had twelve Offices by day and twelve by night.

The principal service-books were the Psalter; Liber canticorum; Liber hymnorum; Antiphonarium, comprising antiphons and responds both for the Mass and for the Offices; Liber orationum, containing collects for the Offices; Liber missarum, corresponding to the *Sacramentary; and Liber ordinum, containing occasional Offices, Ordination rites and Votive Masses. These books are of an earlier type than the combination or mixture of elements found in the Roman Missal and Breviary. The process by which the printed Missale mixtum and Breviarium of Ximénez were compiled is still obscure, but these printed books preserve ancient texts not otherwise known, and also show the infiltration of the Roman rite.

The early Irish service books contain borrowings from the Mozarabic rite ('Spanish symptoms'), which most scholars believe to have been imported direct from Spain to Ireland. The Roman books include Mozarabic material in the prayers of the Rituale* for the dying and dead, which came in by way of the supplement *Hucusque to the Gregorian Sacramentary. At a later date the Mozarabic 'benedictio fontis' was used in compiling the *Baptismal Office of the 1549 BCP.

The editio princeps of the Missal was the Missale Mixtum secundum Regulam Beati Isidori, dictum Mozarabes (Toledo, 1500). Later edn. by A. Lesley, SJ, Rome, 1755; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 85. Editio princeps of the Breviary was the Breviarium secundum Regulam Beati Isidori (Toledo, 1502); also ed. F. A. Lorenzana, Madrid, 1775; repr., Rome, 1804; also in J. P. Migne, PL 86. M. Férotin, OSB (ed.), Le Liber Ordinum en usage dans l'Église wisigothique et mozarabe de l'Espagne du cinquième au onzième siècle (Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica, 5; Paris, 1904); id. (ed.), Le Liber Mozarabicus Sacramentorum et les manuscrits mozarabes (ibid. 6; 1912); J. P. Gilson (ed.), The Mozarabic Psalter (MS. British Museum, Add. 30,851) (HBS 30; 1905); J. Vives and J. Claveras (eds.), Oracional Visigótico (Monumenta Hispaniae Sacra, Serie Liturgica, 1; 1941); J. Pérez de Urbel, OSB, and A. Gonzalez y Ruiz-Zorrilla (eds.), Liber Commicus (ibid. 2–3; 1950–5). W. C. Bishop, The Mozarabic and Ambrosian Rites (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 15; 1924), pp. 1–97. W. S. Porter, The Gallican Rite, ed. F. L. Cross (1958). M. Ramos, SJ, Oratio Admonitionis: Contribución al estudio de la Antigua Misa Española (Biblioteca Teológica Granadina, 8; 1964). J. F. Rivera Recio (ed.), Estudios sobre la liturgia mozarabe (Toledo, 1965), incl. list of primary sources, with places of pub., by J. M. Pinell, OSB, pp. 109–64, and general bibl. by J. M. Mora Ontalba, pp. 165–87. T. C. Akeley, OGS, Christian Initiation in Spain c.300–1100 (1967). On the 1988 Missale Hispano-Mozarabicum, see J. Pinell, OSB, in Notitiae, 24 (1988), pp. 670–727. Vogel, Sources, pp. 35 f., 109, 277–80, 333–5, and 361. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 390–491, s.v.; J. Pinell, OSB, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 1796–1825, s.v., with extensive bibl. See also works cited under MOZARABIC CHANT.

mozetta. A short cape-like garment to which until 1969 a small hood was attached, worn by the Pope, cardinals, exempt abbots, abbots-general, and other privileged dignitaries. It came into use in the later Middle Ages. Its colour depends on the office of the wearer and the occasion on which it is worn.

Braun, LG, pp. 357 f.

Mozley, James Bowling (1813–78), post-*Tractarian theologian. Educated at Oriel College, Oxford, where his brother, Thomas (q.v.), became a Fellow, he was elected to a fellowship at Magdalen in 1840. From the first he had taken a keen interest in the *Oxford Movement, and after the secession of J. H. *Newman in 1845 was for a time one of its foremost representatives in Oxford. Largely under the influence of the *Gorham Case, he was led to modify his Tractarian beliefs in a more moderate direction, though he continued a strong Churchman. His books include On the Augustinian Doctrine of Predestination (1855) and The Primitive Doctrine of Baptismal Regeneration (1856); but much of his most brilliant writing is to be found in his essays and articles, collected as Essays Historical and Theological (2 vols., 1878). His *Bampton Lectures on 'Miracles' (1865) were acclaimed a masterly contribution to a then very pressing issue. From 1871 till his death he was Regius professor of divinity at Oxford. From 1856 he also held the living of Old Shoreham in W. Sussex, where he died on 4 Jan. 1878.

Collected edn. of University and other Sermons (1876). Mozley's Essays Historical and Theological (2 vols., 1878; with biog. introd., 1, pp. xi–xlviii), and Letters (1885; also with biog. introd. pp. 1–30), both ed. by his sister, A. Mozley (1809–91). His fine sermon on 'The Reversal of Human Judgment', repr. in H. H. *Henson (ed.), Selected English Sermons (World's Classics, 1939), pp. 279–304. W. A. Greenhill in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 249–51.

Mozley, Thomas (1806–93), divine and journalist. The brother of J. B. *Mozley, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (where J. H. *Newman was his tutor), and elected a Fellow of the College in 1829. A staunch supporter of the Tractarian Movement, he edited the British Critic (1841–3), wrote extensively for The Times newspaper, and held a succession of parochial appointments. He is remembered particularly for his Reminiscences, chiefly of Oriel College and the Oxford Movement (2 vols., 1882), which is valuable for the light it throws on many aspects of the *Oxford Movement, and Letters from Rome on the Occasion of the [First *Vatican] Council, 1869–1870 (2 vols., 1891). Though a gifted writer, Mozley was apt to be inaccurate in his record of facts.

There is no Life, but much is to be gleaned from scattered refs. to him in the lit. of the Oxford Movement. A. F. Pollard in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 251 f., s.v.

Muggletonians. A sect founded in 1652 by John Reeve (1608–58) and his cousin, Ludowicke Muggleton (1609–98), who claimed to be the 'two witnesses' of Rev. 11: 3–6. They denied the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and held that during the period of the Incarnation the government of heaven was left to *Elijah. Believing that God would never again interfere with the world after His revelation to Reeve, they condemned prayer and preaching. They also taught that matter was eternal and reason the creation of the devil. The Muggletonians long survived as a very small sect; the last member died in 1979.

[J. E.] C. Hill, B. Reay, and W. Lamont, The World of the Muggletonians (1983). W. Lamont, 'The Muggletonians 1652–1979: a "vertical" approach', Past and Present, 99 (1983), pp. 22–40; cf. [J. E.] C. Hill and W. Lamont, 'Debate: The Muggletonians', ibid. 104 (1984), pp. 152–63.

Muhlenberg, Henry Melchior (1711–87), 'Patriarch' of the *Lutheran Church in America. He was born in Einbeck, Hanover, and educated at Göttingen, where he was imbued with a broad form of *Pietism. He soon expressed interest in missionary work first to the Jews and then in India (in the Danish-Halle mission), but in 1742 he was sent to America by the mission centre in Halle which had been established by the Pietist leader A. H. *Francke. He was sent in response to an appeal made by three Lutheran congregations in Pennsylvania in 1733; he was to instruct them in confessional Lutheranism, recover disaffected members, and to see to the organization and extension of the Lutheran Church. He founded numerous congregations and schools and strengthened existing ones, mostly in the area of Philadelphia, but he also visited, encouraged and corresponded with many settlements along the eastern seaboard. He recruited European Lutheran pastors for service in America, continually and successfully solicited assistance from Germany, and trained an American clergy. In 1748 he organized the Ministerium of Pennsylvania, the first permanent Lutheran Synod in America.

His autobiog., covering his life to 1743, ed. W. Germann (Allentown, Pa., and Halle/Salle, 1881). Correspondence, ed. K. Aland (Texte zur Geschichte des Pietismus, Abt. 3. Bd. 2, 5, etc.; 1986 ff.). Eng. tr. of his Journals, ed. T. G. Tappert and J. W. Doberstein (3 vols., Philadelphia, 1942–58). M. L. Stoever, Memoir of the Life and Times of Henry Melchior Muhlenberg (ibid., 1856); W. J. Mann, Life and Times of Henry Melchior Muhlenberg (ibid., 1887). P. A. W. Wallace, The Muhlenbergs of Pennsylvania (ibid., 1950), pp. 1–273. G. H. Genzmer in Dict. Amer. Biog. 13 (1934), pp. 310 f., s.v.

Müller, F. Max. See MAX MÜLLER, FRIEDRICH.

Müller, George (1805–98), philanthropist and preacher. He was born near Halberstadt in Germany, but later became a British subject. Though intended for the ministry Müller was profligate as a youth until in 1825, while a student at Halle, he came into contact with a group of earnest Christians and experienced a religious conversion. In 1829 he came to London to take up an appointment with the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. Forced by ill-health to leave London, in 1830 he moved to Teignmouth, where he associated himself with the *Plymouth Brethren, resigned from his previous appointment, and became a preacher to the local community. Believing that temporal as well as spiritual needs could be supplied through faith and prayer, he abolished pew rents and refused a salary, supporting himself and his charitable work with offerings from his followers. Two years later he moved to Bristol, where he devoted his life to the care of orphan children, relying on voluntary contributions which flowed in through the deep impression made by his Narrative of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller (pt. 1, 1837; 2, 1841). Starting with only a few children, he eventually had 2,000 under his care, accommodated in large houses at Ashley Down, near Bristol. At the age of 70, leaving this work in the hands of his daughter and her husband, James Wright, Müller set out with his second wife on a preaching mission to Europe, America, India, Australia, and China extending over 17 years. He died at Bristol.

Autobiography of George Müller compiled by G. F. Bergin, with preface and concluding ch. by A. T. Pierson (London, 1905). Mrs [S. G.] Müller, Preaching Tours and Missionary Labours of George Müller (1883), with introd. by G. Müller, pp. iii–xiv. E. K. Groves (nephew), George Müller and his Successors (1906). Lives by F. G. Warne (London [1898]; enlarged [1935]); A. T. Pierson (ibid., 1899; with additions [1949]); N. Garton (ibid., 1963); and R. Steer (ibid., 1975; rev. edn., 1990). T. B. Johnstone in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 208 f.

Müller, Julius (1801–78), German Protestant theologian. He studied law at Breslau and Göttingen universities, but finding his spiritual aspirations unsatisfied, under the influence of F. A. G. *Tholuck, who urged him to come to Berlin (1823), he studied theology. In 1825 he was ordained pastor at Breslau. In 1831 he was appointed university preacher at Göttingen, and in 1835 professor of dogmatics at *Marburg. Here he upheld a conservative Protestant theology against the *Hegelianism of the *Tübingen School, esp. F. C. *Baur, and the Leben Jesu of D. F. *Strauss. In 1839 he was appointed to the chair of theology at Halle. In his principal work, Die christliche Lehre von der Sünde (vol. 1, 1839; 2, 1844), he sought to interpret the fact of sin on the assumption of an extra-temporal fall occasioned by a free and intelligible act of decision on the part of each individual. As one of the most prominent theologians of his time he took a leading part in the negotiations for the Prussian Evangelical Union. In 1850 he founded, with J. A. W. *Neander and K. I. *Nitzsch, the Deutsche Zeitschrift für christliche Wissenschaft und christliches Leben; most of his contributions to it were collected in the Dogmatische Abhandlungen (1870).

Life by his son-in-law, L. Schultze (Bremen, 1879); also L. Schultze, D. Julius Müller als Ethiker und die Glaubensfrage mit Bezug auf das Apostolicum (1895). K. *Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zurich, 1947), pp. 535–43; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 588–96.

Müller, Ludwig (1883–1945), German *Reichsbischof. He was born at Gütersloh and educated at Münster i.W. When an army chaplain at Königsberg, he met Hitler (1926), who in 1933 made him his confidential adviser in Church matters; and, under strong Nazi pressure, he was elected Bp. of Prussia and also Reichsbischof. Resistance from the embryonic *Confessing Church to his Aryanizing policy led to his virtual supersession in 1935 by the appointment of H. Kerrl as Minister for Church Affairs, though Müller nominally remained in office. In 1936 he published a Germanized version of the Sermon on the Mount.

J. C. R. Wright, 'Above Parties': The Political Attitudes of the German Protestant Church Leadership 1918–1933 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1974), pp. 118–60 passim; rev. Ger. tr. (1977), pp. 183–6 and 196–234 passim.

Mungo, St. See KENTIGERN, ST.

Munificentissimus Deus. The opening words and hence the name of the Apostolic Constitution issued by *Pius XII on 1 Nov. 1950 defining the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM (q.v.). The Pope declared it as a matter of divinely revealed dogma that the BVM 'having completed her earthly course was in body and soul assumed into heavenly glory', to deny which would incur the wrath of Almighty God and the Holy Apostles. The definition of the dogma aroused considerable opposition among members of the E. Churches and among some Anglicans who feared that it would impede any plans for union, though the statement of the doctrine was very moderate.

Text in AAS 42 (1950), pp. 753–73. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Théologie de l'Assomption d'après la bulle "Munificentissimus Deus"', Nouvelle Revue théologique, 72 (1950), pp. 1009–27.

Münster, Sebastian (1488–1552), Hebrew scholar. He studied at Heidelberg, *Tübingen, and Vienna and later entered the *Franciscan Order, which he abandoned for Protestantism. From 1529 until his death he taught at Basle. He produced the first German edition of the Hebrew Bible (2 vols., Basle, 1534–5; with a literal Latin version and notes), extensive use of which was made by M. *Coverdale for the OT of the *Great Bible (1539). His most widely read work, his Cosmographia Universalis (Basle, 1544), was a geographical description of the world after the manner of Strabo, written in German. He also published an Aramaic (1527, 'Chaldaica') and several Hebrew grammars (notably those of 1536 and 1542, the latter much influenced by E. Levita).

Letters ed. K. H. Burmeister (Ingelheim am Rhein, 1964). Facsimile reprod. of his edn. of Ptolemy's Geographia (orig. pub. Basle, 1540) with introd. by R. A. Skelton (Amsterdam, 1966). V. Hantzsch, Sebastian Münster: Leben, Werke, wissenschaftliche Bedeutung (Abh. (Sächs.), 23, Heft 3; 1898). K. H. Burmeister, Sebastian Münster: Versuch eines biographischen Gesamtbildes (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 91; 1963). A. Wolkenhauer, Sebastian Münsters handschriftliches Kollegienbuch aus den Jahren 1515–1518 und seine Karten (Abh. (Gött.), NF 11, Heft 3; 1909). J. Friedman, The Most Ancient Testimony: Sixteenth-Century Christian-Hebraica in the Age of Renaissance Nostalgia (Athens, Oh. [1983]), pp. 44–8, 165–8, and 212–44. K. H. Burmeister, Sebastian Münster: Eine Bibliographie (Wiesbaden, 1964).

Müntzer (sometimes Münzer), Thomas (*c.*1489–1525), German radical reformer. A native of Stolberg in the Harz mountains, he may have studied at Leipzig and he certainly gained a degree at Frankfurt an der Oder. After serving as a chantry-priest in Brunswick from 1514, in 1517/18 he attended lectures at *Wittenberg on classical authors and the Church Fathers. He studied medieval spiritual writers, esp. J. *Tauler and *Henry Suso, while he was confessor to a *Cistercian nunnery in Thuringia in 1519/20. Probably on M. *Luther's recommendation, he became preacher in Zwickau in May 1520; here he developed a spiritual and mystical theology increasingly at odds with the literal biblical interpretation of Wittenberg. After expulsion for an alleged breach of the public peace, in 1521 he went to Prague, where, convinced that the Apocalypse was at hand, he tried to revive a true apostolic Church, building on the legacy of the *Hussites. Again expelled, he spent 1522 without a permanent post, sustained by a belief in the need for the soul to be purified by suffering and tribulation before it could receive the Holy Spirit. In 1523 he became pastor in Allstedt, where he composed the first liturgies in German and also several tracts, in which he attacked 'counterfeit' faith and expressed reservations about *Infant Baptism. Faced with Catholic persecution in the area, Müntzer formed a defensive 'Christian League' as a new covenant with God (on the analogy of 2 Kgs. 23), which he later revived as an active clarion to rebellion in the *Peasants' War. Luther's warning to the Protestant Saxon princes about his 'fanaticism' led to Müntzer's expulsion from Allstedt in late 1524. After a brief stay in Mühlhausen, occasioning civil unrest, in Sept. 1524 he went to the heartland of the gathering peasant rebellion in SW Germany. Returning to Mühlhausen in the spring of 1525, he recast the city government as an eternal council, pledged to the Word of God, and completed the establishment of reformed worship. As the peasants' rebellion approached, he placed himself at the head of the local troops, convinced that the struggle of the saints in the Last Days had begun. After the defeat of the rebels at the battle of Frankenhausen (15 May 1525), Müntzer was tortured and executed, without recanting his fundamental beliefs. Several subsequent *Anabaptist leaders, notably Hans Hut, invoked his name and theology in their cause.

Schriften und Briefe, ed. P. Kirn and G. Franz (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 33; Gütersloh, 1968). Schriften also ed. G. Seebass and E. Wolgast (in preparation) and Briefe, ed. S. Bräuer and M. Kobuch (in preparation). Eng. tr. of Collected Works, ed. and tr. by P. Matheson (Edinburgh, 1988). W. Elliger, Thomas Müntzer: Leben und Werk (Göttingen, 1975); H.-J. Goertz, Thomas Müntzer: Mystiker-Apokalyptiker-Revolutionär (Munich, 1989; Eng. tr., 1993); M. Bensing, Thomas Müntzer und der Thüringer Aufstand 1525 (Leipziger Übersetzungen und Abhandlungen zum Mittelalter, Reihe B, 3; Berlin, 1966); H.-J. Goertz, Innere und äussere Ordnung in der Theologie Thomas Müntzers (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 2; Leiden, 1967); [E.] G. Rupp, Patterns of Reformation (1969), pp. 157–353; R. Schwarz, Die apokalyptische Theologie Thomas Müntzers und der Taboriten (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 55; Tübingen, 1977); T. Scott, Thomas Müntzer: Theology and Revolution in the German Reformation (1989); E. W. Gritsch, Thomas Müntzer: A Tragedy of Errors (Minneapolis [1989]); S. Bräuer and H. Junghans (eds.), Der Theologe Thomas Müntzer: Untersuchungen zu seiner Entwicklung und Lehre (Berlin and Göttingen, 1989); U. Bubenheimer, Thomas Müntzer: Herkunft und Bildung (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 46; Leiden, etc., 1989); A. Friesen, Thomas Muentzer, a Destroyer of the Godless (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1990).

Muratori, Lodovico Antonio (1672–1750), Italian historian and theological scholar. Born at Vignola, near Modena, he was educated by the *Jesuits at Modena and, after becoming doctor utriusque juris (1694), was ordained priest in 1695. In the same year he became attached to the *Ambrosiana in Milan, where he remained until 1700, when the Duke of Modena offered him the post of archivist and librarian of his library. In 1716 he combined with his librarianship the position of Provost of Santa Maria della Pomposa, living in Modena until his death.

Muratori became involved in the diplomatic controversy between the Emperor and the Pope about the fief of Comacchio. It was in this connection that he wrote his Piena esposizione de i diritti imperiali ed estensi sopra la città di Comacchio (Modena, 1712), a work of some judicial importance. He collaborated with G. W. *Leibniz on a projected history of the houses of Brunswick and da Este, which was never completed; his research on the subject, however, issued in the publication of a vast corpus of medieval sources of Italian history, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores (25 vols., Milan, 1723–51), which was followed by Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi (6 vols., 1738–48). He also published an important collection of liturgical documents under the title Liturgia Romana Vetus (2 vols., Venice, 1748; repr. Naples, 1760, and largely reproduced in various volumes of J. P. *Migne, Patrologia Latina); he printed the texts of the *Leonine, *Gelasian, and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, followed by the '*Missale Gothicum', the '*Missale Francorum', the '*Missale Gallicanum Vetus', the 'Sacramentarium Gallicanum' (i.e. the *Bobbio Missal) and the First and Second '*Ordines Romani'. He was influenced by the historical method of the *Maurists and corresponded with J. *Mabillon and B. de *Montfaucon. His numerous theological works, often pseudonymous, provoked attacks on his orthodoxy: in 1748 the Spanish *Inquisition initiated proceedings against him, but he was protected by Pope *Benedict XIV. See also the following entry.

Collected Works ed. at Arezzo (13 vols., 1767–73) and at Venice (48 vols., 1790–1800). [Selected] Opere ed. G. Falco and F. Forti (La Letteratura Italiana, Storia e Testi, 44; 2 vols. [1964]), with full introd. Epistolario, ed. M. Campori (14 vols., Modena, 1901–22). Trattato della carità cristiana e altri scritti sulla carità ed. P. G. Nonis [1961]. Life by his nephew, Gian Francesco Soli Muratori (Modena, 1756). G. Cavazzuti, Lodovico Antonio Muratori, 1672–1750 (1950). M. Monaco, La Vita, le opere, il pensiero di L. A. Muratori e la sua concezione della pubblica felicità (Lecce, 1977). Miscellanea di Studi Muratoriani (Atti e Memorie della R. Deputazione di Storia Patria per le Provincie Modenesi, 7th ser. 8; 1933); Miscellanea di Studi Muratoriani (Modena, 1951). A. C. Jemolo, 'Il pensiero religioso di Ludovico Antonio Muratori', Rivista trimestrale di studi filosofici e religiosi, 4 (1923), pp. 23–78. A. Vecchi, L'opera religiosa del Muratori (Accademia di Scienze, Lettere e Arti di Modena, 1955). S. Bertelli, Erudizione e storia in Ludovico Antonio Muratori (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Storici in Napoli, 1960). E. Raimondi, 'I padri maurini e l'opera del Muratori', Giornale storico della Letteratura italiana, 128 (1951), pp. 429–71, and 129 (1952), pp. 145–78; repr. in id., I Lumi dell'Erudizione (Arti e Scritture, 2; Milan, 1989), pp. 3–77, with other work on Muratori repr., pp. 79–124. E. Cochrane, 'Muratori: The Vocation of a Historian', Catholic Historical Review, 51 (1965), pp. 153–72, with refs. L. Brandolini, CM, 'La Pastorale dell'Eucharistia di Ludovico A. Muratori', EL 81 (1967), pp. 333–75; 82 (1968), pp. 81–118. T. Sorbelli, Bibliografia muratoriana (2 vols., Modena, 1943–4). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 536–43; and F. Cognasso in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1523–7, with bibl.

Muratorian Canon. The oldest extant list of NT writings, discovered by L. A. *Muratori in an 8th-cent. *Ambrosiana MS (J. 101 sup.). It is generally held to date from the (later) 2nd cent., because *Pius I, *Hermas, *Marcion, *Basilides, and *Montanus are mentioned as contemporaries of the author, though it has been argued that it dates from the 4th cent. The list comprises 85 lines; the beginning and probably also the end are missing, for it starts with what must be the conclusion of a notice on St Mark and continues with accounts of Luke and John, enumerated as the third and fourth Gospels respectively. It mentions all the NT books except Heb., Jas., and 1 and 2 Pet., and also the *Apocalypse of Peter and the Wisdom of *Solomon, though with a caveat. It rejects the 'Shepherd' of Hermas, the Marcionite Epistles of St *Paul to *Laodicea and *Alexandria, and a series of other *Gnostic and Montanist writings. The Canon is written in very bad Latin, full of orthographical and grammatical errors. Some scholars believe it to be a translation from the Greek.

The Muratorian Canon was first pub. by Muratori in Antiquitates Italicae Medii Aevi, 3 (Milan, 1740), pp. 851–4. Facsimile edn. by S. P. *Tregelles, Canon Muratorianus (1867). Rev. text by E. S. Buchanan in JTS 8 (1906–7), pp. 537–45. Comm., with text, in NT handbooks, e.g. B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the History of the Canon of the New Testament (1st edn., 1855), Appendix c. H. von Campenhausen, Die Entstehung der christlichen Bibel (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 39; 1968), pp. 282–303 (Eng. tr., 1972, pp. 243–62). A. C. Sundberg, Jun., 'Canon Muratori: a Fourth-Century List', HTR 66 (1973), pp. 1–41. G. M. Hahneman, The Muratorian Fragment and the Development of the Canon (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1992). CPG 1 (1983), p. 256 (no. 1862). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 94 f. and 560 f. H. *Leclercq OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 543–60, s.v. 'Muratorianum', with good photographic reprods. G. A. Robbins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 928 f., s.v. 'Muratorian Fragment'.

Murillo, Bartolomé Estebán (1617–82), Spanish painter. Except for short visits to Madrid, Murillo spent all his life in Seville. He is esp. known as the painter of the 'Immaculate Conception', which he executed more than 20 times, and he was the foremost Spanish artist of the theme of the 'Virgin and Child'. A supreme painter of children, his interest ranged from the infancy of Christ and of St *John the Baptist into the secular sphere. His treatment of religious themes was often combined with a fascination for genre anticipating the 18th cent. He was a prolific artist; his work is well represented in the Prado Museum, Madrid.

Reprods. of his paintings (in black and white), ed. A. L. Mayer (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, 22; 1913). D. A. Iñiguez, Murillo (3 vols., Madrid, 1981), with full bibl. and reprods. of his painting, many in colour. J. Brown, Murillo and his Drawings (Princeton, NJ [1976]). Bartolomé Esteban Murillo 1617–1682. Catalogue of an Exhibition at the Museo del Prado, Madrid, 1983, and the Royal Academy of Arts, London, 1983 (1982), with select bibl. C. B. Curtis, Velázquez and Murillo: A Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the Works of . . . Velázquez and Bartolomé Estebán Murillo (1888), pp. 109–352.

Myconius, Friedrich (1490–1546), *Lutheran reformer of Thuringia. Born at Lichtenfels on the Main, he studied at Annaberg. After entering the *Franciscan Order (14 July 1510) he was transferred to Leipzig, and in 1512 to Weimar. In 1516 he was ordained priest and soon became known as a persuasive preacher. Although he was an ardent student of Scholastic theology, he found that it did not meet all his needs and he sympathized with M. *Luther's attack on *indulgences in 1517. Consequently he was confined in various houses of the Order in the following years. In 1524 he finally fled and in the same year was appointed by Duke Johann preacher at Gotha, where he married, reformed the schools, and exercised a powerful moral influence. In correspondence with Luther from 1525 and with P. *Melanchthon from 1527, he played a leading part in the Reform Movement. He was present at the Conferences at *Marburg (1529), *Wittenberg (1536), *Schmalkalden (1537), Frankfurt and Nuremberg (1539), and *Hagenau (1540). In 1538 he visited England on the embassy which hoped to win *Henry VIII over to the *Schmalkaldic League. He returned to Gotha in 1540.

Although known in his lifetime mainly as a preacher and educational reformer, Myconius also wrote extensively. His main work, Historia Reformationis, written in conjunction with J. Heller (ed. by E. S. Cyprian, 1715; modern edn. by O. Clemen, 1914), is a valuable contemporary source esp. for the movement in Thuringia. He also wrote tracts in the vernacular, among them Wie man die Einfältigen, und sonderlich die Kranken, im Christenthum unterrichten soll (1539).

H. U. Delius (ed.), Der Briefwechsel des Friedrich Mykonius (1524–1546) (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, 18/19; 1960); H. Ulbrich, Friedrich Mykonius 1490–1546: Lebensbild und neue Funde zum Briefwechsel des Reformators (ibid. 20; 1962). P. Scherffig, Friedrich Mekum von Lichtenfels (Quellen und Darstellungen aus der Geschichte des Reformationsjahrhunderts, 12; 1909). O. Schmidt and G. Kawerau in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 603–7, and 24 (1913), p. 191. Schottenloher, 2 (1935), pp. 83 f. (nos. 16188–211).

Myconius, Oswald (1488–1552), originally Geisshäusler, Swiss Reformer and humanist. It appears that the name 'Myconius' was given him by *Erasmus. A native of Lucerne, he studied at Basle from 1510 to 1514. In 1516 he went to Zurich, where he became the cathedral schoolmaster and induced the chapter to elect his friend, U. *Zwingli, as people's priest. From 1520 to 1522 he taught at Lucerne; but soon becoming an upholder of the Reformed cause, he was compelled, on account of his Protestant sympathies, to leave the city. In 1523 he was back in Zurich, where he collaborated closely with Zwingli. In 1532 he became the successor of J. *Oecolampadius at Basle, remaining here for the rest of his life. His undogmatic temper, which found expression in a desire to reach a compromise with the Lutheran theologians on the matter of *consubstantiation, and his distrust of the increasing part of the secular authorities in such matters as *excommunication, aroused suspicion among the stricter Zwinglians. Among his works are a Life of Zwingli (1536), the Basle Confession of 1534, and commentaries on several biblical books.

K. R. Hagenbach, Johann Oekolampad und Oswald Myconius (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformierten Kirche, 2; 1859), pp. 309–462; P. Wernle, Calvin und Basel bis zum Tode des Myconius, 1535–52 (Programm zur Rektoratsfeier der Universität Basel, 1910). W. Brändly, 'Oswald Myconius in Basel', Zwingliana, 11 (1959–63), pp. 183–92. B. Riggenbach and E. Egli in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 607 f.

Myrc, John, also spelt Mirc (*fl. c.*1400), religious writer. Beyond the fact that he was the prior of the *canons regular of Lilleshall in Salop, nothing is known of his life. His surviving writings are his Liber Festialis, a collection of sermons for the more important festivals of the Christian year, beginning with the first Sunday in *Advent; a Manuale Sacerdotum; and Instructions for Parish Priests, an English poem written in rhyming couplets for the instruction of the clergy in their various duties. His works are important sources for the Church life of his age.

The works mentioned survive in several MSS (Brit. Lib., Bod., Camb. Univ. Lib.). Early pr. edns. of the 'Liber Festialis' by W. *Caxton (1483) and Wynkyn de Worde (1493). His 'Instructions for Parish Priests' were ed. by E. Peacock, with introd. note by H. Bradshaw, for the EETS (Orig. Ser. 31, 1868; rev. edn., F. J. Furnivall, 1902) and by G. Kristensson (Lund Studies in English, 49; 1974). D. B. Foss, 'John Mirk's Instructions for Parish Priests', in W. J. Sheils and D. Wood (eds.), The Ministry: Clerical and Lay (Studies in Church History, 26; Oxford, 1989), pp. 131–40. M. Bateson in DNB 38 (1893), pp. 50 f., s.v. 'Mirk'.

Mysteries of the Rosary. The 15 subjects of meditation connected with the 15 *decades of the *Rosary. They are divided into three groups of five, corresponding to the three *chaplets of which the devotion is composed, and known as the *Joyful, *Sorrowful, and *Glorious Mysteries (qq.v.). The whole in order forms an epitome of the lives of Christ and His Mother.

Mystery (or Miracle) Plays. The terms 'mystery' and 'miracle' have long been loosely applied to the vernacular religious drama of the later Middle Ages, notably the English *Corpus Christi plays and the French Passion Plays. Much is uncertain about the precise origins of this type of drama, though the shaping influence of the Liturgy, esp. the offices of *Holy Week and *Easter, is clear. More immediate sources used by the dramatists were early vernacular paraphrases of the Bible and Gospel harmonies. Apocryphal and legendary subjects such as the *Harrowing of Hell, the life of the BVM, *Antichrist, and the Last Judgement were commonly introduced. Plays dramatizing the lives of the saints could also be described as 'miracles', and surviving English examples deal with St *Paul and St *Mary Magdalene. Performance usually took place out of doors. In the N. of England (notably at *York and *Chester) the Corpus Christi cycles were given processionally on wagons used as movable stages. In East Anglia, Cornwall, London, and on the Continent of Europe, fixed stages in a variety of configurations were employed. In the later 14th cent. mystery and miracle plays in England were opposed by the *Lollard movement. They were eventually suppressed in the latter half of the 16th cent. under the impact of Protestant reform. Texts of the plays began to appear in editions by antiquaries and others in the 18th and 19th cents., and in recent years the plays have been revived before large and appreciative audiences in productions resembling the *Oberammergau Passion Play. See also DRAMA, CHRISTIAN.

Anthology of texts in D. Bevington, Medieval Drama (Boston [1975]), pp. 225–788; P. Meredith and J. E. Tailby (eds.), The Staging of Religious Drama in Europe in the Later Middle Ages: Texts and Documents in English Translation (Kalamazoo, Mich., 1983). V. A. Kolve, The Play called Corpus Christi (1966); R. [E.] Woolf, The English Mystery Plays (1972); B.-D. Berger, Le Drame liturgique de Pâques du X^e au XIII^e siècle: Liturgie et Théâtre (Théologie historique, 37 [1976]); W. Tydeman, The Theatre in the Middle Ages (Cambridge, 1978).

mysticism, mystical theology. In modern usage 'mysticism' generally refers to claims of immediate knowledge of Ultimate Reality (whether or not this is called 'God') by direct personal experience; 'mystical theology' is used to mean the study of mystical phenomena or the science of the mystical life. It has sometimes been suggested that such experience is the goal of all religion, and that there are certain experiences or patterns of experience which are common to believers in different religions or even in none, but this suggestion has been challenged on both philosophical and theological grounds. Paranormal phenomena, such as trances, visions and locutions, are often regarded as 'mystical', though their value and significance is assessed differently by different thinkers; they are usually not regarded as essential. Protestant theologians, from M. *Luther onwards, have tended to regard mysticism with suspicion. E. *Brunner and R. *Niebuhr held it to be anti-Christian because of its close link with *Neoplatonism, which seemed to bring it closer to pagan gnosis than to the Gospel's offer of salvation; others feared dangers of pantheism. In recent years there has been a marked increase in interest in mysticism.

Language connected with 'mystery' (μυστήριον) was widely used in the early Church, often in a fairly routine way; the use of such language depends on the conviction that Christian doctrine and liturgy involve matters known only by revelation, which are incomprehensible to, or which need to be shielded from profanation by, outsiders and those insufficiently purified by faith and moral conversion. The sacred words of Scripture and the deeds of God recorded in Scripture and enacted in the Eucharist contain a 'mystic' significance, into which believers can be progressively initiated by Christ through the working of the Holy Spirit. The mystery of God remains mysterious even in its revelation, so that we need to 'hear the quietness' of Jesus as well as receiving His word (*Ignatius, Eph. 15).

The phrase 'mystical theology' is first used by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, for whom our approach to God must be entirely governed by His self-disclosure in Christ and in the Bible. In addition to 'philosophical theology', which uses clear concepts and arguments, there is a 'mystical theology' which has to do with symbols and ritual (συμβολικὴν καὶ τελεστικήν, Letters, 9. 1), leading us beyond intellectual notions of God to a real union with Him in the 'truly mystic darkness of unknowing' (Mystical Theology, 1. 3); here the height of the 'mystic words' of Scripture is apprehended and the 'mysteries of theology' are revealed in silence (ibid. 1. 1). 'Mystical theology' does not just persuade us, it acts on us (Letters, 9. 1); in submitting to the effects of the Church's rites, we 'undergo divine things' (παθὼν τὰ θεῖα, Divine Names, 2. 9).

In some later Byzantine writers, the third phase of spiritual progress, which Dionysius called *unitive, is named 'mystical' (e.g. *Nicetas Stethatos, Capita Gnostica, 3. 41 (PG 120. 972)), and this is taken to mean that one is now in a position to 'initiate' others into the mysteries of God (ibid. 3. 44). The *Hesychasts defended the possibility and importance of an 'experience of the mystery of God or of the working of the Spirit' (*Gregory Palamas, Triads, 3. 3. 3).

Medieval W. interpreters of Dionysius tended to see 'mystical theology' as leading, through the *purgative and illuminative ways, to a loving union with God at the peak of our affectivity (apex affectivae), in which all intellectual operations are left behind. Thus some writers locate 'mystical theology' entirely in the will and the affections. Others combine this doctrine with the *Augustinian tradition that 'love itself is knowledge' (cf. *Gregory the Great, PL 76. 1207A), and maintain that 'mystical theology' imparts a special kind of knowledge of God not attainable by ordinary intellectual operations. Both views find supporters among the *Franciscans. Other theologians, esp. *Dominicans, held that 'mystical theology' is precisely the ascent of the intellect, enlightened by faith, to union with God. J. *Gerson argued that 'mystical theology' concerns neither the will nor the intellect, but a union with God in the essence of the soul (Ep., 55). This debate continued for several centuries.

Late medieval writers stressed that the height of the Christian life could be understood only by experience, and 'mystical theology' was increasingly taken to mean an experiential knowledge of God. Some writers specified particular subjective experiences as constituting or indicating the attainment of 'mystical theology' (generally identified, from the 16th cent. onwards, with *contemplation); this process reached its apogee in the Carmelite doctors, *Teresa of Ávila and St *John of the Cross, whose influence thereafter predominates.

From the late 16th cent. onwards the adjective 'mystic' tends to be used as a noun, so that certain people are called 'mystics', and mystica, la mystique, etc., begins to oust 'mystical theology'. The English word 'mysticism' is a rather later coinage.

Since the 17th cent. there has been debate among RC theologians as to whether 'mysticism' is to be regarded as the normal flowering of sanctifying grace, in principle open to all Christians, or whether it should be seen as a special grace reserved for the few. The latter opinion is esp. associated with the Jesuit G. B. *Scaramelli; the former has been upheld by A. Saudreau, the Dominicans J. G. Arintero and R. Garrigou-Lagrange, and many others.

Modern discussions of 'mysticism' have been dominated by the notion of 'mystical experience' and, on the one hand, by the quest for 'mystical' elements common to different religions and, on the other, by attempts to identify the essence of a specifically Christian 'mysticism'. The definitions proposed are usually arbitary, and there is a marked lack of clarity. The attempt to identify Christian 'mystics' in earlier periods is anachronistic, and conventional phrases such as 'the German mystics' (esp. *Eckhart, *Henry Suso, and J. *Tauler) or 'the English mystics' (esp. R. *Rolle, W. Hilton, and the author of the Cloud of Unknowing) can be misleading, since the writers concerned were not necessarily interested in the kinds of experience now regarded as constituting 'mysticism'.

There is an immense literature. Studies devoted to the subject include W. R. *Inge, Christian Mysticism (Bampton Lectures for 1899; 1899); id., Mysticism in Religion [1947]; A. Poulain, SJ, Des grâces d'oraison (1901; Eng. tr., 1910); A. Saudreau, L'État Mystique: Sa nature, ses phases (1903; 2nd edn., 1921; Eng. tr., 1924), and other works; W. *James, The Varieties of Religious Experience (Gifford Lectures for 1901–2; 1902), pp. 379–429; F. *von Hügel, The Mystical Element of Religion as studied in Saint Catherine of Genoa and her Friends (2 vols., 1908); E. *Underhill, Mysticism (1911); id., The Mystics of the Church [1925], and other works; [E.] C. Butler, OSB, Western Mysticism: The Teaching of SS Augustine, Gregory and Bernard on Contemplation and the Contemplative Life (1922; 2nd edn., with 'Afterthoughts', 1927); E. Brunner, Die Mystik und das Wort: Der Gegensatz zwischen moderner Religionsauffassung und christlichen Glauben dargestellt an der Theologie Schleiermachers (1924); E. A. Peers, Spanish Mysticism: A Preliminary Survey (1924); id., Studies of the Spanish Mystics (3 vols., 1927–60); J. G. Arintero, OP, La Verdadera Mística Tradicional (Salamanca, 1925; 2nd edn., 1980) and other works; E. Hendrikx, OESA, Augustins Verhältnis zur Mystik: Eine patristische Untersuchung (Cassicianum, 1; 1936); A. Stolz, OSB, Theologie der Mystik (1936; Eng. tr., 1938; rev. Fr. tr., Chevetogne, 1939); R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, Les Trois Âges de la Vie Intérieure (2 vols. [1938]; Eng. tr., 2 vols., St Louis, 1947–8), and other works; J. B. Collins, Christian Mysticism in the Elizabethan Age with its Background in Mystical Methodology (Baltimore and London, 1940); V. *Lossky, Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (Centre de recherches philosophiques et spirituelles, 1944; Eng. tr., 1957); R. C. Zaehner, Mysticism Sacred and Profane: An Inquiry into some Varieties of Praeternatural Experience (Oxford, 1957); C. Pepler, OP, The Three Degrees: A Study of Christian Mysticism (1957); H. [C.] Graef, The Story of Mysticism (1966); D. *Knowles, What is Mysticism? (1967), and other works; M. Andrés Martín, Los Recogidos: Nueva Visión de la Mística Española (1500–1700) (1975); S. T. Katz (ed.), Mysticism and Philosophical Analysis (1978); A. Louth, The Origins of the Christian Mystical Tradition from Plato to Denys (Oxford, 1981); A. de Libera, Introduction à la Mystique Rhénane d'Albert le Grand à Maître Eckhart (1984); M. de Certeau, La Fable Mystique, XVI–XVII Siècle ([1982]; Eng. tr., Chicago and London, 1992); L. Bouyer, Mysterion: Du mystère à la mystique [1986]; B. McGinn, The Presence of God: A History of Western Christian Mysticism (4 vols., New York, 1991 ff.; London, 1992 ff.). L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., ' "Mystique", Essai sur l'histoire d'un mot', Supplément de la Vie Spirituelle, 9 (May 1949) pp. 3–23; Eng. tr., 'Mysticism: An Essay on the History of a Word', in Mystery and Mysticism: A Symposium (1956), pp. 119–37; M. de Certeau, SJ, ' "Mystique" au xvii siècle. Le problème du langage "mystique" ', in L'Homme devant Dieu: Mélanges offerts au Père Henri de Lubac, 2 (Théologie, 57 [1964]), pp. 267–91. J. Vanneste, SJ, 'La théologie mystique du pseudo-Denys l'Aréopagite', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 5 (1962), pp. 401–15. A. Solignac, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1889–1984, s.v. 'Mystique'; P. Gerlitz, A. Louth, and others in TRE 23 (1994), pp. 533–92, s.v. 'Mystik'.

N

Naassenes (or Naasenes) (Heb. נָחָשׁ, 'serpent'). A *Gnostic sect described by *Hippolytus (Haer. 5. 6–17). It has sometimes been held that the name represents the Hebrew equivalent of the Greek *Ophites (q.v.).

See bibl. s.v. OPHITES.

Nag Hammadi Papyri. A collection of papyrus codices found in 1945–6 near Nag Hammadi (the ancient Chenoboskion) in Upper Egypt, some 60 miles below Luxor on the Nile. Eleven of the codices still have their original leather bindings. The papyri are dated to the period between the 3rd and 5th cent. AD, and contain in various degrees of preservation over 40 (mainly *Gnostic) works, nearly all previously unknown. Written in *Coptic (predominantly in the Sahidic dialect), most, if not all, are translations from Greek. They vary widely in date and style, some being thought to go back to the 2nd cent. or earlier. Some of them are akin to the *Hermetic books, but most are at least superficially Christian and display Gnostic features in varying degree; thus the 'Apocryphon of *John' contains bizarre and fanciful theology, but some works, such as the 'Gospel of Truth' (see EVANGELIUM VERITATIS) and 'On the Resurrection', are not notably unorthodox. At least one, the 'Apocalypse of Adam', appears to show no distinctively Christian features, and may possibly be non-Christian. The library is a primary source for our knowledge of Gnosticism. The MSS are now all in the Coptic Library in Cairo.

The treatises found at Nag Hammadi include (with roman figures denoting the codex, and arabic figures the number within the codex): the 'Apocryphal Epistle of *James' (I, 2), the 'Gospel of Truth' (I, 3 and XII, 2), 'On the Resurrection' (also known as the 'Epistle to Rheginus', I, 4), the 'Tripartite Tractate' (I, 5), the 'Apocryphon of John' (II, 1, III, 1, and IV, 1), the 'Gospel of *Thomas' (II, 2), the 'Gospel of *Philip' (II, 3), the 'Hypostasis of the Archons' (II, 4), the 'Origin of the World' (untitled, also known as the 'Anonymous Revelation', II, 5 and XIII, 2), the 'Exegesis of the Soul' (II, 6), the 'Book of *Thomas' (II, 7), the 'Gospel of the Egyptians' (III, 2 and IV, 2), 'Eugnostos the Blessed' (III, 3 and V, 1), the '*Dialogue of the Redeemer' (III, 5), the 'Apocalypse of Paul' (V, 2), the 'Apocalypses of *James' (V, 3 and 4), the 'Apocalypse of Adam' (V, 5), the 'Paraphrase of Seth' (VII, 1), the 'Teaching of Silvanus' (VII, 4), 'Zostrianus' (VIII, 1), and the 'Letter of St *Peter to Philip' (VIII, 2).

There is a complete list of the Nag Hammadi treatises, with table showing the alternative numbering of J. Doresse and H.-C. Puech, and list of edns. and trs. to date, in CPG 1 (1983), pp. 68–104 (nos. 1175–222). The Facsimile Edition of the Nag Hammadi Codices, pub. under the Auspices of the Department of Antiquities of the Arab Republic of Egypt in Conjunction with UNESCO (12 vols., Leiden, 1972–84) supersedes earlier photographic edns. of individual texts. The main edns. of the texts are those pub. in Nag Hammadi Studies (NHS), with Eng. tr., Leiden, 1975 ff., in the Bibliothèque Copte de Nag Hammadi, Section 'Textes' (BCNH), with Fr. tr., Quebec, 1977 ff., and a few in TU, 1967 ff. (vols. 101, 119, 132, 134, and 136). The following texts have been pub., with BCNH texts given only where the NHS edns. have not yet appeared: Codex I, ed. H. W. Attridge (NHS 22–3; 1985); II, 1: see JOHN, APOCRYPHON OF; II, 2–7, ed. B. Layton (NHS 20–1; 1989); III, 2 and IV, 2, ed. A. Böhlig and F. Wisse (NHS 4; 1975); III, 3, ed. D. Trakatellis (Athens, 1977); III, 5, ed. S. Emmel (NHS 26; 1984); V, 2–5 and VI [1–8], ed. D. M. Parrott (NHS 11; 1979); VII, 1, ed. M. Krause in F. Altheim and R. Stiehl, Christentum am Roten Meer, 2 (1973), pp. 2–105; VII, 2, ed. L. Painchaud (BCNH 6; 1982); VII, 4, ed. Y. Janssens (BCNH 13; 1983); VII, 5, ed. P. Claude (BCNH 8; 1983); VIII, 2: see PETER, LETTER OF ST, TO PHILIP; IX and X, ed. B. A. Pearson (NHS 15; 1981); XI, 2, ed. J. E. Ménard (BCNH 14; 1985); XII, 1 and 3, ed. P.-H. Poirier (BCNH 11; 1983); XIII, 1, ed. Y. Janssens (BCNH 4; 1978); and Greek and Coptic Papyri from the Cartonnage of the Covers, ed. J. W. B. Barns and others (NHS 16; 1981). Eng. tr. of all the codices, and similar material in Berlin MS 8502, ed. J. M. Robinson, The Nag Hammadi Library in English (Leiden, 1977; 3rd edn., 1988). For works on the significance of the Nag Hammadi material, see modern works cited s.v. GNOSTICISM. D. M. Scholer, Nag Hammadi Bibliography 1948–1969 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 1; 1971); annual suppl. in Novum Testamentum, 1971 ff.

Nag's Head Story. This tale was apparently fabricated early in the 17th cent. to discredit the validity of M. *Parker's episcopal consecration. It alleged that when Parker found himself unable to obtain regular consecration, some clerics met at the Nag's Head tavern in Cheapside, and that there J. *Scory, the deprived Bp. of *Chichester, and himself affirmed not to have been properly consecrated, constituted Parker and the others bishops by placing a Bible on the neck of each in turn with the words 'Take thou authority to preach the Word of God sincerely'. The story was first put into circulation by C. Holywood, SJ, in 1604; and though soon discredited, it continued to reappear in the controversial literature on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations till beyond the middle of the 19th cent.

Christopher [Holywood], SJ, De Investiganda Vera ac Visibili Christi Ecclesia Libellus (Antwerp, 1604), pp. 17 f. The earliest attempt to discredit the story is that in F. *Mason, Of the Consecration of the Bishops of the Church of England (1613), pp. 123 f. See also bibl. to ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS and PARKER, M.

Nahum, Book of. One of the 12 '*Minor Prophets'. It consists of 3 chapters in all. The main subject is the fall of Nineveh (*c.*612 BC), which is described in such detail and is regarded as so certain and so imminent that it is generally supposed that the Book may be dated shortly before this. The opening verses, 1: 2–9 (or 1: 2–2: 2), contain a psalm which, although it forms a fitting introduction to what follows, has no reference to the main subject of the Book; and on this ground, combined with its (imperfectly preserved) acrostic form, some attribute the psalm to an independent source. Various theories have been advanced to explain the one fact stated in connection with the person of Nahum, that he was 'an Elkoshite' (1: 1). Some fix the site of Elkosh near Nineveh; others follow St *Jerome and place it in *Galilee (cf. the derivation of *Capernaum as 'village of Nahum'); most prefer a site in Judah.

Comm. by J. M. P. Smith (ICC on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912, pp. 267–363), W. A. Maier (St Louis, 1959), and J. D. W. Watts (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Joel, Obad., Jon., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1975, pp. 98–120). W. R. Arnold, 'The Composition of Nahum 1–2: 3', ZATW 21 (1901), pp. 225–65. P. Humbert, 'Le Problème du Livre de Nahoum', Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie Religieuses, 12 (1932), pp. 1–15. A. Haldar, Studies in the Book of Nahum (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1946, pt. 7; 1947), with bibl. H. Schulz, Das Buch Nahum: Eine redaktionskritische Untersuchung (Beiheft zur ZATW, 129; 1973). K. J. Cathcart, Nahum in the Light of Northwest Semitic (Biblica et Orientalia, 26; Rome, 1973). A. S. van der Woude, 'The Book of Nahum. A Letter Written in Exile', Oudtestamentische Studiën, 20 (1977), 108–26. A. George in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 291–301, s.v., with bibl.

Name of Jesus. In consequence of the close relation between name and person, the Name of Jesus is used in the NT as a synonym for Jesus Himself, denoting His character and authority. The disciples perform miracles and exorcisms 'in the name of Jesus', i.e. by His power (Mk. 9: 38 ff., Acts 4: 30, etc.), and regularly baptize in it (Acts 2: 38, 8: 16, etc.), and St Paul esp. insists on its efficacy for our justification (1 Cor. 6: 11) and the obligation of Christians to venerate it above all other names (Phil. 2: 9 f.). This reverence for, and confidence in, the Name of Jesus has found expression in the Church from early times, e.g. in its use in exorcisms and the medieval custom of giving medals with the monogram 'IHS' (q.v.) to newly baptized infants. In the 15th cent. devotion to the Holy Name was popularized by the *Franciscans, St *Bernardino of Siena, and St *Giovanni Capistrano, to whom also the Litany of the Holy Name, used since the 15th cent. and approved for the universal RC Church by *Leo XIII in 1886, possibly owes its origin. See also foll. entry.

W. Heitmüller, 'Im Namen Jesu' (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 1, Heft 2; 1903). F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake (eds.), The Beginnings of Christianity, pt. 1: The Acts of the Apostles, 5 (1933), pp. 121–40 ('The Name, Baptism, and the Laying on of Hands' by S. New). P. R. Biasiotto, OFM, History of the Development of the Devotion to the Holy Name (St Bonaventure, NY, 1943). A. Cabassut, OSB, 'La Dévotion au nom de Jésus dans l'Église d'occident', La Vie spirituelle, 86 (1952), pp. 46–69. J. Dupont, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 514–41, s.v. 'Nom de Jésus'; I. Noye, PSS, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1109–26, s.v. 'Jésus (Nom de)'.

Name of Jesus, Feast of the. This feast, which had been celebrated locally at the end of the Middle Ages, was officially granted to the *Franciscans in 1530 for commemoration on 14 Jan. The observance gradually spread until it was finally prescribed in 1721 by Innocent XIII for the whole RC Church on the Second Sunday after *Epiphany. The Office and Mass were composed by Bernardino dei Busti (d. 1500), while the celebrated office hymns, '*Jesu dulcis memoria', 'Jesu Rex admirabilis', and 'Jesu decus angelicum', were adapted from the work of a 12th cent. author. The date of the feast was again modified in the Latin Church by *Pius X, who fixed it for the Sunday between the *Circumcision (1 Jan.) and the Epiphany (6 Jan.) or, if in any year there was no such Sunday, on 2 Jan. It was suppressed in the Roman Calendar of 1969. Acc. to late medieval practice in England, as embodied in the later forms of the *Sarum Rite, the feast was observed on 7 Aug., and this date is assigned to it in the calendar of the BCP. The American BCP (1979) places it on 1 Jan. Various other modern Anglican liturgies use the Naming of Jesus as an alternative title for the feast of the Circumcision.

R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 62–83. G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1919 f., s.v. 'Nome di Gesù, Festa del'.

Nantes, Edict of. The edict signed at Nantes on 13 Apr. 1598 by *Henry IV, after the end of the French wars of religion, granting extensive rights to the *Huguenots (his former co-religionists), as well as confirming earlier edicts made in their favour in 1564 and 1570. The Huguenots were allowed free exercise of their religion, except in certain towns (incl. *Paris), civil equality with Catholics, and fair administration of justice, and they were given subsidies for their troops, pastors, and schools. They were also allowed to garrison certain towns. The terms were increasingly infringed in the 17th cent. until the edict was revoked by Louis XIV in the Edict of Fontainebleau on 18 Oct. 1685.

[E. Benoist], Histoire de l'édit de Nantes (24 books in 5 vols., Delft, 1693–5), with text of edict in vol. 1, pp. (62–94), and of revocation in vol. 5, pp. (184–6); Eng. tr. of Books 1–11 (2 vols., 1694), with Eng. tr. of text of edict, 1, pp. 526–62. Eng. tr. of main clauses of the edict, with comm., in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall, Church and State through the Ages (1954), pp. 183–8, and of the revocation, ibid., pp. 208–13. J. Orcibal, Louis XIV et les Protestants (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de France, 1951), esp. pp. 111–25. J. Garrisson, L'Édit de Nantes et sa Révocation: Histoire d'une Intolérance (1985); É. Labrousse, 'Une foi, une loi, un roi?': Essai sur la Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes (Geneva and Paris, 1985); J. Quéniart, La Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes: Protestants et Catholiques français de 1598 à 1685 [1985]; J.-R. Armogathe, Croire en liberté: L'Église catholique et la Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes (1985). R. Zuber and L. Theis (eds.), La Révocation de l'Édit de Nantes et le protestantisme français en 1685: Actes du colloque de Paris (15–19 octobre 1985) (Société de l'histoire du protestantisme français, supplément au Bulletin, 1986).

Narsai (also Narses) (d. *c.*503), poet and theologian of the *Church of the East. Born prob. in 399, he became head of the famous school of *Edessa, perhaps as early as 437. Owing to the growing hostility towards the followers of Theodore and *Nestorius, *c.*471 he fled to Nisibis, where the bishop, *Barsumas, asked him to stay and found a school. Narsai was one of the formative theologians of the Church of the East. He wrote an extensive set of commentaries on the OT, but these have been completely lost. There survive, however, a large number of metrical homilies and some hymns, whose beauty gained for him the epithet 'Harp of the Spirit'. Some of his homilies (the 'Liturgical Homilies') afford important evidence for the early history of the E. Syrian rites of *Baptism and the *Eucharist.

Syriac text of Works ed. A. Mingana (2 vols., Mosul, 1905; ed. partly in Syriac). 'Homilies on the Creation', ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by P. Gignoux in PO 34 (1968), pp. 415–716; 'Metrical Homilies on the Nativity, Epiphany, Passion, Resurrection and Ascension' ed., with Eng. tr., by F. G. McLeod, SJ, ibid., 40

(1979), pp. 3–193. Text of further homilies pr. from one MS, with introd. and Fr. tr. by E. P. Siman, Cinq homélies sur les paraboles évangéliques (Paris, 1984). Eng. tr. of four of the 'Liturgical Homilies', with crit. discussions, by R. H. *Connolly (Texts and Studies, 8. 1; Cambridge, 1909). Fr. tr. of various homilies in L'Orient Syrien (12 vols., 1956–67), passim. A. Vööbus, History of the School of Nisibis (CSCO 266; 1965), pp. 57–121. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 109–13. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 115–18. E. Tisserant in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 26–30; P. Gignoux in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 39–41, both s.v.

narthex (Gk. νάρθηξ, lit. 'a small case'). In a Byzantine church, the antechamber to the nave, from which it is separated by columns, rails, or a wall. *Catechumens, candidates for baptism, and penitents occupied the narthex. It is to be distinguished from the 'exonarthex', or porch, opening on to the street.

H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (1935), col. 888 f., s.v.; M. Zocca in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1659–61, s.v. 'Nartece'.

Nash Papyrus. A small fragment of papyrus which, until the discovery of the *Dead Sea Scrolls, was the oldest known MS of any portion of the Hebrew OT. It was acquired by W. L. Nash in 1902 and is in the Cambridge University Library (Or. 233). Perhaps to be dated in the 2nd cent. BC (and not, as was at first thought, in the 2nd cent. AD), it contains the Ten *Commandments in substantially the Deuteronomic text (Deut. 5: 6–21), with the 6th and 7th Commandments transposed (cf. Lk. 18: 20), followed by a brief introductory passage and then the *Shema.

S. A. *Cook, 'A Pre-Massoretic Biblical Papyrus', Proc. of the Soc. of Biblical Archaeology, 25 (1903), pp. 34–56 (with facsimile).

Nasorean. See NAZARENE.

Natalitia (Lat., 'birthday'). In the early cents, this word was used of the death-days of Christians, and esp. of martyrs, in the sense of their birthday into eternal life. In later Christian usage the word sometimes meant no more than 'anniversary', the *Gelasian Sacramentary, e.g., employing it of the anniversary of a bishop's consecration.

Nathanael. One of the first disciples of Jesus, who recommended him for his sincerity (Jn. 1: 47). He was a native of Cana (Jn. 21: 2) and his call is related in Jn. 1: 43–51. In spite of this his name is not included among those of the Twelve Apostles. From the 9th cent. he was identified with St *Bartholomew by Elias of Damascus, *Ebedjesus, and other writers of the *Church of the East. In the W. this conjecture is first mentioned by *Rupert of Deutz in the 12th cent. The identification is now widely accepted by biblical scholars.

See comm. to JOHN, GOSPEL OF ST.

National Anthem. See GOD SAVE THE KING/QUEEN.

National Apostasy, Sermon on. The sermon with this title preached by J. *Keble on 14 July 1833 in the church of St Mary the Virgin, Oxford, before the Judges of Assize and commonly regarded as the beginning of the *Oxford Movement (q.v.). Its aim was to promote action in defence of the Church, esp. in view of the proposed suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. The text was 1 Sam. 12: 23.

The Sermon was pub. at Oxford in 1833 immediately after delivery; repr., with introd. by A. M. G. Stephenson (privately pr., Steventon, near Abingdon, 1983). Its traditional place as inaugurating the Oxford Movement appears to derive from a passage in J. H. *Newman's Apologia; cf. F. L. Cross, John Henry Newman (1933), Appendix IV, 'The Myth of July 14, 1833' (pp. 162 f.).

National Assembly of the Church of England. See CHURCH ASSEMBLY.

National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches. The formal title adopted in 1896 by the National Free Church Council. This association of Free Churches was formed in 1892 for mutual consultation, co-operation, and witness. In 1940 it united with the Federal Council of Evangelical Free Churches to form the *Free Church Federal Council.

National Covenant (1638). The Covenant of the Scottish *Presbyterians inaugurated in the Greyfriars churchyard at Edinburgh on 28 Feb. 1638, as an answer to the attempt to impose on the Scottish Church the 1637 BCP. It consisted of the *King's Confession of 1581, with many additions by A. *Henderson and others, and concluded with an oath. See also COVENANTERS.

Text pr. in S. R. Gardiner (ed.), The Constitutional Documents of the Puritan Revolution (3rd edn., Oxford, 1906), pp. 124–34. See also bibl. to COVENANTERS.

National Society. The popular name of the Society founded in 1811 by Joshua Watson (1771–1855; a leading member of the '*Hackney Phalanx') and incorporated in 1817 as 'The National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church'. Along with the British and Foreign Schools Society (founded in 1807), a mainly Nonconformist body, it was a pioneer in the provision of elementary education in England and Wales before there was any system of State education. It also undertook the training of teachers, the first college (St Mark's, Chelsea) being opened in 1841. After the establishment by the State in 1870 of Board Schools, the Society's schools (the 'National Schools') remained completely independent until 1902, when they began to receive financial aid from the Local Authorities. Though now part of the State system, those schools which survive retain a measure of independence, including scope for specifically Church teaching. A new charter, granted in 1934, extended the objects of the Society to promote Anglican religious education among all classes. This includes work in other than elementary schools, and much *Sunday School work comes under its auspices, together with concern for youth work and adult education. Until the formation of the C of E Council for Education in 1948, the National Society was recognized as the Church's central organization concerned with education; while no longer defining the Church's official educational policy, it is free to express views on all aspects of religious education. It supports Church schools and colleges of education; it manages a number of educational trusts, provides an information service on legal and other matters for school managers and others, and it publishes literature for religious education. It works closely both with the Division of Education of the Church in Wales and with the C of E General Synod of Education (the successor of the Council of Education) and its General Secretary is also the Secretary of the Board's Schools Council. Its headquarters is in *Church House, Westminster.

Much information in annual reports of the National Society (1811 ff.). C. K. F. Brown, The Church's Part in Education, 1833–1941, with Special Reference to the Work of the National Society (1942), with bibl. H. J. Burgess, Enterprise in Education: The Story of the Work of the Established Church in the Education of the People prior to 1870 (1958); id. and P. A. Welsby, A Short History of the National Society 1811–1961 (1961).

Nativity of St John the Baptist. A feast observed on 24 June, at any rate since the 4th cent., to commemorate the miraculous birth of the Baptist, recorded in Lk. 1. It was one of the earliest feasts to find a place in the Christian calendar. St *Augustine (Serm. 287. 4) explained the special appropriateness of the date selected, as after this feast the days begin to get shorter, whereas after the feast of Christ's Nativity they begin to grow longer (cf. Jn. 3: 30).

G. *Morin, 'La Date de la Saint-Jean. Solution d'un problème liturgique au IV^e siècle', Le Messager des Fidèles [later R. Bén.], 5 (1888), pp. 257–64. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2171–4.

Nativity of the Blessed Virgin. This feast, which is celebrated on 8 Sept., is attested for the 8th cent. in the E. by two sermons of St *Andrew of Crete. Though referred to in Rome by Pope *Sergius (687–701) and in some MSS of the *Gelasian and *Gregorian Sacramentaries, it was not generally observed in the W. until the 11th cent. It has survived in the calendar of the BCP. The choice of 8 Sept. for the feast is unexplained.

F. G. Holweck in CE 10 (1911), pp. 712 f.; G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1678–80; J. Adriaense, MCS, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 1981–3, s.v. 'Onze Lieve Vrouw Geboorte', with extensive bibl.

Natural Law. An expression used with a wide variety of meanings, but in a theological context the law implanted in nature by the Creator which rational creatures can discern by the light of natural reason. It has been contrasted with the revealed law, though it was commonly held that the Commandments revealed in the *Decalogue (except that about Sabbath observance) were also precepts of the Natural Law. St *Paul refers to the Natural Law in Rom. 2: 14 f., where he says that the Gentiles 'show that what the law requires is written in their hearts' although they do not have the *Torah or Mosaic Law. *Stoics believed in the Law of Nature, and in the Middle Ages and in more recent times there have been philosophical doctrines that maintained the idea in some form. It has, however, often seemed that there was little agreement about the content of Natural Law other than that good is to be done and evil avoided, which would mean that Natural Law underwrites morality as such, rather than any particular moral code. The notion of 'human rights' (and 'animal rights'), understood as 'natural rights' and widely appealed to in modern times, has sometimes sought a philosophical foundation in the notion of Natural Law, and the growing importance of international law has led to renewed attention to the concept.

O. Gierke, Das deutsche Genossenschaftsrecht, 4 (1913; Eng. tr., Natural Law and the Theory of Society, 1500–1800, 2 vols., 1934); C. G. Haines, The Revival of Natural Law Concepts (Harvard Studies in Jurisprudence, 4; 1930); H. A. Rommen, Die ewige Wiederkehr des Naturrechts (Leipzig, 1936; 2nd edn., Munich, 1947; Eng. tr., The Natural Law, 1949); N. Micklem, The Theology of Law (1943); C. H. *Dodd, 'Natural Law in the New Testament', Theology, 49 (1946), pp. 128–33 and 161–7; repr. in id., New Testament Studies (1953), pp. 129–142; J. Messner, Das Naturrecht: Handbuch der Gesellschaftsethik, Staatsethik und Wirtschaftsethik (Vienna, 1950; 4th edn., 1960; Eng. trs., 1952 and 1965). A. P. d'Entrèves, Natural Law (1951; 2nd edn., 1970); J. Fuchs, SJ, Lex Naturae: Zur Theologie des Naturrechts (Düsseldorf, 1955; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1965); E. Bloch, Naturrecht und Menschliche Würde (Frankfurt-am-Main, 1961; Eng. tr., Natural Law and Human Dignity, Cambridge, Mass., and London [1986]); I. Evans, OP (ed.), Light on the Natural Law [1965]; J. [M.] Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights (Oxford, 1980).

Natural Theology. The body of knowledge about God which may be obtained by human reason alone without the aid of Revelation and hence to be contrasted with 'Revealed Theology'. The distinction was worked out in the Middle Ages at great length, and is based on such passages as Rom. 1: 18 ff., acc. to which man is capable of arriving at certain religious truths by applying his natural powers of discursive thought. In a definition of the First *Vatican Council (De fid. cath., cap. 2, can. 2) the possibility of this knowledge is explained by the dependence of the creature upon God. The chief objects of Natural Theology are God in so far as He is known through His works, the human soul, its freedom and immortality, and *Natural Law. Hence, strictly speaking, Natural Theology is part of philosophy and treated as such in the systems of Scholasticism. Reformation theology generally rejected the competence of fallen human reason to engage in Natural Theology; and in modern times this incompetence has been reasserted with emphasis by K. *Barth and the *Dialectical School. Modern theologians sympathetic towards the ideals of Natural Theology often present their views under the heading of '*Philosophy of Religion' (q.v.).

Naumburg Convention. A meeting of princes and representatives of the German Protestant leaders, held at Naumburg from 20 Jan. to 8 Feb. 1561, with a view to securing doctrinal unity, esp. in the matter of the *Eucharist. The proposed agreement on the basis of the *Augsburg Confession failed, as the *Calvinists stood by the 'variata' edition of 1540 and the *Lutherans by the 'invariata' of 1531. An invitation from the Pope to send legates to the Council of *Trent was rejected, nominally through objection to the form of address ('Dilecto filio') on the Papal letter, which was returned unopened.

The principal docs. were ed. J. H. Gelbke, Der Naumburgische Fürstentag (1793). R. Calinich, Der Naumburgische Fürstentag, 1561 (1870). K. Schornbaum, 'Zum Tage von Naumburg 1561', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 8 (1910–11), pp. 181–214; K. Braun, 'Nürnberg und die Naumburger Fürstentage 1561', Zeitschrift für bayrische Kirchengeschichte, 5 (1930), pp. 134–76. G. Kawerau in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 661–9.

nave. That part of a church, between the main front and the chancel and choir, which is assigned to the laity. It has often been separated from the sanctuary by a screen, and from the aisles by columns or pillars. The term is generally thought to be derived from the Lat. navis, 'ship', this being a symbol of the Church, but it may be a corrupt form of the Gk. ναός, 'temple'.

Nayler, James (*c.*1618–60), *Quaker. Born near Wakefield, W. Yorks, from 1643 to 1651 he served with some distinction in the Parliamentary army, in which he was noted as an Independent preacher. He retired, perhaps with tuberculosis, to a farm near his former home. When G. *Fox visited Wakefield at the end of 1651, Nayler heard him and was soon convinced of the Quaker doctrine of the *Inner (or Inward) Light. At the outset he was second only to Fox in the leadership of the movement. He was partially responsible for the conversion of the family of Judge Fell of Swarthmoor Hall, Cumbria, which soon became a noted centre of Quakerism. In 1652 he preached widely in the N. of England and was imprisoned at Appleby. From the summer of 1655 until the following spring, he was the chief spokesman of the movement in London. Soon afterward he came under the influence of a group of people with *Ranting views, led by one Martha Simmonds (1610–65), who, confusing the doctrine of the Inner Light with a belief in absolute unity with God, tried to worship him as Christ. At first Nayler resisted his devotees and set out to visit Fox, who was imprisoned in Launceston castle. Apprehended on the way as a Quaker, he was confined in the late summer of 1656 in *Exeter gaol. Here he was accredited with having raised a woman from the dead and in September, largely under the influence of Martha Simmonds, he quarrelled with Fox. As soon as he was released, he proceeded to Bristol, which he entered on 24 Oct. 1656 with his followers in the manner that the Lord entered Jerusalem. After examination by a Committee of the second Protectorate Parliament, he was very severely punished for blasphemy. He appears to have repented by *c.*1657, was released from prison by the Long Parliament in 1659, and in 1660, shortly before his death, was reconciled with Fox and regained some of his former popularity. He wrote many tracts, among them How Sin is Strengthened and How it is Overcome (1657).

A Collection of Sundry Books, Epistles and Papers written by James Nayler (1716). M. R. Brailsford, A Quaker from Cromwell's Army (1927); E. Fogelklou, Koäkaren James Nayler: Ein Sällsam Gestalt i Religionens Historia (1929; Eng. tr., 1931). G. F. Nuttall, James Nayler: A Fresh Approach (lecture, 1954). W. G. Bittle, James Nayler 1618–1660: The Quaker Indicted by Parliament (York and Richmond, Ind. [1986]). A. Gordon in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 110–3.

Nazarene. The term has been applied in a Christian context in various senses. In several of these the form 'Nasorean' is also found.

(1) In the NT Christ is called 'Jesus the Nazarene', which is usually understood as the equivalent of 'from *Nazareth', i.e. the place of his residence (cf. Mt. 21: 11, Jn. 1: 45, Acts 10: 38). In Mt. 2: 23 it is said to have been prophesied that the Christ should 'be called a Nazarene', but the original ref. and meaning of this prophecy, which is not found in the OT, is doubtful. Perhaps the original ref. here was not to Nazareth (so M. Lidzbarski, R. *Reitzenstein), though it is so understood by the Evangelist. In Mt., Jn., and Acts the form is Ναζωραῖος, in Mk. Ναζαρηνός, while in Lk. both forms occur.

(2) The 'Nazarenes' appears as a Jewish term for the early Christians in Acts 24: 5, and continued to be so used for some centuries. It is sometimes met with in Jewish literature in the form 'Noserim'.

(3) 'Nazarenes' occurs also as a name given by 4th-cent. writers to groups of Christians of Jewish race in Syria, who continued to obey much of the Jewish Law though they were otherwise orthodox Christians. The sect had no doubt existed from the earliest times of Christianity. See also the following entry.

(4) The *Mandaeans (q.v.) are described as Nasoreans in some of their earliest literature.

On (1) G. F. Moore, 'Nazarene and Nazareth', in F. J. Foakes Jackson and K. *Lake (eds.), The Beginnings of Christianity, 1. 1 (1920), pp. 426–32. J. A. Sanders, 'ΝΑΖΩΡΑΙΟΣ in Matt. 2.23', Journal of Biblical Literature, 84 (1965), pp. 169–72. H. H. Schaeder in TWB 4 (1942), pp. 879–84; Eng. tr., 4 (1967), pp. 874–9, s.v. Ναζαρηνός, with extensive bibl. On (2) and (3), A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 415–75, with bibl. p. 508. On (3) A. F. J. Klijn and G. J. Reinink, Patristic Evidence for Jewish-Christian Sects (Supplement to Novum Testamentum, 36; 1973), pp. 44–52.

Nazarenes, Gospel of the. A Gospel written in Aramaic, and, acc. to *Epiphanius and *Jerome, in use among the *Nazarenes of Beroea. The existence of such a Gospel seems to have been known earlier to *Hegesippus and *Eusebius. Epiphanius regarded it as an Aramaic version of Mt., while Jerome identified it with the 'Gospel acc. to the *Hebrews' (which he regarded as closely related to Mt.). Whether the Gospel, which was similar in content to Mt., represents an original Aramaic tradition earlier than the Synoptic Gospels, or is a translation from a Greek text, dependent on the Synoptics, is a subject of scholarly debate.

Eusebius, HE 4. 22. 8, and Theophania, 4. 12 (Syr. version); Epiphanius, Haer. 29 f.; Jerome, De vir. ill. 3, and Dial. adv. Pel. 3. 2. Ger. tr. of frags., with introd. by P. Vielhauer and G. Strecker in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 128–38; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 154–65. Eng. tr. of frags. also in J. K. Eliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 10–14. See also bibl. to HEBREWS, GOSPEL ACCORDING TO THE.

Nazareth. The village in Galilee which was the home of the BVM and St *Joseph, and where Christ was brought up and lived till the beginning of His ministry. It lies on a hill overlooking the valley of Esdraelon. It is not mentioned outside the NT. Today the town is a popular place of pilgrimage, many of its shrines having been rebuilt after their destruction by Muslims in the Middle Ages. Among its more important sanctuaries are the 'Church of the Annunciation', believed to be erected over the house of Mary, the 'Church of the Nutrition' (now the Church of St Joseph), on the traditional site of that of St Joseph, and the beautiful 'St Mary's Well'. See also NAZARENE.

T. Tobler, Nazareth (Berlin, 1868); G. Le Hardy, Histoire de Nazareth et de ses sanctuaires: Étude chronologique des documents (1905). B. Bagatti, OFM, Gli Scavi di Nazaret (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, 17; 2 vols., 1967–84; Eng. tr., 1969 ff.). Id. in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 318–33; V.

Tzaferis and B. Bagatti in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 3 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 1103–6, both s.v. See also bibl. to NAZARENE.

Nazarites. See NAZIRITES.

Nazarius, St. A martyr whose body St *Ambrose discovered in a garden outside Milan *c.*395 and translated to the Church of the Apostles in the city, which was afterwards rededicated to St Nazarius. In the same garden, St Ambrose later discovered the body of another martyr, St Celsus. Nothing else is known of the saints, the later '*Passions' being purely fictitious. The two saints appear together in the Ambrosian calendar on 28 July, and on 10 May there is also a feast of the 'Translation of St Nazarius'.

The primary source is Paulinus, Vita S. Ambrosii, 32 f. (PL 14. 38 f.). Text of 'Passions' in AASS, Jul. 6 (1729), pp. 503–34. Crit. edn. of 3 of the Gk. 'Passions' by U. Zanetti, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 105 (1987), pp. 303–84. Id., 'Les Passions des SS. Nazaire, Gervais, Protais et Celse', ibid. 97 (1979), pp. 69–88. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1057–60, s.v. 'Milan: xxvii, Saint-Nazaire'.

Nazirites (so modern translations of the Bible; AV 'Nazarites'). A body of Israelites specially consecrated to the service of God who were under vows to abstain from eating or drinking the produce of the vine, to let their hair grow, and to avoid defilement by contact with a dead body (Num. 6). Originally the vow seems to have been for life (e.g. that of *Samson), but later it was limited to a definite period (30 days, acc. to the *Mishnah, 'Nazir', 1. 3). If the Nazirite suffered defilement by the sudden death of someone beside him, he must undergo purification by shaving and burning his hair and renewing his vow. St *Paul demonstrated his loyalty to Judaism by joining with certain Jewish Christians who were completing such vows at Jerusalem (Acts 21: 23–6).

See comm. on Num. 6. G. B. *Gray, 'The Nazarite', JTS 1 (1899–1900), pp. 201–11. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 361 f., with bibl. p. 456 (Eng. tr., 2nd edn., 1965, pp. 466 f., with bibl. p. 549). J. Milgrom and A. Rothkoff in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 12 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 907–10, s.v.

Neal, Daniel (1678–1743), historian of the *Puritans. After being educated at Merchant Taylors' School, he trained for the dissenting ministry, studying at Utrecht and *Leiden. He returned to London in 1703 to be assistant (1704), and two years later (1706) full, pastor of the Independent congregation in Aldersgate Street, a position he retained until his death. Here he was recognized as one of the best Puritan preachers of his day. Of great historical interest are his History of New England, containing an Impartial Account of the Civil and Ecclesiastical Affairs of the Country to the Year of Our Lord 1700 (2 vols., 1720), and esp. his History of the Puritans, 1517–1688 (1732–8), both valuable compilations, though the latter suffers from a strong Puritan bias. Neal also wrote a book defending inoculation against smallpox (1722).

Neal's History of the Puritans ed. J. Toulmin (5 vols., Bath, 1793–7; repr. London, 1822), with Life in vol. 1, pp. xvi–xxxiii. J. B. Mullinger in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 134–6.

Neale, John Mason (1818–66), Anglican author and hymn-writer. He was educated at Sherborne and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became imbued with *High Church ideals, and in 1839, with his lifelong friend B. *Webb, was one of the founders of the *Cambridge Camden Society (q.v.). Ordained in 1842, he was presented to the living of Crawley, W. Sussex, but ill-health prevented his being instituted, and he spent the next three winters in Madeira. From 1846 till his death he held the wardenship of Sackville College, E. Grinstead, at a salary of £28 a year, dividing his activities between his manifold literary work and the Sisterhood of St Margaret which he founded in 1855. This community, whose rules were framed on those of St *Francis de Sales' Visitation and St *Vincent de Paul's Sisters of Charity, was founded esp. for the education of girls and the care of the sick, and though at first it met with violent opposition, and even rioting, from Protestant quarters, it developed into one of the leading religious communities in the C of E. Neale's ritualistic practices led to his inhibition by the Bp. of Chichester (A. T. Gilbert) from 1847 to 1863.

Neale excelled as a hymn-writer. Among the favourites of his own compositions are 'O happy band of pilgrims' and 'Art thou weary' and of his translations from Lat. and Gk. hymns, 'Jerusalem the golden', 'All glory, laud and honour', and 'Ye choirs of new Jerusalem'. His Hymns of the Eastern Church (1862) included many translations of Easter hymns which by their subsequent incorporation in English hymn-books introduced an important E. emphasis on the Resurrection into Anglican worship. In the Hymnal Noted (two parts, 1852 and 1854), 94 out of 105 hymns are from his pen, and Hymns, Ancient and Modern* owes very much to his inspiration. In the English Hymnal* more than one tenth of the hymns were Neale's compositions or translations. His Commentary on the Psalms, begun in Madeira and completed by R. F. *Littledale (4 vols., pub. 1860–74), is in essence a compilation from patristic and medieval authors. The History of the Holy Eastern Church (pub. in 5 vols., 1847–73) is a useful collection of material. Neale was also the author of numerous children's books, which were written to present Christian teaching in a simple and attractive form. The warmth of his devotional nature comes out clearly in his sermons, largely inspired by medieval models. Worn out by his labours, he died at the age of 48. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 7 Aug.

Selections from the Writings of John Mason Neale was pub., London, 1884. Letters selected and ed. M. S. Lawson (daughter), ibid., 1910; Collected Hymns, Sequences, and Carols also ed. M. S. Lawson, ibid., 1914. Memoir by E. A. Towle, ibid., 1906. A. G. Lough, The Influence of John Mason Neale (1962); id., John Mason Neale—Priest Extraordinary (Newton Abbot, 1975); L. Litvack, John Mason Neale and the Quest for Sobornost (Oxford, 1994); M. Chandler, The Life and Work of John Mason Neale 1818–1866 (Leominster, 1995). [D.] G. Rowell, The Vision Glorious: Themes and Personalities of the Catholic Revival in Anglicanism (Oxford, 1983), pp. 98–115. J. H. Overton in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 143–6, with further refs.

Neander, Joachim (1650–80), German hymn-writer. After a somewhat riotous student life, he was converted in 1670 by hearing T. Under-Eyck, the pastor of St Martin's church at Bremen. In 1673–4, during a winter at Frankfurt, where he made the acquaintance of P. J. *Spener, he became an ardent adherent of the *Pietist Movement. Most of his hymns date from the years 1674 to 1679, when he was rector of the Latin School of Düsseldorf. They reflect not only his deep Pietist faith but also his intense love of the beauties of nature. Many of them have been translated into English, perhaps the best known being 'Praise to the Lord, the Almighty'.

His 'Hymns' were first ed. at Bremen, 1680; later eds., with additional hymns, include those of Berlin, 1707, and Amsterdam, 1725. J. F. Iken, Joachim Neander, sein Leben und seine Lieder (1880). J. Mearns in J. Julian (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (2nd edn., 1907), pp. 790–2. E. Simons in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 687–90, s.v.

Neander, Johann August Wilhelm (1789–1850), ecclesiastical historian. David Mendel was a Jew by birth. After coming under the influence of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, he was baptized in 1806 and took the name of Neander. At first interested in speculative theology, he soon turned to Church history and taught this subject at Berlin from 1813 till his death. His General Church History (6 vols., 1826–52), which went down to *c.*1450, was based on a wide study of original sources, somewhat uncritically treated however, and exercised great influence. Unlike J. L. von *Mosheim, whose interest was in institutions, Neander paid most attention to persons, and made it his aim to discover in Church history the interpenetration of human life by the Divine. A convinced Protestant, though eirenic in temper, he regarded outward ordinances, esp. the priesthood, as dangerous to Christian simplicity. Neander also wrote on the life of Christ (1837; in reply to D. F. *Strauss).

Collected edn. of Neander's works, 14 vols., Gotha, 1862–7. O. Krabbe, August Neander: Ein Beitrag zu seiner Charakteristik (Hamburg, 1852); P. *Schaff, Saint Augustin, Melanchthon, Neander (1886), pp. 128–68; A. F. J. Wiegand, Neanders Leben (Erfurt, 1889). Commemorative discourse by A. *Harnack (Berlin, 1889), repr. in his Reden und Aufsätze, 1 (1904), pp. 193–218. K. R. Hagenbach, 'Neander's Verdienste um die Kirchengeschichte', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 24 (1851), pp. 543–94. K. Scholder in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 1388 f.; J. Mehlhausen in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 238–42, both s.v. with bibl.

Nectarius, St (d. 397), Bp. of *Constantinople. He was born at Tarsus in Cilicia and rose to the office of praetor at Constantinople. Though unbaptized he was selected by *Theodosius I in 381 to succeed St *Gregory of Nazianzus in the imperial see. After Baptism he was consecrated Bp. and presided over the final stages of the (2nd) *Oecumenical Council, then in session. Despite his long episcopate, little is recorded of him. He died on 27 Sept. 397 and was succeeded by St John *Chrysostom. A sermon by him on a certain St Theodore, perhaps a martyr under *Julian (died 363), survives. Feast day, 11 Oct.

*Socrates, HE 5. 8, and *Sozomen, HE 7. 16. His Sermon on St Theodore will be found in J. P. Migne, PG 39. 1821–40 (from Cod. Nann. 134, 13th cent.; repr. from A. *Gallandi). V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 1–12 (nos. 1–12a). CPG 2 (1974), p. 490 (nos. 4300–1). W. M. Sinclair in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 11–14.

Nectarius (1605–*c.*1680), Patr. of *Jerusalem from 1661 to 1669. Educated by the monks of *Sinai, he became a monk and later studied under the Neo-Aristotelian Theophilus Corydalleus at *Athens. He was a vigorous opponent of all W. theology, attacking at once the Roman claims and the Calvinist doctrines of Cyril *Lucar. In 1662 he expressed his warm approval of the 'Confession' of Peter *Mogila, and in 1672 he took a prominent part in the Synod of *Jerusalem. His treatise against the Papacy (Περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ πάπα ἀντίρρησις) was published by his successor, *Dositheus, in 1682.

V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 56–8, with full bibl.

Negative Confession. See KING'S CONFESSION.

negative theology. See APOPHATIC THEOLOGY.

Nehemiah. One of the most important Jewish leaders of the post-exilic period. The cup-bearer to the Persian king, Artaxerxes (probably the first of that name, 'Longimanus'), he obtained leave to visit Palestine on a mission of help, and, accompanied by an escort provided by the king, arrived in *Jerusalem as governor *c.*444 BC (Neh. 1 f.). Here, despite much hostility from the local officials and reports of a threatened attack from Samaria, he supervised the speedy completion of the rebuilding of the city walls (Neh. 2–6). Nehemiah's period of leave soon ended and he had to return to the Persian court. About 432 BC, however, he made a second journey to Jerusalem, and now introduced some important moral and religious reforms, insisting, e.g., on *Sabbath observance and denouncing intermarriage between Jews and non-Jews (Neh. 13). His own record of these events may be one of the sources drawn upon in the Book of Nehemiah. Nehemiah's work is closely related to that of *Ezra (q.v.), though their precise relationship is hard to judge because of uncertainties attaching to the dating of Ezra's activities.

For bibl. see comm. to EZRA AND NEHEMIAH, BOOKS OF, and other works cited s.v. H. H. Rowley, 'Nehemiah's Mission and its Background', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 37 (1955), pp. 528–61, repr. in Men of God (1963), pp. 211–45.

Nehemiah, Book of. See EZRA AND NEHEMIAH, BOOKS OF.

Nelson, Robert (1656–1715), *Nonjuring layman. Convinced of pronounced Church principles by G. *Bull, who was his private tutor, he strongly disapproved of the Revolution of 1688 and went abroad to avoid it. When he returned in 1691, he made friends with many of the leading Nonjurors, and became one himself. He did not, however, altogether sever his connections with the 'Conformists', and eventually returned to the Established Church in 1710, though remaining a Jacobite in his political sympathies. Throughout his life he generously supported many philanthropic objects, notably the *SPCK and the *SPG. His publications include a Companion for the Festivals and Fasts of the C of E (1704), which had a wide circulation; a devotional work on the Eucharist, The Great Duty of Frequenting the Christian Sacrifice (1706); and a Life of Bishop Bull (1713).

C. F. Secretan, Memoirs of the Life and Times of the pious Robert Nelson (1860). C. J. Stranks, Anglican Devotion (1961), pp. 162–70. L. Stephen in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 210–12.

Nemesius of Emesa (fl. *c.*390), Christian philosopher. Beyond the fact that he was Bp. of Emesa in Syria, nothing is known of his life. His treatise Περὶ Φύσεως Ἀνθρώπου ('On Human Nature') is an attempt to construct on a mainly *Platonic basis a doctrine of the soul agreeable with the Christian revelation. Probably through confusion with the similar title of St *Gregory of Nyssa's anthropological treatise Περὶ Κατασκευῆς Ἀνθρώπου, Nemesius's book was often cited as Gregory's in the Middle Ages. It was much used by St *John of Damascus and, in Latin revisions, by several of the Schoolmen, notably Sts *Albertus Magnus and *Thomas Aquinas.

Gk. text first pub. by N. Ellebod (Antwerp, 1565; based on two inferior MSS). Later edns. by J. *Fell (Oxford, 1671; mainly reprod. of Ellebod) and C. F. Matthaei (Halle, 1802); this last repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 40. 504–817. Crit. edn. by M. Morani (Teub., 1987). Eng. tr., with introd. and notes, by W. Telfer in Library of Christian Classics, 4 (1955), pp. 201–466. Lat. tr. by N. Alfanus, Abp. of Salerno (1058–85), ed. C. Burkhard (Teub., 1917); that by *Burgundio of Pisa (d. 1193), ed., with full introd. and refs. to other trs., by G. Verbeke and J. R. Moncho (Corpus Latinum Commentariorum in Aristotelem Graecorum, Suppl. 1; Leiden, 1975). W. Jaeger, Nemesios von Emesa: Quellenforschungen zum Neuplatonismus und seinen Anfängen bei Poseidonios (1914). E. Skard, 'Nemesiosstudien', Symbolae Osloenses, 15–16 (1936), pp. 23–43; 17 (1937), pp. 9–25; 18 (1938), pp. 31–41; 19 (1939), pp. 46–56; 22 (1942), pp. 40–8. A. Kallis, Der Mensch im Kosmos: Das Weldbild des Nemesios' von Emesa (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 43; 1978). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 282 f. (no. 3550). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 351–5. E. Skard in PW, Suppl. 7 (1940), cols. 562–6, s.v. 'Nemesios'; W. Vanhamel in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 92–9, s.v. 'Némésius d'Émèse'.

Neocaesarea, Council of. A Cappadocian Council of uncertain date (probably early 4th cent., before 325). It passed 15 canons concerned chiefly with disciplinary and marriage questions. Along with those of *Ancyra and *Gangra, the canons of this Council formed the earliest Greek corpus canonum (with the canons of *Nicaea prefixed). They were translated into Latin before AD 451, and thus became a constituent part of the canon law of both E. and W.

Hardouin, 1, cols. 281–6; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 539–52. Canons, with Fr. tr., also in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 74–82; crit. edn. of Lat. texts in EOMIA 2 (pt. 1; 1907). Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 326–34. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 3 f. (nos. 8504 f.).

Neo-Chalcedonianism. A modern term coined to describe the theological position of those 6th-cent. theologians (e.g. *John the Grammarian and *Leontius of Jerusalem) who sought to interpret the Christological teaching of the Council of *Chalcedon in the light of the Christology of St *Cyril of Alexandria (including the Anathemas appended to his Third Synodical Letter), in order to combat the *Monophysite claim that the Council had betrayed Cyril. This position involved an insistence that the one *hypostasis of the incarnate Christ is identical with the Second Person of the Trinity, and a consequent justification of the *Theopaschite formula. The use of the term 'Neo-Chalcedonianism' (in contrast to 'strict Chalcedonianism') might be taken to suggest the teaching of the Council of Chalcedon had been modified; those who want to resist this suggestion prefer the term 'Cyrilline Chalcedonianism'.

neophyte (Gk. νεόφυτος, lit. 'newly planted'). The word occurs in 1 Tim. 3: 6 in the sense of 'newly converted' and was generally used in the early Church of the recently baptized. In acc. with the biblical admonition not to make a neophyte a bishop, the First Council of *Nicaea (AD 325, can. 2) postponed the admission of neophytes to holy orders until the bishop deemed them sufficiently strong in the faith.

Neoplatonism. The philosophical system of *Plotinus (*c.*205–70) and his successors. The Neoplatonists thought of themselves simply as *Platonists, but their thought owes its distinctiveness to the genius of Plotinus and inherits from the Platonists of the early Christian cents. deep religious interests. It was originally centred in *Alexandria, later spread to *Rome, where Plotinus taught from 244, and thence to the rest of the Roman world. Towards the end of the 4th cent. the Academy in *Athens became a centre of Neoplatonism and remained so until it was closed by the Emp. *Justinian in 529. The most outstanding representatives of Neoplatonism after Plotinus included *Porphyry (*c.*232–*c.*303; q.v.), *Iamblichus (*c.*250–330; q.v.), *Proclus (410 or 412–85; q.v.), and Damascius (b. *c.*480; head of the Academy in 529).

The main formative influences on Neoplatonism are somewhat obscure. Plotinus expresses his special indebtedness to *Ammonius Saccas, of whom, however, very little is known. While a sympathetic interest in Platonic doctrines had long existed among religious philosophers, both Jewish (*Philo) and Christian (*Pantaenus, *Clement of Alexandria, *Origen), at Alexandria, it is not clear that Plotinus himself drew directly on any of these thinkers. He has closer affinities with some of the later pagan philosophers, esp. Atticus and Albinus (2nd cent. AD) and Numenius of Apamea (*c.*150–200), a Neo-Pythagorean, for whom Plato was 'Moses writing Attic Greek' (Μωυσῆς Ἀττικίζων).

Characteristic of Neoplatonism is the doctrine of the three hypostases: the One, the ultimate unknowable source from which everything that exists emanates: Intelligence (or νοῦς), the realm of perfect intuitive knowledge; and Soul, the realm of discursive thought and activity. The outward movement of emanation (πρόοδος) is met by the ascending movement of return (ἐπιστροφή), which manifests itself as contemplation: everything that exists is a balance between these two forces. The contemplative movement of return seeks the One by purification, which for the intellect means a method of abstraction, and finds union with the One in a mystical experience of *ecstasy.

The more ardent and thoroughgoing Neoplatonists were necessarily hostile to Christianity, esp. its doctrine of an Incarnation in history and its rejection of the ancient philosophies. On the other hand, Neoplatonist influences gradually made themselves felt on Christian theology. They came in partly from their diffusive impact on the whole of the later Roman world; for outside the circle of its professed adherents it was scarcely possible to distinguish the Neoplatonist elements from those which were Platonist and idealistic in a broader sense. For the influence of the latter see the entry PLATONISM. Instances of more specifically Neoplatonist influences in Christianity may be seen in the writings of St *Augustine, *Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais, in those of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite (who was esp. dependent on Proclus) and in the medieval thinkers who drew on the '*Liber de Causis' (q.v.).

E. R. Dodds, Select Passages Illustrating Neoplatonism (text, 1924; Eng. tr., 1923). T. Whittaker, The Neo-Platonists (1901); P. Merlan, From Platonism to Neoplatonism (The Hague, 1953; 2nd edn., 1960); W. Theiler, Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 10; 1966); Le Néoplatonisme: Colloques internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Sciences humaines (1971); R. T. Wallis, Neo-Platonism (1972). H. J. Blumenthal and R. A. Markus (eds.), Neoplatonism and Early Christian Thought: Essays in honour of A. H. Armstrong (1981); Néoplatonisme: Mélanges offerts à Jean Trouillard (Les Cahiers de Fontenay, nos. 19–22; 1981); W. Beierwaltes, Denken des Einen: Studien zur neuplatonischen Philosophie und ihrer Wirkungsgeschichte (Frankfurt am Main, 1985); A. C. Lloyd, The Anatomy of Neoplatonism (Oxford, 1990). H. D. Saffrey, Recherches sur le Néoplatonisme après Plotin (Histoire des Doctrines de l'Antiquité Classique, 14; 1990 [collection of previously pub. essays]). A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1967), with extensive bibl. E. R. Dodds, Proclus' 'Elements of Theology' (1933; 2nd edn., 1963). P. Hadot in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 334–6, s.v.; S. Lilla in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2356–88, s.v.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (Cambridge, 1992), pp. 585–93. See also bibls. to PLOTINUS, PORPHYRY, IAMBLICHUS, and PROCLUS.

Neostadiensium Admonitio. The reply made by the members of the 'Reformed' (*Calvinist) church at Heidelberg to the Lutheran 'Formula of *Concord' (1577). It was issued in 1581 by Z. *Ursinus at Neustadt a.d. Haardt, whither the Heidelberg Calvinists had been forced to flee. It sets out in 12 chapters the more distinctive tenets of Calvinism.

Text pr. in Z. Ursinus's Opera Theologica (2nd edn. by Q. Reuter), 2 (Heidelberg, 1612), cols. 893–1138. E. F. K. Müller in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 709 f., s.v., with bibl.

Neot, St (c. 9th cent.), Cornish saint. He is known only from later English hagiography, acc. to which he was a monk of *Glastonbury who in search of solitude retired to the place now known as St Neot in Cornwall. He is said to have been visited and held in much honour by King *Alfred. After his death his relics are reputed to have found their way to St Neots, Cambridgeshire. Feast day, 31 July.

Four principal Lives survive: an 11th-cent. Anglo-Latin Vita, ed. D. Dumville and M. Lapidge, The Annals of St Neots with Vita Prima Sancti Neoti (The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle. A Collaborative Edition, 17; Cambridge, 1985), pp. 109–42; an Old English Life (MS Cotton Vespasian D. 14), pr. by R. D.-N. Warner, Early English Homilies (EETS, Orig. Ser. 152; 1917), pp. 129–34; a 12th-cent. Lat. Vita pr. in AASS, Jul. 7 (1731), pp. 319–29; and a 14th-cent. metrical Life, depending upon the last, pr. in J. Whitaker, The Life of Saint Neot (1809), pp. 317–38. Study by G. H. Doble in 'Cornish Saints' Series, no. 21 (Exeter, 1929). Hardy, 1 (pt. 2), pp. 538–49. M. Bateson in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 221 f.

Nepomuk, John of. See JOHN OF NEPOMUK.

nepotism. The bestowal of office or patronage on one's relations. The term is used esp. of the widespread abuse of the practice by certain 16th-cent. Popes, e.g. *Clement VII and the Medici, *Paul III and the Farnese. The practice was condemned by St *Pius V in the bull 'Admonet Nos' (1567).

Nereus and Achilleus, Sts (perhaps 1st cent.), Roman martyrs. Their remains were buried in the Cemetery of St *Domitilla on the Via Ardeatina. Acc. to the inscription by Pope *Damasus on their tomb they were soldiers, acc. to their legendary 'Acta', eunuchs in Domitilla's household. These 'Acta' assert that all three were transported to the island of Terracina, where Nereus and Achilleus were beheaded and Domitilla burnt. The church built over their tomb dates from the later 4th cent. Feast day, 12 May (until 1969 in conjunction with St *Pancras and St Domitilla).

Early Lat. tr. of Acta in AASS, Mai. 3 (1680), pp. 6–13, with introd., pp. 4–6, and other material, pp. 13–16. Gk. text first ed. A. Wirth (Leipzig, 1890); also ed., with Ger. tr., by H. Achelis (TU 11, Heft 2; 1893). F. Schaefer, 'Die Acten der heiligen Nereus und Achilleus', RQ 8 (1894), pp. 89–119. G. B. *de Rossi, 'Scoperta della basilica di S. Petronilla. Col sepolcro dei martiri Nereo ed Achilleo nel cimitero di Domitilla', Bullettino di archeologia cristiana, 2nd ser. 5 (1874), pp. 5–35; id., 'Insigni scoperte nel cimitero di Domitilla: I, notizie preliminari sul sepolcro di S. Petronilla: scoperta d'un singolare monumento del sepolcro-altare dei martiri Nereo ed Achilleo', ibid. 6 (1875), pp. 5–11. A. Guerrieri, La chiesa dei SS. Nereo ed Achilleo (Collezione 'Amici delle Catacombe', 16; 1951); U. M. Fasola, La Basilica dei SS. Nereo ed Achilleo e la Catacomba di Domitilla [1958]. P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note agiografiche, 2 (ST 22; 1909), pp. 43–55 ('I SS. Nereo ed Achilleo nell'epigramma damasiano'). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 1; 1935), cols. 1111–23, s.v. 'Nérée et Achillée'.

Neri, St Philip. See PHILIP NERI, ST.

Nero, Claudius (AD 37–68), Roman Emp. from 54. The last Emp. descended from Augustus, Nero was the son of the aristocrat Domitius Ahenobarbus and of Agrippina, sister of the Emp. Caligula. After her remarriage to the Emp. Claudius in 49 Nero was adopted by his stepfather, and after Claudius' murder was proclaimed Emp. at the age of 16 by the Praetorian Guard and accepted by the Senate. At first he ruled relatively well under the guidance of *Seneca and the Praetorian Prefect Burrus, but he soon scandalized public opinion at Rome by murdering his mother and his wife, Octavia, as well as possible competitors for the throne, and by appearing in public as a singer and charioteer; upper class discontent was repressed by terror. His extravagance and consequent exactions also turned many of his subjects against him; the best-known case is the revolt of Judaea in 66. In 68 he also provoked rebellion in Spain, Gaul, and Africa; the armies deserted him; and he finally committed suicide.

In Roman tradition Nero appears as a tyrant. Many believed that he had caused the great fire which burned down much of Rome in 64, with a view to rebuilding it to suit his artistic tastes; it was to divert his unpopularity on this score that he punished the Christians as scapegoats (see PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN). Christian apologists could therefore attribute the persecutions to a ruler condemned by pagan opinion also. Yet 1 Peter (2: 11–17), traditionally written in his reign after persecution had begun, inculcates passive obedience ('honour the emperor'), cf. Romans 13: 1–6. Earlier, it had been to Nero that St *Paul appealed from the tribunal of Festus at Caesarea (Acts. 25: 11). It is unlikely that Nero personally heard the case, but acc. to a substantial tradition both St Peter and St Paul were executed at Rome in his time. After Nero's death there was a widespread belief that he would return, and 'false Neros' appeared in the E. provinces. The myth is perhaps indicated by the references to the Beast in Rev. 13: 11–18, where the '*Number of the Beast' corresponds to 'Neron Caesar' in Gk. notation. See also TACITUS and NUMBER OF THE BEAST.

The principal sources are Tacitus, Annales, 12–16; *Suetonius, 'Nero'; and Dio Cassius, Hist. 61–3. E. M. Smallwood (ed.), Documents illustrating the Principates of Gaius, Claudius and Nero (Cambridge, 1967). B. H. Warmington, Nero: Reality and Legend (1969); M. T. Griffin, Nero: The End of a Dynasty (1984). H. H. Scullard, From the Gracchi to Nero (1959), pp. 315–32 (5th edn., 1982, pp. 304–21); A. Garzetti, From Tiberius to the Antonines (rev. Eng. tr., 1974), pp. 146–89, with bibl. pp. 605–22 and 741–8. See also works cited s.v. PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Nerses, St (d. *c.*373), sixth *Catholicos of the *Armenian Church. A direct descendant of *Gregory the Illuminator, he was educated at Caesarea in Cappadocia and held office at the royal court. After the death of his wife he became an ecclesiastic, and, having been elected Catholicos (perh. *c.*363), undertook the reform of the Armenian Church. At the Council of Ashtishat (*c.*365) he promulgated a number of decrees, e.g. against marriages between relations and on fasting. He also founded many hospitals and orphanages. He was deposed and exiled for criticizing the dissolute life of King Arshak III. Though restored under Arshak's successor Pap (369), he also incurred the hostility of the new King, whom he censured for his immorality, and was poisoned by him during a meal. His son, St *Isaac the Great (q.v.), became one of his successors. Feast day, 19 Nov.

J. Markwart, Die Entstehung der armenischen Bistümer: Kritische Untersuchung der armenischen Überlieferung (Orientalia Christiana, 27. 2 [no. 80]; 1932, pp. 139–236), esp. pp. 223–33. F. Tournebize in DHGE 4 (1930), cols. 297 f., s.v. 'Arménie'; P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 742–6, s.v. 'Narsete I'. See also works cited s.v. ARMENIA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Nerses IV, St (1102–73), *Catholicos of the *Armenian Church. Nerses Shnornhali ('the Graceful') became Catholicos in 1166 (with his seat at Rhomkla in Cilician Armenia) and strove for union between the Armenian and Byzantine Churches, corresponding with the Emp. Michael I; his death prevented the project from being realized. His extensive writings, in both verse and prose, include many hymns and devotional works which have won him lasting fame; best known is his meditative poem on the history of salvation, called (after its first line) 'Jesus, only Son of the Father'. He is not to be confused with his great-nephew, Nerses of Lambron (1152/3–98), another prolific writer. Feast day, 13 Aug.

Fr. tr. of 'Jesus, only Son of the Father' by I. Kéchichian, SJ (SC 203; 1973), with introd. and bibl. P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 746–59, s.v. 'Narsete IV'; B. L. Zekiyan in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 134–50, s.v.

Nestle, Eberhard (1851–1913), biblical scholar. From 1883 to 1898 he taught at Ulm and *Tübingen, and from 1898 held appointments at the Evangelical Theological Seminary at Maulbronn. His early work was done on the text of the *Septuagint. He increasingly interested himself, however, in the NT, and in 1898 published the first edition of his Greek NT text, which, though somewhat mechanically constructed from the existing editions of C. *Tischendorf, B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort, and B. *Weiss, came to be very widely used. In 1904 this text was adopted by the *British and Foreign Bible Society in place of the *Textus Receptus. Nestle also wrote many grammars and other aids to biblical study.

Nestle's Gk. text of the NT in its successive Ger. edns. has been constantly revised (ed. from the 10th edn., 1914, onwards, by his son E. Nestle, from the 22nd edn. (1956) by K. Aland, and from the 26th edn. (1979) by B. and K. Aland). The apparatus was radically altered in the 13th edn. (1927) and notable improvements were also made in the text in the 17th edn. (1941). Further revisions in the apparatus and text were made between the 22nd and 27th edns. (1994) to incl. readings from the *Bodmer Papyri. H. Haag in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 424–6, s.v.

Nestorian Stone. See SIGAN-FU STONE.

Nestorius (b. after 351; d. after 451), Patr. of *Constantinople and heresiarch. He gave his name to the doctrine (commonly called 'Nestorianism') that there were two separate Persons in the Incarnate Christ, the one Divine and the other Human (as opposed to the orthodox teaching that in the Incarnate Christ was a single Person, at once God and man); whether Nestorius ever taught this is disputed. A native of Germanicia in Syria Euphratensis, he entered a monastery at *Antioch, where he became imbued with the principles of the Antiochene theological school, and prob. studied under *Theodore of Mopsuestia. Soon he acquired a great reputation as a preacher; and in 428, when the see of Constantinople became vacant, *Theodosius II, overriding the claims of the local candidates, invited Nestorius to fill the see. Nestorius at once proclaimed himself a zealous upholder of orthodoxy, eager to rid the city of heretics and schismatics. When his chaplain Anastasius preached against the use of the term *Theotokos (q.v.) as savouring of heresy (*Apollinarianism), Nestorius gave him full support. A violent controversy developed round the propriety of a word which had long been used by theologians of the highest orthodoxy and was now gaining in popularity since it gave theological expression to the growing devotion to the Virgin as the Mother of God. Nestorius' opponents succeeded in winning the support of St *Cyril of Alexandria and the Egyptian monks to their cause. Both sides having appealed to Rome, at a Council held there in August 430, Nestorius' teaching was condemned by Pope *Celestine and Cyril was commissioned to pronounce sentence of deposition on Nestorius, if he would not submit. In Nov. 430 Cyril took action and on 7 Dec. 430 delivered his sentence into Nestorius' hands by legates sent to Constantinople, condemning Nestorius in a set of twelve anathemas and requiring him to retract within ten days. Meanwhile the Emp. had arranged a General Council to meet at *Ephesus in the following summer. It assembled on 22 June 431 and pronounced sentence of deposition on Nestorius (see EPHESUS, COUNCIL OF). Theodosius eventually acquiesced in its decision and Nestorius was sent back to his monastery at Antioch. In 435 Theodosius had his books condemned, and in 436 Nestorius was banished to Upper Egypt, where he died several years later (date unknown).

Nestorius' principal writings were his letters and sermons, which, however, for the most part, survive only in fragments. He was also the author of an extensive treatise, published in his last years and known as the 'Bazaar of Heracleides' (Liber Heraclidis). This was discovered *c.*1895 and first published in 1910. Written when the theological climate had completely changed, Nestorius is here claiming that his own beliefs were identical with those then being sustained (against the *Eutychians) by the orthodox. The twelve 'Counter Anathemas' long ascribed to Nestorius have been shown by E. *Schwartz to be of much later date.

Opinion is widely divided as to what the doctrine of Nestorius really was and how far it was heretical. His sustained objection to the term 'Theotokos' has traditionally been held to imply that he asserted not only two different natures, but also two different persons, in Christ, the one the man, born of Mary. But we must not overlook that he repeatedly affirmed the oneness of Christ, though he preferred to speak of conjunction (συνάφεια) rather than of union (ἕνωσις). His fear of the *Monophysite tendencies, which were actually to come into the open a few years later, led him to reject Cyril's conception of a hypostatic union (ἕνωσις καθ' ὑπόστασιν), substituting for it a union of the will (κατ' εὐδοκίαν). The latter term certainly savoured of *Adoptianism, of which he was actually, though unjustly, accused. Certainly his zeal for upholding the integrity of the two natures, which he believed to be both self-subsisting and therefore incapable of being physically united in the Person of the God-man, caused him to fall into unguarded language, and the fact that his own friends finally abandoned him supports the view that, by trying to defend, he actually compromised the Antiochene Christology. In the polemic surrounding the theological controversies of the later 5th and 6th cents., the term 'Nestorian' was applied by their opponents to all upholders of a strict Antiochene Christology; as a result the *Church of the East (q.v.) has come to be popularly called 'the Nestorian Church' even though its teaching has never been Nestorianism as defined above.

Collection of frags. (mainly in Gk.), ed. F. *Loofs, Nestoriana (Halle, 1905). Many of these frags. are preserved in the acta of the Council of Ephesus (q.v.) and can be found in the pr. edns. (J. *Hardouin, J. D. *Mansi, and others); crit. text by E. Schwartz in ACO. Syriac text of the Liber Heraclides first ed. P. Bedjan (Paris, 1910); Fr. tr. by F. Nau (ibid., 1910, incl. further frags. of Gk., not pr. by Loofs, pp. 335–58); Eng. tr., with introd. and studies, by G. R. *Driver and L. Hodgson (Oxford, 1925). On the true authorship of the Counter Anathemas, commonly ascribed to Nestorius, see E. Schwartz, Die Gegenanathematismen des Nestorius (Sb. (Bayr.), 1922, Heft 1). V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 41–53 (nos. 50–65b). On the historical course of the conflict with Cyril, L. *Duchesne, Histoire ancienne de l'Église, 3 (1910), pp. 313–88 (Eng. tr., 3 (1924), pp. 219–70) (very critical of Cyril's handling of Nestorius); M. Jugie, AA, Nestorius et la controverse nestorienne (1912; more sympathetic to Cyril). J. F. Bethune-Baker, Nestorius and his Teaching (1908; with extracts from the 'Bazaar' [tr. by R. H. *Connolly]). J. P. Junglas, Die Irrlehre des Nestorius (Trier, 1912); F. Loofs, Nestorius and his Place in the History of Christian Doctrine (1914). L. I. Scipioni, OP, Ricerche sulla cristologia del 'Libro di Eraclide' di Nestorio: La formulazione teologica e il suo contesto filosofico (Paradosis, 11; 1956); id., Nestorio e il concilio di Efeso (Studia Patristica Mediolanensia, 1; 1974); L. Abramowski, Untersuchungen zum Liber Heraclidis des Nestorius (CSCO 242; Louvain, 1963). A. Grillmeier [SJ], Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 1 (1979), pp. 642–60, 707–26. [This work is a much rev. and expanded edn. of the author's essay in his work on the Council of *Chalcedon, orig. pub. in 1951; Eng. tr. of one of the intermediate stages, Christ in Christian Tradition, 1 (2nd edn., 1975), pp. 447–63 and 501–19.] CPG 3 (1979), pp. 107–26 (nos. 5665–5766). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 336–8 and 619. A. J. Maclean in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 323–32, s.v. 'Nestorianism'; É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 76–157, s.v.; L. R. Wickham in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 276–86, s.v. See also bibl. to EPHESUS, COUNCIL OF.

Ne Temere. The decree (2 Aug. 1907) of the Sacred Congregation of the Council, promulgated by *Pius X to come into force on 19 Apr. 1908, putting the matrimonial legislation of the RC Church on a new basis. It was designed to remedy the confusions created by the Tridentine Tametsi decree (q.v.) (1563). Earlier attempts at revision were Benedict XVI's Matrimonia quae in locis (4 Nov. 1741) exempting Belgium and the Netherlands from the operation of Tametsi and Pius X's constitution Provida sapientiaque (18 Jan. 1906) suspending its application in Germany for mixed marriages and the marriages of non-Catholics. The new regulations of Ne Temere were to be of universal application. No marriage between persons baptized as Catholics or who have been received into Catholic communion is valid unless celebrated before the parish priest or the Ordinary or a priest delegated by one or other of these. The same ruling holds if only one of the contracting parties is a Catholic (though in some *mixed marriages a Catholic may now be allowed to marry before a minister of another denomination). Hence, while the RC Church normally declines to recognize marriages in which a RC is involved, if solemnized before a minister of another denomination or merely by a civil contract, it does recognize such marriages between two non-Catholics. To make 'surprise marriages' (mariages à la gaulmine) impossible, Ne Temere also laid down that the parish priest must formally ask and receive the consent of the parties. The rulings of the decree, with important modifications, were taken over into the Codex Iuris Canonici* (1983), cans. 1108–19.

Text in ASS 40 (1907), pp. 527–30. See also bibl. to MATRIMONY.

Netherlands, Christianity in the. Christianity originally penetrated the territory now known as the Netherlands in Roman times, but the fall of the Empire and the establishment of the strongly pagan kingdom of Frisia delayed its effective conversion until the very end of the 7th cent. Chief among the Anglo-Saxon missionaries responsible for its evangelization were St *Willibrord, Bp. of Utrecht from 695 to 739, and St *Boniface, who was martyred by the Northern Frisians in 754. The range and success of their activities brought the whole country under the influence of the see of Utrecht, which was the only bishopric until modern times. Its Prince Bishop exerted a dominating influence on the subsequent history of the Church, though in the course of the later Middle Ages the see lost most of its political power to the Counts of Holland and Guelders, and the Bishop finally surrendered his temporal claims to *Charles V in 1526. In the 14th cent. the Netherlands saw the rise of an influential movement, known as the '*Devotio Moderna', which laid stress both on mystical piety and education. It found expression in the '*Brethren of the Common Life', whose school at Deventer numbered *Erasmus among its pupils.

Initially at the *Reformation both *Lutherans and *Anabaptists gained followers, and the latter especially were fiercely persecuted. The political revolt against Spanish rule became inextricably bound up with religion and the adherence of William the Silent to *Calvinism in 1573 was a significant step in underlining the role of that creed in the struggle. In 1574 William founded the University of *Leiden which quickly attained international importance, not least in the field of theology. By 1609 the Netherlands was effectively independent, but although the Reformed religion held sway, controversies arose within its ranks in the course of the 17th cent. The more notable of these concerned the disputes over free will and *predestination surrounding J. *Arminius, which led to the formal condemnation of his followers (*Remonstrants) at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19).

Though never formally established, the Reformed Church with its Calvinist orthodoxy continued to be the official religious body of the state until the political revolution of 1795. After the overthrow of French rule and the establishment of the kingdom of the Netherlands, William I introduced a system of Church government (1816) in which the state exercised very extensive powers. Objections to this arrangement and to the prevalent theological liberalism led to the Secession of 1834, when some of the stricter Calvinists set up the 'Christian Reformed Churches'. Further such disputes within the main body of the Reformed Church gave rise in 1886 to another major secession led by A. *Kuyper. During this period the foundations were laid of the distinctively Dutch system of 'pillarization', whereby society became divided into several distinct vertical blocks based on common ideologies: Catholic, Calvinist, socialist, and liberal. This arrangement dominated Dutch life between 1920 and 1960 and is still in evidence.

In an endeavour to find favour with the Catholics, *Philip II secured the creation of five new sees under Utrecht, which was now raised to an archbishopric (1560). But the experiment was overtaken by the Dutch revolt and the subsequent loss of the Netherlands, and from 1580 to 1853 the RC Church was without territorial bishops, being governed by *Vicars Apostolic or Papal *Legates. From 1583 to 1795 it was subjected by the government to severe penal restrictions. In 1697 accusations of *Jansenism were launched from Rome against the RCs of the Netherlands, notably against Petrus Codde (1648–1710), then Vicar General and titular Abp. of Philippi. In 1702 he was officially censured and a schism began. Codde's followers upheld the continuity of their communion with the national Catholic Church of the past. The support of the French Jansenists, who refused to accept the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713), secured for these '*Old Catholics', as they came to be called, the maintenance of the *Apostolic Succession; the group still survives as a branch of the Old Catholic Church. The main body of Dutch Catholics, however, accepted the condemnation of Jansenism. They looked largely to external (esp. *Jesuit) influence for guidance and protection until the archiepiscopal see of Utrecht was restored in 1853. In the modern Netherlands they are a vigorous body, esp. strong in the provinces of Limburg and North Brabant. In recent years there has been much advanced thinking among Dutch RCs, which has brought them near to conflict with the Papacy on such subjects as *contraception and clerical *celibacy.

Acc. to the 1989 census, *c.*36 per cent of the population belong to the RC Church, *c.*28 per cent are Protestant (mainly 'Dutch Reformed Church' and other Calvinist bodies), and *c.*32 per cent profess no religious allegiance.

The principal works are in Dutch. In English there is a general introduction by P. H. Ditchfield, The Church in the Netherlands (1892; dealing with Belgium and the Netherlands). Also W. E. Keeney, Dutch Anabaptist Thought and Practice from 1539–1564 (Nieuwkoop, 1968); A. Duke, 'The Ambivalent Face of Calvinism in the Netherlands 1561–1618', in M. Prestwich (ed.), International Calvinism 1541–1715 (Oxford, 1985), pp. 109–34; rev. repr. in Duke, Reformation and Revolt in the Low Countries (1990), pp. 269–93, with other material in this vol. (some not previously pub.); D. Nobbs, Theocracy and Toleration: A Study of the Disputes in Dutch Calvinism from 1600 to 1650 (1938); J. H. Mackay, Religious Thought in Holland during the Nineteenth Century (Hastie Lectures, 1909–11; 1911); M. Wintle, Pillars of Piety: Religion in the Netherlands in the Nineteenth Century 1813–1901 (Occasional Papers in Modern Dutch Studies, 2; Hull, 1987); E. C. Vanderlaan, Protestant Modernism in Holland (1924); and S. J. de Vries, Bible and Theology in the Netherlands: Dutch Old Testament Criticism under Modernist and Conservative Auspices, 1850 to World War I (Wageningen, 1968; 2nd edn., New York, 1989). S. Axters, OP, La Spiritualité des Pays-Bas (Bibliotheca Mechliniensis, 2nd ser. 1; 1948; Eng. tr., 1954); id., Geschiedenis van de Vroomheid in de Nederlanden (Antwerp, 1950 ff. [4 vols., covering the period to 1730, by 1960]). O. J. de Jong, Nederlandse Kerkgeschiedenis (Nijkerk, 1972; 3rd edn., 1985). R. R. Post, Kerkgeschiedenis van Nederland in de Middeleeuwen (2 vols., Utrecht, 1957). P. Brachin and L. J. Rogier, Histoire du catholicisme hollandais depuis le xvi^e siècle [1974]. L. J. Rogier, Geschiedenis van het Katholicisme in Noord-Nederland in de 16e en de 17e Eeuw (3 vols., Amsterdam, 1945–7); P. Polman, OFM, Katholiek Nederland in de Achttiende Eeuw (3 vols., Hilversum, 1968); L. J. Rogier, Katholieke Herleving: Geschiedenis van Katholiek Nederland sinds 1853 (The Hague [1956]; 2nd edn., 1962). A. J. Rasker, De Nederlandse Hervormde Kerk vanaf 1795: Haar geschiedenis en theologie in der negentiende en twintigste eeuw (Kampen, 1974; 3rd edn., 1986). Biographisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, ed. D. Nauta and others (3 vols., Kampen, 1978–88). Archief voor Nederlandsche Kerkgeschiedenis (The Hague, 1885–99), cont. as Nederlandsch (Nederlands) Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis (ibid., 1900–66; Leiden, 1967 ff.). A. G. Weiler in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 354–62, s.v. 'Netherlands'; C. Augustijn in TRE 24 (1994), cols. 474–502, s.v. 'Niederlande', both with bibl. See also bibl. to ARMINIANISM, CALVINISM, DEVOTIO MODERNA, and OLD CATHOLICS.

Netter, Thomas (*c.*1375–1430), *Carmelite theologian. Born at Saffron Walden in Essex, he was sent by his superiors to study in Oxford, where he gained a reputation for sound scholarship ('Doctor praestantissimus'). In 1409 he was sent to the Council of *Pisa as the representative of King Henry IV, whose adviser he had become, and on his return to England took an active part in the struggle against the followers of J. *Wycliffe, acting at the trials of John Badby in 1410, John *Oldcastle in 1413, William Taylor in 1423, and William White in 1428. Henry V chose him for his confessor and, after Netter had been elected Provincial of the English Carmelites in 1414, appointed him one of his mandatories to the Council of *Constance. In 1419 he was sent on a political mission to Poland. Later he became spiritual adviser to *Henry VI, his former pupil. The latter part of his life appears to have been chiefly taken up with the composition of his main work, 'Doctrinale antiquitatum fidei ecclesiae catholicae', in which he sought to refute the doctrines of Wycliffe and the *Hussites from the teaching of the Bible and the Fathers. The 'Fasciculi Zizaniorum' (a collection of anti-Wycliffite documents) is traditionally associated with him, but it is unlikely that he was the author of any part of it.

The best edn. of his 'Doctrinale' is that of B. Blanciotti, Ord. Carm. (3 vols., Venice, 1757–9; repr. photographically, Farnborough, 1967), with introd., vol. 1, pp. ix–xviii. Life herein contained repr. in Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum, 1 (1909), pp. 298–303, 329–35, and 361–5. Various letters, with brief introd., in B. Zimmerman, OCD (ed.), Monumenta Historica Carmelitana, 1 (Lérins, 1907), pp. 442–82. The 'Fasciculi Zizaniorum' is ed. in part by W. W. Shirley (RS, 1858). P. R. McCaffrey, Ord. Carm., The White Friars: An Outline Carmelite History with Special Reference to the English-Speaking Provinces (Dublin, 1936), pp. 143–51. J. A. Robson, Wyclif and the Oxford Schools (Cambridge, 1961), pp. 223–40. M. Hurley, SJ, 'A Pre-Tridentine Theology of Tradition: Thomas Netter of Walden (†1430)', Heythrop Journal, 4 (1963), pp. 348–66. J. Crompton, 'Fasciculi Zizaniorum', JEH 12 (1961), pp. 35–45 and 155–66. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 231–4; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1343–4.

Neumann, Therese (1898–1962), of Konnersreuth in Bavaria, *stigmatized visionary. After a normal childhood and youth, Therese Neumann lost her health in 1918 through overstrain in helping to put out a fire. Having become bedridden in the same year and blind in 1919, she regained her sight in 1923 on the day of the beatification of *Teresa of Lisieux. Two years later, on the day of the canonization of the same saint, she became able to walk again. During Lent 1926 she began to have visions of the Passion and received the stigmata, which remained visible and bled on Fridays. She was reputed to have taken no solid food after 1922, and after 1927 no nourishment whatever except daily Holy Communion. After her visions she was usually in an abnormal state of absorption during which she was credited with supernatural faculties such as ability to read consciences and to discern the authenticity of relics. The events of Konnersreuth, which soon became a place of pilgrimage for the curious as well as the devout, were for years a topic of lively discussion; but the RC ecclesiastical authorities have abstained from any pronouncement on the case.

L. Witt, Das kleine Leben der stigmatisierten Jungfrau Therese von Konnersreuth (1927); F. Gerlich, Die stigmatisierte Therese Neumann (2 vols., 1927); F. X. Huber, Das Mysterium von Konnersreuth (1950). Among the many other sympathetic works those available in Eng. incl. studies by R. W. Hynek (3rd edn., Prague, 1932; Eng. tr., 1932, with bibl.), C. E. Roy and W. A. Joyce (London, 1936), and J. Teodorowicz (Salzburg, 1936; Eng. tr., St Louis, 1940). More critical studies by J. Deutsch, Aerztliche Kritik an Konnersreuth (1938); B. Poray Madeyski, Le Cas de la visionnaire stigmatisée: Thérèse Neumann de Konnersreuth (1940). Other studies by H. C. Graef (Cork, 1950) and P. Siwek, SJ (Paris, 1950; Eng. tr., Dublin, 1954). P. Siwek in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 365 f., s.v.

neume. (1) From Gk. πνεῦμα, 'breath'. In plainsong, a prolonged group of notes, sung to a single syllable, esp. at the end of the '*Alleluia' and in the *responsories of the Mass. (2) From Gk. νεῦμα, 'sign'. The sign employed in the earliest plainsong to indicate the melody. These signs are probably derived from the accent-marks of the grammarians. They are thought to date from the 8th century.

Neutral text. The type of text of the Greek NT represented by the two MSS, *Codex Vaticanus and *Codex Sinaiticus, and so designated by F. J. A. *Hort because it was supposed to be less subject to corrupting influences of editorial revision than any other. There seems little doubt that the origin of the text is to be connected with Egypt (though either or both MSS may have been actually written elsewhere); and some scholars have believed it to be the work of *Hesychius, an Alexandrian who is said to have revised the *Septuagint. See also ALEXANDRIAN TEXT.

B. F. Westcott and F. J. A. Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek, 1 (1881), esp. pp. 126–30 ('The Neutral Text and its Preservation').

Nevin, John Williamson (1803–86), American Protestant theologian. He was a native of Pennsylvania, of *Presbyterian upbringing and Scottish-Irish descent. From 1823 to 1828 he studied at Princeton Theological Seminary, being for part of the time in charge of the classes of Charles *Hodge. In 1828 he published his widely used Summary of Biblical Antiquities (2 vols.). From 1830 to 1840 he was professor of biblical literature at the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa. Here, under the influence of the writings of J. A. W. *Neander, he gradually abandoned the dogmas of Presbyterianism for a more liberal theology, and became closely associated with P. *Schaff. In 1840 he became professor of theology in the Mercersburg (Pa.) Theological Seminary, a 'German Reformed' institution, where, having transferred his allegiance from the Presbyterian to this Reformed Church, he gained an increasing influence. In 1843 he attacked the then prevailing methods of revivalist preaching in The Anxious Bench: A Tract for the Times. In 1844 Schaff joined him from Germany, and the theological doctrines for which both stood became known as the '*Mercersburg Theology'. In 1846 he published The Mystical Presence, a defence of a doctrine of the Eucharist which conceded a 'Real Presence' and advocated a more sacramental conception of Christianity than is ordinarily held among Protestants. In 1853 he retired into private life on account of weak health, but from 1861 to 1866 he again lectured at, and from 1866 to 1876 was president of, the reorganized Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, Philadelphia.

Selected Theological Writings, ed. C. Yrigoyen and G. H. Bricker (Pittsburgh, 1978). T. Appel, The Life and Work of John Williamson Nevin (1889). J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology: Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961). W. W. Sweet in Dict. Amer. Biog. 13 (1934), pp. 442 f.

New Church. See SWEDENBORG, EMMANUEL.

New English Bible. See BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

New Jerusalem Church. See SWEDENBORG, EMMANUEL.

Newman, Ven. John Henry (1801–90), *Tractarian leader and later Cardinal. He was brought up in the C of E under Evangelical influence. He entered Trinity College, Oxford, in June 1817, became Fellow of Oriel in 1822, and was ordained deacon in 1824. In 1825 he was appointed vice-principal of Alban Hall by R. *Whately, and in 1828 vicar of St Mary's, Oxford. In 1832–3 he toured S. Europe and on returning became intimately associated with the *Oxford Movement, in which he was the leading spirit. His sermons in St Mary's, published as Parochial and Plain Sermons (1834–42), had a profound influence on the religious life not only of Oxford but of the whole country. Their spirituality was based on a systematic study of the Fathers which bore fruit in The Arians of the Fourth Century (1833), whereas the Tracts for the Times* (1833–41), 27 of which came from his pen, were popular statements of his religious position. Directed 'against Popery and Dissent', they defended his thesis of the 'via media', i.e. the belief that the C of E held an intermediate position, represented by the patristic tradition, as against modern Romanism on the one hand and modern Protestantism on the other. This belief received developed expression in his Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church (1837) and in his Lectures on Justification (1838). In the famous Tract No. 90 (1841) he advocated the interpretation of the *Thirty-Nine Articles in a sense generally congruous with the decrees of *Trent. The Tract, which caused a violent controversy, was condemned by the Hebdomadal Board, and R. *Bagot, Bp. of Oxford, imposed silence on its author. Meanwhile, from 1839 onwards, Newman began to have doubts about the claims of the Anglican Church, and from 1841 onwards he gradually gave up his position in Oxford, living from 1842 at the neighbouring village of Littlemore, which was at that date part of the ecclesiastical parish of St Mary's. Here he set up a semi-monastic establishment and, during the next years, lived in retirement with a few friends. He resigned the incumbency of St Mary's on 18 Sept. 1843, preaching a few days later a celebrated sermon in Littlemore church on 'The Parting of Friends'. On 9 Oct. 1845 he was received into the RC Church. Almost immediately afterwards he issued his Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine in defence of his change of allegiance.

Having been ordained in Rome, he established the Oratorians at Birmingham in 1849 and was in Ireland as rector of the short-lived RC university in Dublin from 1854 to 1858. On his return to England he became for a few months editor of the Rambler, in which he published a controversial article 'On Consulting the Faithful in Matters of Doctrine', which was delated to Rome. His declared opposition to the retention of the Pope's Temporal Power was the occasion of his serious breach with his fellow-convert, H. E. *Manning. In 1864 a controversy with C. Kingsley resulted in his Apologia pro vita sua, which, by its combination of frankness and delicacy, won him the sympathies of RCs and others alike. In the next year he wrote *The Dream of Gerontius depicting the journey of the soul to God at the hour of death, an almost Dantesque poem inspired by the Requiem Offices. In 1870 he published A Grammar of Assent, the work which contains much of his ripest thought. It is esp. remarkable for its differentiation between real and notional assent, its analysis of the function of the conscience in our knowledge of God and of the role of the 'illative sense', i.e. the faculty of judging from given facts by processes outside the limits of strict logic, in reaching religious certitude. Although Newman never doubted Papal *Infallibility, he opposed the mounting *Ultramontanist pressure to obtain a conciliar definition in 1870. In his Letter to the Duke of Norfolk (1875) he supplied what has generally been acclaimed a masterly exposition of the implications of the Infallibility decree. In 1877 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Trinity College, and two years later *Leo XIII made him Cardinal-Deacon of St George in Velabro.

Newman's thought was nourished by the Fathers rather than by the Schoolmen, and his main contribution to the thought of his age lay much more in the fields of psychological analysis and acute moral perception than in matters strictly theological. His fruitful use of the idea of development, in its application to the growth of Christian doctrine, and his profound insight into the nature and motives of religious faith, place him in the first rank of modern Christian thinkers. His ideals for Christian religious education were set forth in his Idea of a University (1852). Though unsuccessful in most of his undertakings in the RC Church during his lifetime, his genius has come to be more and more recognized after his death, and much of his teaching on liberty of conscience, the nature of biblical inspiration, and the role of the episcopate in the magisterium of the Church was to find official expression in the Second *Vatican Council. Proceedings for Newman's canonization were initiated in 1958; in 1991 he was declared Venerable.

Many of Newman's works have been repub. in crit. edns. The most notable are: the Apologia, ed. M. J. Svaglic (Oxford, 1967), The Grammar of Assent, ed. I. T. Ker (ibid., 1985); and The Idea of a University, ed. id. (ibid., 1976). Detailed aspects of Newman's theology in The Theological Papers of John Henry Newman on Faith and Certainty, ed. H. M. de Achaval, SJ, and J. D. Holmes (Oxford, 1976); The Theological Papers of John Henry Newman on Biblical Inspiration and on Infallibility, ed. J. D. Holmes (ibid., 1979). Letters and Diaries, ed. C. S. Dessain, Cong. Orat., and others (1961 ff. [vols. 11–22, London, 1961–72; other vols., Oxford, 1973 ff.]); Sermons, ed. P. Murray, OSB (Oxford, 1991 ff.). W. Ward, The Life of John Henry Newman (2 vols., 1912); I. [T.] Ker, John Henry Newman: A Biography (Oxford, 1988). Other biographical works include H. *Bremond, Newman: Essai de biographie psychologique ([1906]; Eng. tr. 1907); M. Ward, Young Mr. Newman (1948); L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., Newman: Sa vie, sa spiritualité (1952; Eng. tr., 1958); C. S. Dessain, Cong. Orat., John Henry Newman (1966; 2nd edn., 1971); H. [C.] Graef, God and Myself: The Spirituality of John Henry Newman (1967). [W.] O. Chadwick, From Bossuet to Newman: The Idea of Doctrinal Development (Cambridge, 1957), passim; N. Lash, Newman on Development (1975); R. C. Selby, The Principle of Reserve in the Writings of John Henry Cardinal Newman (Oxford, 1975); P. Misner, Papacy and Development: Newman and the Primacy of the Pope (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 15; Leiden, 1976). F. McGrath, SJ, Newman's University: Idea and Reality (1951); A. D. Culler, The Imperial Intellect: A Study of Newman's Educational Ideal (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1955). T. Kenny, The Political Thought of John Henry Newman (1957). J. Coulson, Newman and the Common Tradition: A Study in the Language of Church and Society (Oxford, 1970). S. Gilley, Newman and his Age (1990). D. [H.] Newsome, The Convert Cardinals: John Henry Newman and Henry Edward Manning (1993).

New Rome. A name for *Constantinople, which, acc. to *Sozomen (Hist. Eccl. 2. 3), was given to the city by the Emp. *Constantine himself. The Council of Constantinople of 381 lays down (can. 3) that 'the Bp. of Constantinople is to have honorary pre-eminence (ἔχειν τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς) after the Bp. of Rome, because Constantinople is new Rome (διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὴν νέαν Ῥώμην)'.

New Testament (Gk. Καινὴ Διαθήκη, Lat. Novum Testamentum). In the sense of 'new dispensation', a term denoting the Canonical Books belonging exclusively to the Church, in contradistinction to those styled *Old Testament (q.v.) which the Church shares with the Synagogue. The use of the word διαθήκη for the records of the OT dispensation has its roots in St *Paul (2 Cor. 3: 14) and from *Tertullian onwards 'Novum Testamentum' came to be accepted as a technical term. The NT contains the four Gospels, Acts, the Pauline and the 'Catholic' Epistles, and the Book of Revelation. See also CANON OF SCRIPTURE.

Newton, Isaac (1642–1727), mathematician and natural philosopher. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1667 and in 1669 succeeded I. *Barrow as Lucasian Professor of mathematics. In 1688–9 and 1703–5 he represented the university in the House of Commons. After 1694 he moved to London, being appointed Master of the Mint in 1699 and knighted by Queen *Anne in 1705. He had been a member of the Royal Society since 1672 and was its president from 1703 until his death.

Newton was the most eminent physicist of his day, and his work is a landmark in the study of mathematics. Among his principal achievements are the formulation of the law of gravitation, the discovery of the differential calculus, and the first correct analysis of white light. In his celebrated Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica (1687) he gives expression also to his religious convictions. Belief in God rests for him chiefly on the admirable order of the universe. He acknowledges the Divine transcendence, omnipotence, and perfection, and combats the pantheistic idea of a world soul. God is the Supreme Being, with complete authority over the material universe as well as over human souls, which owe Him absolute submission.

Though a conforming Churchman, Newton was not orthodox. In private, he denied the doctrine of the Trinity on the ground that such a belief was inaccessible to reason. He was a friend of the *Cambridge Platonist, H. *More, whose millenarian interests he shared; some of his speculations in this field were embodied in his Observations on the Prophecies of Daniel and the Apocalypse of St John (posthumous, 1733). His concern with the problems of reconciling biblical with secular history is reflected in The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended (posthumous, 1728). His more exclusively scientific works include Optics (1704) and Arithmetica Universalis (1707).

Collected works ed. S. *Horsley (5 vols., London, 1779–85). Crit. edns. of Papers and Letters on Natural Philosophy and Related Documents by I. B. Cohen (Cambridge, 1958; 2nd edn., Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1978), of Correspondence by H. W. Turnbull and others (7 vols., Cambridge, 1959–77), of Unpublished Scientific Papers ed. and tr. by A. R. Hall and M. B. Hall (ibid., 1962), of Mathematical Papers by D. T. Whiteside (ibid., 1967 ff.), and of Optical Papers, ed. A. E. Shapiro (ibid., 1984 ff.). Sir Isaac Newton's Theological Manuscripts selected and ed. H. McLachlan (Liverpool, 1950). Classic Life by D. Brewster (2 vols., London, 1855). Modern account by R. S. Westfall, Never at Rest: A Biography of Isaac Newton (Cambridge, 1980), with full bibl. Other Lives by L. T. More (New York and London, 1934), J. W. N. Sullivan (London, 1938), E. N. da C. Andrade (ibid., 1950), S. I. Wawilow (Berlin, 1951), and F. E. Manuel (Cambridge, Mass, 1968). F. Rosenberger, Isaac Newton und seine physikalischen Principien (Leipzig, 1895). H. Metzger, Attraction universelle et religion naturelle chez quelques commentateurs anglais de Newton (1938). Newton Tercentenary Celebrations (Cambridge, 1947). F. E. Manuel, Isaac Newton Historian (Cambridge, Mass., 1963); id., The Religion of Isaac Newton (Oxford, 1974). A. [A.] Koyré, Newtonian Studies (1965). I. B. Cohen, The Newtonian Revolution (1980).

Newton, John (1725–1807), *Evangelical divine. The son of a shipmaster, he was impressed into naval service, in the course of which he was converted on 10 Mar. (NS 21) 1748, though for some years he continued to be a slave-trader. From 1755 to 1764 he was Tide Surveyor at Liverpool. At this time he came under the influence of G. *Whitefield, and also began studying Latin, Hebrew, Greek, and Syriac. He considered entering the Dissenting ministry, but on being offered the curacy of Olney, he was ordained by the Bp. of Lincoln in 1764. Here he collaborated with W. *Cowper in the production of the Olney Hymns (1779). In 1780 he was appointed rector of St Mary Woolnoth, London, and held this post until his death. Among the better-known of his hymns, which are remarkable for their directness and simplicity, are 'Glorious things of Thee are spoken' and 'How sweet the Name of Jesus sounds'. He was also the author of several prose works, including letters and sermons. In theology he was a moderate *Calvinist and much influenced many leaders in the *Evangelical Revival, among them T. *Scott, W. *Wilberforce (whom he also aided in his campaign against slavery), C. *Simeon and Hannah *More.

Coll. edn. of his Works by R. Cecil (6 vols., London, 1808). Newton pub. much of his religious correspondence anonymously in Omicron (1774), Cardiphonia (2 vols., 1781), Letters to a Wife (2 vols., 1793), and Letters to the Rev. W. Bull (posthumous, 1847). Journal of a Slave Trader (John Newton) 1750–1754 ed. B. [D.] Martin and M. Spurrell (1962). F. J. Hamilton (ed.), 'Out of the Depths', being the Autobiography of the Rev. John Newton (1916). Memoir by R. Cecil (London, 1808). Other Lives by J. Bull (ibid., *c.*1868), B. [D.] Martin (ibid., 1950), and J. [C.] Pollock, Amazing Grace (ibid., 1981). D. E. Demaray, The Innovation of John Newton (1725–1807): Synergism of Word and Music in Eighteenth Century Evangelism (Texts and Studies in Religion, 36; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1988]). M. L. Loane, Oxford and the Evangelical Succession (1950), pp. 81–132. H. L. Bennett in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 235–8.

New Year's Day. In the pre-Christian era it was celebrated with great solemnity both by the Jews, who reckoned the year from the Feast of the New Moon at the end of Sept., and in the pagan empire. Acc. to the Julian Calendar, the Roman year began on 1 Jan., and the day was marked by the 'Saturnalia'. Christians were not only forbidden to participate in these festivities, but even had special fasts and Masses of expiation on the day, facts attested by the Second Council of Tours (567) and several Sacramentaries containing Masses and Offices ad prohibendum ab idolis. The later Christian practice of reckoning the beginning of the year varied acc. to the different countries. In England from early times the year began with the Feast of the *Annunciation (25 Mar.), in Germany with *Christmas, and in France and the Low Countries with

*Easter. Since *Gregory XIII's reform of the calendar in 1582, 1 Jan. came to be generally adopted as the first day of the year on the Continent, though this date was not accepted in England until 1752. In the E. *Orthodox Church, New Year's Day (here, 1 Sept.) is solemnized in many hymns, but in the W. until recent years the day had no liturgical significance, except for the fact of its coinciding with the Feast of the *Circumcision (q.v.). In the RC Church it was designated as the Octave of the Nativity of Christ in 1960; it is now also observed as the Solemnity of the Motherhood of the BVM. In England the custom of an informal 'watch-night' service, however, on the night of 31 Dec.–1 Jan. is often met with, esp. in the *Methodist Church.

M. Meslin, La fête des kalendes de janvier dans l'empire romain (Collection Latomus, 115; 1970), esp. pp. 95–129. F. Bünger, Geschichte der Neujahrsfeier in der Kirche (1911). R. L. Poole, 'The Beginning of the Year in the Middle Ages', Proceedings of the British Academy, 10 (1921–3), pp. 113–37; repr. in Studies in Chronology and History (Oxford, 1934), pp. 1–27.

New Zealand, Christianity in. The first Christian mission to the Maori of New Zealand was established in 1814 at the Bay of Islands by Samuel Marsden (1765–1838), an Anglican chaplain in New South Wales. Wesleyan *Methodists began a mission in 1822 and French RCs in 1838. By the 1840s the majority of the Maori population were attending Christian services. After the British annexation of New Zealand in 1840 there was extensive European colonization, which led to the introduction of a wide variety of denominations. *Presbyterians began as a settler Church in 1840 and members of the *Free Church of Scotland founded a colony at Otago in 1848. The Anglican see of New Zealand was set up in 1841, with G. A. *Selwyn as first bishop; by 1869 it had been subdivided to form six dioceses. In 1928 a Maori (F. A. Bennett, 1871–1950) was consecrated Bishop of Aotearoa to supervise work among the Maori, and in 1978 the see (previously suffragan to Waiapu) was raised to diocesan status. Women have been admitted to the Anglican priesthood in New Zealand since 1977. The first woman bishop was consecrated in 1990, for the diocese of Dunedin. The RC Church, predominantly Irish in membership, established two dioceses in 1848 and a Province (under the Abp. of Wellington) in 1887. The first Maori RC bishop was appointed in 1988. In the population as a whole Anglicans are the largest body (21 per cent in 1991), followed by Presbyterians (18 per cent), RCs (16 per cent) and Methodists (4 per cent). Among the Maori the RCs come second to the Anglicans, followed by the Ratana Church, an indigenous body founded by the Maori healer T. W. Ratana (1870–1939). Since the 1960s the *Charismatic Movement has become an influential force in traditional denominations and *Pentecostal Churches, imported and indigenous, have expanded rapidly. In the 1980s the major denominations began the creation of new structures for the Maori Church which reflect bicultural development in New Zealand society. Thus, in 1992 the Anglican Province of New Zealand became the Anglican Church in Aotearoa, New Zealand and Polynesia.

A. K. Davidson and P. J. Lineham (eds.), Transplanted Christianity: Documents Illustrating Aspects of New Zealand Church History (Auckland, 1987; 2nd edn., Palmerston North, 1989). W. Yate, An Account of New Zealand; and of the Formation and Progress of the Church Missionary Society's Mission in the Northern Island (London, 1835; repr. with introd. by J. Binney, Shannon [1970]); W. Williams, Christianity among the New Zealanders (London, 1867); W. P. Morrell, The Anglican Church in New Zealand: A History (Dunedin, 1973); D. McEldowney (ed.), Presbyterians in Aotearoa 1840–1990 (Wellington, 1990). E. R. Simmons, A Brief History of the Catholic Church in New Zealand (Auckland [1978]). B. Colless and P. Donovan (eds.), Religion in New Zealand (2nd edn., Palmerston North, 1985), pp. 9–142. P. Donovan (ed.), Religions of New Zealanders (ibid. [1990]); A. K. Davidson, Christianity in Aotearoa: A History of Church and Society in New Zealand (Wellington, 1991). P. J. Lineham and A. R. Grigg, Religious History of New Zealand: A Bibliography (Palmerston North, 1984; 2nd edn., 1987).

Nicaea, First Council of (325). The first *Oecumenical Council, summoned by the Emp. *Constantine within a few months of his conquest of the E. provinces, primarily to deal with the *Arian Controversy. The acta of the synod (if such ever existed) have been lost, the only authentic documents surviving from the Council being the Creed, the Synodal Letter, and the collection of twenty canons.

The Council, which had been orig. convened to Ancyra, assembled at Nicaea (now Iznik) in Bithynia in the early summer of 325 (traditionally 20 May). Shortly before there seems to have been a council at Antioch, held under the presidency of *Hosius of Córdoba, which condemned Arianism and its upholders (incl. *Eusebius of Caesarea). Constantine's main interest was to secure unity rather than any predetermined theological verdict. After the Emperor's opening speech, the presidency prob. passed to Hosius, though there is also some authority for the view that *Eustathius, Bp. of Antioch, presided. An Arian creed submitted by *Eusebius of Nicomedia was at once rejected. Eusebius of Caesarea then sought to vindicate himself by presenting the Baptismal Creed of his own Palestinian community, and this, supplemented by the word '*Homoousios', was received by the Council as orthodox. But the Creed formally promulgated by the Council was not this Creed but another, prob. a revision of the Baptismal Creed of *Jerusalem (see NICENE CREED). This Creed, with four anti-Arian anathemas attached, was subscribed by all the Bishops present except two (Theonas of Marmarica and Secundus of Ptolemais); and these last were deposed and banished. In the Arian struggle at the Council it would seem that *Athanasius, who was present as the deacon of his Bishop, *Alexander of Alexandria, was the leading champion of orthodoxy. The Council also reached decisions on the *Melitian Schism in Egypt and the *Paschal Controversy (qq.v.). It closed on 25 July. Some modern scholars (E. *Schwartz and others) have argued that this closure was only an adjournment, and that a second and concluding session of the Council met in 327.

The number of bishops who attended the Council is not known, since the signature lists are defective. The traditional number, which goes back to a late writing of Athanasius (Ep. ad Afros, 2), is 318, probably a symbolical figure, based on the number of *Abraham's servants (Gen. 14: 14). Between 220 and 250 is more likely. The Council, however, became generally known as 'the synod of the 318 Fathers'. Apparently the only representatives from the W. apart from Hosius were two priests representing the Pope of Rome, and the Bps. of Carthage, Milan, Dijon, and two others.

It is difficult to integrate what we learn from the 20 genuine surviving canons with our other information about the Council. Can. 6 laid down the precedence due to metropolitan sees, and was later constantly invoked in support of the claims of Rome; cans. 10–14 are a short penitential code, dealing with the treatment of the lapsed in the recent persecutions; can. 13 ordered that no one who sought it was to be refused the *viaticum; can. 19 dealt with the followers of *Paul of Samosata; can. 20 laid down that prayer should be said standing during the Paschal season. Before long these canons were universally accepted both in E. and W.; and several independent versions survive from the 4th and 5th cents. They were normally given pride of place in the canonical collections and, prob. through this cause, the canons of other Councils (notably *Sardica, q.v.) were apt to be cited as Nicene because they followed on without a break.

The genuine docs., together with a large collection of spuria, are pr. in all the principal Conciliar collections. Hardouin, 1 (1714), cols. 309–528; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 635–1082; Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 335–632. Text of Creed and canons also, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 1–19; crit. text of Lat. versions in EOMIA, esp. 1. 2 (1904). W. *Bright, Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils (2nd edn., 1892), pp. 1–89. P. Batiffol, 'Les Sources de l'histoire du concile de Nicée', ÉO 24 (1925), pp. 385–402; 26 (1927), pp. 5–17. F. Haase, Die koptischen Quellen zum Konzil von Nicäa: Übersetzt und untersucht (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 10, Heft 4; 1920). G. Bardy in Fliche and Martin, 3 (1936), pp. 69–95, with good bibl. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Nicée et Constantinople (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 1; 1963), esp. pp. 15–136. C. Luibhéid, The Council of Nicaea (Galway, 1982). M. Aubineau, 'Les 318 Serviteurs d'Abraham (Gen., XIV, 14) et le Nombre des Pères au Concile de Nicée (325)', RHE 61 (1966), pp. 5–43; cf. H. Chadwick, 'Les 318 Pères de Nicée', ibid., pp. 808–11. R. Lorenz, 'Das Problem der Nachsynode von Nicäa (327)', ZKG 90 (1979), pp. 22–40; C. Luibhéid, 'The Alleged Second Session of the Council of Nicaea', JEH 34 (1983), pp. 165–74. CPG 4 (1980), pp. 5–10 (nos. 8511–27). G. Fritz in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 399–417, s.v. 'Nicée (1er Concile de)'; I. O. de Urbina, SJ, in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 432–4, s.v.; H. C. Brennecke in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 429–41, s.v. 'Nicäa I', with bibl.

Nicaea, Second Council of (787). The Seventh General Council was convoked by the Empress Irene at the instigation of the Patr. *Tarasius of Constantinople in order to end the *Iconoclastic Controversy. Pope *Hadrian I accepted the invitation of the Empress and sent two legates on condition that the Iconoclastic Synod of Hieria (754) was condemned. The patriarchs of *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Jerusalem, then subject to the Caliphs, were unable to come and were each represented by two monks. The Council met on 17 Aug. 786 in the church of the Holy Apostles at *Constantinople, but was immediately broken up by iconoclastic soldiers and did not reassemble till 24 Sept. 787, this time in the church of St Sophia at Nicaea, where Tarasius presided. The Council declared its adherence to the doctrine on the veneration (προσκύνησις) of images expounded by the Pope in his letter to the Empress, adding that such veneration is a matter of respect and honour (ἀσπασμὸν καὶ τιμητικὴν προσκύνησιν), whereas absolute adoration (ἀληθινὴ λατρεία) is reserved to God alone, the honour given to the image passing on to its prototype. The decree promulgating the doctrine was signed by all present and by the Empress and her son Constantine, and the iconoclasts were anathematized.

The 22 canons drawn up by the Council deal with disciplinary matters; they declare null the election by a secular authority of bishops, priests, and deacons, condemn simony, forbid priests to leave their diocese without permission of the bishop, enjoin simplicity of life on all clerics, and forbid the stay of women in bishops' houses and monasteries of men as well as the erection of double monasteries.

Hardouin, 4 (1714), cols. 3–820; Mansi, 12 (1766), cols. 951–1154, and 13 (1767), cols. 1–820. Doctrinal definition and canons, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 131–56. Eng. tr., with comm., of the material on the 6th session dealing with images, by D. J. Sahas, Icon and Logos: Sources in Eighth-Century Iconoclasm (Toronto Medieval Texts and Translations, 4 [1986]). G. Dumeige, SJ, Nicée II (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 4; 1978), esp. pp. 99–201. E. Boespflug and N. Lossky (eds.), Nicée II, 787–1987: . . . Actes du Colloque international Nicée II tenue au Collège de France, Paris, les 2, 3, 4 octobre 1986 (1987). P. Henry, 'Initial Eastern Assessments of the Seventh Oecumenical Council', JTS NS 25 (1974), pp. 75–92. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 2; 1910), pp. 741–98. V. Laurent, AA, in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 434 f., s.v.; H. G. Thümmel in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 441–4, s.v. 'Nicäa II', both with further bibl. See also bibl. to ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY.

Nicene Creed. Two Creeds at present so named must be distinguished:

(1) The Nicene Creed properly so called, issued in 325 by the Council of *Nicaea (q.v.) and known to scholars as N. This Creed was drawn up at the Council to defend the Orthodox Faith against the *Arians and includes the word '*Homoousios'. Compared with later conciliar Creeds it is relatively short, concluding with the words 'And in the Holy Spirit'. Appended to it were four anathemas against Arianism, which came to be regarded as an integral part of the text. It was probably based on the Baptismal Creed of *Jerusalem (H. *Lietzmann), not, as older scholars held, through a misunderstanding of a statement of *Eusebius of Caesarea, on that of Caesarea in Palestine (F. J. A. *Hort).

(2) In common parlance, the 'Nicene Creed' more often means the considerably longer formula which bears this title in the *Thirty-Nine Articles and is in regular use in the *Eucharistic worship of the Church, both in East and West. It is also known as the 'Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed', and is referred to as C. It differs from N. in that, inter alia, (1) the second section on the Person of Christ is longer; (2) the phrase in N. 'from the substance of the Father' (ἐκ τῆς οὐσίας τοῦ πατρός) as an explanation of 'Homoousios' is wanting; (3) the third section contains an extended statement on the status and work of the Holy Spirit; and (4) after this follow assertions of belief in the Church, Baptism, the Resurrection of the Dead, and Eternal Life. Also it has no anathemas. Since the time of the Council of *Chalcedon of 451 it has been regarded as the Creed of the Council of *Constantinople of 381; but the earliest authorities connecting it with that Council date from *c.*449–50. Furthermore the Creed is found in St *Epiphanius' Ancoratus, which was written in 374; its occurrence here would be decisive evidence that it was not drawn up by the Council if its position in this treatise were established, but there are grounds for believing that N., not C., originally stood in the text here. The most likely theory is that the Creed, though not drawn up by the Council of Constantinople, was endorsed by it in the course of its (unsuccessful) deliberations with the *Pneumatomachi (so A. M. Ritter, followed by J. N. D. Kelly). Its origin is unclear, but it is probable that it was the Baptismal Creed of Constantinople.

Its use in Eucharistic worship after the Gospel apparently began at Antioch under *Peter the Fuller (476–88) and gradually spread through East and West, though it was not adopted at Rome until 1014. In the early Middle Ages the *Filioque (q.v.) was added to it in the W. In the Roman Rite its use at Mass is confined to Sundays and greater feasts. In the E. it is regularly used as a Baptismal Creed. It has been widely accepted in modern times as a proposed basis of Christian unity, e.g. in the *Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888).

Both Creeds, N. and C., are discussed in J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), pp. 205–62 and 296–367; J. Burnaby, The Belief of Christendom: A Commentary on the Nicene Creed (1959); G. L. Dossetti, Il simbolo di Nicea e di Costantinopoli: Edizione critica (1967). W.-D. Hauschild in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 444–56, s.v. 'Nicäno-Konstantinopolitanisches Glaubensbekenntis'.

On (1), see also F. *Loofs, 'Das Nicänum', in Festgabe von Fachgenossen und Freunden Karl Müller zum siebzigsten Geburtstag dargebracht (1922), pp. 68–82; H. Lietzmann, 'Symbolstudien XIII', ZNTW 24 (1925), pp. 193–202, with 'Kritischer Epilog' by A. *Harnack, p. 203. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Il simbolo niceno (Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas, 1947). Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 442–8.

On (2), F. J. A. Hort, Two Dissertations (1876), pp. 73–150 ('On the Constantinopolitan Creed and other Eastern Creeds of the Fourth Century'); J. Kunze, Das nicänisch-konstantinopolitanische Symbol (1898); A. M. Ritter, Das Konzil von Konstantinopel und sein Symbol (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 15; 1965), pp. 133–208. T. F. Torrance (ed.), The Incarnation: Ecumenical Studies in the Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed A.D. 381 (1981).

On the use of the Nicene Creed [C.] at the Eucharist, cf. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'L'Introduction du symbole à la messe', in Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, 2 (Museum Lessianum, Sect. hist. 14; 1951), pp. 1003–27, repr. in his Travaux Liturgiques, 3 (1967), pp. 60–81; and Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 591–606; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 461–74.

Nicephorus, St (758–828), Patr. of *Constantinople. His father had occupied high office under the Emp. Constantine Copronymus and suffered in the *Iconoclastic Controversy for his defence of images. Nicephorus inherited his father's beliefs and represented the Emperor at the Second Council of *Nicaea (787). Later he withdrew from court life and founded a monastery on the Propontis whither he retired, but without himself becoming a monk. The Emp. Constantine VI and his mother, Irene, recalled him to Constantinople, where the Emp. Nicephorus made him Patriarch on the death of *Tarasius (806), though he was not yet in holy orders. In recompense for the Imperial favour the Emperor demanded his reinstatement of the priest Joseph, who had been deposed in 797 for blessing the adulterous marriage of Constantine VI. After some hesitation Nicephorus gave way, and at a synod held in 806 or 807 rehabilitated Joseph. After the death of the Emperor and of his son Stauracius (811), he renewed the original sentence against Joseph. In 813 he crowned the Emp. Leo V ('the Armenian'), who resumed the Iconoclastic policy of his predecessors in the 8th cent. Nicephorus resisted, but was abandoned by the majority of his bishops, who supported the Emperor. In 815 he was exiled and retired to his former monastery again, where he spent the remainder of his life. Despite the opposition of the *Studites, who could not forgive his weakness in the Adulterine Controversy, his relics were translated to Constantinople in 847, and he received the title of a confessor of the faith. Feast day in the Greek Church, 2 June; in the Latin Church, 13 Mar.

Among his writings on the Image controversy are 'Apologeticus Minor' (814/15), 'Apologeticus Major' and 'Libri Tres Antirrhetici' which belong together (816–20). Of particular value is his Ἱστορία σύντομος or 'Breviarium Nicephori', a Byzantine history from 602 to 770, highly praised by *Photius for its accuracy and literary excellence. He also compiled a Chronicle, Χρονογραφία σύντομος, reaching from Adam to the year of his own death.

V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Régestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fascs. 2–3 (2nd edn. by J. Darrouzès, 1989), pp. 35–53 (nos. 374–407a). Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG 100. 169–1068; further works in J. B. *Pitra (ed.), Spicilegium Solesmense, 1 (1852), pp. 302–504, and 4 (1858), pp. 233–380; Opuscula Historica [i.e. his Ἱστορία σύντομος and Χρονογραφία σύντομος], ed. C. de Boor (Teub., 1880). 'Breviarium' ed., with Eng. tr. and comm., by C. Mango (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, Dumbarton Oaks Texts, 10; Washington, DC, 1990). Life by his pupil, the Deacon Ignatius, pr. in AASS, Mar. 2 (1648), pp. 704–27, Gk. text, with Lat. tr., pp. 294–321, and introd., p. 293; repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 41–160; also in C. de Boor, op. cit., pp. 139–217. P. J. Alexander, The Patriarch Nicephorus of Constantinople: Ecclesiastical Policy and Image Worship in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford, 1958). A. J. Visser, Nikephoros und der Bilderstreit: Eine Untersuchung über die Stellung des Konstantinopeler Patriarchen Nikephoros innerhalb der ikonoklastischen Wirren (The Hague, 1952). V. Grumel, 'Les "Douze Chapitres contre les Iconomaques" de saint Nicéphore de Constantinople', Revue des Études Byzantines, 17 (1959), pp. 127–35, with refs. to texts. P. O'Connell, SJ, The Ecclesiology of St Nicephorus I (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 194; 1972). Krumbacher, pp. 71–3. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 452–5, s.v. 'Nicéphore de Constantinople'; D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 182–6, s.v. 'Nicéphore (1)'.

Nicephorus Callistus (*c.*1256–*c.*1335), 'Xanthopoulos', Byzantine historian. Little is known of his life. Apparently a native of *Constantinople and a priest of *Sancta Sophia, whose library he utilized for his works, at the end of his life he seems to have become a monk. He belonged to the party of the Emp. Andronicus II (reigned 1282–1328), whose ecclesiastical policy, in contrast to that of his father Michael Palaeologus, supported Greek Orthodoxy against the Latinizers. His principal work, a 'Church History', narrates in 18 books the events from the birth of Christ to the death of the Emp. Phocas (610). At the end of the introduction there is a summary of five more books, probably never executed, which were to continue the narrative to the death of *Leo VI, the Philosopher (912). The History has been held to rest on an anonymous 10th-cent. work, though this theory is now thought to be improbable; it is, however, a compilation of earlier sources, among them the Ecclesiastical Histories of *Eusebius, *Socrates, *Sozomen, *Theodoret, and *Evagrius. It is none the less an important source for certain of the early controversies and heresies as well as for the history of Byzantine legends, but its value throughout depends on that of the earlier material used. In 1555 it was translated into Latin and played an important part in the controversial literature of the time, furnishing material for the defence of images and relics. Among his other writings, several of them in iambics, are liturgical, exegetical, and hagiographical works.

His Church History was pub. in Lat. tr. by J. Lange, Basle, 1555; Gk. text with Lat. tr. by J. Lange, ed. F. *Ducaeus, 2 vols., Paris, 1630, repr. J. P. Migne, PG 145. 559–1332, 146, and 147. 9–448; other works repr. ibid. 147. 449–634, with note from J. A. *Fabricius, ibid. 145. 549–58. A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, 'Νικηφόρος Κάλλιστος Ξανθόπουλος', BZ 11 (1902), pp. 38–49, incl. a few texts. Progymnasmata, ed. J. Gettner, ibid., 33 (1933), pp. 1–12 and 255–70 (text, pp. 7–12), with useful introd. G. Gentz, Die Kirchengeschichte des Nicephorus Callistus Xanthopulus und ihre Quellen, ed. F. Winkelmann (TU 98; 1966). Krumbacher, pp. 291–3. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 446–52, s.v.; D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 203–8, s.v. 'Nicéphore (5) Kallistos Xanthopoulos'.

Niceta, St (d. *c.*414), ecclesiastical writer. He was Bp. of Remesiana (Bela Palanka, SE of Niš) from *c.*370 onwards. His literary importance arises esp. from his contacts through his geographical situation with both E. and W. His writings, mainly ascribed to other authors in later times, have been largely restored to him by A. E. Burn (d. 1927). His Explanatio Symboli is a primary witness for the history of the *Apostles' Creed, containing, e.g., the oldest attestation for the words 'communio sanctorum'; De Diversis Appellationibus is a tract on the titles of Christ; De Ratione Fidei and De Spiritu Sancto are respectively directed against *Arianism and the *Pneumatomachi; De Vigiliis and De Psalmodiae Bono are of liturgical interest. The ascription to him of the '*Te Deum' (q.v.) has not been widely accepted. Feast day, 22 June.

Crit. edn. of principal texts in A. E. Burn, Niceta of Remesiana: His Life and Works (1905); of 'De Vigiliis' and 'De Psalmodiae Bono' by C. H. *Turner, JTS 22 (1920–1), pp. 305–20, and 24 (1922–3), pp. 225–50. Instructio ad Competentes: Frühchristliche Katechesen aus Dacien, ed. K. Gamber (Textus Patristici et Liturgici, 1; Regensburg, 1964); Weitere Sermonen ad Competentes ed. id. (ibid. 2, 5; 1965–6). Eng. tr. of his works by G. G. Walsh, SJ (Fathers of the Church, 7; 1949, pp. 3–76). W. A. Patin, Niceta, Bischof von Remesiana, als Schriftsteller und Theologe (1909). J. Zeiller, Les Origines chrétiennes dans les provinces danubiennes de l'empire romain (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 112; 1918), pp. 549–58. Z. Senjak, Niceta von Remesiana (Diss., Freiburg i.B., 1975). C. H. Turner, 'Niceta and Ambrosiaster, I', JTS 7 (1905–6), pp. 203–19. M. G. Mara in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 190–4. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 228–30 (nos. 646–52). A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 214–9, s.v. See also bibl. to TE DEUM.

Nicetas Acominatos (1155/7–1217), Byzantine scholar. A native of Chonia (i.e. Colossae; hence also 'Nicetas Choniates') and of wealthy family, he studied at *Constantinople, where he rose rapidly in the Imperial service. He was governor of the province of Philippopolis when the Emp. *Frederick Barbarossa passed through on the Third *Crusade (1189). His dealings with the Crusaders at this time led him to become closely connected with the E. Court in the next years. On the Fall of Constantinople (1204) he fled to Nicaea, where he spent the rest of his life. His writings include a 'Treasury of Orthodoxy' (Θησαυρὸς Ὀρθοδοξίας), a comprehensive work in 27 books (written between 1204 and 1210) against contemporary heresies, intended to supplement *Euthymius Zigabenus' 'Panoplia Dogmatike'; and a History (Χρονικὴ Διήγησις) of the period 1118–1206 in 21 books covering the reigns of the last Comneni. The former is the main source for the Councils held between 1156 and 1166; the latter is esp. valuable for its account of the capture of Constantinople by the Latins in 1204. His elder brother, Michael Acominatos (*c.*1140–*c.*1215), who became Abp. of *Athens in 1175, was also a famous scholar, his writings including sermons, verses and a collection of letters.

Collection of Nicetas' writings in J. P. Migne, PG 139. 287–1444, and 140. 9–284; and of those of Michael, ibid. 299–382. Crit. edns. by J. A. [Lat. equivalent of J. L.] van Dieten of his History (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, 11; 2 vols., Berlin, 1975); and of his Discourses and Letters (ibid. 3; 1972). O City of Byzantium, Eng. tr. of the History by H. J. Magoulias (Byzantine Texts in Translation; Detroit, 1984). J. L. van Dieten, Zur Überlieferung und Veröffentlichung der Panoplia Dogmatike des Niketas Choniates (Zetemata Byzantina, 3; Amsterdam, 1970); id., Niketas Choniates: Erläuterungen zu den Reden und Briefen nebst einer Biographie (Supplementa Byzantina, 2; 1971). On the History, H. Hunger, Die hochsprachliche profane Literatur der Byzantiner, 1 (Handbuch der Altertumswissenschaft, Abt. 12, Bd. 5; Munich, 1978), pp. 430–41, with bibl. V. Katsaros, 'A Contribution to the Exact Dating of the Death of the Byzantine Historian Nicetas Choniates', Jahrbuch der Österreichischen Byzantinistik, 32.3 (1982), pp. 83–91. Krumbacher, pp. 281–6 and 91–3 (on Nicetas); pp. 468–70 (on Michael). L. Petit, AA, in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 189 f., s.v. 'Acominatos, Nicétas'.

Nicetas Stethatos (*c.*1005–*c.*1085), Byzantine monk. As a young man he entered the monastery of *Studios in Constantinople, where he came to know St *Simeon the New Theologian (d. 1022). In about 1035 a vision renewed his devotion to Simeon, whose works he began to collect and whose Life he wrote. He may have earned the surname Stethatos ('courageous') for his opposition to the relationship between the Emp. Constantine IX Monomachus and his mistress Sclerina. In 1053–4 he was involved in the controversy between Cardinal *Humbert and the Patr. *Michael Cerularius which led to the mutual excommunications of 1054. He wrote three treatises against the Latins, though acc. to a Latin source he was personally reconciled to Humbert. Nothing more is known of Nicetas apart from his writings, though it appears from the inscription to his Profession of Faith that he became *hegoumen of Studios. If so, he must have died between 1076 and 1092. Many of his writings have a polemical edge: apart from the treatises against the Latins, there are treatises against the Armenians (largely unpublished) and against the Jews; several of his opuscula, with their interest in the soul and its fate after death, seem to envisage the controversy surrounding Michael *Psellus; and the Life of Simeon is conceived as a defence of the institution of spiritual fatherhood, even in laymen, against the hierarchy. His own spiritual teaching contained in his Three Centuries of Practical, Physical and Gnostic Chapters is indebted to Simeon: like him he ascribes importance to the gift of tears.

Crit. edn. of the Life of Simeon, with Fr. tr., by I. Hausherr, SJ (Orientalia Christiana, vol. 12, no. 45; 1928). Treatises against the Latins in A. Michel, Humbert und Kerullarios, 2 (Quellen und Forschungen, 23; 1930), pp. 320–42, 371–409. Opuscules et Lettres (incl. treatise against the Jews), ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by J. Darrouzès, AA (SC 81; 1961). Text of Centuries in Philocalia* (Venice, 1782), pp. 785–851, repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 120. 852–1009; Eng. tr., with introd., in Eng. tr. of the Philocalia by G. E. H. Palmer and others, 4 (1995), pp. 76–174. W. Völker, Praxis und Theoria bei Symeon dem Neuen Theologen (Wiesbaden, 1974), pp. 456–89 ('Nicetas Stethatos als mystischer Schriftsteller und sein Verhältnis zu Symeon dem Neuen Theologen'). M. T. Disdier in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 479–86, s.v.; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), pp. 224–30.

Nicholas, St, Bp. of Myra in Lycia. Though one of the most popular saints in both the Greek and Latin Churches, scarcely anything is historically certain about him. Acc. to tradition, he was imprisoned during the *Diocletianic persecution and afterwards released and was present at the Council of *Nicaea. The latter supposition is most improbable, as he is not in any of the early lists of bishops present at the Council. The earliest evidence for his cult at Myra is found in the contemporary Life of St Nicholas of Sion, who lived in the reign of the Emp. *Justinian (d. 565). Episodes from the Life of St Nicholas of Sion were later transferred to the Life of his namesake. Justinian himself built a church in *Constantinople dedicated to St Priscus and St Nicholas. His cult became popular in the W. after the inhabitants of Bari claimed to have got possession of his remains on 9 May 1087.

St Nicholas is regarded as the patron saint of sailors, and churches under his dedication are often built so that they can be seen off the coast as landmarks. He is also the patron saint of children, bringing them gifts on 6 Dec. (whence 'Santa Claus', an American corruption of 'Sante Klaas', the Dutch for 'Saint Nicholas'). And he is also the patron saint of Russia. His symbol is sometimes three bags of gold, the dowry he is supposed to have given to three girls to save them from degradation, sometimes three children standing in a tub at his side, a representation which has been variously explained. Feast day, 6 Dec.

G. Anrich, Hagios Nikolaos: Der heilige Nikolaos in der griechischen Kirche. Texte und Untersuchungen (2 vols., 1913–17). 12th-cent. Life by Norman poet Wace, ed. M. S. Crawford (thesis, Philadelphia, 1923). The Life of St Nicholas of Sion is ed., with Eng. tr., by I. and N. P. Ševčenko (The Archbishop Iakovos Library of Ecclesiastical and Historical Sources, 10; Brookline, Mass. [1984]). K. Meisen, Nikolauskult und Nikolausbrauch in Abendlande (Forschungen zur Volkskunde, 9–12; 1931; repr. as Quellen und Abhandlungen zur Mittelrheinischen Kirchengeschichte, 41; 1981, with additional bibl, pp. xiv–xvi). C. W. Jones, The Saint Nicholas Liturgy and its Literary Relationships (Ninth to Twelfth Centuries) (University of California English Studies, 27; 1963). Less specialized treatment by id., Saint Nicholas of Myra, Bari, and Manhattan (Chicago and London, 1978). N. P. Ševčenko, The Life of Saint Nicholas in Byzantine Art (Centro Studi Bizantini, Monografie, 1; Turin, 1983). N. Del Re and M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (Rome, 1967), cols. 923–48, s.v. 'Nicola, vescovo di Mira'.

Nicholas I, St (d. 867), Pope from 858. He was one of the most forceful of the early medieval Popes. Of a noble Roman family, he entered the service of the Curia under Pope Sergius II (844–7) and was made subdeacon; having become deacon under *Leo IV (847–55), he gained a decisive influence in the affairs of the Holy See under Benedict III (855–8), and on his death he was elected to succeed him (858). One of the chief events of his rule was the long-drawn-out struggle with the E. Church over the deposition of Ignatius by the Emp. Michael III and the appointment of *Photius to the see of Constantinople. The latter, though at first seeking Rome's approval of his accession, became more and more embittered when Nicholas, refusing to sanction the illegality of the proceedings, anathematized him and restored Ignatius at the Synod at Rome in 863. The situation was further aggravated by the readiness of the Pope to respond, in 866, to the advances of the newly converted Bulgars, whom he tried to win over to the see of Rome and for whom he wrote his famous 'Responsa Nicolai ad consulta Bulgarorum', a kind of summary of Christian faith and discipline. To this supposed encroachment on his rights, Photius replied in 867 by declaring the Pope deposed, but was himself deprived of his office in the same year. It was, however, in response to an invitation from Nicholas that Sts *Cyril and Methodius visited Rome, where they were welcomed by Nicholas's successor, Hadrian II. In the W. Nicholas had to contend with similar difficulties in upholding the Papal authority. He vigorously defended the sanctity of marriage in the divorce case of Lothair II of Lorraine, deposing the two Abps. of Cologne and Trier who had connived at his bigamous marriage, and effecting a temporary reconciliation between the king and his consort. He successfully asserted the supremacy of the see of Rome against Abp. John of Ravenna, who, counting on Imperial support, had violated the rights of property of the Holy See and tyrannized over his subjects. Similarly *Hincmar of Reims was obliged to acknowledge the right of the Papacy to intervene in disputes. There are grounds for believing that the '*False Decretals' were already received in Rome during his pontificate, though probably not before 864, and that Nicholas himself was influenced by them in his attitude to Hincmar. Apart from his decisive effect on the prestige of the Papacy in political matters, Nicholas was a man of high personal integrity, fully conscious of the responsibilities which he owed to his position. Feast day, 13 Nov.

Letters pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 119. 753–1212. Crit. edn. by E. Perels in MGH, Epistolae, 6 (1925), pp. 257–690. LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 151–72; Eng. tr., with introd., by R. Davis, The Lives of the Ninth-Century Popes (Translated Texts for Historians, 20; Liverpool, 1995), pp. 189–247. Life by J. Roy ('Les Saints', 1899; Eng. tr., 1901). F. Dvornik, The Photian Schism (1948), passim. A. Greinacher, Die Anschauungen des Papstes Nikolaus I über das Verhältnis von Staat und Kirche (Abhandlungen zur mittleren und neueren Geschichte, 10; 1909); E. Perels, Papst Nikolaus I und Anastasius Bibliothecarius (1920); J. Haller, Nikolaus I und Pseudo-Isidor (1936). F. A. Norwood, 'The Political Pretensions of Pope Nicholas I', Church History, 15 (1946), pp. 271–85. L. Heiser, Die Responsa ad Consulta Bulgarorum des Papstes Nikolaus I. (858–867) (Trierer Theologische Studien, 36; 1979). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (2nd edn., 1904), pp. 235–45 (Eng. tr., 1908, pp. 155–62). Mann, 3 (1906), pp. 1–148. É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 506–26.

Nicholas V (1397–1455), Pope from 1447. Thomas Parentucelli, the son of a doctor of Sarzana, studied theology at *Bologna, where Bp., later Cardinal, Nicholas Albergati became his protector. Appointed Bp. of Bologna after Albergati's death (1444), he was Papal Legate at the Diet of Frankfurt, where he worked so successfully for the recognition of *Eugenius IV by the German princes that he was created Cardinal in 1446. In 1447 he was elected Pope. By his conciliatory spirit and great diplomatic skill he obtained the recognition of the Papal rights in the matter of benefices and bishoprics by the Concordat of Vienna in 1448 and, in the following year, put an end to the schism by receiving the submission of the antipope, Felix V, and that of the Council of *Basle before its dissolution. In thanksgiving for the restoration of unity he decreed a *Jubilee in 1450, and immediately after sent out his legates to reform abuses—Cardinal *Nicholas of Cusa and St *Giovanni Capistrano to N. and S. Germany respectively, and Cardinal d'Estouteville to France. In 1452 he crowned Frederick III of Habsburg German Emperor (the last Imperial Coronation in Rome). At the same time he restored order in the States of the Church and suppressed the revolt of Stefano Porcaro (1453), who attempted to overthrow the papal régime and declare Rome a republic. After the fall of *Constantinople (1453) he tried in vain to incite the European princes to a crusade against the Turks, and anxiety for the state of Christendom probably hastened his death. An enthusiastic lover of arts and science, Nicholas restored many ruined churches, planned to rebuild the *Vatican and *St Peter's, and founded the Vatican Library. He was the first, and probably the best, of the Renaissance Popes, of blameless personal life, free from *nepotism and anxious to reconcile religion with the new learning.

The principal authorities are the Lives by Vespasiano da Bisticci (d. 1498) in Vite di uomini illustri del secolo XV (ed. P. d'Ancona and E. Aeschlimann, Milan, 1951, pp. 21–47; Eng. tr. by W. G. and E. Waters, The Vespaniano Memoirs, 1926, pp. 31–58) and B. *Platina, Vitae Pontificum (Venice, 1479; no pagination). J. Manetti (d. 1459), 'Vita Nicolai V' in L. A. *Muratori (ed.), Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, 3 (pt. 2; Milan, 1734), cols. 907–60. Modern Life by G. Sforza (Lucca, 1884; Ger. tr., 1887). K. Pleyer, Die Politik Nikolaus V (1927). Pastor, 2 (1891), pp. 3–314, with bibl. Fliche and Martin, 15 (1951), pp. 15–38. G. Mollat in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 541–8, s.v. 'Nicolas V'; G. Schwaiger in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 979 f., s.v. 'Nikolaus V'; J. Gill, SJ, in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 443–5, s.v., all with further bibl.

Nicholas of Basle (d. *c.*1395), medieval heretic. He was a *Beghard who preached and propagated his opinions esp. in the district round Basle. Acc. to Martin of Mainz, a disciple of his who was burnt at Cologne in 1393, Nicholas claimed to understand the Gospels better than the Apostles, assumed ecclesiastical functions, and demanded obedience from his followers, whom he could release from their obedience to the Church into a state of primal innocence; the perfect did not need to pray to go to heaven, and the Lord's Prayer should read 'Lead us into temptation'. It is, however, not clear that his views were as radical as Martin's confession implies. For many years he evaded the *Inquisition but was eventually seized and burned at the stake in Vienna. At one time he was identified (esp. by K. Schmidt) with the mysterious 'Friend of God from the Oberland' who plays an important part in the writings of the Strasbourg ascetic, Rulman Merswin, but H. S. *Denifle has convincingly argued that this figure is a literary creation of Merswin himself.

K. Schmidt (ed.), Nicolaus von Basel: Leben und ausgewählte Schriften (1866); id., Nicolaus von Basel: Bericht von der Bekehrung Taulers (1875). H. S. Denifle, OP, 'Der Gottesfreund im Oberland und Nikolaus von Basel. Eine kritische Studie', Historisch-politische Blätter für das katholische Deutschland, 75 (1875), pp. 17–34, 93–122, 245–66, and 340–54. R. Haupt, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Sekte vom freien Geiste und des Beghardentums', ZKG 7 (1885), pp. 503–76, esp. pp. 508–11. R. E. Lerner, The Heresy of the Free Spirit in the Later Middle Ages (1972), pp. 151–4.

Nicholas Breakspear. See HADRIAN IV.

Nicholas Cabasilas, St. See CABASILAS, ST NICHOLAS.

Nicholas of Cusa (1401–64), German cardinal and philosopher. He was a native of the village of Cues, on the Moselle. After studying at Heidelberg (1416) and Padua (1417–23), where he became a doctor of canon law, he entered Cologne University in 1425. There he was in close touch with Heymericus de Campo, the Dean of the Faculty of Arts and chief proponent of the doctrines of *Albert the Great. Through Heymericus he became acquainted with the writings of Ramon *Llull. From 1426 he searched for manuscripts of the classics on behalf of Card. Giordano Orsini; his discoveries made him known to the Italian humanists. Having been ordained priest in 1426, he was made Dean of St Florin's at Coblenz in 1431. In 1433 he took part in the Council of *Basle as an advocate in a dispute concerning the possession of the archiepiscopal see of Trier. He also worked for the reconciliation of the *Hussites to the Church and in 1433 procured the acceptance of the *Calixtines by the Council. In the same year he wrote his famous work, De Concordantia Catholica, in which he outlined a comprehensive programme for the reform of Church and Empire. Though he originally favoured the *Conciliar Movement, the revolutionary proceedings of the Council and its failure to bring about a union with the Greeks estranged him from the majority of its supporters. From 1437 he devoted himself entirely to the cause of the Pope, being sent in that year by *Eugenius IV to *Constantinople in the interests of reunion. In the following years he worked for the Papal cause at the Diets of Mainz (1441), Frankfurt (1442), and Nuremberg (1444). When in 1448 a reconciliation was effected between the Pope and the Empire which culminated in the Concordat of Vienna, *Nicholas V rewarded him by creating him cardinal. In 1450 he was appointed Bp. of Brixen (in the Tyrol) and Papal legate for the German-speaking countries. As such, besides publishing the Jubilee Indulgences, he was authorized to hold provincial synods and to visit monasteries and remove abuses. In 1452 he took possession of his diocese, where he worked with great zeal for the reform of the morals of clergy and people. When a conflict with Duke Sigismund forced him to leave his diocese, he went to Rome, where *Pius II appointed him in 1459 his Vicar General with the task of reforming and governing Rome and the patrimony of St Peter. After an apparent reconciliation he returned to Brixen, but Sigismund soon declared war on him and besieged him in the fortress of Bruneck, which he was forced to surrender. He once more went to Rome, where he spent the rest of his life as Camerarius of the Sacred College.

In intellectual outlook Nicholas was a forerunner of the Renaissance. His principal work, De Docta Ignorantia (completed 1440), was a defence of his two celebrated principles, 'docta ignorantia' and 'coincidentia oppositorum'.

'Docta ignorantia' was the highest stage of intellectual apprehension accessible to the human intellect, since Truth, which is absolute, one, and infinitely simple, is unknowable to man. Knowledge by contrast is relative, multiple, complex, and at best only approximate. The road to Truth therefore leads beyond reason and the principle of contradiction; it is only by intuition that we can discover God, the 'coincidentia oppositorum', wherein all contradictions meet. This description is meant to indicate that God is at once infinitely great and infinitely small, the maximum and the minimum, the centre and the circumference of the world, everywhere and nowhere, neither One nor Three, but Triune.

Nicholas's general cast of thought has many affinities with *Neoplatonism; and among those who esp. influenced him were St *Augustine, *Proclus, and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, and of medieval thinkers, esp. St *Bonaventure and Meister *Eckhart. He held the common Platonist view that mathematics is the supreme science. He also had considerable critical gifts as a historian, rejecting e.g. the authenticity of the *False Decretals and of the *Donation of Constantine.

His other writings incl. De Coniecturis (the first version, 1440), designed, by showing the underlying unity of all knowledge, to lead nearer to a truth which transcends the bounds of human reason; De Quaerendo Deum (1445); the Apologia Doctae Ignorantiae (1449), a reply to the charge of pantheism by Johann Wenck, professor of theology at Heidelberg; Idiota (1450), four dialogues on the human mind and on the ways that lead to wisdom; De Visione Dei (1453); De li Non Aliud (1462), using Proclus' term ('Not-Other') as the most suitable to characterize the nature of God; De Venatione Sapientiae (1462), and De Apice Theoriae (1464), a final summary.

Editio princeps of his Collected Works, 2 vols., Strasbourg, 1488; until the present century the standard edn. was that issued in 3 vols., Paris, 1514, repr., with some additions, one vol., Basle, 1565. Crit. edn. under the auspices of the Heidelberg Academy, by E. Hoffmann, R. Klibansky, and others (22 vols., 1932 ff.). Further collection of 'Cusanus-Texte' in the Sb. (Heid.), ed. E. Hoffmann and R. Klibansky (1928–9, Heft 3), G. Kallen (1935–6, Heft 3), J. Koch (1935–6, Heft 2), L. Bauer (1940–1, Heft 4), J. Koch (1941–2, Heft 1), id. (1942–3, Heft 2), id. (1944–8, Heft 3), G. von Bredow (1955, Heft 2), E. Maschke (1956, Heft 1), H. Hürten (1960, Heft 2); and by E. Meuthen in Abh. (Heid.), 1977, Heft 3. Eng. trs. by J. Hopkins, with facing Lat. texts, of 'De li Non Aliud' (God as Not-Other, Minneapolis [1979]; 2nd edn., 1983) and of 'De Visione Dei' (Nicholas of Cusa's Dialectical Mysticism, ibid. [1985]), and by J. Biechler and H. L. Bond of 'De Pace Fidei' (Nicholas of Cusa on Interreligious Harmony, Texts and Studies in Religion, 55; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1990]). Eng. trs. alone of 'De Visione Dei' by E. G. Salter (London, 1928), of 'De Docta Ignorantia' by J. Hopkins (Minneapolis [1981]), of 'De concordantia Catholica' by P. E. Sigmund (Cambridge Texts in the History of Political Thought, 1991), and of selected writings by J. P. Dolan, Unity and Reform (Notre Dame, Ind. [1962]). Substantial general studies by E. Vansteenberghe (Bibliothèque du XV^{e} siècle, 24; Paris, 1920, repr. Geneva, 1974) and M. Patronnier de Gandillac, La Philosophie de Nicolas de Cues (Paris thesis [1941], with further bibl.; rev. Ger. edn., Düsseldorf, 1953). Less technical introds. by H. Bett ('Great Medieval Churchmen', London, 1932), P. Mennicken (Leipzig, 1932; 2nd edn., Trier, 1950), and J. Hopkins (Minneapolis, 1978; 2nd edn., 1980). J. Uebinger, Die Gotteslehre des Nikolaus Cusanus (1888). E. Vansteenberghe, Autour de la docte ignorance (BGPM, 14, Hefte 2–4; 1915). J. Lenz, Die Docta Ignorantia oder die mystische Gotteserkenntnis des Nikolaus Cusanus in ihren philosophischen Grundlagen (Abhandlungen zur Philosophie und Psychologie der Religion, 3; 1923); 'Cusanus-Studien' in Sb. (Heid.), by E. Hoffmann and R. Klibansky (1929–30, Heft 3), M. Honecker (1937–8, Heft 2), E. Bohnenstädt (1938–9, Heft 1), R. Creutz (1938–9, Heft 3), M. Honecker (1939–40, Heft 2), O. Menzel (1940–1, Heft 6), E. Hoffmann (1941–2, Heft 4), G. Kallen (1963, Heft 2), and by H. G. Senger (1972, Heft 5). R. Klibansky, The Continuity of the Platonic Tradition (1939), esp. pp. 28–32; id., 'Plato's Parmenides in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance', Mediaeval and Renaissance Studies, 1 (1943), pp. 281–330, esp. pp. 304–10; these two works are repr., with suppl. material, under the title of the former, Munich, 1981. R. Haubst, Das Bild des Einen und Dreieinen Gottes in der Welt nach Nikolaus von Kues (Trierer theologische Studien, 4; 1952); id., Studien zu Nikolaus von Kues und Johannes Wenck aus Handschriften der Vatikanischen Bibliothek (BGPM 38, Heft 1 [1955]), esp. pp. 1–32; id., Die Christologie des Nikolaus von Kues (Freiburg, 1956); id., Streitzüge in die cusanische Theologie (Münster, 1991). E. Meuthen, Die letzten Jahre des Nikolaus von Kues: Biographische Untersuchungen nach neuen Quellen (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 3; 1958); id., Nikolaus von Kues 1401–1464: Skizze einer Biographie (Buchreihe der Cusanus-Gesellschaft, 1964). E. Colomer, SJ, Nikolaus von Kues und Raimund Lull: Aus Handschriften der Kueser Bibliothek (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 2; 1961). M. Watanabe, The Political Ideas of Nicholas of Cusa, with special reference to his De concordantia catholica (Travaux d'humanisme et renaissance, 58; Geneva, 1963). P. E. Sigmund, Nicholas of Cusa and Medieval Political Thought (Cambridge, Mass., 1963). K. Jacobi, Die Methode der Cusanischen Philosophie (Munich, 1969). R. Klibansky, 'Die Wirkungsgeschichte des Dialogs "De pace fide"', in R. Haubst (ed.), Der Friede unter den Religionen nach Nikolaus von Kues: Akten des Symposions in Trier vom 13. bis 15. Oktober 1982 (Mitteilungen und Forschungsbeiträge der Cusanus-Gesellschaft, 16; Mainz, 1984), pp. 113–25; see also other vols. in this series. C. Riccati, 'Processio' et 'Explicatio': La doctrine de la création chez Jean Scot et Nicolas de Cues (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Filosofici, Serie Studi, 6; Naples, 1983). E. F. Jacob, 'Nicolas of Cusa', in F. J. C. Hearnshaw (ed.), The Social and Political Ideas of Some Great Thinkers of the Renaissance and Reformation (1925), pp. 32–59; id., 'Cusanus the Theologian', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 21 (1937), pp. 406–24. R. Klibansky, 'Nicholas of Cues', in id. (ed.), Philosophy in the Mid-Century, 4 (Florence, 1959), pp. 88–94. E. Vansteenberghe in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 601–12, s.v. 'Nicolas (24) de Cusa'; R. Klibansky in Enciclopedia italiana, 24 (1934), pp. 761–3, s.v. 'Niccolà da Cusa'; J. Koch in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 449–52, s.v.

Nicholas of Flüe, St (1417–87), 'Brother Klaus', Swiss ascetic. The son of wealthy peasants, he distinguished himself as a soldier and later as a cantonal councillor and judge (1459). In 1467 he obtained the consent of his wife to leave her and their ten children, to lead the life of a hermit in the Ranft valley, near Sachseln, in Switzerland. Here, where he is said to have lived for 19 years with no food save the Eucharist, his reputation for sanctity attracted many visitors from all parts of Europe seeking his advice. His great influence showed itself in 1481, when a dispute between the delegates of the Swiss confederates at Stans that threatened to result in civil war was settled by his counsel. He was beatified in 1669 and canonized in 1947. The accounts of his visions have attracted much interest in modern times. Feast day, 21 Mar.; in Switzerland (of which he is the Patron Saint), 25 Sept.

Fundamental study by R. Durrer, Bruder Klaus: Die ältesten Quellen über den seligen Nikolaus von Flüe, sein Leben und seinen Einfluss (2 vols., Sarnen, 1917–21), orig. planned to mark the 5th centenary of his birth, with text of Life by Henry of Gundelfingen (d. 1490) and other primary material. Other studies incl. those of G. Méautis (Neuchâtel, 1940), C. Journet (Collection des Cahiers du Rhône, 5; 1942; 3rd edn., 1966) with texts, R. Centlivres (Geneva, 1947), A. Deuster (Bonn, 1950), G. R. Lamb (London, 1955), H. Stirnimann (Dokimion. Freiburger Zeitschrift für Philosophie und Theologie, Neue Schriftenreihe, 7; 1981), with texts, and (at a popular level) C. Yates, Man of Two Worlds (York [1989]). T. Boos in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 452 f., s.v., with refs.

Nicholas Hereford (d. *c.*1420), *Lollard writer. Neither the date of his birth nor that of his death is known, but he was ordained priest in 1370. While a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, he became an ardent supporter of J. *Wycliffe, and by 1382 he was preaching Wycliffite doctrines. For this he was condemned and excommunicated. An expedition to Rome to appeal against the sentence was unsuccessful, and imprisonment followed. Escaping, he returned to England and resumed his Lollard activities. After a further term of imprisonment, he seems to have recanted *c.*1391. He became a canon of *Hereford in 1394 and treasurer in 1397. In 1417 he resigned his preferment and was professed a *Carthusian monk. His name has been associated with the early Wycliffite translation of the Bible into English.

The principal chronicle sources include the Fasciculi Zizaniorum (ed. W. W. Shirley, RS, 1858, pp. 289–329), Henry Knighton, Chronicon (ed. J. R. Lumby, 2, ibid., 1895, pp. 170–4), and Thomas Walsingham, Historia Anglicana (ed. H. T. Riley, 2, ibid., 1864, pp. 159–60). M. Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and Other Medieval Biblical Versions (Cambridge, 1920), esp. pp. 232–6, 253–67, and 286–8; K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952), pp. 107–12 and 126–9; S. L. Fristedt, The Wycliffite Bible, 1 (Stockholm Studies in English, 4; 1953), pp. 115–18; H. Hargreaves in The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 400–15; A. Hudson, 'A Neglected Wycliffite Text', JEH 29 (1978), pp. 257–79, esp. pp. 272–5. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 40 (1894), pp. 418–20; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 913–15, s.v. 'Hereford, Nicholas'.

Nicholas of Lyre (*c.*1270–1349), biblical exegete. A native of Lyre (in the diocese of Evreux), Nicholas had become a *Franciscan and moved to *Paris by *c.*1300. There he shared in the administration of the Franciscan house of study, becoming minister of the provinces of France (1319) and Burgundy (1324). Although he was a regent master in the University of Paris (1309) and was instrumental in founding the Collège de Bourgogne, Nicholas was essentially a research scholar, who did not seek a following ('Nolo habere caudam'). He concentrated on the literal meaning of the Bible, writing analyses, or Postillae, on each verse or section of a chapter. These Postillae are based on the rich tradition of patristic and medieval Latin commentary, strengthened by Nicholas's unusually exact knowledge of the Hebrew text and of rabbinic exegesis. The Postillae Litterales (1322–33) were complemented by the Postillae Morales (1339). Long regarded as the definitive modern commentary, they ran to over 100 editions between 1471 and 1600. They were also adapted as sermons on the Sunday Gospels. Nicholas participated in the debates about apostolic poverty and the *Beatific Vision, but he was essentially an expositor rather than a theologian.

Convenient edn. of the Postillae, 4 vols., Nürnberg, 1487; also often pr. together with the *Glossa Ordinaria, e.g. Venice, 1495, Lyons, 1545. P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maîtres en théologie de Paris au XIII^e siècle, 2 (1934), pp. 215–31, with details of MSS and edns. H. Labrosse, 'Sources de la biographie de Nicolas de Lyra', Études Franciscaines, 16 (1906), pp. 383–404; id., 'Biographie de Nicolas de Lyre', ibid. 17 (1907), pp. 489–505 and 593–608; id., 'Œuvres de Nicolas de Lyre. Sources bibliographiques', ibid. 19 (1908), pp. 41–52; id., 'Œuvres de Nicolas de Lyre. Catalogue des œuvres', ibid., pp. 153–75 and 368–79, and 35 (1923), pp. 171–87 and 400–32. H. Hailperin, Rashi and the Christian Scholars (Pittsburgh, 1963), pp. 137–246, with notes, pp. 282–357. H. Rüthing, 'Kritische Bemerkungen zu einer mittelalterlichen Biographie des Nikolaus von Lyra', Archivum Franciscanum Historicum, 60 (1967), pp. 42–54; E. A. Gosselin, 'A Listing of the Printed Editions of Nicolaus de Lyra', Traditio, 26 (1970), pp. 399–426. F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, 4 (Madrid, 1954), pp. 51–94 (nos. 5827–994). C. Schmitt in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 291 f., s.v. 'Nicolas de Lyre', with bibl.

Nicholas of Oresme. See ORESME, NICOLAS.

Nicholas of Tolentino, St (*c.*1245–1306), *Augustinian friar. Born at Sant'Angelo in the March of Ancona, he made his profession as an Augustinian hermit *c.*1253. His life was pious but uneventful, devoted to preaching and pastoral work among the poor and destitute and, it is recorded, graced by frequent miracles. His last 30 years were spent at Tolentino, where fragments of his body, which are reputed to bleed shortly before great calamities (e.g. in 1452 before the Fall of *Constantinople, in 1510 before the Reformation), are interred. He was canonized by *Eugenius IV in 1446. Feast day, 10 Sept.

The principal authority is the contemporary Life by Pietro di Monte Rubiano, his fellow Augustinian hermit, written in 1326; repr. in AASS, Sept. 3 (1750), pp. 644–64, with other material, pp. 664–743, and introd., pp. 636–44. Popular modern Lives by A. Tonna-Barthet (Paris, 1896), E. A. Foran, OSA (London, 1920), and N. Concetti (Tolentino, 1932). D. Gentili in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 953–68, s.v. 'Nicola da Tolentino'.

Nicholas, Henry (1502–*c.*1580), or Hendrik Niclaes, founder of the sect of '*Familists' (q.v.). His birthplace is unknown. He came of a devout RC family, and at an early age he began to have visions. By profession he was a merchant dealing mainly in cloth and he amassed a considerable fortune. About 1531 he went to Amsterdam, where he associated with the *Anabaptists. Here, *c.*1539, he believed he had Divine communications commanding him to found a new sect, 'The Family of Love' or 'Familia Caritatis'. In 1540 he went to Emden, where he lived for 20 years and wrote a large number of books, the best known being his Spiegel der Gerechtigheid (Glass of Righteousness), printed by C. Plantin at Antwerp in the late 1550s. In 1560 the authorities at Emden took steps against his sectarian activities and he fled first to Kampen and then to Rotterdam; he spent the last ten years of his life in Cologne. Deeply influenced by the spirituality of the Theologia Germanica and S. *Franck, he was convinced that he would heal the schisms in Christendom and lead mankind to salvation in the 'last age of time'. His books, condemned by Protestants and Catholics alike, were placed on the *Index.

Cronica, Ordo Sacerdotis, Acta HN: Three Texts on the Family of Love [part of the first being the work of Nicholas, the rest of this and the other items being prob. based on texts by him if not his work], ed. A. [A. H.] Hamilton (Leiden, 1988). F. Nippold, 'Heinrich Niclaes und das Haus der Liebe', Zeitschrift für die historische Theologie, 32 (1862), pp. 323–402 and 473–563. I. Simon, 'Hendrik Niclaes. Biographische und bibliographische Notizen. Emden (1540–60)', Niederdeutsches Wort, 13 (1973), pp. 63–77. A. [A. H.] Hamilton, The Family of Love (Cambridge, 1981). See also bibl. to FAMILISTS.

Niclaes, Hendrik. See NICHOLAS, HENRY.

Nicodemism. The term Nicodemite, derived from *Nicodemus who visited Jesus by night, generally denotes a secret or timid adherent. J. *Calvin, in his Excuse à Messieurs les Nicodémites (1544) and elsewhere, applied it to those converts to Protestantism in Catholic France who concealed their true sympathies and outwardly continued RC practices. In modern times Nicodemism has been taken to indicate all forms of religious simulation, and esp. that of certain Humanists, *Anabaptists, and sectaries such as the *Familists.

C. Ginzburg, Il Nicodemismo: Simulazione e dissimulazione religiosa nell'Europa del '500 (Turin, 1970). C. M. N. Eire, 'Calvin and Nicodemism: A Reappraisal', Sixteenth Century Journal, 10 (1979), pp. 45–69, with bibl. refs.

Nicodemus. The Jew, learned in the Law and a member of the council of the *Sanhedrin, who came to Jesus by night and evoked the discourse narrated in Jn. 3: 1–15 on Christian rebirth. He is afterwards shown as a partial sympathizer with Christ (Jn. 7: 50) and as helping *Joseph of Arimathaea to give Him burial (Jn. 19: 39).

J. Graf, 'Nikodemus (Joh. 3. 1–21)', Th.Q. 132 (1952), pp. 62–86; S. Mendrer, 'Nikodemus', Journal of Biblical Literature, 77 (1958), pp. 293–323 [in Ger., with synopsis in Eng.]. See also comm. on John.

Nicodemus, Gospel of. See PILATE, ACTS OF.

Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain, St (*c.*1749–1809), Greek monk and spiritual writer. Born on Naxos, in 1775 he was professed on Mount Athos, where he remained for almost all the rest of his life, devoting his energies to writing. His most important publications were the Philocalia (q.v.), on which he collaborated with St Macarius Notaras of Corinth; and a commentary on E. Canon Law entitled the Pidalion or 'Rudder' (Leipzig, 1800), which he produced with the help of Hieromonk Agapios of Dimitsana. He urged the necessity for frequent communion at a time when this was not usual in the Greek Church. Deeply rooted in the tradition of the Greek Fathers, he was at the same time ready to borrow from the W., and he published Greek editions of RC writers, including the Spiritual Exercises of St *Ignatius Loyola. He was proclaimed a saint in the Eastern *Orthodox Church in 1955; feast day (in the E.), 14 July.

Eng. trs. by D. Cummings of 'The Rudder' (Chicago, 1957) and by E. Kadloubovsky and G. E. H. Palmer of 'Unseen Warfare' (1952), with important introd. by H. A. Hodges, pp. 13–67; the 'Unseen Warfare' (Αόρατος Πόλεμος; Venice, 1796) was the title given by Nicodemus to his tr. into Gk. of two Ital. works, the Combattimento spirituale of L. Scupoli (1589) and the Sentiero del Paradiso attributed to Scupoli (1600); the Eng. tr. is based on the Russian revision of Theophan the Recluse (1815–94). C. Papoulidis, Nicodème l'Hagiorite (1749–1809) (Athens, 1967). C. [P.] Cavernos, St Nicodemus the Hagiorite (Modern Orthodox Saints, 3; Belmont, Mass., 1974). G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 377–82. D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 234–50, s.v. 'Nicodème l'Hagiorite', with bibl.

Nicolaitans. Sectaries mentioned in the NT only at Rev. 2: 6 and 2: 14 f., where they appear as the advocates of a return to pagan worship. It is possible that the word 'Nicolaitans' is allegorical, Nicolas being simply the Greek equivalent of Balaam (cf. Rev. 2: 14), arrived at by a fanciful etymology, and that the persons referred to in Rev. had no real existence as a sect. A *Gnostic sect of this name, however, is alluded to by *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and Pseudo-*Tertullian; and Irenaeus affirms that they were founded by the Nicolas of Antioch mentioned in Acts 6: 5, though this is perhaps no more than a conjecture. Indeed, it is not impossible that all references to them in Christian tradition are merely deductions from Rev. At any rate, there is no trace of the sect after about the end of the 2nd cent. In the Middle Ages the term was sometimes applied to married priests by the upholders of clerical celibacy.

A. von *Harnack, 'The Sect of the Nicolaitans and Nicolaus, the Deacon in Jerusalem', Journal of Religion, 3 (1923), pp. 413–22, esp. pp. 413–17, with refs. to earlier lit.; A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 291–341, with bibl. p. 506. See also comm. on Rev. 2. E. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 499–506. D. F. Watson in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 1106 f.

Nicole, Pierre (1625–95), French theologian, controversialist, and moralist. A native of *Chartres, he studied in *Paris, but did not proceed beyond the degree of baccalaureus which he took in 1649. He went to teach in the 'Petites Écoles' at *Port-Royal, where he formed a close friendship with A. *Arnauld, in collaboration with whom many of his works were written, including the important Logique ou l'Art de penser, commonly known as the Logique de Port-Royal (1662; ed. P. Clair and F. Girbal, 1925); this was influenced by the ideas of St *Augustine, B. *Pascal, and R. *Descartes. A large number of his writings deal with the *Jansenist controversy, but they are more moderate in tone than most Jansenist works. In 1658 he published a Latin translation of Pascal's Lettres provinciales, with additional articles on *Probabilism and the Love of God. He opposed the signature of the formularies (see JANSENISM) in L'Hérésie imaginaire (1664). Against *Calvinist attack he defended Catholic teaching on the *Real Presence and *transubstantiation in two versions of La Perpétuité de la foi de l'Église catholique touchant la Eucharistie (that of 1664, known as La petite Perpétuité, and that in 3 vols., 1669–74, known as La Grande Perpétuité), both written in conjunction with Arnauld. In 1665 he published an Apologie pour les religieuses de Port-Royal. He continued his controversial writings with Préjugés légitimes contre les calvinistes (1671). The first version of his principal work, the Essais de morale, appeared from 1671 to 1678 (4 vols.). He had a pessimistic view of man's fallen nature, and generally advocated both outward and inward withdrawal from the world, though he accepted that those with positions in the world could live a serious Christian life. His spiritual works include the Traité de l'oraison (1679; slightly revised as the Traité de la prière, 1695), which is biased against mysticism. His last work, the Réfutation des principales erreurs des quiétistes (1695), undertaken at the instigation of J.-B. *Bossuet, was directed esp. against M. de *Molinos and Mme *Guyon. His Traité de la grâce générale (2 vols., posthumously pub., 1715), shows a turning away from Jansenist positions; he accepted the orthodox tenets of the universal saving will of God and the sufficiency of grace for all men. He also involved himself in the controversy over the theatre which he condemned on grounds of morality in the treatise 'De la Comédie' included in the combined edition of Les imaginaires and Les Visionnaires (1667; modern edn. of his Traité de la Comédie by G. Couton, 1961).

Life by C. P. Goujet in the Continuation des essais de morale [de P. Nicole], 14 (2 pts., 'Luxembourg', 1732). C. A. Saint-Beuve, Port-Royal (1840–59), bk. 5, chs. 7–8 (ed. M. Leroy, vol. 2, Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 99 [1954], pp. 858–946). Modern studies by E. Thouverez (Paris, 1926), Le Breton Grandmaison (ibid., 1942), and E. D. James [in Eng.] (International Archives of the History of Ideas, Series Minor, 1; The Hague, 1972). D. Graham, '"Courage, j'ai vaincu le monde": Retraite et Engagement dans les Essais de Morale de Pierre Nicole', in J.-J. Demorest and L. Leibacher-Ouvrard (eds.), Pascal, Corneille, Desert, Retraite, Engagement: Actes de Tuscan (Biblio, 17; 1984), pp. 239–58. Bremond, 4 (1920), pp. 418–588. J. Carrevre in DTC 11 (1931), cols. 634–46, s.v.; E. Chédozeau in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 309–18, s.v. See also bibl. to JANSENISM and PORT-ROYAL.

Nicoll, William Robertson (1851–1923), editor. Ordained in 1874 to the Free Church of Scotland, he became minister at Kelso in 1877. In 1885, however, he was compelled through ill-health to resign his charge and go south, and for the rest of his life devoted his energies to successful editorial work, mainly with the assistance of the publishing house of Hodder & Stoughton. From 1885 till his death he edited the Expositor, a semi-popular monthly journal in which he enlisted the help of many leading scholars. From 1886 Nicoll also issued the British Weekly, a penny weekly in which current policy and affairs were discussed from a Christian (mainly Nonconformist) standpoint, Nicoll himself regularly contributing to its columns under the pseudonym of 'Claudius Clear'.

Life and Letters ed. by T. H. Darlow (1925), with bibl. J. *Denney, Letters . . . to W. Robertson Nicoll, 1893–1917 [1920]. J. T. Stoddart in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 636 f.

Nicolò de' Tudeschi. See PANORMITANUS.

Nicomedes, St, early Christian martyr. His name occurs in both the *Gelasian Sacramentary and the *Roman Martyrology under the date 15 Sept., but it is wanting from the oldest MSS of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. From refs. in three 7th-cent. itineraries, it would appear that he was buried in a catacomb on the Via Nomentana near the wall of *Rome. There is mention in the 5th cent. of a titular church at Rome dedicated to him. Nothing certain, however, is known of his date or the circumstances of his death. In the BCP calendar (here 'Nicomede') his feast is observed on 1 June, the date of the dedication of a church at Rome rebuilt in the 7th century.

AASS, Sept. 5 (1755), pp. 5–12. E. Josi in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1863 f., s.v. 'Nicomede, Cimitero di', with bibl. refs. to archaeological papers by G. B. *de Rossi, O. *Marucchi, and others.

Niebuhr, Helmut Richard (1894–1962), American theologian. The younger brother of Reinhold *Niebuhr, he was professor in the Yale Divinity School from 1938 until his death. His thinking was formed under the very diverse influences of K. *Barth and E. *Troeltsch. From Barth he learned to be dissatisfied with the superficialities of liberal theology and stressed the importance of historical revelation. From Troeltsch he learned that every revelation is conditioned by the historical and cultural media in which it finds expression and he analysed the correlations between religious belief and social group in the United States. His writings include The Social Sources of Denominationalism (1929), The Kingdom of God in America (1937), The Meaning of Revelation (1941), Christ and Culture (1951), Radical Monotheism and Western Civilization (1960).

P. Ramsey (ed.), Faith and Ethics: The Theology of H. Richard Niebuhr (New York, 1957), incl. list of his works, pp. 291–9. C. D. Grant, The Center of Value: Value Theory in the Theology of H. Richard Niebuhr (Fort Worth, Tex. [1984]); R. F. Thiemann (ed.), The Legacy of H. Richard Niebuhr (Harvard Theological Monographs, 36; Minneapolis [1991]).

Niebuhr, Reinhold (1892–1971), American theologian and writer on ethical and social problems. A native of Wright City, Mo., he was educated at Elmhurst College (1910) and Yale University (1914), and ordained in 1915. He was pastor at the Bethel Evangelical church of Detroit from 1915 to 1928, when he was appointed professor of Applied Christianity at the *Union Theological Seminary in New York City, remaining there until his retirement in 1960.

Influenced by K. *Barth and even more by E. *Brunner, Niebuhr sought to return to the categories of the biblical revelation and was critical both of liberal theology and of metaphysics. He reinstated the doctrine of original sin and aimed at expounding a 'vital prophetic Christianity'. He differed sharply from Barth in believing that Christianity has a direct prophetical vocation in relation to culture and for a generation his 'Christian realism' exercised an influential critique on American social and political institutions.

Niebuhr's principal work is The Nature and Destiny of Man (*Gifford Lectures for 1939; 2 vols., 1941–3). He also expounded his views in innumerable addresses and essays. His other writings (often collections of papers) include Does Civilization need Religion? (1928), Moral Man and Immoral Society (1932), An Interpretation of Christian Ethics (1936), Beyond Tragedy (1938), Christian Realism and Political Problems (1954), The Self and the Dramas of History (1955), and Man's Nature and his Communities (1965).

C. W. Kegley and R. W. Bretall (eds.), Reinhold Niebuhr: His Religious, Social, and Political Thought (New York, 1956), incl. his 'Intellectual Autobiography', pp. 3–23. R. W. Fox, Reinhold Niebuhr: A Biography (New York, 1986; London, 1988). G. Harland, The Thought of Reinhold Niebuhr (ibid., 1960). D. Lange, Christlicher Glaube und soziale Probleme: Eine Darstellung der Theologie Reinhold Niebuhrs (Gütersloh [1964]), with bibl. N. A. Scott, Jun. (ed.), The Legacy of Reinhold Niebuhr (Chicago and London, 1975); R. Harries (ed.), Reinhold Niebuhr and the Issues of Our Time [1986]. K. Durkin, Reinhold Niebuhr (Outstanding Christian Thinkers Series, 1989). G. Hammar, Christian Realism in Contemporary American Theology: A Study of Reinhold Niebuhr, W. M. Horton, and H. P. Van Dusen (Uppsala, 1940), pp. 167–253. Bibl. by D. B. Robertson (Boston, 1979).

Nieheim, Dietrich of. See DIETRICH OF NIEHEIM.

Niemöller, Martin (1892–1984), German *Lutheran pastor. The son of a Westphalian pastor, he served as a submarine commander during the war of 1914–18. In 1924 he was ordained minister of the Protestant church in Westphalia and in 1931 appointed pastor at Berlin-Dahlem. He at first welcomed National Socialism, but later opposed it on account of its pagan tendencies and supported the '*Confessing Church'. His anti-Nazi religious activities led to his arrest in 1937 and confinement in a concentration camp. Several offers of release were made to him on certain conditions, but he preferred imprisonment to giving up his convictions. A strong character as well as a picturesque personality, he became the symbolical figure of the Protestant opposition to National Socialism. After the Second World War, Niemöller took a leading part in the 'Declaration of Guilt' at Stuttgart. From 1945 to 1956 he was head of the Foreign Relations Department of the *Evangelical Church in Germany and from 1947 to 1964 Kirchenpräsident of the territorial Church of Hesse and Nassau. From the time of its foundation in 1948 he was a member of the Executive Council of the *World Council of Churches and from 1961 to 1968 one of the Presidents of the Council. He opposed the creation of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1949 and in the following decade excited criticism by his increasingly pacifist position.

J. Schmidt, Martin Niemöller im Kirchenkampf (Hamburg, 1971). J. Bentley, Martin Niemöller (Oxford, 1984). K. Robbins, 'Martin Niemöller, the German Church Struggle, and English Opinion', JEH 31 (1970), pp. 149–70.

Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm (1844–1900), German philosopher. The son of a Lutheran pastor in the Prussian province of Saxony, he was educated at the public school of Schulpforta, near Naumburg. In 1864 he went to Bonn University and in the following year to Leipzig, where he studied philology. In 1869 he accepted a professorship at Basle which he resigned in 1879, owing to ill-health. He had already published several books, among them Menschliches, Allzumenschliches (1878; Eng. tr., Human, All too Human, 1911), and now devoted himself entirely to literary activities, writing in quick succession Die fröhliche Wissenschaft (1882); Also sprach Zarathustra (1883–91; Eng. tr., Thus Spake Zarathustra, 1896); Jenseits von Gut und Böse (1886; Eng. tr., Beyond Good and Evil, 1907); Die Genealogie der Moral (1887); Der Antichrist (1888); and Der Wille zur Macht (posthumous, 1901). In the beginning of 1889 Nietzsche lost his reason, and, nursed first by his mother, then by his widowed sister, he died on 25 Aug. 1900 after being an invalid for nearly 12 years.

Nietzsche was a prophet rather than a systematic thinker. His chief work, Zarathustra, written in fine poetic language, consists entirely of aphorisms. In his years at Leipzig he came under the influence of the works of A. *Schopenhauer, whose atheism and depreciation of reason in favour of the will attracted him. On this atheistic and irrational foundation he constructed a philosophy of life by which he claimed to inaugurate a 'transvaluation of all values'. Acc. to this doctrine life is the will to power; but power, not as exercised collectively by the masses, but the power of the great individual whom he calls Übermensch ('superman'). The superman, though an ideal to be realized only in the future, has been adumbrated by personalities like Cesare Borgia and Napoleon; he may be described as a magnified man, disciplined and perfected in both mental and physical strength, serene and pitiless, ruthlessly pursuing his path of success and victory and without moral scruples. In order to make the superman possible the present values which are derived from Christianity must be abolished, since they are the portion of the weak and disinherited 'herd' who, by proclaiming humility, kindness, pity, and the like as virtues, have succeeded in putting themselves into power to the detriment of the strong.

There are several German edns. of Nietzsche's works, of which the best is the 'Musarionausgabe' (23 vols., Munich, 1920–9). Eng. tr. of 'Complete Works' ed. O. Levy in 18 vols., 1909–13. There are several collections of his Letters, from which a selection was pub. in Eng. tr. by O. Levy (New York, etc., 1921). Official Life by E. Förster-Nietzsche, his sister (2 vols. bound in 3, Leipzig, 1895–1904; shorter versions as Der junge Nietzsche (1912; Eng. tr., 1912) and Der einsame Nietzsche (1914; Eng. tr. [1915])). Best Life in Eng. by R. J. Hollingdale (London, 1965); see also that of R. Hayman (ibid., 1980). There are innumerable studies of his philosophy; they include those by F. [C.] Copleston, SJ (Bellarmine Series, 7, London, 1942), W. A. Kaufmann (Princeton, NJ, 1950), F. A. Lea (London, 1957), M. *Heidegger (2 vols., Pfullingen, 1961), J. P. Stern (London, 1978, more substantial, and Cambridge, 1979), and T. Meyer (Tübingen, 1991). P. Valadier, Nietzsche et la critique du Christianisme (1974). H. W. Reichert and K. Schlechta, International Nietzsche Bibliography (University of North Carolina Studies in Comparative Literature, 29; 1960; rev. edn., ibid. 45; 1968). H. Ellis in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 366–70; K. Schlechta in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 1475–9; W. [A.] Kaufmann in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 5 (1967), pp. 504–14.

Nigeria, Christianity in. Nigeria is the most populous country in Africa, with an estimated population of 80 millions, incorporating peoples diverse in language, ethnic group, culture, and religion. It has been a single entity since 1914, when two British protectorates, built up during the later 19th cent., were amalgamated.

The first Christian contact with peoples now included within Nigeria came with *Portuguese missions in coastal parts of Benin and Warri in the 1470s. The *Capuchins took responsibility for these missions in the 16th cent., but they faded with the Portuguese presence. The modern Christian phase dates from the 1840s. Between 1843 and 1845 the *Church Missionary Society and Wesleyan *Methodists entered Yoruba country at the request of Yoruba former slaves who had become Christians in *Sierra Leone and had returned home. In 1846 a mission from Jamaica, led by missionaries of the Scottish Secession (later *United Presbyterian) Church was established in Calabar. It was welcomed as a means to useful education for commerce. Calabar accepted some major social changes at its behest, but long hindered the mission's expansion to trade rivals. The most significant Christian development in Yorubaland was in the Egba state, Abeokuta. There CMS missionaries (incl. S. A. *Crowther, himself an Egba) and the American *Baptists (who arrived in 1850) assisted Egba self-defence and economic betterment. When European missionaries were expelled from Yorubaland in 1867, the Yoruba Church continued with its African missionaries. From 1857 Crowther headed a mission to the Niger and Benue riverine peoples, establishing Churches in the Niger Delta states and among the Niger Igbo. RC work resumed in 1868 when the Society of *African Missions arrived in the British colony of Lagos in 1868, and the *Holy Ghost Fathers in 1885. The former worked mostly W. of the Niger, the latter in Igbo areas E. of it. Between 1905 and 1920 the Igbo, who had strongly resisted British expansion, responded rapidly to Christianity, RCs and Protestants competing to open schools.

Christianity spread widely among S. Nigerian peoples. Disillusionment with missionary acts produced various 'African' Churches in the 1890s, but a major schism was averted. Since the First World War (1914–18) indigenous Churches stressing prophecy and healing (the Yoruba name for them is aladura, 'praying people') have developed a model of the Church distinct from that introduced by missions, but alert to the life-situation of Nigerian worshippers. The period since the Nigerian Civil War (1967–70) has produced many new *charismatic Churches and evangelistic movements. Various Nigerian Churches have missions abroad, incl. Britain and the USA.

By the late 19th cent. Muslim rulers dominated the area N. of the confluence of the rivers Niger and Benue, and most Hausa were Muslim. British imperial rule retained earlier structures, and sometimes excluded or restricted missions in N. Nigeria. Nevertheless CMS and RC missions extended their work to the N. and two major Protestant agencies came into being specifically for this area. The Sudan Interior Mission was non-denominational and international but N. American in ethos; the Evangelical Churches of W. Africa derive from it. The (originally British) Sudan United Mission had a federal structure which enabled Churches from *Denmark, *South Africa, and the *United States of America to work with it; the Fellowship of Churches of Christ in Nigeria comprises eight Churches deriving from it. Christians form a significant minority in N. Nigeria, esp. on the central plateau.

With Christians and Muslims holding dominance in different regions, religion frequently raises political and constitutional issues for the Nigerian secular state. These surfaced during the Civil War and in recurrent crises over shariah law.

J. F. A. Ajayi, Christian Missions in Nigeria 1841–1891: The Making of a new Élite (1965); E. A. Ayandele, The Missionary Impact on Modern Nigeria 1842–1914: A Political and Social Analysis (1966). G. Johnston, Of God and Maxim Guns: Presbyterianism in Nigeria, 1846–1966 (Waterloo, Ont., 1988). G. O. M. Tasie, Christian Missionary Enterprise in the Niger Delta 1864–1918 (Studies on Religion in Africa, 3; Leiden, 1978). F. K. Ekechi, Missionary Enterprise and Rivalry in Igboland 1857–1914 (1972). J. B. Webster, The African Churches among the Yoruba 1888–1922 (Oxford, 1964); H. W. Turner, History of an African Independent Church ... (Aladura) (2 vols., ibid., 1967). E. P. T. Crampton, Christianity in Northern Nigeria (Zaria, 1975; 3rd edn., London, 1979). J. B. Grimley and G. E. Robinson, Church Growth in Central and Southern Nigeria (Grand Rapids [1966]). J. H. Boer, Missionary Messengers of Liberation in a Colonial Context: A Case Study of the Sudan United Mission (Amsterdam Studies in Theology, 1; 1979). E. Isichei (ed.), Varieties of Christian Experience in Nigeria (1982). R. I. J. Hackett (ed.), New Religious Movements in Nigeria (African Studies, 5; Lewiston, NY [1987]). A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994), passim (see index).

Night Office. Another name for *Mattins, the liturgical *Office formerly prescribed for the night.

Nightingale, Florence (1820–1910), reformer of hospital nursing. She was born at Florence, whence her Christian name. At an early age she began to interest herself in nursing, and from *c.*1844 undertook regular hospital visiting. On a journey to Egypt in 1849–50 she studied the nursing system of the Sisters of Charity of St *Vincent de Paul at *Alexandria, and soon afterwards visited T. Fliedner's deaconesses at *Kaiserswerth, where she was trained for several months in 1851. In 1853 she was made head of a hospital for invalid gentlewomen in Harley Street. In 1854 she offered to go to the Crimea to organize the nursing of the sick and wounded English soldiers. She established her headquarters at Scutari, where the barrack hospital was in a state of indescribable neglect; but her indefatigable devotion soon improved conditions and considerably reduced the death-rate. She returned to England in 1856. In recognition of her services the Nightingale School and Home for Nurses was founded at St Thomas's Hospital in 1860, though owing to her weakened health she could take no more than an advisory part in its work. Her experience was also placed at the disposal of the governments concerned in the American Civil War of 1861–4 and the Franco-German War of 1870–1. She took an active interest in the establishment of several nursing societies and in the sanitary reforms carried out in the Indian army as well as among Indians. Her chief work, Notes on Nursing (1859), went through many editions.

Selections of her letters incl. those written in the Crimean War, 1854–6, 'I have done my duty', ed. S. M. Goldie (Manchester [1987]), and Ever Yours, ed. M. Vicinus and B. Nergaard (London, 1989). Lives by E. T. Cook (2 vols., ibid., 1913), M. [L.] Goldsmith (ibid., 1937), and C. [B.] Woodham-Smith (ibid., 1950). F. B. Smith, Florence Nightingale: Reputation and Power [1982]. W. J. Bishop and S. [M.] Goldie, A Bio-Bibliography of Florence Nightingale (1962). S. Paget in DNB, 1901–1911, 3, pp. 15–19.

Nihilianism. The Christological doctrine that Christ, in His human nature, was 'nothing', His essential Being being contained in His Godhead alone. It was defended by a number of 12th-cent. theologians (among them Peter of Poitiers, d. 1205) who claimed to deduce it from the teaching of *Peter Lombard. It was condemned by Pope *Alexander III in 1170 and 1177.

E. Portalié in DTC 1 (1903), cols. 413–18, s.v. 'Adoptianisme [au XII^e siècle]'; G. H. Joyce, SJ, in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 370–2, s.v.

Nikon (1605–81), Patr. of Moscow. After a monastic education he married and became a secular priest, but separated from his wife, who entered a convent, and himself became a monk of the Solovetski monastery on the White Sea. A quarrel with the monks led him to transfer his membership to the Kozheozerski community, of which he became *hegumen (abbot) in 1643. On a journey to Moscow in 1646 the Tsar Alexis appointed him archimandrite of the Novospasskiy monastery at Moscow, and, three years later, Metropolitan of Novgorod; and when, in 1652, the Patr. of Moscow died, he was elected in his place by order of the Tsar. As Patriarch, Nikon at once began important reforms. One of his principal concerns was to carry through a much-needed revision of the Russian liturgy. He sought to bring the prescriptions of the service books into conformity with Greek usages and, taking expert advice, to eradicate many of their long-standing corruptions. He had such details settled as the making of the sign of the cross with three fingers instead of with two and the use of the threefold Alleluia. These reforms, which were carried out with the aid of the civil power, with great rigour, gained the Patriarch many enemies.

From 1652 to 1658 his influence with the Tsar was immense, but in the latter year, probably owing to his claims of complete independence in ecclesiastical matters, he fell from Imperial favour. After his resignation had been accepted by the Tsar, he retired to the monastery of the 'New Jerusalem' which he had founded. In the following years he tried to regain his position, but in 1667, at the Council of Moscow, he was finally deposed and sentenced to banishment. His liturgical reforms were sanctioned, however, and the formation of the schismatical sect of the *Old Believers followed. After 14 years of severe imprisonment Alexis' successor, Feodor II, recalled Nikon to Moscow, but he died on the way and was buried with patriarchal honours. Subsequently all decrees against him were revoked at the bidding of the Tsar.

W. *Palmer, The Patriarch and the Tsar (6 vols., 1871–6), with Eng. tr. of numerous primary docs. The main lit., which is extensive, is in Russian. In Eng. there is a brief Life [by R. Thornton] in Lives of Eminent Russian Prelates (1854), pp. 1–38. P. Meyendorff, Russia, Ritual, and Reform: The Liturgical Reforms of Nikon in the 17th century (Crestwood, NY, 1991). J. Ledit, SJ, in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 646–55, s.v. 'Nicon (1)'. See also works cited under RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN, and OLD BELIEVERS.

Nil Sorsky, St (1433–1508), Russian monk and mystic. Of noble Muscovite family, and for some years a monk of the monastery of St Cyril at Beloozero, in N. Russia, he visited Mt *Athos, where he found his vocation in the contemplative life of *Hesychasm. Returning to Russia, in a forest hermitage not far from Beloozero he introduced a new form of the ascetic monastic life, that of the small group (skit) guided by a spiritual father (starets), for which he wrote a Rule. His ideals were poverty, simplicity, and contemplative prayer; though his influence was eclipsed at the time by that of *Joseph of Volokolamsk, he is regarded as the spiritual founder of the skit and starets in 18th–19th cent. Russia.

F. v. Lilienfeld, Nil Sorskij und seine Schriften (1963), incl. Ger. tr. of his works. Fr. tr. by S. M. Jacamon, OSB, of his writings and of a 19th-cent. Life (Spiritualité orientale, 32; Bégrolles-en-Mauges, 1980). G. A. Maloney, SJ, Russian Hesychasm: The Spirituality of Nil Sorskij (The Hague, 1973; Fr. tr., Spiritualité orientale, 25; 1978).

Nilus the Ascetic, St (d. c.430), Bp. of Ancyra, also (erroneously) known as 'Nilus of Sinai'. Acc. to the traditional account (*Nicephorus Callistus; a set of 'Narrationes' attributed to Nilus; Byzantine *Synaxaria), Nilus was a high officer at the *Constantinopolitan court who with his son, Theodulus, became a hermit on Mt *Sinai. In 410, when the monks were attacked by hordes of robbers, Nilus escaped, but Theodulus was captured and sold into slavery. After many adventures both were ordained by the Bp. of Eleusa in Palestine who sent them back to Sinai.

In modern times this account has been generally rejected (K. Heussi and others). It appears that Nilus was in fact a native of Ancyra who studied at Constantinople, where he became the disciple of St John *Chrysostom. He then became the founder and superior of a monastery near Ancyra, whence he conducted a large correspondence and exerted a wide influence on his contemporaries.

His writings deal mainly with ascetic and moral subjects. They include 'De Monachorum Praestantia', 'De Monastica Exercitatione', 'De Voluntaria Paupertate', and also a collection of 1,061 letters (mainly genuine in substance, but evidently edited in the 6th cent. and provided with often anachronistic headings). The 'Tractatus ad Eulogium' and the 'De Oratione' attributed to him appear to belong to *Evagrius Ponticus, while the 'De Octo Vitiosis Cogitationibus' is a compilation from *Cassian. Nilus' ideal of the spiritual life is a 'Christian philosophy' (φιλοσοφεῖν κατὰ Χριστόν) based on a 'moderated poverty' (μέση ἀκτημοσύνη). Feast day, 12 Nov.

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 79 (unsatisfactory). Crit. edn. of 'Narrationes' by F. Conca (Teub., 1983). Part of a previously unpub. comm. on Songs of Songs, ed. S. Lucà, Augustinianum, 22 (1982), pp. 365–403. Syr. version of some of Nilus' works, ed., with Ital. tr., by P. Bettiolo (Publications de l'Institut orientaliste de Louvain, 30; 1983). Eng. tr. of 'De Monastica Exercitatione' in G. E. H. Palmer, P. Sherrard, and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Philokalia, 1 (1979), pp. 200–50. J. Gribomont, OSB, 'La Tradition manuscrite de saint Nil', Studia Monastica, 11 (1969), pp. 231–67; id., 'L'édition romaine (1673) des Tractatus de S. Nil et l'Ottobonianus gr. 25', in J. Dummer (ed.), Texte und Textkritik (TU 133; 1987), pp. 187–202. F. Degenhart, Der hl. Nilus Sinaita: Sein Leben und seine Lehre vom Mönchtum (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 6; 1915); K. Heussi, Untersuchungen zu Nilus dem Asketen (TU 42, Heft 2; 1917); F. Degenhart, Neue Beiträge zur Nilus-Forschung (1918; reply to preceding work); K. Heussi, Das Nilus Problem (1921; a further reply). J. Henninger, 'Ist der sogenannte Nilus-Bericht eine brauchbare religionsgeschichtliche Quelle?', Anthropos, 1 (1955), pp. 81–148. Alan Cameron, 'The Authenticity of the Letters of St Nilus of Ancyra', Greek, Roman and Byzantine Studies, 17 (1976), pp. 181–96. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 161–78; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 334 and 618. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 496–504. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 173–82 (nos. 6043–84). M. T. Disdier in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 661–74; M.-G. Guérard in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 345–56, s.v. 'Nil d'Ancyre'.

nimbus. See HALO.

Nimrod. Acc. to Gen. 10: 8–10 Nimrod was the first of the 'heroes' and a 'mighty hunter before the Lord', and founded the Assyrian Empire. In Babylonian mythology he is paralleled by the figure of *Gilgamesh, the tyrant of Erech. The only other references to him in the Bible are at 1 Chron. 1: 10 and Mic. 5: 6.

Nine Fridays. See FIRST FRIDAYS.

Nineveh, Fast of. A pre-*Lenten fast of three or four days kept esp. in several Eastern Churches (*Church of the East, *Syrian, *Coptic and *Armenian Orthodox). It is observed in the third week before Lent, except in the Armenian Church, where it immediately precedes the Lenten fast.

Ninian, St (5th or 6th cent.), British missionary. *Bede reports that before St *Columba (in Scotland 563–97) converted the N. Picts, Ninian had been active among the S. Picts. He describes Ninian as a bishop, 'a Briton who had received orthodox instruction at Rome', and states that he built a stone church dedicated to St *Martin of Tours (d. 397) at a place called 'Ad Candidam Casam' (At the White House), now Whithorn (S. of Wigtown), where he was buried. In the Middle Ages Ninian's tomb became a place of pilgrimage. His dates are uncertain. An 8th-cent. poem, the Miracula Nynie Episcopi, makes him contemporary with a local king called Tudwal, and there was a king of that name at Dumbarton *c.*550. The suggestion that Ninian visited St Martin on his way back from Rome derives from a largely unreliable Life by St *Ailred (d. 1167). Feast day, 16 Sept.

Bede, HE 3. 4 (notes in edn. by C. Plummer, 2, Oxford, 1896, pp. 128–30 or comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, Oxford, 1988, p. 92, with refs.). Miracula Nynie Episcopi, ed., with Eng. tr., by W. W. MacQueen in Transactions of the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Natural History and Antiquarian Society, 3rd ser. 38 (1961), pp. 21–57; Ailred's Life, ed. A. P. *Forbes, Lives of S. Ninian and S. Kentigern (Historians of Scotland, 5; 1874), pp. 137–57, with Eng. tr. pp. 3–26. W. D. Simpson, Saint Ninian and the Origins of the Christian Church in Scotland (1940); N. K. Chadwick, 'St. Ninian: A Preliminary Study of Sources', Transactions of the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Natural History and Antiquarian Society, 3rd ser. 27 (1950), pp. 9–53; J. MacQueen, St Nynia: A Study of Literary and Linguistic Evidence (1961); A. Macquarrie, 'The Date of Saint Ninian's Mission: A Reappraisal', Scottish Church History Society Records, 33 (1987), pp. 1–25.

Nisan. The opening month in the Jewish year, roughly corresponding to April. It was the month in which the *Passover was held, the Passover Lamb being slain in the afternoon of the 14th day of Nisan. The name appears to be Babylonian (Akkadian nisannu) and to have been substituted by the Jews from the time of the Exile (6th cent. BC) for its older Hebrew name of 'Abib' (found, e.g. in Exod. 13: 4).

Nitrian Desert. The region between *Alexandria and Cairo lying W. of the mouths of the Nile, and celebrated as a centre of early Christian monasticism. Since 1964 there have been excavations at the site of the Kellia (N. of Wadi Natroun). In the latter part of the 4th cent. an enormous colony of hermits was founded here, chiefly under the influence of Ammon, one of the *Tall Brothers. Of the still extant Coptic monasteries in Wadi Natroun, one, the 'Der es Suryan', i.e. the 'Monastery of the Syrians', formerly possessed a valuable collection of *Syriac MSS which were acquired partly by the *Assemani for the *Vatican Library (in 1707 and 1745), partly by H. *Tattam (1841 and 1843) and W. *Cureton (1847) for the British Museum.

H. G. E. White, The History of the Monasteries of Nitria and of Scetis, ed. W. Hauser (The Monasteries of the Wâdi 'n Natrûn, 2; Publications of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Egyptian Expedition, 7; New York, 1932). F. Daumas and A. Guillaumont, Kelia I, Kom 219 (Fouilles de l'Institut Français d'Archéologie Orientale de Caire, 28; 2 vols., 1969); further accounts of excavations at the Kellia by R. Kasser (Recherches Suisse d'Archéologie Copte, 1–2, Geneva, 1967–72; and 2 vols., Louvain, 1983). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Oxford, 1966), passim.

Nitzsch, Karl Immanuel (1787–1868), German *Lutheran theologian. Educated at Schulpforta and *Wittenberg, he became Privatdozent of theology in 1810 and assistant preacher at the Schlosskirche at Wittenberg in 1811. In 1822 he accepted a professorship at Bonn university, and in 1847 was called to Berlin to succeed P. K. *Marheineke; here he was made provost of the Nicolaikirche in 1854. His principal works are the System der christlichen Lehre (1829; Eng. tr. by R. Montgomery and J. Hennen, 1849) and Praktische Theologie (1847–1867). Nitzsch is one of the chief representatives of the German '*Vermittlungstheologie'. As an opponent of contemporary unbelieving rationalism he rejected a purely speculative interpretation of Christianity and emphasized esp. the immediacy of religious feeling, which, acc. to him, produces the foundations of religious knowledge. As a member of the Supreme Church Council he was an active promoter of the Evangelical Union of the Prussian Churches (1817).

Life by W. *Beyschlag (Berlin, 1872). H. Theurich, Theorie und Praxis der Predigt bei Carl Immanuel Nitzsch (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 16; Göttingen, 1975). H. Theurich in TRE 24 (1995), pp. 576–81, s.v.

Noah (or Noe). A son of Lamech, and tenth in descent from *Adam. Acc. to the story in *Genesis (6–9), Noah and his family alone were saved in an ark of gopher-wood, when the rest of mankind were destroyed in the *Flood. He took with him into the ark specimens of all kinds of living creatures whereby the species were providentially preserved. From Noah, therefore, the entire surviving human race descended, through his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. To Noah is also attributed the discovery of viticulture (Gen. 9: 20).

Other races have traditions of a great flood in very early times. In Babylonian mythology the figure of Utnapishtim corresponds to Noah in the biblical account, while in classical literature the story of Noah is closely paralleled by the legend of Deucalion. See also GILGAMESH, EPICS OF.

J. Fink, Noe der Gerechte in der frühchristlichen Kunst (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 4; 1955). J. P. Lewis, A Study of the Interpretation of Noah and the Flood in Jewish and Christian Literature (Leiden, 1968), esp. pp. 3–41, 121–55. L. R. Bailey, Noah: The Person and the Story in History and Tradition (Columbia, SC [1989]). P. Lundberg, La Typologie baptismale dans l'ancienne Église (Acta Seminarii Neotestamenticii Upsaliensis, 10; Leipzig and Uppsala, 1942), pp. 73–116; J. *Daniélou, SJ, Sacramentum Futuri: Études sur les origines de la typologie biblique (Études de Théologie Historique, 1950), pp. 55–94; Eng. tr. (1960), pp. 69–112. See also comm. to GENESIS cited s.v., and bibl. to ARK and FLOOD.

Noailles, L. A. de. See DE NOAILLES, L. A.

Nobili, Robert de. See DE NOBILI, ROBERT.

Nobis quoque peccatoribus (Lat., 'To us sinners, also'). The opening words of the section of the Roman *Canon of the Mass in which the celebrant prays for admission into the company of the saints, several of whom he mentions by name. In the *Ambrosian rite the words are in the variant form 'Nobis quoque minimis et peccatoribus'.

V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), pp. 34–8 and 189–199, who defends the improbable thesis that the Nobis quoque peccatoribus, like Communicantes, was first introduced into the Roman Canon by Pope *Gelasius I (492–6). N. J. Abercrombie, 'Nobis quoque in the Roman Canon Missae', JTS NS 4 (1953), pp. 49 f. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 309–22; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 248–59.

Noble Guard. The bodyguard, consisting in all of 77 men of noble rank, which used to attend on the Pope at public functions. They were instituted by *Pius VII in 1801, but owing to political difficulties they did not come into effective being till later. They received the basis of their final constitution in 1815; they were disbanded in 1970. They wore impressive military uniform, and their commander was always a Roman prince. See PALATINE and SWISS GUARD.

G. Felice in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1203 f., s.v. 'Guardia nobile pontificia', with bibl. and illustr.

Nocturn. A division of the traditional 'night *office' (*Mattins, q.v.) of the W. Church. In the 1568 Roman Breviary, on Sundays and all feasts above the rank of a *Simple, and in the Office of the Dead, there were three Nocturns. The first Nocturn on Sundays consisted of twelve Psalms in groups of four with one *antiphon for each group, the second two of three Psalms with an antiphon for each Psalm; after the Psalms a versicle, Pater Noster, and a short prayer called 'Absolutio', and then three readings, each preceded by a blessing of the reader and followed by a *responsory (except for the last reading which was followed by the *Te Deum). The readings for the first Nocturn were always taken from the Bible, those of the second were patristic or from the Lives of the saints, and those of the third came from a homily on the Gospel of the day. On simple feasts and weekdays there was only one Nocturn of twelve Psalms, with an antiphon for every two Psalms (reduced by *Pius X to nine Psalms and nine antiphons), and three readings (from the Bible on weekdays and from the Bible and the Lives of saints on feasts); during the *Octaves of *Easter and *Pentecost there were only three Psalms and three readings. In the *Monastic Breviary there were two Nocturns with six Psalms each on weekdays, and on Sundays and feasts three Nocturns with twelve Psalms in all, three Canticles, and twelve readings, followed by a Gospel reading by the Abbot. In some monastic uses, the term 'Nocturn' was applied to the whole of the office known elsewhere as 'Mattins' or '*Vigils'.

Noetics (from Gk. νοητικός, 'pertaining to the mind or intellect'). A term applied to an early 19th-cent. group of thinkers, Whigs in politics, who were members of the Senior Common Room of Oriel College, Oxford. The chief were E. *Copleston and E. *Hawkins (successively Provosts of Oriel College), R. *Whately, and R. D. *Hampden. They freely criticized traditional religious orthodoxy, and sought to increase the comprehensiveness of the C of E. The later Noetics came into sharp conflict with the *Tractarians.

W. Tuckwell, Pre-Tractarian Oxford: A Reminiscence of the Oriel 'Noetics' (1909); R. Brent, Liberal Anglican Politics: Whiggery, Religion, and Reform 1830–1841 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1987), esp. pp. 144–83 and 247 f. H. C. G. Matthew, 'Noetics, Tractarians and the Reform of the University of Oxford in the Nineteenth Century', History of Universities, 9 (1991), pp. 195–225.

Noetus (*c.*200), heretic. Our knowledge of him comes chiefly from *Hippolytus (Haer. 9. 7–10; Cont. Noetum), acc. to whom he was a native of Smyrna. He was probably the first to teach *Patripassian doctrines—that it was God the Father who in the Incarnation was born, suffered, and died. He also rejected the Logos doctrine, admitted only a purely allegorical interpretation of the Prologue of St John's Gospel, and accused his opponents of ditheism. He was condemned by an assembly of presbyters at Smyrna *c.*200. Hippolytus asserts also that through his disciple, Epigonus, Patripassian teaching made its way from Asia Minor to Rome.

Further refs. in Hippolytus, Haer. 9. 2, and 10. 27; *Epiphanius, Haer. 57; and *Theodoret, Haer. Fab. 3. 3. Crit. text of Hippolytus, Contra Noetum, with discussion (much challenged), by P. Nautin (Paris, 1949); also ed., with Eng. tr., by R. Butterworth, SJ (Heythrop Monographs, 2; 1977). A. Pourkier, L'hérésiologie chez Épiphane de Salamine (Christianisme Antique, 4 [1992]), pp. 115–46. For further bibl. see under MONARCHIANISM.

Nolascans. An alternative name for the *Mercedarians (q.v.).

Nominalism. The theory of language which emphasizes the nature of universal concepts as names of human imposition. In the controversy on *universals, partly occasioned by the famous text in *Porphyry's 'Isagoge', which occupied medieval philosophers esp. in the 11th and 12th cents., a form of Nominalism was first evolved by *Roscelin and later by *Abelard. It was directed against the Platonist *Realists who held that universals, such as genus and species, had a separate existence apart from the individuals which are tributary to them. In opposition to this teaching, Roscelin carried the denial of the unity of species to a point which led him to be accused of *Tritheism. Abelard, on the other hand, though severely criticizing the doctrine of the separate existence of the universals, which he calls 'names' ('voces', 'nomina'), as opposed to 'things' ('res'), does not seem to have denied that the resemblances among individual things justify the use of universals for establishing knowledge, so that he has often been represented as a forerunner of Moderate Realism rather than as a Nominalist properly so called.

A different form of Nominalism appeared in the 14th cent.; this is usually associated with *William of Ockham. He asserted that the universal is not found at all in reality, but only in the human mind ('in anima'), for every substance is radically individual. Acc. to him the resemblance between two men does not lead to the conclusion that they share a common nature; universals are only ways of conceiving or knowing individual things. Thus our first knowledge is an intuition of the individual, accompanying sensation. In its application to theology, which was made by Ockham himself, but more esp. by Gabriel *Biel, Nominalism, which conceives God exclusively as omnipotence and mercy, denies the plurality of His attributes and the distinction between His Intellect and His Will. It simplifies His Being to such a degree that the reality of the Three Persons which depends on formal distinctions and real relations can be accepted only on the authority of faith. Nor can reason demonstrate that the First Cause of the existing universe is the One God. Thus Nominalism in its theological consequences withdrew almost all the data of faith from the realm of reason and paved the way for the disintegration of Scholasticism.

J. Reiners, Der Nominalismus in der Frühscholastik (BGPM 8. 5; 1910). M. H. Carré, Realists and Nominalists (Oxford, 1946). W. J. Courtenay, 'Nominales and Nominalism in the Twelfth Century', in J. Jolivet and others (eds.), Lectionum Varietates: Hommage à Paul Vignaux (Études de philosophie médiévale, 65; 1991), pp. 11–48. P. Vignaux, Nominalisme au XIV^e siècle (Conférence Albert-le-Grand, 1948; Montreal and Paris, 1948). E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 499–520. A. Vigneaux in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 717–84; G. Küng in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 483–6, with bibl. See also bibl. to WILLIAM OF OCKHAM and BIEL, G.

Nomocanon (Gk. νόμος, 'a law', and κανών, 'canon'). In the E. Church, a collection of ecclesiastical canons and Imperial laws, arranged acc. to subject-matter. The earliest (*c.*600) derives from *John Scholasticus (q.v.). This is a later conflation (set out under 50 headings) of two legal collections, themselves compiled by John: (1) a collection of canons arranged in 50 tituli, the outline of which is preserved in all subsequent editions of the Nomocanon; (2) a collection of Imperial laws arranged in 87 capitula.

Non Expedit (Lat., 'It is not expedient'). The name given, from its opening words, to an official RC decree, issued on 29 Feb. 1868, forbidding Catholics in Italy to take part in the polling at civil elections. Its object was to counter the threat to the territorial possessions of the Papacy from the movement for a united Italy.

U. Benigni in CE 11 (1911), pp. 98 f., s.v.; R. Mori in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 486 f., s.v.; both with bibl., but neither gives ref. to text.

Nonconformists' Chapels Act 1844. In the face of disputes between *Presbyterians and *Unitarians, the Act laid down that where no particular religious doctrine or mode of worship was prescribed by the trust deed, the usage of the congregation for the past 25 years was to be taken as conclusive evidence of what might properly be done in meeting-houses. It was repealed by the Charities Act 1960. See also UNITARIANISM.

The Act, entitled 'An Act for the Regulation of Suits Relating to Meeting Houses and other such Property held for religious Purposes by Persons dissenting from the United Church of England and Ireland', is pr. in The Statutes of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, 7 & 8 Victoria (1844), pp. 239 f. (cap. 45).

Nonconformity. Refusal to conform to the doctrines, polity, or discipline of any Established Church. The term was originally used in the 17th cent. of those who, while at first agreeing with the doctrines of the C of E, nevertheless refused to conform to its discipline and practice, esp. in matters of ceremony. The execution of the 1662 Act of *Uniformity (q.v.) led to the Bartholomean Exodus, which marked the formal beginnings of Nonconformity. The word is now applied generally to all dissenters, esp. those of Protestant sympathies. Among the groups to whom the term is commonly applied are the *Presbyterians (in England) and the *Congregationalists (now mainly united in the *United Reformed Church), the *Methodists, *Quakers, and *Baptists (qq.v.).

[D.] H. [M.] Davies, The English Free Churches (HUL, 1952); E. [R.] Routley, English Religious Dissent (Cambridge, 1960); P. Sangster, A History of the Free Churches (1983). G. L. Turner (ed.), Original Records of Early Nonconformity under Persecution and Indulgence (3 vols., 1911–14). A. G. Matthews, *Calamy Revised: Being a revision of Edmund Calamy's Account of the Ministers and others ejected and silenced, 1660 2 (1934). M. R. Watts, The Dissenters, 1: From the Reformation to the French Revolution (Oxford [1978]); 2: The Expansion of Evangelical Nonconformity (ibid., 1995). E. A. Payne, The Free Church Tradition in the Life of England (1944); [J.] C. [G.] Binfield, So Down to Prayers: Studies in English Nonconformity 1780 1920 (1977); J. Munson, The Nonconformists: In Search of a Lost Culture (1991). J. W. Grant, Free Churchmanship in England, 1870–1940, with special reference to Congregationalism [1955]. D. M. Thompson (ed.), Nonconformity in the Nineteenth Century (1972). H. McLachlan, English Education under the Test Acts being the History of the Nonconformist Academies, 1662–1820 (Publications of the University of Manchester, no. 213; Historical Series, no. 59; 1931). N. H. Keeble, The Literary Culture of Nonconformity in Later Seventeenth-Century England (Leicester, 1987), passim. D. [A.] Davie, A Gathered Church: The Literature of the English Dissenting Interest, 1700–1930 (Clark Lectures, 1976; 1978). W. F. Adeney in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 381–93, s.v.; T. F. Glasson in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 403–22, s.v. See also bibl. to SEPARATISTS and the various Nonconforming bodies.

None. The last of the 'Little Hours' of the Divine *Office, appointed to be recited at the ninth hour, i.e. 3 p.m. In many orders it came to be said either immediately after the principal Mass (hence 'noon') or together with the other Little Hours. For the structure of the service, see TERCE, SEXT, NONE.

Nonjurors, English. The title is used of members of the C of E who after 1688 scrupled to take the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy to William and Mary on the grounds that by so doing they would break their previous Oaths to *James II and his successors. They numbered nine bishops and some 400 priests, who were deprived of their livings, as well as a number of prominent laymen. The deprived bishops were Abp. W. *Sancroft of *Canterbury and Bps. T. *Ken of *Bath and Wells, F. Turner of *Ely, T. White of *Peterborough, W. Lloyd of *Norwich, R. Frampton of *Gloucester, J. Lake of *Chichester, W. Thomas of *Worcester, and T. Cartwright of *Chester, the last three of whom died before the sentence of deprivation against them could be carried out (1689). Since all were deprived by Act of Parliament and their successors appointed in the same way, with no attempt at canonical sentence, the Nonjuring clergy still regarded them as their lawful bishops, and many of the conforming clergy (including R. *South, J. *Sharp, and W. *Beveridge) refused to accept their sees as being irregularly vacated. To ensure the succession of Nonjuring Bishops, Sancroft delegated his archiepiscopal powers to Lloyd on 9 Feb. 1692, and in 1694 G. Hickes and T. Wagstaffe were secretly consecrated (with the respective titles of Thetford and Ipswich) after the congé d'élire had been received from the exiled James II. The *Abjuration Oath of 1701 and the Hanoverian succession in 1714 also helped to perpetuate the schism. Some Nonjurors, however, believed that legitimate grounds for schism ceased with the death of the last deprived bishop; these, led by H. *Dodwell, rejoined the C of E in 1711. The Nonjurors were divided on the question of the lawfulness of worshipping in their parish church; the majority preferred their own services, which were, of course, illegal. In 1716, after the death of Hickes, the controversy between *Usagers (q.v.) and Non-Usagers over questions of ritual produced a serious division which was not healed till 1732. From 1716 to 1725 they carried on abortive negotiations for union with the E. Churches. In addition to internal dissensions, the fear of a restoration of the Stuarts, esp. in the early Hanoverian period, considerably weakened their position. The last of the regular line of bishops, Robert Gordon, died in 1779, and, though an irregular line continued until the death of Charles Booth in 1805, during the latter part of the 18th cent. the Nonjurors virtually disappeared through absorption into the Established Church. Their guiding principles had been the sanctity of the Oath and the distinctive Anglican doctrine of the *Divine Right of Kings and the duty of passive obedience. They held a high conception of the Church as a spiritual society with its own laws, and laid particular emphasis on the external forms of worship, which tendencies link them with the *Caroline divines of the 17th and the *Tractarians of the 19th cents. They produced a number of good devotional writers. Among their more distinguished clergy were J. *Kettlewell, C. *Leslie, and W. *Law, well-known laymen being H. Dodwell and T. *Hearne.

T. Lathbury, A History of the Nonjurors (1845); J. H. Overton, The Nonjurors (1902); H. Broxap, The Later Nonjurors (1924). L. M. Hawkins, Allegiance in Church and State: The Problem of the Non-jurors in the English Revolution (Studies in Economics and Political Science, 97; 1928). M. Goldie, 'The Nonjurors, Episcopacy, and the Origins of the Convocation Controversy', in E. Cruickshanks (ed.), Ideology and Conspiracy: Aspects of Jacobitism, 1689–1759 (Edinburgh [1982]), pp. 15–35. Correspondence between the Orthodox patriarchs and the Nonjuring bishops, ed., with introd., by G. Williams, The Orthodox Church of the East in the Eighteenth Century (1868), and by L. Petit, AA, in Mansi, 37 (1905), cols. 369–624. The Nonjurors' liturgies of 1718 and 1734 are pr. by W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (*Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), pp. 273–316, with comm., pp. 71–135. S. L. Ollard in DECH (1912), pp. 410–14, s.v.; C. J. B. Gaskoin in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 294–6, s.v.

Nonnus of Panopolis (b. *c.*400), poet. Beyond the fact that he came from Panopolis (the modern Akhmîn) in Egypt, nothing is known of his life. He seems to have written two Greek poems in hexameters, the one, Διονυσιακά, a descriptive account of the journey of the god Dionysus to India, and the other a 'Paraphrase' (μεταβολή) of the Fourth Gospel'. The latter, of which only part (3,750 lines) has survived, has a certain value for the light it throws on the text of the Bible, but is otherwise of scant interest.

Crit. texts of 'Paraphrase' ed. A. Scheindler (Teub., 1881) and of 'Dionysiaca' ed. R. Keydell (2 vols., Berlin, 1959), and, with Fr. tr., by F. Vian and others (Collection des Universités de France, 1976 ff.); also with Eng. tr. by W. H. D. Rouse and notes by H. J. Rose and L. R. Lind (3 vols., Loeb, 1940); the 'Paraphrase', repr. from edn. by D. Heinsius (Leiden, 1627), also in J. P. Migne, PG 43. 749–920. W. Peek and others, Lexikon zu den Dionysiaka des Nonnos (Berlin, 1968–75). R. Janssen, Das Johannes-Evangelium nach der Paraphrase des Nonnus Panopolitanus (TU 23, Heft 4; 1903). J. Golega, Studien über die Evangelien-Dichtung des Nonnus von Panopolis (1930). G. d'Ippolito, Studi nonniani: L'epillio nelle Dionisiache (Palermo, 1964). W. Fauth, Eidos Poikilon: Zur Thematik der Metamorphose und zum Prinzip der Wandlung aus dem Gegensatz in den Dionysiaka des Nonnos von Panopolis (Hypomnemeta, 66; Göttingen, 1981). C. A. Trypanis, Greek Poetry from Homer to Seferis (1981), pp. 392–5. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 114–16. R. Keydell in PW 17 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 904–20.

Norbert, St (*c.*1080–1134), founder of the *Premonstratensians and Abp. of Magdeburg. The younger son of a noble family of Xanten, Norbert early became subdeacon and canon of St Victor's in his native town, but led a worldly life at the courts of Abp. Frederick I of Cologne and the Emp. Henry V. Having avoided the priesthood and declined the bishopric of Cambrai in 1113, he was converted in 1115 when in danger of death during a thunderstorm. After some time in retirement at the abbey of Siegburg near Cologne, whose Abbot Cuno became his spiritual director, he was ordained priest in the same year, and, having taken the monastic habit, endeavoured to reform his brother canons at Xanten. These, who resented his zeal, accused him at the Synod of Fritzlar in 1118 of making innovations and of preaching without authorization; and in reply he resigned his canonry, sold his property, and went to Pope Gelasius II at St-Gilles in Languedoc. After the Pope had given him permission to preach wherever he wished, he travelled as an itinerant preacher through N. France and soon became renowned for his eloquence and his miracles. In 1120, supported by Bartholomew, Bp. of Laon, he founded the Order of the Premonstratensians in the valley of Prémontré. He travelled in France, Belgium, and Germany, preaching everywhere, and successfully fighting the heresy of Tanchelm at Antwerp (1124). Early in 1126 he obtained at Rome the recognition of his order from Pope Honorius II, and in the same year was appointed Abp. of Magdeburg. His zeal for the reformation of his clergy and the recovery of alienated Church property made him many enemies and led to attempts against his life; but he won the confidence and favour of the Emp. Lothair II and accompanied him in 1132–3 to Rome, where he supported Innocent II against the antipope, Anacletus. He also prevented the outbreak of fresh quarrels about *Investiture, in recognition of which service the Pope extended his metropolitan jurisdiction to the whole of Poland. In 1133 Lothair made him Chancellor for Italy, but he remained in the country for only a short time. He died in the following year. In 1582 he was canonized by *Gregory XIII. Feast day, 6 June.

The principal authority is a Life written between 1157 and 1161, falsely attributed to Hugh of Prémontré, ed. R. Wilmans in MGH, Scriptores, 12 (1856), pp. 663–706; excerpts, from a later redaction, in AASS, Jun. 1 (1695), pp. 819–58. R. Rosenmund, Die ältesten Biographieen des heiligen Norbert (1874). Modern Lives by G. Madelaine, O.Praem. (Lille, 1886; 3rd edn., 2 vols., Tongerloo, 1928) and F. A. Žák, O.Praem. (Vienna, 1900). W. M. Grauwen, O.Praem., Norbertus Aartsbisschop van Maagdenburg (1126 1134) (Verhandelingen van de koninklijke Academie voor Wetenschappen, Letteren en Schone Kunsten van België, Klasse der Letteren, no. 86; 1978), with summary in Eng. and full bibl. F. Petit [O.Praem.], Norbert et l'origine des Prémontrés (1981). P. Lefèvre, O.Praem., 'L'Épisode de la conversion de S. Norbert et la tradition hagiographique du "vita Norberti" ', RHE 56 (1961), pp. 813–26.

Noris, Henry (1631–1704), cardinal and theologian. The descendant of an English family, he studied with the *Jesuits at Rimini, where he entered the Order of *Augustinian Hermits out of devotion to St *Augustine. From the age of 27 he taught theology and Church history at Pesaro and Perugia, and from 1674 to 1692 at Padua. In 1692 Innocent XII called him to Rome, making him First Custodian of the *Vatican Library and, in 1695, creating him cardinal. His most important work is the Historia Pelagiana et Dissertatio de Synodo V Oecumenica (1673), a history of the *Pelagian controversy, followed by a defence of the Augustinian doctrine of grace (against that held by L. de *Molina). The book, though approved by the Holy See, raised a great deal of controversy, and, in 1676, was denounced to the Holy Office for renewing the errors of M. *Baius and C. O. *Jansen. Noris was acquitted of heresy, but 40 years after his death the Spanish *Inquisition renewed the accusation, placing the book on the *Index. His teaching was finally rehabilitated in 1748 by *Benedict XIV, who ordered Noris's books to be removed from the Index.

Collected works ed. P. and G. *Ballerini (4 vols., Verona, 1729–32), with Life in vol. 4, pp. xiii–xlii; suppl. of letters in Ital. (Padua, 1741). M. K. Wernicke, Kardinal Enrico Noris und seine Verteidigung Augustins (Cassiciacum, 28; Würzburg, 1973). F. Rojo, OSA, 'Ensayo bibliográfico de Noris, Bellelli y Berti', Analecta Augustiniana, 26 (1963), pp. 294–363, esp. pp. 296–330. F. Bonnard in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 796–802.

Norris, John (1657–1712), English divine. He is generally reckoned the last of the *Cambridge Platonists. Educated at Winchester and Exeter College, Oxford, and later elected to a Fellowship at All Souls, he became rector of Newton St Loe, Somerset, in 1689. From 1692 until his death he was rector of Bemerton. His philosophy was mainly derived from the writings of N. *Malebranche, whose Recherche de la vérité (1674) made a great impression on him. Like Malebranche, he combined Cartesianism with a Platonic mysticism. His most elaborate work, his Essay towards the Theory of the Ideal or Intelligible World (2 vols., 1701, 1704), though tedious in its style, contained some penetrating criticisms of J. *Locke's Essay (1690). His other writings include an Account of Reason and Faith (1697), a reply to the *Deistic doctrines of J. *Toland's Christianity not Mysterious (1690).

In 1687 Norris issued A Collection of Miscellanies. Modern repr. of his Cursory Reflections upon a Book call'd An Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690), with introd. by G. D. McEwen (Augustan Reprint Society, 93; 1961). R. Acworth, The Philosophy of John Norris of Bemerton (1657–1712) (Studien und Materialien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, Kleine Reihe, 6; Hildesheim and New York, 1979). [F.] J. Hoyles, The Waning of the Renaissance 1640–1740 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 39; The Hague, 1971), pp. 75–139. L. Stephen in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 132–4.

'North End'. The position sometimes adopted at the Communion table by the celebrant of the *Eucharist in the C of E. It has been held to be required by certain rubrics in the BCP (see EASTWARD POSITION). It is now confined to pronounced Evangelicals; but where adopted, its use is generally defended with vigour on the ground that it rules out any ascription of a priestly or mediatorial function to the celebrant. Until comparatively recently, however, it was not a mark of doctrinal belief, such High Churchmen as C. *Wheatly and E. B. *Pusey having celebrated at the North End.

North India, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 29 Nov. 1970 by the union of six Christian bodies: the *Anglican Church of *India, Pakistan, and Ceylon in respect of 13 dioceses; the United Church of North India, itself a union of *Congregationalists and *Presbyterians dating from 1924; the circuits of the *Methodist Church linked with Britain and Australia; the *Baptists; the Church of the Brethren, which originated in Germany and was brought to India by American missionaries in 1895; and the *Disciples of Christ. The union, which was the fruit of negotiations extending back to a historic meeting at Tranquebar in 1919, was achieved by the act of a representative of each of the Churches involved reading his Church's resolutions of acceptance and assent to the Plan of Union. Thereafter, during the same inaugural Eucharist, six representative ministers from the united Church were joined by four ministers, one each from the *Mar Thoma Syrian Church, the Church of *South India, the Presbyterian Church of Assam, and a Baptist; these ten laid hands on each of three chosen ministers from the uniting Churches, who then jointly laid hands on all the other representative clergy present, thus uniting the ministries. Seven new bishops were consecrated next day by bishops from the Mar Thoma Church, the Church of South India, and a former Anglican bishop from the Church of North India. The C of E entered into full communion with the Church of North India in 1972. Though the Church of North India is not part of the Anglican Communion, it is a member of the Anglican Consultative Council, and its Moderator is invited to meetings of the Anglican Primates and to *Lambeth Conferences.

Norway, Christianity in. From about the middle of the 10th cent. Christianity seems to have been gradually introduced into the country, sometimes with royal support. This took the form of building churches, legislation, and securing conversions at the point of the sword. After the death of St *Olav (d. 1030), there is no record of 'heathen' opposition. The missionaries appear to have been mainly English, as the country's Christian vocabulary and liturgical books are of English origin. It was also an English legate, Card. Nicholas Breakspear (the future Pope *Hadrian IV) who made Nidaros (Trondheim) an archbishopric with jurisdiction over the other Norwegian dioceses and also over *Sodor and Man, the Orkneys, the Faeroe Islands, *Iceland, and Greenland. This arrangement was breaking down in the later Middle Ages, but it came to an end only in 1537, when the Reformation was imposed by Danish conquerors, who annexed the country. *Lutheranism became the state religion, in the radical form favoured by *Denmark rather than the more moderate form adopted by *Sweden, and no other form of religion was recognized until 1845. By then (since 1814) Norway was united with Sweden, recovering its independence in 1905. From the middle of the 19th cent. much of the country's religious activity has been influenced by a Low Church *Pietism, largely inspired by the lay preacher, Hans N. Hauge (1771–1824). Religious dissent has spread, finding expression particularly in groups of Anglo-Saxon origin (*Methodists, *Baptists, *Pentecostalists, and after the 1939–45 War also *Jehovah's Witnesses and *Mormons). During the German occupation of 1940–5, the Church was a focus of resistance under the leadership of E. *Berggrav, Bp. of Oslo. Since then, the importance of Christianity in Norway has been in decline, and Baptism is no longer sought as a matter of course. The RC Church was introduced into the country in 1843 and has gained some acceptance, esp. since 1945, thanks to intellectual converts and immigrant refugees.

J. R. Keyser, Den Norske Kirkes Historie under Katholicismen (2 vols., Kristiania, 1856–8). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia: Eine Sammlung von Selbstdarstellungen der christlichen Kirchen, Bd. 2, fasc. 6 (1936). C. F. Wisløff and A. Aarflot, Norsk Kirkehistorie (3 vols., Oslo, 1966–71). E. Molland, Fra Hans Nielsen Hauge til Eivind Berggrav (ibid., 1951; 3rd edn., 1972; Eng. tr., Church Life in Norway 1800–1950, Minneapolis [1957]); id., Norges Kirkehistorie i det 19. århundre (2 vols., Oslo, 1979). B. Hoye and T. M. Ager, The Fight of the Norwegian Church against Nazism (New York, 1943). J. W. Gran and others (eds.), Den Katoliske Kirke i Norge (Oslo, 1993). H. Rieber-Mohn, OP, 'Catholicism in Norway since the Reformation (1537–1958)', Month, NS 21 (1959), pp. 69–88; O. Garstein, 'The Reformation in Norway', ibid., pp. 95–103. L. S. Hunter (ed.), Scandinavian Churches: A Picture of the Development of the Life of the Churches of Denmark, Finland, Iceland, Norway and Sweden (1965).

Norwich. Although Earpwald, King of East Anglia (d. *c.*628), embraced the Christian faith, the real conversion of the country dates from the reign (*c.*630–4) of his half-brother Sigeberht, when in 630 or 631 Honorius, Abp. of *Canterbury (*c.*627–53), sent St *Felix to evangelize the East Angles. About the same time St Fursey (d. *c.*650) founded a monastery, prob. at Burghcastle, on land provided by the King. In 672 St *Theodore, Abp. of Canterbury, divided the diocese between the North Folk and the South Folk, Dunwich remaining the see of the latter, while Elmham became a new see for Norfolk. There is a gap in the recorded succession of East Anglian bishops between *c.*870 and 957, when the area was perhaps under the episcopal jurisdiction of London. In 1071 Herfast (Bp. 1070–85) moved his see from Elmham to Thetford, whence in 1094 or 1095 Herbert of Losinga (Bp. 1091–1119) transferred it to Norwich. Here in 1096 he founded the Cathedral of the Holy and Undivided Trinity, poss. as a penance for simony, and constituted it a monastic church under the *Benedictine Rule. The limits of the diocese remained practically unchanged until 1837, when the archdeaconry of Sudbury was transferred to *Ely. In 1914 the archdeaconry of Suffolk was incorporated in the new diocese of St Edmundsbury and Ipswich. The diocese of Norwich now corresponds roughly with the county of Norfolk.

The Cathedral is mainly a Norman building with a 15th-cent. spire and fine 15th- and 16th-cent. vaulted roofs. The nave has an altar at the E. end, behind which is the stone pulpitum, supporting the organ. The choir has an ambulatory with radiating chapels, and a semicircular apse. Here are the Jesus Chapel, the Bauchun Chapel, used as the Consistory Court, and St Luke's Chapel, which contains the fine late 14th-cent. paintings of Christ's Passion and Resurrection known as the 'Despenser retable'; this chapel is used as the parish church. A bridge on the N. side of the apse is believed to have led to a chapel for relics. The Lady Chapel, at the extreme E., built by Walter de Suffield (Bp. 1245–57), was later ruined, but rebuilt in 1930–2. The two-storeyed cloisters are 14th cent. and contain a remarkable series of roof-bosses. The late Norman Bishop's throne in the basilican position behind the altar is unique in England.

The Bp. of Norwich owes his unique position as a mitred Abbot to the fact that when *Henry VIII confiscated the episcopal revenues he substituted those of the Abbey of St Benet, together with those of Hickling. Notable Bishops include, besides Herbert of Losinga (1091–1119) and Henry Despenser, the 'fighting bishop' (1370–1406), J. *Overall (1618–19), F. *White (1629–31), M. Wren (1635–8; uncle of Christopher *Wren), R. *Montague (1638–41), J. *Hall (1641–56), E. *Reynolds (1661–76), and A. *Sparrow (1676–85).

H. T. Riley, 'Norwich: The Bishop's Registry', in the First Report of the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts (1874), Appendix., pp. 86 f.; id., 'Norwich: The Dean and Chapter', ibid., pp. 87–9. A. Jessopp (ed.), Visitations of the Diocese of Norwich A.D. 1492–1532 (Camden Society, 2nd ser. 43; 1888). J. F. Williams (ed.), Diocese of Norwich: Bishop Redman's Visitation, 1597 (Norfolk Record Society, 18; 1946); T. F. Barton (ed.), The Registrum Vagum of Anthony Harison [secretary to Bp. John Jegson, 1603–17] (ibid. 32–3; 1963–4). C. Harper-Bill (ed.), English Episcopal Acta, 6: Norwich; 1070–1214 (Oxford, 1990). H. W. Saunders (ed.), The First Register of Norwich Cathedral Priory (Norfolk Record Society, 11; 1939); F. J. Williams and B. Cozens-Hardy (eds.), Extracts from the Two Earliest Minute Books of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich Cathedral, 1566–1649 (ibid. 24; 1953). B. Dodwell (ed.), The Charters of Norwich Cathedral Priory (Publications of the Pipe Roll Society, NS 40 for 1965–66, and 46 for 1978–80; 1974–85). H. W. Saunders, An Introduction to the Obedientiary and Manor Rolls of Norwich Cathedral Priory (1930). Bartholomew de Cotton, 'Annales Ecclesiae Norwicensis' and continuation, in H. *Wharton, Anglia Sacra, 1 (1691), pp. 397–417. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 4 (1823 edn.), pp. 1–24. F. Blomefield, An Essay towards the Topographical History of the County of Norfolk, 3 (1806), pp. 445–671, and 4 (1806), pp. 1–64. A. Jessopp, Norwich (Diocesan Histories; 1884); D. H. S. Cranage (ed.), Thirteen-Hundredth Anniversary of the Diocese of East Anglia (Norwich, 1930). R. [A.] Houlbrooke, Church Courts and the People during the English Reformation, 1520–1570 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1979) focuses on the diocese of Norwich. H. Leeds, Norwich Cathedral Past and Present (1910); R. H. Mottram, The Glories of Norwich Cathedral (1948); E. Fernie, An Architectural History of Norwich Cathedral (Clarendon Studies in the History of Art, 8; 1993). I. Atherton and others (eds.), Norwich Cathedral: Church, City, and Diocese, 1096–1996 (1996). J. C. Cox on 'The Cathedral Priory of the Holy Trinity, Norwich', VCH, Norfolk, 2, ed. W. Page (1906), pp. 317–28; also id. on the ecclesiastical history of the county, ibid., pp. 213–317. N. P. Tanner, The Church in Late Medieval Norwich 1370–1532 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 66; Toronto, 1984). Indices to wills in the Consistory Court and other similar material is pub. by the Norfolk Record Society and the Norfolk and Norwich Archaeological Society.

notaries. Specially appointed persons who confirm and attest the truth of any deeds or writings in order to render them authentic. It is a rule of RC canon law that certain kinds of evidence of one notary is equivalent to that of two witnesses; and unless the contrary is established, public documents, such as those authenticated by a notary, are acceptable evidence of what is directly and principally affirmed in them (CIC (1983), cans. 1541 and 1573). In the Middle Ages their appointment lay with the Pope or his delegates, and their work was and remains international. By the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 (passed in 1534), the right of appointing notaries was transferred to the Abp. of *Canterbury who acted through his Master of Faculties. Nowadays the English notary, who is an ecclesiastical officer, is nominated by the judge of the provincial courts of Canterbury and *York.

G. Barraclough, Public Notaries and the Papal Curia: A Calendar and Study of a Formularium Notariorum Curie from the Early Years of the Fourteenth Century (1934), incl. text. C. J. Duerr, The Judicial Notary: A historical Synopsis and a Commentary (Catholic University of America Canon Law Studies, 312; 1951). C. R. Cheney, Notaries Public in England in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries (Oxford, 1972). R. Naz in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 1015–20, s.v. 'Notaire', with bibl.

Notes of the Church. The four characteristic marks of the Church first enumerated in the so-called *Nicene Creed, i.e. one, holy, catholic, and apostolic. Though forming the opening words of *Boniface VIII's bull '*Unam Sanctam', they were not generally discussed until the Reformation, when RC theologians utilized them to discern the true Church among the rival claims of the different Christian Communions. Since then they have been employed as a particular mode of apologetics ('via notarum'). From about the middle of the 16th cent. treatises 'De notis Ecclesiae' became very numerous, though the notes were not at first confined to the four of the Creed. Thus St Robert *Bellarmine enumerated as many as 15 notes, though he held that these 15 were ultimately reducible to four. Under the stress of controversy the positions were clarified and the exact meaning of the word defined. The term was taken over by the *Tractarians in order to demonstrate the Catholicity of the C of E, and a doctrine of the Church, based on its four notes, was elaborated with some fullness by W. *Palmer in his Treatise on the Church of Christ (2 vols., 1833). For a much earlier dispute about the notes of holiness and catholicity, see OPTATUS, ST.

D. *Stone, The Notes of the Church (1910). G. Thils, Les Notes de l'Église dans l'apologétique catholique depuis la Réforme (Gembloux, 1937).

Noth, Martin (1902–68), OT scholar. A native of Dresden, he was educated at the Universities of Erlangen, Rostock, and Leipzig. After serving as Privatdozent at Greifswald and Leipzig, he held chairs at Königsberg (1930–44) and Bonn (1945–65) and in the closing years of his life was Director of the Institut für Wissenschaft des Heiligen Landes in Jerusalem. He was a disciple of Albrecht Alt (1883–1956; professor in Leipzig), from whom he derived his interest in the archaeology and geography of Palestine and the social and political structure of early Israel. In Das System der zwölf Stämme Israels (1930) he argued that, in the period before the establishment of the Israelite monarchy, the tribes were organized as an amphictyony similar to those known in classical antiquity, and that we have no reliable knowledge of Israel before the emergence of this amphictyony as a sequel to the invasion of Canaan by the 'house of Joseph'. This hypothesis was further developed in his Geschichte Israels (1950, 2nd edn., 1954; Eng. tr., 1958, 2nd edn., 1960). His *Traditio-Historical researches are best represented by Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien, 1 (all pub. under this title, 1943) and Überlieferungsgeschichte des Pentateuch (1948; Eng. tr., 1972). Of special importance is his contention that Jos., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., and 1 and 2 Kgs. form a '*Deuteronomistic History', to which the bulk of Deut. is the preamble rather than the concluding section of the Pentateuch. He also wrote important commentaries on Exod. (1959; Eng. tr., 1962), Lev. (1962; Eng. tr., 1965), Num. (1966; Eng. tr., 1968), and Jos. (1938, 2nd edn., 1953). Of his projected commentary on 1 and 2 Kgs., only 16 chapters were complete at the time of his death (5 fascs., 1964–8). His philological expertise is evident in Die israelitischen Personennamen im Rahmen der gemeinsemitischen Namengebung (1928); and his concern to relate Israel to its environment appears above all in Die Welt des Alten Testaments (1940, 4th edn., 1964; Eng. tr., 1966).

Many technical arts. by Noth appeared in Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästinavereins, of which he was editor 1929–63. Some of his most important essays are collected in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament, 1 (1957, 2nd edn., 1960; Eng. tr., The Laws in the Pentateuch, 1966); 2, ed. H. W. Wolff (1969), with memoir by R. Smend, pp. 139–65, and list of Noth's works by H. Schult, pp. 166–205; and Aufsätze zur biblischen Landes- und Altertumskunde, ed. H. W. Wolff (2 vols., Neukirchen, 1971). Eng. tr. of parts of his Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Studien as The Deuteronomistic History (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 15; 1981) and The Chronicler's History (ibid. 50; 1987). B. W. Anderson, 'Martin Noth's Traditio-Historical Approach in the Context of Twentieth Century Biblical Research' in his tr. of Noth's Überlieferungsgeschichte des Pentateuch (A History of Pentateuchal Traditions, Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1972), pp. xiii–xxxii. C. H. J. de Geus, The Tribes of Israel: An Investigation into some of the Presuppositions of Martin Noth's Amphictyony Hypothesis (Studia Semitica Neerlandica, 18; Assen and Amsterdam, 1976); O. Bächli, Amphiktyonie im Altem Testament: Forschungsgeschichtliche Studie zur Hypothese von Martin Noth (Theologische Zeitschrift, Sonderband 6; Basle, 1977). R. Smend, Deutsche Alttestamentler in drei Jahrhunderten (Göttingen, 1989), pp. 255–75.

Notker. Among several monks of the *Benedictine monastery of St *Gall of this name the two best known are:

(1) Notker Balbulus (*c.*840–912), 'the Stammerer'. He entered the monastery of St Gall in his youth, was made librarian in 890, then guest-master, and finally master of the monastic school, where Solomon III, later Bp. of Constance, was among his pupils. He is famous for his literary work, esp. his compilation of *Sequences, the Liber Hymnorum. He also continued the 'Breviarium Regum Francorum' attributed to Erchanbert, wrote a metrical 'Vita' of St Gall, and is the probable author of the 'Gesta Caroli Magni', an important and carefully contrived series of exempla or moral tales about *Charlemagne which circulated under the designation of 'a monk of St Gall'. His biographer, Ekkehart IV, praises him as a vessel of the Holy Spirit, stammering of tongue but not of spirit. Soon venerated as a saint, his cult was approved by *Leo X for St Gall in 1512 and for the diocese of Constance a year later. Commemoration, 6 Apr. See also SEQUENCE.

(2) Notker Labeo (*c.*950–1022), called also 'Notker the German' and 'Notker III of St Gall'. He entered the monastery of St Gall as a boy and became a long-remembered master of the monastery school. To help his pupils in their study of Latin school texts and the Bible, he took the unprecedented step of composing a number of bilingual Latin-German versions, among them the 'Disticha Catonis', *Virgil's 'Eclogues', Terence's 'Andria', as well as the Book of Job (with glosses drawn from St *Gregory the Great's 'Moralia'). All, however, are now lost except the bilingual glossed Psalter, *Boethius' 'De consolatione philosophiae', Martianus Capella's 'De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii', and *Aristotle's 'De categoriis' and 'De interpretatione'. Several minor works in Latin and a short treatise on musical theory in German also survive. His vigorous style, his ability to translate philosophical terms into the as yet undeveloped Old High German, together with the quantity and range of his work, make him the most notable German vernacular writer of his time.

(1) Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL 131. 993–1178; Sequences also ed. C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister (AHMA 53; 1911); modern edn. of his poetical works, with full introd., by W. von den Steinen, Notker der Dichter und seine geistige Welt (Berne, 2 vols., 1948); ed. minor of his poetical works by id. (ibid., 1960). 'Vita S. Galli' also ed. K. Strecker in MGH, Poetae, 4 (pt. 2; 1923), pp. 1093–108. 'Gesta Caroli Magni' also ed. by P. Jaffé, Monumenta Carolina (Bibliotheca Rerum Germanicarum, 4; Berlin, 1867), pp. 628–700, and by H. F. Haefele (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum, NS 12; 1959). Eng. tr. by L. Thorpe, Two Lives of Charlemagne (Penguin Classics, 1969), pp. 93–172, with notes, pp. 189–99. Life of Notker by Ekkehart IV is pr. in AASS, Apr. 1 (1675), pp. 579–96, with process of canonization, pp. 596–604. H. F. Haefele, 'Studien zu Notkers Gesta Karoli', Deutsches Archiv, 15 (1959), pp. 358–92. H. Löwe, 'Das Karlsbuch Notkers von St. Gallen und sein zeitgeschichtlicher Hintergrund', Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Geschichte, 20 (1970), pp. 269–302. H. W. Goetz, Strukturen der spätkarolingischen Epoche im Spiegel der Vorstellungen eines Zeitgenössischen Mönchs: Eine Interpretation der 'Gesta Karoli' Notkers von Sankt Gallen (Bonn, 1981). E. Lechner, Vita Notkeri Balbuli: Geistesgeschichtlicher Standort und historische Kritik (Mitteilungen zur Vaterländischen Geschichte, 47; 1972). Raby (1953), pp. 211–15; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 282–99; R. L. Crocker, The Early Medieval Sequence (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1977), esp. pp. 1–369. H. F. Haefele in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 6 (1987), cols. 1187–210, s.v. 'Notker I. von St Gallen'.

(2) Editions of his works by P. Piper (Germanischer Bücherschatz, 8–10; Freiburg i.B., and Tübingen, 1882–3), E. H. Sehrt and T. Starck (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek, 32–4, 37, 40, 42–3; Halle, 1933–55), and J. C. King and P. W. Tax (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek, 73–5, 80–1, 84, 87, 91, 93–4, 98, 100, 101, etc. [4 further vols. planned]; Tübingen, 1972 ff.). I. Schröbler, Notker III von St Gallen als Übersetzer und Kommentator von Boethius' De Consolatione Philosophiae (Hermaea, NF 2; Tübingen, 1953). E. Hellgardt, 'Notkers des Deutschen Brief an Bischof Hugo von Sitten', in K. Grubmüller and others (eds.), Befund und Deutung [Festschrift for Hans Fromm] (Tübingen, 1979), pp. 169–92; id., 'Notker teutonicus: Überlegungen zum Stand der Forschung' [I–II], Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Sprache und Literatur, 108 (1986), pp. 190–205; 109 (1987), pp. 202–21. J. K. Bostock, A Handbook of Old High German Literature, 2nd edn. rev. by K. C. King and D. R. McLintock (Oxford, 1976), pp. 281–98. Manitius, 2 (1923), pp. 694–9. S. Sonderegger in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 6 (1987), cols. 1212–36, s.v. 'Notker III. von St Gallen'.

Notker (*c.*940–1008), Bp. of Liège. Of a noble Swabian family, he was perhaps educated by St *Bruno, Abp. of Cologne. The 'Annales Hildesheimenses' wrongly state that he was provost of St *Gall. Nominated Imperial chaplain in Italy in 969, he was made Bp. of Liège by the Emp. Otto I in 972 and throughout his life defended German interests both in Italy and Lorraine. He established the temporal sovereignty of the bishops of his diocese, which he embellished with many fine buildings. At the same time he improved the moral and intellectual standard of his clergy and reformed the abbey of Lobbes. He was a great benefactor of the Liège schools, to which he attracted celebrated scholars. The many Lives of saints attributed to him are the works of his friend Abbot Heriger of Lobbes, to which he lent his name. A fine *Evangeliary (Gospel lectionary) now in Musée Curtius at Liège is associated with him.

Works attributed to him in J. P. Migne, PL 139. 1135–68. Anonymous Life, written in the late 12th cent. and incorporated in the 13th cent. 'Gesta Episcoporum Leodiensium' of Giles of Orval, ed. J. Heller in MGH, Scriptores, 25 (1880), pp. 57–63; also ed., with detailed introd., by G. Kurth in Compte Rendu des séances de la commission royale d'histoire, ou Recueil de ses bulletins, 4th ser. 17 (Brussels, 1890), pp. 365–422. G. Kurth, Notger de Liège et la civilisation au X^e siècle (2 vols., 1905), with repr. of the Life in vol. 2, pp. 10–15. J. Philippe, L'Évangéliaire de Notger et la chronologie de l'Art mosan des époques pre-romane et romane (Académie royale de Belgique, Classe des beaux-arts, Mémoires, collection en 8°, 2nd ser. 10; 1956). C. E. Lutz, Schoolmasters of the tenth century (Hampden, Conn., 1977), pp. 93–9. Manitius, 2 (1923), pp. 219–22. É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 807–9, s.v.

Notre-Dame, Paris. The cathedral church of Paris. Built in the early French Gothic style on the Île de la Cité on the site of an 8th-cent. building of the same name and occupying a part of the old cathedral of St-Étienne, it was begun in 1163 and consecrated in 1182; and became an accepted model for several other French cathedrals. The W. front was added in 1200–20. The church was desecrated in the French Revolution, when the 'Feast of Reason' was celebrated in it in 1793, but it was reopened for use by the *Constitutional Church (1795–7) and restored to the RC Church in 1802. Victor Hugo's Notre-Dame de Paris (1831) awakened a fresh interest in the cathedral and restoration work was begun, from 1845 onwards, under E.-E. Viollet-le-Duc, who made considerable changes. Notre-Dame still has a role in national events.

B. Guérard (ed.), Cartulaire de l'église Notre-Dame de Paris (Collection de Documents inédits sur l'Histoire de France, 1st ser., Collection des Cartulaires de France, 4–7; 1850). F. de Guilhermy and E.-E. Viollet-le-Duc, Description de Notre-Dame, cathédrale de Paris (1856). Huitième Centenaire de Notre-Dame de Paris (Congrès des 20 mai–3 juin 1964), preface by G. Le Bras (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de France, 1967). M. Aubert, Notre-Dame de Paris: Sa place dans l'histoire de l'architecture du XII^e au XIV^e siècle (1920 and later edns.). A. Temko, Notre-Dame of Paris: The Biography of a Cathedral (1956); Y. Bottineau, Notre-Dame de Paris et la Sainte-Chapelle (1966), pp. 15–123. See also bibl. to PARIS.

Novalis. The pseudonym of Friedrich Leopold Freiherr von Hardenberg (1772–1801), the German Romantic poet. To his parents, who belonged to the *Moravian sect, he owed the deep religious strain in his character which he never lost. He was educated at the universities of Jena, Leipzig (where he made friends with F. *Schlegel), and *Wittenberg. His poetic genius, inspired by passion for the girl Sophie von Kühn, found its best expression in the beautiful Hymnen an die Nacht (1800), evoked by grief at her early death (1797). His marked leanings towards Catholicism became apparent in this, as also in his essay Die Christenheit oder Europa (1799; pub. 1826). Later he studied geology under Prof. A. G. Werner (1750–1817), whom he immortalized as the 'Meister' in one of his two great unfinished prose romances, Die Lehrlinge zu Sais. His other chief work, Heinrich von Ofterdingen, records much of his spiritual history under the allegory of a search for a mysterious 'blue flower'. He died of phthisis on 25 Mar. 1801.

His works, mostly frags., were ed. by his two associates, Ludwig Tieck and Friedrich Schlegel (2 vols., Berlin, 1802), often repr. Modern edn. by P. Kluckhohn (4 vols., Leipzig [1929]; 2nd edn. by id. and R. Samuel [1960–75]). Correspondence with Friedrich and August Wilhelm, Charlotte and Caroline Schlegel ed. J. M. Raich (Mainz, 1880). Novalis has been the subject of many studies in Germany, esp. from the literary standpoint. T. *Carlyle discusses him in a review of his many collected works in The Foreign Review, 3 (1829), pp. 97–141. In Eng., there is a useful introd by J. Neubauer, Novalis (Boston, 1980). Life by M. Seidel (Munich [1988]). H.-J. Mähl, Die Idee des goldenen Zeitalters im Werk des Novalis (Probleme der Dichtung, 7; Heidelberg, 1965); G. Schulz (ed.), Novalis in Selbstzeugnissen und Bilddokumenten (Reinbeck, 1973); N. Saul, History and Poetry in Novalis and in the Tradition of the German Enlightenment (Bithell Series of Dissertations, 8; 1984), esp. pp. 71–193. W. *Dilthey, Das Erlebnis und die Dichtung (1906), pp. 201–82; H. U. von *Balthasar, Prometheus: Studien zur Geschichte des deutschen Idealismus (Heidelberg, 1947), pp. 255–92; K. *Barth, Die Protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zurich, 1947), pp. 303–42; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 341–83. G. Kranz in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 471–3; R. S. Furness in TRE 24 (1994), pp. 675–8, both s.v.

Novatianism. A rigorist schism in the W. Church which arose out of the *Decian persecution (AD 249–50). Its leader, Novatian, was a Roman presbyter and the author of an important (and completely orthodox) work on the doctrine of the Trinity. Details about the life of Novatian are limited and not entirely consistent. Apparently because he was disappointed by the election of *Cornelius as Pope (251), he joined the rigorist party, which deprecated concessions to those who had compromised with paganism, and was consecrated rival Bp. of Rome. Novatianist views were approved by *Antioch, but rejected by *Dionysius at Alexandria. Novatian himself suffered martyrdom under Valerian in 257–8.

Though doctrinally orthodox, the Novatianists were excommunicated. One of their bishops, Acesius, after accepting the *Nicene decisions on *Arianism and the *Paschal Controversy, was rebuked by *Constantine himself at the Council for persisting in schism. Can. 8 of Nicaea also elaborated the terms on which Novatianists could be received back into Catholic communion. A Novatianist Church persisted into the 5th cent. and, in isolated communities, even later.

The chief authority on Novatian is *Cyprian's 'Epistles'. Of the earlier edns. of the 'De Trinitate', the best is that of J. Jackson in his edn. of Novatian's works (London, 1728), pp. 1–250; this edn. repr. from A. *Gallandi, in J. P. Migne, PL 3. 911–82. Modern crit. edn. of Novatian's works by G. F. Diercks (CCSL 4; 1972). Eng. tr. by R. J. DeSimone, OSA (Fathers of the Church, 67; Washington, DC, 1974). A. d'Alès, SJ, Novatien: Étude sur la théologie romaine au milieu du troisième siècle (1924). H. J. Vogt, Coetus Sanctorum: Der Kirchenbegriff des Novatian und die Geschichte seiner Sonderkirche (Theophaneia, 20; 1968); R. J. DeSimone, OSA, The Treatise of Novatian the Roman Presbyter on the Trinity (Studia Ephemeridis 'Augustinianum', 4; Rome, 1970); H. Gülzow, Cyprian und Novatian: Der Briefwechsel zwischen den Gemeinden in Rom und Karthago zur Zeit der Verfolgung des Kaisers Decius (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 48; 1975). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 170–2 and 582. H. Koch in PW 33 (1936), cols. 1138–56; É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 816–49; R. J. DeSimone, OSA, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 479–83, s.v. 'Novatien'; id. in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2434–6, s.v. 'Novaziani'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 604.

Novello, Vincent (1781–1861), Church musician. Born of mixed Italian and English parents, he was appointed organist of the Portuguese Embassy chapel as early as 1797, and from 1840 to 1843 was organist of the RC church in Moorfields. From 1849 till his death he lived at Nice. He was one of the founders of the London Philharmonic Society and of the Choral Harmonists' Society. He is esp. remembered for his editions of sacred music and for his introduction of such great works as the Masses of J. Haydn and W. A. Mozart and the music of G. P. da *Palestrina in England. Among his chief publications were: A Collection of Sacred Music (2 vols., 1811), Twelve Easy Masses (3 vols., 1816), The Fitzwilliam Music (i.e. the Musical MSS in the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge; 5 vols., 1825), Purcell's Sacred Music* (5 vols., 1828–32).

M. Cowden Clarke (daughter), The Life and Labours of Vincent Novello [1864]. A Mozart Pilgrimage: Being the Travel Diaries of Vincent & Mary Novello in the Year 1829, transcribed by N. M. di Marignano, ed. R. Hughes (1955). M. [J.] Hurd, Vincent Novello—and Company (1981). R. Hughes in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 13 (1980), pp. 437 f., s.v.

Novena. In the W. Church, a term applied to a period of nine days' private or public devotion, by which it is hoped to obtain some special grace. The general observance of Novenas is quite modern, dating only from the 17th cent., though it is modelled on the nine days' preparation of the Apostles and the BVM for the descent of the Spirit at *Pentecost (Acts 1: 13 f.) and there are other instances of a nine days' preparation earlier. Novenas may be arranged either in circumstances of special peril or need, or as a recurrent devotion, and, in the RC Church, *indulgences have sometimes been attached to their observance.

J. Hilgers, SJ, in CE 11 (1911), pp. 141–4, s.v.; P. K. Meagher in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 543 f., s.v.

novice. A probationary member of a religious community. The period of probation generally lasts at least a year. During this time the novice is under the authority of the superior, and wears the dress and follows the rule of the community. A novice may be dismissed from the community at any stage of his or her novitiate, and may also leave at any time without incurring ecclesiastical penalties.

Admission to the novitiate, marked by the wearing of the habit of the community for the first time, is known as the 'clothing'. Usually admission to the novitiate takes place only after a period already spent as a '*postulant' (q.v.).

Novum Rubricarum (26 July 1960). The decree of the Sacred Congregation of *Rites instituting several liturgical reforms in the Roman rite, among them a new classification of the feasts and other days of the liturgical calendar, many details in the order and ceremonial of the Mass, and a revision of the regulations governing *Votive Masses. They mark an important stage in the general liturgical reform inaugurated by *John XXIII.

Text in AAS 52 (1960), pp. 593–740.

Nowell, Alexander (*c.*1507–1602), Dean of *St Paul's. He was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he became a Fellow in 1536. In *Mary's first Parliament he was returned as the member for Looe, but was not allowed to take his seat on the ground that he was already a member of *Convocation. After some years in exile during Mary's reign he returned on *Elizabeth's accession and in 1560 was appointed Dean of St Paul's. He wrote three 'Catechisms'—the 'Large', the 'Middle', and the 'Small'. The last-named, published in 1573, so closely resembles that of the 1549 BCP that it has been argued that Nowell wrote this as well. The additions of 1604 to the BCP Catechism were certainly taken (by J. *Overall) in substance from Nowell's 'Small Catechism'. The 'Large Catechism' was probably approved by Convocation in 1563, though it was not printed till 1570.

His 'Large Catechism', with Eng. tr. by Thomas Norton, ed. G. E. Corrie (Parker Society, 1853), with biog. introd., pp. i–ix. Life by R. Churton (Oxford, 1809). W. P. Haugaard, 'John Calvin and the Catechism of Alexander Nowell', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 61 (1970), pp. 50–65. BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 419–21. W. Hunt in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 243–50.

Nubia, Christianity in. In the Nile Valley, from the First Cataract southwards to the area around the modern cities of Khartoum and Omdurman (the N. Sudan region formerly known as Nubia), there was a considerable Christian community from the later 6th to at least the 15th cent. There is some evidence that there were Christians in N. Nubia in the 4th cent., but the formal introduction of Christianity dates from the arrival of missionaries sent by the Emp. *Justinian and his wife *Theodora in 543. The rulers of the three kingdoms of Nobatia, Makuria, and Alodia (or Alwa) were converted, apparently soon to be followed by the greater part of the population; by *c.*580 all three kingdoms were officially Christian. In the 7th cent. they were able to resist the emergent Muslim armies. Early in the 8th cent. the two N. kingdoms of Nobatia and Makuria merged to form a stronger political unit; it was occasionally able to intervene on behalf of *Coptic Christians under Muslim rule in Egypt. From the time of their conversion to the late 12th cent. the Nubian kingdoms prospered. Hundreds of churches were built, mainly in the riverain area, but Christian remains have also been found in the desert at Zangkor, W. of Sennar, and there was possibly a monastery at Ain Farar in Darfur. Nubian artefacts, esp. pottery, were traded over a much wider area. The cathedrals at Faras, Qasr Ibrim, and Dongola are among many churches excavated since 1960 when N. Nubia was about to be inundated as a result of building the High Aswan Dam. The magnificent frescoes at Faras, which include a list of 27 bishops and are echoed in many churches further south, and the remains of the library at Qasr Ibrim have led to a new appreciation of Nubian Christian culture. At Faras Nubian rulers and metropolitans are finely portrayed and show that in the 10th cent., when Nubia was at the height of its power, even in this most northerly area the leaders of Church and State were dark-skinned indigenous people, not, as was formerly claimed, immigrant Copts.

The Nubian Churches were *Monophysite (with the possible exception of Makuria, which may have been initially *Melchite), the bishops were appointed by the Patr. of *Alexandria, but very little is known of the details of Church life. Greek, Coptic, and Old Nubian seem all to have been used, increasingly the latter, but the form or language of the liturgy is not certain. Inscriptions on grave stelae testify to the presence of Coptic monks. Some pagan temples were converted to Christian use, and many of the churches were tiny, as in Egypt.

In 1172 the Fatimid dynasty in Egypt, which had been tolerant of Christianity and on good terms with Nubia, was overthrown, and a series of raids into Nubia followed. These events signalled the beginning of a long period of decline in Nubia which weakened both Church and State. From the early 14th cent. the kings at Dongola were Muslims but in the 15th cent. there were still Christian kings and bishops in a northern kingdom called Dotawo as well as in the southern kingdom of Alwa. The consecration and enthronement certificates of Timotheos, bishop of Qasr Ibrim, signed by Patriarch Gabriel IV of Alexandria in 1372, survive in Bohairic and Arabic, placed beneath his body in Qasr Ibrim. But by the early 16th cent. Muslim political control was complete and the Christian community slowly faded away. For modern Christianity, see SUDAN, CHRISTIANITY IN.

U. Monneret de Villard, Storia della Nubia Cristiana (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 118; 1938); J. Vantini, The Excavations at Faras: A Contribution to the History of Christian Nubia (Museum Combonianum, 24; Bologna [1970]), with discussion of sources and bibl.; id. (ed.), Oriental Sources concerning Nubia [tr. into Eng.] (Heidelberg and Warsaw, 1975). P. L. Shinnie, 'Christian Nubia', in J. D. Fage (ed.), The Cambridge History of Africa, 2 (1978), pp. 556–88, with bibl., pp. 712–15 and 764–6. W. Y. Adams, Nubia: Corridor to Africa (1977), pp. 433–546. K. Michalowski, Faras, die Kathedrale aus dem Wüstensand (Zurich [1967]). E. Dinkler (ed.), Kunst und Geschichte Nubiens in Christlicher Zeit (Recklinghausen [1970]). C. J. Gardberg, Late Nubian Sites: Churches and Settlements (The Scandinavian Joint Expedition to Sudanese Nubia, 7; 1970), pp. 14–40. S. Jakobielski, A History of the Bishopric of Pachoras on the Basis of Coptic Inscriptions (Faras, 3; Warsaw, 1972); J. M. Plumley, The Scrolls of Bishop Timotheos: Two Documents from Medieval Nubia (Texts from Excavations, 1975 [incl. Eng. tr.]). W. Y. Adams, 'The twilight of Nubian Christianity', in K. Michałowski (ed.), Nubia: Récentes Recherches. Actes du Colloque Nubiologique international au Musée National de Varsovie 19–22 Juin 1972 (Warsaw, 1975), pp. 11–17; J. M. Plumley, 'The Christian Period at Quasr Ibrim: Some Notes on the MSS Finds', ibid., pp. 101–7; L. P. Kirwan, 'Some Thoughts on the Conversion of Nubia to Christianity', in J. M. Plumley (ed.), Nubian Studies: Proceedings of the Symposium for Nubian Studies, Selwyn College, Cambridge, 1978 (Warminster, Wilts. [1982]), pp. 142–5; A. Oman, 'Medieval Nubia: Retrospects nullity. In law nullity generally means the absence of legal validity from an act or contract, owing to the omission of an integral requirement.

and Introspects', in P. van Moorsel (ed.), New Discoveries in Nubia: Proceedings of the Colloquium on Nubian Studies, The Hague, 1979 (Leiden, 1982), pp. 69–90; J. M. Plumley, 'The Christian Period in Nubia as Represented on the Site of Quasr Ibrim', ibid., pp. 99–110.

RC canon law has elaborate rules concerning nullity, and a world-wide system of ecclesiastical tribunals to decide on the nullity of marriages. Acc. to the CIC (1983), cans. 1156–60, a purported marriage can be declared null if certain formalities were not complied with, if a *diriment impediment was present, or if the consent of either party was substantially defective. Provided that at least one of the parties acted in good faith, the union remains, even after declaration of nullity, a 'putative marriage' and the children are considered 'legitimate'.

In England, since 1857 the civil courts have exercised jurisdiction in matrimonial causes, and the C of E has submitted, albeit sometimes reluctantly. By the consolidating Matrimonial Causes Act 1973, a marriage is null if it is either void ab initio (within the *prohibited degrees, either party under 16, lacking certain formal requirements, bigamous, or the parties not respectively male and female), or voidable (not consummated through either incapacity or wilful refusal, defective consent, mental disorder, or undisclosed infectious venereal disease or pregnancy by another man at the date of the marriage). By the Matrimonial Causes Act 1937 (A. P. Herbert's Act), 'No clergyman of the Church of England . . . shall be compelled to solemnize the marriage of any person whose former marriage has been dissolved on any ground and whose former husband or wife is still living or to permit the marriage of any such person to be solemnized in the Church or Chapel of which he is Minister', thus considerably widening the conscience clause in the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act 1857. Four Resolutions of Convocation in 1938, promulgated as an Act of Convocation in 1957, converted this civil law dispensation into an ecclesiastical prohibition, and clergy are now forbidden as a matter of discipline from solemnizing such marriages, although in fact many do. The Resolutions provide that 'the Church should not allow the use of (the Marriage) service in the case of anyone who has a partner still living'. Although on the face of it this applies to those whose marriages have been annulled as well as dissolved, it has not in practice been applied to them, even though in the case of non-consummation the reason for annulment arose after the marriage. The report of the Commission appointed by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in 1949, The Church and the Law of Nullity of Marriage (1955) recommended that non-consummation be recognized as a ground for nullity by the Church, taking it as evidence of incapacity at the time of the marriage. The Law Commission has considered whether to recommend that voidable marriages be subsumed with *divorce cases, but in its 1970 report decided not to do so. See also MATRIMONY.

The RC position and practice, taking account of the changes incorporated in the 1983 revision of the Codex Iuris Canonici*, is described by R. Brown, Marriage Annulment in the Catholic Church (3rd edn., Bury St Edmunds, 1990).

Number of the Beast. The number 666 (or, acc. to some MSS, 616) in Rev. 13: 18. As in both Gk. and Heb. each letter of the alphabet represented a figure as well as a letter, every name could be represented by a number corresponding to the sum of its letters. Innumerable explanations have been given of the cryptogram. The most prob. is that '*Nero Caesar' is intended. In Heb. letters it adds up to 666 (with the form 'Neron') or to 616 (with 'Nero'). This is esp. appropriate for the 'man of sin' (2 Thess. 2: 3) if 666 is read, since here each digit is one less than seven, the perfect number. St *Irenaeus proposed 'Euanthas', 'Lateinos' or 'Teitan' (Adv. Haer. 5. 30. 3). The many ingenious attempts to refer it to such persons as Muhammad, M. *Luther, Napoleon, or the Pope may be safely dismissed.

Numbers, Book of. The fourth Book of the *Pentateuch. Its English title, which follows that of the Greek and Latin versions, is explained by its two records of a census (1–4 and 26). The Hebrew title, 'Bemidhbar' (Heb. בְּמִדְבַּר, the fourth word, meaning 'in the wilderness'), is more appropriate, however, as the bulk of the Book narrates the experiences of the Israelites during their wilderness wanderings down to the time of *Joshua's appointment as *Moses' successor. The Book centres on the person of Moses and, besides its main narrative, contains large sections of miscellaneous laws and ceremonial directions. It includes the well-known episodes of the 12 spies (13), of the revolt of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram (16), and of Balaam's mission to Balak (22 f.). To the last of these there are references in the NT (2 Pet. 2: 15, Jude 11, Rev. 2: 14). The form of priestly blessing in 6: 24–6 is frequently used in the Christian Church.

Comm. by G. B. *Gray (ICC, 1903), M. *Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 7, 1966; Eng. tr., 1968), N. H. Snaith (New Cent. Bib. on Lev. and Num., 1967, pp. 180–347), J. Sturdy (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1976), H. Jagersma (De Prediking van het Oude Testament; 3 vols., Nijkerk, 1983–90), and P. J. Budd (Word Biblical Comm. 5; Waco, Tex. [1984]). J. Milgrom in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 1146–55, s.v.

numinous. A word coined by R. *Otto to denote the elements of a non-rational and amoral kind in what is experienced in religion as the 'holy'. The numinous is thus held to include feelings of awe and self-abasement (at the Mysterium Tremendum) as well as an element of religious fascination (the fascinans). Otto developed his psychological analyses for the first time in Das Heilige (1917; Eng. tr., 1923).

nun. In popular usage, a member of any Religious *Institute of women. In RC canon law, however, the term is correctly used only of members of enclosed orders whose members live in houses, which outsiders are not normally permitted to enter and which the members are only rarely permitted to leave (CIC (1983), can. 667).

Nun of Kent. See BARTON, ELIZABETH.

Nunc Dimittis. The Song of *Simeon (Lk. 2: 29–32), so named from its initial words in the *Vulgate version. It has formed part of daily prayers since the 4th cent., its use being already prescribed in the '*Apostolic Constitutions'

(7. 48). In the E. Rite it is said at *Vespers. In the Roman and many other W. breviaries its use is ordered at *Compline, whence it passed to the *Evensong of the BCP and Evening Prayer in modern Anglican liturgies. In the former *Monastic Breviary it found no regular place, but its use at Compline in monastic houses is now recommended in the Thesaurus Liturgiae Monasticae Horarum (1977). It is also part of the celebrant's final devotions in the Liturgy of St *Chrysostom, and in the Roman Rite it is sung at the *Candlemas Procession.

S. Farris, The Hymns of Luke's Infancy Narrative (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 9; Sheffield, 1985).

nuncio. A permanent diplomatic representative of the *Holy See accredited to a civil government, who also acts as a link between Rome and the Church in the State to which he is accredited. The nuncio was originally a fiscal officer, charged with the collection of Papal tithe and other monetary contributions, and only from the time of the *Counter-Reformation have his functions been diplomatic. Nuncios are traditionally deans of the diplomatic corps; where this precedence is not recognized, from 1965 the Holy See appointed a pro-nuncio, with ambassadorial status, but for appointments made after 1993 the distinction has been abolished. The first pro-nuncio in Great Britain was Abp. Bruno Heim, appointed on 22 Feb. 1982. See also APOSTOLIC DELEGATE; LEGATE, PAPAL.

Nuns' Rule. See ANCREN(E) RIWLE.

Nuptial Mass. The wedding Mass which includes the celebration of the marriage and contains the nuptial blessing. It is a *Ritual Mass, consisting of suitable lessons, chants and prayers. According to the present law of the RC Church, a Nuptial Mass may be celebrated even on Sundays and feast days; on these days the Mass of the day is said, though one lesson may be taken from the Nuptial Mass (except on a few feasts of the greatest liturgical importance) and the prayers of the nuptial blessing are inserted. Since 1966 a Nuptial Mass has been permitted at a *mixed marriage, in which both parties are baptized, though the non-RC partner generally may not receive Communion.

Nuremberg Declaration. The statement of belief issued by a group of 14 German Catholic professors and teachers which met at Nuremberg on 25–6 Aug. 1870 in protest against the decrees of the First *Vatican Council on the Papal claims (promulgated 18 July 1870). Those present included J. J. I. von *Döllinger (Munich), J. *Friedrich (Munich), W. C. Reischl (Munich), F. H. *Reusch (Bonn), J. F. von Schulte (Prague). The manifesto denied that the recent Vatican Council was a true Oecumenical Council, repudiated the relevant chapters of Pastor Aeternus, maintained that Papal infallibility would destroy civil liberties, and demanded an unfettered General Council which should meet north of the Alps. The declaration was later signed by 33 professors and teachers, priests and laymen. Its signatories formed the nucleus of the *Old Catholic Movement (q.v.).

The text is in J. F. von Schulte, Der Altkatholizismus (1887), pp. 14–16. C. B. Moss, The Old Catholic Movement (1948), pp. 227 f.

O

Oak, Synod of the. The synod held under an Imperial order in July 403, at a suburb of *Chalcedon called 'The Oak'. Its object was to remove St *Chrysostom from his see of *Constantinople. Held under the presidency of Paul, the Exarch of Heraclea (390–403), it was attended by 36 (or possibly 45) bishops, of whom all but 7 were from Egypt and all were Chrysostom's enemies. After Chrysostom had been condemned on several fabricated counts, ranging from favouring *Origenism to eating lozenges in church, the Emp. Arcadius (395–408) accepted the synod's decision and exiled Chrysostom to Bithynia. The riotous indignation of the people of Constantinople, together with the occurrence of an earthquake, frightened the Empress and Chrysostom was recalled a few days later.

'Acta' (prob. genuine) survive in *Photius, Cod. 59 (PG 103. 105–13). Hardouin, 1, cols. 1037–42; Mansi, 3 (1759), cols. 1141–54; Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 137–54. P. Ubaldi, 'La sinodo "ad Quercum" dell'anno 403', Memorie della Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino, 2nd ser. 52 (1903), Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, pp. 33–97. See also bibl. to ORIGENISM.

Oakeley, Frederick (1802–80), *Tractarian divine. Educated at Christ Church, Oxford, he was elected to a chaplain-fellowship at Balliol in 1827, where the influence of W. G. *Ward, who became a Fellow in 1834, led to his accepting Tractarian teaching. From 1839 to 1845 Oakeley was in charge of the Margaret Chapel, London, on the site of the present church of All Saints, Margaret Street, and under his ministry the chapel became a centre of Tractarian worship in London. When the rift began to appear in the Oxford Movement, Oakeley was on the pro-Roman side; and on 29 Oct. 1845, three weeks after J. H. *Newman, he was received into the RC Church. Ordained priest in that Church in 1847, he was a canon of the diocese of Westminster from 1852 until his death. His Historical Notes on the Tractarian Movement (1865) supplies detail about the Oxford Movement. He was a frequent contributor to the British Critic* and Dublin Review*.

In March 1880 Oakeley contributed 'Personal Recollections of Oxford from 1820 to 1845' to The Month, repr. in L. M. Q. Couch (ed.), Reminiscences of Oxford (Oxf. Hist. Soc. 22; 1892), pp. 301–45. There is no Life, but he figures extensively in the lit. of the Oxford Movement, e.g. in Wilfrid Ward, W. G. Ward and the Oxford Movement (1889), passim. C. R. Beazley in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 286 f.

O-Antiphons (also known as the Greater Antiphons). The *antiphons sung before and after *Magnificat at *Vespers, acc. to Roman use, on the seven days preceding Christmas Eve, i.e. from 17 to 23 Dec. The name is derived from their initial 'O'—'O Sapientia', 'O Adonai', 'O Radix Jesse', 'O Clavis David', 'O Oriens', 'O Rex gentium', and 'O Emmanuel'. The *Sarum Use began the Antiphons on 16 Dec., and provided an additional 'O' for 23 Dec. ('O Virgo virginum'), and this arrangement is reflected by the insertion of 'O Sapientia' for 16 Dec. in the calendar of the BCP. The authorship and date of composition of the Antiphons are alike unknown; but they were already in use by the 8th cent.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Great Antiphons. Heralds of Christmas', The Month, 106 (1905), pp. 616–31; A. Weber, 'Die sieben O-Antiphonen der Adventsliturgie', Pastor Bonus, 19 (1906–7), pp. 109–19; C. Callewaert, 'De groote Adventsantifonen O', Liturgisch Tijdschrift, 2 (1911–12), pp. 1–13, repr. in id., Sacris Erudiri (1940), pp. 405–18, with further bibl.; J. A. Cabaniss, 'A Note on the Date of the Great Advent Antiphons', Speculum, 22 (1947), pp. 440–2. A. Hollaardt, OP, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 1914–17, s.v., with further bibl.

Oates, Titus (1649–1705), conspirator. The son of a *Baptist preacher, Oates owes his notoriety to the part he played in the '*Popish Plot'. In the unsettled state of the times he managed to inflame public opinion by spreading stories of alleged RC intrigues to assassinate *Charles II and place his brother, *James, on the throne. The public panic lasted from 1678 to 1681, and many innocent persons were condemned and executed on his false testimony.

T. Seccombe, 'Titus Oates', in id. (ed.), Lives of Twelve Bad Men (1894), no. 5, pp. 95–154. J. Lane [pseudonym for E. Dakers], Titus Oates (1949), with refs. and bibl. T. Seccombe in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 296–303.

oath. Several Christian bodies, e.g. the *Waldensians, *Baptists, *Mennonites, and *Quakers, have interpreted Mt. 5: 33–7 as forbidding every oath; but the prohibition is more generally understood as primarily directed against the habit of promiscuous and unnecessary swearing such as prevailed among the Jews in the time of Christ.

Acc. to general Christian teaching, an oath, though not desirable, may be required by human weakness and is admissible for reasons of serious necessity. It must be concerned only with what one knows to be true, its object must be morally good, and in order to be valid it must be taken with the intention to swear. The taking of an oath is often surrounded with solemnity, ecclesiastical oaths, e.g., being sworn before the Crucifix and accompanied by the touching of the Gospel Book. An oath may be either assertory, i.e. referring to a fact past or present, or promissory, relating to the future; and in important matters it is held by moral theologians to be binding under grave sin.

J. E. Tyler, Oaths: Their Origin, Nature and History (1834). E. B. Tylor in EB (11th edn.), 19 (1911), pp. 939–43, s.v.; N. Iung in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 1940–56, s.v. 'Serment'.

Oath of Allegiance. See ALLEGIANCE, OATH OF.

Obadiah, Book of. One of the *Minor Prophets and the shortest Book of the OT. It foretells the punishment of the Edomites, the traditional foes of the Jews, in the coming Day of the Lord. Reference to the destruction of *Jerusalem in v. 11 would seem to require a date later than 586 BC for the final compilation of the Book, but modern scholars tend to divide it into a number of sections, which are variously dated from the 9th to the 5th cent. BC. The similarities between vv. 1–15 and Jer. 49: 7–22 have suggested that one passage is dependent upon the other, unless both derive from an independent earlier prophecy.

Comm. by J. A. Bewer (ICC on Micah, Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912; sep. pagination), J. H. Eaton (on Obad., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., London, 1961, pp. 35–48), J. D. W. Watts (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Joel, Obad., Jon., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1975, pp. 51–71), and H. W. Wolff (Dodekapropheton, 3, Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 14/3, Neukirchen, 1977, on Obad. and Jon., pp. 1–51; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1986, pp. 17–71). W. Rudolph, 'Obadja' in ZATW 49 (1931), pp. 222–31; G. Fohrer, 'Die Sprüche Obadjas', in Studia Biblica et Semitica Theodoro Christiano Vriezen . . . dedicata (Wageningen, 1966), pp. 81–93. P. E. Bonnard in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 8 (1972), cols. 693–701, s.v. 'Prophètes d'Israël', with bibl.; P. R. Ackroyd in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 2–4, s.v.

obedience. The moral virtue which inclines a person to carry out the will of his lawful superior. Its exercise is necessary for the upholding of the order established in the world by both natural and positive law. Absolute obedience is due only to God, whereas obedience to men is limited by the bounds of authority and by the claims of conscience. Spiritual writers distinguish three degrees of lawful obedience: mere external obedience; willing submission to an order though its wisdom may be doubted; and blind obedience, i.e. submission of the personal judgement to that of the superior, except, of course, in cases of obviously sinful commands. Obedience is enjoined by Christ (Jn. 15: 10), who by His perfect obedience unto death (Phil. 2: 8, Heb. 5: 8) is its supreme example. It came to be one of the three *vows by which a religious binds himself to obey his superiors acc. to the rule and constitutions of his order or congregation. Acc. to RC canon law, an oath of fidelity is required from bishops, parish priests and others on taking up office to be exercised in the name of the Church. Anyone who persists in not obeying the lawful command of the Apostolic See or the Ordinary or Superior is to be punished. In the C of E every cleric before *institution to a benefice is required to take an oath of obedience to the Bishop of the Diocese in all things lawful and honest.

obedientiary. A now almost obsolete name of the permanent officials in a monastery, appointed by a superior. It was used, e.g., of the sacristan, the cantor, the cellarer, etc., but generally not of the prior and sub-prior.

Oberammergau, in Upper Bavaria. In 1633 the villagers vowed that if God would rid them of the plague, they would at 10-year intervals enact a play recalling Christ's Passion and Resurrection. Performances took place every 10 years from 1634 to 1674 and in the deciminal years from 1680, except when war or political conditions led to postponement (1810 to 1811, 1870 to 1871, and 1920 to 1922) or prevented production in 1940. There were additional performances in 1801, 1815, 1934, and 1984. The play has been rewritten a number of times. The present text is based on the work of Othmar (1769–1843), written for the 1811 performance and revised for that of 1815, and further revised by Joseph Alois Daisenberger for the presentations of 1850 and 1860. Since 1815 the play has been accompanied by oratorio-style music, composed by Rochus Dedler (1779–1850), rearranged in 1950. It became increasingly popular in the 19th cent., and is now seen by audiences of over 6,000, who are under cover, the stage being open. It is performed five times a week during the summer. In two parts, it takes over 5 hours to enact, with as many as 850 people on the stage, plus 100 musicians and some animals. It comprises recitation, music from choir and orchestra, and tableaux (incl. 17 from the OT), as well as straight acting.

The text of the play, which differs somewhat for each year's production, is issued at Oberammergau. Trs. into Eng. and other langs. are available. H. Diemer, Oberammergau und seine Passionsspiele (Munich and Oberammergau [1900]; Eng. tr., Munich, 1900; 4th edn., 1930). J. Bentley, Oberammergau and the Passion Play: A Guide and History to mark the 350th Anniversary (Harmondsworth, 1984). S. Schaller, OSB, 350 Jahre Passionsspiele Oberammergau (Oberammergau, 1984; in Ger. and Eng., with 40 colour photographs). S. S. Friedman, The Oberammergau Passion Play: A Lance against Civilization (Carbondale and Edwardsville, Ill., 1984).

Oberlin, Jean Frédéric (1740–1825), *Lutheran pastor, educationist, and philanthropist. Born and educated at Strasbourg, Oberlin was pastor of Waldersbach (Ban de la Roche) in the Vosges from 1767 until his death. His people were poor, isolated, and demoralized; Oberlin ministered faithfully to them all, incl. the Reformed and the Catholics. Having won their trust, he transformed the parish, initiating schemes of road and bridge building, introducing lending and savings banks and promoting new agricultural techniques. He established schools in the five villages and was a pioneer in kindergarten work based on child psychology.

Eclectic in outlook and indebted to both the *Enlightenment (esp. J.-J. *Rousseau) and to mysticism (esp. E. *Swedenborg), he welcomed the French Revolution, with its republicanism and attack on privilege, and he tried to combine patriotic clubs with Christian worship; he was briefly imprisoned in 1794. His social and educational methods soon won international recognition; in particular, his principles of infant education were developed by Pestalozzi. He is commemorated by the Oberlin House in Potsdam and Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Life and collected Works ed. E. Hilpert and others (4 vols. bound in 2, Stuttgart, 1843), with Gedenkschrift in vol. 1, Life by E. Stöber in vols. 2–3. The many other Lives incl. those by J. E. *Butler (London, 1882), A. Stein (Halle, 1899), C. Leenhardt (Montauban, 1911), W. Kambli (Zurich, 1927), A. Stucki (Basle, 1945), J. P. Benoit (Strasbourg, 1955), W. Heinsius (Lahr/Schwarzw., 1956), and A. Katterfeld (Berlin, 1960). E. Parisot, Jean Frédéric Oberlin (1740–1826): Essai pédagogique (Nancy thesis; Paris, 1905); H. Strohl, Études sur Oberlin (Cahiers de la Revue d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses, 13; 1926); M. Buch, Die pädagogischen und sozialpädagogischen Ideen Johann Friedrich Oberlins (1932).

oblate (Lat. oblatus, 'offered'). The word has several ecclesiastical senses. (1) In the early Middle Ages, it was esp. applied to children dedicated to a monastery by their parents and placed there to be brought up. (2) Later, after this practice had been abandoned, it became widely used of laity who lived at a monastery or in close connection with it, but who did not take full religious vows. (3) In modern times it has been adopted in the title of certain communities of the RC Church, e.g. the 'Oblates Regular of St Benedict' (see following entry), the 'Oblates of Mary Immaculate' (founded 1816) and the 'Oblates of St *Charles Borromeo' (founded by H. E. *Manning, 1857).

M. P. Deroux, Les Origines de l'oblature bénédictine (Vienne, 1927). U. Berlière, OSB, La Familia dans les monastères bénédictins du Moyen Âge (Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, Mémoires, Collection in-8°, 29, fasc. 2; 1931). J. Marchal, Le 'Droit d'Oblat': Essai sur une variété de pensionnés monastiques (Archives de la France monastique, 49; 1955). P. Hofmeister, OSB, 'Die Klaustral-Oblaten', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 72 (1961), pp. 5–45. J. Dubois, OSB, and others in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 654–76, s.v. 'Oblato'; G.-M. Oury, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 566–71, s.v. 'Oblature'. See also comm. on the Rule of St *Benedict, cited s.v., on ch. 59; also works cited s.v. LAY BROTHER.

Oblates Regular of St Benedict. The 'Oblates of Mary' were founded by St *Frances of Rome (q.v.) in 1425 as an association of noble Roman ladies, affiliated to the White *Benedictines ('*Olivetans') of Sta Maria Nuova (afterwards Sta Francesca Romana). In 1433, with the approval of *Eugenius IV, St Frances formed them into the Oblate Congregation of Tor de' Specchi, at the foot of the Capitol, Rome, where they still reside. Following her adaptation of the Benedictine Rule, they give themselves to prayer and good works, but without vows, strict enclosure, or giving up their property, and they make revocable promises of obedience to the Mother President.

M. B. Rivaldi in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 585–8, s.v. 'Oblate del Monastero di Tor de' Specchi'.

oblations (Lat. oblationes, oblata; Gk. προσφορά). In Christian usage, the term is applied both to the bread and wine offered for consecration in the Eucharist, and also to any other kind of gift (e.g. grapes, oil, cheese, altar cloths, etc.) presented by the faithful at Mass for the use of the clergy, the sick, the poor, the church, etc. In the Prayer for the Church Militant in the BCP, oblations, as distinguished from 'alms', originally meant money to be devoted to other purposes than the relief of the poor, but the authority of Bp. Simon *Patrick (1626–1707) can be invoked for interpreting 'oblations' here as meaning bread and wine. See also OFFERTORY.

J. Dowden, ' "Our Alms and Oblations": An Historical Study', JTS 1 (1899–1900), pp. 321–46; repr., with additions, in id., Further Studies in the Prayer Book (1908), pp. 176–222.

Obligation, Feasts of. See FEASTS OF OBLIGATION.

O'Bryan, William. See BIBLE CHRISTIANS.

obscurantism. Active opposition, esp. from supposedly religious motives, to intellectual enlightenment. Christians have sometimes been charged with it by secular critics, and professing Christians have also sometimes made the charge against one another, but it has rarely, if ever, been admitted. The word probably derives ultimately from the famous Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum* (1515–17).

Observantines (Fratres de Observantia, also Observants). Those members of the *Franciscan Order who wanted to 'observe' the Rule of St *Francis strictly and with no relaxation. The movement started in Italy in 1368 as a protest against the decline in religious life and discipline and drew its inspiration largely from the *Spiritual Franciscans and early Papal pronouncements about the Rule. In 1517, after a protracted struggle, they were separated from the *Conventuals and declared the true Order of St Francis. In the 16th cent. they were further divided into the Reformed ('Riformati'), the *Recollects, and the *Discalced or Alcantarines, all of whom acknowledged the authority of the Minister General but kept their own constitutions. These were all incorporated in 1897 into the single Order of Friars Minor by *Leo XIII's bull 'Felicitate quadam'. A fourth group, the *Capuchins, broke away completely in 1528. See also CONVENTUALS, CAPUCHINS, and FRANCISCAN ORDER.

The other *Mendicant Orders had similar movements.

Bernardin of Aquila, OFM, Chronica Fratrum Minorum Observantiae, ed. L. Lemmens, OFM (Rome, 1902). D. Nimmo, Reform and Division in the Medieval Franciscan Order from Saint Francis to the Foundation of the Capuchins (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, 33; Rome, 1987), pp. 109–658, passim. See also other works cited under FRANCISCAN ORDER.

Occam, William of. See WILLIAM OF OCKHAM.

Occasional Conformity Act. The commonly used name for the Toleration Act 1711, part of which was designed to restrain Nonconformists who had received Communion in the C of E in order to to qualify for Government posts from subsequently attending dissenting places of worship. It laid down that if after 25 March 1712 any civil or military officer in receipt of a salary, who had been obliged to receive Communion, should after admission to office be discovered at a conventicle, he should forfeit £40, cease to hold office, and no longer be eligible for any employment in England. If, however, the convicted person conformed to the C of E for one year after his conviction, then his eligibility for office was restored. An earlier bill against occasional conformity (imposing still larger penalties) had been introduced into the Commons in 1702 and succeeding years, but always rejected by the Whig Lords. The Act of 1711 proved a failure in operation; and in 1719, to conciliate the Nonconformists, the offending part was repealed by the Religious Worship Act 1718.

Principal clauses of the Act in W. C. Costin and J. S. Watson (eds.), The Law and Working of the Constitution: Documents 1660–1914, 1 (1952), pp. 118–21.

Occasional Offices. In the BCP, the services which, in distinction from the constant offices of the Church (namely *Mattins and *Evensong and the *Holy Communion), are used only as occasion may demand. They include *Baptism, *Confirmation, *Matrimony, *Visitation of the Sick, Communion of the Sick, Burial of the Dead, and the *Commination.

Occasional Prayers. In the BCP, the collection of 11 prayers prescribed for use 'upon several [i.e. appropriate] occasions' 'before the two final prayers of the Litany, or of Morning and Evening Prayer'. They include prayers for use in various times of adversity, two for the *Ember

Weeks, and the 'Collect and Prayer for all Conditions of Men'. They first appeared in their present position at the 1661 revision of the BCP. In modern Anglican liturgies the number of such occasional prayers is greater.

Occasionalism (Lat. occasio, 'event'). The philosophical theory of the relation of mind to matter which denies that finite things have efficient causality and postulates that God always intervenes to bring about a change in matter when a change occurs in mind and vice versa. Anticipated in medieval philosophy, it was formulated in the 17th cent. to avoid the difficulties confronting the dualism of R. *Descartes. Among its principal exponents were A. *Geulincx (d. 1669) and N. *Malebranche (d. 1715); in the latter it assumed a form very near to *pantheism. It never had any considerable following and soon suffered eclipse by G. W. *Leibniz's doctrine of 'Pre-established Harmony'. In the 19th cent. a form of Occasionalism was revived by Hermann Lotze (1817–81).

J. Prost, Essai sur l'atomisme et l'occasionalisme dans la philosophie cartésienne (1907). M. Fakhry, Islamic Occasionalism and its Critique by Averröes and Aquinas (1958). M. Gueroult, Malebranche, 2 (1959), esp. pp. 208–57. F. R. Tennant in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 443 f.; M. R. Holloway in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 624 f., both s.v. See also bibl. to GEULINCX, A., and MALEBRANCHE, N.

occurrence. The falling of two feasts (or other commemorations) on the same day in the ecclesiastical calendar, e.g. the coincidence of *Christmas Day with a Sunday. In the W. Church the feast of higher rank is kept in such cases. The inferior one used normally to be 'commemorated' by the recitation of its proper *collect after that of the greater feast, but in some cases, where the one feast was of very high rank, the lesser was always entirely unnoticed. When the feast displaced was a Sunday or other great holy day, its service was read on the first free day following. Commemorations are now made only when the feast of a saint of universal significance occurs during *Lent or the later part of *Advent (17–24 Dec.), and then only at the option of the celebrant.

Ochino, Bernardino (1487–1564), Protestant Reformer. A native of Siena, he joined the *Observantine Franciscans and rose to be their general. In 1534 he transferred to the still more austere *Capuchins, of whom he was twice (in 1538 and 1541) the vicar-general. His preaching was so eloquent and moving that *Charles V said of him, 'That man is enough to make the stones weep.' Contact with *Peter Martyr (Vermigli) led him to accept Protestant doctrines, and in 1541 he became a *Lutheran. He was cited before the *Inquistion, but escaped to Geneva. From 1545 to 1547 he was minister to the Italian Protestants at Augsburg. In the latter year T. *Cranmer invited him to England and secured for him a Prebend of *Canterbury and a royal pension, and Ochino gave himself up to writing The Usurped Primacy of the Bishop of Rome and the Labyrinth, the latter attacking the *Calvinistic doctrine of *Predestination. On *Mary's accession he returned to Switzerland and in 1555 was appointed a pastor at Zurich, but on account of his Thirty Dialogues (1563), which proved him unsound on the doctrine of the *Trinity and on monogamy, he was expelled from his office. He then went to Poland, but was not allowed to remain there, and died at Slavkow (Austerlitz) in Moravia.

I 'Dialogi sette' e altri scritti del tempo della fuga, ed., with introd. and bibl., by U. Rozzo (Turin, 1985). Life by C. Benrath (Leipzig, 1875; 2nd edn., 1892; Eng. tr. by H. Zimmern, 1876); this work contains a full analysis and list of Ochino's writings. R. H. Bainton, Bernardino Ochino (Florence, 1940). P. McNair and J. Tedeschi, 'New Light on Ochino', Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 35 (1973), pp. 289–301. C. Cargnoni in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 575–91, s.v.

Ockham, William of. See WILLIAM OF OCKHAM.

O come, all ye faithful. See ADESTE FIDELES.

O come, O come, Emmanuel. See VENI, VENI, EMMANUEL.

O'Connell, Daniel (1775–1847), Irish statesman. Educated at the colleges of *St-Omer and *Douai (1792), he returned to England in 1793, entered Lincoln's Inn in the following year, and was called to the Irish bar in 1798. In 1800 he made his first appearance on a public platform, on behalf of the Irish Catholics, denouncing the Union. He soon became a successful lawyer, married in 1802, and from 1805 began to gain more and more influence as a Catholic leader. In 1813 he opposed the Bill of Emancipation introduced by H. Grattan which contained the royal veto for the election of bishops, a condition unacceptable to both Irish clergy and people though favoured by RCs in England. The next years saw a long-drawn-out struggle between O'Connell and the government, which suppressed all Catholic organizations. In 1823, however, O'Connell formed the *Catholic Association with the object of securing Catholic emancipation by legal means. It quickly spread throughout the country and became so powerful an instrument that it was proscribed in 1825. But it continued its work under other names and under the leadership of O'Connell, who, in 1828, was returned as MP for Clare by the disciplined votes of the 40-shilling freeholders. The Roman Catholic Emancipation Act (see CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS) followed in the next year. O'Connell now led his own parliamentary party, while also conducting successive movements to repeal the Union. He fought against Lord Grey's Coercion Bill of 1833 and, in 1840, after five years of alliance with Lord Melbourne's government, founded his Repeal Association. In 1841–2, he was Lord Mayor of Dublin, an office he filled impartially. In 1843 he resumed his agitation for Repeal, holding 'monster meetings' of which the most famous was that on the Hill of Tara. In the same year he was arrested on a charge of conspiracy, and in 1844, after trial, condemned to a year's imprisonment. Though freed on appeal to the House of Lords, his health had suffered, and henceforward his policy, which wavered between Repeal and Federalism, lacked firmness. He also quarrelled with the Young Ireland Party. Acclaimed as the 'Liberator' by his countrymen, O'Connell's influence on Irish history was profound. A brilliant popular orator, he was also the skilful and pragmatic politician who created modern Irish constitutional nationalism.

Life and Speeches of Daniel O'Connell, ed. J. O'Connell (son) (2 vols., Dublin, 1846); Correspondence of Daniel O'Connell, ed.

M. R. O'Connell [great-great-grandson] (8 vols., Shannon, 1972–80). A. Houston, Daniel O'Connell: His Early Life, and Journal, 1795–1802 (1906). S. O'Faoláin, King of the Beggars: A Life of Daniel O'Connell . . . (1938). A. [D.] Macintyre, The Liberator: Daniel O'Connell and the Irish Party 1830 47 (1965). K. B. Nowlan, The Politics of Repeal (1965), passim. L. J. McCaffrey, Daniel O'Connell and the Repeal Year ([Lexington] Ky., 1966). K. B. Nowlan and M. R. O'Connell (eds.), Daniel O'Connell: Portrait of a Radical (Belfast, 1984). O. MacDonagh, The Hereditary Bondsman: Daniel O'Connell 1775–1829 [1988]; id., The Emancipist: Daniel O'Connell 1830–47 [1989]. R. Dunlop in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 371–89.

Octateuch (Gk. ὀκτα-, 'eight', + τεῦχος, 'book'). The first eight Books of the OT, i.e. the *Pentateuch with the three additional Books of *Joshua, *Judges, and *Ruth.

Octavarium. A collection of lessons, supplementary to those of the *Breviary, for use in the 2nd and 3rd *Nocturns of the *Mattins of *Octaves which were of only local observance.

Octave (Lat. octava, sc. dies, 'eighth day'; formerly used only in the plural). In Christian liturgical usage, the eighth day after a feast, reckoning inclusively, and so always falling on the same day of the week as the feast itself. The term is also applied to the whole period of these eight days, during which the observance of certain major feasts came to be continued.

The practice was prob. suggested by the OT usage of an eighth-day celebration of the 'Feast of Tabernacles' (Lev. 23: 36) and the 'Dedication of the Temple' (2 Chr. 7: 9), and first introduced under *Constantine (d. 337), when the dedication festivities of the basilicas at *Jerusalem and Tyre were extended over the same period. The first liturgical feasts to be dignified with an Octave were *Easter, *Pentecost, and, in the E., *Epiphany, the reason being possibly to provide a time of recollection for the newly baptized. From the 7th cent. saints' feasts also began to have Octaves, among the oldest being those of Sts *Peter and *Paul, St *Laurence, and St *Agnes, which were long observed in the Roman rite. From the 12th cent., however, the custom was introduced of observing also the days between the first and the eighth day as well as the eighth day itself. The number of feasts with Octaves was also greatly increased during the Middle Ages; they were reduced, however, by the Breviary reforms of Popes *Pius V and *Pius X. By a decree of the Congregation of *Rites dated 23 Mar. 1955, all Octaves were suppressed in the Latin rite except those of *Christmas, Easter, and Pentecost and the last of these was suppressed in 1969.

G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 9 (1952), cols. 451–3, s.v. 'Ottava'.

Octoechos (Gk. ὀκτώηχος [βίβλος], 'the book of eight tones'). A liturgical book in the E. Church which contains the variable parts of services on Sundays and weekdays when these services are not taken wholly from one of the other service books – the *Triodion, the *Pentecostarion, or the *Menaion. There are eight sets of tones (ὀκτὼ ἦχοι), one for each week, these variable parts recurring every eight weeks in the same order; hence the name. The cycle of tones begins on the Sunday after *Easter. This book is also known as the Paracleticē (Gk. παρακλητική, from παρακαλεῖν, to supplicate).

L. Tardo, L'antica melurgia bizantina (Grottaferrata, 1938), pp. 363–84. The Hymns of the Octoechus transcribed by H. J. W. Tillyard (Monumenta Musicae Byzantinae, 3, 5; Copenhagen, 1940–9). O. Strunk, 'The Antiphons of the Oktoechos', Journal of the American Musicological Society, 13 (1960), pp. 50–67. A. Cody, OSB, 'The early history of the Octoechos in Syria', in N. G. Garsoïan, T. F. Mathews, and R. W. Thomson (eds.), East of Byzantium: Syria and Armenia in the Formative Period (Dumbarton Oaks Symposium 1980; Washington, DC, 1982), pp. 89–113. I. Thomas in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 640 f., with bibl.

Oda, St (d. 959), 'Oda the Good', sometimes mistakenly also 'Odo', (d. 959), Abp. of *Canterbury. He is said to have been the son of a Dane and originally a pagan. In 927 he became Bp. of Ramsbury. On Abp. Wulfhelm's death in 942, Oda at first declined the see of Canterbury offered him by King Edmund, on the ground of not being a monk; but on the king's persistence he received the *Benedictine habit from *Fleury and accepted the office. He was very active in restoring the cathedral buildings and in raising the morals and discipline of the clergy. He was also a staunch defender of the privileges of the Church. Feast day, 4 July.

Text of 'Constitutiones Odonis', a set of 10 chapters dealing with matters of discipline and morals which Abp. Oda caused to be drawn up, and other material, are conveniently pr. in D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods with other Documents Relating to the English Church, I: A.D. 871–1204, 1 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 65–74. Life by *Eadmer is repr. in PL 133. 933–44, where, however, it is wrongly ascribed to Osbern. More reliable information is to be found scattered in the contemporary Life of his nephew, St *Oswald, Abp. of York (q.v.). N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 222–37.

ode. See CANTICLE.

Odes of Solomon. See SOLOMON, ODES OF.

Odilia, St (d. *c.*720), also 'Othilia', the patroness of Alsace. She is said to have been the daughter of Adalricus, a Frankish lord, and been born blind but later miraculously received her sight. Having been granted by Adalricus his castle at Hohenburg (now the Odilienberg) above Obernai in the Vosges Mountains, she founded a large nunnery which she ruled as Abbess. In the Middle Ages the abbey was granted exceptional privileges and became a famous centre of pilgrimage (visited by *Charlemagne, Pope *Leo IX and perhaps Richard I of England). In the last 100 years it has again been much visited. The water of the well is said to cure diseased eyes. Feast day, 13 Dec.

Crit. edns. of 10th-cent. Life (of little historical value) by C. Pfister in Anal. Boll. 13 (1894), pp. 5–32, and W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 6 (1913), pp. 24–50, with useful introd. C. Pfister, Pages alsaciennes (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, 40; 1927), pp. 87–119 ('La Légende de sainte Odile'), with refs. to the earlier works of the author. M. Barth, Die heilige Odilia, Schutzherrin des Elsass: Ihr Kult in Volk und Kirche (Forschungen zur Kirchengeschichte des Elsass, 4–5; 1938). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1921–34, s.v. 'Odile'; R. V. Doren and A. M. Raggi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 1110–16, s.v., with full bibl.

Odilo, St (961/2–1049), fifth Abbot of *Cluny. He entered the monastery in 991 and became abbot three years later. He was a man of high virtue as well as of great administrative abilities, under whose government the number of Cluniac houses rose from 37 to 65 and their influence spread throughout Christendom. The order was further strengthened by his plan of centralization, whereby most of the reformed monasteries were made directly dependent on Cluny. Odilo spent much of his time travelling in the interests of the Church and of his order, being highly esteemed by both Popes and Emperors; and the establishment of the '*Truce of God' for the South of France and Italy was largely his work. He has left a permanent mark on the Liturgy by introducing the commemoration of *All Souls' Day (2 Nov.), which, at first a local observance at Cluny, was soon extended to the whole W. Church. Though severe with himself he was gentle with others, and the great famines of the time, esp. between 1028 and 1033, gave scope to his charity, which saved many from death. He was canonized in 1063. Feast days, 1 or 2 Jan.; in the order, 29 Apr.

Collection of St Odilo's works in M. Marrier, OSB (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614; repr., 1915), cols. 338–408, with extracts of the Life by his disciple Iotsaldus, monk of Cluny, cols. 1813–24, and Life by *Peter Damian, cols. 315–32; works, with Life by Iotsaldus and other biog. material, repr. from L. *d'Achery, OSB, J. *Mabillon, OSB, and T. Ruinart, OSB (eds.), Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti, 6 (pt. 1; Paris, 1701), pp. 631–710 (text of Life by Iotsaldus, pp. 679–710), in J. P. Migne, PL 142. 831–1038. E. Sackur, 'Handschriftliches aus Frankreich, II. Zu Iotsaldi Vita Odilonis und Verse auf Odilo', NA 15 (1889), pp. 117–26, with texts. Id., 'Ein Schreiben Odilo's von Cluni an Heinrich III vom Oktober 1046', ibid. 24 (1899), pp. 728–35, also with text. Crit. edn. of excerpts of Life by Iotsaldus by G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 2; 1888), pp. 813–20. Liber tramitis aevi Odilonis Abbatis, ed. P. Dinter (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 10; Siegburg, 1980). J. Hourlier, OSB, Saint Odilon, abbé de Cluny (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire Ecclésiastique, 40; 1964). Id. in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 608–13, s.v. 'Odilon'. See also bibl. to CLUNY.

odium theologicum (Lat., 'theological hatred'). A proverbial expression for the ill-feeling to which theological controversy frequently gives rise.

Odo, St (*c.*879–942), Abbot of *Cluny. The son of Abbo, a Frankish knight of Maine, he was born at Tours and brought up in the family of William, Duke of Aquitaine, who later (909/910) founded the abbey of Cluny. At the age of 19 he was instituted to a canonry at St Martin's, Tours, and then made his way to Paris, where he studied under *Remigius of Auxerre. After returning to Tours he was deeply affected by reading the Rule of St *Benedict and three years later gave up his canonry and was admitted by St Berno to the monastery of Baume (909). On the foundation of Cluny in the next year, Berno put Odo in charge of the monastery school at Baume. In 927 he succeeded Berno as Abbot of Cluny, where he was mainly instrumental in raising the monastery to the high position it held in the next centuries. During his abbacy the monastic church of SS. Peter and Paul was completed and the influence of Cluny over other monasteries was greatly extended, largely through a privilege of John XI (931). On his first visit to Rome (936) he took an important part in the conflict between Hugh, 'King of Italy', and the Patrician Alberic, and also won over several Italian monasteries (S. Maria on the Aventine, *St Paul's outside the Walls, *Monte Cassino, *Subiaco) to Cluniac principles. His writings include a Life of Gerald of Aurillac, three books of moral essays ('Collationes'), some sermons, an epic ('Occupatio') on the Redemption, and twelve choral antiphons in honour of St *Martin. Feast day, 18 Nov. (by the Benedictines, 29 April).

Collection of his works pr. in M. Marrier, OSB (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614; repr. 1915), cols. 65–264, with Life of St Odo by his disciple, John, monk of Cluny, ibid., cols. 13–56; further collection of his works, from various sources, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 133. 105–845, with Life by John, cols. 43–86, and 12th-cent. Life by Nalgodus, monk of Cluny, cols. 85–104 (both repr. from L. *d'Achery, OSB and J. Mabillon, OSB (eds.), Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti, 5 (1685), pp. 150–99). Odo's 'Occupatio' was first ed. A. Swoboda (Teub., 1900). Eng. tr. of Odo's Life of Gerald of Aurillac and of John of Cluny's Life of Odo by G. Sitwell, OSB, St Odo of Cluny (1958). E. Sackur, 'Handschriftliches aus Frankreich', I. Zur Vita Odilo Abbatis Cluniacensis auctore Iohanne', NA 15 (1889), pp. 105–16. Modern Life by [A.] du Bourg, OSB ('Les Saints', 1905). A. Hessel, 'Odo von Cluni und das französische Kulturproblem im früheren Mittelalter', HZ 128 (1923), pp. 1–25. A Cluny: Congrès scientifique. Fêtes et cérémonies liturgiques en l'honneur des saints abbés Odon et Odilon 9–11 juillet 1949. Travaux du congrès, Art, Histoire, Liturgie, publiés par la Société des Amis de Cluny (Dijon, 1950), passim. B. [F.] Hamilton, 'The Monastic Revival in Tenth Century Rome', Studia Monastica, 4 (1962), pp. 35–68, esp. pp. 47–9; repr. in id., Monastic Reform, Catharism and the Crusades (1979), no. 2. J. Hourlier, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 620–4, s.v. 'Odon' (5), with bibl. See also bibl. to CLUNY.

Odo, St (d. 959). A corrupted form of *Oda, St (q.v.).

Odo (b. *c.*1030 or *c.*1035; d. 1097), Bp. of Bayeux. He was a uterine half-brother of *William I, the Conqueror, who gave him the see of Bayeux while Odo was still a young man (1049/50). He was present at the Battle of Hastings (14 Oct. 1066). In 1067 he became Earl of Kent and for several years he was an active and trusted minister of William I. He appropriated many ecclesiastical lands which he distributed among his supporters until *Lanfranc secured their restoration to the see of Canterbury. In 1080 Odo was sent north to punish the Northumbrians for the murder of Walcher, Bp. of *Durham. In 1082 he fell into disgrace, apparently for having planned a military expedition to Italy, and was kept in prison until William was on his deathbed (1087). After his release he returned to Kent and under Rufus organized a rebellion designed to put his nephew, Duke Robert, on the throne (1088). When it failed he finally left his English estates and returned to Normandy. He set out with Robert on the First *Crusade in Sept. 1096, but died at Palermo the following year.

Even in Normandy Odo was much engaged in temporal affairs, and in England his career was entirely that of a secular baron. But he had a good reputation as a bishop, and even *Ordericus Vitalis, though hostile to Odo, noted that virtues and vices were mixed in him. He developed the capitular organization and probably the cathedral school of his see, and supported monastic reform; he founded the priory of St Vigor outside Bayeux, colonizing it with monks from *Mont-St-Michel. He was a lavish patron of scholars and craftsmen; he rebuilt his cathedral (dedicated in 1077) and very probably commissioned the *Bayeux Tapestry.

There are references in E. A. Freeman, The History of the Norman Conquest of England (6 vols., 1867–79), F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (1943; 3rd edn., 1971), and S. E. Gleason, An Ecclesiastical Barony of the Middle Ages: The Bishopric of Bayeux, 1066–1204 (Harvard Historical Monographs, 10; 1936), esp. pp. 8–17. D. C. Douglas (ed.), The Domesday Monachorum of Christ Church, Canterbury (1944), esp. pp. 33–6, 54–8; id., 'The Norman Episcopate before the Norman Conquest', Cambridge Historical Journal, 13 (1957), pp. 101–15, passim; D. R. Bates, 'The Character and Career of Odo, Bishop of Bayeux (1049/50–1097)', Speculum, 50 (1975), pp. 1–20. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 41 (1895), pp. 424–6; J. Brownbill in G. E. Cockayne, The Complete Peerage, 2nd edn. by V. Gibbs and others, 7 (1929), pp. 124–9.

Oecolampadius, Johannes (1482–1531), Reformer. His real name was 'Hussgen'. A native of Weinsberg in Württemberg, he studied in Heidelberg, Bologna, and Basle, acquiring a very good knowledge not only of theology but also of Greek and Hebrew. In 1515 he helped J. *Froben with the printing of *Erasmus' Greek–Latin New Testament and he wrote the notes at the end of it. In 1516 he was appointed cathedral preacher in Augsburg. In order to avoid having to take up a position on the ideas of M. *Luther, he entered a *Bridgettine monastery in 1520, but left it in 1522 to throw in his lot with the Reformers. On his return to Basle in the same year, his influence led to the adoption by the city of Reformation principles, which were accepted by the Canton of Berne in 1528. In the latter year he also married. At the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529) he defended the Eucharistic doctrine of U. *Zwingli. Of a retiring and tolerant disposition, Oecolampadius is thought to be the first Reformer to have advocated lay participation in Church government. His ideas on this subject were rejected in Basle; it is a matter of debate whether they had a direct influence on J. *Calvin.

E. Staehelin (ed.), Briefe und Akten zum Leben Oekolampads (vol. 1, 1499–1526, Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 10; vol. 2, 1527–93, ibid. 19; 1927–34). Life by W. *Capito prefixed to his edn. of Oecolampadius' Comm. on Ezek. (Strasbourg, 1534 [no pagination]); also to the edn. of Ioannis Oecolampadii et Huldrichi Zwingli Epistolae (Basle, 1536 [no pagination]); Eng. tr. in [H. Bennet], A Famous and Godly History (1561 [no pagination]). Modern Lives by J. J. *Herzog (2 vols., Basle, 1843) and K. R. Hagenbach (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, 2, 1859, pp. 3–306). E. Staehelin, Das theologische Lebenswerk Johannes Oekolampads (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 21; 1939). [E.] G. Rupp, Patterns in Reformation (1969), pp. 1–46. K. Hammer, 'Oecolampads Reformprogramm', Theologische Zeitschrift, 37 (1981), pp. 149–63. H. R. Guggisburg 'Johannes Oekolampad', in M. Greschat (ed.), Reformationszeit, 1 (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 5; 1981), pp. 117–28. E. Staehelin, Oekolampad-Bibliographie (2nd edn., Nieuwkoop, 1963). U. Gäbler in TRE 25 (1995), pp. 29–36, s.v. 'Oekolampad, Johannes', with bibl.

Oecumenical Councils (Gk. οἰκουμένη, 'the whole inhabited world'). Assemblies of bishops and other ecclesiastical representatives of the whole world whose decisions on doctrine, cultus, discipline, etc., are considered binding on all Christians. Acc. to the teaching of most Christian communions outside the RC Church there have been no Oecumenical Councils since the schism between E. and W., the last being the second of *Nicaea in 787. Acc. to present RC *canon law (CIC (1983), cans. 337–41, 749) the Pope alone has the right to convene an Oecumenical Council, to preside over it (in person or through deputies), and to approve its decrees. As the oecumenicity of a Council is now held to depend on the co-operation of the Pope, the *Conciliar theory that there can be an appeal from the Pope to a Council is inadmissible. If the Apostolic See becomes vacant during a Council, it is interrupted until a new Pope orders it to be continued or dissolves it. Only bishops now have the right to take part in an Oecumenical Council with a deliberative vote; others may be called to it and the degree of their participation is then determined ad hoc. Under certain conditions the college of bishops gathered in an Oecumenical Council is held to possess infallible teaching authority.

Seven Councils are commonly held both in E. and W. to be oecumenical. These are, with their dates and the chief subjects dealt with: (1) *Nicaea I (325, *Arianism); (2) *Constantinople I (381, *Apollinarianism); (3) *Ephesus (431, *Nestorianism); (4) *Chalcedon (451, *Eutychianism); (5) *Constantinople II (553, *Three Chapters Controversy); (6) *Constantinople III (680–1, *Monothelitism); (7) Nicaea II (787, *Iconoclasm).

The RC Church reckons the following 14 further Councils as possessing oecumenical authority: (8) Constantinople IV (869–70, *Photian Schism); (9) *Lateran I (1123, *Investiture Controversy); (10) Lateran II (1139, *Arnold of Brescia, etc.); (11) Lateran III (1179, Papal elections, etc.); (12) Lateran IV (1215, *Waldenses, etc.); (13) *Lyons I (1245, *Frederick II); (14) *Lyons II (1274, Reunion, etc.); (15) *Vienne (1311–12, *Templars); (16) *Constance (1414–17, *Great Schism—the oecumenicity of the Council before the election of *Martin V is disputed); (17) *Basle–*Florence (1431–45, Reform and Union with the Greeks); (18) Lateran V (1512–17, Reform); (19) *Trent (1545–63, *Protestantism and Reform); (20) *Vatican I (1869–70, Papal Infallibility, etc.); (21) *Vatican II (1962–5, Renewal of the Church).

In the C of E the Thirty-Nine Articles assert that General Councils 'may err, and sometimes have erred, even in things pertaining unto God', and that what they ordain is to be tested by reference to Scripture (Art. 21). The Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum (1553) states that General Councils are regarded with honour and that the decisions of the first Four in particular are 'accepted and received with great reverence' (De Summa Trinitate et Fide Catholica, ch. 14). By s. 36 of the Act of *Supremacy 1558 the powers of those assigned to correct ecclesiastical abuses were limited in matters of heresy by the decisions of the first Four Councils and the authority of the Canonical Scriptures. R. *Hooker and L. *Andrewes uphold the authority of the first Four, while the Book of Homilies ('against Peril of Idolatry', pt. 2), R. *Field and H. *Hammond accept the first Six. It appears, however, that such Councils are ultimately revered in the C of E on the ground that their decisions are acceptable rather than vice versa.

Decrees of the Councils, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990). G. Tangl, Die Teilnehmer an den allgemeinen Konzilien des Mittelalters (Weimar, 1932). H. Chadwick, 'The Origin of the Title "Oecumenical Council"', JTS NS 23 (1972), pp. 132–5. See also bibl. to individual Councils.

Oecumenical Patriarch (Gk. οἰκουμενικὸς πατριάρχης, lit. 'patriarch of the whole inhabited world'). The style borne by the Abps. or Patrs. of *Constantinople since the 6th cent. It was occasionally used also of other prelates from the middle of the 5th cent. Its exact significance is nowhere officially defined, but the title has been attacked in the W. as incompatible with the claims of the see of Rome.

Oecumenius (6th cent.), author of the oldest extant Greek Comm. on Rev., to whom tradition has assigned the designations 'Rhetor' and 'Philosopher'. Little is known of his life, but he appears to have been a contemporary and supporter of *Severus of Antioch. His Comm., one of but three on the Apocalypse in Greek from the first millennium, was rediscovered by F. Diekamp and published by H. C. Hoskier in 1928. The exposition, vigorous, modest, but uneven, accepts the Apocalypse as a divinely inspired canonical Book, relevant not only for its immediate situation but for the understanding of the past and the future. It cites no earlier Comm., but its authorities include St *Athanasius, St *Basil, St *Gregory of Nazianzus, and *Evagrius Ponticus. This 6th-cent. expositor is not to be confused with Oecumenius, Bp. of Tricca in Thessaly (10th cent.), to whom Comm. on Acts and the Pauline and Catholic Epistles (printed in PG 118–19) have been ascribed. Fragments from Comm. on the Pauline Epistles in the catenae*, ascribed to Oecumenius of Tricca, may, however, belong to the author of the Comm. on Rev.

H. C. Hoskier (ed.), The Complete Commentary of Oecumenius on the Apocalypse (University of Michigan Studies, Humanistic Series, 23; 1928). F. Diekamp, 'Mittheilungen über den neuaufgefundenen Commentar des Oekumenius zur Apokalypse', Sb. (Berl.) (1901) (2), pp. 1046–56; id., 'Neues über die Handschriften des Oekumenius-Kommentares zur Apokalypse', Biblica, 10 (1929), pp. 81–4. Frags. from catenae are pr. by K. Staab, Pauluskommentare aus der griechischen Kirche (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 15; 1933), pp. 423–69. A. Spitaler, 'Zur Klärung des Ökumeniusproblems', Oriens Christianus, 3rd ser. 9 (1934), pp. 208–15; additional notes by J. Schmid, ibid., pp. 216–18. J. Schmid, 'Ökumenios der Apokalypsen-Ausleger und Ökumenios der Bischof von Trikka', Byzantinisch-neugriechische Jahrbücher, 14 (1938), pp. 322–30. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 394 f. (nos. 7470–5).

Oekonomos, Constantinos. See OIKONOMOS, CONSTANTINE.

Oengus, St (8th–9th cent.), Irish saint, commonly, though perhaps erroneously, called the *Culdee, author of the Félire, or verse *martyrology, known by his name. The traditional account of his career is based on a Middle Irish poem appended to one copy of this. He was educated and spent the later part of his life in the community at Clonenagh, Co. Laoise, and in the nearby hermitage of Dísert Bethech. At some point he joined the fraternity of Tallaght, nr. Dublin, where he collaborated with St Máel Rúain (d. 792) on the compilation of the Martyrology of Tallaght, a prose catalogue of saints, including many Irish ones, which is the oldest of the Irish martyrologies, and which was a major source for his own. Both martyrologies in their extant form can be dated *c.*800, or more likely *c.*830. Feast day, 11 March.

W. Stokes (ed.), Félire Oengusso Céli Dé: The Martyrology of Oengus the Culdee (HBS 29; 1905), with Eng. tr. and notes. Biog. poem, with Eng. tr., ibid., pp. xxiv–xxvi. 'The Life and Works of St Aengusius Hagiographus, or St Aengus the Culdee', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 5 (1869), pp. 1–29, 73–81, and 97–108. R. Thurneysen, 'Die Abfassung des Félire von Oengus', Zeitschrift für celtische Philologie, 6 (1907), pp. 6–8; P. Ó Riain, 'The Tallaght Martyrologies, Redated', Cambridge Medieval Celtic Studies, 20 (1990), pp. 21–38.

Offa (d. 796), King of the Mercians from 757. He gained the Mercian throne after a short civil war which followed the death of Ethelbald, and he gradually secured dominion, either directly or as overlord, over other parts of England south of the Humber, including Kent, Sussex, and East Anglia. It seems that he lost control of Kent (and perhaps of Sussex as well) following the Battle of Otford in 776, but his authority in the south-east was re-established by 785. Yet despite the extent of his power, he was styled no more than rex Merciorum in his charters and on his coins. The surviving portions of Offa's Dyke, constructed for the control of his frontier with the Welsh, are an index of the great resources at his disposal. He corresponded with *Charlemagne, and his dealings with Pope *Hadrian I led to a visit of two Papal legates to England in 786 and to the creation of a new archbishopric at *Lichfield in 787 (suppressed in 803); also in 787 his son Ecgfrith (d. 796) was anointed king—the first recorded consecration of an English king. Offa formed an enmity with Jaenberht, Abp. of *Canterbury (765–92), but he was remembered in many quarters as a generous benefactor of the Church; he is the reputed founder of the abbeys of *St Albans and *Bath.

Charters of King Offa are listed, with reference to their places of pub. and comments, in P. H. Sawyer, Anglo-Saxon Charters: An Annotated List and Bibliography (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 6; 1968), pp. 98–109 (nos. 104–47); several are forgeries. Eng. tr. of docs. from his reign in D. Whitelock (ed.), English Historical Documents c.500–1042 (2nd edn., 1979), pp. 836–51 (nos. 191–8), incl. the report of Hadrian's legates and letters of Charlemagne and Alcuin to Offa. F. M. Stenton, Anglo-Saxon England (Oxford History of England, 2; 3rd edn., 1971), pp. 202–38. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 111–23.

Offertory. In the Eucharistic liturgy:

(1) The worshippers' offering of the bread and wine (and water) to be consecrated. In the Roman and derived rites, including the Anglican liturgy, it takes place at a relatively late point in the service (after the lections and the Creed), i.e. at what was originally the beginning of the 'Mass of the Faithful'. Until recently it was normally performed by the celebrant on behalf of the people; at Milan, however, representatives of the people (*Vecchioni) continued to offer the gifts, and in the current Roman rite a group of the laity bring the bread and wine, as well as other gifts including money, to the altar while a chant is sung. In the E. rites, the offertory, with its elaborate cutting up and arranging of the bread, takes place at the *prothesis at the outset of the whole service (see *Proskomide), the elements being solemnly brought to the altar at the '*Great Entrance' (ἡ μεγάλη εἴσοδος).

(2) The word is also used for the short anthem, first mentioned in St *Augustine (Retract. 2. 11), formerly sung in the Roman rite at the time of the act of offering. Originally a whole psalm, by the 8th cent. it had been reduced to one or two verses and it came to consist (except at *Requiem Masses) of only an antiphon, proper to each Mass. It is now frequently replaced by a hymn or other chant.

Full discussion, with bibl. refs., in Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 3–125; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 1–100. R. Cabie in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (édition nouvelle), 2 [1983], pp. 93–101, 174–181, and 219–23; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 76–84, 157–64, and 203–7. A. Clark, 'The Function of the Offertory Rite in the Mass', EL 64 (1950), pp. 309–44. R. Berger, Die Wendung 'Offerre pro' in der römischer Liturgie (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 41; 1964). K. [W.] Stevenson, 'L'Offrande Eucharistique. La Recherche sur les origines établit-elle une différence du sens?', Maison Dieu, 154 (1983), pp. 81–106. P. Tirot, OSB, 'Histoire des Prières d'Offertoire dans la liturgie romaine du VII^e au XVI^e siècle', EL 98 (1984), pp. 148–97 and 323–91. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 1946–62, s.v. 'Offertoire'; A. C. Clark in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 649–51, s.v. See also bibl. to SACRIFICE.

Office, Divine (Officium Divinum). The daily public prayer of the Church, also called in the RC Church since the Second *Vatican Council the 'Liturgy of the Hours'. Its recitation at stated times differentiates it from other liturgical services.

The Divine Office developed slowly and it is only in the 4th cent. that its main outlines can be clearly discerned. The practice of saying prayers at fixed hours was general among the Jews and was doubtless taken over by the first Christians, though the hours of prayer may not have been identical and the content would certainly have been different. It would seem from the first that parts of the Psalter were used in Christian prayer (cf. Acts 4: 23–30), and that such prayer was Christological cannot be doubted. The writer of the Didache* (8) urged that the Lord's Prayer be recited three times a day, though he does not specify these times and his recommendation does not exclude the likelihood that other prayers were added to it. In the 2nd and 3rd cents. the practice of praying night and morning, as well as at the third, sixth, and ninth hours was known in both E. and W. (*Clement of Alexandria, *Origen, *Tertullian, *Cyprian, and perhaps *Hippolytus); if these were private prayers they were not individualistic and were sometimes at least said in families or small communities. Tertullian seems to have thought that morning and evening prayer was so customary as to be obligatory (Orat. 25).

The early monks ('Desert Fathers') sought to implement the NT injunction to pray constantly by making their prayer ceaseless. They used very long sections of the Psalter at a time, and different groups of monks sometimes took over from one another, so that prayer went on day and night. This practice influenced the organization of the Office by St *Basil in the E. and *Cassian in the W., and ultimately the whole Church. The monastic Offices of the hours of the night and day came into existence: namely *Mattins and *Lauds, *Terce, *Sext, *None, *Vespers, and *Compline. *Prime, it would seem, originated in the vicinity of *Bethlehem and was adopted by Cassian.

At the same time in cathedrals and non-monastic churches there was a simpler pattern of morning and evening prayer which the laity as well as the clergy were encouraged to attend. Fewer Psalms were used and they were chosen for their suitability to the time of day. In some places a reading from the Bible and/or a homily might be included. There were intercessions and a final prayer. From the 5th cent. the great basilicas of Rome were served by monastic communities; these added to morning and evening prayer both the other day hours and the Night Office or Vigils. It was on this Office of the Roman basilicas that St *Benedict based the Office of his Rule, in which he included *responsories, *antiphons, *hymns, and an ordered course of biblical readings, as well as redistributing the Psalms. This Benedictine Office in turn influenced the cathedral Office and led to a gradual development of liturgical prayer throughout the W. Church. By the 8th cent. the cycle of Day Hours and Mattins (or Night Office) had become the general pattern for all the clergy, secular as well as monastic. The Roman basilicas, however, retained much of their own tradition. Hymns were admitted into their Office only in the 12th cent. and the course of readings was different from that used elsewhere. The Papal Curia, however, developed a shorter Office. Because of the growing prestige of the Papacy and its Curia, by the end of the 12th cent. this curial Office came to be regarded as that of the Roman Church. St *Francis of Assisi adopted it for his friars and its use was propagated throughout Europe, though local traditions survived.

In principle the whole Psalter was to be recited each week and the course of readings was to include most of the Bible, but since various elements in the Office (antiphons, responsories, hymns, canticles, and prayers) differed acc. to the day or season, a large number of books was needed to recite the Office. The difficulty was partly overcome by arranging the texts in one, two, or three volumes; from this arrangement the *Breviary developed. The process led to the reduction in the length of biblical readings. The proliferation of saints' days (with their own Psalms) interfered with the recitation of the Psalter, while the 'legends' of saints tended to displace the Scripture readings. By the end of the Middle Ages the Office was in some confusion.

In the early 16th cent. attempts at reform were made, notably by Cardinal F. de *Quiñones, but his Breviary (Breviarium S. Cruce) was never formally adopted in the RC Church. The Council of *Trent ordered the abolition of the more apocryphal legends, and the Breviarium Romanum issued by *Pius V in 1568 made it possible to recite the whole Psalter in a week by reducing the number of saints' days which interrupted the ferial Office. In 1911 *Pius X shortened the Office by redistributing the Psalms and again altered the rubrics so that only the more important feasts were allowed to interfere with the regular recitation of the Psalter.

A complete reordering of the Offices in the RC Church was achieved by the Liturgy of the Hours issued by *Paul VI in 1971. This provides for an *Office of Readings, which may be said at any time during the day, Lauds, a midday Office (see TERCE, SEXT, NONE), Vespers, and Compline, which is to be said before retiring. The Psalter (apart from three Psalms omitted altogether) is distributed over a month, and most parts of the Bible (except the Gospels, which are included in the Mass lectionary) are read every year. There are also readings from the Fathers and later writers. The general shape of the Offices follows the traditional pattern, though the hymn now always comes at the beginning of the Office; in Lauds and Vespers a short responsory has been introduced after the reading and these two Offices now always include 'Preces' or Prayers, in the case of Vespers of an intercessory character.

All RC priests and deacons aspiring to the priesthood, as well as all professed religious whose rule requires it, are obliged to the daily recitation of the Office. Clerics with pastoral responsibility are urged to arrange that at least some of the Offices are recited in church and the laity are encouraged to attend. Various religious orders (now technically known as Religious *Institutes) have their own Offices which differ somewhat from the Roman, esp. in the matter of saints' days, and some religious are also bound to recite a Night Office. See also BREVIARY; MONASTIC BREVIARY; and under individual Offices.

In the C of E at the Reformation the traditional Offices were combined into Morning and Evening Prayer (Mattins and *Evensong). In addition to the changes introduced into these services by modern revisions of the BCP, in recent years there has been some restructuring of the Office in some parts of the Anglican Communion, e.g. provision for Noonday Prayer in the American BCP (1979). Anglican religious orders have used a number of Offices, largely based on those of the RC Church.

J. Grancolas, Commentaire historique sur le bréviaire romain (2 vols., 1727). F. *Probst, Brevier und Breviergebet (1854); P. *Batiffol, Histoire du bréviaire romain (1893; Eng. tr., 1898); S. *Bäumer, OSB, Geschichte des Breviers (1895; Fr. tr. with addition by R. Biron, OSB, 2 vols., 1905); C. Callewaert, De Breviarii Romani Liturgia (2nd edn.; Liturgicae Institutiones, 2; Bruges, 1939); J. Pascher, Das Stundengebet der römischen Kirche [1954]; J. A. Jungmann, SJ (ed.), Brevier Studien [1958]; P. Salmon, OSB, L'Office divin: Histoire de la formation du bréviaire (1959); id., L'Office divin au moyen âge: Histoire de la formation du bréviaire du IXe au XVIe siècle (1967). S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, and J. Hazelden Walker, The Origins of the Modern Roman Liturgy: The Liturgy of the Papal Court and the Franciscan Order in the Thirteenth Century (1960); Mgr. Cassien, B. Botte, OSB, and others, La Prière des heures (Lex Orandi, 35; 1963); J. D. Crichton, Christian Celebration: The Prayer of the Church [1976]; C. [P.] Jones, G. Wainwright, and E. [J.] Yarnold, SJ (eds.), The Study of Liturgy (1978), pp. 350–402 (2nd edn., 1992, pp. 399–454); P. F. Bradshaw, Daily Prayer in the Early Church: A Study of the Origin and Early Development of the Divine Office (*Alcuin Club Collections, 63; 1981); id., 'Cathedral vs. Monastery: The Only Alternative for the Liturgy of the Hours?', in J. N. Alexander (ed.), Time and Community: In Honor of Thomas Julian Talley (Washington, DC [1990]), pp. 123–36. R. Taft, SJ, The Liturgy of the Hours in East and West: The Origin of the Divine Office and its Meaning for Today (Collegeville, Minn. [1986]). M. Righetti, UJD, Manuale di storia liturgica, 2 (2nd edn., 1955), pp. 471–715. P. Salmon in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (3rd edn., 1965), pp. 809–902, and A. G. Martimort in op. cit. (1983–4 edn.), 4, pp. 169–293 (Eng. tr., 1986, pp. 151–275), with bibl.

Office, Holy. See HOLY OFFICE.

Office Hymns. *Hymns appear as a fixed part of the Monastic Office already in the Rule of St *Benedict, though they were not generally used in the Roman liturgy until the 12th cent. The 1568 *Breviary provided a hymn to be sung at *Mattins (except during the last days of *Holy Week and a few other occasions) and at the Little Hours before, and at *Lauds, *Vespers, and *Compline after, the Psalms. The hymns of the Little Hours and Compline were substantially the same throughout the year; those of the other hours varied acc. to feast and season. The 1971 Breviary places the hymns before the Psalms in all the offices; it provides two series of hymns for use at each office, which in the case of Lauds and Vespers are to be used on alternate weeks, in the case of the *Office of Readings acc. to whether the Office is said in the day or at night; and it allows conferences of bishops to introduce new hymns.

Many ancient Office Hymns are contained (in English versions) in modern hymnals, e.g. 'Lucis Creator Optime' ('O Blest Creator of the Light'; from Sunday Vespers), 'Te lucis ante terminum' ('Before the Ending of the Day'; from Compline), '*Pange lingua gloriosi Corporis mysterium' ('Of the glorious Body telling'; from the Vespers of *Corpus Christi).

Office of Readings. The Office in the 1971 *Breviary which replaced *Mattins. It may be said at any time of the day. It opens with a versicle and response, followed by the *Invitatory (if it is the first Office of the day). A hymn is recited; then come three Psalms (or one Psalm divided into three parts) with antiphons, and two Lessons or Readings. The first of these Readings is taken from Scripture, the second from the works of one of the Fathers or some other Christian writer; on the feast of a saint it may come from a Life of the saint commemorated. There are responsories after the Lessons. On Sundays and greater feasts the *Te Deum follows. The Office ends with the collect for the day.

Official Principal (also Official). In Anglican ecclesiastical law, the person to whom a bishop formerly entrusted the exercise of his coercive jurisdiction. Since the bishop had the right of sitting with the Official Principal in the court (a practice in fact seldom adopted), it became known as the '*Consistory Court' (the two together forming unum consistorium). Under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963 the office is now combined with that of *Chancellor in a single judge. Against his sentence there is no appeal to the bishop.

Acc. to RC canon law, every diocesan bishop is normally bound to appoint (in addition to his *vicar general) an officialis or judicial vicar, who constitutes one tribunal with the bishop but cannot judge cases which the bishop reserves to himself (CIC (1983), can. 1420).

For bibl. See CHANCELLOR.

Oikonomos, Constantine (1780–1857), Greek scholar and theologian. A keen Greek patriot, his ecclesiastical career was more than once interrupted by political activities. He was the author of a very long and elaborate work on the *Septuagint entitled Περὶ τῶν ο´ Ἑρμηνευτῶν (i.e. On the Seventy Interpreters, 4 vols., Athens, 1844–9) which, though setting out from wrong premisses (e.g. belief in the inspired character of the Septuagintal text as against the Hebrew), contains many valuable investigations. Oikonomos also wrote several works on philology and the history of literature. He made it one of his chief aims to oppose W. influences, which had assumed increasing prominence in Greek religious life since the middle of the 18th century.

Works partly repr. by his son, S. Oikonomos (3 vols., Athens, 1862–6). A. Papaderos, Metakenosis: Griechenlands kulturelle Herausforderung durch die Aufklärung in der Sicht des Korais und des Oikonomos (Archiv für vergleichende Kulturwissenschaft, 6; Meisenheim am Glan, 1970). P. Meyer in PRE (3rd edn.), 14 (1904), pp. 299–304, s.v. 'Oekonomos'.

oils, holy. See CHRISM.

Olav, St (995?–1030), Olav Haraldsson, patron saint of *Norway and King from 1016 to 1028. After some years raiding the English and French coasts, he was baptized at Rouen. Shortly afterwards, in 1015, he returned to Norway and, by defeating Earl Svein at the battle of Nesjar in 1016, became King. At the time Christianity was still struggling to gain a foothold in the country. Olav's wholehearted support was to prove decisive in the long run, but the harshness of his methods provoked resistance; the nobles rallied around Canute the Great and Olav was forced to flee to Russia. When he tried to regain his kingdom in 1030, he was killed at the battle of Stiklestad (north of Trondheim). After only a year he was regarded as a saint. His shrine at Nidaros (Trondheim) was a famous place of pilgrimage in the Middle Ages. Feast day, 29 July.

He is not to be confused with Olav Tryggvason, King of Norway, 995–9.

Life by Øystein [Augustine], Abp. of Trondheim (1161–88), pr. in AASS, Jul. 7 (1731), pp. 113–15; more complete edn., with useful introd., by F. Metcalfe, Passio et Miracula Beati Olaui (Oxford, 1881). The Saga of St Olave written by Snorre Sturlason (1172–1241) has been pr. several times as part of his Heimskringla, e.g. in the edn. of F. Jónsson, as vol. 2 (Copenhagen, 1896); Eng. tr. by E. Monsen and A. H. Smith (Cambridge, 1932), pp. 218–474. An expanded version of various Olav Sagas was ed. O. A. Johnsen and J. Helgason (Norsk Historisk Kjeldeskrift-Institut, 2 vols., Oslo, 1941). Modern Life (in Norwegian) by V. Henriksen (Oslo, 1985). St Olav, seine Zeit und sein Kult (Acta Visbyensia, 6: Visbysymposiet för historiska vetenskaper, 1979; Visby, 1981). F. B. Wallem and B. I. Larsen, Iconographia Sancti Olavi (Det kgl. Norske Videnskabers Selskabs Skrifter 1930, no. 1; Trondheim, 1947). B. Dickins, 'The Cult of S. Olave in the British Isles', Saga-Book of the Viking Society, 12 (1945), pp. 53–80, with refs. G. Turville-Petre, The Heroic Age of Scandinavia (1951), pp. 140–64.

Old Believers. The section of the Russian Orthodox Church which, under the leadership of the Archpriest Avvakum (1620/1–81), refused to accept the liturgical reforms of the patriarch *Nikon (d. 1681). They were excommunicated in 1667, called 'Raskolniki', i.e. schismatics, and violently persecuted, esp. during the first 80 years of the schism and again under Nicholas I (1825–55). They included a great body of peasants and many of the more devout priests, and received large reinforcements when Peter the Great (1682–1725), whom they believed to be the Antichrist, tried to Europeanize Russia. Since no bishops seceded from the Established Church, however, they were left without a hierarchy and split up into two sections: the one, called 'Popovtsy', who sought means of establishing their own priesthood, the other, 'Bezpopovtsy', who denied its necessity. The former had to be content with the ministrations of discontented priests coming to them from the Orthodox Church until, in 1846, a deposed bishop, Ambrose of Bosnia, joined them and established a hierarchy. From that time the Popovtsy steadily increased in number and importance (though some of them were reconciled to the Church) and they were officially recognized by the state in 1881. The Bezpopovtsy, on the other hand, split up into a great number of sects, many of them adopting the most extravagant doctrines and practices, but they remained a comparatively small minority. Both factions survived the Revolution and still exist. The anathemas imposed on the Old Believers in 1667 were lifted by the Russian Orthodox Church in 1971, but the schism has not been healed.

The Life of the Archpriest Avvakum, written by himself in 1672 or 1673 [an apologia as well as a biog.], ed. from his autograph (Petrograd, 1916); Eng. tr. by J. Harrison and H. Mirrlees (London, 1924; repr. 1963). The main secondary lit. is in Russian. F. C. *Conybeare, Russian Dissenters (Harvard Theological Studies, 10; 1921), pp. 13–258, with refs.; P. Pascal, Avvakum et les débuts du Raskol: La crise religieuse au XVII^e^ siècle en Russie (Bibliothèque de l'Institut Français de Léningrad, 18; 1938; repr., with additional material, 1963). M. Cherniavsky, 'The Old Believers and the New Religion', Slavic Review, 25 (1966), pp. 1–39; A. Lambrechts, 'Les Vieux-Croyants en U.R.S.S.', Irénikon, 59 (1986), pp. 314–37. B. Marchadier in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 127–34, s.v. 'Raskol', with bibl. See further bibl. to RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN; also to NIKON.

Old Catholics. A group of small national Churches, consisting of Christians who have at various times separated from Rome. Since 1932 they have been in full communion with the C of E. They are composed of three sections:

(1) The Old Catholic Church in the *Netherlands, sometimes called the Church of Utrecht. This owed its origin to the papal handling of the *Jansenist controversy, and more particularly the deposition in 1702 of Petrus Codde (1648–1710), the Vicar Apostolic of the area, and the subsequent dispute as to whether the province and diocese of Utrecht had survived or ceased to exist at the Reformation. In 1723 the Chapter of Utrecht, acting independently of Rome, elected Cornelius Steenoven Abp. of Utrecht; he was consecrated in 1724 by Dominique Marie Varlet, Bp. of Babylon, who had fallen foul of the Roman authorities for exercising episcopal function when passing through the Netherlands, but whose own consecration had been perfectly regular; through him the Old Catholics maintained the *apostolic succession. On Steenoven's death Varlet consecrated his successor in 1725. To strengthen the Church two former bishoprics were re-established: Haarlem in 1740 and Deventer in 1758. The Old Catholic Church in the Netherlands enjoyed wide support in the 18th cent., but in the 19th cent. declined in importance as the RC Church regained the adherence of much of the Catholic population.

(2) The German, Austrian, and Swiss Old Catholic Churches. This group of Churches was created from those Christians who refused to accept the dogmas of the Infallibility and universal ordinary jurisdiction of the Pope, as defined by the *Vatican Council of 1870, and seceded from the RC Church shortly afterwards. The movement was temporarily strengthened by those who joined them for political reasons, owing to the strained relations between the Prussian Government and the Roman Curia (see KULTURKAMPF). Their organization was partly the work of Conferences, presided over by von *Döllinger at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875, and attended by members of the Old Catholic, Anglican, Orthodox, Lutheran, and other Churches, among the Anglican representatives being the Bp. of *Winchester (E. H. *Browne) and H. P. *Liddon. The Old Catholics received their episcopal succession from the Church of Utrecht; the first German bishop, J. H. *Rein-kens (with see at Bonn), was consecrated in 1874, and the first Swiss bishop, E. Herzog (with see at Berne), in 1876. Owing to the opposition of the government, bishops were not consecrated for the Austrian communities till much later. A bishop of Warnsdorf (Bohemia) was consecrated in 1924 and of Vienna in 1925. In 1939 the three bishoprics of Bonn, Warnsdorf, and Vienna were united into one Church. They have since been separated.

(3) Some small groups of Slav origin. National Church movements among the Poles in the USA (1897) and the Croats (1924) resulted in the establishment of the 'Polish National Catholic Church', with four bishoprics in America and one in Poland, and of the 'Yugoslav Old Catholic Church' (see also MARIAVITES).

The doctrinal basis of the Old Catholic Churches is the 'Declaration of *Utrecht' (q.v.), agreed upon by the five Old Catholic bishops in 1889. The Old Catholics recognize the same seven *Oecumenical Councils as the E. Orthodox Church, and those doctrines accepted by the Church before the *Great Schism of 1054. The bishops, as well as the rest of the clergy, are permitted to marry. All services are in the vernacular. Communion is now generally given in both kinds. Auricular confession is not compulsory.

The Old Catholic communion formally recognized *Anglican Ordinations in 1925, and entered into full communion with the C of E in 1932, on the basis of an agreement reached at Bonn on 2 July 1931. The *Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and most other Anglican Churches, have since also established intercommunion. Old Catholic bishops have several times taken part in the consecration of Anglican bishops in London, using their own formula (Accipe Spiritum Sanctum, etc.), and in 1937 Anglican bishops took part in the consecration of Andreas Rinkel as Abp. of Utrecht. There are no Old Catholic communities in any English-speaking country except the USA, where their work is entirely among Poles and other foreigners. Various small sects which sometimes call themselves 'Old Catholic' are not recognized by the Old Catholic Churches referred to above.

The term 'Old Catholic' is also applied to RCs in England of older (esp. *recusant) background in contrast to converts from the *Oxford Movement and later and immigrants.

F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia: Eine Sammlung von Selbstdarstellungen der christlichen Kirchen, 3. 2 (1935), 'Die altkatholische Kirche'; C. B. Moss, The Old Catholic Movement: Its Origins and History (1948). J. M. *Neale, History of the So-called Jansenist Church of Holland (1853); J. F. von Schulte, Der Altkatholicismus: Geschichte seiner Entwicklung, inneren Gestaltung und rechtlichen Stellung in Deutschland (1887), with docs. and bibl.; P. Gschwind, Geschichte der Entstehung der christkatholischen Kirche der Schweiz (2 vols., Berne, 1904–10). G. Huelin (ed.), Old Catholics and Anglicans 1931–1981 (Oxford, 1983). Quarterly periodical Revue internationale de Théologie (Berne, 1893–1910), with changed title Internationale kirchliche Zeitschrift (ibid., 1911 ff.). See also the Reports of Old Catholic International Conferences. J. F. von Schulte in PRE (3rd edn.), 1 (1896), pp. 415–25; W. Küppers in TRE 2 (1978), pp. 337–44, both s.v. 'Altkatholizismus'; L. Cristiani in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2980–8, s.v. 'Vieux-Catholiques'.

Oldcastle, Sir John (*c.*1378?–1417), *Lollard leader and rebel. He was a knight of Herefordshire who became, by his marriage in 1408, Lord Cobham. In 1413 he was accused of heresy before Convocation, and upheld Lollard opinions. He was given 40 days to recant, but escaped from the Tower of London before their expiration. He then put himself at the head of a conspiracy for a Lollard rebellion, which, however, collapsed. He remained in hiding till 1417, when he was captured and executed. He was reputed to have been the boon companion of the young Henry V, and this traditional figure of Sir John Oldcastle was the basis of Shakespeare's Falstaff.

W. T. Waugh, 'Sir John Oldcastle', EHR 20 (1905), pp. 434–56 and 637–58; H. G. Richardson, 'John Oldcastle in hiding, Aug.–Oct. 1417', ibid. 55 (1940), pp. 432–8. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952), pp. 160–83. J. Tait in DNB 42 (1895), pp. 86–93. See also works cited s.v. LOLLARDS.

Oldham, Joseph Houldsworth (1874–1969), missionary statesman and leader of the *Ecumenical Movement. The son of Col. George Oldham, RE, he was born in India and educated in Scotland and at Trinity College, Oxford. After a year as General Secretary of the British Colleges Christian Union (1896–7), he was secretary of the *YMCA in Lahore (1897–1901). Invalided home, he studied theology at New College, Edinburgh, and at Halle in Germany. He was promoting missionary study for the *SCM when, in 1908, he was appointed organizing secretary of the World Missionary Conference which met in *Edinburgh in 1910. He was secretary of the Conference's Continuation Committee and edited the International Review of Missions, launched in 1912. He worked to rescue German missions from wartime extinction, to restore relationships with German Churchmen, and to inaugurate the International Missionary Council (1921), of which he was joint secretary. His work for Africa is considered by many the outstanding feature of his career. Called on by the missionaries to pursue with the government the question of indentured labour in East Africa, he became progressively involved in helping to create a missionary policy in education and in voicing a missionary opinion in the debate on the political future of colonial territories. In 1934 he became chairman of the Research Commission of the Universal Christian Council for '*Life and Work'; he thus initiated the preparations for the *Oxford Conference of 1937 (q.v.) and arranged the 1938 conference at Utrecht which set up the provisional committee for a *World Council of Churches. As secretary first of the Council on the Christian Faith and the Common Life (1939–42) and then of the Christian Frontier Council (1942–5), he edited the Christian News Letter throughout the Second World War. He became an Anglican in mid-career and remained a layman.

K. Bliss in DNB, 1961–1970, pp. 806–8, s.v.

Old Latin Versions. The Latin versions of the Scriptures in use in the Church before they were superseded by the *Vulgate. In S. Gaul and N. Africa a vernacular translation was needed sooner than in Rome (where the use of Greek continued until well into the 3rd cent. and all the earliest bishops bore Greek names), and the existence of the Scriptures in Latin in those two provinces is attested before the end of the 2nd cent. Several independent versions came into currency. One form, known as the 'African Old Latin', is very clearly defined. Its African provenance is proved by its use in the biblical quotations in St *Cyprian, and it is represented for example in the Gospels by the fragmentary 'Codex Bobiensis' ('k', 4th–5th cent., now at Turin; see BOBBIO), less exactly by the 'Palatinus' ('e', 5th cent., at Vienna). The MSS of the Old Latin differ greatly among themselves, and it was largely the desire to remedy the inconveniences arising out of such differences that led *Jerome (who asserted that there were almost as many different texts as MSS) to undertake his Vulgate. For large parts of the Bible no MSS are extant, and knowledge of the text derives entirely from such quotations as are preserved in the writings of the Fathers. See also ITALA and MANUSCRIPTS OF THE BIBLE.

The fullest presentation of the evidence for the whole Bible is still Pierre *Sabatier, OSB, Bibliorum Sacrorum Latinae Versiones Antiquae, seu Vetus Italica (3 vols., fol., Reims, 1743[–9]; repr. Paris, 1751). This is being superseded by B. Fischer, OSB, and others (eds.), Vetus Latina (Freiburg i.B., 1949 ff.); and for the Gospels only by A. *Jülicher and others (eds.), Itala: Das Neue Testament in altlateinischer Überlieferung (4 vols., Berlin, 1938–63; 2nd edn. of vols. 1–3, 1970–6). Several of the chief MSS were pr. separately by the Clarendon Press in the series of Old Latin Biblical Texts (7 vols., 1883–1923). I. Levin, The Quedlinburg Itala: The Oldest Illustrated Biblical Manuscript (Litterae textuales, codicologica, 8; Leiden, 1985). T. A. Marazuela, La Vetus Latina Hispana (Madrid, 1953 ff.). F. Stummer, Einführung in die lateinische Bibel (1928), pp. 4–76 ('Die lateinische Bibel vor Hieronymus'). H. Rönsch, Itala und Vulgata (1869; 2nd edn., 1875; mainly philological). B. Fischer, OSB, and others, Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel (Freiburg i.B., 1957 ff., esp. vol. 12: B. Fischer, Beiträge zur Geschichte der lateinischen Bibeltexte, 1986). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 285–330. P.-M. Bogaert, 'La Bible latine des origines au moyen âge. Aperçu historique, état des questions', Revue théologique de Louvain, 19 (1988), pp. 137–59 and 276–314, with bibl. Current 'Bulletin de la bible latine' in R. Bén. B. Botte, OSB, in Dict. Bibl. Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 334–47, s.v. 'Latines (versions) antérieures à S. Jérôme'. See also bibl. to VULGATE.

Old Roman Catholic Church. A small community tracing its episcopal orders to A. H. *Mathew. It has congregations in Britain, USA, Canada, and the West Indies. It uses the *Tridentine liturgy current in the RC Church before the changes associated with the Second *Vatican Council. It is not under the authority of the Papacy.

Old Roman chant. The musical repertory, which accompanies a form of the Roman rite with some special features, is found in five MSS dating from 1071 to the middle of the 13th cent. It is usually considered to be a precursor of the Gregorian chants, to which it is closely related, and to have been retained in the basilicas and title-churches after the latter had been adopted by the Papal court. However, neither repertory in its present form is now thought to be as old as Pope *Gregory I, and it may be that both are derived from a simpler original (see PLAINSONG).

The repertory of the Mass is ed. M. Landwehr-Melnicki (Monumenta Monodica Medii Aevi, 2; Kassel, etc., 1970), with introd. by B. Stäblein, pp. 3*–164*; facsimile of the 'Gradual' of Santa Cecilia in Trastevere (Cod. Bodmer 74), dated 1071 [containing the music of the Mass], ed., with introd. and comm., by M. Lütolf (Bibliotheca Bodmeriana, Texte, 2; 2 vols., Cologny and Geneva, 1987). R. J. Snow in W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958], pp. 484–505; S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, 'The Urban and Papal Rites in Seventh and Eighth-Century Rome', Sacris Erudiri, 12 (1961), pp. 411–87; id., 'The Old Roman Rite', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 5 (1962), pp. 185–205.

Old Roman Creed. An earlier and shorter form of the *Apostles' Creed (q.v.), which at least from the end of the 2nd cent. was the official baptismal creed of the Church of Rome. It is first found, in an interrogatory form, in the Apostolic Tradition of St *Hippolytus (d. 235), and an almost identical text, but in a declaratory form, is attested in the 4th cent. by *Marcellus of Ancyra (ap. *Epiphanius, Haer. 72. 3) and *Rufinus of Aquileia (Comm. in Symbol.). It is also found in Codex E of Acts in the *Bodleian (Laud. gr. 35) and in an 8th cent. MS in the British Library (Royal 2 A XX).

The subject is necessarily discussed in all books dealing with the history of the Apostles' Creed (see bibl.). J. *Ussher, De Romanae Ecclesiae Symbolo Apostolico Veteri, aliisque Fidei Formulis (London, 1647). Modern studies dealing specifically with the Old Roman Creed include the brilliant essays by K. *Holl, 'Zur Auslegung des 2. Artikels des sog. apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses', Sb. (Berl.), 1919, pp. 2–11; A. *Harnack, 'Zur Abhandlung des Hrn. Holl: Zur Auslegung des 2. Artikels des sog. apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses', ibid., pp. 112–16; H. *Lietzmann, 'Die Urform des apostolischen Glaubensbekenntnisses', ibid., pp. 269–74. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Symbole romain au second siècle', R. Bén. 39 (1927), pp. 33–45; id., 'Les Origines du symbole romain', RTAM 2 (1930), pp. 5–20. P. Smulders, SJ, 'The Sitz im Leben of the Old Roman Creed', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 13 (TU 116; 1975), pp. 409–21. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), esp. pp. 100–66. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 82–90; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 85–87 and 558.

Old Syriac Version. The Syriac translation of the NT which circulated in the Syriac-speaking Church before the construction of the *Peshitta ('Vulgate') version early in the 5th cent. Only two MSS of the Old Syriac are known, both of the Gospels. The 'Curetonian' recovered by H. *Tattam from Egypt in 1842 was printed privately by W. *Cureton in 1848 and published in 1858. The 'Sinaitic' was found and photographed towards the end of the 19th cent. in the monastery of St Catherine on Mt. *Sinai by Mrs Lewis and Mrs Gibson of Cambridge. (The latter is not to be confounded with the Greek *Codex Sinaiticus discovered by C. *Tischendorf.) The existence of an Old Syriac text of Acts is attested by St *Ephraem Syrus' Commentary (which has survived, however, only in *Armenian). The readings of the Old Syriac NT are closely allied to those of the so-called *Western text, and in the Gospels are often under the influence of the *Diatessaron.

The best edn. of the Curetonian text (Sinaitic as apparatus) is in F. C. *Burkitt, Evangelion Da-Mepharreshe (2 vols., Cambridge, 1904), of the Sinaitic text (Curetonian as apparatus) that of Mrs A. S. Lewis (London, 1910). Facsimile edn. of the Sinaitic text by A. Hjelt (Helsingfors, 1930). I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ (ed.), Vetus Evangelium Syrorum et exinde excerptum Diatessaron Tatiani (Biblia Polyglotta Matritensia, 4; Madrid, 1967). A. Hjelt, 'Die altsyrische Evangelienübersetzung und Tatians Diatessaron besonders in ihrem gegenseitigen Verhältnis', in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Geschichte des neutestamentlichen Kanons, 7 (pt. 1; 1903); Hjelt defends priority of Old Syriac over the Diatessaron. A. Vööbus, Studies in the History of the Gospel Text in Syriac (CSCO 128; 1951); id., Early Versions of the New Testament (Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile, 6; Stockholm, 1954), esp. pp. 73–88; B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 36–48. Graphic account of the discovery of the 'Sinaitic' text in A. W. Price, The Ladies of Castlebrae (1985), pp. 125–35. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 870–2, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions), III'.

Old Testament (Gk. Παλαιὰ Διαθήκη, Lat. Vetus Testamentum). Term denoting the collection of Canonical Books which the Christian Church shares with the Synagogue, together with (in Catholic and Orthodox Churches) certain other ancient Jewish Books not now accepted as canonical by the Jews (the *Apocrypha). In Jewish tradition the OT is divided into three parts: the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings. The Law (*Torah) consists of the first five Books, i.e. the *Pentateuch; the 'Prophets' are divided into the 'Former Prophets' (i.e. most of the historical Books) and the 'Latter Prophets' (Is., Jer., Ezek., and the *Minor Prophets); and the 'Writings' are the remainder of the OT (incl. Dan., Ezra-Nehemiah and 1 and 2 Chron.). Christian tradition, reflected in the conventional arrangement of English Bibles, divides it into 'historical' Books (the Pentateuch plus the 'Former Prophets'), 'didactic' Books (Job, Pss., Prov., etc.), and 'prophetic' Books (= the Hebrew 'Later Prophets'). Like the NT, the OT Books are regarded as inspired in the Church, which from the time of *Marcion has consistently defended them against attacks. The term 'Old Testament' is now sometimes regarded as unacceptably pejorative by both Jews and Christians, and 'Hebrew Bible' is then preferred.

Olier, Jean-Jacques (1608–57), founder of the Society and seminary of *Saint-Sulpice (q.v.). He studied philosophy and theology in his native Paris and was provided with ecclesiastical benefices at an early age. He went to Rome in 1630 to study Hebrew, but was threatened with the loss of his eyesight. On a pilgrimage to *Loreto he was cured and converted to a deeply religious life. In Paris he was ordained priest in 1633 and came under the influence of St *Vincent de Paul and then of C. de *Condren; he conducted missions in various parts of France. His main vocation, however, was the training of priests. After an unsuccessful attempt at *Chartres in 1641, he established a seminary at Vaugirard. When he became parish priest of Saint-Sulpice in Paris in 1642, he transferred the seminary there. He was responsible for the building of a new parish church as well as the seminary buildings; on the pattern of his seminary others were started. He sought to reform his parish which had a large population of libertines, atheists, *Huguenots, and *Jansenists. He also wanted to rid it of actors, including Molière who left for the provinces. The parish was divided into eight districts with a priest in charge of each; schools, catechism classes, homes for women, and charitable organizations for the poor ('Compagnie de charité') were established. Among the rich he led the movement against *duelling.

Both in his seminary and in the Society of Saint-Sulpice Olier adhered to the *Tridentine conception of the priesthood as totally dedicated and to the value of informed catechetical teaching. His was a community of secular priests, pursuing a common aim, but without religious vows. In 1657 he sent priests to start a seminary in Montreal.

Olier's spirituality was centred on the need for self-abasement, turning from a devotion to Christ's humanity to His divinity. His teaching owed much to St Vincent de Paul and to Condren. His published writings include La Journée chrétienne (1655; ed. F. Amiot, 1954); Catéchisme chrétien pour la vie intérieure (1656; ed. F. Amiot, 1954); Explication des cérémonies de la grande messe de paroisse selon l'usage romain ('1656'; really 1657); Introduction à la vie et aux vertus chrétiennes (1658; ed. F. Amiot, 1954); Lettres spirituelles (1672; ed. E. Levesque, 2 vols., 1935); and Pietas Seminarii Sancti Sulpitii (1815). His authorship of the Traité des saints ordres, published under his name in 1676, has recently been challenged.

Œuvres ed. J. P. *Migne (Paris, 1856). Modern Lives by E. M. Faillon (2 vols., ibid., 1841; Eng. Life by E. H. Thompson based entirely on that of Faillon, London, 1861), L. A. F. Monier, PSS (vol. 1 only; posthumously pub. by E. L[evesque], Paris, 1914), P. Pourrat, PSS (ibid., 1932), and A. Portaluppi (Milan, 1947). C. Letourneau, La Mission de Jean-Jacques Olier et la fondation des grands séminaires en France (1906). M. Dupuy, Se Laisser à l'Esprit: Itinéraire spirituel de Jean-Jacques Olier (1982). C. Chaillot, P. Cochois, and I. Noye, all PSS, Traité des Saints Ordres (1676) comparé aux écrits authentiques de Jean-Jacques Olier (†1657) (1984), incl. text. Bremond, 3 (1921), pp. 419–507; L. Cognet, La Spiritualité Moderne, 1 (1966), pp. 399–406. E. Levesque in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 963–82; I. Noye and M. Dupuy in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 737–51, s.v., both with detailed bibl.

Oliver Plunkett, St. See PLUNKETT, ST OLIVER.

Olives, Mount of. The highest point in the range of hills to the E. of *Jerusalem, rising to 2,600 ft. above sea-level, and separated from the city by the Valley of Jehoshaphat through which flows the brook *Cedron. Near its foot is the Garden of *Gethsemane (q.v.). It was aptly described by A. P. *Stanley as 'The Park' of Jerusalem in NT times. From the frequent refs. in the Gospels it would appear that Christ often resorted to the Mt. of Olives. He was met here by the crowd on *Palm Sunday (Mk. 11: 1 and 11: 7), and from this mount He ascended to Heaven (Acts 1: 2–12). The traditional site of the Ascension was marked by a Church known as the 'Imbomon' (ἐν βωμῷ; prob. 'at the summit'), built by a matron Poemenia before 378. Another church on the slopes, the 'Eleona' (ὁ Ἐλαιών; 'the olive yard'), also dating from the 4th cent., was built over a grotto where Christ was believed to have discoursed to the disciples on the Last Things (Mk. 13).

The most comprehensive study is H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem: II, Jérusalem nouvelle (1914), pp. 328–419 ('Les Sanctuaires du mont des Oliviers'). B. Bagatti, OFM, and J. T. Milik, Gli scavi del 'Dominus Flevit', pt. 1 (Pubblicazioni dello Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, 13; 1958); S. J. Saller, OFM, The Excavations at Dominus Flevit, pt. 2 (ibid., 1964). W. J. Heard in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 13–15.

Olivetan (*c.*1506–38), Protestant Reformer. His real name may have been Pierre Robert. It used to be thought that he was dubbed 'Olivetanus' from burning the midnight oil, but this story has been discredited. A native of Noyon in Picardy and a cousin of J. *Calvin, he began his studies at Orléans in 1528. Here his adoption of *Lutheran doctrines forced him to flee to Strasbourg, where he became a competent Hebrew and Greek scholar. From 1532 to 1535 he preached Reformation doctrines to the *Waldenses in Neuchâtel and for the purposes of his mission work translated the Bible into French. The OT was done direct from the Hebrew, but the *Apocrypha and NT were only a revision of the version of *Faber Stapulensis. Calvin contributed two prefaces, but is not now thought to have been involved in the work of translation. The version was published at Neuchâtel in June 1535. In his last years he helped Calvin in organizing the Reformation at *Geneva.

Short study by C. A. Négrier (Montauban Diss., 1891). G. Casalis and B. Roussel (eds.), Olivétan: Traducteur de la Bible. Actes du colloque Olivétan, Noyon, mai 1985 (Paris, 1987), with bibl. pp. 191–6. M. Engammare, 'Quelques prénoms sans nom. A la recherche du patronyme de "l'humble et petit translateur" de la première Bible réformée en langue française', Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, 133 (1987), pp. 413–31. G. Bonet-Maury in PRE (3rd edn.), 14 (1904), pp. 363 f., s.v.

Olivetans (The Congregation of Our Lady of Mount Olivet). A monastic *Congregation of *Benedictine monks founded in 1319 by Giovanni Tolomei (Bl Bernard Ptolomei, d. 1348) at Monte Oliveto, near Siena. They joined the Benedictine Confederation in 1960. They follow a strict interpretation of the rule, and for a period in their history they were total abstainers from wine. They wear a white habit. The Congregation is now international, and includes the well-known Abbey of *Bec.

S. Lancellotti, Historiae Olivetae (Venice, 1623). Anthony of Braga's Chronicon Montis Oliveti (1313–1450) ed. P. Lugano, OSB (Spicilegium Montolivetense, 1; Florence, 1901). P. Lugano, OSB, Origine e primordi dell'ordine di Montoliveto, 1313–1450 (ibid. 2; 1903). M. Scarpini, OSB, I Monaci Benedettini di Monte Oliveto (Alessandria [1952]). Saggi e ricerche nel VII centenario della nascita del B. Bernardo Tolomei (1272–1972) (Monte Oliveto, 1972), incl. articles on the Olivetans. Life of Giovanni Tolomei by B. M. Maréchaux, OSB (Paris, 1888). J. C. Almond, OSB, in CE 11 (1911), p. 244, s.v.; G. Picasso, OSB, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1493–6, s.v. 'Congregazione Benedettina Olivetana', with bibl.

Olivi, Petrus Joannis (*c.*1248–98), *Spiritual Franciscan. Born at Sérignan in Hérault, Languedoc, at the age of 12 he entered the *Franciscan Order and studied at Paris. His zeal for the strict observance of the rule led him to be consulted by Nicholas III in 1279 about Franciscan poverty. As leader of the rigorists in the Order, he was accused of heresy in the General Chapter of Strasbourg in 1282; and after examination by seven masters his works were censured in 34 propositions (1283). At the General Chapter of Montpellier (1287), however, he established his orthodoxy, which was confirmed at Paris in 1292. He became lector in various convents (Nîmes, Florence, Montpellier). After his death the Spiritual Franciscans accorded him exaggerated veneration, and though in the decretal 'Fidei Catholicae Fundamento' at the Council of *Vienne in 1311 certain propositions believed to be his (on the moment at which the Lord's body was transfixed by the lance; on the manner of the soul's union with the body; on infant baptism) were repudiated, his name was not mentioned. In 1326 *John XXII condemned his Postilla super Apocalypsim (pub. 1700). His other works include Quaestiones on the Sentences, Quodlibets*, Commentaries on Genesis, Job, the Psalms, the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, the Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ezekiel, the Minor Prophets, the Four Gospels, and the Epp. to the Romans and Corinthians, Expositio Dionysii de Angelica Hierarchia and various works on the Franciscan Order.

'Quaestiones in Secundum Librum Sententiarum', ed. B. Jansen (Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, 4–6; Quaracchi, 1922–6); 'Quaestio de Angelicis Influentiis', ed. F. Delorme, OFM, in his edn. of St *Bonaventure's 'Collationes in Hexaëmeron' (ibid. 8; 1934), pp. 363–417; 'Quaestiones de Incarnatione et Redemptione', ed. A. Emmen, OFM, and 'Quaestiones de Virtutibus', ed. E. Stadter (ibid. 24; Grottaferrata, 1981); 'Quaestiones Quatuor de Domina', ed. D. Pacetti, OFM (Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, 8; Quaracchi, 1954); his comm. on the Franciscan Rule ed., with full introd., by D. Flood (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, 67; Wiesbaden, 1972); 'De emptionibus et venditionibus, de usuris, de restitutionibus', ed. G. Todeschini (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, 125–6; 1980); extracts from further works ed. F. M. Delorme, 'Textes franciscains, I. L'Explication littérale du Pater selon Pierre-Jean Olivi', Archivio italiano per la Storia della Pietà, 1 (1951), pp. 181–203. F. *Ehrle, 'Petrus Johannis Olivi, sein Leben und seine Schriften', Archiv für Litteratur- und Kirchengeschichte, 3 (1887), pp. 409–552. R. Manselli, La 'Lectura super Apocalipsim' di Pietro di Giovanni Olivi: Ricerche sull'escatologismo medioevale (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, 19–21; 1955). E. Bettoni, OFM, Le dottrine filosofiche di Pier di Giovanni Olivi (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del S. Cuore, NS 73 [1959]). C. Partee, OFM, 'Petrus John Olivi: Historical and Doctrinal Study', Franciscan Studies, 20 (1960), pp. 215–60. D. Burr, Olivi and Franciscan Poverty (Philadelphia [1989]). H. Lee, M. [E.] Reeves, and G. Silano, Western Mediterranean Prophecy (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 88; Toronto [1989]), pp. 17–26, with refs. S. Gieben, OFM Cap., 'Bibliographia Oliviana (1885–1967)', Collectanea Franciscana, 38 (1968), pp. 167–95. G. Gál, OFM, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 219 f., s.v. 'Peter John Olivi'; P. Péano, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 751–62, s.v. 'Olieu'.

Ollé-Laprune, Léon (1839–98), French philosopher. From 1875 he was professor of philosophy at the École Normale Supérieure at Paris, where he became the leading lay exponent in France of a Catholic system of philosophy. He stressed the limits of a purely intellectual approach to the issues of philosophy along lines which had affinities with the teaching of J. H. *Newman in England, and in his emphasis on the part played by the will and the heart in cognition prepared the ground for such later influences in French culture as H. *Bergson, M. *Blondel, and the *Modernist Movement. His writings include La Philosophie de Malebranche (1870), De la certitude morale (1880), and La Philosophie et le temps présent (1890).

M. Blondel, Léon Ollé-Laprune: L'achèvement et l'avenir de son œuvre (Paris, 1923). E. Boutroux, 'Notice sur la vie et les œuvres de M. Léon Ollé-Laprune', Mémoires de l'Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques de l'Institut de France, 25 (1907), pp. 207–42. G. Goyau in CE 11 (1911), pp. 246 f., s.v.; H. de Gensac in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 782–4, s.v. See also bibl. to MODERNISM.

Oman, John Wood (1860–1939), *Presbyterian theologian. From 1889 to 1907 he was minister at Alnwick, Northumberland. From 1907 to 1935 he was professor at, and from 1925 to 1935 principal of, Westminster College, Cambridge. His early interest in F. D. E. *Schleiermacher, of whose Speeches on Religion he published a translation in 1893, indicates the direction of his thought.

Holding the uniqueness and independence of the religious consciousness as an immediate, self-authenticating awareness of the Supernatural, he nevertheless insisted that it should not be isolated from other spheres of experience. In The Natural and the Supernatural (1931) he set forth a powerful philosophic justification of his position. Esp. important in this work is his treatment of the idea of the sacred, which differed notably from, as it had in fact antedated in his class-room teaching, R. *Otto's treatment of the 'Holy'. On the side of doctrine, Oman's theology might be said to be the theology of 'sincerity'. The inner authority of truth determined his understanding of personality, of sin and grace, of the Church, sacraments, and ministry. His other writings include Vision and Authority (1902), The Church and the Divine Order (1911), Grace and Personality (1917).

Memoirs of the author by G. Alexander and H. H. Farmer prefixed to Oman's posthumously pub. Honest Religion (1941), pp. xv–xxv and xxvi–xxxii respectively. A Dialogue with God and Other Sermons and Addresses was also posthumously pub. by F. H. Ballard [son-in-law] (London [1952]). F. G. Healey, Religion and Reality: The Theology of John Oman (1965), with list of his works, pp. 153–5. S. Bevans, SVD, John Oman and his Doctrine of God (Cambridge, 1992). Obituary note by F. R. Tennant in Proceedings of the British Academy, 25 (1939), pp. 333–8, with portrait. H. H. Farmer in DNB, 1931–1940 (1949), pp. 657 f.

Omar, Mosque of. See DOME OF THE ROCK.

ombrellino. In the W. Church the small umbrella-like canopy of white silk sometimes carried over the Blessed Sacrament when it is moved informally from one place to another.

omophorion. The long scarf, originally of wool and now a piece of embroidered white silk or velvet, about 10 inches wide, worn in the E. Church by bishops round the shoulder and falling loose towards the ground. It corresponds to the *pallium in the Latin Church. It is worn at the Liturgy and when the bishop officiates at other rites. There are two forms, a larger one worn until the end of the Epistle (when it is laid aside as a sign of self-effacement for the reading of the Gospel) and a shorter one from the *Cherubicon until the end of the service.

Braun, LG, pp. 664–74.

Oneida Community. A Christian communist society established in 1848 at Oneida, Madison County, NY, by John Humphrey Noyes (1811–86). The body was also known as the Perfectionists, from their insistence that true sinlessness could be realized through communion with Christ. They also maintained that marriage was not a binding contract between husband and wife, but an arrangement under the control of the community. At first their activities were mainly agricultural, but later they included industry and the Community became a very prosperous body. In 1881 it was formed into a joint-stock company.

A. Estlake, The Oneida Community (1900); M. L. Carden, Oneida: Utopian Community to Modern Corporation (Baltimore, 1969); C. N. Robertson [granddaughter of J. H. Noyes] (ed.), Oneida Community: An Autobiography, 1851–1876 (Syracuse, NY, 1970); id., Oneida Community: The Breakup, 1876–1881 (ibid., 1972). J. McK. Whitworth, God's Blueprints: A Sociological Study of Three Utopian Sects (1975), pp. 89–166. R. A. Parker, Yankee Saint: J. H. Noyes and the Oneida Community (1935).

Onesimus, St. The Phrygian slave on whose behalf St *Paul wrote his Ep. to *Philemon. St Paul perhaps plays on his name, which means 'profitable', in Philem. v. 11 ('which in time past was to thee unprofitable, ἄχρηστον, but now profitable, εὔχρηστον, to thee and to me'). Acc. to tradition, he suffered martyrdom. Feast day, in W., 16 Feb.; E., 15 Feb. (also 22 Nov.)

The NT Onesimus has often been identified with the Onesimus, Bp. of Ephesus, mentioned in *Ignatius, Ad Eph. 1. 3; but the name is too common to make this more than a conjecture. P. Lampe in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 21 f., s.v., with bibl. See also comm. to PHILEMON, cited s.v.

Ontological Argument. A classical argument for God's existence holding that the concept of God entails the real existence of God. It was first elaborated by St *Anselm, who urged that God must exist since 'God' means 'that than which nothing greater can be conceived' (id quo nihil majus cogitari possit) and since nothing lacking extra-mental existence could be that than which nothing greater can be conceived. The argument was also championed by R. *Descartes and G. W. *Leibniz and it has been defended in the 20th cent. by certain exponents of modal logic (the logic of possibility and necessity), incl. C. Hartshorne and A. Plantinga. Major critics of it include St *Thomas Aquinas (who denied that we have a definitional knowledge of what God is), I. *Kant and G. Frege (who denied on logical grounds that existence can be part of the definition of anything).

The subject regularly finds a place in philosophical discussions of belief in God as well as in works on the philosophers mentioned above. Anselm's formulation of the argument can be found in his Proslogion (J. P. Migne, PL 158. 223–42); Eng. tr. with repr. of the text from the edn. of Anselm's works by F. S. Schmitt, OSB, and full discussion, by M. J. Charlesworth (Oxford, 1965). Eng. tr. of texts and some modern discussions in A. Plantinga (ed.), The Ontological Argument from St Anselm to Contemporary Philosophers (New York, 1965; London, 1968). G. Frege, Die Grundlagen der Arithmetik (Breslau, 1884; Eng. tr. by J. L. Austin, The Foundations of Arithmetic, Oxford, 1950), para. 53 (pp. 64 f.). K. *Barth, Fides Quaerens Intellectum: Anselms Beweis der Existenz Gottes (Forschungen zur Geschichte und Lehre des Protestantismus, Reihe 4, 3, 1931; 2nd edn., Zollikon, 1958; Eng. tr., 1960). C. Hartshorne, The Logic of Perfection and other Essays in Neoclassical Metaphysics (La Salle, Ill. [1962]), ch. 2: 'Ten Ontological or Modal Proofs for God's Existence', pp. 28–117; id., Anselm's Discovery: A re-examination of the Ontological Proof for Existence (ibid. [1965]). J. [H.] Hick and A. C. McGill (eds.), The Many-Faced Argument: Recent Studies on the Ontological Argument for the Existence of God (New York [1967]; London, 1968). A. Plantinga, The Nature of Necessity (Oxford, 1974), pp. 196–221.

Ontologism. A philosophical system favoured by certain Catholic philosophers, chiefly in Italy and France, during the 19th cent. The name first appears in the Introduzione allo studio della filosofia (1840) of the Italian statesman V. *Gioberti, who, with A. *Rosmini, may be regarded as the principal exponent of the system. Ontologism claims descent from *Plato and *Augustine, and positions akin to those of the ontologists are common to the whole Augustinian tradition of philosophers (e.g. St *Anselm, R. *Descartes, N. *Malebranche). In reaction from the sceptical trend of post-Kantian speculation, the ontologists asserted that God Himself is the guarantee of the validity of human ideas; that all human knowledge, itself a mode of truth, implies an immediate intuition of uncreated Truth; and that the idea of being, which is the first and simplest idea of all, is an immediate perception of absolute Being. A set of seven 'Errores Ontologistarum' was condemned by the *Inquisition on 18 Sept. 1861.

The condemned propositions are repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 783 f. (nos. 2841–7). Introduction by B. [M. G.] Reardon, Liberalism and Tradition: Aspects of Catholic Thought in Nineteenth-Century France (Cambridge, 1975), pp. 159–81; id., Religion in the Age of Romanticism (ibid., 1985), pp. 146–75. G. M. Sauvage in CE 11 (1911), pp. 259 f., s.v.; A. Fonck in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1000–61, s.v. 'Ontologisme', with full bibl.; D. Cleary in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 701–3, s.v. See also bibl. to GIOBERTI, V., and ROSMINI-SERBATI, A.

ontology (from Gk. τὸ ὄν, stem ὀντ-, 'that which is'; λόγος, 'discourse'). The branch of metaphysics which deals with being in general rather than this or that being. It investigates the nature of existence as such and the sense in which different things can be said to be. 'Ontology' also sometimes signifies the underlying presumptions about existence of any given world-view or conceptual scheme.

Ophites and Naassenes (Gk. ὄφις, Heb. נָחָשׁ, 'serpent'). *Gnostic sects which derived their names from the special importance which they attached to the serpent; it is not entirely clear whether they were connected. The Ophites (or Ophians) are mentioned by *Irenaeus and *Origen, the Naassenes only by *Hippolytus; the Ophite system recalls biblical accounts, and may be early, while the Naassene has a larger element of other material. The Naassenes were among the groups, like the Peratae and the Sethians, whose systems involved three primal principles. An Ophite diagram is described by Origen, and a Naassene hymn is quoted by Hippolytus. Since the serpent induced Adam and Eve to eat of the tree of knowledge (γνῶσις) (Gen. 3), it might be expected to have an honourable place among the Gnostics, but some sects saw it as a hostile power.

The principal sources are Hippolytus, Haer. 5; Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 30 Origen, Contra Celsum, 6. 24 ff. Convenient Eng. tr. in W. Foerster, Gnosis, 1 (tr. ed. R. McL. Wilson, Oxford, 1972), pp. 84–99, and 261–82. R. *Reitzenstein, Poimandres (1904), pp. 81–101. F. Legge, Forerunners and Rivals of Christianity, 2 (Cambridge, 1915, repr., New York, 1964), pp. 25–85; W. Foerster, 'Die Naassener', Studi di storia religiosa della tarda antichità pubblicati dalla cattedra di storia delle religioni dell'Università di Messina (Messina, 1968), pp. 21–33; J.-D. Kaestli, 'L'interprétation du serpent de Genèse 3 dans quelques textes gnostiques et la question de la gnose "ophite"', in J. Ries (ed.), Gnosticisme et monde hellénistique: Actes du Colloque de Louvain-la-Neuve, 11–14 mars 1980 (Publications de l'Institut Orientaliste de Louvain, 27; 1982), pp. 116–30. G. *Salmon in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 80–8; G. Bornkamm in PW 18 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 654–8; G. Quispel in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 1178 f., all s.v.

Optatus, St (fl. 370), Bp. of Milevis in N. Africa. Nothing is known of him save his treatise against the Donatists, of which books 1–6 appeared about 367, and a revision, with book 7, about 385. The common title, 'Against Parmenian the Donatist' (Bp. of Carthage), is a deduction from the text, not found in any ancient writer or manuscript. Book 1 relates the origins of *Donatism and 2–6 argue that the Donatist sect cannot be the One, Holy, Catholic Church. The argument turns mainly on the lack of 'catholicity' among the Donatists, but Optatus also attacks their claim to 'holiness'. Book 3 has some treatment of the problem of Church and State; 5 discusses Baptism; and 7 offers repentant Donatists readmission to the Church. An appendix ('dossier') of important historical documents has deservedly received much attention from modern scholars. Optatus' telling arguments formed the starting-point for St *Augustine's developed refutation of Donatism. Feast day, 4 June.

Editio princeps by J. *Cochlaeus (Mainz, 1549; based on a single indifferent MS). Best of earlier edns. by L. E. *Dupin (Paris, 1700); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 11. 759–1556. Crit. edn. by C. Ziwsa (CSEL 26; 1893). Eng. tr. with introd. and notes by O. R. Vassall-Phillips, CSSR (London, 1917). S. Blomgren, Eine Echtheitsfrage bei Optatus von Mileve (Acta Academiae Regiae Scientiarum Upsaliensis, 5; 1959). A. C. de Veer, AA, 'A propos de l'authenticité du livre VII d'Optat de Milev', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 7 (1961), pp. 389–91. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 122–7. H. W. Phillott in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 90–3, s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1077–84, s.v. 'Optat de Milève'; A. Stuiber in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 706 f., s.v.

On the 'dossier', see also D. Völter, Der Ursprung des Donatismus (1883); O. Seeck, 'Urkundenfälschungen des 4. Jahrhunderts. I. Das Urkundenbuch des Optatus', ZKG 30 (1909), pp. 181–227; L. *Duchesne, 'Le Dossier du donatisme', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, 10 (1890), pp. 589–650; N. H. Baynes, 'Optatus', JTS 26 (1925), pp. 37–44 and 404–6. C. H. *Turner, 'Adversaria Critica: Notes on the Anti-Donatist Dossier and on Optatus, Books I, II', ibid. 27 (1926), pp. 283–96. J.-L. Maier, Le Dossier du Donatisme, 1 (TU 134; 1987), passim.

See also bibl. to DONATISM.

option. The right formerly possessed by an archbishop, when about to consecrate a bishop, of choosing within the latter's see some benefice to which he could act as patron at the next vacancy. The word is also used of the right of members of certain Cathedral or Collegiate chapters to secure at choice a particular benefice or title. *Cardinals may transfer by option, with Papal approval, to a title other than the one originally assigned to them.

Opus Dei (Lat., 'the work of God'). An old *Benedictine designation of the Divine *Office, to express the belief that this, the monk's special duty of prayer, is his first responsibility to God.

Opus Dei is also the name of a RC organization devoted to fostering the application of Christian principles to daily living by those engaged in all walks of life. Originally consisting exclusively of lay men, it was founded in Madrid on 2 Oct. 1928 by the Bl Josemaría Escrivá (1902–75), an Aragonese priest who became its president general. Two years later he set up a branch for women and in 1943 the Society of the Holy Cross for priests, inseparably united to Opus Dei. Opus Dei was approved by the Holy See in 1950 and in 1982 the *Personal Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei was established, giving the organization considerable independence of local bishops. Over a thousand priests are *incardinated in the Prelature. Lay members are encouraged to retain their social position and to pursue their profession, and esp. in Spain they have exercised considerable influence in public affairs, not without criticism. Corporately Opus Dei maintains a number of educational establishments, esp. residences for students and conference centres, in many parts of the world, notably the University of Pamplona.

D. le Tourneau, L'Opus Dei (Paris, 1984; Eng. tr., What is Opus Dei?, Cork [1987]).

opus operatum. See EX OPERE OPERATO.

Oracles, Sibylline. See SIBYLLINE ORACLES.

Orange, Councils of. Two synods held at Orange ('Arausio') in the S. of France in 441 and 529 respectively. The former, which took place under the presidency of St *Hilary of Arles, issued 30 canons, which deal mainly with disciplinary matters. The latter is of great importance for its 25 dogmatic capitula. These capitula upheld many of St Augustine's doctrines on the nature of grace as against the *Semipelagianism previously current in the region, though the Council repudiated any predestination of man to evil. Later these decrees were confirmed by Pope Boniface II (531).

On the Council of 441, Hardouin, 1, cols. 1783–8; Mansi, 6 (1761), cols. 433–52. C. Munier (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 76–93. Hefele and Leclercq, 2 (pt. 1; 1908), pp. 430–54, with bibl. refs. See also bibl. to HILARY OF ARLES.

On the Council of 529, Hardouin, 2, cols. 1097–104; Mansi, 8 (1762), cols. 711–24; C. de Clercq (ed.), Concilia Galliae A. 511–A. 695 (CCSL 148A; 1963), pp. 53–76, repr., with Fr. tr. and notes by J. Gaudemet and B. Basdevant, Les Canons des Conciles Mérovingiens (VIe–VIIe siècles), 1 (SC 353; 1989), pp. 152–85; 'capitula' also ed. F. *Maassen in MGH, Legum Sectio III, Concilia, 1 (1893), pp. 44–54; Eng. tr. of principal clauses in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 86 f. On the vexed question of the relation between the capitula of the Council of Orange and the so-called Capitula S. Augustini in urbem Romam transmissa, see the edn. of the latter by F. Glorieux, Maxentii ... Opuscula (CCSL 85A; 1978), pp. 241–73, with comments of J.-P. Bouhot in Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 25 (1979), pp. 377–9, with further refs. M. Cappuyns, OSB, 'L'Origine des "Capitula" d'Orange 529', RTAM 6 (1934), pp. 121–42. O. Pontal, Die Synoden im Merowingerreich (1986), pp. 67–71 (rev. Fr. tr. [1989], pp. 94–99), with refs. G. Fritz in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1087–103, s.v. 'Orange (Deuxième Concile de)'.

Orangism. The movement defending the cause of Protestantism in *Ireland, maintained by the Orange Association (founded 1795). The word Orange in this connection probably derives directly or mediately from King William 'of Orange' (i.e. William III), and thus ultimately from the town of Orange in the S. of France (cf. previous entry). Members of the Orange Association are known as Orangemen.

orarion (Gk. ὠράριον). In the E. Church, the deacon's stole. It is a narrow band of material, worn over the left shoulder, and hangs straight down back and front; sometimes, before being left free to hang down in front, it is passed below the right arm, then attached once more to the left shoulder, and so hung down in front. While reciting prayers, the deacon holds it in his hand. At the time of Communion, it is crossed round the body.

Orate, fratres (Lat., 'Pray, brethren'). The opening words and hence the name of the sentence addressed by the celebrant to the people at *Mass, immediately after the *Offertory. It asks the prayers of the people before the *Eucharistic Prayer, and, with the response, emphasizes the unity of the congregation with the priest in the offering of the Sacrifice. The formula seems to have originated in Italy in the 11th century.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 103–12; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 82–90.

Oratorians. (1) The Oratory of St Philip Neri. This, the original 'Oratory', grew out of the community of priests that had gathered round the saint (1564), the name being derived from the oratory at S. Girolamo, Rome, where they held their 'Exercises'. In 1575 they were erected into a congregation, and in 1612 their constitutions were sanctioned by *Paul V. The congregation spread quickly through Italy, Spain, South Germany, Poland, and South America. Though almost destroyed by the revolutions of the 18th and early 19th cents., they have revived in a number of countries. J. H. *Newman introduced them into England, in 1848 founding the Oratory at Old Oscott (later the Birmingham Oratory) and in 1849 that in London, which moved to its present site in Kensington in 1854 (the *Brompton Oratory).

St Philip's Oratory is a congregation of secular priests living in community without vows, those with private means supporting themselves. Each house is independent and elects its superior for three years. There is no central organization, though since 1958 there has been a 'Delegate of the Apostolic See' who acts as Visitor. The chief task of the Oratorians is to lead men to God by prayer, frequent popular preaching, and the Sacraments; and there is always a priest in the confessional. In conformity with the intentions of their founder, they lay stress not only on liturgy but also on attractive services, and esp. on good music; the modern 'oratorio' grew out of the laudi spirituali sung in their devotional exercises. The congregation has produced a number of scholars, among whom C. *Baronius and G. D. *Mansi are the best known.

(2) The French Oratory was founded in 1611 by P. de *Bérulle at Paris, and approved by Papal bull under the name of the 'Oratoire de Jésus-Christ' in 1613. It spread quickly through France and other European countries, esp. the Netherlands. Like the institute of St Philip, it was intended for the sanctification of secular priests and for the rehabilitation of the priestly office among the laity. Though formed on the Italian model, the French Oratory differs mainly in that it is a centralized organization governed by a Superior-General. One of its chief activities was the training of priests in *seminaries, run on the lines laid down by the Council of *Trent. The popularity of the French Oratory was temporarily eclipsed by the *Jansenist propensities of some of its members, esp. the two Superior-Generals, Père A. L. de Sainte-Marthe (1672–96) and Père de la Tour (1696–1733). The Oratory was dissolved in the French Revolution, but re-established in 1852 by L. P. Pététot and A. J. A. *Gratry as 'Oratoire de Jésus-Christ et de Marie Immaculée'.

The Oratorians, who have been excellent educationists and directors, have contributed much to the furtherance of popular devotion in France. Despite the Jansenist troubles, the Christ-centred spirituality of their founder, Bérulle, has been one of the chief characteristics of the congregation. Many of its members have been distinguished for their holiness and scholarship, e.g. C. de *Condren, N. *Malebranche, J.-B. *Massillon, and J. *Morin. St John *Eudes, though he later left the Oratory to found his own congregations, was deeply imbued with the Oratorian spirit.

(1) The principal material for the early history of the order is contained in the lives of St Philip Neri, cited s.v. A. George, L'Oratoire ('Les Grands Ordres monastiques', 1928), pp. 1–33, with bibl. pp. 231 f. C. Garbarri, L'Oratorio Filippino (1957). R. Addington, Cong. Orat., The Idea of the Oratory (1966). A. Cistellini, Cong. Orat., San Filippo Neri, L'Oratorio e la Congregazione Oratoriana (3 vols., 1989). P. Murray, OSB (ed.), Newman the Oratorian (1969), with text of Newman's papers on the Oratory. A. Cistellini, Cong. Orat., in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 765–75, s.v. 'Oratoriani'; id. in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), 853–76, s.v. 'Oratoire Philippin'. In Eng. E. W. Wahl, Cong. Orat., in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 713 f., s.v. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

(2) L. Batterel (d. 1749), Mémoires domestiques pour servir à l'histoire de l'Oratoire (ed. A. M. P. Ingold and E. Bonnardet, 'Documents pour servir à l'histoire religieuse des XVII[e] et XVIII[e] siècles', 5 vols., 1902–11). M. Leherpeur, L'Oratoire de France (1926); A. George, op. cit., pp. 34–230, with bibl. pp. 232–7. R. Boureau, Cong. Orat., L'Oratoire en France (1991). A. M. P. Ingold, L'Oratoire et la Révolution (1883), and other works of this author. Id., Essai de bibliographie oratorienne (2 vols., 1880–2). Bibliothèque oratorienne (13 vols., Paris, 1880–92). Bremond, 3 (1921), esp. ch. 3, 'L'Oratoire', pp. 155–221. A. M. P. Ingold in CE 11 (1911), pp. 274 f., s.v.; A. Molien in DTC 11 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1104–38, s.v. 'Oratoire de Jésus (Congrégation de l')'; G. Rotureau in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 847–853, s.v. 'Oratoire Bérullien'. See also bibl. to BÉRULLE, P. DE, and GRATRY, A. J. A.

oratorio. The musical setting of a religious libretto for soloists, chorus, and orchestra (or other accompaniment) without (in modern practice) the use of dramatic action, scenery, or dresses, though these adjuncts were sometimes employed until *c.*1730. Oratorio apparently derives from the dramatic services of St *Philip Neri (d. 1595) at the *Oratory in Rome. The first known oratorio in the present sense was performed at Santa Maria in Vallicella in Rome in 1600. The most important 17th-cent. oratorio composer was Giacomo Carissimi (1605–74), whose Jephte remains popular today. By the late 17th cent. the oratorio was commonly used as a Lenten substitute for opera. The English oratorio, with its characteristic emphasis on the chorus, was essentially the creation of G. F. *Handel, whose works include Saul (1738), Israel in Egypt (1738), Samson (1741), and Messiah (1741). In the 19th cent. the oratorio reached its greatest popularity, notably in England, but with few exceptions, such as F. Mendelssohn's St Paul (1836) and Elijah (1846), the compositions of the period were of little value. In more recent times England alone has maintained a considerable interest in oratorio, largely through the influence of annual musical festivals and local amateur choral societies. Among the more significant modern works are Sir E. *Elgar's *Dream of Gerontius (1900) and Apostles (1903), Sir W. Walton's Belshazzar's Feast (1931), and E. B. *Britten's War Requiem (1961).

The standard general work is H. E. Smither, A History of the Oratorio (Chapel Hill, NC, 1977 ff.; vol. 3 (1987) also pub. in Oxford). W. Dean, Handel's Dramatic Oratorios and Masques (1959), with general introd. P. Damilano and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 10 (1962), cols. 120–68, s.v. 'Oratorium'; H. E. Smither in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 13 (1980), pp. 656–78, s.v.

oratory (Lat. oratorium, 'place of prayer'). The term, used in antiquity for both churches and private chapels, has come to be restricted since the Middle Ages to places of worship other than the parish church. Their origin probably goes back to the chapels built over the tombs of the martyrs in early times. Their use became more frequent in the early Middle Ages, when churches tended to be restricted to cities, and places of worship were needed for the country districts.

In the RC Church the status of oratories is regulated by Canon Law. In place of the former categories of public, semi-public, and private oratories, current legislation (CIC (1983), cans. 1223–9) distinguishes (1) an oratory and (2) a private chapel, from a church, that is a sacred building to which all the faithful have access for divine worship. (1) The term oratory now signifies a place designated by permission of the *Ordinary for divine worship for the benefit of some community or assembly of the faithful who gather there. Other members of the faithful may also have access to it with the consent of the superior of the oratory. As a general rule, all sacred celebrations can be carried out there. (2) By the term private chapel is meant a place designated for divine worship for the advantage of one or several persons, with the permission of the local Ordinary. In addition, his permission is required for Mass and other celebrations to take place. It is fitting that both an oratory and a private chapel be blessed according to the prescribed liturgical rite. They must be reserved only for divine worship and be free of all domestic uses. With the permission of the local Ordinary, the Blessed Sacrament can be reserved in oratories and private chapels.

For the legal position of oratories in the C of E, see PRIVATE CHAPELS ACT 1871.

Oratory, The. The name is used absolutely of the *Oratorians (q.v.) or 'Congregation of the Oratory'. It is also often applied to churches belonging to the Congregation, e.g. the *Brompton Oratory, London.

ordeals. A method of judicial proof widely used in early medieval Europe in cases where sworn testimony and the evidence of witnesses was not thought sufficient to establish guilt or innocence. The accused was subjected to some physical test from a customary range which included walking on heated ploughshares, carrying hot iron, recovering an object from boiling water, and being lowered into cold water. Success or failure was demonstrated by the physical consequences, such as a 'clean' wound or a septic one. It would appear, however, that the result was often ambiguous and could be interpreted according to the preference of the local community, or its most powerful members. The ordeal was normally administered by the Church: the necessary equipment was often kept in the cathedral, and the blessing of a priest was required for its administration. It was seen as providing God's verdict upon the accusation, and the normal Latin term was 'the judgement of God', iudicium Dei; ordeal or ordal seems to be a distinctively English expression. Ordeals could be used outside the judicial process to establish the truth of important assertions: for example, relics were tested by fire, and a course of action could be justified by saying Mass or receiving Communion without mishap. The ownership of land was commonly settled by armed combat, or the 'judicial duel'. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) prohibited the participation of priests in the ceremony, and as a result the ordeal was rapidly abandoned in England and some other countries, and slowly disappeared from use in Europe as a whole.

Collection of primary material ed. P. Browe, SJ, De Ordaliis (Pontificia Universitas Gregoriana. Textus et Documenta in Usum Exercitationum et Praelectionum Academicarum, Series Theologica, 2 and 4; 1932–3); also K. Zeumer, 'Ordines Iudiciorum Dei' appended to his edn. of Formulae Merowingici et Karolini Aevi (MGH, Leges, Sectio 5; 1886), pp. 599–722, and S. L. Endlicher, Rerum Hungaricarum Monumenta Arpadiana (St Gall, 1849). C. Leitmaier, Die Kirche und die Gottesurteile (Wiener Rechtsgeschichtliche Arbeiten, 2 [1953]); K.-G. Cram, Iudicium Belli: Zum Rechtscharakter des Krieges im deutschen Mittelalter (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 5; 1955); H. Nottarp, Gottesurteilstudien (Bamberger Abhandlungen und Forschungen, 2; 1956); J. W. Baldwin, 'The Intellectual Preparation for the Canon of 1215 against Ordeals', Speculum, 36 (1961), pp. 613–36; P. [R. L.] Brown, 'Society and the Supernatural: A Medieval Change', Daedalus, 104, no. 2 (1975), pp. 133–51, repr. in id., Society and the Holy in Late Antiquity (1982), pp. 302–32; C. Morris, 'Judicium Dei: The Social and Political Significance of the Ordeal in the Eleventh Century', in D. Baker (ed.), Church, Society, and Politics (Studies in Church History, 12; 1975), pp. 95–111; P. R. Hyams, 'Trial by Ordeal: The Key to Proof in the Early Common Law', in M. S. Arnold and others (eds.), On the Laws and Customs of England: Essays in Honor of Samuel E. Thorne (Chapel Hill, NC [1981]), pp. 90–126; C. M. Radding, 'Superstition to Science: Nature, Fortune and the Passing of the Medieval Ordeal', American Historical Review, 84 (1979), pp. 945–69; R. Bartlett, Trial by Fire and Water: The Medieval Judicial Ordeal (Oxford, 1986); D. Barthélemy, 'Diversité des ordalies médiévales', Revue Historique, 280 (1988), pp. 3–25.

Order of the Communion, The. See COMMUNION, THE ORDER OF THE.

Order of Preachers. See DOMINICAN ORDER.

Ordericus Vitalis (1075–?1142), Anglo-Norman historian. He was the son of a French priest in the service of the first Norman earl of Shrewsbury and an English mother. Born near Shrewsbury in 1075, he went in 1085 as a novice to the Benedictine house of St-Évroul(t) in Normandy; here he remained (apart from a few journeys, including at least one to England) for the rest of his life. He called himself 'Angligena' and never lost his love of England. Orderic wrote (in a model hand) an Ecclesiastical History in 13 books: books 1 and 2, which were written last, are a conventional plagiarized account from the birth of Christ onwards; books 3–6, which were written first, began as a history of St-Évroul but have a long digression on the Norman conquest of England; the remainder is a history of Orderic's own time. His rhythmic style is complex and subtle, his vocabulary is at times unusual, the work is ill-arranged and its chronology often unclear; but Orderic's interpretation of 'ecclesiastical history' (a term borrowed from *Bede) was wide. He gives an inimitable account of the feudal politics of N. France and of Norman achievement throughout Christendom, and is altogether a prime source for the political and ecclesiastical history and customs of his time. His only rival among the historians of his day and region is *William of Malmesbury.

Editio princeps by A. Du Chesne (ed.), Historiae Normannorum Scriptores antiqui (Paris, 1619), pp. 319–925, repr. J. P. Migne, PL 188. 17–984. Crit. edn. in 5 vols. (admirably indexed) by A. Le Prévost (Société de l'Histoire de France, 1838–55), with important introd. in vol. 5 by L. Delisle; superseded by edn. with Eng. tr. by M. Chibnall (6 vols., Oxford, 1969–80). Orderic Vital et l'abbaye de St-Évroul: Notice et travaux, publiés en l'honneur de l'historien normand (Alençon, 1912); H. Wolter, SJ, Ordericus Vitalis: Ein Beitrag zur Kluniazenischen Geschichtsschreibung (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte Mainz, 7; 1955). M. Chibnall, The World of Orderic Vitalis (Oxford, 1984). L. Delisle, 'Notes sur les manuscrits autographes d'Orderic Vital', in J. Lair (ed.), Matériaux pour l'édition de Guillaume de Jumièges (1910), pp. 7–27; E. Jamison, 'The Sicilian Norman Kingdom in the Mind of Anglo-Norman Contemporaries', Proceedings of the British Academy, 24 (1938), pp. 237–85, esp. pp. 242–7; P. Rousset, 'La Description du monde chevaleresque chez Orderic Vital', Le Moyen Âge, 75 (1969), pp. 427–44.

Orders, Anglican. See ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

Orders, Holy. See HOLY ORDERS.

Orders, Minor. See MINOR ORDERS.

Orders and Ordination. (1) ORIGINS. The Ministry of the Christian Church traces its beginnings to the Lord's commissioning of the Twelve (Mt. 10: 1–5; Mk. 3: 13–19, Lk. 6: 12–16) and the Seventy (Lk. 10: 1) to the work of the kingdom. This Ministry, so far from coming to an end at His death, received a new power and wider responsibilities after Pentecost (Acts 2: 1–13), though leadership of the *Jerusalem Church seems to have soon passed from St *Peter (Acts 1: 15; 2: 37; 4: 8, 5: 8; 10: 1–11 and 18; 15: 7; cf. Mt. 16: 16–18) to St *James, the Lord's brother (Acts 15: 19; 21: 18; *Eusebius, HE 2. 1).

Patterns of local ministry in the newly founded Churches varied, but comparison of St *Paul's first letter to the Corinthians with that of St *Clement of Rome indicates that the charismatic ministries of *prophets and teachers etc. (1 Cor. 12: 28) recognized by Paul in his Churches soon gave way to 'elders', i.e. *presbyters. Acts represents Paul as himself appointing them (14: 23; cf. 20: 17) and at 20: 28 takes *bishops (ἐπίσκοποι) to be broadly equivalent, as they also are in 1 Clement and the *Pastoral Epistles. Acts also assumes, perhaps correctly, that 'elders' existed early in Jerusalem (11: 30; 15: 2, etc.). That institution is not mentioned in Paul's genuine letters and was perhaps adopted by the Roman Church soon after the martyrdom of Peter and Paul. It is presupposed in the probably pseudonymous 1 Peter and James, and elsewhere (prob. Asia Minor) the author of 2 and 3 John calls himself 'the elder'. The further development to a monarchical episcopate, possibly reflected in 3 Jn. 9, is advocated and represented at *Antioch by St *Ignatius, in the face of the divisive effects of divergent beliefs.

The gradual transition from apostolic leadership and a variety of charismatic and non-charismatic ministries to that stronger Church order that provides a focus for unity is partly visible to the historian. If inferences about the Church in which Mt. originated can be drawn from such passages as 7: 15 and 23: 34, it seems that in Syria prophets and Jewish Christian scribes provided teaching. This pattern was overtaken by the evolution of the presbyterate and its fusion with the new orders of bishops and deacons. The survival of prophets in the Didache alongside bishops and deacons perhaps provides evidence for the transition. As early as 1 Cor. 12: 28 Paul had implied some gradations in ministry (cf. Eph. 4: 11), and the Pastoral Epistles' and Acts' appeal to him in legitimation of the development can be defended. But his own use of the word ἐπίσκοπος (Phil. 1: 1) is of uncertain meaning and διάκονος in his genuine letters (incidentally in Rom. 16: 1 with reference to a woman) does not sound like a definite order. That is first evident in 1 Tim. 3–4, which also adumbrates or envisages ordination (4: 14; cf. 5: 22). The local presbyters lay *hands on Timothy and the Spirit is understood to be conveyed by the rite (cf. also 2 Tim. 1: 6). The Jewish roots of this may be found in Num. 27: 15–23, where authority to lead the community is transmitted to Joshua (cf. Deut. 34: 9). The account in Acts 6: 1–6 of the appointment of the Seven echoes this passage. All these hints of later practice preserve the sense of God's choosing ministers (cf. 1 Tim. 1: 18), expressed also in the story of the election by lot of St *Matthias (Acts 1: 23–6).

(2) LATER DEVELOPMENT. By the middle of the 3rd cent. considerable evolution of the system is evident. At Rome under Pope *Cornelius (251–3) there were, besides the bishop, 46 presbyters, 7 deacons, 7 subdeacons, 42 acolytes and 52 exorcists, readers, and doorkeepers (*Eusebius, HE 6. 43. 11). But it was long before uniformity was reached. The Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua* (prob. from Gaul, late-5th cent.) has nine distinct orders; St *John of Damascus has five; *Innocent III has six. By the later Middle Ages it was the prevalent view that there were seven Orders, but there were different methods of reckoning, largely through contending theories on the relation of the priesthood and the episcopate. For St *Thomas Aquinas, who held that the ultimate purpose of Holy Order lay in its relation to the Eucharist, the priesthood was the highest grade, since the priest possessed the power of consecrating the Sacrament; and this appears to be the view officially countenanced by the Council of *Trent, though since the Second *Vatican Council there has been an increased emphasis on the episcopate, in which the bishop is regarded as sharing pre-eminently in the priesthood of Christ. During the Middle Ages a distinction came to be drawn esp. in the W. between the '*Major Orders' (bishop, priest, deacon, subdeacon) and the *Minor Orders (acolytes, exorcists, readers, doorkeepers). The distinction in modern speech between 'consecration' to the episcopate and 'ordination' to the other Orders was unknown in early times and has been dropped in the current official RC documents.

(3) ORDER AS A SACRAMENT. Acc. to traditional Catholic theology the gift of Order is a Sacrament. The Council of Trent (Sess. 22) defines it as a Sacrament instituted by Christ (can. 3) and as conveying the Holy Spirit (can. 4). Like Baptism Order is held to impart an indelible *character. Hence a cleric if degraded does not lose the gift of Order and on restoration is not 're-ordained'; and though the civil law may treat an Anglican cleric who has executed a deed of relinquishment under the *Clerical Disabilities Act 1870 as a layman, from the standpoint of the Church he remains a priest or deacon. But where there is grave doubt (e.g. through loss of records) whether ordination has been validly administered, it may be, and sometimes is, repeated 'conditionally'.

Despite the various grades in the ministry it is agreed that there is but a single Sacrament of Orders. It is widely denied, however, that the Orders lower than the diaconate can be reckoned a Sacrament. In the Middle Ages they were commonly so regarded (St Thomas, Summa Theolog., Suppl. 94, qu. 7, art. 3); but RC theologians now reject this view on the ground that they are of ecclesiastical (and not Divine) institution.

In the *Thirty-Nine Articles (art. 25) Orders is included among 'the five commonly called Sacraments' which 'are not to be counted for Sacraments of the Gospel'. In the Protestant Churches the Sacramental nature of Orders is commonly denied.

(4) THE RECIPIENT OF ORDERS. The traditional view is that only a baptized and confirmed male person can be validly ordained. However, in modern times many provinces of the Anglican Communion have admitted *women to the diaconate, and some to the priesthood and episcopate as well. The candidate must be of good moral character and convinced that he has a Divine call ('vocation') to the office (though a subjective interpretation of vocation does not appear to be ancient: several of the Fathers were ordained under protest). For the Ordination to be regular the candidate must also be of due age (in the C of E normally 24 years for the priesthood, 30 for the episcopate; see AGE, CANONICAL) and not be excommunicate; and (a matter esp. stressed by RC theologians) the *interstices must have been duly observed. The candidate also generally needs a '*title'. Further, an ordinand in the C of E is required by the *Clerical Subscription Act 1865 to take and subscribe the Oath of *Allegiance to the Sovereign, and by Canon to take and subscribe the Oath of Obedience to the bishop, and to make a Declaration of *Assent to 'the faith which is revealed in the Holy Scriptures and set forth in the catholic creeds and to which the historic formularies of the C of E bear witness'. The duties of the respective offices in the Anglican ministry are well set out in the *Ordinal. In the RC Church, the specific obligations incurred by the reception of Major Orders normally include, acc. to W. discipline, *celibacy (q.v.) and the recitation of the Divine *Office (q.v.).

(5) THE MINISTER OF ORDERS. Traditional theology also holds that the Sacrament of Orders can be validly conferred only by a duly consecrated bishop, acting as the minister of Christ and the successor of the Apostles. The episcopate is thus held to create a historical link between the Church of Apostolic times and that of today and is both the means and assurance of the continuity of office and of the transmission of grace (see APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION); and on these grounds the episcopate is held to be of the esse of the Church.

There is, however, a small body of evidence that in the early Church ordination was occasionally conferred by clerics other than bishops. The 13th can. of *Ancyra may provide for ordination by presbyters (but the text is disputed); and it was sometimes allowed that suffering for the faith in time of persecution was the equivalent of ordination (e.g. St *Hippolytus, Ap. Trad. 10. 1)

Since the purpose of Ordination is to qualify a person for office in the Church, it might seem that outside the Church Orders could not be given. Such was the usual view of the early Church, and it is still that held in the E. But since the time of St *Augustine, whose influence here was paramount, it has been generally maintained in the W. that, even when in heresy or schism, a bishop can *validly ordain (as he can validly baptize and validly celebrate the Eucharist). Hence the RC Church does not 're-ordain' bishops and priests from the Orthodox Church should they be received into communion with the Pope, but accepts their previous Ordination as valid. Similarly Priests of the RC Church who join the C of E are not re-ordained, though for certain technical reasons (see ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS) the RC Church does not recognize Ordinations conferred in the C of E.

(6) Rites of Ordination. The earliest known rite of Ordination is that in the Apostolic Tradition* of Hippolytus (*c.*215); and from the 4th cent. several such rites survive, e.g. the Liturgy of St Serapion, and that in the Apostolic Constitutions. Traditionally Ordination has always taken place in the context of the Eucharist, but for long, esp. in the E., the rite continued very simple. In both E. and W. it became the custom for the newly ordained presbyters to *concelebrate with the ordaining bishop. Gradually in the W. further elaborations were introduced esp. to signify the ordinand's new office. The Gospels were delivered to the deacon (in earlier times to the reader), while by the later Middle Ages the delivery of the paten and chalice with the elements prepared for the Mass to candidates for the priesthood had become sufficiently established for it to be regarded as the essence ('matter') of the rite (see INSTRUMENTS, TRADITION OF THE).

In 1968 the RC rites of ordination to the diaconate, priesthood and episcopate were all much simplified. In each case candidates are examined after the Gospel; when the diaconate and priesthood are both to be conferred the examination of the priests follows that of the deacons. The bishop lays hands on each candidate for the diaconate in silence and then says the ordination prayer over them all, seeking the gifts of the Holy Spirit to enable them to exercise their office faithfully. After each candidate has been vested in *dalmatic and *stole, the bishop gives him the book of the Gospels with a charge to proclaim and live by it. In the case of candidates for the priesthood, the bishop is joined by other clergy in the laying on of hands, and a different formula is used in the ordination prayer. The bishop then anoints the hands of each candidate with *chrism and delivers to him the paten and chalice with the bread and wine offered by the people. In the ordering of bishops, which is always a separate ceremony, the co-consecrators join with the consecrating bishop in saying that part of the consecratory prayer held to be necessary for validity. While this prayer is being said the book of the Gospels is held over the head of the candidate. The consecrating bishop then anoints his head, delivers the Gospels to him, puts a *ring on his finger and a *mitre on his head and gives him a pastoral staff or *crosier. The consecratory prayer used in the ordering of a bishop is substantially that found in the Apostolic Tradition of Hippolytus. In the new rite of ordination to the priesthood there is no mention of the power to forgive sins. For ceremonies of the ordination rites in the C of E, see ORDINAL.

It became usual in both E. and W. for bishops to be consecrated on a Sunday, e.g. the BCP orders that the rite is 'always to be performed upon some Sunday or Holyday'. In the W. the ordination of priests and deacons became customary at the *Ember (esp. December) seasons; and until very recently this remained the practice of the C of E; of recent years the feast of St Peter has tended to replace Trinity Sunday.

H. B. Porter, Jun., The Ordination Prayers of the Ancient Western Churches (Alcuin Club Collections, 49; 1967). J. *Morin, Cong. Orat., De Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (Paris, 1655); J. B. *Lightfoot, St Paul's Epistle to the Philippians (1868), pp. 179–267 ('The Christian Ministry'); E. *Hatch, The Organization of the Early Christian Churches (*Bampton Lectures for 1880; 1880); C. *Gore, The Church and the Ministry (1888; new edn. by C. H. *Turner, 1919); F. J. A. *Hort, The Christian Ecclesia (1897); R. C. *Moberly, Ministerial Priesthood (1897); A. *Harnack, Die Entstehung und Entwicklung der Kirchenverfassung und des Kirchenrechts in den zwei ersten Jahrhunderten (1910; Eng. tr., 1910); H. B. *Swete (ed.), Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918; esp. essay on 'Apostolic Succession' by C. H. Turner). J. Tixeront, L'Ordre et les ordinations (1924); G. *Dix, 'Jurisdiction, Episcopal and Papal, in the Early Church', Laudate, 15 (1938), pp. 45–55, 101–24, 157–73, and 232–50; 16 (1938), pp. 107–18, 166–81, and 231–43; repr. as a separate vol., with introd. by T. M. Parker (1975). B. H. *Streeter, The Primitive Church studied with special reference to the Origins of the Christian Ministry (1939); J. N. Ainslie, The Doctrines of Ministerial Order in the Reformed Churches of the 16th and 17th Centuries (1940); K. E. *Kirk (ed.), The Apostolic Ministry (1946); E. Lohse, Die Ordination im Spätjudentum und im Neuen Testament [1951]; H. von Campenhausen, Kirchliches Amt und geistliche Vollmacht in den ersten drei Jahrhunderten (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 41; 1953; Eng. tr., 1969); E. Schweizer, Gemeinde und Geimeindeordnung im Neuen Testament (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 35; Zurich, 1959; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 32; 1961); A. Lemaire, Les Ministères aux origines de l'Église. Naissance de la triple hiérarchie: évêques, presbytres, diacres (Lectio Divina, 68; 1971); K. Kertelge, Gemeinde und Amt im Neuen Testament (Biblische Handbibliothek, 10 [1972]); J. Delorme (ed.), Le Ministère et les Ministères selon le Nouveau Testament [1974]; A. Faivre, Naissance d'une hiérarchie: Les premières étapes du cursus clérical (Théologie historique, 40; 1977); J. Lécuyer, Le Sacrement de l'Ordination: Recherche historique et théologique (ibid. 65; 1983); P. Jounel in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (new edn., 3 [1984]), pp. 154–96; Eng. tr. (1988), pp. 139–84; E. [C. F. A.] *Schillebeeckx, OP, Pleidooi voor Mensen in de Kerk: Christelijke Identiteit en Ambten in de Kerk (Baarn, 1985; Eng. tr., 1985). M. Y. MacDonald, The Pauline Churches: A Sociohistorical Study of Institutionalization in the Pauline and Deutero-Pauline Writings (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 60; Cambridge, 1988), esp. pp. 46–60, 123–38, and 203–20; P. F. Bradshaw, Ordination Rites of the Ancient Churches of East and West (New York [1990]). See also bibl. to BISHOP, DEACON, PRIEST, and REUNION.

Ordinal (Lat. ordinale). (1) In the Middle Ages, a manual to acquaint the priest with the Office to be recited in acc. with variations in the ecclesiastical year.

(2) In the C of E, 'The Form and Manner of Making, Ordaining, and Consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons, according to the Order of the Church of England'. This use of the word dates only from *c.*1600. There have been four English Ordinals. (i) The first was published in March 1550 ('1549'). It was the work of six bishops and six other scholars, appointed by an Order in Council of 31 Jan. 1550, as decreed by Act of Parliament (the Consecration of Bishops, etc., Act 1549). Though bound up with copies of the BCP, neither this nor the later Ordinals is properly a part of the Book. It was modelled on the rite in the medieval *Sarum *Pontifical. Ordination was to take place on a Sunday or Holy Day. The Exhortation and Examination in the Ordering of Priests were mainly based on a draft by M. *Bucer. At the imposition of hands the formula was 'Receive the Holy Ghost. Whose sins thou dost forgive they are forgiven; whose sins thou dost retain they are retained. And be thou a faithful dispenser of the Word of God and of His Holy Sacraments. In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen'; and at the delivery of the Bible and the chalice with the bread, 'Take thou authority to preach the Word of God and to minister the Holy Sacraments in this congregation'. In the Consecration of Bishops the medieval ceremonies of anointing, putting on of gloves, and delivery of the ring and mitre were omitted. No provision was made for the Minor Orders. (ii) In 1552, the chief alterations were the omission of certain ceremonies, e.g., in the Ordering of Priests, the Tradition of the *Instruments. (iii) In 1559 the changes were negligible except in the wording of the Oath (now of 'the Queen's Sovereignty' instead of 'the King's Supremacy'). (iv) In 1662 some important modifications were made, notably in the Ordering of Priests, the change of the formula accompanying the imposition of hands to 'Receive the Holy Ghost for the Office and Work of a Priest in the Church of God, now committed unto thee by the Imposition of our hands. Whose sins, etc.' Subsequent attempts at revision throughout the Anglican Communion have generally been characterized by conservatism. See also ALTERNATIVE SERVICES.

The 1550 Ordinal is printed in The Liturgies . . . of King Edward VI (ed. *Parker Society by J. Ketley, 1844), pp. 159–186, and in the Everyman's Library edn. of the First and Second Prayer Books of King Edward VI (1910), pp. 291–317. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite (1915), vol. 1, pp. cxxx–clxi; vol. 2, pp. 928–1017. P. F. Bradshaw, The Anglican Ordinal: Its History and Development from the Reformation to the Present Day (*Alcuin Club Collections, 53; 1971); id. in C. [P. M.] Jones and others (eds.), The Study of Liturgy (2nd edn., 1992), pp. 385–8.

Ordinary. In canon law, an ecclesiastic in the exercise of the jurisdiction permanently and irremovably annexed to his office. Such jurisdiction extends over his rights of teaching, governing, adjudicating, and administering the Sacraments. In the RC Church the term covers, besides the Pope, diocesan bishops and all who are, even temporarily, set over a diocese or other particular Church or community equivalent to it, and those in them who have ordinary general executive power, that is, *vicars general and episcopal vicars. It also includes, for their own members, the major superiors of clerical religious *institutes of pontifical right and of clerical societies of apostolic life of pontifical right who have at least ordinary executive power (CIC (1983), can. 134 § 1). The term 'local Ordinary' means all these except superiors of religious institutes and of societies of apostolic life (can. 134 § 2). The meaning of the term in the BCP is not precisely determined: it may refer either to the bishop or to the archdeacon. The parish priest may be regarded as possessing ordinary jurisdiction of an inferior kind, but he may not delegate it against the will of his superior ordinary.

Ordinary of the Mass (Lat. Ordo Missae). A term widely used until the recent liturgical reforms to describe the invariable or almost invariable part of the *Mass, as distinguished from the parts which varied with the ecclesiastical calendar, called the *Proper. It comprised the preparatory prayers, the *Kyrie, *Gloria in Excelsis and *Creed, the *Preface and *Sanctus, the *Canon, the *Lord's Prayer, *Fraction and *Agnus Dei, part of the Communion and Post-Communion devotions, and (until 1965) the *Last Gospel. The Canon, however, was sometimes distinguished from the Ordinary, the two together being termed the 'Ordinary and Canon of the Mass'. The 1970 Missale Romanum uses the term 'Ordo Missae' to describe the whole service of the Mass.

Ordination. See ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

Ordinations, Anglican. See ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

Ordines Romani. The ancient collections of ceremonial directions for the performance of the Roman rite and thus the ancestors of the *Caeremoniale Romanum, the *Caeremoniale Episcoporum, and the *Pontifical. The first to be printed in modern times were edited by G. *Cassander in 1561 (Cologne) and more adequately by Melchior Hittorp in 1568 (also Cologne), but far more important was the collection of 15 Ordines published by J. *Mabillon in his Musaeum Italicum, vol. 2 (1689). The study of the Ordines was put on a new footing by M. Andrieu, who distinguished 50, which he arranged according to their content: I–X the Mass; XI Baptism; XII–XIV the Office; XV–XIX monastic and other rituals for the ecclesiastical year; XX–XXXIII feasts of the year, esp. the ceremonies of Holy Week; XXXIV–XL Ordinations; XLI–XLIV dedication of churches; XLV–XLVIII coronation of the Emperor; XLIX funerals; L is the Ordo from the Romano-Germanic Pontifical of the 10th cent. entitled by Hittorp 'Ordo Romanus Antiquus'. These 50 Ordines have survived in various collections which partly overlap, and which can be dated between the 8th and the 10th cents. They correspond to Mabillon's Ordines I–IX (his X–XV are of later date). The earliest Ordines originated in Rome; perhaps the oldest is Ordo XI (= Mabillon III), which is probably based on the *Gelasian Sacramentary. They provide the earliest evidence for the development of the Roman rite and illustrate its diffusion throughout Europe. They began to circulate north of the Alps at the end of the 8th cent. and were adapted and greatly enlarged. In the form in which they developed north of the Alps, seen in the Romano-Germanic Pontifical of the 10th cent. (Ordo L), they influenced the rite of Rome itself. See also PONTIFICAL.

Mabillon's text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 78. 851–1408. Crit. edn. by M. Andrieu, Les Ordines Romani du haut moyen âge (SSL 11 [introd.], 23 [Ordines I–XIII], 24 [Ordines XIV–XXXIV], 28 [Ordines XXXV–XLIX], and 29 [Ordo L]; 1931–61). Ordo Romanus Primus also ed., with Eng. tr., by E. G. C. F. Atchley (LLE 6; 1905). M. Dykmans, SJ, 'Mabillon et les interpolations de son Ordo Romanus XIV', Gregorianum, 47 (1966), pp. 316–42. Vogel, Sources, pp. 135–224. T. A. Vismans, OP, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2061–6, s.v.

Ordo Missae. See ORDINARY OF THE MASS.

Oresme, Nicholas (*c.*1320–82), French mathematician, natural philosopher, and economist, who is often somewhat misleadingly seen as foreshadowing later scientific theories developed by N. *Copernicus, G. *Galileo, R. *Descartes, and others. He was closely associated both with the University of *Paris and the French Court, and held a variety of academic and ecclesiastical positions culminating in his appointment as Bp. of Lisieux in 1377. Following Thomas *Bradwardine and others, he attempted to treat motion and other physical phenomena more mathematically, although still working within a basically *Aristotelian framework. He gave powerful arguments in favour of the Earth spinning daily on its own axis, but revealed that he did so as a sceptical and fideistic ploy against those who would use reason to attack the truths of Christianity. Both his sceptical stand and his use of sophisticated mathematical arguments were deployed in his attacks on astrologers, in writings intended mainly for use at the Court of Charles V. It was also for the Court that he produced several philosophical works in the vernacular, esp. Aristotelian translations and commentaries.

There are modern edns. of many of Oresme's works, incl. the foll. with Eng. tr., and in most cases, comm.: De moneta by C. Johnson (Medieval Texts, London, 1956); De proportionibus proportionum and Ad pauca respicientes by E. Grant (University of Wisconsin Publications in Medieval Science; Madison, Milwaukee, and London, 1966); Tractatus de configurationibus qualitatum et motuum by M. Clagett (ibid., 1968), with bibl. pp. 637–50; Tractatus de commensurabilitate vel incommensurabilitate motuum celi by E. Grant (ibid., 1971); De causis mirabilium by B. Hansen (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 68; Toronto [1985]). Quaestio contra Divinatores Horoscopios, ed. S. Caroti in AHDLMA 43 (for 1976; 1977), pp. 201–310. G. W. Coopland, Nicole Oresme and the Astrologers: A Study of his Livre de Divinacions (Liverpool, 1952), incl. text and Eng. tr. The French trs. and comm. on Aristotle (and Pseudo-Aristotle) are ed. by A. D. Menut: Le Livre d'éthiques (New York, 1940); Le Livre de yconomique in Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, NS 47 (1957), pp. 783–853 (with Eng. tr.); Le Livre de politiques, ibid. 60 (1970), pt. 6. Le Livre de ciel et du monde, ed. A. D. Menut and A. J. Demony, CSB (University of Wisconsin Publications in Medieval Science, Madison, etc., 1968, with Eng. tr.). P. Souffrin and A. P. Segonds (eds.), Nicolas Oresme: Tradition et innovation chez un intellectuel du XIVᵉ siècle (Paris and Padua [1988]); J. Quillet (ed.), Autour de Nicole Oresme: Actes du Colloque Oresme organisé à l'Université de Paris XII (1990). M. Clagett in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, ed. C. C. Gillispie, 10 (1981 edn.), pp. 223–30, s.v.

Organic Articles. The provisions of Napoleon (1802) to regulate public worship and the relations of Church and state in France. They included (1) governmental control over Papal documents entering France, and over the powers of ecclesiastical councils and synods; (2) a limited state control of seminaries and clergy, requiring inter alia the teaching of the *Gallican Articles; (3) state regulation of processions and clerical dress; and (4) state regulation of stipends and parish boundaries. Napoleon sought to defend this radical and sudden modification of the *Concordat (1801) on the ground that the Articles were supplementary and explanatory. The Pope objected to them from the first, and in fact the Articles were less and less enforced, though they were not finally repealed till the separation of Church and state in 1905.

The text is in C. Mirbt, no. 559, and J. E. C. Bodley, The Church in France (1906), pp. 121–34. Eng. tr. in F. Mourret, SS, A History of the Catholic Church, tr. by N. Thompson, 7 (1955), pp. 565–74. See also works cited under CONCORDAT OF 1801.

organs. Known from the time of classical antiquity, the organ remained a purely secular instrument until the 10th cent., when it began to appear in major churches, such as *Glastonbury and *Winchester. What liturgical part, if any, it played remains largely unknown until *c.*1400, when the alternating of organ verses with *plainsong or polyphony sung by the choir became an established custom in both the Mass and Office. This continued as a common practice, esp. in France, until the 19th cent., but in *Lutheran churches in Germany in the 17th cent. it gave way to the development of the organ chorale with its subsequent rich repertoire. The organ also provided simple accompaniments for some choral music, such as the English verse *anthem, from the early 17th cent., a role which later evolved into more elaborate accompanimental styles. The organ's present predominant role, however, that of leading congregational singing, developed only gradually from the 17th cent. onwards. Even within the C of E organs found their way into many smaller parish churches only from about the mid-19th cent., whilst many of the more *Calvinistic churches remained inimical to them until modern times. In the 17th cent. English *Puritan opposition to organs in churches resulted in the destruction of almost all organs during the Commonwealth as a result of legislation in 1644. They were reintroduced after the Restoration (1660), among the most famous organ-builders being Bernard Smith (c. 1630–1708) and René (Renatus) Harris (?1640–?1715). Organs have always varied greatly in size, and been essentially individually designed to suit buildings and finances. In the late 18th and early 19th cent. the barrel organ, its barrels pinned with hymn tunes, enjoyed a brief popularity (no skilled performer being necessary), whilst in the second half of the 20th cent. the electronic organ has for economic reasons supplanted the pipe organ in many churches, although, despite technical advances, it remains a poor substitute for a quality pipe instrument.

W. L. Summer, The Organ: Its Evolution, Principles of Construction and Use (1952; 4th edn., 1973). P. [F] Williams, The European Organ 1450–1850 (1966); id., A New History of the Organ from the Greeks to the Present Day (1980); id., The Organ in Western Culture, 750–1250 (Cambridge, 1993); id., The King of Instruments: How Churches came to have Organs (1993). C. Clutton and A. Niland, The British Organ (1963; 2nd edn., 1982). O. [C.] Ochse, The History of the Organ in the United States (Bloomington, Ill., and London [1975]). F. Routh, Early English Organ Music from the Middle Ages to 1837 (1973). N. Temperley, The Music of the English Parish Church (2 vols., Cambridge, 1979). P. [M.] Williams in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 13 (1980), pp. 710–79, s.v.

Oriens Christianus. The title of two quite distinct publications.

(1) M. *Le Quien's work on the E. Church. It contains an enormous collection of geographical and historical material, arranged acc. to the four E. Patriarchates and, despite the inaccuracies incidental to a pioneer work of vast dimensions, has not been superseded. Le Quien worked on it from 1718 till his death in 1733, issuing a prospectus of the work in 1722; but it was not published till 1740, when it appeared in three folio volumes.

(2) A German periodical devoted to Oriental studies published at Leipzig under the direction of A. *Baumstark. It appeared in three series: the Original Series, 8 vols., 1901–10; a 'Neue Serie', 14 vols., 1911–25; and the Third Series, 14 vols., 1927 ['1926']–1941. The periodical was revived on new lines, under the auspices of the Görres-Gesellschaft, and a Fourth Series published at Wiesbaden, 1953 ff.

On (1), H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2593–6, s.v. 'Le Quien'; S. Vailhé, AA, in CE 9 (1910), p. 188, s.v. 'Le Quien'.

Oriental Orthodox Churches. A modern designation for those Churches (i.e. the *Armenian, *Coptic, *Ethiopian, and *Syrian Orthodox) which rejected the Christological teaching of the Definition of *Chalcedon, and in particular the phrase 'in two natures'. The name distinguishes these Churches from the Eastern *Orthodox Church and avoids the ambiguous (and hence offensive) term *Monophysite.

P. Gregorios and others (eds.), Does Chalcedon Divide or Unite? Towards Convergence in Orthodox Christology (Geneva, 1981).

orientation. The construction of a church so that its longer axis runs E. and W. The earliest (4th cent.) basilicas in Rome had a façade to the E. and an *apse for the altar at the W., so that the celebrant at the Eucharist, standing behind the altar, faced E. The high altar of Byzantine churches, on the other hand, was placed in an E. apse, a practice followed later esp. in England, Germany, and Spain. Elsewhere custom has been more variable. Though orientation is derived historically from a pagan habit of praying towards the sunrise, Christians have seen in its adoption symbolic reference to Christ as the Rising Sun.

H. Nissen, Orientation: Studien zur Geschichte der Religion (3 Hefte, 1906–10), esp. pp. 391–459 ('Das Christentum'). F. J. Doelger, Sol Salutis: Gebet und Gesang im christlichen Altertum mit besonderer Rücksicht auf die Ostung in Gebet und Liturgie (Liturgische Forschungen, 4–5; 1920). O. Nussbaum, Der Standort des Liturgen am christlichen Altar vor dem Jahre 1000: Eine archäologische und liturgiegeschichtliche Untersuchung (2 vols., Theophaneia, 18; 1965). E. Weigand, 'Die Ostung in der frühchristlichen Architektur', in Festschrift für Sebastian Merkle zu seinem 60. Geburtstage (1922), pp. 370–85. E. Peterson, 'La croce e la preghiera verso oriente', EL 59 (1945), pp. 52–68; L. Voelkl, '"Orientierung" im Weltbild der ersten christlichen Jahrhunderte', Riv. A.C. 25 (1949), pp. 155–70. M. J. Moreton, 'Εἰς ἀνατολὰς βλέψατε. Orientation as a Liturgical Principle', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 17 (Oxford, 1982), pp. 575–90. T. D. Atkinson in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 73–88, s.v. 'Points of the Compass'. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2665–9, s.v.

Origen (*c.*185–*c.*254), Alexandrian biblical critic, exegete, theologian, and spiritual writer. The facts of his life are recorded by *Eusebius. He was born in Egypt, prob. at *Alexandria, where he received a thoroughly Christian education in the house of his parents. During the persecution in Alexandria in 202 when his father, Leonidas, was killed, he was prevented from seeking martyrdom only by a ruse of his mother, who hid his clothes. He taught in Alexandria and, when peace was restored, was recognized by *Demetrius as head of the *Catechetical School (q.v.), in place of *Clement, who had fled the city. He now began to lead a strictly ascetical life of fastings, vigils, and voluntary poverty, and even, acc. to Eusebius, mutilated himself, misinterpreting Mt. 19: 12 in a literal sense. He was well versed in the works of the Middle Platonists and studied pagan philosophy and literature under *Ammonius Saccas. He undertook several journeys, one to Rome, where he heard a sermon of St *Hippolytus, and one to Arabia. When, in 215, troubles broke out in Alexandria in connection with a visit of the Emp. Caracalla, he went to Palestine, where he was asked to preach by the Bps. of *Caesarea and *Aelia. As he was only a layman, this was regarded as a breach of the Alexandrian ecclesiastical discipline, in consequence of which he was recalled by his bishop, Demetrius. From *c.*218 to 230 he devoted himself almost without interruption to literary activities. In 230 he went again to Palestine, where he was ordained priest by the same bishops who had invited him to preach on his previous visit. As a consequence Bp. Demetrius deprived him of his chair and deposed him from the priesthood, more because of the irregularity of his ordination than, as later opponents asserted, for doctrinal reasons. Origen left Alexandria and found a refuge at Caesarea (231), where he established a school which soon became famous, and where he continued his literary work and devoted himself to preaching. In 250, in the persecution of *Decius, he was imprisoned and subjected to prolonged torture, which he survived only a few years.

Origen was a very fertile author. Many of his writings have perished and most of the others survive only in fragments or in Latin translations. The main reasons for this almost complete loss of the originals are the later condemnation of his teaching and the exorbitant length and diffusiveness of his works. His chief work on biblical criticism is his famous '*Hexapla' (q.v.). Among his many exegetical works are scholia on Exod., Lev., and Num., commentaries on almost all the books of the Bible, most of which survive only in small fragments, and many homilies, which are among the oldest examples of Christian preaching. Large portions of the Commentaries on Mt. and Jn., however, have been preserved, as well as considerable sections (in *Rufinus' Lat. tr.) of those on the Song of Solomon and Romans. Substantial sections of the Greek original of the commentaries on Rom. and Ex., and a homily on 1 Kgs., were discovered at Toura, near Cairo.

The most important of Origen's theological works is the 'De Principiis' (Περὶ Ἀρχῶν), which covers a wide range of doctrinal topics in four books treating of God and the heavenly beings, of man and the material world, of free will and its consequences, and of Holy Scripture. The original text has almost completely disappeared, and the work is extant only in the not very reliable Latin translation of Rufinus and the more faithful, but fragmentary, rendering of St *Jerome. Of his other theological works nearly all are lost. His two ascetical works, 'Exhortation to Martyrdom', written during the persecution of Maximin in 235, and 'On Prayer', were much read in antiquity. He also wrote an important apologetic work against *Celsus (q.v.).

Origen was essentially a biblical scholar whose thought was nourished on Scripture, the inspiration and integrity of which he affirmed esp. against the *Marcionites. He recognized a triple sense, literal, moral, and allegorical, of which he preferred the last. He justified this choice on many grounds, esp. the contention that the whole universe is pervaded with symbols and types of the invisible world. All things had a double aspect, one corporeal and sensible, which is accessible to all, the other spiritual and mystical, known only to the perfect. This led him to distinguish between two classes of Christians: the simple, who have to be satisfied with faith in Christ crucified, and the perfect, who ascend beyond this to the contemplation of the Word dwelling with the Father.

The point of departure of Origen's doctrinal teaching was faith in the unity of God, who is altogether transcendent. This unity in its fullest form is understood of God the Father. But the threefold nature of the godhead is also affirmed. The Son is eternally generated from the Father and manifests all His attributes. The Holy Spirit is also eternal, though His role in Origen's scheme of thought is far from clear and Origen is uncertain about His nature and His relation to the Father and to the Son. Origen's philosophical presuppositions ensure that for him the Son can be divine only in a lesser sense than the Father; the Son is θεός (god), but only the Father is αὐτόθεος (absolute God, God in himself). In his 'Treatise on Prayer' he taught that prayer ought to be addressed only to the Father through the Son. Yet his teaching and his faith are strongly positive with respect to the Son: He belongs eternally to the godhead: He is perfect mirror of the Father's goodness, love, truth, and all His other attributes, reflecting them in assimilable form to all the rest of the creation. Moreover in the more popular style of the homilies he himself addresses his prayers directly to Christ.

His philosophical speculations often issued in audacious theories, though, in the absence of the original texts, it is not always easy to say whether he held them as certain or merely stated them as hypotheses, or even simply repeated the ideas of other thinkers. He affirmed that creation was eternal in the belief that without an existing world God would have been inactive and not omnipotent. He held Him to be finite, because if He were infinite He could not think Himself. Among his most controverted theories was his teaching on souls and their destiny. All spirits were created equal, but through the exercise of their free will they developed in hierarchical order and some fell into sin and so became either demons or souls imprisoned in bodies. Death does not finally decide the fate of the soul, which may turn into a demon or an angel. This ascent and descent goes on uninterruptedly until the final '*Apocatastasis' (q.v.) when all creatures, even the devil, will be saved. There is also a strong current of mysticism in Origen. He held that true knowledge was the participation of the purified soul in the Wisdom of the Word and a way towards *deification and union with Christ. In the course of the disputes on *Origenism (q.v.) his teaching has often been misrepresented, and owing to the loss of the originals of most of his works, a satisfactory reconstruction of his authentic thought is not always possible.

The earliest pr. edns. were confined to Origen's Lat. works. Greek works ed. P. D. *Huet, Bp. of Avranches (2 vols., fol., Rouen, 1668; with important introd., repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 17. 633–1284). The best complete edn. (without, however, the Hexapla frags.) is still that of the *Maurist, C. de La Rue, OSB, 4 vols., fol., Paris, 1733–59 (vol. 4 completed by his nephew, C. Vincent de La Rue, OSB); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 11–17. Modern crit. edn. of separate texts in GCS, incl. Contra Celsum (ed. P. Koetschau, 1899), Comm. in Jn. (ed. E. Preuschen, 1903), De Principiis (ed. P. Koetschau, 1913), Comm. in Matt. (ed. E. Klostermann, E. Benz, and L. Früchtel, 1933–55), Hom. in Luc. (ed. M. Rauer, 1930; 2nd edn., 1959); also many vols., with Fr. tr., in SC, incl. Hom. in Jos., by A. Jaubert (SC 71; 1960), Hom. in Luc., by H. Crouzel, SJ, and others (SC 87; 1962), Comm. in Jn., by C. Blanc (SC 120, 157, 222, 290, 385; 1966–92); Contra Celsum, by M. Borret, SJ (SC 132, 136, 147, 150, 227; 1967–76); Hom. in Jer., by P. Nautin (SC 232 and 238; 1976–7), and De Princ., by H. Crouzel, SJ, and M. Simonetti (SC 252 f., 268 f., 312; 1978–84). De Princ., also ed. with Ger. tr., by H. Görgemanns and H. Karpp (Texte zur Forschung, 24; 1976). R. Cadiou, Commentaires inédits des psaumes (1936). Text of Origen's 'Dialogue with Heracleides', discovered in 1941 on Toura papyrus, ed. J. Scherer (Publications de la Société Fouad Ier de Papyrologie. Textes et Documents, 9; Cairo, 1949; repr., with Fr. tr., SC 67; 1960). For the Philocalia* and the Tractatus Origenis*, see s.vv. Eng. tr. (incomplete) of his collected works in ANCL. Modern trs. of Contra Celsum by H. Chadwick (Cambridge, 1953), of De Principiis by G. W. Butterworth (London, 1936), of De Oratione and Exhortatio ad Martyrium by J. J. O'Meara (ACW 19; 1954), of De Oratione by J. E. L. Oulton and of 'Exhortatio ad Martyrium' and 'Dialogue with Heracleides' by H. Chadwick in Alexandrian Christianity (Library of Christian Classics, 2; 1954), pp. 169–458, incl. introd.; of Comm. and Homilies on the Song of Songs by R. P. Lawson (ACW 26; 1957); of Homilies on Gen. and Exod. by R. E. Heine (Fathers of the Church, 71 [1982]); of Comm. on John by id. (ibid. 80 and 89; 1989–94); and of the Homilies on Lev. 1–16 by G. W. Barkley (ibid. 83 [1990]).

There is an immense lit.; details in bibl. by H. Crouzel, listed below. Studies on Origen's life and work as a whole by E. de Faye (3 vols., Paris, 1923–8), J. *Daniélou, SJ (Paris, 1948; Eng. tr., 1955), P. Nautin (Paris, 1977), J. W. Trigg (Atlanta, Ga., 1983, London, 1985), and H. Crouzel, SJ (Paris, 1985; Eng. tr., 1989). R. Cadiou, Introduction au système d'Origène (1932); id., La Jeunesse d'Origène (1935). W. Völker, Das Vollkommenheitsideal des Origenes (1931); H. Koch, Pronoia und Paideusis: Studien über Origenes und sein Verhältniss zum Platonismus (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 22; 1934); A. Lieske, Die Theologie der Logosmystik bei Origenes (1938). H. Crouzel, Théologie de l'image de Dieu chez Origène (Théologie, 34; 1956); id., Origène et la 'connaissance mystique' (Museum Lessianum, section théologique, 66; 1961), and other works of this author; M. Harl, Origène et la fonction révélatrice du Verbe Incarné (Patristica Sorbonensia, 2; 1958). P. Nemeshegyi, SJ, Paternité de Dieu chez Origène (Bibliothèque de Théologie, 4th ser. 2; 1960). J. Rius-Camps, El Dinamismo Trinitario en la Divinización de los seres racionales según Orígenes (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 188; 1970). H. J. Vogt, Das Kirchenverstandnis des Origenes (Bonner Beiträge zur Kirchengeschichte, 4; 1974). L. Lies, Wort und Eucharistie bei Origenes (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 1; 1978). H. de *Lubac, SJ, Histoire et esprit: L'Intelligence des Écritures d'après Origène (1950). R. P. C. Hanson, Origen's Doctrine of Tradition (1954); id., Allegory and Event: A Study of the Sources and Significance of Origen's Interpretation of Scripture (1959); K. J. Torjesen, Hermeneutical Procedure and Theological Method in Origen's Exegesis (Patristische Texte und Studien, 28; 1986); J. C. Smith, The Ancient Wisdom of Origen (Lewisburg and London [1992]). N. R. M. de Lange, Origen and the Jews (1976). The papers of a series of international conferences on Origen pub. under the title Origeniana: [1] held at Montserrat, 1973, ed. H. Crouzel and others (Quaderni di 'Vetera Christianorum', 12; 1975); 2, held at Bari, 1977, ed. H. Crouzel and A. Quacquarelli (ibid. 15; 1980); 3, held at Manchester, 1981, ed. R. [P. C.] Hanson and H. Crouzel (Rome, 1985); 4, held at Innsbruck, 1985, ed. L. Lies (Innsbrucker theologische Studien, 19; 1987); 5, held in Boston, 1989, ed. R. J. Daly (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 105; 1992). H. Crouzel, Bibliographie critique d'Origène (Instrumenta Patristica, 8; 1971; suppl., ibid. 8A; 1982). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 141–86 (nos. 1410–525). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 96–194; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 197–209 and 587–90. Important art. by B. F.

*Westcott in DCB 4 (1887; but art. dated 1882), pp. 96–142. G. Bardy in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1489–565; H. Crouzel in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2517–32, s.v. 'Origene'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 619–23. See also bibl. to ALEXANDRIAN THEOLOGY, CELSUS, HEXAPLA.

Origenism. The group of theories enunciated by, or attributed to, *Origen (q.v.). Among Origen's earliest opponents was *Methodius of Olympus, who rejected esp. his teaching on the pre-existence of souls and his denial of the identity between the mortal and the resurrection bodies. In the 4th cent. the attacks of the Anti-Origenists were directed mainly against the Trinitarian doctrine of the 'De Principiis'. He was further accused of teaching *metempsychosis and of interpreting the Scriptures only allegorically. But his supporters were also numerous. The martyr St *Pamphilus wrote in his defence, and later, Sts *Athanasius, *Basil, and *Gregory of Nazianzus esteemed him highly, and St *Didymus endeavoured to prove his Trinitarian orthodoxy. The first great controversy was inaugurated by St *Epiphanius (between *c.*375 and 377), who, in his 64th heresy, gives a very one-sided account of Origen's doctrines. Epiphanius's attack was taken up by St *Jerome. Having first been an ardent defender of Origen, Jerome changed his views in 395, on the occasion of a visit of Epiphanius to *Jerusalem, and attempted to obtain a condemnation of Origen from its bishop, John. In this he failed, and John even obtained a sentence of exile against Jerome from the secular authorities, which, however, was not carried out. For a time John and Jerome were reconciled through the good offices of *Theophilus of Alexandria, at that time an adherent of Origen. The peace was interrupted when, in 398, *Rufinus published in Rome his Latin translation of the 'De Principiis', in the preface of which he referred to Jerome's former Origenistic leanings. The controversy reached its climax when, in 400, a Council at Alexandria convoked by Theophilus, who had become an opponent, condemned Origenism. Pope Anastasius I and the Bps. of Palestine and Syria adhered to the condemnation, and Theophilus continued his campaign. In his Festal Letter of 402 he called Origen the 'hydra of heresies' and he expelled from their monasteries the famous '*Tall Brothers' (q.v.) and other supporters of Origenism, who found refuge with St *Chrysostom at *Constantinople.

The controversy flared up again in the 6th cent., being described in detail in the 'Life of St Sabas' by *Cyril of Scythopolis. Origenism had been propagated esp. in the New Laura, nr. Jerusalem, whose monks had separated from the Great Laura, but it found adherents also in the latter, and *c.*542 it had strong partisans throughout Palestine. Its Palestinian opponents, however, obtained from the Emp. *Justinian the famous letter to Mennas, Patr. of Constantinople, in which Origen is numbered among the most pernicious heretics. At the Emperor's command a Council was convoked at Constantinople in 543, and an edict drawn up in accordance with Justinian's views giving a long list of Origenistic errors and their refutation, which was signed by Pope *Vigilius and the E. patriarchs. The Origenist monks at Jerusalem split into two parties: the Isochrists, who held that at the Apocatastasis all men would become equal to Christ, and the Protoctists, who seem to have regarded the soul of Christ not as equal to the other souls but as the most excellent of creatures. These latter, after renouncing the doctrine of the pre-existence of souls, made common cause with the orthodox against the Isochrists. The Origenistic controversy was ended by the Second Council of *Constantinople (553), when Origen's teaching was condemned, though it is uncertain whether the Council examined his case afresh or simply adhered to the decision of the synods of 543. All the bishops submitted except Alexander of Abila, who was deposed.

L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria, Theognostus, Pierius and Peter: A Study in the Early History of Origenism and Anti-Origenism (1908); K. *Holl, 'Die Zeitfolge des ersten origenistischen Streits', Sb. (Berl.), 1916, pp. 226–55, repr. in Gesammelte Aufsätze, 2 (1928), pp. 310–35. F. Diekamp, Die origenistischen Streitigkeiten im sechsten Jahrhundert und das fünfte allgemeine Konzil (1899). A. Guillaumont, Les 'Képhalaia Gnostica' d'Évagre le Pontique et l'histoire de l'origénisme chez les Grecs et chez les Syriens (Patristica Sorbonensia, 5; 1962). E. A. Clark, The Origenist Controversy (Princeton, NJ [1992]). Detailed account of the early stages of the controversy by P. Lardet, SJ, in his introd. to Jerome's Apologia contra Rufinum (SC 303; 1983), pp. 1*–75*. A. W. W. D. [prob. A. W. W. Dale] in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 142–56; A. d'Alès in Dictionnaire apologétique de la foi catholique (4th edn. by A. d'Alès), 3 (1926), cols. 1228–58, s.v. 'Origénisme', with bibl.; G. Fritz in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1565–88, s.v. 'Origénisme'; H. Crouzel, SJ, in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2533–8, s.v. 'Origenismo'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (Cambridge, 1992), pp. 623 f.

Original Righteousness (Justitia Originalis). Acc. to Catholic theology, God's gratuitous impartation to man of perfect rectitude in his original condition before the *Fall. The state of Original Righteousness in which man was first created is held to have included freedom from concupiscence, bodily immortality and impassibility, and happiness.

Original Sin. In Christian theology, the state of sin in which mankind has been held captive since the *Fall (q.v.). Catholic theologians hold that its essential element is the loss of sanctifying grace. (It is also held by RCs that the BVM was by a special dispensation preserved from the stain of original sin: see IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.)

The scriptural foundation of the doctrine is the Pauline teaching that 'through one man [i.e. Adam] sin entered into the world', so that 'by the trespass of the one the many died' (cf. Rom. 5: 12–21 and 1 Cor. 15: 22). The doctrine, the significance of which was obscured by other preoccupations in the age of the *Apostolic Fathers and the *Apologists, began to be developed in the struggle against the *Gnostic errors by St *Irenaeus. As against the dualist systems of the heretics, he defended the teaching that evil came into the world through the sin of Adam. *Origen has the conception of man's fallen state, but in him it is bound up with speculations on the prenatal sins of souls. St *Athanasius in his treatise 'De Incarnatione' anticipated later developments by teaching that the chief result of the sin of Adam, which consisted in the abuse of his liberty, was the loss of the grace of conformity to the image of God, by which he and his descendants were reduced to their natural condition (εἰς τὸ κατὰ φύσιν) and became subject to corruption (φθορά) and death (θάνατος). The Greek Fathers emphasized the cosmic or metaphysical dimension of the Fall—men since Adam are born into a fallen world—but at the same time they held fast to the belief that man, though fallen, is free, seeing in any encroachment on man's freedom the threat of *Manichaeism. The Pseudo-*Macarian Homilies, however, paint a vivid picture of fallen man's bondage to sin.

The precise formulation of the doctrine was reserved to the W. Here *Tertullian, St *Cyprian, and St *Ambrose taught the solidarity of the whole human race with Adam not only in the consequences of his sin but in the sin itself, which is transmitted through natural generation, and the so-called '*Ambrosiaster' found its scriptural proof in Rom. 5: 12, translating ἐφ' ᾧ by in quo and referring it to Adam, 'in whom all have sinned'. In this he was followed by St *Augustine, who in his 'Quaestiones ad Simplicianum' (396–7) and other pre-Pelagian writings taught that Adam's guilt is transmitted to his descendants by concupiscence, thus making of humanity a massa damnata and much enfeebling, though not destroying, the freedom of the will. In the struggle against *Pelagianism the principles of the Augustinian doctrine were confirmed by many Councils, esp. the Second of *Orange (529).

With the existence of Original Sin firmly established the medieval theologians were particularly occupied with its nature and transmission. St *Anselm of Canterbury was the first to open up new ways of thought, in which he was followed by the great 13th-cent. Schoolmen. He defines Original Sin as the 'privation of the righteousness which every man ought to possess', thus separating it from concupiscence, with which the disciples of St Augustine had often identified it. It is transmitted by generation, because the whole human race was present in Adam seminaliter. His ideas were not immediately taken up. Whilst *Abelard was condemned by the Council of Sens (1140) for refusing to recognize Original Sin as guilt, other 12th-cent. theologians, e.g. *Peter Lombard, identified it with concupiscence. This latter conception was rejected in the next century by *Alexander of Hales and *Albert the Great, who distinguish a formal element, namely privation of original righteousness, from the material element of concupiscence. All of them hold that it is transmitted by the concupiscence accompanying the conjugal act. St *Thomas Aquinas, who treated the subject five times (esp. in 'De Malo' and in 'Summa Theol.' II (1), qq. 81–4), brought in a new element by distinguishing, in the state of Adam before the Fall, 'pure nature' (pura naturalia) from the supernatural gifts which perfected it. Hence Original Sin consists in the loss of these supernatural privileges which had directed man to his supernatural end and enabled him to keep his inferior powers in submission to reason, a rectitude not natural to a being compounded of soul and body such as man. This conception entails a more optimistic view of man than that of St Augustine and his successors in that it leaves to the reason, will, and passions of fallen man their natural powers. Acc. to St Thomas, Original Sin is transmitted not as the personal fault of Adam but as a state of human nature, yet constituting a fault inasmuch as all men are regarded as members of one great organism of which Adam was the first mover. Thus through his sin his descendants incur a culpability similar to that of the hand which executes a murder, moved by the human will. The instrument of transmission is generation, regardless of the accompanying concupiscence.

The Thomist synthesis was not at once accepted everywhere. The old rigorous Augustinianism persisted among the *Franciscans, and esp. in the religious family of St Augustine, whereas, on the other hand, the rationalist tendencies of Abelard were voiced by others who denied the guilt (reatus culpae), recognizing only its punitive consequences (reatus poenae). The more prominent Scholastics, however, such as *Duns Scotus, *William of Ockham, and their disciples, accepted the Thomist principles, but while defining Original Sin exclusively as lack of original righteousness (carentia justitiae originalis debitae), tended to eliminate the element of concupiscence.

In the subsequent controversy with the Reformers the teaching was made increasingly precise; to the exaggerated pessimism of M. *Luther and J. *Calvin, who equated Original Sin with concupiscence and affirmed that it completely destroyed liberty and persisted even after Baptism, the Council of *Trent opposed the teaching of the Schoolmen, without, however, pronouncing on points still disputed by Catholic theologians. In restating the doctrine of St Thomas, Dominic *Soto eliminated the element of concupiscence altogether from the definition and identified Original Sin with the loss of sanctifying grace. His views had a far-reaching influence, being accepted by authorities like F. *Suárez, R. *Bellarmine, and the *Salmanticenses. But the official decisions of the RC Church followed the teaching of the older theologians. In his condemnation of M. *Baius (1567), Pope *Pius V, going beyond Trent, sanctioned the Thomist distinction between nature and supernature in the state of Paradise, condemned the identification of Original Sin with concupiscence, and admitted the possibility of the right use of the freedom of the will in the unbaptized. In the 17th and 18th cents. the *Jesuits developed the doctrine along the lines of moderated optimism traced by the Schoolmen, whereas the French theologians of *Jansenist leanings, such as the circle of *Port-Royal and J.-B. *Bossuet, inclined towards the old Augustinian pessimism.

From about the 18th cent. there has been a tendency for the dogma of Original Sin to become increasingly attenuated. It conflicted with the *Enlightenment's confidence in human progress, and the accompanying individualism made the idea of being punished for the sins of another seem morally intolerable. The theory of evolution both cast doubt on the historicity of Gen. 2, and at the same time suggested that man's evil propensities might derive from his evolutionary origins. None the less, the doctrine of Original Sin in some form persisted. I. *Kant reaffirmed it in his conception of 'radical evil'; F. D. E. *Schleiermacher explained the state of sin and separation from God into which men are born as due to social heredity; G. W. F. *Hegel regarded Original Sin as evidence of the emergence of moral consciousness; and S. A. *Kierkegaard found it in man's Angst (dread or anxiety) in the face of moral possibility. The traditional doctrine has been strongly reaffirmed by K. *Barth and his followers. Modern treatments of Original Sin, however, tend to regard it as belonging to the nature of man rather than to the individual person; they derive it less from heredity than from the inescapably social character of man. This tendency is reflected in the emphasis of the Second *Vatican Council on the corporate aspects of sin and redemption.

F. R. Tennant, The Origin and Propagation of Sin (Hulsean Lectures for 1901–2; 1902); id., The Sources of the Doctrines of the Fall and Original Sin (1903); N. P. *Williams, The Ideas of the Fall and of Original Sin (Bampton Lectures for 1924; 1927), with formularies repr., pp. 537–50. E. *Brunner, Der Mensch im Widerspruch (1937; Eng. tr., Man in Revolt, 1939). F. H. Maycock, Original Sin (1948). L. Ligier, Péché d'Adam et péché du monde (Théologie, 43 and 48; 1960–1). K. Barth, Christus und Adam nach Röm. 5 (Theologische Studien, 35; 1952; Eng. tr., Scottish Journal of Theology, Occasional Papers, 5; 1956): id., Die kirchliche Dogmatik, 4, pt. 1 (1953), pp. 531–73; Eng. tr. (1956), pp. 478–513. A.-M. Dubarle, OP, Le Péché originel dans l'Écriture (Lectio Divina, 20; 1958; Eng. tr., 1964). J. Gross, Geschichte des Erbsündendogmas (4 vols., 1960–72). H. Rondet, SJ, Le Péché originel dans la tradition patristique et théologique (1967; Eng. tr., 1972). P. Schoonenberg in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 2 (Einsiedeln [1967]), pp. 899–941. E. W. Kemp (ed.), Man: Fallen and Free (1969). U. Baumann, Erbsünde? Ihr traditionelles Verständnis in der Krise heutiger Theologie (Ökumenische Forschungen, II. Soteriologische Abteilung, 2; 1970). A. Vanneste, Le Dogme du Péché Originel (Recherches Africaines de Théologie. Travaux de la Faculté de Théologie de Kinshasa, 1; Louvain and Paris, 1971). P. Grelot, Péché originel et rédemption examinés à partir de l'épître aux Romains [1973]. R. M. Martin (ed.), La Controverse sur le péché originel au début du XIVᵉ siècle: Textes inédits (SSL 10; 1930). S. A. Kierkegaard, Begrebet Angest (1844; Eng. tr., The Concept of Dread, 1944). A. Gaudel and M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 275–623, s.v. 'Péché originel', with bibl. cols. 605 f. and 623; S. Lyonnet, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 509–67, s.v. 'Péché (4)'; K. *Rahner in Sacramentum Mundi, 4 (1969), pp. 328–34, s.v. See also bibl. to AUGUSTINE, ST, SIN, and comm. on ROMANS, EPISTLE TO THE.

Ornaments Rubric. The common name for the ruling, inserted in the 1559 BCP at the beginning of the order for Morning and Evening Prayer, that the ornaments of the Church and the ministers should be those in use 'by the authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King *Edward VI'. The second Act of *Uniformity, to which this Book was attached, added the qualification that such use should continue 'until other order shall be therein taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty, with the advice of her commissioners appointed and authorized under the great seal of England for causes ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this realm'. The interpretation of this rubric has been a vexed question since the 16th cent. The only explicit statement about the ornaments is contained in the Prayer Book of 1549, but it was long disputed whether the reference was to the provisions of this book. The *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have twice ruled that Abp. M. *Parker's '*Advertisements' (1566) were the 'other order' foreshadowed in the Act; but their ruling has been widely contested, esp. since the Advertisements had no statutory authority, nor can they be regarded as overriding the later re-enactment of the rubric by Parliament in 1604 and 1662. The whole question seems too complex to permit of any certain solution.

The Ornaments of the Church and its Ministers. Convocation of Canterbury. Upper House Report No. 416. Report of the subcommittee appointed February 1907 to draw up a Historical Memorandum on the Ornaments of the Church and its Ministers (1908). J. T. Micklethwaite, The Ornaments of the Rubric (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 1; 1897). W. H. *Frere in DECH, pp. 425–7.

Orosius (early 5th cent.), Paulus Orosius, historian. A native of Braga, who as a young presbyter had written a 'Commonitorium' against *Priscillianism, in 414 he migrated to Africa, where he was befriended by St *Augustine. Shortly afterwards Augustine sent him to Palestine to enlist St *Jerome in the fight against *Pelagianism. When, however, the Council of Diospolis (in Palestine) of 415 upheld Pelagius, Orosius composed a 'Liber Apologeticus', defending himself against the charge of heresy. In 416 he returned to the W. and in 417 undertook, at Augustine's request and in the spirit of his 'City of God', a 'Historia adversus Paganos' which, by insisting on both the providential control of history and the calamities of the past, attacked the pagan complaint that Rome's troubles were due to her abandonment of the gods. Books 1–2 reach to the foundation of Rome, 3–4 to the birth of Christ, and 7 to AD 417. Only after AD 378 is it of any real historical value.

Ed. by S. Haverkamp (Leiden, 1738), repr. with additions in J. P. Migne, PL 31. Modern edn. of 'Historia' and 'Liber Apologeticus' by C. Zangemeister (CSEL 5, 1882; 'Historia' rev. for Teub. edn., 1889); of 'Commonitorium' by G. Schepss (CSEL 18, 1889, pp. 149–57) and by K.-D. Daur (CCLS 49, 1985, pp. 157–163). 'Historia' also ed., with Fr. tr., by M.-P. Arnaud-Lindet (Collection des Universités de France publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 3 vols., 1990–1). Eng. tr. of 'Historia' and 'Liber Apologeticus' by I. W. Raymond (Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, 26; 1936). J. Svennung, Orosiana (Uppsala, 1922); H. Hagendahl, Orosius und Justinus (Göteborg, 1941); B. Lacroix, OP, Orose et ses idées (Université de Montréal, Publications de l'Institut d'Études médiévales, 18; 1965); F. Fabbrini, Paolo Orosio: Uno Storico (1979); H.-W. Goetz, Die Geschichtstheologie des Orosius (Impulse der Forschung, 32; 1980). V. Grossi in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 494–8. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 965–9, s.v. 'Orose'.

Orsisius, St (d. c.380), also 'Orsiesius' and 'Horsi-isi', ascetic and Abbot of Tabenne (an island in the Nile). He was a disciple and close friend of St *Pachomius, who set him over the monastery of Chenobosci. On Pachomius' death (348) he succeeded him (after a few days' interval under Petronius) as *hegumen of Tabenne. The opposition to his strict rule led him to resign in favour of St Theodore (d. 368), but he resumed the oversight of the monastery on the latter's death. He wrote a 'Doctrina de Institutione Monachorum' (probably in Coptic), which was commended by *Gennadius of Marseilles; it survives in a Latin version, probably the work of St *Jerome. He was warmly supported by St *Athanasius, from whom two letters to Orsisius survive. Feast day, 15 June.

Jerome's text of 'Doctrina de Institutione Monachorum' repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 40. 869–94; also in PL 103. 453–76. Text of Athanasius' two Epp. to Orsisius in id., PG 26. 977–80. P. Ladeuze, Étude sur le cénobitisme pakhômien (Diss., Louvain, 1898), esp. pp. 155–255. J.-C. Guy in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), col. 763, s.v. 'Horsièse'.

Orthodox Church, also termed the Eastern, Greek, or Greco-Russian Church. A family of Churches, situated mainly in E. Europe: each member Church is independent in its internal administration, but all share the same faith and are in communion with one another, acknowledging the honorary primacy of the Patriarch of *Constantinople (or *Oecumenical Patriarch).

At present the Orthodox communion consists of the following self-governing or *autocephalous Churches: (1)

The four ancient *Patriarchates of Constantinople, *Alexandria, *Antioch, and *Jerusalem; (2) five Patriarchates of more recent origin: *Russia, *Serbia, *Romania, *Bulgaria, and *Georgia; (3) the Orthodox Churches of *Cyprus, *Greece, the Czech Republic and Slovakia, *Poland, and *Albania. To these must be added certain 'autonomous' Churches, which are self-governing in most respects but do not enjoy full independence: *Finland, *China, *Japan, and the monastery of *Sinai. An autocephalous Orthodox Church of America is in process of formation, but is not yet generally recognized as such.

Historically, what is today known as 'the Orthodox Church' developed from the Church of the E. Roman or Byzantine Empire; the predominant cultural influence upon Orthodoxy has thus been that of Greece. The Orthodox world first became limited on its E. side in consequence of the *Monophysite and *Nestorian schisms during the 5th–6th cents.; as a result the Patriarchates of Alexandria and Antioch were greatly reduced in numbers and importance. (It should be noted that the *Oriental Orthodox Churches also claim the title 'Orthodox'.) Then from the 9th cent. onwards (see PHOTIUS) there came an increasing estrangement between the two great sees of Rome and Constantinople, and this led eventually to an open and lasting schism. The final breach between Greek and Latin Christendom is usually assigned to the year 1054 (see MICHAEL CERULARIUS), but in fact the schism was a gradual and complicated process, and its beginning cannot be exactly dated. The chief doctrinal points at issue between the two sides were the Papal claims and the *Filioque; on the level of liturgical usage great tension was caused by the question of 'azymes' (see AZYMITES; BREAD, LEAVENED AND UNLEAVENED). Attempts at reconciliation were made by the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1438–9), but the Unions proclaimed at these two councils were never accepted by the Orthodox East at large and remained ineffective.

Bounded, as a result of these schisms, first on the eastern and subsequently on the western side, the Orthodox Church expanded to the north. A great missionary advance was inaugurated in the middle of the 9th cent. by Sts *Cyril and Methodius, the 'Apostles of the Slavs'. Bulgaria, Serbia, and subsequently Russia were converted to the Christian faith largely through the efforts of Byzantine missionaries. In due course these Slav countries acquired national Churches of their own, independent of the Mother Church of Constantinople. Since the fall of Constantinople to the Turks (1453), the Church of Russia has been the largest and most influential member of the Orthodox communion, but the Oecumenical Patriarch continues to retain his honorary primacy. During the past five centuries Orthodoxy suffered severely from outward oppression and persecution, first under the Ottoman Empire, and more recently under Communism. With the sudden collapse of Communist power around 1988, a new era of revival and expansion has begun for the Orthodox Churches in Russia and the rest of Eastern Europe.

The faith of the Orthodox Church is based primarily upon the dogmatic definitions of the seven *Oecumenical Councils. (The Orthodox do not recognize as Oecumenical any Council held since the Second of *Nicaea in 787.) Certain later Councils, although 'local' and not Oecumenical in character, have also exercised a decisive influence upon the expression of Orthodox doctrine. Most important among these are the Councils of Constantinople in 1341 and 1351, which endorsed the teaching of *Hesychasm concerning the Divine light; and the Councils of *Jassy (1642) and *Jerusalem (1672), which clarified Orthodox doctrine regarding the Eucharist and the nature of the Church. Orthodox teaching on many points has never been explicitly formulated by any Council, but is found embodied in the liturgical texts used by the Church in worship.

Orthodox theology attaches the utmost significance to the role of Councils in the life of the Church. The highest outward authority, alike in doctrine and discipline, is the Oecumenical Council, attended by representatives from the whole Church. Orthodox are willing to regard the Pope of Rome as the chief bishop in Christendom, but they look on him merely as the 'first among equals' in the episcopal college, and do not assign to him a universal supremacy of jurisdiction. While deeply respecting the episcopal and priestly office, Orthodoxy also allows an active place to the laity, who are often prominent as theologians and preachers, and even at times as spiritual directors (see STARETZ).

The Orthodox Church acknowledges the *seven sacraments, or 'mysteries' as they are termed: but Orthodox theologians attach less importance than RCs to the precise number seven, and no rigid distinction is drawn between these seven sacraments and other sacramental actions, such as monastic profession, the great blessing of the waters at *Epiphany, burial of the dead, the anointing of a monarch, etc. Baptism is performed by immersion; chrismation (confirmation) is administered by the priest immediately after baptism, and children are taken to communion from infancy. The bread and wine in the Eucharist are considered to become, at the consecration, the true and real Body and Blood of Christ: some Orthodox employ the term *transubstantiation, but others prefer to avoid it. Devout Orthodox normally communicate only four or five times a year, after careful preparation and confession; but in Greece and other parts of the Orthodox world there is now a movement in favour of more frequent communion. Services are in principle held in the language of the people, but in many places (e.g. Greece and Russia) an archaic form is used, not the modern vernacular.

The veneration of *icons plays a notable part in Orthodox worship, both private and public. Prayers to the Mother of God and the saints are common in the liturgical texts. Orthodox believe in the bodily *Assumption of the BVM—although it has never been formally defined or proclaimed as a dogma—but they usually deny the RC teaching on her *Immaculate Conception. Intercession for the departed is much emphasized in Orthodox spirituality, but the doctrine of *purgatory, as developed in RCism, is not accepted.

Monasteries have been highly influential throughout Orthodox history; since the 10th cent. the chief monastic centre has been Mount *Athos. From the 6th cent. onwards bishops in the E. have been drawn from the ranks of the celibate clergy. Parish priests, on the other hand, are generally married; the Orthodox Church has never insisted upon the *celibacy of the clergy. Any candidate for ordination, however, who wishes to marry, must do so before becoming deacon; and if a priest's wife dies, in principle he cannot marry again, although in practice exceptions to this rule are sometimes allowed.

Largely isolated from the West for many centuries, the Orthodox Church has now become better known in W. Europe and America, chiefly as a result of large-scale emigration by Greeks and Russians since *c.*1920. (There are today about 250,000 Orthodox in Britain, and some 3½ million in the United States.) The Patriarchate of Constantinople has from the start firmly supported the *Ecumenical Movement. Most other Orthodox Churches have been more reserved in their attitude towards reunion work, but virtually all of them are now represented on the *World Council of Churches. In recent years—and particularly since 1964—the Orthodox have begun to develop close and friendly contacts with the Oriental Orthodox Churches.

Modern introductions by Orthodox authors incl. N. [M.] Zernov, Eastern Christendom: A Study of the Origin and Development of the Eastern Orthodox Church [1961]; J. Meyendorff, L'Église orthodoxe hier et aujourd'hui (1960; Eng. tr., 1962); T. [R.] Ware, The Orthodox Church (Harmondsworth, 1963; repr. with revisions, 1993). See also E. von Ivánka, J. Tyciak, and P. Wiertz (eds.), Handbuch der Ostkirchenkunde (Dusseldorf, 1971).

Older studies: L. *Allatius, De ecclesiae occidentalis atque orientalis perpetua consensione (Cologne, 1648); P. *Rycaut, The Present State of the Greek and Armenian Churches, Anno Christi, 1678 (1679); T. Smith, An Account of the Greek Church (1680); J. *Covel, Some Account of the Present Greek Church, with Reflections on their Present Doctrine and Discipline; Particularly in the Eucharist, and the Rest of their Seven Pretended Sacraments (Cambridge, 1722); J. G. King, The Rites and Ceremonies of the Greek Church, in Russia (1772); J. M. *Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church (5 vols., 1847–73); W. *Palmer, Dissertations on Subjects relating to the 'Orthodox' or 'Eastern-Catholic' Communion (1853).

On theology and spirituality: G. *Florovosky, Ways of Russian Theology [Russ., Paris, 1937; Eng. tr. in Collected Works, 5–6; Belmont, Mass., 1979–87); V. *Lossky, Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944; Eng. tr., 1957); P. Sherrard, The Greek East and the Latin West (1959); F. [S. B.] Gavin, Some Aspects of Contemporary Greek Orthodox Thought (Hale Lectures for 1922; Milwaukee and London, 1923); S. *Bulgakov, The Orthodox Church (Eng. tr., 1935); P. Evdokimov, L'Orthodoxie (Bibliothèque Théologique, 1959); F. *Heiler, Urkirche und Ostkirche (Munich, 1937, expanded as Die Ostkirchen, posthumously pub., 1971); J. Meyendorff, Byzantine Theology (New York, 1974; London and Oxford, 1975). St *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain (ed.), Φιλοκαλία τῶν ἱερῶν νηπτικῶν (Venice, 1782; Eng. tr., 1979 ff.). J. N. Karmiris, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, 1–2 (Athens, 1952–3); P. N. Trembelas, Δογματικὴ τῆς Ὀρθόδοξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας (3 vols., ibid., 1959–61; Fr. tr., 3 vols., Chevetogne [1966–8]). M. Jugie, AA, Theologia Dogmatica Christianorum Orientalium ab Ecclesia Catholica Dissidentium, 1–4 (Paris, 1926–31). P. Hauptmann (ed.), Unser ganzes Leben Christus unserm Gott überantworten: Studien zur ostkirchlichen Spiritualität. Fairy v. Lilienfeld zum 65. Geburtstag (Kirche im Osten, 17; Göttingen, 1982).

Worship: C. A. *Swainson (ed.), The Greek Liturgies (Cambridge, 1884); J. *Goar, Εὐχολόγιον sive Rituale Graecorum (Paris, 1647; 2nd edn., Venice, 1730; repr. Graz, 1960). P. N. Trembelas (ed.), Αἱ τρεῖς Λειτουργίαι (Texte und Forschungen zur Byzantinischneugriechischen Philologie, 15; Athens, 1935); id. (ed.), Μικρὸν Εὐχολόγιον (2 vols., Athens, 1950–5). E. Mercenier, OSB, and others, La Prière des églises de rite byzantin (vol. 1, Chevetogne, 1937, 3rd edn., 1975; vol. 2 in 2 pts., 1939–48, 2nd edn. of pt. 1, 1953; vol. 3, 1972). Partial Eng. trs. by Mother Mary and K. [T. R.] Ware of The Festal Menaion (1969) and The Lenten Triodion (1978). S. Salaville, AA, Liturgies orientales: Notions générales, éléments principaux (1932; Eng. tr., 1938); A. Schmemann, Introduction to Liturgical Theology (Eng. tr. from Russian, 1966); H. [M.] Wybrew, The Orthodox Liturgy: The Development of the Eucharistic Liturgy in the Byzantine Rite (1989).

The question of reunion: W. J. Birkbeck, Russia and the English Church during the Last Fifty Years, 1 (all pub.; 1895); J. A. Douglas, The Relations of the Anglican Churches with Eastern-Orthodox (1921); V. T. Istavridis, Ὀρθοδοξία καὶ Ἀγγλικανισμός (1963; Eng. tr., 1966). J. Kotsonis, Ἡ κανονικὴ ἄποψις περὶ τῆς ἐπικοινωνίας μετὰ τῶν ἑτεροδόξων (Intercommunio) (1957); M. Fouyas, Orthodoxy, Roman Catholicism, and Anglicanism (1972).

Orthodoxy. As a religious system, right belief, as contrasted with heresy. The word is used esp. of those Churches in E. Christendom which are in communion with *Constantinople, collectively described in ancient times as 'the holy, orthodox, catholic, apostolic Eastern Church' (ἡ ἁγία ὀρθόδοξος καθολικὴ ἀποστολικὴ ἀνατολικὴ ἐκκλησία) and today as the 'Eastern Orthodox' to distinguish them from the separated bodies known collectively as the '*Oriental Orthodox Churches'. See also previous and following entries.

Orthodoxy, Feast of. The feast established in 843 to celebrate the final downfall of the *Iconoclastic party and the restoration of the icons. Since then it has been solemnly kept in the E. Church both by Orthodox and *Uniats on the First Sunday of *Lent, and has come to commemorate the triumph of the right faith not only over Iconoclasm but over all heresies. A list of heretics, and another of several saints and pious emperors, is read out in the *Synodicon, and old triumphal hymns, composed by martyrs of the Iconoclast persecution, are chanted during the procession of crosses and icons.

Orthros (Gk. ὄρθρος, 'dawn'). The name in the E. Church for the morning *office which corresponds to *Mattins and *Lauds in the West.

Ortlieb of Strasbourg (c. AD 1200), founder of a sect ('Ortlibarii'). Little is known of him beyond the fact that his teaching was condemned by *Innocent III. Like contemporary *Amalricians, he may have been influenced by a revived *Neoplatonism. His doctrine stressed a *pantheistic union of man with God, and his followers appealed against the external Church to the inner authority of the Spirit, maintaining the eternity of the world and unorthodox doctrines of the Trinity and the Incarnation. The sect had affinities with the later *Brethren of the Free Spirit but no historical connection has been established.

The principal source for the doctrines ascribed to the sect is the 'Anonymus of Passau contra Waldenses', pr. in the Bibliotheca Maxima Veterum Patrum, 25 (Lyons, 1677), pp. 262–77. W. Preger, Geschichte der deutschen Mystik im Mittelalter, 1 (1874), pp. 191–6; H. Reuter, Geschichte der religiösen Aufklärung im Mittelalter, 2 (1877), pp. 237–40, with notes, pp. 375 f. S. M. Deutsch in PRE (3rd edn.), 14 (1904), pp. 498–501, with bibl.; H. Grundmann in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 1256 f., s.v. 'Ortlieber'. See also works cited under WALDENSES.

O Salutaris Hostia. (Lat., 'O Saving Victim'). The last two verses of St *Thomas Aquinas's hymn 'Verbum Supernum Prodiens', written *c.*1263 for use on the Feast of *Corpus Christi. In the RC Church it is frequently sung during the service of *Benediction. There are many English translations of the complete hymn, and still more of its two concluding verses, the most familiar being E. *Caswall's 'O Saving Victim! opening wide The gate of Heav'n to man below!' (1849).

Crit. edn. of text by C. M. Dreves (ed.), Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, 2 (AHMA 1; 1907), pp. 588 f. Raby, pp. 409 f., with bibl. p. 483.

O Sapientia. (Lat., 'O Wisdom'). The initial apostrophe of the first of the *O-Antiphons. The words appeared in the *Sarum calendar as an entry against 16 Dec. Omitted from the calendar of the BCP of 1549, owing to the discontinuance of the Antiphons, they were restored in 1661. In non-English calendars the date is 17 Dec.

osculatorium. See PAX BREDE.

Osiander, Andreas (1496/8–1552), Reformation theologian. Ordained priest in 1520, he joined the *Lutherans *c.*1524 and took part in the *Marburg Colloquy of 1529 and the *Augsburg Diet of 1530. He collaborated with J. *Brenz and others in the Ansbach–Kulmbach–Nürnberg Church Order, adopted in 1533. In the same year he published his influential Kinderpredigten on the Catechism. He left Nürnberg in 1548 as a result of the *Augsburg Interim and soon afterwards became professor at Königsberg, where he published his De Justificatione (1550). A violent and bitter controversialist, he opposed M. *Luther's doctrine of *justification by faith, maintaining that justification was not a mere imputation of Christ's merits, but a substantial transference of His righteousness to the believer. His other writings include a revised edition of the *Vulgate and a 'Harmony' of the Gospels, the first of its kind. His niece, Margaret Osiander, became the wife of T. *Cranmer (1532).

Gesamtausgabe, ed. G. Müller and G. Seebass (Gütersloh, 1975 ff.). Standard study by W. Möller (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der lutherischen Kirche, ed. I. Hartmann and others, 5; Elberfeld, 1870; repr., Nieuwkoop, 1965). E. Hirsch, Die Theologie des Andreas Osiander und ihre geschichtlichen Voraussetzungen (1919); G. Seebass, Das reformatorische Werk des Andreas Osiander (Einzelarbeiten aus der Kirchengeschichte Bayerns, 44; 1967). M. Stupperich, Osiander in Preussen 1549 1552 (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 44; 1973). G. Müller, 'Andreas Osiander' in M. Greschat (ed.), Die Reformationszeit, 2 (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 6; 1981), pp. 59–73, incl. bibl. D. Wünsch, Evangelienharmonien im Reformationszeitalter (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 52; 1983), pp. 21–179. Bibl. of Osiander's works by G. Seebass (Nieuwkoop, 1971). Id. in TRE 25 (1995), pp. 507–15, s.v.

Osmund, St (d. 1099), Bp. of *Salisbury. Acc. to a late and historically impossible tradition, he was a nephew of *William I; the earliest established fact is that he was his chancellor in the 1070s. He became Bp. of Salisbury in 1078. He completed the cathedral at Old Sarum, dedicated in 1091 (not the present one at Salisbury which dates from 1225) and constituted a chapter of canons. He was a learned bibliophile and promoted the cult of St *Aldhelm. A document regulating chapter life ('institutio'), which influenced statutes at several cathedrals in the 13th cent., was traditionally ascribed to him, but the earliest parts of the text were probably not composed before 1150. The Sarum liturgical use, also attributed to him, is prob. not older than Richard *Poore (dean and bishop, 1197/8–1228), who applied unsuccessfully for his canonization. Osmund was eventually canonized on 1 Jan. 1456. Feast day, 4 Dec.; of his translation, 16 July.

Vetus Registrum Sarisberiense alias dictum S. Osmundi Episcopi, ed. W. H. Rich Jones (2 vols., Rolls Series, 1883–4). A. R. Malden (ed.), The Canonization of Saint Osmund from the Manuscript Records in the Muniment Room of Salisbury Cathedral . . . with introduction and notes (Wilts Record Society, 1901). W. J. Torrance, The Story of Saint Osmund (posthumous; Friends of Salisbury Cathedral Publications [1978]). D. E. Greenway, 'The false Institutio of St Osmund', in D. [E.] Greenway, C. [J.] Holdsworth, and J. [E.] Sayers (eds.), Tradition and Change: Essays in Honour of Marjorie Chibnall (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 77–101. See also bibl. s.v. SALISBURY OR SARUM, USE OF.

Osservatore Romano (Ital., 'The Roman Observer'). A newspaper founded in 1861 and owned by the *Vatican. It publishes the official text and authorized Italian translation of *encyclicals and other Papal documents, the Pope's speeches, appointments of bishops, the announcements of consistories and various other official acts. In addition to news of religious interest, it publishes reports and comments on political and social events. It is issued daily except on Sundays.

Ossius. Probably the correct spelling of the name of the celebrated 4th-cent. Bp. of Córdoba commonly known as *Hosius (q.v.).

C. H. *Turner, 'Ossius (Hosius) of Cordova', JTS 12 (1910–11), pp. 275–7.

ostensory (Lat. ostensorium). A receptacle for showing objects of religious devotion to the people. The word is now commonly restricted to the *monstrance (q.v.), used for the exposition of the Blessed Sacrament; but in earlier times it was applied to other vessels with a transparent casing, e.g. those for the exposition of relics.

Ostervald, Jean Frédéric (1663–1747), Swiss Reformed pastor of Neuchâtel. He became interested in the C of E, corresponded with G. *Burnet and W. *Wake, and in 1713 he published a Eucharistic liturgy in which J. *Calvin's rite was combined with elements from the BCP and the Roman Missal. It became widely known, remained in use until the 20th cent., and has been regarded as the first ecumenical liturgy.

The text of the liturgy is conveniently repr., with discussion, by B. Bürki, Cène du Seigneur—Eucharistie de l'Église, vol. A (Cahiers Œcuméniques, 17; Fribourg, 1985), pp. 14–24.

Ostian Way (Lat. Via Ostiensis). The ancient road which led from Rome to the seaport of Ostia, 14 miles distant at the mouth of the Tiber on its left bank. On its W. side, about two miles from the centre of Rome, lies the church of *St Paul's outside the Walls. This site has been held to be the resting-place of the remains of St *Paul at least from the end of the 2nd cent., for the presbyter *Gaius (c. AD 200) recorded that the tombs (τρόπαια) of Sts Peter and Paul were located (respectively) in his day at the *Vatican and on the Ostian Way. The Bp. of Ostia is the senior cardinal-bishop.

*Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 2. 25. 6–7.

ostiarius. See DOORKEEPER.

Oswald, St (c.605–42), King of Northumbria, and martyr. The son of Ethelfrith, King of Northumbria, Oswald was forced to flee to Scotland when Edwin seized the kingdom after his father's death in 616. He was converted later to the Christian faith by the monks of St *Columba at *Iona. Edwin was killed in 633; Oswald returned in 634 and, after erecting a wooden cross on the battlefield and commanding his soldiers to pray, defeated the British king, Cadwallon, at Heavenfield, near Hexham. Encouraged by his victory, he began to establish Christianity in his kingdom and appealed to Iona for missionaries. St *Aidan was sent for the work, and having been given the isle of *Lindisfarne as his see, by his gentleness and with the co-operation of the king, who often acted as his interpreter, achieved the conversion of a large part of the country. In the eighth year of his reign Oswald was killed in battle by the pagan Penda of Mercia, who mutilated his body. His head, which was deposited in St *Cuthbert's coffin in 875, was found at *Durham in 1827. He was honoured as a martyr not only by the English but also on the Continent throughout the Middle Ages. Feast day, 5 Aug.; in some places, 8 or 9 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 2. 5, 14, 20; 3. 1–3, 6 f., 9–14, 23 f.; and 4. 14; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 85, 88 f., 96–8, 102–6, 155, 230 f., with further refs. 11th-cent. Life by Drogo pr. in AASS, Aug. 2 (1735), pp. 94–103; Life by Reginald of Durham (1162), most of which is pr. among the works of *Simeon of Durham ed. T. Arnold, 1 (RS, 1882), pp. 326–85, with introd., p. xli. D. Townsend, 'Henry of Avranches: Vita Sancti Oswaldi', Mediaeval Studies, 56 (1994), pp. 1–65, incl. text. B. Colgrave in C. F. Battiscombe (ed.), The Relics of Saint Cuthbert (1956), pp. 116–18. R. Folz, 'Saint Oswald roi de Northumbrie. Étude d'hagiographie royale', Anal. Boll. 98 (1980), pp. 49–74. C. Stancliffe and E. Cambridge (eds.), Oswald: Northumbrian King to European Saint (Stamford, 1995). P. [A. M.] Clemoes, The Cult of St Oswald on the Continent (Jarrow Lecture, 1983). J. Raine in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 163 f., s.v. 'Oswald (1)'.

Oswald, St (d. 992), Abp. of *York. A Dane by birth, Oswald studied in the household of his uncle, Abp. *Oda of Canterbury, and later at the Benedictine monastery of *Fleury, where he was ordained. He returned to England in 959 and in 962 was consecrated Bp. of *Worcester by St *Dunstan. He took an active part in the reform of abuses and established many monasteries, the most famous of which was the abbey of Ramsey in Cambridgeshire. In 972 he was made Abp. of York, though he retained the see of Worcester in order to promote his monastic reforms. The latter were seriously endangered by Elfhere, earl of Mercia, who broke up many of Oswald's communities, though he spared Ramsey. Feast day, 28 Feb.

The principal authority is the anonymous Life, written between 995 and 1005, and now attributed to *Byrhtferth (q.v.); it is ed. J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops 1 (RS, 1879), pp. 399–475; crit. edn. by M. Lapidge (Oxford Medieval Texts, in preparation). The Life by *Eadmer, pr. by J. Raine, op. cit., 2 (RS, 1886), pp. 1–59, adds a certain amount of information. Other Lives, of little historical value, ibid., pp. 60–97 and 489–512, with introd., pp. ix–xi. J. Armitage *Robinson, St Oswald and the Church of Worcester (British Academy Supplementary Papers, 5; 1919); E. H. Pearce, St Oswald of Worcester and the Church of York (York Minster Historical Tracts, 4 [1928]). [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, The Monastic Order in England (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1963), pp. 40–56. E. John, 'St. Oswald and the Tenth Century Reformation', JEH 9 (1958), pp. 159–172. W. Hunt in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 323–5, with further refs.

Oswine, St (d. 651), also 'Oswin', Anglo-Saxon King. After the murder of his father, Osric, King of Deira, by Cadwallon (634), Oswine was taken to Wessex for safety. Returning on the death of his kinsman St *Oswald, King of Northumbria (642), he became King of Deira, while Bernicia, the northern part of Northumbria, passed under the rule of Oswald's brother, Oswy. When open conflict broke out with Oswy, Oswine took refuge at Gilling, near Richmond, N. Yorks, where he was murdered. He was a devout Christian and a close friend of St *Aidan. His tomb at Gilling became a place of pilgrimage until, in the Danish invasions, it was removed to Tynemouth. Feast day, 20 Aug.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 3. 14; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 106–8, with bibl. refs. There is a 12th-cent. Life by a monk of *St Albans resident at Tynemouth, based on the account of Bede, but with additional material on Oswine's translation and the miracles connected with him; it is mostly pr. in J. Raine (ed.), Miscellanea Biographica (Surtees Society, 8; 1838), pp. 1–59. Life [by F. W. *Faber] in The Lives of the English Saints [written at the suggestion of J. H. *Newman], 1844; ed. A. W. Hutton, 4 (1901), pp. 240–70. J. Raine in DCB 4 (1887), p. 165, s.v. 'Oswin (1)'; C. L. Kingsford in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 332 f.; W. Hunt in DECH, pp. 428 f., s.v.

Otfrid of Weissenburg (d. c.875), author of an Old High German biblical epic. He was a monk of Weissenburg (modern Wissembourg) in Alsace. Having studied under *Rabanus Maurus at *Fulda, he built up a library of biblical MSS and composed a poem in five books and of over 7,000 lines about the life of Christ (Evangelienbuch, c.863/71). It consists of a chronological narrative constructed from selected Gospel passages accompanied by theological commentary and culminating in the Last Judgement. Otfrid conceived his work as a revival of the tradition of ancient poetry, but now in the vernacular and to the glory of God and the Franks.

Editio princeps of the Evangelienbuch by M. *Flacius (Basle, 1571). Crit. edn. by O. Erdmann (Halle, 1882); editio minor rev. by L. Wolff (Altdeutsche Textbibliothek, 49; Tübingen, 1957). Selections, with modern Ger. tr., by G. Vollmann-Profe (Reclams Universal-Bibliothek, 8384; Stuttgart, 1987). W. Kleiber, Otfrid von Weissenburg (Bibliotheca Germanica, 14; Berne and Munich, 1971); id. (ed.), Otfrid von Weissenburg (Wege der Forschung, 419; Darmstadt, 1978). E. Hellgardt, Die exegetischen Quellen von Otfrids Evangelienbuch (Hermaea, NF 41; Tübingen, 1981). J. K. Bostock, A Handbook on Old High German Literature, 2nd edn., rev. by K. C. King and D. R. McLintock (Oxford, 1976), pp. 190–212. Johanna Belkin in id. and J. Meier, Bibliographie zu Otfrid von Weissenburg und zur altsächsischen Bibeldichtung (Heliand und Genesis) (Bibliographien zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 7 [1975]), pp. 5–59. W. Schröder in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 7 (1989), cols. 172–93, s.v.

Othilia, St. See ODILIA, ST.

Otto, St (1062/3–1139), Bp. of Bamberg, the 'Apostle of Pomerania'. Born of a noble family of Swabia, he entered the service of the Emp. *Henry IV before 1090, and was made chancellor in 1101. In 1102 Henry named him Bp. of Bamberg, but in 1105 he joined the party of Henry V and was consecrated in Rome in the following year. Though in the *Investiture Controversy his sympathies were with the Pope, he tried to maintain a neutral attitude which led to his temporary suspension by Adalbert of Mainz at the Synod of Fritzlar in 1118. At the Congress of Würzburg (1121) he endeavoured to restore peace, which was finally obtained by the Concordat of *Worms in 1122. Throughout these years Otto devoted himself to the reform of his diocese, taking part in the foundation of over 20 monasteries and completing the cathedral. In 1124 he went on a missionary journey to Pomerania at the instigation of Duke Boleslas III of Poland, who had obtained the Pomeranians' promise to accept the Christian faith as a condition of the peace made between the two peoples in 1120. He converted many of the most important towns and, on a second journey four years later, also the greater part of the nobles, though a bishopric was not established till after his death. He was canonized in 1189. Feast day, 30 Sept.; in the *Roman Martyrology, 2 July.

There are three primary Lives: (1) by a monk of Prüfening, prob. written between 1140 and 1146; (2) by Ebo, a monk of St Michael's, Bamberg, written in the 1150s; and (3) by Herbord, also a monk of Bamberg, 'Dialogus de Vita Ottonis', written in 1158–9. They are pr. by R. Köpke in MGH, Scriptores, 12 (1856), pp. 746–903, though the text of the Herbord Life is not complete. Complete text of all three ed. by J. Wikarjak (Monumenta Poloniae Historica, 2nd ser. 7: fasc. 1, the Prüfening Life, Warsaw, 1966; fasc. 2, the Life by Ebo, 1969; fasc. 3, Life by Herbord, 1974). Eng. tr. of Books 2 and 3 of Life by Ebo, with additional matter from Life by Herbord, by C. H. Robinson (Translations of Christian Literature, 2nd ser., Latin Texts; 1920, not wholly satisfactory). BHL 2, pp. 923–6 (nos. 6392–407). E. Demm, Reformmönchtum und Salwenmission im 12. Jahrhundert: Westsoziologisch-geistesgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu den Viten Bischof Ottos von Bamberg (Historische Studien, 419; 1970), with bibl. Id., 'Zur Interpretation und Datierung der Ottoviten', Zeitschrift für bayerische Landesgeschichte, 39 (1976), pp. 565–605. J. Petersohn, 'Otto von Bamberg und seine Biographen', ibid. 43 (1980), pp. 3–27; R. Bartlett, 'The Conversion of a Pagan Society in the Middle Ages', History, 70 (1985), pp. 185–201, with further refs. Modern study by M. Wehrmann (Pommersche Heimatkunde, 8; Greifswald, 1924). E. von Guttenberg, Das Bistum Bamberg, 1 (Germania Sacra, 2. 1; 1937), pp. 115–38. K. Löffler in CE 11 (1911), pp. 353 f., s.v.; J. Petersohn in TRE 25 (1995), pp. 552–5.

Otto of Freising (*c.*1114/15–58), Bp. of Freising. He was the son of Leopold III, Margrave of the Eastern March (Austria), and of Agnes, daughter of the Emp. *Henry IV, and thus *Frederick Barbarossa's uncle. He studied at Paris, possibly under *Hugh of St-Victor, and perhaps also at *Reims and *Chartres. He entered the Cistercian abbey of Morimond in Champagne *c.*1132 and became abbot *c.*1136. Appointed Bp. of Freising in 1138, he reformed his diocese, took part in the Second *Crusade (1147–8), and was one of the first theologians to introduce the study of *Aristotle into Germany. He is chiefly important as a historian, his principal works being 'Chronicon seu historia de duabus civitatibus' (1143–6) and 'Gesta Friderici' (1156–8). In the former he modified St *Augustine's conception of the 'two cities', seeing their union in the Catholic Church as the continuation of the Roman Empire. In the latter he described the history of the first part of Barbarossa's reign, largely on the basis of original documents.

Crit. edn. of his Chronicon by A. Hofmeister (Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum, Hanover and Berlin, 1912); Gesta Friderici ed. G. Waitz and B. de Simson (ibid., 1912) and by F. J. Schmale (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 17; 1965), with introd. and bibl. Eng. tr. of the Chronicon by C. C. Mierow (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies [9]; 1928) and of the Gesta by id. (ibid. 49; 1953). A. Weissthanner, 'Regesten des Freisinger Bischofs Otto I', Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, 14 (1958), pp. 151–222, with other arts. on Otto in the same issue. A. Hofmeister, 'Studien über Otto von Freising', NA 37 (1912), pp. 99–161, 633–768. Otto von Freising: Gedenkgabe zu seinem 800. Todesjahr, ed. J. A. Fischer (Freising, 1958). H.-W. Goetz, Das Geschichtsbild Ottos von Freising (Beihefte zum Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 19; Cologne and Vienna, 1984), with bibl. K. F. Morrison, 'Otto of Freising's Quest for the Hermeneutic Circle', Speculum, 55 (1980), pp. 207–36. C. Kirchner-Feyerabend, Otto von Freising als Diözesan- und Reichsbischof (Europäische Hochschulschriften, 3rd ser. 413 [1990]). F.-J. Schmale in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 7 (1989), cols. 215–23, s.v.

Otto, Rudolf (1869–1937), Protestant theologian. From 1904 to 1917 he was professor of systematic theology at Breslau, and from 1917 to 1929 at Marburg. His analysis of religion in Das Heilige (1917; Eng. tr., The Idea of the Holy, 1923) rested on a wide knowledge of *comparative religion, contemporary oriental thought, and the natural sciences. Its central theme was insistence on the part played by the *numinous in the religious consciousness. With its professed emphasis on the 'non-rational' moments in religion, Otto's understanding of religion had close affinities with that of F. D. E. *Schleiermacher (whose Reden über die Religion he edited, 1899). His other writings include West-Östliche Mystik (1926; Eng. tr., 1932) and Reich Gottes und Menschensohn (1934; Eng. tr., The Kingdom of God and the Son of Man, 1938).

H. Frick (ed.), Rudolf Otto Festgruss (1931); Rudolf Otto Gedächtnisfeier (1938). R. F. Davidson, Rudolf Otto's Interpretation of Religion (Princeton, NJ, 1947). A. Paus, Religiöser Erkenntnisgrund: Herkunft und Wesen der Aprioritheorie Rudolf Ottos (Leiden, 1966). P. C. Almond, Rudolf Otto: An Introduction to his Philosophical Theology (Chapel Hill, NC, and London [1984]).

Ouen, St (*c.*610–84) (also Audoin or Owen), Bp. of Rouen. He was a native of Sancy, nr. Soissons, and spent part of his youth at the court of King Clothair II. There he became the friend of St *Eligius, whose Life (no longer extant in its orig. form) may be his work. Under Dagobert I he became referendary or chancellor. In 634 he founded a monastery called Resbac, the present Rebais, but was prevented from becoming a monk there by King Dagobert. After being ordained priest he was consecrated Bp. of Rouen in 641. He encouraged scholarship, founded many monasteries, and fought simony and other serious abuses. He was employed on several political missions by the Merovingian kings, among them the arrangement of a peace between the Franks of Austrasia and Neustria. He is remembered esp. by the famous church dedicated to him at Rouen, where his body was interred. Feast day, 24 Aug.

Life of Eligius, ascribed to St Ouen, pr. in PL 87. 479–594; crit. edn. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 4 (1902), pp. 634–741. The earliest Life of St Ouen, dating from the 8th cent., ed. W. Levison, ibid. 5 (1910), pp. 536–67; earlier edn. in AASS, Aug. 4 (1739), pp. 805–9; one 9th-cent.

Life is also pr. ibid., pp. 810–19; a second was first ed. E. P. Savage in Anal. Boll. 5 (1886), pp. 67–146. Good modern study by E. Vacandard (Paris, 1902). F. Prinz, Frühes Mönchtum im Frankenreich (Munich, 1965; 2nd edn., Darmstadt, 1988), pp. 124–35. P. Fouracre, 'The Work of Audoenus of Rouen and Eligius of Noyon in extending episcopal influence from the town to the country in seventh-century Neustria', in D. Baker (ed.), The Church in Town and Countryside (Studies in Church History, 16; Oxford, 1979), pp. 77–91. G. Scheibelreiter, 'Audoin von Rouen: Ein Versuch über den Charakter des 7. Jahrhunderts', in H. Atsma (ed.), La Neustrie: Les pays au nord de la Loire de 650 à 850, 1 (Beihefte der Francia, 16/1; Sigmaringen, 1989), pp. 195–216.

Our Father. See LORD'S PRAYER.

Overall, John (1560–1619), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Cambridge, where in 1581 he became a Fellow of Trinity College and from 1595 to 1607 was the Regius professor of divinity. In 1602 he succeeded A. *Nowell as Dean of St Paul's, and in 1605 became *prolocutor of the Lower House of *Convocation. He was consecrated Bp. of *Coventry and Lichfield in 1614 and translated to Norwich in 1618. The section on the Sacraments in the BCP Catechism was drawn up by Overall on the basis of that in Nowell's 'Small Catechism' of 1572. He was also responsible for a set of canons on the relations of Church and State, compiled in 1606 with the *Gunpowder Plot in view and known as his 'Convocation Book'. *James I, however, prohibited its acceptance by Convocation, as Overall defended teaching on the *Divine Right of Kings which appeared to justify a successful rebellion and permit the institution of 'new forms of government' (can. 28); and the publication of the book was delayed till 1690. Overall also assisted in the translation of the AV Bible.

His 'Convocation Book', orig. ed. W. *Sancroft, London, 1690, was repr. in the LACT, 1844. A. Gordon in DNB 42 (1895), pp. 375–7; B. Blaxland in DECH, p. 429, s.v.

Overbeck, Franz (1837–1905), Protestant theologian. He was born in St Petersburg and taught Church History at Jena (1864–70) and 'critical theology' at Basle (1870–97). Holding that the Christian Gospel was wholly eschatological and world-negating, he came to reject completely historic Christianity and expounded in his lectures a 'secular Church history' (profane Kirchengeschichte) in which the course of ecclesiastical history was understood as a radical departure from the original revelation in Scripture. Liberal and apologetic theology were also alike essentially un-Christian. In his critique of immanental religious notions Overbeck has exercised considerable influence on the modern *dialectical theology. His writings include Über die Christlichkeit unserer heutigen Theologie (1873; 2nd edn., 1903), Studien zur Geschichte der alten Kirche (1875), and Christentum und Kultur (posthumous, 1919). He was for many years a close friend of F. *Nietzsche.

Correspondence with F. Nietzsche ed. R. Oehler and C. A. Bernoulli (Leipzig, 1916). C. A. Bernoulli, Franz Overbeck und Friedrich Nietzsche: Eine Freundschaft (2 vols., Jena, 1908; with list of writings, 1, pp. 439–44). E. Staehlin and M. Tetz (eds.), Overbeckiana: Übersicht über den Franz-Overbeck-Nachlass der Universitätsbibliothek Basel (Studien zur Geschichte der Wissenschaften in Basel, 12–13; 1962). Other studies by A. Pfeiffer (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 15; Göttingen, 1975) and R. Wehrli (Zurich [1977]). K. *Barth, Die Theologie und die Kirche: Gesammelte Vorträge, 2 (1928), pp. 1–25; Eng. tr. (1962), pp. 55–73. J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 179–90.

Overseas and Other Clergy (Ministry and Ordination) Measure (No. 3) 1967. This Measure, whose short title is the Overseas Clergy Measure 1967, supersedes the *Colonial Clergy Act 1874. Its main object is to regulate the exercise of their ministry within the Provinces of *Canterbury and *York by clergy ordained by bishops of Churches in communion with the C of E whose jurisdiction lies outside these two provinces, or by bishops of Churches whose *Orders are recognized by the C of E. Permission to officiate, either temporary or permanent, may be given by the Abp. of the *province concerned. If a priest is admitted to a benefice, the bishop may dispense with the Oath of *Allegiance.

Overseas Missionary Fellowship (OMF). An interdenominational and international mission to E. Asia. Founded by J. H. *Taylor in 1865 as the '*China Inland Mission', its name was changed in 1965. Following the withdrawal of missionaries from *China in 1951, the Mission extended its work to Singapore, Malaysia, *Indonesia, Thailand, Laos, Hong Kong, Taiwan, the *Philippines, South *Korea, and *Japan. The international headquarters is in Singapore.

Owen, John (1616–83), *Puritan divine and statesman. He was educated at Queen's College, Oxford, but ejected in 1637 under W. *Laud's Statutes. In 1642 he obtained the living of Fordham in Essex, and in 1647 became vicar of Coggeshall. Originally a Presbyterian, he had come to believe with J. *Milton that 'new presbyter was but old priest writ large', and took up the more tolerant Independent position. His preaching won the ear of O. *Cromwell, who in 1651 made him dean of *Christ Church and in the following year vice-chancellor of the university. In 1654 he sat for a short time in Parliament, was one of Cromwell's *Triers and a member of the *Savoy Conference. The Restoration drove him to London, where he continued to preach and write until his death. He was a voluminous author, often in controversy with R. *Baxter, *Arminians, and *Anglicans, but always tolerant and fair. Many of his writings show deep spiritual insight.

Works ed. by T. Russell with memoir by W. Orme (21 vols., 1826) and by W. H. Goold with Life by A. Thomson (24 vols., 1850–5). J. *Moffatt, The Golden Book of John Owen (1904). P. Toon, God's Statesman: The Life and Work of John Owen (Exeter [1971]); S. B. Ferguson, John Owen on the Christian Life (Edinburgh, 1987). J. M. Rigg in DNB 42 (1895), pp. 424–8.

Oxford. The ecclesiastical history of the city appears to begin with St *Frideswide (q.v.), whose father founded a convent there in the 8th cent. By 1002 the Priory of St Frideswide was occupied by secular canons, who in or before 1122 were replaced by *Augustinian Canons. In 1129 Oseney was founded outside the town, also for Augustinian Canons, and in 1281 Rewley Abbey ('de regali loco') for *Cistercians. Throughout the Middle Ages Oxford was in the diocese of *Lincoln, but in 1542 *Henry VIII created the See of Oxford, selecting the suppressed Oseney Abbey as the cathedral church and appointing Robert King, the last abbot, as the (first) bishop. In 1546 the seat of the bishopric was transferred to King's (previously 'Cardinal') College, founded by T. *Wolsey on the site of St Frideswide's Priory, which had been suppressed in 1524. The priory church then became the cathedral and the college was renamed '*Christ Church'. From 1635 to 1978 the bishop's official residence was in the village of Cuddesdon, some six miles to the east of the city. Among notable modern bishops of Oxford have been S. *Wilberforce (1845–69), W. *Stubbs (1889–1901), F. *Paget (1901–11), C. *Gore (1911–19), and K. E. *Kirk (1937–54).

The origins of the university go back to the 12th cent., when, in addition to schools attached to parish churches, there is fragmentary evidence for the existence of independent masters teaching Arts, Theology, and Civil and Canon Law in schools in the centre of the town. The earliest known masters were Theobald of Étampes in the 1120s and (shortly afterwards) Robert *Pullen. Thereafter, although academic activity no doubt continued, there is little evidence until the 1190s when Alexander Nequam taught Theology and several Masters were teaching Civil and Canon Law. During this decade the Oxford schools developed rapidly, partly because war with France made it dangerous for scholars to go to the Continent. This growth was interrupted in 1209 by a dispute between the scholars and the town over the jurisdictional privileges of the scholars who, as clerics, were subject only to ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The dispute was settled only in 1214 when the Papal legate, Nicholas de Romanis, drew up a constitution for the schools under which the scholars got their first chancellor, appointed by the Bp. of Lincoln, in whose diocese Oxford lay. From this date the university developed as a corporate institution with chancellor, proctors, and congregation of masters, who still form the framework of its constitution. Between 1220 and 1230 came the Friars—*Black, *Grey, *White, and *Augustinian. Out of the boarding-houses for masters and students emerged the colleges, of which the earliest were Merton (whose statutes date from 1264), Balliol, and University Colleges (all founded around the same time). In 1571 the University was incorporated by Act of Parliament, and from then until 1871 subscription to the *Thirty-nine Articles was required from all its members. In the 17th cent. its statutes were radically remodelled by W. *Laud; the next (and still continuing) era of far-reaching changes began with the institution of the first Honours Examinations in 1800 and the Report of a Royal Commission in 1852. The close and continuous links of the university with the life of the Church are shown by its connection with early *Lollardy, the trials of T. *Cranmer, N. *Ridley, and H. *Latimer in the University Church of St Mary (1555), the zeal of such men as J. *Fell and R. *South before and after the Restoration, the early history of the *Wesleys, and the development of the '*Oxford Movement' in the 19th cent.

In modern times Theology has ceased to hold a dominant position in Oxford, but important contributions were made to theological studies by such scholars as J. *Wordsworth, S. R. *Driver, H. B. *Swete, W. *Sanday, C. H. *Turner, H. J. White (d. 1934; see VULGATE), B. H. *Streeter, N. P. *Williams, R. H. *Lightfoot, G. R. Driver, and A. M. Farrer (1904–68). In the field of Patristics, it was mainly the work of Oxford scholars which went into the production of the Patristic Greek Lexicon (q.v.), and Oxford has been the meeting-ground of the International *Patristic Conferences which have met since 1951.

For works on Oxford Cathedral see bibl. to CHRIST CHURCH. On the University, H. C. Maxwell Lyte, A History of the University of Oxford from the Earliest Times to the Year 1530 (1886); C. E. Mallet, A History of the University of Oxford (3 vols., 1924–7); H. Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, 3 (ed. F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 1–273; T. H. Aston (ed.), The History of the University of Oxford (Oxford, 1984 ff.); A. B. Cobban, The Medieval English Universities: Oxford and Cambridge to c.1500 (Aldershot, 1988). On a smaller scale, V. H. H. Green, A History of Oxford University (1974), and J. [M.] Prest (ed.), The Illustrated History of Oxford University (Oxford, 1993). A. B. Emden, A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford to A.D. 1500 (3 vols., 1957–9; suppl. vol., A.D. 1501 to 1540, 1974). E. H. Cordeaux and D. H. Merry, A Bibliography of Printed Works Relating to the University of Oxford (Oxford, 1968). VCH, Oxford, 3, ed. H. E. Salter and M. Lobel (1954). City of Oxford (The Royal Commission on Historical Monuments, 1939). V. H. H. Green, Religion at Oxford and Cambridge (1964). C. Hibbert (ed.), The Encyclopaedia of Oxford (1988). The 'Oxford Historical Society', founded 1884 for the publication of material on the history of the University and City and neighbourhood, has issued over 130 vols. See also bibl. to BODLEIAN LIBRARY.

Oxford Conference (1937). The second Conference of the '*Life and Work' branch of the *Ecumenical Movement held at Oxford, 12–26 July 1937, under the general title of 'Church, Community, and State'. There were 425 delegates representing all the more important religious bodies except the RC Church and the German Evangelical Church (then under Nazi control). It was agreed to take steps for the fusion of the 'Life and Work' Movement with that of '*Faith and Order', which held a Conference at *Edinburgh (q.v.) a week or two later. The first assembly of the united bodies was held in 1948 at *Amsterdam (q.v.). See also WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

The Report of the Conference, under the general title, 'The Church, Community, and State' series, comprised a preliminary volume on The Church and its Function in Society, by W. A. Visser 't Hooft and J. H. *Oldham (1937); The Christian Understanding of Man, by T. E. Jessop and others (1938); The Kingdom of God and History, by H. G. Wood and others (1938); The Christian Faith and the Common Life, by N. Ehrenström and others (1938); Church and Community, by K. S. Latourette and others (1938); Church, Community, and State in Relation to Education, by F. Clarke and others (1938); The Universal Church and the World of Nations, by the Marquess of Lothian and others (1938); and The Churches Survey their Task, with introd. by J. H. Oldham (1937).

Oxford Group. The religious movement founded by F. N. D. *Buchman, who in 1921 defined his aim as 'a programme of life issuing in personal, social, racial, national and supernational change'. Returning to England in 1920, Buchman visited Cambridge, and from there went to Oxford; here his preaching made a great impression on a post-war generation of students, but also aroused controversy in the following years. In 1928 a party from Oxford, including Rhodes scholars from South Africa, visited that country in the long vacation, and it was there that the name 'Oxford Group' was attached to them. Buchman himself went to South Africa with a team of people in 1929, and there were later campaigns in Canada (1932 and 1934), Norway (1934), Denmark (1935), and Switzerland Assemblies, or 'house-parties' as they were called, in Oxford each summer from 1930 to 1937 drew large numbers. In Britain there was animated debate over the name. Despite opposition, however, esp. from some members of Oxford University, in 1939 the Oxford Group was granted legal incorporation under this title. Meanwhile, in 1938, Buchman had issued from London his call for 'moral and spiritual re-armament', and the wider name, Moral Re-Armament or MRA, superseded the more local name, which remained the official title in Britain.

Moral Re-Armament was launched in Washington, DC, in 1939, when Harry S. Truman, the future President of the USA, read a message from President Roosevelt. Through its wartime programme in America, summarized as 'sound homes, teamwork in industry, national unity', Buchman sought to train an international force which would help him to rebuild after the end of the Second World War. He was joined in America by some Swiss supporters who decided to create a centre for reconstruction in their country and acquired the former Caux-Palace above Montreux. This opened in 1946, and between 1947 and 1951 some 4,000 Germans came to Caux, where much was done to heal relationships between former enemies. Delegations also came from Japan, India, and the newly emerging countries of Africa. In addition to Caux, there are training and conference centres at Tirley Garth in Cheshire; Panchgani near Pune in India; Petropolis, Brazil; Odawara, Japan; Melbourne, Australia; and Coolmoreen Farm, Gweru, Zimbabwe. The Westminster Theatre in London, acquired in 1946 as a memorial to the men and women of Moral Re-Armament who had died in the 1939–45 War, is the main centre in Britain; besides presenting plays it is a workshop and distribution centre for films and videos in many languages throughout the world.

Buchman, referred to inside the movement as 'Frank', was regarded as the leader and pioneer of a new and more authentic form of Christian life; his influence and that of his immediate associates was very great. He envisaged, however, 'a cabinet of like-minded friends around the world' leading the work, and since his death (1961) and that of Peter Howard (1965), a corporate leadership has emerged. The movement has several hundred full-time workers, all volunteers. It operates primarily through personal contact, its publications in book or magazine form, plays, films, and videos, and through conferences and seminars which often bring together people of opposing ideas.

The movement has met with considerable opposition on religious grounds, e.g. that the conversions it secured were spiritually unsound and often only temporary, that its 'sharing' and 'guidance' were pressed on converts indiscriminately without any real attempt at the cure of souls, and that its leaders were unqualified for the task they assumed. It was urged, however, that the Group presented Christianity in a language and manner which enabled it to reach many whom the Church failed to attract. Proscribed by the Nazis and attacked by the Communists, it has upheld absolute moral standards in an age when these were under open and covert attack.

Primary material is provided by the collection of Buchman's speeches, Remaking the World (1947; rev. edn., 1958); also G. [D.] Lean, Frank Buchman: A Life (1985); A. Wolrige Gordon, Peter Howard: Life and Letters (1969). Works on the Oxford Group emanating from its supporters incl. The Oxford Group and its Work of Moral Re-Armament (1954); G. Marcel (ed.), Un Changement d'Espérance à la Rencontre du Réarmement Moral (1958; Eng. tr., Fresh Hope for the World, 1960); P. Howard, Frank Buchman's Secret (1961); J. P. Thornton-Duesbery, The Open Secret of MRA: An Examination of Mr. Driberg's 'critical examination' of Moral Re-Armament (1964); P. Mottu, Caux de la belle époque au Réarmement Moral (Neuchâtel, 1969; Eng. tr., 1970); T. Spoerri, Dynamik aus der Stille (Lucerne, 1971; Eng. tr., 1976); K. D. Belden, Reflections on Moral Re-Armament (1983). Works by outsiders incl. H. H. *Henson, The Group Movement (1933; 2nd edn., 1933; hostile); R. H. S. Crossman (ed.), Oxford and the Groups (1934); and W. H. Clark, The Oxford Group: Its History and Significance (New York, 1951).

Oxford Movement. The movement (1833–45) within the C of E, centred at Oxford, which aimed at restoring the *High Church ideals of the 17th cent. Several causes contributed to its growth. The progressive decline of Church life and the spread of 'Liberalism' in theology were causing grave misgivings among Churchmen; on the other hand, the works of C. *Lloyd and others, coupled with the Romantic Movement, had led to a new interest in many elements in primitive and medieval Christianity. Among the more immediate causes was the question of Anglican identity raised by the removal of religious tests for state office and by the modification of the confessional state signalled by the *Catholic Emancipation Act (1829). The anxiety was increased by the passing of the Reform Bill (1832) and the plan to suppress ten Irish bishoprics. The latter proposal evoked from J. *Keble on 14 July 1833 a sermon delivered in the University pulpit at Oxford on '*National Apostasy', which is usually regarded as the beginning of the Movement.

Its chief object was the defence of the C of E as a Divine institution, of the doctrine of the apostolic succession, and of the BCP as a rule of faith. These aims were realized esp. through the famous Tracts for the Times, begun by J. H. *Newman in 1833. The Movement, whose acknowledged leaders were Keble, Newman, and E. B. *Pusey, soon gained many articulate and able supporters, among them R. H. *Froude, R. W. *Church, R. I. *Wilberforce, C. *Marriott, and I. *Williams. The liberal party in the University and the bishops, however, soon began to attack it; among its early opponents were T. *Arnold, R. *Whately, and R. D. *Hampden. Within the Movement itself there gradually arose a party which found its inspiration in contemporary RCism rather than in the Church of the early centuries. In 1841 Newman published his famous Tract 90, which was condemned by many bishops, and in 1842 he retired to Littlemore.

After W. G. *Ward's book, The Ideal of a Christian Church (1844), had been censured by the Convocation of Oxford on 13 Feb. 1845, Ward, F. W. *Faber, and several of their circle were received into the Church of Rome, as was Newman in the autumn of the same year. But the majority remained in the C of E, and their views began to gain ground. In 1850 the *Gorham Case (q.v.) again brought about a number of conversions to RCism, among them being those of H. E. Manning and R. I. Wilberforce. The Movement, however, continued to spread despite the hostility of the press and of the government, which chose the majority of bishops from the ranks of its opponents. Its influence was exercised esp. in the sphere of worship and ceremonial, which came to play a much larger part in the life of the C of E than in the 18th and early 19th cents. At the same time the dignity and responsibility of the ministry were emphasized, not only in the directly religious but also in the social sphere, the slum settlements being among its most notable achievements. The revival of monastic orders and religious community life (see RELIGIOUS ORDERS) in the C of E was a further expression of the Oxford Movement. As a movement with close associations with a university it made considerable contributions to scholarship. In 1836 Keble, Newman, and Pusey began to edit the Library of the Fathers, and a few years later the Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology was begun as a corpus of *Caroline theology. The principles of the Movement, esp. its concern for a higher standard of worship, gradually influenced not only all groups within the C of E but even many Nonconformists, and had a decisive effect on the pattern of Church life in Britain and beyond.

There is an immense lit. Besides the writings, tracts, and innumerable controversial pamphlets of the leaders and their opponents, the biographies supply much primary material. The three fundamental historical sources are J. H. Newman, Apologia pro Vita Sua (1864); H. P. *Liddon, Life of E. B. Pusey (4 vols., 1893–7); and R. W. Church, The Oxford Movement: Twelve Years, 1833–45 (1891). A contemporary account (partly written in self-defence) is W. *Palmer, A Narrative of Events connected with the Publication of Tracts for the Times (1843). Collections of contemporary material by E. R. Fairweather (ed.), The Oxford Movement (New York, 1964) and E. Jay (ed.), The Evangelical and Oxford Movements (Cambridge, 1983), pp. 106–202, with notes pp. 209–15. Further studies include S. Baring-Gould, The Church Revival (1914); S. L. Ollard, A Short History of the Oxford Movement (1915); E. A. *Knox, The Tractarian Movement (1933). P. Thureau-Dangin, La Renaissance catholique en Angleterre au XIXe siècle (3 vols., 1899–1906; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1914); C. P. S. Clarke, The Oxford Movement and After (1932); C. Dawson, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (1933). A. Härdelin, The Tractarian Understanding of the Eucharist (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis: Studia Historico-Ecclesiastica Upsaliensia, 8; 1965). D. [H.] Newsome, The Parting of Friends: A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning [1966]; P. Toon, Evangelical Theology, 1833–1856: A Response to Tractarianism (1979); [D.] G. Rowell, The Vision Glorious: Themes and Personalities of the Catholic Revival in Anglicanism (Oxford, 1983); id. (ed.), Tradition Renewed: The Oxford Movement Conference Papers (1986); [W.] O. Chadwick, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement: Tractarian Essays (Cambridge, 1990). L. N. Crumb, The Oxford Movement and its Leaders: A Bibliography of Secondary and Lesser Primary Sources (ATLA Bibliography Series, 24; 1988; with supplement, 1993).

Oxyrhynchus Papyri. The collection of many thousand papyri, mostly fragmentary, found from 1897 onwards at Oxyrhynchus, some 10 miles W. of the Nile, near the modern Behnesa. It includes, besides documents of all kinds ranging from the late 1st cent. BC to the 7th cent. AD, some very substantial fragments of Greek and Latin literary texts, both known and unknown, and of Christian literature. Among the last named the most celebrated are the MSS (nos. 1, 654 and 655) of '*Sayings of Jesus' (see THOMAS, GOSPEL OF); they also include, besides fragments of books of the Old and New Testaments and of apocryphal works, a letter of *Peter, the martyred Bp. of Alexandria (d. 311), found together with an ecclesiastical calendar of AD 535–6 (no. 1357), and a Christian hymn with musical notation which is the oldest known piece of ecclesiastical music (no. 1786; late 3rd cent.).

The papyri are being ed., with Eng. tr. and notes, by B. P. Grenfell, A. S. Hunt, and others for the Egypt Exploration Fund, later Society, Graeco-Roman Branch (London, 1898 ff. [vols. 1–61 by 1995]). B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt (eds.), Hellenica Oxyrhynchia (Oxford Classical Texts, 1909). See also works cited under PAPYROLOGY.

Ozanam, Antoine Frédéric (1813–53), French scholar and founder of the 'Society of St *Vincent de Paul'. At the age of 18 he wrote a pamphlet against C. H. *Saint-Simon, and two years later, while studying law and literature at Paris, founded the Society of St Vincent de Paul, an association of laymen for personal service among the poor. During his early years in Paris Ozanam made the acquaintance of F. R. de *Chateaubriand, C. R. F. *Montalembert, H.-D. *Lacordaire, and other progressive thinkers who became closely associated with the revival of Catholicism in France. In 1839 he published a brilliant thesis on the philosophy of *Dante; in 1841 he became assistant professor of foreign literature at the Sorbonne, and simultaneously professor of rhetoric at the Collège Stanislas, then under the direction of A. J. A. *Gratry; and in 1844 full professor at the Sorbonne. On the basis of research in Italian libraries (1846) he edited some early *Franciscan poetry (Poètes franciscains en Italie au XIIIe siècle, 1852), of much importance for the history of medieval spirituality. Together with Lacordaire he founded the Ère nouvelle in 1848 as a mouthpiece of their ideas on Catholic socialism. In the next year he published his influential work La Civilisation chrétienne chez les Francs, in which he described the influence of the Church on the education of the Teutonic tribes. A keen advocate of political liberalism, he became the subject of many sharp attacks, and spent his last years away from public life in work for his Society and in travelling.

Collected edn. of his works, with preface signed J. J. Ampère, 8 vols., Paris, '1855', with Life by H. D. Lacordaire (dated '1856') appended to vol. 1 [separate pagination]. Letters: 1 (1819–40), ed. L. Celier and others (ibid., 1960); 2 (1841–4), ed. J. Caron (1971); 3 (1845–9), ed. D. Ozanam and others (1978). Life by his brother, C. A. Ozanam (ibid., 1879). The numerous other studies incl. those of K. O'Meara (Edinburgh, 1876), C. Huit (Lyons, 1888), L. Baunard (Paris, 1913; Eng. tr., Dublin [1925]), G. Goyau and others (Paris, 1913; to mark the centenary of his birth), H. L. Hughes (London, 1933), the vol. issued by the Society of St Vincent de Paul to mark the centenary of its foundation, L'Œuvre d'Ozanam à travers le monde, 1833–1933 (1933), L. Celier (Paris, 1956), and M. des Rivières (Montreal and Paris, 1984). L. Curnier, La Jeunesse de Frédéric Ozanam (1888). J. Méjecaze, Fr. Ozanam et l'Église catholique (Toulouse thesis; Lyons and Paris, 1932); id., Fr. Ozanam et les lettres (ibid., 1932). A. Foucault, La Société de Saint Vincent de Paul: Histoire de cent ans (1933). E. Galopin, Essai de bibliographie chronologique sur Antoine Frédéric Ozanam (1933). L. Chierotti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 1329–34; Y. Marchasson in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 1078–84, both s.v.

P

'P'. A symbol widely used by scholars who follow the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origins of the *Pentateuch to denote the 'Priestly source'. This is marked by a preponderance of ritual and ceremonial enactments over narrative (e.g. Exod. 25–40, Lev., and much of Num.), a formal style (e.g. the first account of Creation, Gen. 1: 1–2: 4a), the avoidance of anthropomorphic ideas of God (contrast e.g. Gen. 3: 8, '*J'), the use of a historical framework linking events by means of genealogies (e.g. Gen. 5), and the inclusion of numerical information (e.g. Exod. 12: 37). The priesthood is conceived as limited to the sons of *Aaron (not merely to the tribe of *Levi as in '*D'), and the divine name *Yahweh (*Jehovah; AV and RV 'the LORD') is used only after its revelation to *Moses, related by 'P' in Exod. 6 (not from the first as in 'J'). Although 'P' may embody earlier matter, in its final redaction it is the latest element in the Pentateuch, dating from the Exile (*c.*586–*c.*538 BC) or after, though not later than *c.*400 BC. See also HOLINESS CODE.

For bibl. see PENTATEUCH.

Pacelli, Eugenio. See PIUS XII.

Pacem in Terris. The encyclical letter of Pope *John XXIII, dated 11 Apr. 1963, on peace among nations based on truth, justice, charity and liberty, and the right organization of society. Addressed to all men of goodwill, it includes a plea for the ending of the arms race, a ban on nuclear weapons, and eventual disarmament.

Text in AAS 55 (1963), pp. 257–304. Convenient Eng. tr. in D. J. O'Brien and T. A. Shannon (eds.), Catholic Social Thought (Maryknoll, NY [1992]), pp. 131–162. J. Newman, Principles of Peace: A Commentary on John XXIII's Pacem in Terris (Oxford, 1964).

Pachomius, St (*c.*290–346), the founder of *coenobitic Christian monasticism. Fact and legend are much confused in the many late Lives. Pachomius was born, apparently in Upper Egypt, of pagan parents, served as an army conscript and, after his discharge in 313, was converted and baptized. Having been for a time the disciple of the hermit Palaemon, he founded a monastery at Tabennisi in the Thebaid near the Nile about 320, where his fame soon attracted large numbers of monks. Other foundations followed and at his death Pachomius was ruling as abbot-general over nine monasteries for men and two for women. His 'Rule', which influenced St *Basil, John *Cassian, St *Caesarius of Arles, and St *Benedict, survives complete only in Latin translation. Feast day, 14 May in W.; 15 May in E.; in the Coptic Church, 9 May.

Coptic works ed. T. H. Lefort, Œuvres de S. Pachôme et de ses disciples (CSCO, Scriptores Coptici, 23; 1956), pp. 1–36, with Fr. tr., ibid. 24 (1956), pp. 1–37. His Rule and 11 letters tr. into Lat. by St *Jerome (PL 23. 61–99); crit. edn. by A. Boon, OSB, Pachomiana Latina (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 7; 1932), pp. 13–101, with Coptic frags. and Gk. excerpts of the Rule, ed. T. H. Lefort, pp. 155–82; Rule also ed. P. B. Albers (Florilegium Patristicum, 16; Bonn, 1923). Lives in Greek ed. F. Halkin, SJ (Subsidia Hagiographica, 19; 1932; also, from MS in Athens, Cahiers d'Orientalisme, 2; Geneva, 1982). Fr. tr. of 'Vita Prima', with full introd., by A. J. Festugière, OP, Les Moines d'Orient, 4. 2 (1965); Coptic Lives ed. T. H. Lefort (*Bohairic in CSCO, Scriptores Coptici, 3rd ser. 7; 1925; with Lat. tr., ibid., 1936; *Sahidic, ibid. 8; 1933; with Lat. tr., 1934). Fr. tr. of Coptic Lives by L. T. Lefort, Les Vies coptes de saint Pachôme et de ses premiers successeurs (Bibliothèque du Muséon, 16; 1943). Arabic Life ed., with Fr. tr., by E. Amélineau, Histoire de saint Pakhôme et de ses communautés (Annales du Musée Guimet, 17; 1889), pp. 335–711; Syriac Life ed. P. Bedjan, Acta Martyrum et Sanctorum, 5 (Paris, 1895), pp. 122–76; Lat. Life, tr. from Gk. by *Dionysius Exiguus, ed. H. van Cranenburgh, OSB (Subsidia Hagiographica, 46; 1969). Eng. tr. of Life, from Coptic and Gk., of Rules, Letters, and other material, by A. Veilleux (Cistercian Studies, 45–47; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1980–2). There are also brief notices in *Palladius, Historia Lausiaca, 32, and *Sozomen, HE 3. 14. The considerable modern lit. incl. P. Ladeuze, Étude sur le cénobitisme pakhômien pendant le quatrième siècle et la première moitié du cinquième (1888); Pachomiana: Commémoration du XVIᵉ centenaire de St Pachôme l'Égyptien (348–1948). Texte des conférences prononcées à Alexandrie et au Caire et relation de la séance de clôture (Cairo, 1955). A. Veilleux, OCSO, La Liturgie dans le cénobitisme pachômien au quatrième siècle (Studia Anselmiana, 57; 1968). H. Bacht, Das Vermächtnis des Ursprungs, 2: Pachomius—Der Mann und sein Werk (Studien zur Theologie des geistlichen Lebens, 8; 1983), incl. Lat. text of the Rule, with Ger. tr. P. [H.] Rousseau, Pachomius: The Making of a Community in Fourth-Century Egypt (1985). J. E. Goehring, The Letter of Ammon and Pachomian Monasticism (Patristische Texte und Studien, 17; 1986). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 262 f. and 600 f., with extensive bibl. H. Bacht, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 7–16, s.v.

Pacian, St (4th cent.), Bp. of Barcelona. A Spaniard by birth, he warmly defended the Catholic doctrine of the forgiveness of sins against the *Novatianists, then a flourishing body in Spain. Besides three letters a short treatise, Paraenesis ad Poenitentiam, survives. Pacian is esp. remembered for the epigrammatic passage which occurs in one of his letters (Ep. 1. 4), 'My name is Christian; my surname is Catholic' (Christianus mihi nomen est, catholicus vero cognomen). To his son, Flavius Dexter, who became pretorian prefect under Honorius, St *Jerome dedicated his De Viris Illustribus. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Works first ed. F. du Tillet (Paris, 1538), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 12. 1051–94. Modern edns. by P. H. Peyrot (Zwolle, 1896), L. R. Fernández (Barcelona, 1958), and C. Granado, SJ, with Fr. tr. by C. Épitalon and M. Lestienne (SC 410; 1995). A. Gruber, Studien zu Pacianus von Barcelona (1901; philological); R. Kauer, Studien zu Pacianus (1902). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 401–3; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 369 f. and 627, with bibl. É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1718–21, s.v. 'Pacien'; G. Madoz, SJ, in EC 9 (1952), cols. 504 f. s.v.; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 17–20, s.v. 'Pacien de Barcelone', with bibl.

Pacific Islands. See SOUTH PACIFIC, CHRISTIANITY IN.

pacifism. See WAR, CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE TO.

Padre. Popular designation of a chaplain in the Army, Navy, and Air Force and also used of all clergymen. Padre is the Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese for 'Father', and hence became a common title for a priest. The term is supposed to have been picked up by the British army in India.

Paedobaptism. See INFANT BAPTISM.

Paenitemini. The opening word and hence the common name of the Apostolic Constitution of 17 Feb. 1966, which revised the rules of penitential observance in the RC Church. The days of *fasting were reduced to two: *Ash Wednesday or the first day of *Lent and *Good Friday. The penitential days were reduced to all Fridays (except when Holy Days of Obligation), Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent, and Good Friday, and episcopal conferences were empowered to vary these days and to substitute for the traditional *abstinence other forms of penance, esp. works of charity and piety. With very slight modifications, its provisions were incorporated in CIC (1983), cans. 1249–53.

Text in AAS 58 (1966), pp. 177–98.

Paget, Francis (1851–1911), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at Shrewsbury and *Christ Church, Oxford, he became a Senior Student of Christ Church in 1873, Vicar of Bromsgrove in 1883, Regius professor of pastoral theology at Oxford in 1885, Dean of Christ Church in 1892, and Bp. of Oxford in 1901. He warmly supported the reinterpretation of Tractarian principles by the Lux Mundi group and himself contributed the essay on 'Sacraments' to the volume (1889). He also completed R. W. *Church's revision of J. *Keble's edition of R. *Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity (1883–8) and wrote An Introduction to the Fifth Book of Hooker's treatise (1899). His fine spirituality is reflected in his Spirit of Discipline (1891), which contains a notable essay on '*Accidie'. He also took an important part in ecclesiastical politics, and was one of the most influential members of the Royal Commission on *Ecclesiastical Discipline (1904–6).

S. Paget and J. M. C. Crum, Francis Paget (1913). E. H. Pearce in DNB, 1901–11, 3 (1912), pp. 62 f.

Paget, Henry Luke (1852–1932), Bp. of *Chester. Brother of the preceding, he was educated at Shrewsbury and *Christ Church, Oxford, ordained in 1877, and worked extensively in the East End of London, founding the Christ Church Mission at Poplar in 1879. Later he became Bp. of Ipswich (1906–9), of Stepney (1909–19), and of Chester (1919–32). Personal contact as a young man with E. B. *Pusey, J. H. *Newman, E. *King, and H. P. *Liddon had imbued him with the *Tractarian ideals; and he was a typical representative of the best Anglican pastors of his generation.

E. K. Paget (widow), Henry Luke Paget: Portrait and Frame (1939).

Pagi, Antoine (1624–99), French Church historian. A native of Rognes in Provence, he studied with the *Jesuits at Aix and entered the Order of Conventual *Franciscans in 1641. His principal work is the Critica historico-chronologica, a learned attempt to correct the errors contained in the Annals of C. *Baronius. The first volume of it appeared in 1689; the complete work, in 4 vols., was edited posthumously by his nephew, François Pagi, in 1705. His other writings include a Latin edition of the sermons of St *Antony of Padua (1684).

A. Teetaert, OFM Cap., in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1728 f., s.v.

Pagnini, Santi (1470–1536), *Dominican scholar. A native of Lucca, he entered the Dominican Order in Fiesole in 1487 and soon, under the influence of G. *Savonarola, devoted himself to biblical and oriental studies. From *c.*1493 he was engaged in making a completely new Latin translation of the Bible from the original languages. At least the OT seems to have completed by 1518, but it was impossible to raise the money to print it in Italy. In 1525 he received permission to move to France, and his Bible was published at Lyons in 1528 (2nd edn., Cologne, 1541). A remarkably literal translation, it was widely drawn upon by M. *Coverdale. Pagnini also wrote textbooks on Greek and Hebrew, and compiled a Hebrew dictionary (Lyons, 1529). He was one of the theologians who supported *Henry VIII's case for the annulment of his marriage to Catherine of Aragon. See also BIBLE DIVISIONS AND REFERENCES.

G. Pagnino, Vita di S. Pagnino Lucchese, dell'ordine de' predicatori (Rome, 1653). I. Taurisano, OP, Il Domenicani in Lucca (Lucca, 1914), pp. 94–111. T. M. Centi, 'L'attività letteraria di Santi Pagnini nel campo delle scienze bibliche', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 15 (1945), pp. 5–51; J. D. Gauthier, SJ, 'Sanctes Pagninus, O.P.', Catholic Biblical Quarterly, 7 (1945), pp. 175–90. G. Bedouelle and P. Le Gal (eds.), Le 'divorce' du roi Henry VIII (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 221; Geneva, 1987), pp. 393 f. I. Colosio, OP, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), pp. 38 f.

pain bénit. The blessed bread often, until recent times, distributed to the people after Mass in French and Canadian churches. It has as its counterpart among the E. Orthodox the so-called 'antidoron' (ἀντίδωρον, 'instead of the gift'), i.e. what remains of the loaves from which the Eucharistic Bread is cut. The antidoron is distributed at the end of the Liturgy, in theory only to those who have not received Holy Communion (hence its name), but in practice to all those present. Although not consecrated, the antidoron is regarded as sharing in some measure in the Eucharistic blessing. The W. Church distinguished carefully between the Eucharistic Bread and the pain bénit by assigning to the latter a special blessing and regarding it as at most a symbol of charity and spiritual unity.

Paine, Thomas (1737–1809), political reformer and author of the Rights of Man. He was a native of Thetford in Norfolk and, though confirmed in the C of E, was greatly influenced by the principles of the *Quakers, of whom his father was a member. He was of an adventurous spirit, and after a chequered career as a sailor, staymaker, excise officer, and usher went to America in 1774 at the suggestion of Benjamin Franklin. There he became an editor, attacked slavery, and agitated for the emancipation of women. In 1776 he issued his pamphlet Common Sense in favour of American independence, which soon made him famous. During the American War he wrote a series of pamphlets entitled The Crisis. He also devoted himself to the invention of an iron bridge which he exhibited in England after his return in 1787. In 1791 he published the first part of his famous Rights of Man in reply to E. Burke's Reflections on the Revolution in France. After the publication of the second part (1792) he fled to Paris to escape arrest. Here he was received with enthusiasm, but he lost his influence after the fall of the Girondists in 1793 and was arrested in the same year, after completing the first part of his Age of Reason (1794). He was released in 1794, having written the second part of his work in prison (pub. 1795). The Age of Reason, which aroused fierce opposition in both Britain and America, reflected the Quaker influence of his youth as well as that of contemporary *Deism in its negative estimate of revealed religion, whose beliefs and institutions are ridiculed as full of superstition and bad faith. In 1802 he returned to America, where he spent his last years in disappointment, having lost most of his former friends through his political opinions and his hostility to Christianity.

Collected Works ed. M. D. Conway (4 vols., New York and London, 1894–6) and P. S. Foner (2 vols., New York, 1945), with biog. introd. in 1, pp. ix–xlvi. Political Writings (Common Sense, The Crisis, no. 1, The Rights of Man and pt. 1 of The Age of Reason), ed. B. Kuklick (Cambridge Texts in the History of Political Thought, 1989). The standard Life is that of M. D. Conway (2 vols., New York and London, 1892). Modern studies by W. E. Woodward (London, 1946), A. O. Aldridge (Philadelphia, 1959; London, 1960), E. Foner (New York, 1976), B. Vincent (Paris [1987]), and M. Philip (Past Masters, Oxford, 1989 [introductory]). I. M. Thompson, Jun., The Religious Beliefs of Thomas Paine (New York [1965]). G. Claeys, Thomas Paine: Social and Political Thought (Boston and London, 1989). L. Stephen in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 69–79, with refs. to earlier works.

Paisy Velichkovsky, St. See VELICHKOVSKY, ST PAISY.

Pakistan, Church of. The Church inaugurated on 1 Nov. 1970 by the union of four Christian bodies, namely the (*Anglican) Church of *India, Pakistan and Ceylon in respect of the dioceses of Lahore, Dacca, and Karachi; the United *Methodist Church in Pakistan; the Scottish and English *Presbyterians of the United Church in Pakistan; and the Pakistani *Lutheran Church. The union, which was the fruit of negotiations extending back to the historic meeting at Tranquebar in 1919, was achieved by a representative of the four Churches concerned each reading his Church's resolution and assent to the Plan of Union. At the same inaugural Eucharist they were then joined by representatives of their sister Churches abroad and all eight laid hands on three Pakistani clergy, who, in turn, laid hands on the representatives of the five dioceses of the new Church, thus uniting the ministries. The head of the Church of Pakistan has the title of Moderator. Though not part of the Anglican Communion, since 1972 the Church of Pakistan has been in communion with the C of E, and it has membership of the Anglican Consultative Council, the *Lambeth Conferences, and the Primates' Meeting.

Palamas. See GREGORY PALAMAS.

Palatine Guard. A corps of militia in the Papal service. It was created in 1850 by *Pius IX as the 'Guardia Palatina d'Onore' out of two existing bodies, the civici scelti and the capotori; but after 1870 their numbers were greatly reduced. They were disbanded in 1970. A company used always to be stationed in the Cortile del Maresciallo during a Papal *conclave. Their dress was a uniform of dark blue and a peaked cap with a plume of feathers. See also NOBLE GUARD, SWISS GUARD.

G. Felici in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1204–6, s.v. 'Guardia palatina d'onore', with bibl. and illustr.

Palestine Exploration Fund. A fund and society founded in London in 1865 to provide 'for the accurate and systematic investigation of the archaeology, topography, geology and physical geography, natural history, manners and customs of the Holy Land, for biblical illustration.' Renowned initially for the survey of W. Palestine (1871–8) and pioneer excavations by Sir Charles Warren in Jerusalem, the Fund has continued to support all significant British research in the Holy Land. Its archives are of outstanding importance. From 1865 it has published a major journal on biblical archaeology and related subjects, called the Quarterly Statement until 1936 and since 1937 the Palestine Exploration Quarterly.

Palestinian Syriac text of the NT. A version of the NT in the Palestinian dialect of Syriac (properly called Christian Palestinian Aramaic). The date of the translation is disputed, but there are MSS surviving from the 6th–7th cent., albeit very fragmentary. The text is attested mainly in *lectionaries of the Byzantine type. The Greek underlying this version cannot be identified with any single type of text; in the Gospels some traces of *Diatessaron influence have been discerned. Parts of the OT also survive in this dialect.

Among the more important texts are A. S. Lewis and M. D. Gibson, The Palestinian Syriac Lectionary of the Gospels (1899); Studia Sinaitica, no. 6 (1897); H. Duensing, Christlich-palästinisch-aramäische Texte und Fragmente nebst einer Abhandlung über den Wert der palästinischen Septuaginta (Göttingen, 1906); and M. H. Goshen-Gottstein, The Bible in the Syropalestinian Version, 1. Pentateuch and Prophets (Hebrew University Bible Project, Monograph Series, 4; Jerusalem, 1973). C. Perrot, 'Un fragment christo-palestinien découvert à Khiret Mird', R. Bibl. 70 (1963), pp. 505–55. F. C. Burkitt, 'Christian Palestinian Literature', JTS 2 (1900–1), pp. 174–85. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 75–82. C. van Puyvelde, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 880–3 s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions), VI'.

Palestrina, Giovanni Pierluigi da (*c.*1525–94), Italian composer. He received his musical education at Rome and in 1544 became organist of the cathedral of his native town Palestrina. In 1551 Pope *Julius III appointed him musical instructor at the Capella Giulia of *St Peter's with the title of 'Magister Capellae', and then in 1554, although he was married, made him a member of the Papal choir; this office Palestrina lost a few months later under *Paul IV. In the same year he was appointed 'Maestro della Capella' of St John *Lateran, but he resigned in 1560. From 1561 to *c.*1567, however, he held a similar post at *Santa Maria Maggiore. The composition of his celebrated Missa Papae Marcelli probably belongs to this period. He may also have been associated with St *Philip Neri's *Oratory. In 1571 he was appointed choirmaster of St Peter's, a post he filled till his death. It was here that his famous *Improperia were first performed in 1573. Among the enormous number of Masses and *motets he wrote during this last period of his life are the motets to words taken from the Song of Songs, published with a dedication to *Gregory XIII in 1584, and the Masses Aeterna Christi munera and Assumpta est Maria, which show him at the peak of his creative power.

Palestrina's music, coinciding with a time of vigorous ecclesiastical reforms, is suffused with a deep spirituality, although, compared with that of O. de *Lassus or W. *Byrd, its emotional range is restricted. The austere polyphony of Palestrina's work won the approval of the Church authorities and for centuries it came periodically to represent an 'ideal' of sacred music, never more so than in the 19th cent.

Complete Works ed. T. de Witt, F. Espagne, F. Commer, and F. X. Haberl (33 vols., Breitkopf-Härtel, Leipzig [1862–1907]); also ed. R. Casimiri, L. Virgili, and others (Rome, 1939 ff.). G. Baini, Memorie storico-critiche della vita e delle opere di Giovanni Pierluigi Palestrina (2 vols., 1828). R. Casimiri, Nuovi documenti biografici (2 fascs., 1918–22). H. Coates, Palestrina (Master Musicians, 1938). J. Roche, Palestrina (Oxford Studies of Composers, 7; London, 1971). K. G. Fellerer, Der Palestrinastil und seine Bedeutung in der vokalen Kirchenmusik des achtzehnten Jahrhunderts (1929); id., Palestrina-Studien (Sammlung musikwissenschaftlicher Abhandlungen, 66; 1982). K. Jeppesen, Palestrinastil met scerligt henblik paa dissonansbehandlingen (1923; Eng. tr., The Style of Palestrina and the Dissonance, 1927, rev. edn., 1946). H. K. Andrews, An Introduction to the Technique of Palestrina (1958). W. Kirsch (ed.), Palestrina und die Kirchenmusik im 19. Jahrhundert (Regensburg, 1989 ff.). L. Lockwood and J. A. Owens in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 14 (1980), pp. 118–37, s.v.

Paley, William (1743–1805), author of the Evidences of Christianity. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where his unusual abilities attracted attention, he was elected a Fellow in 1766. His clarity of style made him a highly regarded lecturer. His first book, The Principles of Moral and Political Philosophy (1785), was at once adopted at Cambridge as a standard textbook. It outlined a system of *Utilitarian ethics for most part identical with that of J. Bentham, though conceived independently; the main difference lay in Paley's somewhat strained attempt to take account of Christian belief in the afterlife. His Horae Paulinae (1790) was written to prove the historicity of the events recorded in the NT by comparison of the accounts of St *Paul in the Epistles and Acts; it is probably Paley's only original work. In 1794 followed the classic A View of the Evidences of Christianity. Though this work amounted to little more than a compilation of standard 18th-cent. arguments, its effective presentation of the facts and pellucid style made it extremely popular. In his last book, Natural Theology (1802), Paley sought to demonstrate the existence and attributes of God from the appearances of nature. Paley became Rector of Musgrave (Cumbria) in 1776 and Archdeacon of *Carlisle in 1782, and thereafter received a number of minor preferments in recognition of his literary achievements. Virtually all his major publications served in their day to provide accessible and cogent arguments for the defence of Church and State against the intellectual challenges which arose in the wake of the *Enlightenment and the French Revolution.

Edns. of his Works with Life by A. Chalmers (5 vols., London, 1819), by E. Paley (son, 7 vols., ibid., 1825), and by R. Lynam with memoir (4 vols., ibid., 1825). G. W. Meadley, Memoirs of William Paley (1809). M. L. Clarke, Paley: Evidences for the Man (1974); D. L. LeMahieu, The Mind of William Paley (Lincoln, Nebr., 1976). J. B. Schneewind, Sidgwick's Ethics and Victorian Moral Philosophy (Oxford, 1977), esp. pp. 122–51, passim; P. Addinall, Philosophy and Biblical Interpretation (Cambridge, 1991), esp. pp. 35–55; A. M. C. Waterman, Revolution, Economics and Religion: Christian Political Economy, 1793–1833 (ibid., 1991), esp. pp. 113–136. L. Stephen in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 101–7.

palimpsest (Gk. πάλιν, 'again'; ψάω, 'I rub'). A vellum or papyrus MS from which the original writing has been erased or obliterated and the surface then used for some (usually quite different) writing. Of biblical MSS, the best-known instance is the so-called *Codex Ephraemi ('C') of the Gk. NT. Many of the sheets of the original 5th-cent. MS (which appears to have contained a complete OT and NT) have been lost or thrown away, and the remainder cleaned and written over in the 12th cent. with some writings of St *Ephraem Syrus. Formerly chemical reagents were much used to reveal the underlying writings, but it is now possible to secure in many cases at least equally successful results by photography under ultraviolet light; this has the great advantage that there is no risk of damage to the MS. Instances are known of 'double palimpsests', where the MS has received three texts.

F. Mone, De Libris Palimpsestis tam Latinis quam Graecis (Carlsruhe, 1855). E. Chatelain, Les Palimpsestes latins (École Pratique des Hautes Études. Section des Sciences Historiques et Philologiques, 1904). A. Dold [OSB], 'Palimpsest-Handschriften. Ihre Erschliessung einst und jetzt; ihre Bedeutung', Gutenberg-Jahrbuch [25] (1950), pp. 16–24; also a number of other arts. by this author (list of his works in Colligere Fragmenta: Festschrift Alban Dold zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. B. Fischer, OSB, and V. Fiala (Texte und Arbeiten [the organ of the Palimpsest Institute founded by Dold at Beuron], 1, Heft 2; 1952), pp. ix–xx). E. A. Lowe, 'Codices Rescripti. A List of the Oldest Latin Palimpsests with stray observations on their origin', in Mélanges Eugène Tisserant, 5 (ST 235; 1964), pp. 67–112, repr. in Lowe's Palaeographical Papers 1907–1965, ed. L. Bieler, 2 (Oxford, 1972), pp. 480–519. K. Löffler and P. Ruf in Handbuch der Bibliothekswissenschaft begründet von F. Milkau, 1 (2nd edn. by G. Leyh, 1952), pp. 149–52.

pall. Originally the same word as *pallium, it has been applied to several kinds of cloth covering. In ecclesiastical usage it denotes esp. (1) the small linen cloth with which the chalice is covered at the Eucharist, stiffened in its modern form by a piece of cardboard; and (2) a cloth, commonly of black, purple, or white velvet, which is spread over the coffin at funerals.

Palladius (*c.*364—between 420 and 430), historian of early monasticism. Probably a native of Galatia, he spent several years with the monks of Egypt, where he was pupil of *Evagrius Ponticus. In 400 he returned to Asia Minor, where he became Bp. of Helenopolis in Bithynia. As a friend of St *Chrysostom he was forced into exile in 406, though he returned to Asia Minor later (*c.*413) and, acc. to *Socrates (HE 7. 36), became Bp. of Aspouma in Galatia. Both St *Jerome and St *Epiphanius accused him of *Origenism, but it is not clear that the charge was well founded. His famous 'Lausiac History' (so named from its dedication to Lausus, the chamberlain of *Theodosius II) of the 'Friends of God' (φιλόθεοι, i.e. the monks), composed c.419, is the most valuable single writing that survives for the history of early monasticism. If somewhat credulous about stories relating to the Egyptian monks, it is the work of a writer indubitably sincere and unquestionably religious. Palladius is also the author of a 'Dialogue' on the life of St Chrysostom.

Gk. text of 'Lausiac History' first ed. J. Meursius, Leiden, 1616. New edn. by F. *Ducaeus in his Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 2 (Paris, 1624), pp. 893–1053; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 34. 991–1262. These are all interpolated texts. Crit. text, with introd. and discussion, in [E.] C. Butler (Texts and Studies, 6, nos. 1 and 2; Cambridge, 1898–1904). Eng. trs. by W. K. L. Clarke (Translations of Christian Literature, 1st ser., Greek Texts; 1918) and by R. T. Meyer (ACW 34; 1965). On the Syriac text, R. Draguet, Les Formes syriaques de la matière de l'Histoire Lausiaque (CSCO 389–90 and 398–9; Scriptores Syri, 169–70 and 173–4; 1978), incl. text and Fr. tr. The 'Dialogus' was first pr. by E. Bigot, Paris, 1680; repr. by B. de *Montfaucon in his edn. of Chrysostom, 13 (Paris, 1738), pp. 1–89, and in J. P. Migne, PG 47. 5–82. Crit. edns. by P. R. Coleman-Norton (Cambridge, 1928) and, with Fr. tr., by A.-M. Malingrey and P. Leclercq (SC 341–2; 1988). Eng. tr. by H. Moore (Translations of Christian Literature, 1st ser., Greek Texts; 1921). 'De Gentibus Indiae et Bragmanibus' attributed to Palladius [only partly his work], ed. W. Berghoff (Beiträge zur klassischen Philologie, 24; 1967).

E. Preuschen, Palladius und Rufinus: Ein Beitrag zur Quellenkunde des ältesten Mönchtums (1897); R. *Reitzenstein, Historia Monachorum und Historia Lausiaca (1916); W. *Bousset, 'Komposition und Charakter der Historia Lausiaca', Nach. (Gött.), 1917, pp. 173–217; E. *Schwartz, 'Palladiana', ZNTW 36 (1937), pp. 161–204; E. D. Hunt, 'Palladius of Helenopolis: a Party and its Supporters in the Church of the Late Fourth Century', JTS NS 24 (1973), pp. 456–80. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 168–72 (nos. 6036–8). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 238–40 and 595 f. (with bibl. of important arts. by R. Draguet and others); F. M. Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon (1983), pp. 38–44. B. Flusin in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 113–26, s.v.

Palladius, St (5th cent.), first Bp. of the Irish. Acc. to *Prosper of Aquitaine, the deacon Palladius persuaded Pope *Celestine I (422–32) to send St *Germanus, Bp. of Auxerre, to stamp out the *Pelagian heresy in Britain and was later himself consecrated by the same Pope, who sent him to the Irish as their first bishop. Palladius has been variously regarded as an associate of Germanus of Auxerre, a delegate of the British Church, and a papal deacon close to Celestine I.

Lives of St *Patrick from the 7th cent. portray Palladius as an unsuccessful missionary, who abandoned his task or died, leaving the way open for Patrick. The fact that Irish sources gave Palladius no role independent of Patrick, and esp. the reference in the 'Book of *Armagh' to 'bishop Palladius who was by another name called Patricius', have given rise to the theory that his career has been subsumed within the legend of Patrick. The appearance of both St Germanus and Amator of Auxerre in Patrician texts has been supposed to derive from lost Acta of Palladius. Feast day, 7 July.

The only historical evidence comes from the Chronicle of Prosper of Aquitaine (for edns. of which see s.v. PROSPER); legendary material will be found in the Lives of Patrick (for which see PATRICK, ST). On the historical context, see R. P. C. Hanson, Saint Patrick: His Origins and Career (Oxford, 1968), pp. 52–6; on later traditions, pp. 192–4. The theory of two Patricks has a long history; on the equation of the 'elder Patrick' with Palladius, see, e.g., S. Malone, 'Sen (old) Patrick, who was he?', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 3rd ser. 12 (1891), pp. 800–809; T. F. O'Rahilly, The Two Patricks (Dublin, 1942), and criticism by D. A. Binchy, 'Patrick and his Biographers, Ancient and Modern', Studia Hibernica, 2 (1962), pp. 7–173, esp. pp. 115–46. See also L. Bieler, 'The Mission of Palladius. A Comparative Study of Sources', Traditio, 6 (1948), pp. 1–32, incl. texts. G. T. Stokes in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 176 f., s.v. See also bibl. to IRELAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

pallium. In ecclesiastical usage, the circular band of white woollen material with two hanging strips and marked with six black crosses which is worn on the shoulders by the Pope and granted by him to metropolitans (formerly also to some other bishops and archbishops) of the RC Church. The Codex Iuris Canonici (1983) describes the pallium as signifying the power which, in communion with the Roman Church, the metropolitan possesses by law in his own province. It must be requested within three months of episcopal consecration or canonical appointment of a new metropolitan (can. 437). It is made from the wool of lambs blessed on St *Agnes' day in the church of S. Agnese fuori le mura and, before dispatch, rests for a night on the tomb of St *Peter in the Vatican basilica. The early history of the pallium is very obscure. Derived from the imperial insignia, it seems to have been worn at first by archbishops and to have had no connection with Rome, still less with the investment of Papal authority. At a later stage, after the Pope had himself assumed it, he seems occasionally to have sent it to individual prelates as a mark of special honour, and in this way its reception became much coveted. Not until the 9th cent. were all metropolitans required to petition for it. The pallium naturally went out of use in the C of E at the *Reformation, though it still appears in some armorial bearings where it appears (as in a front or back view of the wearer) in the shape of the letter Y. See also OMOPHORION.

N. de Bralion, Cong. Orat., Pallium Archiepiscopale (Paris, 1648). P. de *Marca, De Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii, ed. É. *Baluze, 2 (ibid., 1663), pp. 79–88. H. Thurston, SJ, The Pallium (Historical Papers, ed. J. Morris, SJ, 4 [c.1893]). H. Grisar, SJ, 'Das römische Pallium und die ältesten liturgischen Schärpen', in S. Ehses (ed.), Festschrift zum elfhundertjährigen Jubiläum des Deutschen Campo Santo in Rom (1897), pp. 83–114. J. W. Legg, 'The Blessing of the Episcopal Ornament called the Pall', Yorkshire Archaeological Journal, 15 (1898), pp. 121–41, repr. in id., Essays Liturgical and Historical (1917), pp. 108–56. T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte (Bonner Akademische Reden, 1; Krefeld, 1948). P. Salmon, OSB, Étude sur les insignes du pontife dans le rit romain (Rome, 1955). A. A. King, The Liturgy of the Roman Church (1957), pp. 152–5. J. Mayo, A History of Ecclesiastical Dress (1984), pp. 22–4 and 124 f. Braun, LG, pp. 620–76; Braun, LP, pp. 143–51. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 11 (1911), pp. 427–9, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 1; 1937), pp. 931–40, s.v. with detailed bibl.; T. Klauser in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 7–9, s.v.

Pallottini Fathers. A society of RC priests, lay brothers, sisters, and associates, founded in 1835 by St Vincent Pallotti (1795–1850), a Roman by birth who, after ordination as priest (1818), devoted his life to pastoral work in the city. They were previously known as the 'Pious Society of Missions' (Pia Societas Missionum, PSM), but are now generally called the 'Society of the Catholic Apostolate' (Societas Apostolatus Catholici; SAC). The sisters were founded by Pallotti in 1843 as a separate congregation. He believed that all Christians, lay as well as ordained, had an equal status in working for the salvation of others, and *Pius XI saw in him a forerunner of *Catholic Action.

[J. Hettenkofer], Historia Piae Societatis Missionum (Rome, 1935); id., Historia Societatis Apostolatus Catholici, 1935–1950 (ibid., 1950). H. Schulte, SAC, Das Werk des Katholischen Apostolats (3 vols., Limburg [an der Lahn], 1966–71), esp. vol. 3. Pallotti's Opere Complete, ed. F. Moccia, SAC (12 vols., Rome, 1964–85). Life by F. Frank, SAC (2 vols., Augsburg, 1952–63). F. Moccia, SAC, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1589–92, s.v. 'Società dell'Apostolato Cattolico'; A. Faller, SAC, ibid. 1 (1974), cols. 738 f., s.v. 'Apostolato Cattolico, Suore dell' '; A. Walkenbach, PSM, in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 834–41, s.v. 'Vincent (6) Pallotti', all with bibl.

Palm Sunday (Dominica in Palmis). The Sunday before *Easter which introduces *Holy Week. The distinctive ceremonies of the day are the blessing of the palms and, in the W. Church and some E. Churches, the procession, representing the Lord's triumphal entry into *Jerusalem a week before the Resurrection. The Palm Sunday procession is attested for Jerusalem as early as the 4th cent. by the 'Pilgrimage of *Egeria'. In the W. the *Gallican *Bobbio Missal (8th cent.) contains a blessing of palms to be carried as symbols of the victory of Christ and protection against the devil; the wording seems to imply a procession, for which there is specific evidence in the 9th cent. In the Middle Ages the procession usually set out from one church and made its way to another, where the palms were blessed and distributed, and then returned to the church from which it had started. Frequently a representation of Christ, e.g. the Gospel book or a crucifix or a carved figure seated on a wooden ass, was carried in the procession. The use of the Blessed Sacrament for the purpose was ordered by Abp. *Lanfranc for the cathedral at *Canterbury *c.*1078, and thence spread to Rouen and several places in England.

A very elaborate rite for the blessing of the palms developed during the Middle Ages, similar in structure to the Mass. In the C of E the ceremony was abolished by an Order in Council in Jan. 1549, and only in recent times has a special rite for Palm Sunday been officially sanctioned within the Anglican Communion. In the RC Church the rite was radically simplified by the decree 'Maxima Redemptionis Nostrae Mysteria' of 16 Nov. 1955, and there have been a number of minor changes since. Acc. to the current rite there is a general blessing of the palms (or other greenery) held by the people, if possible in a different building from that in which the Mass is to be celebrated. After the reading of the account of the triumphal entry into Jerusalem in one or other of the Gospels, and a short homily, the clergy and people process into the church, singing Psalms or the traditional 'Gloria, Laus' ('All Glory, Laud and Honour' by *Theodulf of Orléans) or some other chant. If it is not possible to process outside, there is at least a procession in the church before the main Mass of the day. The Mass which follows begins with the collect (with no *Introit, etc.) and includes the chanting of the Passion from one of the Gospels. The colour for the Mass and the procession is red. The modern Anglican rites follow a similar pattern. In the Byzantine rite the palms or olive branches are blessed and distributed at Mattins after the reading of the Gospel account of the Lord's entry into Jerusalem. A procession is not usual.

The texts for the Latin Rite are pr. in the Roman Missal with the rest of the Palm Sunday proper. Those sanctioned for optional use in the C of E are in Lent, Holy Week, Easter: Services and Prayers Commended by the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England (1986), pp. 73–89; in other provinces of the Anglican Communion they are contained in modern revisions of the BCP. T. J. Talley, The Origins of the Liturgical Year (New York [1986]), esp. pp. 176–82, and 209–14. H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols in 3, Rome, etc., 1956–7), with texts of the 1955 rite, relevant decrees, and bibl. H. J. Gräf, SVD, Palmenweihe und Palmenprozession in der lateinischen Liturgie (Veröffentlichungen des Missionspriesterseminars St Augustin, Siegburg, 5; 1959), with extensive bibl. The pre-1955 rite is described in H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 191–237. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2060–4, s.v. 'Rameaux (Dimanche des)'.

Palmer, Roundell (1812–95), First Earl of Selborne, Lord Chancellor, and High Churchman. Educated at Rugby, Winchester, and Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Magdalen in 1835. His brilliant abilities led him to rise rapidly in his profession; he was Lord Chancellor in 1872–4 and again in 1880–5, being created Earl of Selborne in 1882. A devoted member of the C of E, he admired the leaders of the *Oxford Movement, actively supported I. *Williams's candidature for the Poetry Professorship, and expressed his belief that the condemnation of E. B. *Pusey's 1843 Sermon was illegal. Until 1869 he was opposed to the entrance of Dissenters to Oxford University. His writings include The Book of Praise (1863), a hymnal on historical principles, Notes on Some Passages in the Liturgical History of the English Church (1878), A Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment (1886), and Ancient Facts and Fictions concerning Churches and Tithes (1888). He also contributed the art. 'Hymns' to the 9th edn. of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Palmer's Letters to his Son on Religion were posthumously pub. London, 1898; also The Catholic and Apostolic Church: Letters to his Son, ibid., 1899. Autobiographical Memorials, ed. by his daughter, S. M. Palmer (pt. 1, Family and Personal, 2 vols., London, 1896; pt. 2, Personal and Political, 2 vols., ibid., 1898). E. G. W. Bill, Catalogue of the Papers of Roundell Palmer (1812–1895), first earl of Selborne (1967). J. M. Rigg in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 150–4.

Palmer, William (1803–85), *Tractarian theologian. Of Irish extraction, he graduated at *Trinity College, Dublin, before coming to Oxford. From 1831 he was attached to Worcester College. His Origines Liturgicae (1832), a learned treatise on the history of the English liturgy, brought him into relations with J. H. *Newman, H. J. *Rose, and others who led the *Oxford Movement in the next years. A rigid High Churchman who was strongly opposed both to Popery and to Dissent, he expounded what he conceived to be the Anglican doctrine of the Church (roughly the so-called *branch theory) in his Treatise on the Church of Christ (2 vols., 1838) with learning and lucidity. When the Oxford Movement became less anti-Roman in its ideals, W. Palmer gave public expression to his misgivings in his Narrative of Events connected with the Publication of Tracts for the Times (1843). In 1846 he issued a reply to J. H. Newman's Development of Christian Doctrine in his Doctrine of Development. In the same year he became vicar of Whitchurch Canonicorum in Dorset

The Jesuit theologian, G. *Perrone, described him as 'theologorum Oxoniensium facile princeps'.

G. Goodwin in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 168–70, with refs.

Palmer, William (1811–79), brother of Roundell *Palmer, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford (from 1832), and divine. Though for his day an extreme *High Churchman, he took little direct part in the *Oxford Movement. In 1840 and 1842 he paid visits to Russia, provided with letters of commendation from the revered president of his college (M. J. *Routh), to explore the possibilities of intercommunion between the Anglican and Orthodox Churches, and did much to foster interest in the E. Church in Great Britain. Between these two visits he made strong protests against the proposed Anglo-Lutheran *Jerusalem Bishopric plan. He corresponded with A. *Khomiakov, who visited him in Oxford in 1847, about Anglican–Orthodox relations. Distressed by the *Gorham Case, he tentatively considered seceding to the Orthodox Church; but deciding against this step because the Easterns insisted on his 'rebaptism', he eventually joined the RC Church in 1855. His writings include Dissertations on Subjects relating to the Orthodox or Eastern-Catholic Communion (1853), Notes of a Visit to the Russian Church in the Years 1840, 1841 (ed. J. H. *Newman; 1882), and works on Russian Church history and archaeology.

His correspondence with Khomiakov, 1844–54, ed. by W. J. Birkbeck, Russia and the English Church during the last fifty years, 1 (1895; all pub.). J. M. Rigg in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 167 f.

Pammachius, St (c.340–410), Roman Christian. A senator of the Furian family, he was a friend of St *Jerome, who dedicated to him several works, among them the Commentaries on the Minor Prophets (406) and on Daniel (407). After the death of his wife, the daughter of St *Paula, he took the monastic habit and spent his possessions on works of piety, among them the famous hospital for pilgrims at Portus and the church of SS. Giovanni e Paolo (excavated in 1887) in Rome. Of a peace-loving character, he disapproved of the lack of moderation in Jerome's attack on *Jovinian and the violent controversy between Jerome and *Rufinus on the subject of *Origen. His intervention in the *Donatist schism in Numidia, where he owned estates, earned him a laudatory letter from St *Augustine (401). He died in the invasion of the Goths in 410. Feast day, 30 Aug.

The chief sources are St Jerome, Epp. 48 f., 57, 66, 83 f., and 98; St Augustine, Ep. 58, and *Palladius, Historia Lausiaca, 62. J. Pinius, SJ, in AASS, Aug. 6 (1743), pp. 555–63, incl. relevant texts of works cited above. On the tituli S. Pammachii, later SS. Johannis et Pauli, cf. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9; 1918), pp. 26–33. A. H. M. Jones and others, The Prosopography of the Later Roman Empire, 1 (Cambridge, 1971), p. 663.

Pamphilus, St (c.240–310), disciple of *Origen. A native of Berytus (modern Beirut), he was a pupil of Pierius at *Alexandria; it was prob. from him that he derived his veneration for the teaching of Origen. Later he directed a theological school at *Caesarea in Palestine, where he was martyred. During imprisonment in the persecution of Maximinus Daza, he prepared an 'Apology for Origen'. In this work he was much assisted by *Eusebius of Caesarea, who in turn held Pamphilus in immense veneration. Of the five books of the 'Apology' which are Pamphilus' own, only the first survives, and this in a Latin version of doubtful accuracy made by *Rufinus of Aquileia. After Pamphilus' martyrdom, Eusebius added a sixth book to the 'Apology', wrote Pamphilus' Life (now lost, except for a few fragments), and took for himself the name of 'Eusebius of Pamphilus' (ὁ τοῦ Παμφίλου). His large library survived at Caesarea until destroyed by the Arabs in the 7th cent. Feast day in the E., 16 Feb. (the day of his martyrdom); in the W., 1 June.

Rufinus' version of bk. 1 of Pamphilus' Apology, with 'Admonitio' of C. de La Rue, in J. P. Migne, PG 17. 521–616. Frag. of Eusebius' Life in *Jerome, Adv. Rufin. 1. 9. Eusebius, HE 7. 32. 25, and De Mart. Pal. 11. 3; Jerome, De Vir. Illustr. 75; *Photius, Cod. 118. P. Nautin, Origène: Sa vie et son œuvre (1977), pp. 99–153 ('L'"Apologie pour Origène et ses opinions" par Pamphile et Eusèbe'). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 287–92. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 150–3, s.v.

panagia (Gk. παναγία, 'all holy'). A favourite title of the BVM in the E. Church. The word is also used (1) of an oval medallion depicting the BVM which Orthodox bishops wear on the breast suspended on a chain; and (2) of bread (ἄρτος τῆς παναγίας) which is solemnly blessed in honour of the BVM. See also ENCOLPION.

Pancras, St (d. 304), martyr. There are no reliable historical data about him. Acc. to an early tradition he was a Phrygian by race and a member of the Roman Church, who at the age of 14 was martyred on the Via Aurelia during the Diocletianic *persecution. Devotion to him became very popular, esp. in Rome, where his church gave one of the cardinals his title. Feast day, 12 May.

St Pancras railway station in London is named after the dedication of the church of the parish in which it is situated.

His 'Acta' survive in several recensions both in Lat. and Gk. A Lat. text from several MSS is pr., with discussion, in AASS, Mai. 3 (1680), pp. 17–22; other Lat. MSS in Anal. Boll. 2 (1883), pp. 289–91, and 10 (1891), pp. 53–6. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, Hagiographica (ST 19; 1908), pp. 77–105 ('Della leggenda di S. Pancrazio Romano'), with Gk. text of 'Acta', pp. 109–12. J. Declerck, 'Les recensions grecques de la Passion de S. Pancrace, martyr à Rome', Anal. Boll. 105 (1987), pp. 65–85, incl. texts. BHL, pp. 928 f. (nos. 6420–8), and novum supplementum (1986), pp. 680 f. R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 3 (Vatican City, 1967), pp. 153–74 [in Eng.]. G. N. Verrando, 'Le Iscrizioni attribuite al Complesso di S. Pancrazio', Riv.A.C. 59 (1983), pp. 151–89, with refs. to earlier arts. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1001–14, with refs.

panentheism (Gk. πᾶν, 'everything'; ἐν, 'in'; θεός, 'God'). The belief that the Being of God includes and penetrates the whole universe, so that every part of it exists in Him, but (as against *pantheism, q.v.) that His Being is more than, and is not exhausted by, the universe. The word was coined by K. C. F. Krause (1781–1832) for his own system. The concept has gained some popularity in recent years, esp. among the exponents of *Process Theology and in the writings of John Macquarrie, who, in his *Gifford Lectures for 1983–4 (pub. as In Search of Deity, 1984) prefers the term 'dialectical theism'.

Pange Lingua. The title of two famous Latin hymns: the Passiontide hymn by *Venantius Fortunatus (d. *c.*610) (Pange lingua gloriosi proelium certaminis), and the *Corpus Christi hymn by St *Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274) (Pange lingua gloriosi corporis mysterium). On the latter see also TANTUM ERGO.

Panikhida. See PANNYCHIS.

Pannenberg, Wolfhart (1928–), German Protestant theologian. In 1950/51 he studied theology under K. *Barth in Basle, proceeding to doctoral work in Heidelberg in 1951. During his Heidelberg years he co-operated with a group of younger theologians in the development of a new approach, both exegetical and systematic, to the theology of revelation. This led to the book, Offenbarung als Geschichte, ed. by Pannenberg (1961; Eng. tr., Revelation as History, 1986). In 1961 he moved from his first teaching post at the Church seminary in Wuppertal to the Chair of Systematic Theology in Mainz; in 1968 he became Professor of Systematic Theology in the Protestant Faculty of Theology at Munich University. He is the author of a large number of articles and books.

Pannenberg's own contribution to Offenbarung als Geschichte marked a sharp break with the 'revelational positivism' (D. *Bonhoeffer's phrase) of Barth. Pannenberg had come to hold that Christian theology cannot protect itself against criticism by appeal to some privileged epistemology of faith. Faith, rather, is a manner of response to certain historical facts that, rationally speaking, suggest interpretation in revelatory terms. The key facts to which such an appeal is made were explored in detail in Pannenberg's first major work, Grundzüge der Christologie (1964; Eng. tr., Jesus—God and Man, 1968), remarkable especially for its defence of the historicity of the *Resurrection of Christ, in the context of a positive appreciation of Jewish *apocalyptic thought.

Such an argument, on Pannenberg's view, requires a wide understanding of historical rationality. This relies in part on an appeal to universal history in the manner of G. W. F. *Hegel (and creatively linked by Pannenberg with the apocalyptic framework of interpretation), in part on an assessment of the whole history of religions (here Panneberg engages critically with the historical relativism of E. *Troeltsch), and in part on a theological anthropology, which is again set out and defended rationally through critical engagement with all forms of reductionism. These themes were developed in a number of articles and form the substance of Pannenberg's next two major works, Wissenschaftstheorie und Theologie (1973; Eng. tr., Theology and the Philosophy of Science, 1976) and Anthropologie in theologische Perspektive (1983; Eng. tr., 1985). They illustrate, at length, Pannenberg's conviction that Christian theology must argue with *atheism in the shared context of critical rationality.

Pannenberg has written on many other theological topics, such as the *Apostles' Creed, the Kingdom of God, the Church, ethics, and spirituality. Notable features of his work include a powerful defence of reform (as opposed to revolution) in Christian social ethics, and a novel, if controversial, attempt to underpin the theology of hope with an ontology of God as the power of the future. The philosophical foundation of his theological work is briefly indicated in Metaphysik und Gottesdanke (1988; Eng. tr., 1990). In his Systematische Theologie (3 vols., 1988–93; Eng. tr., 1991 ff.) he presents in full his understanding of the doctrines of God, creation, Christ, the Church, and the Kingdom. It is notable throughout for its determination, at every level, to argue for the truth of Christian doctrine.

There are two collections of his essays: Grundfragen systematischer Theologie (2 vols., 1967–80; Eng. tr. of vol. 1 as Basic Questions in Theology, vols. 1–2, 1970–71; [vol. 3 of Basic Questions, 1973, is tr. from other sources] and Ethik und Ekklesiologie (1977; Eng. tr. of pt. 1, Ethics, 1981, and pt. 2, The Church, 1983). A. D. Galloway, Wolfhart Pannenberg (Contemporary Religious Thinkers Series, 1973); E. F. Tupper, The Theology of Wolfhart Pannenberg (Philadelphia, 1973; London, 1974). P. Warin, Le Chemin de la Théologie chez Wolfhart Pannenberg (Analecta Gregoriana, 224; 1981); C. E. Braaten and P. Clayton (eds.), The Theology of Wolfhart Pannenberg (Minneapolis [1988]); S. J. Grenz, Reason for Hope: The Systematic Theology of Wolfhart Pannenberg (New York and Oxford, 1990).

Pannychis (Gk. παννυχίς, literally: 'all-night [service]'), a Greek word for a *Vigil (q.v.), more usually known as ἀγρυπνία. It occurs already in St *Athanasius (Apol. ad Const. 25). The term 'Pannychis' came to be used mainly for vigils for the dead, hence the Slavonic word Panikhida, meaning a memorial service for the dead (which takes the form of a drastically curtailed vigil).

Panormitanus (1386–1445), also known as Abbas Modernus and Siculus, canonist. Born in Catania in Sicily, Nicolò de' Tudeschi entered the *Benedictine Order *c.*1400, and after studying under F. *Zabarella, he taught at *Bologna, Parma, Siena, and Florence. In 1425 he became abbot of Maniacio, near Messina, and in 1435 Abp. of Palermo (hence Panormitanus). In 1433 *Eugenius IV had sent him to the Council of *Basle as his representative, but in 1436 Panormitanus returned as the ambassador of Alfonso of Aragon, who was a contender for the throne of Naples against a nominee of Eugenius IV; consequently he usually supported the antipope, Felix V (by whom he was made a cardinal), defending in his Tractatus de Concilio Basiliensi the Pope's inferiority to a *General Council. Once Alfonso had obtained Naples in 1443, Panormitanus ceased to oppose Eugenius. His principal writings were his works on canon law, which included commentaries on the *Decretals of Gregory IX, on the *Sext, and on the *Clementines.

Many of his works were pr. in the 15th cent. Collected edns.: 8 vols., Venice, 1592, and 9 vols., ibid., 1617. K. W. Nörr, Kirche und Konzil bei Nicolaus de Tudeschis (Panormitanus) (Forschungen zur kirchlichen Rechtsgeschichte und zum Kirchenrecht, 4; 1964); A. Vagedes, Das Konzil über dem Papst? Die Stellungnahmen des Nikolaus von Kues und des Panormitanus zum Streit zwischen dem Konzil von Basel und Eugen IV. (2 vols., Paderborner Theologische Studien, 11; 1981). A. Black, 'Panormitanus on the Decretum', Traditio, 26 (1970), pp. 440–4. M. Watanabe, 'Authority and Consent in Church Government: Panormitanus, Aeneas Sylvius, Cusanus', Journal of the History of Ideas, 33 (1972), pp. 217–36. C. Lefebvre in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 1195–215, s.v., with extensive refs.

Panpsychism. The doctrine advocated by G. T. *Fechner (1801–87) and other 19th-cent. philosophers that everything in the universe is endowed with a measure of consciousness. It has found little favour with Christian theologians. A similar doctrine was expressly repudiated by St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol. 1, q. 18, a. 1).

C. Hartshorne in V. Ferm (ed.), A History of Philosophical Systems [1950], pp. 442–53; P. Edwards in id. (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 6 (1967), pp. 22–31, s.v., both with bibl.

Pantaenus, St (d. c. AD 190). He is described by *Eusebius (HE 5. 10 f.) as head of the *Catechetical School at Alexandria and one of the teachers of *Clement. Prob. a native of Sicily, he was converted from *Stoicism to the Christian faith and taught at Alexandria from *c.*180 until his death. Nothing of his work survives, and the fragments preserved under his name may be a record of his oral teaching. Eusebius also states that he preached the Gospel in 'India'. Feast day, 7 July; in the Coptic Church, 22 June.

Frags. in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1846), pp. 375–83. J. Munck, Untersuchungen über Klemens von Alexandria (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, 2; 1933), pp. 151–204 [critique of W. *Bousset's theory of a 'Pantaenus Source' in Clement]. J. Gwinn in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 181–4, s.v., with further primary refs.; S. Lilla in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2604–6, s.v. 'Panteno', with bibl.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (Cambridge, 1992), p. 639.

Pantaleon, St (d. *c.*305), martyr. His name means 'the All-merciful' (παντελεήμων). Nothing is known with certainty about him. Acc. to one form of the legends, he was a physician to the Emp. Galerius at Nicomedia who, after having been converted to Christianity in his early years by his mother, was led into apostasy by the worldly attractions of court life. Reconverted by a Christian called Hermolaus, he suffered martyrdom when *Diocletian gave orders to purge the court of Christians. His cult has been very popular, esp. in the E.; and in the Middle Ages he was honoured as one of the patron saints of physicians, second only to St *Luke. He was accounted one of the 14 *Auxiliary Saints. Feast day, 27 July; also other dates.

Gk. text of 'Passio' in the works of *Simeon Metaphrastes pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 115. 448–77; Lat. tr. of this, and other material, with comm., in AASS, Jul. 6 (1729), pp. 397–427. Further refs. in BHL, pp. 929–32 (nos. 6429–48), and novum supplementum (1986), pp. 681 f.; BHG (3rd edn., 1957), pp. 166–9 (nos. 1412z–1418c); BHO, p. 183 (nos. 835–7). H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Subsidia Hagiographica, 20; 1912), pp. 181 f. For popular account of the liquefaction of the relic of his blood, very similar to that recorded of St Januarius (q.v.), I. R. Grant, The Testimony of Blood (1929), pp. 17–44. J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (Rome, 1968), cols. 108–17, s.v.

pantheism (Gk. πᾶν, 'all', and θεός, 'God'). The belief or theory that God and the universe are identical. The word appears to have been coined by J. *Toland, the *Deist, in 1705 and to have been employed shortly afterwards by his opponents. Pantheistic systems, however, go back to very early times. It is a type of thought esp. found in Hinduism. Acc. as it interprets the universe in terms of God or God in terms of the universe, its attitude is religious or materialistic. Of the former type the most extreme representative in modern times was B. *Spinoza (1632–77) with his immanental formula, 'God or Nature' (Deus sive Natura). In the 19th cent. the German Idealists (F. W. J. von *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel) and the British *Absolute Idealists (F. H. *Bradley, B. *Bosanquet) taught philosophical doctrines akin to pantheism. Mysticism, with its passionate search for God and desire for union with the Divine, has often been charged with pantheism. Among Christian thinkers accused of pantheistic tendencies may be named *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, *Erigena, and *Nicholas of Cusa; and such mystics as *Eckhart and Jakob *Boehme.

Collection of extracts from various authors, tr. into Eng., by C. Hartshorne and W. L. Rees, Philosophers Speak of God (Chicago, 1953). C. E. Plumptre, History of Pantheism (2 vols., 1881); W. S. Urquhart, Pantheism and the Value of Life (1919). A. E. Garvie, F. Thilly, and A. S. Geden in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 609–20, s.v.; F. A. Schalck in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1855–74, s.v. 'Panthéisme'; M. F. Sciacca in EC 9 (1952), cols. 686–93, s.v. 'Panteismo'; S. Pfürtner in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 25–9, s.v. 'Pantheismus'.

Papa Angelicus (also Pastor Angelicus). A belief which arose in Italy in the earlier half of the 13th cent. and is recorded by Roger *Bacon (Opus Tertium, 24), to the effect that a Pope would arise who would revive Apostolic simplicity and zeal in the Church and inaugurate a new age. It was developed in apocryphal writings and prophecies of the 14th cent., e.g. those of Telesphorus of Cosenza (1386). In the Prophecies of St *Malachy the 106th Pope, i.e. *Pius XII (1940–58), is so designated.

Papacy. While the term strictly denotes the office of the Pope, i.e. the Bp. of *Rome, it commonly refers to the system of centralized government in the Church exercised by him, along with the claim that by Divine appointment he has universal authority over Christendom. Acc. to RC doctrine, St *Peter was the first Bp. of Rome, and the Pope is not only his lineal successor in that office, but also inherits in its fullness the unique commission given to him by Christ (cf. esp. Mt. 16: 18 f. and Jn. 21: 17). Claims to the magisterial and jurisdictional primacy supposed to be contained in this commission, hinted at (it is held) as early as the First Epistle of St *Clement, the letters of St *Ignatius, and the writings of St *Irenaeus, were explicit in the teaching of *Leo I and *Gelasius I (the first Pope to be saluted as '*vicar of Christ'), and were eloquently developed by a succession of Popes, notably *Gregory VII, *Innocent III, and *Boniface VIII; for centuries Popes claimed supremacy over, and the right to depose, temporal rulers. The Papal primacy was never formally accepted by the E. Churches, and it was repudiated by the Protestant communions. From 756 to 1870 the Papacy itself was also a temporal power, ruling a large part of central Italy; since 1929 its sovereignty has been confined to the *Vatican City. But although it lost temporal power in 1870, the First *Vatican Council reinforced its spiritual authority by proclaiming the Pope *infallible and reaffirming that he was the absolute ruler of the Church. The Second *Vatican Council sought to balance the Papal monarchy by a declaration of the *collegiality of the bishops with the Pope in the government of the Church. See also ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

'Papal Aggression'. The name popularly given to the action of Pope *Pius IX making England and Wales, by Letters Apostolic, Universalis Ecclesiae (29 Sept. 1850), an ecclesiastical province of the RC Church, with a hierarchy consisting of an archbishop and 12 *suffragans all with territorial titles. The wording of the brief was provocative, e.g. by its reference to the C of E as 'the Anglican Schism'. An unexpected and almost fanatical storm of indignation spread through Great Britain under the leadership of Lord John Russell (1792–1878), culminating in the passing of the *Ecclesiastical Titles Act 1851 (q.v.).

Papal legate. See LEGATE, PAPAL.

Papal States. See STATES OF THE CHURCH.

Papebroch, Daniel (1628–1714) (or van Papenbroeck), Bollandist hagiographer. In 1659 he became J. Bollandus's assistant and continued till his death to take an active part in the compilation of the Acta Sanctorum, though he was forced to interrupt his work for a time by blindness. His name appears for the first time in 'Martius I' (1668), and for the last in 'Junius V' (1709), i.e. on 18 volumes in all. Bitter criticism from the *Carmelites, the foundation of whose order by *Elijah he denied, led to his denunciation at Rome and in Spain for heresy, and in 1695 14 volumes of the Acta were put on the *Index. In a long introduction to 'Aprilis II' (1675), Papebroch subjected Merovingian charters to drastic criticism, which called forth J. *Mabillon's De Re Diplomatica (1681).

J. Pien, SJ, in AASS, Jun. 6 (1715), pp. 3–21. H. *Delehaye, SJ, L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (1920), pp. 31–40; P. Peeters, SJ, L'Œuvre des Bollandistes (2nd edn., Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe des Lettres. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, 2nd ser. 54, fasc. 5; 1961), esp. pp. 17–34. Polgár, 2 (1992), pp. 619 f. H. Delehaye in Biographie nationale publiée par l'Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique, 16 (1901), cols. 581–9, s.v. 'Papebrochius'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1345–58, s.v. See also works cited under BOLLANDISTS.

Paphnutius, St (d. *c.*360), Bp. of the Upper Thebaid. He was an Egyptian monk, who had been a disciple of St *Antony. He suffered such hardship and cruelty during the persecution by Maximin Daza (305–13) that at the Council of *Nicaea his mutilated body was an object of wonder and veneration to the assembled bishops. Acc. to *Socrates (HE 1. 11) and *Sozomen (HE 1. 23), he dissuaded the Council from ordering all clergy to put away their wives. Feast day, 11 Sept.

Gk. text of 'Passio' ed. H. *Delehaye, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 40 (1922), pp. 328–43. Lat. tr. in AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 681–8. For his views on celibacy, G. *Bickell, 'Der Cölibat eine apostolische Anordnung', ZKT 2 (1878), pp. 26–64, esp. pp. 57–62. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1358–61, s.v. 'Paphnuce'.

Papias (*c.*60–130), Bp. of Hierapolis in Asia Minor. Nothing is known of his life, apart from the statement of St *Irenaeus that he was a 'man of long ago' (ἀρχαῖος ἀνήρ) and the disciple of one 'John' and a companion of St *Polycarp. His work, Λογίων Κυριακῶν Ἐξηγήσεις ('Expositions of the Oracles of the Lord'), in five books survives only in quotations in Irenaeus and *Eusebius, and seems to have contained many oral traditions and legends. In the famous fragments on the origin of the Gospels of St *Matthew and St *Mark he states, on the authority of 'the Elder', that Mark, having become the interpreter of St *Peter, set down accurately (ἀκριβῶς), though not in order (οὐ μέντοι τάξει), everything that he remembered of the words and actions of the Lord, and that St Matthew composed 'the oracles' (τὰ λόγια) in Hebrew, and that everyone translated them as best he could. Of his theology we only know that he held *Millenarian views, believing that there would be a period of a thousand years after the Resurrection during which the Kingdom of Christ would be set up on earth in a material form.

The frags. have often been repr., e.g., with Eng. tr., in J. B. *Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers (ed. J. R. Harmer, 1891), pp. 514–35. U. H. J. Körtner, Papias von Hierapolis: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des frühen Christentums (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 133; Göttingen, 1983), with detailed survey of lit. Various of his arts. collected by J. Kürzinger, Papias von Hierapolis und die Evangelien des Neuen Testaments (Eichstätter Materialien, 4; Ratisbon, 1983), incl. text and Ger. tr. of frags. R. Bauckham, 'Papias and Polycrates on the Origin of the Fourth Gospel', JTS NS 44 (1993), pp. 24–69, esp. pp. 44–63. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 20 f. (no. 1047). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 52 f. and 552. F. Wotke in PW 18 (pt. 3; 1949), cols. 966–76, s.v. 'Papias (2)'; M. Jourjon in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1104–9; W. R. Schoedel in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 140–2.

Papini, Giovanni (1881–1956), Italian author. In his early years he followed various trends of modern philosophy, esp. the *Pragmatism of W. *James, and in his own periodicals, Leonardo (1902) and Lacerba (1913), as well as in several volumes of essays, treated metaphysical and moral questions with originality and often with violence. In 1912 he published Un uomo finito, a novel reflecting his interior struggle between his philosophical speculations and the desire for faith, which he at last resolved by acceptance of the Catholic creed. The outcome of his conversion was the Storia di Cristo (1921; Eng. tr., The Story of Christ, 1923), his most successful book, in which he traces the earthly life of Christ, His effect on His contemporaries, and the uniqueness of His Person and message in the world of antiquity, with great poetical insight. It was followed in 1929 by a Life of St *Augustine (Eng. tr., 1930), a psychological study, but less successful than the earlier work.

Correspondence with Giuseppe Prezzolini ed., with introd. by Prezzolini, Storia di un'amicizia (2 vols., Florence [1966–8]); that with Pietro Pancrazi ed. S. Ramat, Le Ombre di Parnaso (ibid. [1973]); and that with Olga Signorelli ed. by her daughter, M. Signorelli (Quaderni dell'Osservatore, 19; Milan [1968]). A. Viviani, Gianfalco: Storia e vita (1934); M. Apollonio, Papini ('Guide di cultura contemporanea', 1944); R. Ridolfi, Vita di Giovanni Papini (1957). G. Fantino, Saggio su Papini [1981]; P. Bagnoli (ed.), Giovanni Papini: L'uomo impossibile [1982]. A. Santucci in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 6 (1967), pp. 37 f. s.v.

papyrology. The science of dealing with MSS on papyrus. Papyrus is a writing material made out of the fibres of the stem of a water plant which formerly grew plentifully in the Nile. It was used in ancient Egypt and became the chief writing material in the Greco-Roman world from the 5th cent. BC (and probably earlier) to the 4th cent. AD, when it gradually gave way to vellum. It was manufactured in sheets, which were glued together to form rolls of any desired length up to about 35 feet. This was the form in which the books of the OT and possibly those of the NT were first written, and for pagan literature the roll predominates until the 4th cent. AD. Such a roll would not contain more than a single Gospel. But from the latter part of the first cent. an alternative form, that of the 'codex', which could contain much more matter, came into use, and this was predominantly used for Christian books. In the codex, sheets of papyrus were folded in two and formed into quires, as in a modern printed book. Early codices were often composed of single quires, consisting of any number of folded sheets, from 1 to 50 or more; eventually it was found more convenient to form quires of not more than 8 sheets, making 16 leaves or 32 pages, and (as in modern books) to make up the codex from several such quires. The writing on a roll was in columns of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches wide, and was normally on one side of the roll only; the references in Ezek. 2: 10 and Rev. 5: 1 to something written 'within and without' are to a sealed document, not to a book.

Papyrus manuscripts have survived in few areas apart from the dry soil of Egypt, where they were first found in 1778; but it is only since 1877 that they have been discovered in any large numbers, and still more recently that they have become important for the biblical text.

Useful directory to the many series of published papyri in H. G. *Liddell and R. *Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon (rev. edn., 1940), pp. xlii–xlv, with additions in Suppl. ed. E. A. Barber (1968), pp. x f.; J. van Haelst, Catalogue des Papyrus Littéraires Juifs et Chrétiens (1976); K. Aland, Repertorium der Griechischen Christlichen Papyri, 1: Biblische Papyri (Patristische Texte und Studien, 18; 1976). Large collection of historical and legal docs. assembled in L. Mitteis and U. Wilcken, Grundzüge und Chrestomathie der Papyruskunde (4 vols., 1912). A. S. Hunt and C. C. Edgar (eds.), Select Papyri (2 vols., Loeb, 1932–4); D. L. Page (ed.), Select Papyri, 3: Literary Papyri, Poetry (ibid., 1941; rev. edn., 1942). General introd. to subject by E. G. Turner, Greek Papyri: An Introduction (Oxford, 1968; enlarged repr., 1980). Lexicon by F. Preisigke, Wörterbuch der griechischen Papyrusurkunden (2 vols., 1925–7; suppl. ed. E. Kiessling, 2 vols., 1931–71). Grammar by E. Mayser (2 vols.; Bd. 2 in 3 parts; Berlin, 1906–34). Archiv für Papyrusforschung und verwandte Gebiete (begun by U. Wilcken, 1900 ff.). J. G. Winter, Life and Letters in the Papyri (University of Michigan Press, 1933). Vocabulary of NT Gk. usage by J. H. *Moulton and G. Milligan, The Vocabulary of the Greek Testament Illustrated from the Papyri and other non-literary Sources (1914–30). On the bearing of the papyri on NT studies, A. *Deismann, Licht vom Osten (4th edn., 1923), pp. 18–38; Eng. tr. (1927), pp. 24–50. T. C. Skeat, 'Early Christian Book-Production: Papyri and Manuscripts', in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (1969), pp. 54–79; E. G. Turner, The Typology of the Early Codex (Philadelphia, 1977); C. H. Roberts and T. C. Skeat, The Birth of the Codex (1987). C. H. Roberts and A. F. Shore in J. R. *Harris (ed.), The Legacy of Egypt (2nd edn., Oxford, 1971), pp. 355–433. See also bibl. to BODMER PAPYRI, CHESTER BEATTY PAPYRI, NAG HAMMADI PAPYRI, OXYRHYNCHUS PAPYRI, and RYLANDS ST JOHN.

Parabalani (Gk. παραβαλανεύς; Lat. parabolanus; the etymology of the word, denoting a 'sick-nurse', is uncertain). The Parabalani were an association of men at *Alexandria, devoted to looking after the sick, who prob. originated in a period of epidemic. They are mentioned in two laws of the 'Codex Theodosianus', 16. 2 (de episcopis 42 and 43 of AD 416 and 418), reproduced in the 'Codex Justinianus', 1. 3 (de episcopis 18). Acc. to these laws, which fixed their number at 500, later at 600, we learn that the Parabalani were clerics under episcopal supervision and exempt from public duties. They were forbidden to visit theatres and law courts. They seem to have played a considerable part in the public life of Alexandria and are believed to have had a share in the murder of the philosopher *Hypatia (415). They are also mentioned among *Dioscorus' supporters at the *Latrocinium of *Ephesus (449; ACO 2. 1. 1, p. 179, l. 28).

H. Grégoire, 'Sur le personnel hospitalier des Églises', Byzantion, 13 (1938), pp. 283–5; A. Philipsborn, 'La compagnie d'ambulanciers "parabalani" d'Alexandrie', ibid. 20 (1954), pp. 185–90; W. Schubart, 'Parabalani', Journal of Egyptian Archaeology, 40 (1954), pp. 97–101. E. Venables in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1551 f., s.v. 'Parabolani'.

parable (Gk. παραβολή). In the *Synoptic Gospels, as in the OT tradition on which they draw, the word stands for a wide range of striking sayings, from well-known popular proverbs to little metaphors and elaborate *allegories. Mk., which is generally believed to be the earliest gospel, contains examples of all these, with the historical allegories of the Sower and the Wicked Husbandman dominating by size and importance. They alert the reader to the theological significance of the narrative. Among the teachings of Christ which Mt. added to Mk. is a wealth of new parables. They too range from the small pictures which illustrate the *Sermon on the Mount to the allegories in chapter 25, but they are given a more moral thrust than those in Mk. Lk. adds famous, realistic stories such as the *Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son. Like Mt's parables, they have moral purpose but, while being long, they are distinctive in not being so strongly or solely allegorical. There are allegories in Jn. (the Sheepfold and the Vine), though these are not designated as parables.

Modern critics such as C. H. *Dodd and J. Jeremias, reacting against the dominance of allegory in patristic and medieval exegesis, have taken the Lukan parables to be the standard for recovering the Lord's own parables. Hence they have sought to clear away the allegory from other parables, taking it to be the accretion of early Christianity. There is, however, no reason why Christ should not have used allegorical parables and no sure criterion for distinguishing His parabolic teaching from that of the early Church or the evangelists. The more hospitable range of connotation of 'parable' remains valuable.

The most widely read of the older works was R. C. *Trench, Notes on the Parables of Our Lord (1841). Modern crit. works incl.: A. *Jülicher, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu (2 vols., 1888–99); P. Fiebig, Die Gleichnisreden Jesu im Lichte der rabbinischen Gleichnisse des neutestamentlichen Zeitalters (1912); C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom (1935); J. Jeremias, Die Gleichnisse Jesu (Zurich, 1947; Eng. tr., 1954; 6th edn., Göttingen, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); E. Linnemann, Gleichnisse Jesu: Einführung und Auslegung (Göttingen, 1961; 3rd edn., 1964; Eng. tr., 1966); E. Jüngel, Paulus und Jesus (Hermeneutische Untersuchungen zur Theologie, 2; 1962), pp. 87–174; D. O. Via, The Parables: Their literary and existential dimension (Philadelphia, 1967); C. E. Carlston, The Parables of the Triple Tradition (ibid. [1975]); H. Weder, Die Gleichnisse Jesu als Metaphern (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 120; 1978); J. [H.] Drury, The Parables in the Gospels: History and Allegory (1985); J. R. Donahue, SJ, The Gospel in Parable: Metaphor, Narrative, and Theology in the Synoptic Gospels (Philadelphia, 1988); B. B. Scott, Hear Then the Parable: A Commentary on the Parables of Jesus (Minneapolis [1989]). F. Hauck in TWNT 5 [1955], pp. 741–59 (Eng. tr., 1968, pp.

744–61), s.v. παραβολή; A. George in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1149–77, s.v.

Parabolani. The Latin (apparently corrupt) form of Parabalani (q.v.). It was held to derive from the Gk. παραβολᾶνοι, 'those who disregard' sc. their lives; cf. Phil. 2: 30.

Paracelsus. The name coined for himself by Theophrast Bombast von Hohenheim (1493–1541), Swiss physician. While still young he came under the influence of Abbot J. *Trithemius' approach to alchemy and chemistry. In 1527, after studying at several universities in Germany, he was appointed city physician at Basle, but his open opposition to the prevailing system of medicine, based on Galen and *Avicenna, forced him to leave in 1528. For the rest of his life he was moving from place to place. His great advances in therapeutics rested on his belief that its principles were to be derived from the study of nature and not from scholastic disputations. Yet his empiricism did not prevent his elaborating a mystical theosophy on a *Neoplatonic basis, in which he held that, just as we know nature only to the extent that we are ourselves nature, so we know God only in so far as we are God. Paracelsus also made important contributions to the study of chemistry.

Collection of his works ed. J. Huser (11 parts, Basle, 1589–99). Crit. edn. by K. Sudhoff, W. Matthiesen, and K. Goldhammer (1. Abteilung: Medizinische, naturwissenschaftliche und philosophische Schriften, ed. K. Sudkoff, 14 vols., Munich, 1922–33; 2. Abteilung: Theologische und religionsphilosophische Schriften, vol. 1 ed. W. Matthiessen, Munich, 1923; vols. 2 ff. ed. W. Goldhammer, Wiesbaden, 1955 ff.). Main works, in modernized form, ed. W.-E. Peuckert (5 vols., Darmstadt and Basle/Stuttgart, 1965–8). Eng. tr. of his Hermetic and Alchemical Writings by A. E. Waite (2 vols., London, 1894) and of his Select Works by N. Guterman (ibid., 1951). The very considerable lit. on Paracelsus incl. studies in Eng. by A. M. Stobbart (London, 1911), J. M. Stillman (Chicago and London, 1920), J. Hargrave (London, 1951; more popular), and W. Pagel (Basle and New York, 1958; 2nd edn., 1982). W.-E. Peuckert, Theophrastus Paracelsus (Stuttgart, 1941; 3rd edn., 1944, repr., Hildesheim and New York, 1976); B. Whiteside and S. Hutin, Paracelse: l'homme, le médecin, l'alchimiste [1966]; G. Bechtel, Paracelse ou la naissance de la médecine alchimique [1970]; G. Wehr, Paracelsus (Fermenta Cognitionis, 6; Freiburg i.B., 1979), with bibl. K. Goldammer, Paracelsus in neuen Horizonten (Salzburger Beiträge zur Paracelsusforschung, 24; Vienna, 1986). K. Biegger, 'De Invocatione Beatae Mariae Virginis': Paracelsus und die Marienverehrung (Kosmosophie, 6; Stuttgart, 1990), incl. text. K. Sudhoff, Versuch einer Kritik der Echtheit der paracelsischen Schriften (1, Bibliographia Paracelsica; 2, Paracelsus-Handschriften, 1894–9). K.-H. Weimann, Paracelsus-Bibliographie 1932–1960 mit einem Verzeichnis neu entdeckter Paracelsus-Handschriften (1900–1960) (Kosmosophie, 2; Wiesbaden, 1963). W. Pagel in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 10 (1981), pp. 304–13, s.v.; J. Wicks in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 182–7, s.v.

Paraclete (Gk. παράκλητος, 'advocate'), Johannine epithet of the Holy Spirit. It is traditionally translated 'Comforter'. Though used of Christ in 1 Jn. 2: 1 and, by implication, in Jn. 14: 16, it is ordinarily applied to the Holy Spirit (Jn. 14: 16; 16: 7, etc.). *Origen interpreted the word as meaning 'Intercessor' where the reference is to the Lord, and as 'Consoler' (for the loss of Christ) where it is to the Holy Spirit. This latter meaning, though not found outside the NT, may be defended by the context, and was indeed that generally accepted by the Fathers. But it describes the mission of the Holy Spirit, which is 'to strengthen and guide the Church into all truth' less fully than the renderings 'Helper', 'Counsellor', or the *Vulgate translation 'Advocate', preferred by many modern commentators. Several scholars are in favour of simply transcribing the Greek word as was done in several ancient versions of the NT.

Many important discussions will be found in comm., ad locc. O. Betz, Der Paraklet: Fürsprecher im häretischen Spätjudentum, im Johannes-Evangelium und in neu gefundenen gnostischen Schriften (Leiden and Cologne, 1963); R. E. Brown, 'The Paraclete in the Fourth Gospel', New Testament Studies, 13 (1967), pp. 113–32; E. Franck, Revelation Taught: The Paraclete in the Gospel of John (Coniectanea Biblica, New Testament Series, 14; Lund, 1985). A. Casurella, The Johannine Paraclete in the Church Fathers (Beiträge zur Geschichte der biblischen Exegese, 25; Tübingen, 1983). J. Behm in TWNT 5 (1954), pp. 798–812 (Eng. tr., 1967, pp. 800–814), s.v. παράκλητος; J. Ashton in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 152–4, s.v., both with bibl.

Paracletice. See OCTOECHOS.

Paradigm. The title given by M. *Dibelius and other *Form critics to passages in the Gospels which contain narratives woven round a particular saying of Christ in order to drive its teaching home. They are held to have received their present literary form from their use as illustrations in preaching. They are called *Apophthegms by R. *Bultmann and *Pronouncement Stories by V. Taylor.

See bibl. to FORM CRITICISM.

paradise. The word is probably of Persian origin (Zend pairidaêza), denoting an enclosed park or pleasure-ground. It is found in the Hebrew of the OT in its primary meaning three times (Neh. 2: 8, Eccles. 2: 5 and Song of Songs 4: 13). In the LXX, in addition it occurs in Gen. 2 and 3 as the Greek rendering of the 'garden' planted by God in Eden. In later Jewish literature it came more and more to signify a state of blessedness whether material (much of the *Rabbinic literature) or spiritual (so Ecclus. 24: 25–30 and Pss. Sol. 14: 2), and with this latter meaning the word is used in the NT, where it occurs three times. In Lk. 23: 43 it has been variously interpreted as referring either to the intermediate state of the just before the Resurrection (*limbo) or as a synonym of the heaven of the blessed. In this second sense it is used in the two other NT passages, 2 Cor. 12: 4 and Rev. 2: 7. In patristic and medieval literature there was much speculation both as to the conditions of the primeval paradise and, esp. in later times, on the intermediate state and the distinction between a terrestrial and a heavenly paradise. In modern popular usage paradise usually denotes the state of future bliss. See also BEATIFIC VISION.

For 'paradise' as an architectural term see PARVIS.

H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 4 (pt. 2; 1928), pp. 1118–65; J. H. Tigay and B. J. Bamberger in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 77–85, s.v.; J. Jeremias in TWNT 5 (1954), pp. 763–71 (Eng. tr., 1967, pp. 765–73), s.v. παράδεισος. See also works cited s.v. HEAVEN.

Paradise Lost. The magnificent epic of J. *Milton (q.v.), describing the *Fall of Man and its consequences. It was the first original non-dramatic work of any importance to be written in English in blank verse. For vastness in conception and grandeur in treatment it is surpassed in modern literature only by Dante's Divina Commedia. Its theology has been thought to show traces of Milton's *Arianism and his lack of sympathy with organized religion; but its main themes are those common to the mainstream of Christian doctrine. Milton prob. did not complete it until 1667, and on 27 Apr. 1667 he disposed of the copyright for the sum of £5, with the contingency of three further instalments of the same sum if additional editions were needed.

Facsimile of 1st edn. prepared by J. Isaacs, pr. at the Golden Cockerel Press [Waltham St Lawrence], 1937. Modern edn., with full notes, by A. W. Verity (Cambridge, 1910); cf. also edns. of Milton's Poetical Works, cited s.v. MILTON, esp. that of H. Darbishire, vol. 1 (Oxford, 1952). G. McColley, Paradise Lost: An Account of its Growth and Major Origins (Chicago, 1940); C. S. *Lewis, A Preface to Paradise Lost (1942); [J. N.] D. Bush, Paradise Lost in Our Time (Ithaca, NY, 1945); J. S. Diekhoff, Milton's Paradise Lost: A Commentary on the Argument (New York, 1946). B. Rajan, Paradise Lost and the Seventeenth Century Reader (1947); A. J. A. Waldock, Paradise Lost and its Critics (1947); A. H. Gilbert, On the Composition of Paradise Lost (Chapel Hill, NC, 1947); B. A. Wright, Milton's 'Paradise Lost' (1962); C. Ricks, Milton's Grand Style (Oxford, 1963); H. [L.] Gardner, A Reading of Paradise Lost (ibid., 1965); M. Fixler, Milton and the Kingdoms of God (1964); D. H. Burden, The Logical Epic: A Study of the Argument of Paradise Lost (1967); J. M. Evans, Paradise Lost and the Genesis Tradition (Oxford, 1968); D. R. Danielson, Milton's Good God (Cambridge, 1982); J. Leonard, Naming in Paradise: Milton and the Language of Adam and Eve (Oxford, 1990); L. Newlyn, Paradise Lost and the Romantic Reader (ibid., 1993). See also works cited s.v. MILTON, JOHN.

Paragraph Bibles. In 1755 a NT arranged in paragraphs (as opposed to the usual AV practice of arrangement in verses), with a revised text, was issued by J. *Wesley. In 1838 the *Religious Tract Society published an edition with the AV text in paragraphs; and other similar editions followed. It is the arrangement adopted in the RV and most other modern translations.

Paralipomenon (Gk. παραλειπομένων, 'of the things left out'), the name by which the two Books of *Chronicles are sometimes known to RCs. It is based on the *Vulgate title, which derives from the LXX, in which, e.g. in *Codex Vaticanus, the Books of Chronicles are entitled παραλειπομένων α´ and παραλειπομένων β´ respectively, a description which implies that the Books are supplementary to 1 and 2 Kings.

parallelism, poetic. This characteristic of Hebrew poetry was first analysed by R. *Lowth in his De sacra poesi Hebraeorum (Oxford, 1753). Such parallelism is not confined to the books of the Bible but it is also an essential element in other Near Eastern literature. Hebrew parallelism is ordinarily of three kinds:

(1) Synonymous parallelism, which is the most usual form, consisting in the simple repetition of the same thought in slightly different words, e.g. 'Hear my crying, O God: Give ear unto my prayer' (Ps. 61: 1).

(2) Antithetical parallelism, produced by contrasting the first member with the second. This form is very frequent in the Bk. of Prov., e.g. 'A merry heart doeth good like a medicine: But a broken spirit drieth the bones' (Prov. 17: 22).

(3) Synthetic parallelism, in which the first member is developed or completed by a similar thought in the second (or third, in the case of triplets), e.g. 'The kings of the earth stand up: And the rulers take counsel together: Against the Lord and against His Anointed' (Ps. 2: 2).

Apart from these chief forms some commentators have claimed to find others, such as 'climactic', 'introverted', 'stairlike', and 'emblematic' parallelism, but they are in general less easily discernible.

S. *Mowinckel, Offersang og Sangoffer (1951), pp. 418–35; Eng. tr., The Psalms in Israel's Worship (Oxford, 1962), vol. 2, pp. 159–75. R. Alter, The Art of Biblical Poetry (New York [1985]; Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 3–26; J. Muilenburg in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 671–81, s.v. 'Poetry'; A. Berlin in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 155–62.

Paraphrases of Erasmus, The. The Commentary on the Gospels written by *Erasmus which *Edward VI in his *Injunctions of 1547 ordered to be set up in all parish churches 'in some convenient place' where the 'parishioners may most commodiously resort unto the same and read the same'. The section on St John's Gospel was translated into English by the Princess *Mary.

Parasceve. See PREPARATION, DAY OF.

parclose. In ecclesiastical architecture, a screen or set of railings, usually standing at the E. end of the *aisle of a church, for enclosing a *chantry altar for *requiems and one or more seats for members of the family of the deceased. After the Reformation these enclosures developed into the 'family pew'.

Pardon. (1) Another name for an '*indulgence', found, e.g., in Art. 22 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles. In the later Middle Ages the right to share in an indulgence was hawked around Europe by the 'Pardoners', denounced by G. *Chaucer, W. Langland, and J. *Wycliffe. Such Pardons were a source of great profit to the ecclesiastical authorities and were frequently used to obtain money for building purposes, as for *St Peter's, Rome, and the completion of *York Minster.

(2) In Brittany, the feast of the patron saint of a church at which an indulgence may be gained. These Pardons are held in many places between *Easter and *Michaelmas. The celebrations are preceded by Confession on the night before and start early in the morning with Mass, and much of the day is given to prayer. The most dramatic element in the proceedings is the procession round the church or village in which relics or other votive objects are carried and the pilgrims assist in their best national costumes. They are commonly accompanied by a village fair. Among the more famous Breton Pardons are those of St-Jean-du-Doigt near Morlaix (24 June) and St-Anne d'Auray in Morbihan (24 July).

Paris. The city, which is first mentioned by Caesar as 'Lutetia Parisiorum', was a centre of Christianity at a very early date. Acc. to St *Gregory of Tours, St Denis (*Dionysius (3)), its first bishop, was one of the seven bishops sent out by Pope *Fabian *c.*250, and the Christian cemetery on the road to Sens and the episcopal buildings on the Île de la Cité date from the late 3rd to early 4th cents. The Huns were diverted from Paris in 451 by the pleading of St *Geneviève, who is still venerated as the city's patroness. In 507 *Clovis made it his capital, but its importance was diminished in the 7th cent. by the instability of Merovingian rule and in the 9th cent. by the Norman invasions. It began to revive as the centre of royal authority in the 11th cent., and most strongly under Louis VI (1108–37). At this time the re-establishment of Paris was linked with the association of the Crown with the abbey of *St-Denis. The beginnings of its famous University date from the 12th cent., when *Peter Lombard taught at the Cathedral School of Notre-Dame, *Hugh and *Richard at St-Victor, and *Abelard at Ste-Geneviève. The University as an established community of masters and pupils appears at the end of the 12th cent. It was styled 'Universitas magistrorum' in 1207 and received its statutes from *Innocent III in 1215. Many privileges were bestowed on it, making it a body independent of bishops, king, and Parliament. Between 1215 and 1225 developed the so-called 'nations', Gallicani, Normanni, Picardi, and Angli (the last being replaced by the Alemanni after the Hundred Years War), and soon afterwards the four faculties of theology, law, medicine, and arts. The early 13th cent. also saw the foundation of colleges, which originally provided lodging and food for poor students; the most famous of these was the *Sorbonne. Religious lived in the houses of their orders ('studia generalia'), the *Dominicans, e.g., at St-Jacques. In the 13th cent. Paris was the chief centre of *Scholasticism, counting among its teachers the *Franciscans *Alexander of Hales and St *Bonaventure, the Dominicans St *Albert the Great and St *Thomas Aquinas, and the seculars *William of Auxerre, *Henry of Ghent and the *Averroist *Siger of Brabant. St Albert, St Bonaventure, and St Thomas took part in the great controversy between the *Mendicant orders and the seculars, who, represented esp. by William of St-Amour (d. *c.*1273), were jealous of the growing influence of the religious, in whose favour the quarrel was decided by Alexander IV in 1256. The University continued to play an important part in the time of the W. Schism and of the Reform Councils, when some of its most learned men, such as J. *Gerson and Peter *d'Ailly, favoured the Conciliar party. At the end of the 14th cent. its decadence set in, caused by the general decline of Scholasticism as well as by the Schism and the war with England, in the course of which Paris was under English occupation from 1420 to 1436. Under Francis I and *Catherine de' Medici the city became the centre of the French Renaissance, supported by its bishop, (later Cardinal) Jean du Bellay (1532–51). From 1568 to 1662 the see was occupied by the Gondi family, under whom occurred the Massacre of St *Bartholomew's Day (1572). It became an archdiocese in 1622. During the 17th cent. the city witnessed a religious regeneration brought about by the activities of St *Francis de Sales, St *Vincent de Paul, P. de *Bérulle, and J.-J. *Olier, who counteracted *Jansenism and *Gallicanism, which numbered many adherents in the capital, esp. at the University. In the 18th cent. Paris became a centre of Rationalism and '*Enlightenment'; religion suffered its most serious eclipse during the Revolutions of 1789, 1830, and 1848. In the first of these the old University was abolished; a new one was established in 1806 by the combination of the three faculties of arts, medicine, and law, but without theology, which, since 1875, has been represented by the *Institut Catholique. Under Napoleon III there was a faculty of theology supported by the state, but its degrees were not recognised by the Pope. The Orthodox Institut St-Serge (founded in 1925) has attracted a succession of distinguished Russian scholars, incl. S. *Bulgakov, V. *Lossky, and G. *Florovsky.

Paris has always been famous for its churches and monasteries. The old cathedral of St-Etienne was prob. built in the 6th cent., but in the 8th cent. its functions were taken over by *Notre-Dame. Other famous monasteries include the *Benedictine houses of *St-Germain-des-Prés, St-Denis and St-Maur-des-Fossés, the Augustinian monasteries of Ste-Geneviève and St-Victor (see VICTORINES), and the houses of Benedictine nuns, Montmartre and *Port-Royal, all of which perished in the Revolution of 1789, though the church of St-Germain-des-Prés is still an important centre of worship in Paris. Foremost among modern churches are *St-Sulpice with its 18 chapels, Notre-Dame-des-Victoires, a popular place of pilgrimage, La Madeleine, built in the form of a Greek temple, and the Sacré-Cœur on Montmartre, built in Byzantine-Romanesque style from 1875 to 1919.

See also SAINTE-CHAPELLE, SORBONNE.

Primary sources in Histoire générale de Paris: Collection des documents (65 vols., 1866–1963). M. Félibien, OSB, and G.-A. Lobineau, OSB, Histoire de la Ville de Paris (5 vols., 1725). The many modern general works incl. M. Poëte, Une vie de cité: Paris, de sa naissance à nos jours (4 vols., 1924–31); and three collections of essays in the series 'Colloques. Cahiers de civilisation', pub. under the direction of G. Michaud: Paris: Croissance d'une capitale (1961); Paris: Fonctions d'une capitale (1962); Paris: Présent et avenir d'une capitale [1964]. On the early history, M. Vieillard-Troïekouroff and others, 'Les anciennes églises suburbaines de Paris (iv^{e}–x^{e} siècles)', Paris et Ile-de-France: Mémoires publiés par la Fédération des Sociétés Historiques et Archéologiques de Paris et de l'Ile-de-France, 11 (1960), pp. 17–282; J. Dubois, OSB, 'L'emplacement des premiers sanctuaires de Paris', Journal des Savants (1968), pp. 5–44; M. Fleury, 'La Cathédrale mérovingienne Saint-Etienne de Paris', in G. Droege and others (eds.), Landschaft und Geschichte: Festschrift für Franz Petri zu seinem 65. Geburtstag (Bonn, 1970), pp. 211–21; R.-H. Bautier, 'Quand et comment Paris devint capitale', Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire de Paris et de l'Ile-de-France, 105 (for 1978; 1979), pp. 17–46; J. Boussard, Nouvelle Histoire de Paris: De la fin du siège de 885 886 à la mort de Philippe Auguste [1976]. A. Friedmann, Paris: Ses rues, ses paroisses du moyen âge à la révolution [1959].

On the University, H. [S.] *Denifle, OP, and A. Chatelain (eds.), Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis (4 vols., Paris, 1889–97); idd. and others (eds.), Auctarium Chartularii Universitatis Parisiensis (4 vols., ibid., 1894–1964). C. E. Du Boulay, Historia Universitatis Parisiensis (6 vols., ibid., 1665–73). L. Halphen and others, Aspects de l'université de Paris (1949). S. d'Irsay, Histoire des universités françaises et étrangères des origines à nos jours (2 vols., 1933–5); J. Verger (ed.), Histoire des Universités en France [Toulouse, 1986], both passim. H. *Rashdall, The Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages, 1 (ed. F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden, 1936), pp. 268–584. S. C. Ferruolo, The Origins of the University: The Schools of Paris and their critics, 1100 1215 (Stanford, Calif., 1985). P. Glorieux, Répertoire des maîtres en théologie de Paris au XIII^{e} siècle (Études de Philosophie médiévale, 16–18; 1932–4).; id., La Faculté des Arts et ses maîtres au XIII^{e} siècle (ibid. 59; 1971). G. [A.] Leff, Paris and Oxford Universities in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries (1968). L. W. B. Brockliss, French Higher Education in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Oxford, 1987), passim. S. Guenée, Bibliographie de l'Histoire des Universités françaises des Origines à la Révolution, 1 (1981), pp. 171–566.

On the ecclesiastical history, J. Lebeuf, Histoire de la ville et de tout le diocèse de Paris (15 vols., 1754–8). B. Plongeron and others, Le Diocèse de Paris (Histoire des diocèses de France, 20; 1987 ff.). P. Pisani, L'Église de Paris et la Révolution (4 vols., Bibliothèque d'histoire religieuse, 1908–11). A. Boinet, Les Églises Parisiennes (3 vols. [1958–64]).

P. Dollinger and P. Wolff, Bibliographie d'histoire des villes de France (1967), pp. 195–209. G. Goyau in CE 11 (1911), pp. 480–95, s.v. 'Paris, Archdiocese of'; P. Ferret, ibid., pp. 495–8, s.v. 'Paris, University of'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1696–959, s.v. 'Paris [Histoire]', with bibl.; cols. 1959–2074, s.v. 'Paris (La Bibliothèque Nationale)'; cols. 2074–2160, s.v. 'Paris (Manuscrits liturgiques de)'. See also works cited under FRANCE, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Paris, Matthew. See MATTHEW PARIS.

parish. In England, an area under the spiritual care of a C of E clergyman (the '*incumbent' or, in the correct meaning of the word, the 'curate'), to whose religious ministrations all its inhabitants are entitled. The incumbent, who receives his income wholly or in part from funds specially allocated to the parish, is nominated by the *patron of the benefice, and can only be removed from his cure in very exceptional cases ('freehold of the clergy'). The word comes from the Gk. παροικία, 'district', via the Late Lat. parochia. Originally the παροικία was the ecclesiastical area under the bishop (the modern 'diocese'), but from the later 4th cent. it came to be applied to the subdivisions of the diocese, which the bishop put in the charge of resident presbyters. The earliest English parishes were large territories controlled from monastic churches, mostly founded in the late 7th and 8th cents. During the 10th cent. these parishes of 'old minsters' were starting to fragment, as private manorial lords built churches on their estates and diverted to them the *tithes and parochial allegiance of their tenants. By Domesday Book (1086) England contained many thousands of these manorial churches, and the transition from a system of minster parishes to one of local parishes had largely been achieved in fact, though not in name. During the 12th cent. the parochial network crystallised as bishops applied the principles of canon law at a local level, and restricted the rights of lay patrons. The compromise reached at the Third *Lateran Council of 1179, which gave the bishop the right of institution, strengthened the incumbent against his patron, and once instituted he still preserved his freehold against his bishop.

From a very early date the English parish has also been an important unit of civil administration. Except in the N. of England, where a parish might contain more than one town, the parish and the township were normally coterminous. To meet the growth and changing distribution of population, esp. since the Industrial Revolution, many new parishes have been formed. The New Churches in London and Westminster Act 1710 provided for 50 additional parishes in London; and the Church Building Acts 1818 to 1884 and the New Parishes Acts 1843 to 1884 enabled new parishes or districts to be created by Act of Parliament. The process, however, was slow and costly. It was drastically revised by the New Parishes Measure 1943, the relevant provisions of which have now been superseded by the Pastoral Measure 1983. This provides for the establishment in every diocese of Pastoral Committees which can submit proposals to the Church Commissioners for the erection of new parishes or the alteration of existing ones, for the establishment, alteration, or termination of *team and *group ministries, and for making a church redundant, by means of a pastoral scheme or order. Such proposals, if approved, take effect on confirmation by an Order in Council. Since the abolition of Church Rates by the Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act 1868, the civil importance of the parish has much declined.

The custom of marking the boundaries by '*beating the bounds' on the *Rogation Days or *Ascension Day is still observed in some parishes.

See also ADVOWSON.

E. Stolz, 'Παροικία, parochia und parochus', Th.Q. 89 (1907), pp. 424–48; id., 'Zur Geschichte des Terminus Parochus', ibid. 95 (1913), pp. 193–203; id., 'Parochus', ibid. 106 (1926), pp. 1–8. P. de Labriolle, 'Paroccia', Rech. S.R. 18 (1928), pp. 60–72. P. D. Thomson, Parish and Parish Church: Their Place and Influence in History (Baird Lecture for 1935; 1948). G. W. O. Addleshaw, The Beginnings of the Parochial System (St Anthony's Hall Publications, 3; 1953); id., The Development of the Parochial System from Charlemagne (768–814) to Urban II (1088–1099) (ibid. 6; 1954); id., Rectors, Vicars and Patrons in Twelfth and Thirteenth Century Canon Law (ibid. 9; 1956). C. N. L. Brooke, 'Rural Ecclesiastical Institutions in England: the Search for their Origins', in Cristianizzazione ed Organizzazione Ecclesiastica delle Campagne nell'Alto Medioevo: Espansione e Resistenze, 10–16 aprile 1980 (Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 28; Spoleto, 1982), pp. 685–711. [W.] J. Blair, 'Local Churches in Domesday Book and Before', in J. C. Holt (ed.), Domesday Studies: Papers read at the Novocentenary Conference of the Royal Historical Society and the Institute of British Geographers, Winchester, 1986 (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1987), pp. 265–78. [W.] J. Blair (ed.), Ministers and Parish Churches: The Local Church in Transition, 950–1200 (Oxford University Committee for Archaeology, Monograph 17; 1988). R. Morris, Churches in the Landscape (1989). [W.] J. Blair and R. Sharpe (eds.), Pastoral Care before the Parish (Studies in the Early History of Britain; Leicester, 1992). J. C. Cox, The English Parish Church: An Account of the Chief Building Types and of their Material during Nine Centuries (1914; with additional chs. by C. B. Ford, 1935). Id., The Parish Registers of England (The Antiquary's Books, 1910). E. G. Moore, Introduction to English Canon Law (3rd edn. by T. Briden and B. Hanson, 1992), pp. 29–39.

parish clerk. The church official, either a layman or in orders, but usually the former, who in England assists the priest, chiefly by making the responses of the congregation in the services, and sometimes in reading the epistle. He also helps in the general care of the church. The office, which is known from the time of St *Augustine of Canterbury, could be held only by men of some education. Until 1921 the office was freehold, but since then the parish clerk is appointed and dismissed by the incumbent and the *Parochial Church Council acting jointly. In the old 'three-decker' pulpits, the lowest stage was assigned to the clerk.

The conditions of the appointment of (lay) parish clerks were laid down in the *Canons of 1604, can. 91; of persons in Holy Orders by the Lecturers and Parish Clerks Act 1844. The present position is governed by Canon E 3 of 1969. J. Christie, Some Account of Parish Clerks, more especially of the Ancient Fraternity (Bretherne and Sisterne) of S. Nicholas, now known as the Worshipful Company of Parish Clerks (privately pr. for the Company, 1893). J. Wickham Legg (ed.), The Clerk's Book of 1549 (HBS 25; 1903), with good general introd., pp. xvii–lxii. P. H. Ditchfield, The Parish Clerk (1907). [E. G.] C. [F.] Atchley, The Parish Clerk, and his Right to Read the Liturgical Epistle (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 4; 1903).

Parker, Joseph (1830–1902), *Congregational divine. A native of Hexham, he was for a time a *Wesleyan local preacher, but in 1852 returned to Congregationalism and became an assistant to John Campbell at the Moorfields Tabernacle in London. After ministering at Banbury (1853–8) and Manchester (1858–69), he accepted in 1869 a call to the Poultry Street Chapel, where his power and dramatic oratory in the pulpit attracted a large congregation. By 1874 he had completed the City Temple on Holborn Viaduct, and here ministered with great influence until his death. His publications include The People's Bible (25 vols., 1883–95); Ecce Deus (1867), a reply to J. R. Seeley's Ecce Homo; A Preacher's Life (1899), autobiographical; and many volumes of sermons. Throughout his life he was a strong advocate of *temperance.

Lives by A. Dawson (London, 1901), W. Adamson (Glasgow and London, 1902), and G. H. Pike (London, 1904). A. Gordon in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 71–3, with further refs.

Parker, Matthew (1504–75), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he was elected a Fellow in 1527, Parker soon identified himself with the groups of moderate reformers. Initially through the patronage of *Anne Boleyn, he received several preferments under *Henry VIII and *Edward VI, and in the latter reign took advantage of the permission to the clergy to marry. Under *Mary he was deprived, and lived in obscurity till 1559, when *Elizabeth I chose him for the vacant archbishopric of Canterbury. After accepting it with much reluctance, he was consecrated at *Lambeth Palace on 17 Dec. 1559 by four bishops who had held sees in Edward VI's reign. His main objects as primate were to preserve the settlement of 1559 from further change and to retain as far as possible the links with the past. To this end he took part in the issue of the *Thirty-Nine Articles and of the '*Bishops' Bible', and published in 1566 his '*Advertisements' on ritual matters, which commanded, inter alia, the use of the *surplice. Henceforward he had to face considerable opposition from the Puritan party, which embodied its aims in the Admonition to Parliament (1572). Parker was a wise and tolerant, though hardly a forceful, archbishop, preferring scholarship to controversy. He issued editions of the works of many medieval chroniclers, among them Matthew of Westminster (1567–70), *Matthew Paris (1571), and Thomas of Walsingham (1574). The most considerable of his own writings was his De Antiquitate Britannicae Ecclesiae et Privilegiis Ecclesiae Cantuariensis cum Archiepiscopis eiusdem 70 (1572). A large collection of the MSS collected by or for him survives in the library of his college at Cambridge.

Correspondence from 1535 to 1575 ed. J. Bruce and T. T. Perowne (*Parker Society, 1853). Episcopal Register transcribed by E. M. Thompson and ed., with introd., by W. H. *Frere (*Canterbury and York Society, 35, 36, 39; 1928–33). A Florilegium Patristicum in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, compiled by M. *Bucer, with material added by Parker, is ed. by P. Fraenkel in Bucer's Opera Latina, 3 (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 41; Leiden, 1988). The primary authority is the Life by J. *Strype (London, 1711). V. J. K. Brook, A Life of Archbishop Parker (Oxford, 1962). W. Haugaard, Elizabeth and the English Reformation (Cambridge, 1968), passim. Matthew Parker's Legacy [Exhibition Catalogue of his MSS, printed books, and plate in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge] (Cambridge, 1975). J. B. Mullinger in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 254–64; W. H. Frere in DECH, pp. 445 f. See also bibl. to ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS and other works cited under ELIZABETH I.

Parker, Theodore (1810–60), American *Unitarian preacher and reformer. The son of a New England farmer, he graduated at Harvard in 1836. Here he taught himself many oriental languages and began a translation of W. M. L. *de Wette's Einleitung in das Alte Testament (pub. 1843). In 1837 he was ordained first pastor of the parish (Unitarian) church in W. Roxbury, Mass. By 1841 he had come to hold much more liberal views than those of Unitarian orthodoxy and his associates consequently denounced him. In his Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion (1842) he maintained that the permanent essence of Christianity was the moral influence of Jesus and that belief in miracles was unnecessary. The work, which was widely read, won him some new followers esp. in Europe (among them J. *Martineau), but confirmed the orthodox Unitarians in their distrust of him. From 1845 till his death he ministered to a congregation at Boston, Mass. He became a fervent advocate of *temperance, prison reform, and education for women, and the leader in Boston of the Anti-Slavery Crusade.

Collected works ed. F. P. Cobbe (14 vols., London, 1863–71); also, better edn., but still incomplete, 15 vols., Boston, 1907–13. J. Myerson, Theodore Parker: A Descriptive Bibliography (New York and London, 1981). Lives by J. Weiss (New York, 1864), O. B. Frothington (Boston, 1874), J. W. Chadwick (ibid., 1900), H. S. Commager (ibid., 1936; 2nd edn., 1947), and R. C. Albrecht (New York [1971]). J. E. Dirks, The Critical Theology of Theodore Parker (ibid., 1948).

Parker Society. A society established in 1840 under the leadership of the Earl of *Shaftesbury and some other prominent *Evangelicals, including Edward *Bickersteth of the *CMS, to issue 'the works of the Fathers and early writers of the Reformed Church'. Its publications include editions of the works and letters of M. *Parker (from whom it took its name), T. *Cranmer, J. *Jewel, and others. Like the contemporary '*Library of the Fathers' (q.v.) and 'Library of Anglo-Catholic Theology' (1841 ff.), of which it was a kind of Protestant counterpart, these publications were of great service to historical and theological learning.

Parochial Church Council. A council set up in every parish in the C of E by the Church of England Assembly (Powers) Act 1919 to give the laity a share in parochial administration. Its functions were originally defined by the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure 1921, passed under that Act, and the law has now been consolidated by the Parochial Church Councils (Powers) Measure 1956 as subsequently amended. At an annual parochial church meeting the qualified electors in every parish elect lay representatives to the Council, which also includes the incumbent and any clergy, deaconess, or stipendiary lay worker licensed in the parish, the churchwardens, and any lay members of a Deanery or Diocesan Synod, or the General Synod. It must meet at least four times a year. Its primary duty is 'to co-operate with the incumbent in promoting in the parish the whole mission of the Church, pastoral, evangelistic, social and ecumenical'. Most of the powers formerly possessed by the vestry and the churchwardens which relate to the financial affairs of the church, as well as the maintenance of its fabric and ornaments, have been transferred to the Parochial Church Council.

K. M. Macmorran, A Handbook for Churchwardens and Church Councillors (1921; rev. as A Handbook for Churchwardens and Parochial Church Councillors by K. M. Macmorran, K. J. T. Elphinstone, E. G. Moore, and T. J. Briden, 1986).

Paroissien. The name for various prayer-books in the vernacular designed for the use of the laity which have been published in France since the 17th cent. They usually contain, besides private devotional exercises, a considerable amount of liturgical matter, such as translations of the *Masses and *Vespers for Sundays and feasts, as well as the Holy Week services, often together with the proper musical notation. Though lineally descended from the medieval *Primers, the popularity of the Paroissien in the 17th cent. was chiefly inspired by the desire for vernacular forms of worship.

Parousia (Gk. παρουσία, 'presence' or 'arrival'). In its English form, the word is employed (following 1 Cor. 15: 23 and Mt. 24, etc.) to denote particularly the future return of Christ in glory (later called the 'Second Coming') to judge the living and the dead, and to terminate the present world order. Primitive Christianity believed the event to be imminent and this belief has been revived from time to time in the history of the Church. The prevailing Christian tradition, while maintaining that the Lord's words attest the certainty of a final *General Judgement which will mark the end of the present order and the entry of redeemed humanity into the resurrection-life in heaven, has been opposed to speculation as to the exact time and manner of the Coming (cf. Mk. 13: 32). It is believed that in the Judgement humanity will be confronted by the risen and glorified Christ. The supposition that Christ, when He returned, would first reign for a long period on earth (the *Millennium, q.v.) was held in some early Christian circles, but it has not been generally followed.

A. L. Moore, The Parousia in the New Testament (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 13; 1966), with bibl. A. Oepke in TWNT 5 (1954), pp. 856–69 (Eng. tr., 1967, pp. 858–71), s.v. παρουσία, πάρειμι; A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 1331–419, s.v. 'Parousie', with extensive bibl. C. [C.] Rowland in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 166–70, s.v. See also bibl. to ESCHATOLOGY.

parson. Properly, the holder of an ecclesiastical benefice who has full possession of its rights, i.e. a *rector. This use was general until the 17th cent., e.g. E. *Stillingfleet wrote in a charge of 1691: 'A vicar cannot appoint a vicar, but a parson may.' Its current use for any (esp. C of E) clergyman has now completely superseded its orig. sense.

The ecclesiastical use of the Lat. persona appears to date from the 11th cent., e.g. Council of *Clermont (1095), can. 3. Acc. to English legal writers (E. Coke, W. Blackstone) it derives from the view of the parson as the legal 'person' by whom the property of God (or of the Patron Saint or of the church) in the *parish was actually held; he was the person to sue or to be sued. C. D. *Du Cange, however, derives the usage from persona as equivalent to dignitas, meaning a 'personage' or 'dignitary', while H. Schaefer (Pfarrkirche und Stift im deutschen Mittelalter, 1903, para. 19), pointing out that persona was most frequently used of an absentee rector, often a layman, has suggested that the word is to be deduced from the use of persona as a role. The civil law sense seems the most likely origin of the English usage.

Parsons, Robert (1546–1610), also 'Persons', *Jesuit missionary. After holding a Fellowship at Balliol College, Oxford (1568–74), Parsons left England and was received into the RC Church at Louvain; and in 1575 became a Jesuit at Rome. Chosen with E. *Campion to lead the Jesuit Mission to England in 1580, he was soon (1581) forced to flee to the Continent, where he spent the rest of his life. His diplomatic ability made him a trusted counsellor of Popes and other Catholic rulers (esp. *Philip II of Spain); he negotiated for political intervention on behalf of the persecuted English RCs, and this earned him the particular hatred of the English government. Though his political efforts bore little fruit, his ideas played a major part in shaping A Conference about the Next Succession to the Crown of England ('1594' [1595]), which, despite *Elizabeth I's total ban on discussion, raised publicly the urgent problem of finding a Catholic successor, and the principles involved therein. Its plea for the rights of subjects led to its being reprinted in England in 1648 and 1681. Though Parsons was a skilled and trenchant controversialist, both against Anglicans and against opponents within the RC community, the most influential of his numerous published writings was a spiritual treatise, The Christian Directory (1582), which was adapted by E. Bunny and reprinted over 40 times before 1640 in England. His most enduring achievement was his work for education, notably his government of the *English College, Rome (1597–1610), and a major part in the foundation of the English Colleges at Valladolid, Seville, and *St-Omer.

'Memoirs', ed. by J. H. Pollen, SJ, in Catholic Record Society Publications, 2 (1906), pp. 1–161, and 4 (1907), pp. 1–161; 'Letters and Memorials', ed. L. Hicks, SJ, 1 [to 1588], ibid. 39 (1942). Id., 'Father Robert Persons S.J. and The Book of Succession', Recusant History, 4 (1958), pp. 104–37. J. E. Parish, Robert Parsons and the English Counter-Reformation (Rice University Srudies, 52, no. 1; Houston, Tex., 1966). F. Eguiluz, Robert Persons 'El Architraidor': Su vida y su obra (1546–1610) (1990). J. Bossy, 'The Heart of Robert Persons', in T. M. McCoog, SJ (ed.), The Reckoned Expense (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1996), pp. 141–58. See also pp. 159–77. Pre-1641 edns. of his works listed in A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, 'A Catalogue of Catholic Books in English . . .', Biographical Studies, 3 (1956), pp. 245–52 (nos. 611–42); idd., The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 120–23 (nos. 871–99). Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 654 f. T. G. Law in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 411–18. See also bibl. to ALLEN, W.

Particular Baptists. The group of Baptists whose theology was essentially *Calvinistic as contrasted with the *Arminianism of the *General Baptists. Their polity was similar to that of the *Independents, but a considerable place was given to 'associations' of local Churches. The first Particular Baptist community in England was established at Southwark from 1633 onwards. In 1891 the General Baptists of the New Connexion joined the Baptist Union which had been formed among the Particular Baptists.

Particular Judgement. In Catholic theology, the judgement on each individual soul immediately on its separation from the body. It is thus prior to and quite distinct from the *General Judgement (q.v.) on the Last Day. In the bull 'Benedictus Deus' (1336) *Benedict XII upheld the teaching that the Particular Judgement admits the soul at once either to the *Beatific Vision, to *purgatory, or to *hell, thus excluding an intermediate state of sleep or partial happiness or suffering between the day of death and the final resurrection of the body, such as had been envisaged by certain older theologians, e.g. St *Justin, *Tertullian, and St *Ambrose. The chief scriptural evidence for the doctrine is found in the Parable of Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16: 19) and in Christ's words to the penitent thief (Lk. 23: 43). There is no universally accepted teaching as regards the circumstances of the Particular Judgement, but acc. to the common opinion of Catholic theologians, it occurs at the time of death and consists in an interior illumination which makes known to the separated soul its state in relation to God.

parvis (Fr., from Lat. paradisus). Originally the court in front of a cathedral or other large church, esp. when, as at *St Peter's, Rome, surrounded by a colonnade. The word came to be also used of the portico of a church porch. In modern times it is often erroneously applied to the room over such a porch, apparently through a misunderstood reference in F. Blomefield's Norfolk (2, p. 748; *c.*1744), which mentions a school kept in the parvis of St Martin's Church, Norwich, in 1300.

OED (2nd edn.), 9 (1989), p. 285, s.v.

Pascal, Blaise (1623–62), French scientist, polemicist, and Christian apologist. He was born at Clermont-Ferrand, and after the death of his mother when he was 4, was educated privately by his father together with his two sisters, Gilberte, his first biographer (b. 1620; in 1641 she married her cousin, Florin Périer) and Jacqueline (b. 1625). He showed great precocity, and engaged in various mathematical and physical experiments from an early age. He came into contact with the *Jansenists at Rouen in 1646 (his 'first conversion'), and later entered into direct communication with *Port-Royal, although he was never formally to become a 'solitaire'. In 1651 his father died, and shortly afterwards Jacqueline entered the convent of Port-Royal. Pascal continued his scientific pursuits (defending notably the possibility of the vacuum) and frequented the fashionable society of Paris. On 23 Nov. 1654 his 'definitive conversion' took place, when he discovered the 'God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, the God of Jacob, and not of the philosophers and men of science'; at the time he made a record of the experience (the 'Mémorial') which he carried on his person for the rest of his life. From 1655 he was a frequent visitor at Port-Royal-des-Champs. He was in bad health from 1658 until his death.

The condemnation of A. *Arnauld by the Sorbonne in 1655 promoted his famous attack on the *Jesuits in the Lettres écrites à un provincial, commonly known as the 'Lettres Provinciales' (18 in all). The first was printed on 23 Jan. 1656, the rest followed shortly afterwards (1656–7). The first four and the last two were directly concerned with the immediate issue, which they identified satirically as being a purely personal quarrel. The remaining 12, attacking the Jesuit theories of grace (*Molinism) and moral theology (*Probabilism), were intended to expose the immoral character of casuistry and to oppose to it the rigorist morality of the Jansenists, with its aim of restoring the disciplinary practices and austerity of the primitive Church. The work was condemned by the Congregation of the *Index in 1657 but continued to provoke violent controversy. The literary history of the Pensées begins with the publication in 1670 of selections from the notes left at his death towards a Christian apology; the fragments have subsequently been frequently re-edited and a wide variety of possible arrangements proposed. The work had been intended as a vindication of the truth of Christianity against the indifference of free-thinking contemporaries; rather than depending on philosophical reasoning it seeks to persuade of the unique applicability of Christianity to the human condition as the apologist portrays it. Apart from its brilliant style, it owes its force to the wealth of psychological perception which it embodies.

Pascal's religion was centred on the person of Christ as Saviour and based on his own experience. Here, as in his scientific investigations, his thought was deeply influenced by his interest in empirical knowledge. Nourished on the *Augustinianism of Port-Royal, he stressed man's tragic situation between greatness and wretchedness, to escape from which he plunges into distractions. From this state only faith can free him, since human existence is confronted with the necessity of making a decision for or against God. The element of risk in the adoption of belief (encapsulated in the notorious 'wager' argument), and an emphasis on the heart and custom are characteristic of Pascal, who confesses that 'the heart has its reasons of which reason knows not'. He does not, however, thereby exclude the use of reasoned argument, and in particular biblical proofs, from demonstrating the truth of Christianity. Pascal was ridiculed by *Voltaire and the *Encyclopaedists of the 18th cent., but in the 19th cent. there came a revival of interest, which continues.

The standard edn. of Pascal's Œuvres complètes is still that of L. C. Brunschvicg, F. Boutroux and F. Gazier (14 vols., Grands Ecrivains de la France, Paris, 1904–14); modern edn. by J. Mesnard (Bruges, 1964 ff.). There is also a convenient edn. by L. Lafuma (Paris, 1963). Good edns. of the Pensées by L. Lafuma (3 vols., ibid., 1951; Eng. tr. by A. J. Krailsheimer, Penguin Classics, 1966) and P. Sellier (Paris, 1976); and of the Lettres Provinciales by L. Cognet (ibid. [1965]; Eng. tr. by A. J. Krailsheimer, Penguin Classics, 1967) and M. Le Guern (Paris, 1987). Photographic repr. of the original MS of the Pensées, with introd. by L. Lafuma, Paris, 1962. The large lit. incl.: J. Russier, La Foi selon Pascal (Bibliothèque de philosophie contemporaine, 2 vols., 1949); J. Mesnard, Les Pensées de Pascal [1976]; J. H. Broome, Pascal (London, 1965); J. Miel, Pascal and Theology (Baltimore and London [1969]); P. Sellier, Pascal et Saint Augustin (1970); A. W. S. Baird, Studies in Pascal's Ethics (International Archives of the History of Ideas, series minor, 16; The Hague, 1975); H. M. Davidson, The Origins of Certainty: Means and Meaning in Pascal's 'Pensées' (Chicago, 1979); D. Wetsel, L'Écriture et le Reste: The Pensées of Pascal in the Exegetical Tradition of Port-Royal (Columbus, Oh. [1981]); R. Parish, Pascal's Lettres Provinciales: A Study in Polemic (Oxford, 1989); V. Carraud, Pascal et la Philosophie [1992]. Introductory studies by A. [J.] Krailsheimer, Pascal (Past Masters; Oxford, 1980) and J. Cruickshank, Pascal: Pensées (Critical Guides to French Texts, 24; 1983). J. Mesnard in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 279–91, s.v. See also bibl. to PORT-ROYAL.

Pasch (Aram. פַּסְחָא, Gk. πάσχα, 'passover'). A name formerly in fairly wide currency in England both for the Jewish *Passover and for the Christian festival of *Easter (qq.v.). See also PASSION.

Paschal II (d. 1118), Pope from 1099. Ranierus, who was prob. born at Bleda in the Romagna, entered an unknown monastery as a boy. He was made cardinal priest of San Clemente by *Gregory VII, served as legate in France and Spain under *Urban II, and became Abbot of *St Paul's outside the Walls in Rome. As Pope he renewed the Papal decrees against lay investiture in 1102, but died leaving the *Investiture Controversy still unsettled. By 1107 compromises had been reached with the kings of England and France, but with the Empire no settlement could yet be reached. Paschal supported the rebellion of the future Emp. Henry V against the latter's father *Henry IV, but Henry V in his turn practised investiture, and Paschal opposed him at successive councils; that of Troyes (1107) declared deposed those bishops who received investiture from laymen. At Rome in Feb. 1111 Paschal agreed to the renunciation by bishops of all regalia acquired since *Charlemagne, and Henry in return agreed to renounce investiture. This far-reaching proposal offended vested interests and was abortive; Henry took Paschal prisoner and at Ponte Mammolo (12 Apr. 1111) extorted concessions by which Paschal promised to forgive injuries, to grant investiture, and to crown Henry. This treaty aroused indignation, esp. among more advanced reformers; it was declared null and void by a council at Rome in 1112 and formally condemned by Paschal in 1116. Paschal took refuge from Henry at Benevento in 1117 and died at Rome on his return in January 1118.

Paschal maintained the links between *Cluny and the Papacy, and his councils at the Lateran and elsewhere, esp. Guastalla (1106), enacted important canons. On the other hand, the support which he gave to *Bohemond I's attack on the Eastern Emp. Alexius in 1107–8 caused bitter resentment in Byzantium. His pontificate leaves a mixed impression on historians, some of whom have thought him intransigent and even visionary but others inactive and inept. He has been thought lacking in leadership and consistency of purpose—a Pope who preferred to follow in the shadow of Gregory VII and Urban II rather than to meet new, 12th-cent., needs.

His Register has not survived; collection of letters in J. P. Migne, PL 163. 31–448. Jaffé, 1, pp. 702–72. LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 296–310. C. Servatius, Paschalis II. (1099 1118): Studien zu seiner Person und seiner Politik (Päpste und Papsttum, 14; Stuttgart, 1979). U.-R. Blumenthal, The Early Councils of Pope Paschal II 1100–1110 (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 43; 1978). G. M. Cantarella, Ecclesiologia e politica nel papato di Pasquale II: Linee di una interpretazione (Istituto storico italiano per il medio evo, Studi storici, 131; 1982) and other works of this author. J. G. Rowe, 'Pascal II, Bohemond of Antioch and the Byzantine Empire', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 49 (1967), pp. 165–202. M. J. Wilks, 'Ecclesiastica and Regalia: Papal investiture policy from the Council of Guastalla to the First Lateran Council, 1106–23', Studies in Church History, 7 (1971), pp. 69–85. Mann, 8 (1910), pp. 1–119. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1944), pp. 338–75, with bibl.; É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2057–74, s.v. 'Pascal II'. See also bibl. to INVESTITURE CONTROVERSY and HENRY IV.

Paschal Baylon, St (1540–92), *Franciscan lay brother. The son of peasant parents, he was born at Torre Hermosa, on the borders of Castile and Aragon, on Whitsunday 1540, and christened 'Pascua' after the feast. From his 7th to his 24th year he minded his father's sheep, leading a life of austerity and prayerfulness which was graced (it is recorded) by various miracles. In obedience to a vision he entered the neighbouring convent of the Franciscans of the Alcantarine reform where he practised extreme mortification. Throughout his life he was particularly devoted to the cult of the Blessed Sacrament. During a mission to *France he defended the doctrine of the *Real Presence at the risk of his life, and was roughly handled by the *Calvinists. He was canonized in 1690 and on 28 Nov. 1897 he was declared by *Leo XIII in the apostolic epistle 'Providentissimus Deus' (not to be confused with the encyclical of 1893 on the study of Scripture with the same title) patron of *Eucharistic Congresses and Associations. He is usually depicted in the act of adoration before the Host. Feast day, 17 May.

J. Sala, OFM (ed.), Opúsculos de S. Pascual Bailón (Toledo, 1911), with useful introd. The primary authorities are the Sp. Chronicon del B. Fray P. Baylon de la Orden del P. S. Francisco by his friend J. Ximénez, Valencia, 1601, and the account written in connection with his canonization by C. de Arta (It. tr., Venice, 1673). Lat. tr. of abstracts of these pr. in AASS, Mai 4 (1685), pp. 49–132. Modern studies by L. A. de Porrentruy, OMC (Paris, 1899), and A. Groeteken, OFM (Einsiedeln, 1909). P. M. Mansuy, OFM, Le Patron des congrès et des œuvres eucharistiques, saint Pascal Baylon (2nd edn., 1910). M. Acebal Luján, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 275–8, s.v. 'Pascal Baylon'.

Paschal Candle. In the W. Church, the candle placed on a separate large candlestick in the N. side of the sanctuary which is lighted, esp. at liturgical functions, during Eastertide. During the *Paschal Vigil Service, after the blessing of the New Fire, the celebrant marks the candle with the sign of the Cross, the Greek letters *alpha and omega, and the date of the year, inserts five grains of incense in the cross, and then lights the candle from the New Fire. Since 1970 a simple blessing of the candle may be substituted. The deacon carries the lighted candle through the church, making three stations during which he sings 'Lumen Christi' ('Light of Christ'). When the deacon and celebrant reach the sanctuary, all the lights in the church are lit and the *Exultet is sung. The Paschal Candle is lit during services in Eastertide. It was formerly extinguished after the Gospel on *Ascension Day, but acc. to current RC practice, it remains in use in the sanctuary until the evening of *Whitsunday, when it is taken to the baptistery and lighted at all Baptisms throughout the year.

U. Berlière, OSB, 'Le Cierge pascal', Le Messager des Fidèles (later Rev. Bén.), 5 (1888), pp. 106–16; H. P. Feasey, OSB, 'The Paschal Candle', Ecclesiastical Review, 34 (1906), pp. 353–71; id., 'The Paschal Preconium', ibid. 36 (1907), pp. 248–61; H. J. Heuser, 'The Tenebrae and the New Light of the Holy Fire', ibid., pp. 225–31. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1559–71, s.v. 'Pâques'. See also bibl. to EXULTET.

Paschal Chronicle. See CHRONICON PASCHALE.

Paschal Controversies. Among the many controversies in the early Church over the complex question as to how to settle the date of *Easter (the Christian 'Passover' or 'Pasch') were:

(1) Whether Easter should be observed, after the Jewish manner, on a fixed day of the lunar month (14 *Nisan) or always on (the following) Sunday. The former practice was the ancient tradition in Asia Minor. On this dispute, see QUARTODECIMANISM.

(2) The divergences arising from the *Antiochene and *Alexandrian methods of determining the 'Paschal Moon', the Antiochenes being content to accept the Jewish reckoning, whereas at Alexandria an independent calculation was made. Acc. to Alexandrian practice, Easter was always put after the vernal equinox. The decision at *Nicaea (325) in favour of Alexandrian practice was generally accepted, except by a small group of schismatics (*Audiani, Protopaschites).

(3) Differences in the 4th and 5th cents. between the Roman and Alexandrian methods of computation, through the use of divergent 'paschal cycles', Alexandria having long accepted the *Anatolian 19-year cycle, whereas Rome used an older 84-year cycle. Further, while the Alexandrians allowed Easter to be kept on the 15th of the (lunar) month if a Sunday, it was never observed at Rome before the 16th; also the latest date for keeping Easter at Alexandria was 25 Apr., but at Rome 21 Apr. Such differences were mostly amicably resolved, usually in the Alexandrians' favour, as, e.g. in 455, when Pope *Leo I, after some correspondence, accepted their calculation. The Alexandrian method increasingly prevailed in the W.; it was accepted at Milan at least by 387 (cf. St *Ambrose, Ep. 23) and was formally adopted at Rome in the Easter cycle compiled by *Dionysius Exiguus (525).

(4) Until the time of *Charlemagne (c.742–814), considerable uncertainty existed in Gaul, owing to the adoption of Victorius of Aquitaine's Paschal Tables (drawn up in Rome in 457, but never much used in the City) with their cycle of 532 years.

(5) The possession by the Celtic Churches of their own method of computation led to a long quarrel in the British Isles after the arrival of the Roman missionaries. As late as 651 Queen Eanfleda, who followed the Roman rule, was keeping *Palm Sunday and fasting on the same day that her husband, Oswiu, King of Northumbria, was celebrating Easter (*Bede, HE 3. 25). The Roman custom was accepted for Northumbria by the Synod of *Whitby (664), and through the whole of England by the guidance of St *Wilfrid (ibid. 3. 28) and Abp. *Theodore (ibid. 4. 2).

With the introduction of the *Gregorian Calendar (1582), Easter was once again observed on divergent dates in different parts of Christendom. Easter calculated acc. to the Alexandrian method based on the Gregorian Calendar is nearly always astronomically correct (i.e. it falls on the Sunday following the full moon after the vernal equinox, though never on the day of the full moon itself); the Orthodox Churches, even though most of them have adopted the Gregorian Calendar for fixed feasts, still calculate Easter acc. to the Julian Calendar, and, as their calculation of the Paschal full moon is five days later than the astronomical full moon, their Easter sometimes coincides with the W. date, but is often one, four, or five weeks later.

B. Krusch, Studien zur christlich-mittelalterlichen Chronologie: Der 84-jährige Ostercyclus und seine Quellen (1880). L. *Duchesne, 'La Question de la Pâque au concile de Nicée', RQH 28 (1880), pp. 1–42. J. Schmid, Die Osterfrage auf dem ersten allgemeinen Konzil von Nicäa (Vienna, 1905). E. *Schwartz, Christliche und jüdische Ostertafeln (Abh. (Gött.), NF 8, Heft 6; 1905). Useful survey by C. W. Jones in his introd. to his edn. of Bede's Opera de Temporibus (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 41; 1943), pp. 3–122. V. Grumel, AA, 'Le Problème de la date pascale aux III^{e} et IV^{e} siècles', Revue des Études Byzantines, 18 (1960), pp. 163–78. A. Strobel, Ursprung und Geschichte des frühchristlichen Osterkalenders (TU 121; 1977). Id., Texte zur Geschichte des frühchristlichen Osterkalenders (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, 64; 1984). M. Zelzer, 'Zum Osterfestbrief des heiligen Ambrosius und zur römischen Osterfestberechnung des 4. Jahrhunderts', Wiener Studien, NF 12 (1978), pp. 187–204. G. Fritz in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1948–70, s.v. 'Pâques, Les Controverses pascales'. See bibl. to EASTER and QUARTODECIMANISM.

Paschal lamb. Originally, the lamb eaten at the Jewish *Passover. The lambs were sacrificed in the *Temple on the afternoon of 14 *Nisan, then taken by the people to their homes and eaten during the night (cf. Exod. 12). The fulfilment of the Jewish Passover in Christ (cf. 1 Cor. 5: 7, 'Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us'; Jn. 1: 29, 'Behold the Lamb of God') has made Him for Christians the 'Paschal Lamb'. See also LAMB.

Paschaltide, the period in the ecclesiastical year immediately after *Easter. It is devoted to the celebration of the victory of the Risen Christ, who by His Passion has overcome sin and death and brought the Church into existence. In the W. the liturgy is characterized by the frequent recitation of *Alleluia, and there are certain other features peculiar to the season, such as the singing of *Vidi Aquam in place of Ps. 51 during the *Asperges. The proper colour for Paschaltide is white. In the RC Church it extends from Easter Sunday to *Pentecost; the C of E follows the practice, dating from the Middle Ages, of reckoning Eastertide from Easter Sunday to the Saturday before *Trinity Sunday. See also PENTECOST.

Paschal Vigil Service, the principal celebration of *Easter, traditionally observed during the night of *Holy Saturday/Easter Sunday. In the 2nd cent. there is clear evidence that there was a single festival celebrating both the Passion and the Resurrection of Christ, and the same situation is prob. reflected in various NT passages (e.g. 1 Cor. 5: 7 f.). The Peri Pascha of *Melito of Sardis supports the suggestion that this unitary feast developed out of a Christianized observance of the Jewish *Passover ritual. By the time of *Tertullian (d. c.225) the observance lasted throughout the night and was closely associated with *Baptism, an association prob. already discernible in Rom. 6. The elaborate description of the rite of Baptism in *Hippolytus' Apostolic Tradition is almost certainly that of a Paschal Vigil Service, in which the Baptism at cockcrow is followed by the Eucharist. In the 4th cent., with the development of the liturgical year and the separate observance of *Good Friday, the main emphasis of the Paschal Vigil Service came to centre upon the Resurrection. The *Paschal Candle, with its symbolism of light, was introduced in Italy (apart from Rome) about the same time, and later spread to Gaul. In the W. Church the service was put back to the Saturday afternoon in the 10th cent. and to the Saturday morning in the 14th, thereby losing the point of much of its symbolism. Only with the revision of the Holy Week liturgy in the RC Church in 1951 was the Paschal Vigil Service restored to the late evening of Holy Saturday.

The Paschal Vigil Service has been subjected to various modifications through the ages, but the basic pattern has remained. Acc. to the present RC rite, the celebrant blesses the New Fire outside the church, marks the Paschal Candle with the sign of the Cross, the Greek letters *alpha and omega, and the date of the year, and then lights it from the New Fire. (Since 1970 a simpler blessing of the Candle has been permitted.) The deacon (or in his absence the celebrant) carries the lighted Candle through a darkened church, making three stations during which he sings 'Lumen Christi' ('Light of Christ'); candles held by members of the congregation are lit from the Paschal Candle. When the procession reaches the sanctuary the lights in the church are lit. The deacon then sings the *Exultet, after which the people's candles are laid aside. Nine scriptural readings normally follow, interspersed with responsorial Psalms or periods of silence. Of the seven OT readings the first three record the story of creation, *Abraham's sacrifice of *Isaac, and the crossing of the Red Sea during the *Exodus; the other four are prophecies of redemption. (Some may be omitted.) The NT readings are the passage about Christ's resurrection and our Baptism in Rom. 6: 3–11, followed by a solemn *Alleluia, and one of the Gospel accounts of the Resurrection. A homily is then delivered. The next part of the service is connected with Baptism and normally takes place round the *font, to which a procession is made behind the Paschal Candle. During the procession the *Litany of the Saints is sung. The baptismal water is then blessed; during the blessing the Paschal Candle is lowered into the water and raised again. Baptism is administered to any candidates and if a bishop (or priest with a faculty to *confirm) is present, any newly baptized adults are confirmed. (If there are no candidates for Baptism, it is permitted to use a simple blessing of the water.) All present then renew their baptismal vows in answer to questions put by the celebrant, who sprinkles the people with the newly blessed water. The service concludes with the remaining parts of the Easter Eucharist, during which the newly baptized make their Communion. A form of Paschal Vigil Service (closely modelled on the current RC rite) was included in the Services and Prayers for Lent, Holy Week, and Easter commended by the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the C of E in 1986.

In the Byzantine rite the Paschal Vigil properly begins with *Vespers on Holy Saturday, which ends with 15 readings from the OT, similar to those in the W. rite. The Eucharist is then celebrated, the Liturgy of St *Basil being used, with Rom. 6: 3–11 and Mt. 28: 1–20 as the NT readings. These services are meant to begin late in the afternoon of Holy Saturday, but like most of those in Lent and Holy Week, are usually anticipated and celebrated in the morning. What is usually thought of as the Orthodox Easter Vigil consists of Mattins (beginning at midnight) and the Liturgy of Easter Day; it is preceded by the Midnight Office.

For bibliography see EASTER.

Paschasinus (*c.*440), Bp. of Lilybaeum (now Marsala) in Sicily. Pope *Leo the Great assisted him when his diocese was devastated by the Vandals. When asked by Leo his opinion in the *Paschal Controversy, he replied in favour of the Alexandrian as against the Roman usage. In 451 he was one of the Papal legates at the Council of *Chalcedon, where he vigorously objected to the presence of *Dioscorus. Nothing is known about him after the Council.

The chief source is his correspondence with Leo ('Leo', Ep. 3, 'De Paschate anni 444' and Leo, Ep. 88) and scattered references in the Acta of Chalcedon (q.v.).

Paschasius Radbertus, St (*c.*790–*c.*860), *Carolingian theologian. He entered the monastery at *Corbie under its abbot, Adalard, whom he accompanied into Saxony in 822. Elected abbot 843/4, he attended the Council of Paris in 847, but resigned in 849 and henceforth devoted himself entirely to study. His works include, besides a Life of Abbot Adalard, a Commentary on the Book of Lamentations, notable for its concentration on the literal sense, and a Commentary on St Matthew, in which he made careful use of earlier authorities. He is best known, however, for his treatise 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' (831/33, revised 844), which was composed for the monks of Corvey in Saxony. This work is the first doctrinal monograph on the Eucharist. In maintaining the real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist, Radbertus specified it further as the flesh born of Mary, which had suffered on the Cross and risen again, and which is miraculously multiplied by the omnipotence of God at each consecration. At the same time he insisted on the spiritual mode of this Presence, but without defining it. By eating this flesh the faithful are incorporated into Christ's mystical Body, which is the Church. Radbertus's doctrine was sharply attacked by *Ratramnus and *Rabanus Maurus, who opposed to his emphatic realism, which was sometimes marred by unfortunate comparisons and illustrations, their more spiritual conceptions of the Divine presence. It is now generally accepted that he was the author of Pseudo-*Jerome's ep. 9, 'Cogitis me', an important document in the history of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM in the W. Feast day, 26 Apr.

Collection of his works ed. J. *Sirmond, SJ (Paris, 1618); repr. with additional works from other sources in J. P. Migne, PL 120. Crit. edns. of his Poems by L. Traube in MGH, Poetae, 3 (1896), pp. 38–53, with further notes, pp. 746 f.; of various 'Epistolae' (incl. extracts of his works) by E. Duemmler, ibid., Epistolae, 6 (1925), pp. 133–49; and of his 'Epitaphium Arsenii' by id. (Abh. (Berl.), aus den Jahren 1899 und 1900 (1900), Heft 2); of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by B. Paulus, OSB (CCCM 16; 1969), and of his comm. on Mt. by id. (ibid. 56, 56 A, and 56 B; 1984); on Lam. by id. (ibid. 85; 1988); and on Ps. 44 by id. (ibid. 94; 1991); of De fide, spe et caritate by id. (ibid. 97; 1990); and of De partu Virginis by E. A. Matter and De Assumptione Sanctae Mariae Virginis by A. Ripberger (ibid. 56 C; 1985). Id. (ed.), Der Pseudo-Hieronymus-Brief IX 'Cogitis Me': Ein erster marianischer Traktat des Mittelalters von Paschasius Radbert (Spicilegium Friburgense, 9; 1962). Eng. tr. of Paschasius' Lives of Adalard and Wala, his brother and successor as Abbot of Corbie, by A. Cabaniss, Charlemagne's Cousins (Syracuse, NY, 1967). The 12th–13th-cent. Life of Paschasius, ed. O. Holder-Egger, MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 452–4. H. Peltier, Pascase Radbert, abbé de Corbie (Strasbourg thesis; Amiens, 1938). C. Gliozzi, SJ, La Dottrina della Conversione Eucaristica in Pascasio Radberto e Ratramno, monaci di Corbia (Palermo [1945]). D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 1 (1909), pp. 216–22; G. Macy, The Theologies of the Eucharist in the Early Scholastic Period (Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 21–35. H. Peltier in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1628–39, s.v. 'Radbert, Paschase'; R. Grégoire in Dict. Sp. 12 (1984), cols. 295–301, s.v. 'Paschase (2) Radbert'.

Passion, the (Lat. passio, lit. 'suffering'). The term is used absolutely of the Lord's Redemptive Suffering during the last days of His earthly life, and esp. of His Crucifixion. The word 'Pasch' or 'Passover' (Gk. Πάσχα), commonly applied in the early Church to the joint annual commemoration of the Redemptive Death and Resurrection of Christ (i.e. to 'Good Friday' and 'Easter' together), was often held by a false etymology to be derived from the Greek πάσχω ('to suffer'). See also following entry and PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE, PASSION SUNDAY, PASSIONTIDE.

Passion, musical settings for the. From towards the end of the 4th cent. scriptural readings, incl. the Gospels, were recited to musical tones in church; the Gospel narratives of the Passion were thus recited during *Holy Week. The characters were early on differentiated by changes of pitch, and by the 13th cent. at latest this was emphasized by dividing the narrative between three or more singers; from the 15th cent. parts or all began to be composed polyphonically. About 1525 Johann Walther (1496–1570), M. *Luther's musical adviser, produced a Passion in German, the first to be written in a vernacular language, while in the next cent. H. *Schütz composed three notable settings in an austere but very expressive style. From the end of the 17th cent. lyric poems were sung in comment and chorales were added to be sung by the congregation; an orchestra was also introduced. The greatest examples of this *oratorio type of Passion were the St John Passion (1723) and esp. the St Matthew Passion (1727) of J. S. *Bach.

[L.] O. Kade, Die ältere Passionskomposition bis zum Jahre 1631 (Gütersloh, 1893). W. Lott, 'Zur Geschichte der Passionskomposition von 1650–1800', Archiv für Musikwissenschaft, 3 (1921), pp. 285–320. B. Smallmann, The Background of Passion Music: J. S. Bach and his Predecessors (1957). B. Stäblein and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 10 (1962), cols. 886–933; K. von Fischer and W. Braun in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 14 (1980), pp. 276–86. See also bibl. to ORATORIO, BACH and other individual composers.

Passion Plays. See DRAMA, CHRISTIAN and MYSTERY PLAYS; also OBERAMMERGAU.

Passion Sunday. Traditionally the name of the fifth Sunday in *Lent, which marked the beginning of *Passiontide. In the RC Church the special designation of this Sunday was suppressed in 1969 and the name is commonly used of *Palm Sunday (officially 'Dominica in Palmis de Passione Domini'). In the C of E the title (for the fifth Sunday in Lent) was printed in the 1928 BCP and became widely used, though some Provinces of the Anglican Communion have now followed the terminology of the RC Church. For the liturgical usage which began on this day, see PASSIONTIDE.

Passional (Lat. Liber Passionarius). The word is used for various Latin liturgical books:

(1) The series of lections from the Lives or Acts of the Saints read at *Mattins on their feast days.

(2) A book containing the narratives of the Lord's Passion from the four Gospels.

(3) The particular *Evangeliary, also known as 'King Aethelstan's Book', on which the English kings from Henry I to Edward III took the Coronation Oath. It contained the Gospel of St John complete, followed by the Passions of Matthew, Mark, and Luke.

Passionists. The popular name for the members of the 'Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ'. The congregation was founded by St *Paul of the Cross, who drew up its rule in 1720 and erected the first house, the 'Retreat' on Monte Argentario, in 1737. After some mitigations the rule was approved by *Benedict XIV in 1741 and 1746, and in 1769 confirmed by *Clement XIV, who at the same time conferred the privileges of the old orders on the new congregation. It soon spread throughout Europe and beyond. In 1841 the Passionists came to England, where they were the first religious after the Reformation to lead a strict community life and wear their habit in public. Among them was Bl Dominic Barberi, who received J. H. *Newman into the RC Church. The Passionists stress the contemplative life as the foundation of their apostolic work; and they take a further fourth vow promising to further the memory of Christ's Passion in the souls of the faithful. Their chief activities are the giving of missions and retreats. Their habit is black with the badge of the Passion, a white heart with the inscription 'Jesu XPI Passio', surmounted by a cross. The Passionist nuns, founded by St Paul of the Cross together with Mother Mary Crucifixa in 1771, are strictly enclosed and contemplative; they, too, take a vow to practise devotion to the Passion.

Storia della Congregazione della Passione di Gesù Christo: vol. 1 (1720–75) by F. Giorgini, CP (Pescara, 1981); vol. 2. 1 (1775–96) by C. A. Naselli, CP (ibid., 1981); other vols. planned. F. Ward, CP, The Passionists (New York, 1923). E. Zoffoli, CP, I Passionisti: Spiritualità, apostolato (1955). C. J. Yuhaus, CP, Compelled to Speak. The Passionists in America: Origin and apostolate (New York [1967]). A. Devine, CP, in CE 11 (1911), pp. 521–5, s.v.; C. J. Yuhaus, CP, in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 1066–8, s.v.; F. Giorgini, CP, and C. A. Naselli, CP, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 1236–47, s.v. 'Passionisti'. See also bibl. to PAUL OF THE CROSS, esp. art. in Dict. Sp.

Passions. The detailed and professedly contemporary accounts of the early Christian martyrdoms. They are commonly distinguished from the '*Acts' (q.v.), in which the narrative follows (or, at least, is intended to give the impression of following) the shorthand report taken down for official purposes.

Passiontide. Traditionally the last two weeks of Lent, extending from *Passion Sunday to *Holy Saturday. It was customary during this period for all crucifixes, pictures, and images in church to be veiled in purple (the crucifix only being unveiled on *Good Friday), and for the '*Gloria Patri' to be omitted from the Psalms, the *Introit, and the *Venite. Since 1969 in the RC Church Passion Sunday as such has been dropped from the calendar and the observance combined with that of *Palm Sunday; the veiling of crucifixes etc. is optional and in any case confined to *Holy Week; and there are no observances peculiar to the period as a whole. In English pre-Reformation practice the Lenten array of unbleached linen gave place in Passiontide to a deep red as the liturgical colour, but in modern usage Lenten purple continues throughout, except on Palm Sunday, *Maundy Thursday, and Good Friday.

Passover. The Jewish festival celebrated every spring in connection with the *Exodus. Acc. to the account of its institution in Exod. 12, a lamb is to be slain in each household and its blood sprinkled on the lintel and doorposts of the house in memory of the fact that when the first-born in Egypt were slain, the Lord 'passed over' the houses which were so marked. In the Deuteronomic account (Deut. 16) the sacrifice is no longer to be performed in private houses but 'at the place where the Lord thy God shall place his name' [i.e. the *Temple]. In both these passages and elsewhere in the OT and the papyri in which the Passover is mentioned, the eating of the *Paschal lamb is associated with the use of unleavened bread. Many modern scholars, following J. *Wellhausen, have argued that the original setting of the Passover was the sacrifice of firstlings in a nomadic community; this festival is held to have become joined with an originally independent ceremony concerned with unleavened bread, which derived from an agricultural rite associated with the beginning of the barley-harvest. J. B. Segal, however, has argued, on the basis of certain similarities with the ritual of the feast of *Tabernacles, that the Passover itself was an agricultural feast celebrated at the time when the work begun at Tabernacles was reaching fruition. Whatever its origin, by later biblical times Passover had come to be the principal Jewish festival of the year, celebrated on the night of 14/15 Nisan. After the destruction of the Temple in AD 70, the Jews continued to observe the feast in a modified form which omitted the sacrifice of a lamb, using only a bone in its place. Details of the later observance were laid down in the *Mishnah tractate Pesahim.

Whether the *Last Supper was a Passover Meal (as the chronology of the Synoptic Gospels would suggest) or not (as St John), it is clear that the Eucharist was instituted at Passover time, and Christian writers from St *Paul (1 Cor. 5: 7) onwards have stressed that the death of Christ was the fulfilment of the sacrifice foreshadowed by the Passover. It is probable also that the earliest celebrations of the Christian Easter (the *Paschal Vigil Service) developed from the Jewish Passover rite, while the account of the Exodus and the institution of the Passover have from a very early date provided one of the readings in the Paschal liturgy of the W. Church. See also EUCHARIST, PASCHAL LAMB.

J. B. Segal, The Hebrew Passover from the Earliest Times to A.D. 70 (London Oriental Series, 12; 1963). B. M. Bokser, The Origins of the Seder: The Passover Rite and Early Rabbinic Judaism [1984]. The early history is discussed in all comm. on Exodus and Leviticus. Good summary in G. B. *Gray, Sacrifice in the Old Testament (1925), esp. pp. 337–97. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 383–94; Eng. tr., Ancient Israel (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 484–93; H.-J. Kraus, Gottesdienst in Israel (2nd edn., Munich, 1962), pp. 61–72; Eng. tr., Worship in Israel (Oxford, 1966), pp. 45–55. L. Jacobs and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 163–73 (with illustrations). C. Mohrmann, 'Pascha, Passio, Transitus', EL 66 (1952), pp. 37–52. J. Jeremias in TWNT 5 (1954), pp. 895–903 (Eng. tr., 1968, pp. 896–904), s.v. πάσχα. For discussions on the relation of the Last Supper to the Passover, see LAST SUPPER.

pastophorion. (Gk. παστοφόριον). In the E. Church, the sacristy adjacent to the apse, used at least from the end of the 4th cent. (Apostolic Constitutions, 8. 13) for the reservation of the Sacrament.

pastor. The title given by *Lutherans and some other Protestant bodies to their clergy, primarily those in charge of a church or congregation. The term derives from the Latin pastor, meaning 'herdsman' or 'shepherd', hence a 'shepherd of souls'. In this sense it is found in the Middle Ages and in the BCP (e.g. in the collect for the feast of St *Peter), and is occasionally used of RCs with cure of souls.

Pastor Aeternus. The title (from its opening words) of the 'First Dogmatic Constitution on the Church of Christ', issued at the concluding session of the First *Vatican Council on 18 July 1870. It defined the primacy and infallibility of the Pope.

Text in ASS 6 (1870), pp. 40–7, and in Acta et Decreta Sacrorum Conciliorum Recentiorum: Collectio Lacensis, 7 (Freiburg i.B., 1890), cols. 426–32; also pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 824–33 (nos. 3050–75), and, with Eng. tr., in [E.] Cuthbert Butler, OSB, The Vatican Council, 2 (1930), pp. 276–95.

Pastor of Hermas. See SHEPHERD OF HERMAS.

Pastor, Ludwig (1854–1928), historian of the Popes. He was a native of Aachen and, though his father had been a Protestant, was brought up a Catholic after his mother had become a widow. At the age of 19 he conceived the plan of writing a history of the Popes. After studying at Louvain, Vienna, and other universities he continued his researches at Rome. In 1881 he became lecturer at Innsbruck University, where he was appointed professor in 1887. In 1901 he became director of the Austrian Historical Institute in Rome, and in 1920 Austrian ambassador to the Holy See. His principal work is the Geschichte der Päpste seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (16 vols., 1886–1933), which has been translated into several languages. Based on extensive research in the archives of over 200 European cities, it aims at giving in vivid language a balanced representation of the history of Catholicism in modern times.

Diaries, Letters, and Memoirs ed. W. Wühr (Heidelberg, 1950), with bibl. pp. 918–20. Eng. tr. of his Geschichte der Päpste by F. I. Antrobus, Cong. Orat., and others (40 vols., 1891–1953). Appreciations by J. P. Dengel in Hist. J. 49 (1929), pp. 1–32; W. Goetz in Historische Zeitschrift, 145 (1932), pp. 550–63 (cf. ibid. 146, 1932, pp. 510–15); and A. Pelzer in RHE 46 (1951), pp. 192–201, with refs. F. Engel-Janosi, Die diplomatische Mission Ludwig von Pastors beim heiligen Stuhle, 1920 1928 (Sb. (Wien), 254, Abh. 5; 1968). [W.] O. Chadwick, Catholicism and History (Cambridge, 1978), esp. pp. 116–27. F. Cognassi in EC 9 (1952), cols. 925–8, s.v.

Pastoral Epistles, the. A common designation for the Epistles to *Timothy and Titus, q.v.

pastoral letters (Lat. litterae pastorales). Official letters addressed by a bishop to all members of his diocese. Many RC bishops make a practice of publishing such letters to be read from the pulpit, e.g. at the beginning of *Lent and *Advent. They are commonly distinguished from 'encyclical letters' (litterae encyclicae) from a bishop, addressed only to his clergy.

pastoral staff. Another name for the *crosier (q.v.). The distinction drawn by many 19th-cent. antiquarians between the staff and the crosier was without authority. See CROSIER.

pastoralia. The branch of theology concerned with the principles regulating the life and conduct of the parish priest. Among the subjects which it normally includes are: (1) the methods of public worship and administration of the Sacraments; (2) preaching and sermon construction; (3) the care of the sick and dying; (4) the study of moral theology. All exponents of the subject are agreed that the personal training of the pastor himself in prayer and devotion to his calling are the pre-condition of all success.

Patarenes. The term 'Patareni' first appears in the 1050s at Milan as the designation of an extreme reforming movement enjoying considerable support at Rome; it contended first for clerical *celibacy and soon also for the extirpation of *simony. The derivation of the term is uncertain, but it is widely supposed to be from the name of the rag-pickers' quarter in Milan. Led initially by the clerks Arialdus and Landulf, the Patarenes played an important part in Milanese politics; they invited Roman intervention in the hitherto largely independent Ambrosian Church and violently resisted every manifestation of secular power over its affairs. Matters came to a head in 1071 when the Emp. *Henry IV invested a new archbishop. Under a new, lay leader, named Erlembald, the Patarenes demanded a free canonical election, propagated their movement elsewhere in Lombardy, and became Pope *Gregory VII's allies against Henry. With Erlembald's death in 1075 they suffered a crippling blow, but the movement persisted at Milan into the early 12th cent.

In the 1170s the name Patareni reappeared as a general label for heretics, especially the *Cathari in Italy, e.g. in can. 27 of the Third *Lateran Council (1179). It long remained current, with many variations of spelling, to describe both W. heretics and the *Bogomils of Bosnia and Dalmatia.

C. Violante, La Pataria milanese e la riforma ecclesiastica, 1 (Istituto storico italiano per il medio evo, Studi storici, 11–13; 1955). Id., 'I laici nel movimento patarino', in I laici nella 'societas christiana' dei secoli xi e xii (Miscellanea del Centro di studi medioevali, 5; 1968), pp. 597–697. E. Werner, Pauperes Christi: Studien zu sozial-religiösen Bewegungen im Zeitalter des Reformpapsttums (Leipzig, 1956), pp. 111–64. H. E. J. Cowdrey, 'The Papacy, the Patarenes and the Church of Milan', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 18 (1968), pp. 25–48, repr. in id., Popes, Monks and Crusaders (1984), no. 5; cf. also no. 6. J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (Cambridge, 1932), pp. 80–2, 143–57. On the 12th-cent. Patarenes, A. Borst, Die Katharer (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae Historica, 12; 1953), pp. 15–17, 81–9, 250. É. Amann in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 224–6, s.v. 'Patarins', with details on sources; C. Violante in NCE 10 (1967), pp. 1084 f., s.v.

paten. The dish, now usually of silver or gold, on which the bread is placed at the celebration of the Eucharist. In the early centuries patens were of sufficient size to take the large loaves offered by the people and distributed at the Communion. Their modern counterparts in the W. are usually quite small, esp. where, as in the RC Church, wafer bread is used. In recent years, however, dishes to accommodate somewhat thicker altar-breads have come into use. The corresponding vessel in the E., the *discus (δίσκος), is larger and normally possesses a foot.

Rohault, 4 [1887], pp. 154–67, with plates cccxv–cccxvii. Braun, AG, pp. 197–246, with plates 41–7. W. W. Watts, Catalogue of Chalices and other Communion Vessels (Victoria and Albert Museum, 1922), pp. 39–46. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 2392–414, s.v. 'Patène'.

Pater Noster. See LORD'S PRAYER.

Patmore, Coventry Kersey Dighton (1823–96), poet. He was educated privately and began to write poetry at an early age. In 1846 he was appointed supernumerary assistant in the printed book department of the British Museum and filled this post for nearly 20 years. He married the daughter of a *Congregational minister in 1847, and in 1854 and the following years there appeared the various parts of The Angel in the House, a set of poems forming a panegyric on married love. After the death of his wife in 1862, he went to Rome, where in 1864 he was received into the RC Church and in the same year married a second time. In 1877 he published The Unknown Eros, a collection of odes, some of them of great musical beauty and almost mystical depth. In 1880 he lost his second wife and in the following year married for the third time. His last book, Rod, Root, and Flower (1895), consists chiefly of meditations in prose on the same lines as the mystical poems in The Unknown Eros. As a religious poet Patmore is often of impressive beauty, though his conception of 'the relation of the soul to Christ as his betrothed wife' is sometimes unduly laboured.

Collected edns. of his Poems, 4 vols., London, 1879; repr., 2 vols., ibid., 1886; London, 1906, with introd. by B. Champneys, pp. xvii–xlvii, and ed. F. Page (Oxford Edition of Standard Authors, London, 1949). B. Champneys, Memoirs and Correspondence of Coventry Patmore (2 vols., 1900). Other studies by E. Gosse (London, 1905), O. [H.] Burdett (ibid., 1921), F. Page (ibid., 1933), D. [C.] Patmore (ibid., 1949), E. J. Oliver (ibid., 1956), and J. C. Reid (ibid., 1957). I. Anstruther, Coventry Patmore's Angel: A study of Coventry Patmore, his wife Emily and The Angel in the House (1992). R. Garnett in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 249–52. W. E. Fredeman in NCBEL 3 (1969), cols. 486–9.

Patmos. The small island in the Aegean off the coast of Asia Minor on which the author of Revelation (q.v.) received his vision (1.9; the sole NT ref.). Acc. to a tradition found in St *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 5. 30), *Eusebius (HE 3. 18) and St *Jerome (De Vir. Ill. 9), St. *John the Apostle was exiled to Patmos under *Domitian (AD 81–96) and returned to *Ephesus under Nerva (AD 96–8). The apocryphal 'Acts of *John' (q.v.) narrate several miracles which the Apostle performed at Patmos. In 1088 St Christodulus, who had been granted a bull by the Emp. Alexis Comnenus (1081–1118), founded a monastery on a peak in the middle of the island, which rapidly grew in importance; it has survived to the present day. The monastery amassed a valuable collection of MSS and, though many have since been dispersed (the famous 9th-cent. codex of *Plato is in the *Bodleian), a substantial number remain. The Abbot is directly subject to the Patr. of *Constantinople. A grotto in the hillside (τὸ σπήλαιον τῆς Ἀποκαλύψεως) is pointed out as the place where John received his vision.

Primary docs. in F. Miklosich and J. Müller (eds.), Acta et diplomata graeca medii aevi, 6 (Vienna, 1890). V. Guérin, Description de l'île de Patmos et de l'île de Samos (1856), pp. 1–120; W. E. Geil, The Isle called Patmos (1897). H. F. Tozer, The Islands of the Aegean (1890), pp. 178–98. G. Hofmann, SJ, Patmos und Rom: Darstellung der Beziehungen zwischen dem griechischen Johanneskloster und der römischen Kirche (Orientalia Christiana, fasc. 41; 1928). Catalogue of the MSS of the monastery by J. Sakkelion (Athens, 1890). F. C. *Conybeare in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 693 f., s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 13 (pt. 1; 1938), cols. 2424–40, s.v.; J. Schmidt in PW 18 (pt. 4; 1949), cols. 2174–91, s.v.; G. Campos, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 73–81, s.v. See also comm. to REVELATION, BOOK OF.

Paton, John Gibson (1824–1907), missionary to Vanuatu (then known as the New Hebrides). Born in Kirkmahoe, near Dumfries, of parents who belonged to the *Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, he gained his education under great difficulties. Having worked for six years for the Glasgow City Mission, he was appointed as a missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church to Vanuatu and was ordained in 1858. He arrived with his wife at Aneityum on 30 Aug. 1858; shortly afterwards they moved to the island of Tanna. In the next year his wife gave birth to a child and both died. In 1862, his own life in danger, he fled from Tanna and went to the Australian colonies. Here he successfully aroused interest in missionary work in Vanuatu; after a visit to Scotland, where he married again, he returned to the Pacific on mission service in 1865. From 1866 to 1881 he was a missionary of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria on the island of Aniwa, near Tanna; from 1881 he was based in Melbourne as mission organizer and publicist. His autobiography, written in the form of notes, was put into shape by his brother, the Revd James Paton (1843–1906), and from its publication in 1889 did much to stimulate support for his cause.

The principal material is to be found in his own works. R. Adams, In the Land of Strangers: A Century of European Contact with Tanna, 1774–1874 (Pacific Research Monograph, 9; Canberra, 1984), pp. 78–167. J. G. Miller, Live: A History of Church Planting in the New Hebrides . . . to 1880, 2 (Sydney, 1981), pp. 20–36 and 46–51. Sir Everard im Thurn in DNB, 1901–1911, 3 (1912), pp. 77 f.

Paton, William (1886–1943), *Presbyterian minister and writer on missionary subjects. Born in London, he was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, and Westminster College, Cambridge. In 1911 he became Missionary Secretary to the *Student Christian Movement in England; he maintained a keen interest in missionary and ecumenical activities throughout his life. His earliest books on this subject are Jesus Christ and the World's Religions (1916) and Social Ideas in India (1919). From 1922 to 1927 he was General Secretary of the National Christian Council of India, Burma, and Ceylon, and subsequently held the position of Secretary to the International Missionary Council and Editor of the International Review of Missions. Among his later publications are Alexander Duff (1922), The Faiths of Mankind (1932), World Community (1938), The Message of the World-wide Church (1940), and The Church and the New Order (1941).

Life by M. Sinclair (London, 1949). E. M. Jackson, Red Tape and the Gospel: A Study of the Significance of the Ecumenical Missionary Struggle of William Paton (1886–1943) (Birmingham [1980]). N. Micklem in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 662–3.

patriarch (biblical). Literally the father or ruler of a family or tribe. The term is most commonly used of the three great forefathers of Israel, *Abraham, *Isaac, and *Jacob (cf. Gen. 12–50); the dating of these traditions has been the subject of continuing debate (on which see ABRAHAM). The term is also used of the ancestors of the human race before the *Flood and of the 12 sons of Jacob, to whom are attributed the pseudepigraphical *Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs. In Acts 2: 29 the word is applied to *David.

The patriarchs have a major place in histories of *Israel (q.v.). A. Alt, Der Gott der Väter (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Dritte Folge, 12; 1929; Eng. tr. in Alt's Essays on Old Testament History and Religion, Oxford, 1966, pp. 1–77). T. L. Thompson, The Historicity of the Patriarchal Narratives (Beihefte zur ZATW, 133; 1974); W. McKane, Studies in the Patriarchal Narratives (Edinburgh, 1979). H. Cazelles in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 81–156, s.v.; J. Van Seters in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Suppl. Vol. (Nashville, 1976), pp. 645–8, s.v.

patriarch (ecclesiastical). A title dating from the 6th cent., for the bishops of the five chief sees of Christendom: *Rome, *Alexandria, *Antioch, *Constantinople, and *Jerusalem. Their jurisdiction extended over the adjoining territories, and included the right of ordaining the '*metropolitans', i.e. bishops of the principal sees under them, of trying the same when accused, and of hearing appeals from their judgements. The earliest bishops exercising such powers, though not so named, were those of Rome (over the whole or part of Italy), Alexandria (over Egypt and Libya), and Antioch (over large parts of Asia Minor). These three were recognized by the Council of *Nicaea (325). But at *Chalcedon (451) Jerusalem secured recognition as well as Constantinople, whose jurisdiction over Thrace, Asia, and Pontus was exercised henceforward in spite of protests from Rome. The title patriarch has been given in more recent times to the heads of certain other *autocephalous Churches in the E. (*Russia, *Serbia, *Romania, *Bulgaria, *Georgia). In the (Latin) RC Church the title is used in a purely honorific way for the bishops of certain sees, e.g. *Venice and Lisbon. See also OECUMENICAL PATRIARCH and CATHOLICOS.

Patriarchs, The Testaments of the Twelve. See TESTAMENTS OF THE TWELVE PATRIARCHS, THE.

Patrick, St (mid- or late 5th cent.), 'Apostle of the Irish'. Patrick was born in Britain, the son of a local decurio (member of a town council) called Calpornius, who was also a deacon of the church, and who had a property near the village (vicus) of Bannavem Taburniae, of which the site is unknown. Patrick was brought up as a Christian, though in no tradition of strong piety. At the age of 16 he was captured by Irish pirates and spent six years as a herdsman in Ireland. In his captivity he turned earnestly to God, and eventually received a Divine message that he was to escape. He made his way to some port 200 miles away, perhaps on the SE coast of Ireland, persuaded some sailors to give him a passage, and landed somewhere on the coast of Britain. After adventures in which he felt himself sustained and protected by Divine help, he returned to his kinsfolk, a changed man. He underwent training for the Christian ministry, which must have consisted mainly of learning a rather conservative rule of faith and acquiring an intimate knowledge of the Latin Bible. At some point he went from Britain as 'bishop in Ireland' (his own phrase, Epistle § 1), and he spent the rest of his life there, evangelizing, conciliating local chieftains and educating their sons, ordaining clergy, and instituting monks and nuns. One of his letters has survived, written in Latin to a British chieftain called Coroticus, whose identity is disputed. Towards the end of his life Patrick wrote, also in Latin, a moving personal account of his spiritual pilgrimage, called his Confession, perhaps in response to a serious attack on his character and career which was certainly made on him at some point during his episcopate.

Discussions on the chronology of Patrick's life have focused on the reference in the chronicle of *Prosper of Aquitaine to the sending of *Palladius by Pope *Celestine I (422–32) to be the 'first bishop to the Irish believing in Christ'. Though there is no certain connection between Palladius and Patrick, it is often argued that Patrick's mission to Ireland cannot have been much later than 431. The date of his birth is inferred from this date, and it is therefore held that the date of his death is not likely to have been later than *c.*460. Others argue that he lived a generation later and died *c.*490. There is no decisive evidence, and the Irish Annals, compiled two centuries later, admit both chronologies.

The few facts derived from Patrick's Confession were embellished by his biographers, of whom the earliest whose works are extant, Tírechán and Muirchú, lived in the second half of the 7th cent. The stories of his education in Gaul at *Lérins or Auxerre (under Amator or *Germanus), and of his being sent to Ireland by Pope Celestine, may perhaps have been transferred to Patrick from a lost source concerning Palladius. The story of his encounter with the 'High King' of Ireland, Loegaire, reflects the 7th-cent. political interests of *Armagh; the Church there had by then appropriated the legend of Patrick, which was propagated through a series of texts; many of them (including the works of Tírechán and Muirchú) are contained in the 'Book of *Armagh'. Dates between the 5th and 7th cents. are proposed for the two collections of canons formerly attributed to Patrick; the hymn 'Audite omnes amantes', on Patrick, perhaps dates from the 7th cent., and the vernacular '*Breastplate of St Patrick' from the early 8th cent. Feast day, 17 Mar. See also BELLS and ST PATRICK'S PURGATORY.

Crit. text by L. Bieler of Patrick's Confession, Letter to Coroticus, and some dicta attributed to him, Libri Epistolarum Sancti Patricii Episcopi (2 vols., Irish Manuscripts Commission, Dublin, 1952). These works, together with bk.1 of Life by Muirchú, also conveniently ed., with Eng. tr., by A. B. E. Hood (History from the Sources, 9; London and Chichester, 1978). The Confession and Letter to Coroticus ed., with Fr. tr., by R. P. C. Hanson and C. Blanc (SC 249; 1978). Convenient Eng. tr. of Confession, Letter to Coroticus, dicta, canons, Hymn on Patrick, and Breastplate by L. Bieler (ACW 17; 1953). The 7th-cent. vitae are ed., with Eng. tr. and comm., by id., The Patrician Texts in the Book of Armagh (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 10; Dublin, 1979); later Lat. texts ed. id., Four Latin Lives of St Patrick (ibid. 8; 1971). Further details on sources in M. Lapidge and R. Sharpe, A Bibliography of Celtic-Latin Literature 400–1200 (Dublin, 1985), pp. 9–11, 103–5, and 107 f. (nos. 25 f., 354–60, and 365–8), and K. Devine and A. Harvey, Clavis Patricii (Dublin, 1989 ff.). Of the vast modern lit., the following are significant: J. H. Todd, St Patrick, Apostle of Ireland (1864); J. B. Bury, The Life of St Patrick and his Place in History (1905); T. F. O'Rahilly, The Two Patricks (Dublin, 1942); L. Bieler, The Life and Legend of St Patrick: Problems of Modern Scholarship (1949); J. Carney, The Problem of St Patrick (Dublin, 1961); D. A. Binchy, 'Patrick and his biographers: ancient and modern', Studia Hibernica, 2 (1962), pp. 7–173; R. P. C. Hanson, Saint Patrick: His Origins and Career (Oxford, 1968); D. N. Dumville and others, Saint Patrick A.D. 493–1993 (Studies in Celtic History, 13; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1993).

Patrick, Simon (1625–1707), Bp. of *Ely. A native of Gainsborough, Lincs., he was educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, where he came under the influence of the '*Cambridge Platonist', John *Smith. He was ordained a *Presbyterian minister in 1653; but the study of H. *Hammond and H. *Thorndike determined him to seek episcopal ordination. In 1654 he received holy orders from J. *Hall, Bp. of *Norwich, and became successively vicar of Battersea (1658), rector of St Paul's, Covent Garden (1662), and Dean of *Peterborough (1679), retaining at the same time his previous living. He was a prominent and sincere *Latitudinarian and prob. the author of A Brief Account of the new Sect of Latitude-Men (1662). In 1688 he resisted the reading of the *Declaration of Indulgence, and in 1689 took the Oath of Allegiance to William and Mary. In the same year he was appointed Bp. of *Chichester. He was translated to Ely in 1691. As bishop he was a warm supporter of the *SPCK, which he helped to found, and of the *SPG. He wrote extensively. In 1664 he published The Parable of the Pilgrim, an allegory similar to J. *Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. He commented on and paraphrased all the books of the OT from Genesis to the Song of Solomon (10 vols., 1695–1710), and wrote many controversial treatises against both *Nonconformists and RCs, among them A Friendly Debate between a Conformist and a Nonconformist (1669), A Full View of the Doctrines and Practices of the Ancient Church (1688), and Texts Examined which Papists cite out of the Bible (also 1688). In 1687 he edited an abridged version of W. *Chillingworth's Religion of Protestants. He also published a number of devotional books.

Works, incl. his autobiog., which was first pub. Oxford, 1839, but excluding his comms., ed. A. Taylor, 9 vols., Oxford, 1858. Facsimile repr. of 1st edn. of A Brief Account of the new Sect of Latitude-Men, with introd. by T. A. Birrell (Augustan Reprint Society Publication, 100; Los Angeles, 1963). H. R. McAdoo, The Spirit of Anglicanism (1965), pp. 189–98. J. H. Overton in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 45–7.

Patrimony of St Peter. The estates belonging to the Church of Rome. Although the Church of Rome had long been wealthy, persecutions had prevented the acquisition of permanent property until an edict of *Constantine (Cod. Theod. 16. 2. 4) made it legal to leave property to the Church. In the following period, up to 600, economic conditions encouraged large donations of land and commendations. Parallels between the patrimonium ecclesiae and the patrimonium principis suggest that the *Donation of Constantine, though forged, represented the truth in substance and that much Imperial property was given to the Church. By gifts and inheritance the patrimony came to include lands in Sicily (confiscated by the Emp. *Leo III in 730), Illyria, Gaul, Corsica, Sardinia, around Hippo in Africa, as well as vast estates in Italy. They were governed by a centralized administration which facilitated the extension of Papal influence. The revenues were employed not only for administrative purposes, but widely for the relief of the poor, redemption of captives and later for defence. As the further patrimonies were conquered, Popes concentrated on the defence of the regions round Rome, esp. the exarchate of *Ravenna and the Duchy of Rome. When the castle of Sutri was captured in 727, the Lombard king Luitprand 'restored' it 'as a gift to the Blessed Apostles Peter and Paul'. In 753 *Stephen II appealed for protection to *Pepin, King of the Franks, who agreed to give the Pope certain lands to be conquered from the Lombards. By the Donations of 754 and 756 Pepin gave to St Peter territory in the exarchate of Ravenna, the Duchy of Rome, and the districts of Venetia and Istria, and, renouncing the Byzantine authority, founded the Papal states independent of any temporal power.

The term was applied in medieval usage to the environs of Rome. It is used loosely for the *States of the Church (q.v.) as a whole.

The primary sources include the Liber Censuum* and the Liber Pontificalis* (qq.v.). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (1898; 2nd edn., 1904; Eng. tr., 1908). E. Spearing, The Patrimony of the Roman Church in the Time of Gregory the Great (posthumously ed. E. M. Spearing, 1918). P. Partner, The Lands of St Peter: The Papal State in the Middle Ages and the Early Renaissance (1972), pp. 1–41. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), with bibl. G. Schnürer in CE 14 (1912), pp. 257–61, s.v. 'States of the Church, 1'; O. Bertolini in EC 9 (1952), cols. 957–60, s.v. 'Patrimonio di S. Pietro'. See also works cited under PEPIN.

Patripassianism. A form of *Monarchianism (q.v.) which arose in the early 3rd cent. and held that God the Father suffered as the Son. It is also known as '*Sabellianism'.

Patristic Conferences. International Conferences on Patristic Studies have met in Oxford at four-year intervals beginning in 1951. The first five conferences were convened by F. L. Cross (1900–68), then Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity and canon of Christ Church. Besides fostering patristic scholarship on a broad basis, the conferences were of importance in bringing together scholars of different religious allegiance at a time when RCs were not taking part in ecumenical gatherings.

Proceedings of the second to seventh conferences have been pub. under the title Studia Patristica (TU 63–4, 1957; 78–81, 1961–2; 92–4, 1966; 107–8, 1970–2; 115–17, 1975–6; 128–9; 1984–5); those of the eighth conference pub. at Oxford, 3 vols., 1982; and those of the ninth and subsequent conferences mainly at Louvain.

patristics. The branch of theological study which deals with the writings of the *Fathers (patres) of the Church (q.v.). 'Patristics' normally embraces the Fathers in the more restrictive sense of the term, i.e. those who wrote between the end of the 1st cent., after the writing of most of the works that now comprise the NT, and the close of the 8th cent.; and this is the period commonly termed the 'Patristic Age'. The study of patristic literature is closely allied both with Church history and with the history of early doctrine, since this literature is the chief evidence both for the events and for the ideas of these times. The leading Fathers were the authors of much work vital to Christianity. They defended the Gospel against heresies and misunderstandings; they composed extensive commentaries on the Bible, explanatory, doctrinal, and practical, and published innumerable sermons, largely on the same subject; they exhibited the meaning and implications of the *Creeds; they recorded past and current events in Church history; and they related the Christian faith to the best thought of their own age.

The earliest essays in patristic study were the catalogues of Christian writers compiled by St *Jerome, *Gennadius of Marseilles, St *Isidore of Seville, St *Ildefonsus of Toledo, and *Photius. Later similar catalogues are due to *Sigebert of Gembloux, *Honorius 'of Autun', and the Anonymus Mellicensis (of Melk in Lower Austria, *c.*1135), and to (pseudo-) *Henry of Ghent. The more imp. early pr. collections include the Bibliotheca SS. Patrum (ed. M. de La Bigne, 8 vols., Paris, 1575, with later suppl.; more comprehensive new edn., 14 vols., Cologne, 1618, suppl. 1622; further extended as Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, 27 vols., Lyons, 1677) and those of F. *Ducaeus, J. L. *d'Achery, J. *Sirmond, J. B. *Cotelier, and F. *Combefis. A new era in the editing of patristic texts was inaugurated by the *Maurists (q.v.). Later collections are due to J. E. *Grabe, B. de *Montfaucon, and A. *Gallandi, and, in the 19th cent., to M. J. *Routh, A. *Mai (cont. by J. Cozza-Luzi) and J. B. F. *Pitra. J. P. *Migne's vast Patrologiae ('Latina' and 'Graeca') incorporated nearly all the Gk. and Lat. texts hitherto in print. The chief recent collections, ed. on modern crit. principles, are the Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum (CSEL, Vienna, 1866 ff.), Die griechischen christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte (GCS, Leipzig, 1897–1941; Berlin and Leipzig, 1953; Berlin, 1954 ff.), the Patrologia Orientalis (ed. R. Graffin and F. Nau, Paris, 1907 ff.), the Corpus Scriptorum Christianorum Orientalium (CSCO, Paris, etc., 1903 ff.), and Corpus Christianorum, Series Latina (CCSL) and Series Graeca (CCSG), ed. under the initiative of the monks of Steenbrugge, Belgium (Turnhout, 1954 ff. and 1977 ff. respectively). Of Eng. trs. of the Fathers, the principal series are *The Library of the Fathers (48 vols., 1835–85), The Ante-Nicene Christian Library (28 vols., 1886–1900), A Select Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers [1st ser.] (14 vols., New York, 1887–93), and NS (14 vols., Oxford and New York, 1890–1900), Ancient Christian Writers (Westminster, Md., and London, 1946–67; Westminster, Md., 1970 ff.), and Fathers of the Church (Washington, DC, 1947 ff.). Good Fr. edns. of many patristic texts in Sources Chrétiennes (Paris, 1942 ff.). For modern Patrologies, see foll. entry. J. de Ghellinck, Patristique et moyen-âge (3 vols., 1946–8); B. Altaner, 'Der Stand der patrologischen Wissenschaft und das Problem einer neuen altchristlichen Literaturgeschichte', Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, 1 (ST 121; 1946), pp. 483–520. On the knowledge of Gk. patristic lit. in the W., see P. Courcelle, Les Lettres grecques en occident (1943), and A. Siegmund, Die Überlieferung der griechischen Literatur in der lateinischen Kirche bis zum 12. Jahrhundert (1949). For refs. to the Bible in the Fathers, see Biblia Patristica, ed. J. Allenbach and others (Paris, 1975 ff.). Bibliographia Patristica, ed. W. Schneemelcher and then K. Schäferdiek (35 vols., covering 1956–90; Berlin, 1959–97). On the Greek of the Fathers, see s.v. GREEK. See also PATRISTIC CONFERENCES and PATROLOGY.

patrology. In older English writers, the term patrology was synonymous with *patristics (q.v.), esp. in its doctrinal aspects, but it is now in current use for a systematically arranged manual on the patristic literature.

Among older works, the most ambitious are the compendia of J. A. *Fabricius (q.v.). The principal recent patrologies are A. *Harnack, Geschichte der altchristlichen Literatur bis Eusebius (3 vols., 1893–1904) and O. *Bardenhewer, Patrologie (1894; Eng. tr., 1908) and Geschichte der altkirchlichen Literatur (5 vols., 1902–31). The latter is suppl. by B. *Altaner, Patrologie (1938; 6th edn., 1960; Eng. tr., 1960; rev. A. Stuiber, 1966; 8th edn., with suppl. bibl., 1978). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1: The Beginnings of Patristic Literature (Utrecht, 1950); 2: The Ante-Nicene Literature after Irenaeus (ibid., 1953); 3: The Golden Age of Greek Patristic Literature (ibid., 1960); 4: The Golden Age of Latin Patristic Literature, ed. A. di Berardino (Westminster, Md., 1986; Eng. tr. of Patrologia, 3, Turin, 1978). Other works incl. B. Steidle, OSB, Patrologia (Freiburg i.B., 1937); F. L. Cross, The Early Christian Fathers (1960); F. [M.] Young, From Nicaea to Chalcedon (1983; on the Gk. Fathers only). For the Lat. Fathers, cf. also P. de Labriolle, Histoire de la littérature latine chrétienne (1920; new edn. by G. Bardy, 1947; Eng. tr., 1924). Clavis Patrum Latinorum, ed. E. Dekkers, OSB (Sacris Erudiri, 3; Steenbrugge, 1951; 3rd edn., 1995), and Clavis Patrum Graecorum, ed. M. Geerard (5 vols., Turnhout, 1974–87), are invaluable guides to the writings and edns. of individual Fathers.

patron. See ADVOWSON.

patron saint. A saint who, by tradition or otherwise, has been chosen as the special intercessor and advocate in heaven of a particular place, person, or organization. The custom of having patron saints for churches arose from the practice of building churches over the tombs of martyrs. The expression 'titular' is also used in the same sense. Since the middle of the 19th cent. the traditional celebration of the patronal feasts of churches has been widely revived in the C of E. See also DEDICATION OF CHURCHES.

Patteson, John Coleridge (1827–71), Bp. of Melanesia. A nephew of J. T. *Coleridge, he was educated at Eton (where he came under the influence of G. A. *Selwyn) and Balliol College, Oxford. Ordained in 1853, he was persuaded by Selwyn to sail for the *South Pacific in 1855 to assist in the work of the Melanesian Mission (founded by Selwyn in 1849 to extend the Anglican Church from *New Zealand to the islands northwards). Patteson toured the islands in the Southern Cross, learnt many of the languages, founded a college on Norfolk Island for the training of Melanesian boys, and was remarkably successful in his pastoral and educational work. In 1861 he was consecrated the first Bp. of Melanesia. On 20 Sept. 1871 he was murdered on the island of Nukapu, where he had landed alone; the killing was believed to be in revenge for the kidnapping of some of the inhabitants by white men a few months earlier. His fate made a deep impression in England and aroused much interest in missionary work and in the recruitment of Melanesians as indentured labourers for plantations in Fiji and Queensland. In the American BCP (1979) and various other Anglican calendars, feast day, 20 Sept.

The standard Life is that of C. M. *Yonge (2 vols., London, 1874 [1873]); modern Life by J. Gutch (ibid., 1971). D. [L.] Hilliard, 'The Making of an Anglican Martyr: Bishop John Coleridge Patteson of Melanesia', in D. Wood (ed.), Martyrs and Martyrologies (Studies in Church History, 30; Oxford, 1993), pp. 333–45. W. H. Fremantle in DNB 47 (1895), pp. 53–6.

Pattison, Andrew Seth Pringle- (1856–1931), until 1898 Andrew Seth, Scottish philosopher. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, at Edinburgh University, and at Berlin, Jena, and Göttingen, where he studied under H. Lotze. After holding chairs at Cardiff (1883–7) and St Andrews (1887–91), he became Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh (1891–1919). He showed marked sympathy with German Idealism (I. *Kant, and esp. G. W. F. *Hegel) but he sought to free it from *pantheism and to safeguard the claims of the human person. He held that 'God or the Absolute', although not Himself an individual among others, was the source of individuation. His chief writings were Scottish Philosophy (1885), The Idea of God in the Light of Recent Philosophy (Gifford Lectures for 1912–13; 1917), and Studies in the Philosophy of Religion (1930).

Pattison's The Balfour Lectures on Realism was posthumously ed. by G. F. Barbour (1933), with memoir, pp. 3–46. Memoir by J. B. Cooper in Proceedings of the British Academy, 22 (1931), pp. 447–61; J. B. Baillie, 'Pringle Pattison as Philosopher', ibid., pp. 461–89. J. Laird in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 678 f.

Pattison, Mark (1813–84), Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford. In 1832 he entered Oriel College, then suffering from E. *Hawkins's removal of J. H. *Newman, R. H. *Froude, and R. I. Wilberforce from their tutorships, and, being mainly dependent on his own resources, came to assimilate a wide range of largely out-of-the-way knowledge. Before long he came under the religious influence of Newman, contributed to some of his translations for the Library of the Fathers, and from about 1838 to 1848 was a keen Tractarian. Later his enthusiasm for the Oxford Movement declined and with it his faith in institutional Christianity. He became keenly interested, however, in educational and university reform, and did good work among his pupils and as a university examiner, after becoming a Fellow of Lincoln College in 1839. He was one of the contributors to Essays and Reviews (1860). In 1861 he was elected Rector of Lincoln College. His very extensive writing largely took the form of essays and articles on literary subjects, but his *Isaac Casaubon (1875) was an enduring contribution to the history of modern scholarship. His posthumous Memoirs (1885) reflect the fierce anti-Tractarianism of his last years.

A selection of his Essays was pub. by his friend, H. Nettleship (2 vols., 1889). L. A. Tollemache, Recollections of Pattison (1885). V. H. H. Green, Oxford Common Room: A Study of Lincoln College and Mark Pattison (1957); id., Love in a Cool Climate: The Letters of Mark Pattison and Meta Bradley, 1879–1884 (Oxford, 1985). J. Sparrow, Mark Pattison and the Idea of a University (Cambridge, 1967). R. C. Christie in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 58–63.

Paul, St (d. prob. AD 62–5), the 'Apostle of the Gentiles'. Born during the first years of the Christian era, the future St Paul, originally 'Saul', was a Jew of the tribe of Benjamin, a native of *Tarsus in Cilicia, said by Acts to possess Roman citizenship. He was brought up a *Pharisee (Phil. 3: 5, Acts 26: 5) and perhaps had some of his education at *Jerusalem under *Gamaliel (so Acts 22: 3). This life in Judaism (Gal. 1: 14) gave him his trust in God, experience of the Law, and a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures, as well as his methods of arguing from Scripture. As a Jew of the *Diaspora he spoke and wrote Greek and shows some knowledge of rhetoric. Within a short time of the Crucifixion, he came in contact with the new 'Way' of the followers of Jesus, apparently in Palestine, and persecuted the Church (1 Cor. 15: 9, Gal. 1: 13). Acts 7: 58 represents him as present at the martyrdom of St *Stephen, and 9: 1–2 as authorized by the High Priest to arrest converts in *Damascus. As he drew near he was himself converted.

SOURCES. The account in Acts of Paul's early activities in Jerusalem and his subsequent Christian mission has been widely challenged. It was written from a later perspective when the conflict over Gentile converts and the Jewish law was no longer acute and reconciliation was needed. St *Luke therefore depicts Paul as a law-abiding Jew and omits the dispute with St *Peter recorded in Gal. 2: 11–14. He allows himself considerable freedom with the speeches and schematizes Paul's travels as missionary journeys. The primary source for Paul's life and missionary activity are the seven epistles generally agreed to be authentic. Col. and 2 Thess. are doubtful, and Eph. is widely thought to stem from a gifted follower; the Pastorals were almost certainly written later, though they contain some historical echoes and a few scholars still argue that they were written by Paul, after a postulated release from imprisonment in Rome. Rom., 1 and 2 Cor., Gal., Phil., 1 Thess., and Philem. are thought to be the work of Paul himself, but all except 1 Thess. and possibly Gal. were written within a few years' span in the mid-50s. They contain very little information about Paul's past. Acts is also fragmentary and leaves some uncertainties about even the best-documented parts of his life.

Paul's 18 months in *Corinth can be dated with some confidence by the reference in Acts 18: 12–17 to *Gallio who was procurator in Achaia in AD 51–2. Most scholars are accordingly also agreed that the vital Jerusalem meeting of Gal. 2: 1–10 (cf. Acts 15) took place in AD 49 or 50. Luke's account of Paul visiting Jerusalem at Acts 11: 27–30 cannot be fitted into this reconstruction unless, despite the discrepancies, it corresponds to the visit of Gal. 2. The epistle would then have been written before the council of Acts 15. But this is less likely than that Acts 11 is mistaken.

Paul's conversion can be dated to around AD 33 by his references in Gal. 1–2 to 3 and 14 years working backwards from the date of the council. That leaves gaps in our knowledge of his early missionary activity. The latter part of his life is much better documented, in Acts 20–8. But Luke's narrative ends with Paul's captivity in Rome and there is no solid evidence that he was released and fulfilled his ambitions for a Spanish mission (Rom. 15: 24 and 28). Other sources can scarcely be trusted to enlarge the historical picture beyond the reliable witnesses to his martyrdom in Rome under the Emp. *Nero. Writing some 30 years after his death St *Clement of Rome claims that he went 'to the limit (or goal) of the West (τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως) (Ep. 1. 5). The *Acts of St Peter, several of the Fathers (e.g. *Cyril of Jerusalem, *Epiphanius, *Chrysostom, and *Jerome), and the *Muratorian Canon assume that he visited Spain, perhaps on the basis of Rom. 15. 1 Clement 6. 1 is sometimes taken to imply that he was martyred before the Neronian *persecution, but *Eusebius dates his martyrdom as late as AD 67. *Tertullian (De Praescr. 36) adds that he was beheaded. *Gregory the Great and subsequent itineraries follow the *Acts of St Paul in identifying the spot (*Tre Fontane; see articles on APPIAN WAY, OSTIAN WAY, and ST PAUL'S OUTSIDE THE WALLS for legends of his burial). The sketch in the Acts of St Paul of a 'man small of stature, with a bald head and crooked legs, in a good state of body, with eyebrows meeting and nose somewhat hooked . . .' is probably imaginative, though Paul admits to his weak bodily presence (2 Cor. 10: 10) and a 'thorn in the flesh' (2 Cor. 12: 7).

MISSION. Despite these problems a partial outline can be constructed. Paul saw a vision of the risen Lord Jesus (1 Cor. 9: 1, narrated with some variations in Acts 9: 3–9, 22: 5–16, and 26: 4–18). He implies that his call and status as an apostle rested on this (1 Cor. 15: 8 f.). It seems from Gal. 1: 16 that from the outset his mission was to the Gentiles, though a few have questioned this. Some have inferred that his initial contact was with 'hellenists' who did not insist on Gentile converts observing the whole law of *Moses. Paul went first to Arabia and back to Damascus, then three years later to Jerusalem, where he came to know Peter and saw St *James, and on to Syria and Cilicia (Gal. 1).

Paul's 14 years, prior to the second visit to Jerusalem, include his journey with St *Barnabas (and John *Mark at first, Acts 15: 37 f.) from Antioch to *Cyprus, Pamphylia, S. Galatia (Pisidian Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe) and back, described in Acts 13–14. They may also possibly include (contrary to Acts) his subsequent travels with *Silas and *Timothy through Phrygia and N. Galatia (cf. Acts 16: 6), Troas (where perhaps Luke joined them, cf. Acts 16: 10: 'we') and Greece (Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea in Macedonia; *Athens and Corinth in Achaia). It is uncertain when the dispute in Antioch occurred. It may have preceded the second visit to Jerusalem, if Gal. 2: 1–14 is not chronological (so Lüdemann). The so-called council there allowed Paul to continue his Gentile mission on condition that he raised funds for the Jerusalem Church, but some Jewish Christians continued to oppose him.

Around AD 50–2 Paul spent 18 months in Corinth (Acts 18: 11), establishing the Church with the help of Silas and Timothy (2 Cor. 1: 19). The next major centre of his activity was *Ephesus (Acts 19), where he remained for 2–3 years (AD 52–4). There were disturbances (cf. 1 Cor. 15: 32) and perhaps imprisonment, but also successes. It is likely that the communities in the hinterland of Asia Minor (Colossae, *Philadelphia, Hierapolis, and *Laodicea) resulted from the work of Paul and his assistants in this period. After an enforced departure from Ephesus he went to Macedonia (2 Cor. 7: 5) before going S. to Achaia (prob. Corinth) for three months (Acts 20: 2 f.) in AD 56–7, prior to his final Jerusalem visit, with representatives of his Gentile congregations, bringing the 'collection'.

We know more about Paul's relations with the Corinthian 'saints' than any other congregation, thanks to the extensive correspondence contained in 1 and 2 Cor. Their practical problems in living the new life in a pagan environment, their doctrinal misunderstandings (including possibly incipient *Gnosticism), liturgical chaos, and challenges to Paul's authority explain his 'anxiety for all the Churches' (2 Cor. 11: 28). The earlier 1 Thess. reveals other problems in his Churches: persecution from Jews and pagans. But the most disruptive issue that Paul faced in this period came from other missionaries visiting his congregations and persuading his converts to observe the Jewish law. Gal. provides an angry but reasoned response; he argues from Scripture and experience against the necessity of observing the Torah. The issue here, as later in Phil. 3, was *circumcision rather than eating with Gentiles which had led to the earlier dispute at Antioch (Gal. 2: 11–14), but the principle on which the new community was based is the same: faith in Christ implies freedom from the ordinances of Moses.

The outcome of the dispute in Galatia is not known. For Paul himself in the 50s, the vital question was whether the Jerusalem Church would finally accept his law-free Gentile mission. He no doubt hoped that the money he had collected as promised (Gal. 2: 10, 1 Cor. 16: 1–4, 2 Cor. 8–9, and Rom. 15: 25–31) would help, and perhaps saw it as the fulfilment of the prophecies (Is. 60) about the nations bringing their wealth to Jerusalem. As he prepared to leave Greece for Jerusalem (Acts 20: 3) he wrote to the Jewish and Gentile believers in Rome, and asked for their prayers that he would be delivered from the unbelievers in Judaea and that his 'service' would be acceptable to the saints in Jerusalem (Rom. 15: 31). He explained that his work in the E. was complete, that he was planning a mission to Spain (15: 19 and 23 f.), and expected to visit them on the way.

Paul's concern was well grounded. However 'gladly' (Acts 21: 17) the Church in Jerusalem welcomed Paul and his Gentile party with their gift, it was apparently a proposal of James that led to his arrest. Paul's appearance in the *Temple caused a stir, and he escaped lynching by being taken into custody. There followed trials before the *Sanhedrin and the governor Felix in Caesarea, and two years' imprisonment until the new governor Festus reopened the case (AD 59). On appealing to Caesar, he was sent to Rome as a prisoner. After shipwreck (Acts 27), he probably arrived in AD 60, and spent two years under house arrest (Acts 28: 30).

The authentic epistles reveal more than Acts about Paul's character, though perhaps less than at first sight appears, because rhetorical conventions account for some of the pathos and Rom. 7 is no longer considered autobiographical. But a clear picture does emerge of Paul's apostolic self-consciousness, something of his religion, including *ecstacy (2 Cor. 12: 2–4), and especially his main convictions. These are coherent, though marshalled in different ways to argue a case or provide encouragement.

THEOLOGY. Paul was a phrase-maker, who wrote rhetorically powerful and theologically profound letters. Contrary to his own wishes, his understanding of what he called 'the gospel (of God)' accelerated the separation of the messianic sect from mainstream Judaism. His insistence that the crucified and risen Christ rather than Torah was decisive for all believers in their relationship to God made that schism inevitable and permanent. He maintained without question his earlier beliefs about God and the revelation of God in the Law and the Prophets, but the new factor was what God was doing now. Having sent His Son (Gal. 4: 4, Rom. 8: 3) God was rescuing Gentiles as well as Jews from the present evil age by transferring them into the age to come which was dawning with the resurrection of the crucified *Messiah, and would soon transform the world. A variety of symbolism is used to describe this salvation event and process.

The decisive factor in Paul's messianic Judaism was thus the arrival and identity of the Messiah, 'Jesus Christ our Lord', whose death he understood as a sacrifice, as did those who were already followers before him (1 Cor. 15: 3), and whose resurrection was the first-fruits and beginning of the general resurrection inaugurating the new creation. Believers are through *Baptism (symbolically) united with Him (Rom. 6: 3–5), incorporated into Him, and so are 'in Christ'. This common phrase refers back to the person whose death and resurrection constitute the *eschatological event and describes the relationship between the believers and God through Christ in a quasi-spatial or locative way. That intimate unity of the believer and Lord can be described by other metaphors. Believers are Christ's body (1 Cor. 12: 27), one body in Christ (Rom. 12: 5), and this idea lends itself to expressing the unity and functional diversity of the Christian community (1 Cor. 12: 12 ff.). That unity in Christ can also be expressed through the metaphor of 'putting on' Christ like a garment. In Christ distinctions of race, gender, and social status are no longer germane (Gal. 3: 27 f.; cf. 1 Cor. 12: 13).

One who was baptized 'into' Christ had received the Spirit, another indicator of the new age fundamental to the self-understanding of the early Church. Paul so personalizes the *Holy Spirit that it is sometimes hard to distinguish between the Spirit and the risen Lord (Rom. 8: 9–11 and possibly 2 Cor. 3: 17). He draws out the moral significance of this experience of sonship by adoption and sees in the Spirit the basis and motor of the Christian life (Gal. 5, Rom. 8). The Spirit both sheds God's love in the believer's heart (Rom. 5: 5) and bears fruit in love, joy, peace, etc. (Gal. 5: 22). He is the guarantee of future glory and enables the believer to endure the sufferings of the present age in hope.

Because Paul's surviving letters are directed to believers, usually to Churches he has recently founded, they contain more moral admonition than doctrinal instruction. But it is typical of Paul the theologian that he rarely offers advice or encouragement without rooting it in the gospel and so giving expression to his fundamental convictions. He constantly roots the moral imperative in the reality of Christian experience and describes that as an unseen present and a future hope. He adds persuasive force to his moral exhortations by contrasting this 'now you are' with a 'once you were'.

Paul's picture of human existence outside Christ is negative. The world is under judgement and needs God's liberating intervention. This is explored in Rom. as part of an argument that all, Jews and Gentiles alike, are in the same predicament and rescued in the same way—by faith in Christ. Paul's language about God's 'putting right' on this basis (*justification) is drawn from Scripture, using language perhaps taken from Is. 53: 11 and already current among Jewish Christians. Paul combined this language about being 'right with God' with his basic Christian vocabulary of 'faith' (in Christ) by quoting Hab. 2: 4 and Gen. 15: 6 in order to construct an argument against those who insisted on Gentile converts becoming Jewish pros-elytes. All are put right, like *Abraham, on the basis of faith, not Jewish religious practice ('works of the law').

Although this terminology was drawn from Scripture for the purpose of a particular argument against Judaizers, it is clear from Gal. 2: 16–21 and Phil. 3: 5–11 how well it articulates Paul's own experience of God's saving action in Christ and the appropriate response of faith which includes hope, obedience, trust, confidence, and confession. What this gospel meant for the Law and the Jewish people was bound to be not only personally important for Paul but also theologically urgent. Nothing less than God's consistency was at stake.The discussion of these matters in Rom. is therefore the clearest expression of Paul's theology. Outside the sharply polemical context of Gal., he is able to insist on the positive function of the Law without loosening his central conviction that faith in Christ is alone decisive for salvation of Jews and Gentiles alike. He is also able to be positive about the privileges once given to Israel without leaving room for boasting in them, and he looks forward to God's ultimate inclusion of all Israel in salvation (Rom. 11: 26).

INFLUENCE. Paul's hope for historical Israel was soon lost and has only recently been retrieved as a basis for Jewish–Christian relations. His refusal to submit Gentile converts to circumcision, by contrast, contributed to the success of the Christian mission outside Judaism. His insistence that 'the truth of the gospel' required only faith in Christ and the life in the Spirit which flows from that secured Christianity's identity as a new religion worshipping the same God of Israel, only now 'through Jesus Christ our Lord'.

The collection of his surviving letters and their inclusion in Christian Scripture gave Paul a different kind of influence. His rhetoric has helped to shape the faith of millions who have not understood his arguments, and his arguments have proved fertile even when misunderstood. Many of his metaphors have lent themselves to doctrinal elaboration. For example, his genuine epistles barely make explicit an ecclesiology, but phrases such as 'body of Christ' were developed by others. Outside its original context Paul's scriptural argument associating righteousness with 'faith not works' attracted little attention except where 'works' were understood in new, not strictly Pauline ways.

The polemical contrast drawn by Paul between the old and the new way of salvation was usually weakened into a smooth development from promise to fulfilment. *Marcion, however, took it to cut out the Jewish roots of Christianity. Similarly, where Paul's realism about the constraints of living in a still unredeemed world was lost, his antithesis between faith and works could lead to *antinomianism. This claim that Christian community and the hope of salvation no longer depend on observing the Mosaic law taught St *Augustine that the gospel is a matter of grace or gift, and Christian morality life in the Spirit. That bulwark against moralism is true to Paul even if Paul himself did not intend 'works' to refer to morality. Augustine's anti-Pelagian theology of *grace was not generally followed to the extremes which threaten human free will and undercut morality, but it largely determined the course of W. medieval theology. The negative implications of Paul's 'apart from the works of the law' found their most powerful application in M. *Luther's doctrine of justification by faith alone. Augustine's doctrine of *predestination, based on Rom. 9, was less influential, but was also continued by the Reformers, esp. in J. *Calvin's 'double predestination'. The E. Fathers reduced this element in Paul to divine foreknowledge, and W. humanism later agreed. But W. anthropology and notably the doctrine of *original sin still owe much to Augustine's interpretation of Rom. 5 and 7.

The W. Church's preoccupation with this part of Paul's vocabulary has brought its own distortions. It allowed legal categories an unwarranted centrality in medieval Christian thinking and has supported too easily the modern tendency to make humanity the centre of theology. In both cases the new historical exegesis advocated from the 17th cent. by H. *Grotius, J. *Locke, and others has introduced correctives from within Paul's own writing. As historical criticism was developed in the late 18th and esp. the 19th cent., notably by F. C. *Baur, Paul as known from his epistles has been the central figure in reconstructions of Christian origins. This shift of focus later weakened theological reflection on his teaching, and that in turn provoked the neo-Reformation reaction of K. *Barth, which R. *Bultmann and his successors fused with the 'history of religions' research (*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule) of their liberal Protestant teachers. Today intellectually responsible study of Paul is based on linguistic and historical study, sometimes enriched by literary and sociological insights. But the epistles are still most widely known through the conceptual frameworks provided by Christian tradition, and the Apostle himself through the idealized narrative of Acts.

A joint feast for SS Peter and Paul is observed in E. and W. on 29 June, in addition to the Feast of the *Conversion of St Paul on 25 Jan. in the W. A further commemoration of St Paul on 30 June was dropped from the RC Calendar in 1969.

The first modern treatment is F. C. Baur, Paulus, der Apostel Jesu Christ (1845; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1873–5). W. M. *Ramsay, St Paul the Traveller and the Roman Citizen (1895) and other works; W. *Wrede, Paulus (1905; Eng. tr., 1907); A. *Deissmann, Paulus (1911; 2nd edn., 1925; Eng. tr., 1926); K. *Lake, The Earlier Epistles of St Paul: Their Motive and Origin (1911); P. Gardner, The Religious Experience of St Paul (1911); W. L. Knox, St Paul and the Church of Jerusalem (1925); id., St Paul (1932); A. D. Nock, St Paul (1938); W. L. Knox, St Paul and the Church of the Gentiles (1939); J. Knox, Chapters in a Life of Paul (1954; rev. edn., 1989); G. Ogg, The Chronology of the Life of Paul (1966); G. Bornkamm, Paulus (Stuttgart, 1969; Eng. tr., 1971). F. F. Bruce, Paul: Apostle of the Free Spirit (Exeter [1977]); L. E. Keck, Paul and his Letters (Philadelphia [1979]); R. Jewett, Dating Paul's Life (in USA and Canada, A Chronology of Paul's Life, 1979); G. Lüdemann, Paulus, der Heidenapostel (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 123, 130, etc.; 1980 ff.; Eng. tr., 1984 ff.); J. C. Beker, Paul the Apostle: The Triumph of God in Life and Thought (Philadelphia [1980]); W. A. Meeks, The First Urban Christians: The Social World of the Apostle Paul (New Haven, Conn., and London [1983]); H. W. Tajra, The Trial of St Paul: A Juridical Exegesis of the Second Half of the Acts of the Apostles (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 2. Reihe, 35; 1989); A. F. Segal, Paul the Convert: The Apostolate and Apostacy of Saul the Pharisee (New Haven, Conn., and London [1990]); J. Becker, Paulus: Der Apostel der Völker (Tübingen, 1990; Eng. tr., Louisville, Ky., 1993); E. P. Sanders, Paul ('Past Masters', Oxford, 1991).

Among studies in his theology: O. Pfleiderer, Der Paulinismus (1873; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1877); C. A. A. Scott, Christianity according to St Paul (1927); A. *Schweitzer, Die Mystik des Apostels Paulus (1930; Eng. tr., The Mysticism of Paul the Apostle, 1931); R. Bultmann, Theologie des Neuen Testaments (3 parts, Tübingen, 1948–53; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1952–5); C. K. Barrett, From First Adam to Last: A Study in Pauline Theology (1962); H. [N.] Ridderbos, Paulus: Ontwerp van zijn Theologie (Kampen, 1966; Eng. tr., 1977); K. Stendahl, Paul among Jews and Gentiles (Philadelphia [1976]; London, 1977); E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism (1977); id., Paul, the Law and the Jewish People (Philadelphia [1983]; London, 1985); H. Räisänen, Paul and the Law (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 29; 1983; 2nd edn., 1987); J. A. Ziesler, Pauline Christianity (Oxford Bible Series, 1983; rev. 1990). Studies on special subjects: O. Pfleiderer, The Influence of the Apostle Paul (1885, *Hibbert Lectures); A. Schweitzer, Geschichte der paulinischen Forschung von der Reformation bis auf die Gegenwart (1911; Eng. tr., Paul and his Interpreters, 1912). H. A. A. Kennedy, St Paul and the Mystery-Religions (1913); W. D. Davies, Paul and Rabbinic Judaism (1948); L. Cerfaux, Le Christ dans la théologie de saint Paul (1951; Eng. tr., 1959); J. Munck, Paulus und die Heilsgeschichte (Acta Jutlandica, 26. 1; 1954; Eng. tr., 1959); H. J. Schoeps, Paulus: Die Theologie des Apostels im Lichte der jüdischen Religionsgeschichte (Tübingen, 1959; Eng. tr., 1961); V. P. Furnish, Theology and Ethics in Paul (Nashville [1968]); R. B. Hays, Echoes of Scripture in the Letters of Paul (New Haven, Conn., and London [1989]). See also bibl. to ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

Paul, Acts of St. An apocryphal Book, written in Greek and put into circulation in the latter half of the 2nd cent. Unlike most apocryphal 'Acts', it appears to have been the work of an orthodox Christian. It was compiled in Asia Minor, and is contained in its completest form in Coptic in a Heidelberg papyrus which C. Schmidt pieced together in 1904 from some 2,000 fragments. Its reconstruction proved that a number of short treatises which had circulated independently and had been known to earlier scholars were all parts of this single work, among them the 'Martyrdom of St Paul', the 'Acts of *Paul and Thecla', and possibly the 'Third Ep. of St Paul to the *Corinthians' (qq.v.). Several passages of the Gk. text have long been known, the most important of them one pub. by C. Schmidt in 1936 from the Hamburg Public Library. It is now established that the work made use of the 'Acts of St *Peter'. The Acts, which were designed to glorify St Paul's achievements, incorporate legendary material circulating in the 2nd cent., as well as material which may reflect NT influence. The author, however, had little regard for historical truth, and it was doubtless the romancing character of the Acts rather than any heretical bias in their teaching that caused him, as *Tertullian relates (De Baptismo, 17), to be deprived of his office of presbyter. The Acts were used by *Origen, *Hippolytus, and *Cyprian.

Older edn. of texts in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet (eds.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 1 (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 23–44, 104–17, and 235–72. Coptic text ed. C. Schmidt, Acta Pauli aus der Heidelberger koptischen Papyrushandschrift Nr. 1 (1904; with facsimile in separate Tafelband, 1904, and Zusätze, 1905); id., 'Ein neues Fragment der Heidelberger Acta Pauli', Sb. (Berl.), 1909, pp. 216–20; id., ΠΡΑΞΕΙΣ ΠΑΥΛΟΥ (Veröffentlichungen aus der Hamburger Staats- und Universitäts-Bibliothek, NF 2; 1936). Further frag. ed. G. D. Kilpatrick and C. H. Roberts in JTS 47 (1946), pp. 196–9. Two further frags. among the *Bodmer papyri described by R. Kasser in Revue d'Histoire et de Philosophie religieuses, 40 (1960), pp. 45–57. Crit. edn. by W. Rordorf (CC, Series Apocrypha, in preparation). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 350–89. Ger. tr. in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 214–43, with introd. by W. Schneelmelcher, pp. 193–214; Eng. tr., 2 [1992] pp. 213–70, incl. Eng. tr. of text. L. Vouaux, Les Actes de Paul et ses lettres apocryphes: Introduction, textes, traduction et commentaire (1913). E. Peterson, 'Einige Bemerkungen zum Hamburger Papyrusfragment der Acta Pauli', VC 3 (1949), pp. 142–62.

Paul, Apocalypse of St. An apocryphal apocalypse, written in Greek and dating from the latter half of the 4th cent., which describes in detail what St *Paul saw when he was taken up into the 'third heaven' (2 Cor. 12: 2). It narrates that St Paul was led into paradise, where in the city of God he met all the blessed—in one quarter the *Prophets, in another the *Holy Innocents, in another *Abraham, *Isaac, and *Jacob, and in the fourth those who had wholeheartedly devoted themselves to God. The treatise, which was known to St *Augustine (*c.*416), became very popular as a source for ideas about the after-life, and it was translated into Latin, Syriac, Coptic, and Ethiopic. It also enjoyed a great vogue in the Middle Ages, being quoted by *Dante (Inferno, 2. 28). It is to be distinguished from both the 'Apocalypse of Paul' discovered in a Coptic version at *Nag Hammadi, and from the 'Ascension of Paul' mentioned by St *Epiphanius (Haer. 38. 2) as a *Gnostic writing; of this last nothing survives.

Gk. text in C. *Tischendorf, Apocalypses Apocryphae (Leipzig, 1866), pp. 34–69. Crit. edn. by M. R. James (ed.), Apocrypha Anecdota (Texts and Studies, 2, no. 3; Cambridge, 1893), pp. 11–42. Syr. text ed. G. Ricciotti in Orientalia, 2 (Rome, 1933), pp. 1–25, 120–49. Lat. text ed. in several recensions, with full discussion, by T. Silverstein (Studies and Documents, ed. K. *Lake and S. Lake, 4; 1935); id., 'The Vision of Saint Paul: New Links and Patterns in the Western Tradition', AHDLMA 26 (for 1959; 1960), pp. 199–248, incl. further texts. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 616–44. Ger. tr., with introd. by H. Duensing and A. de Santos Otero, in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 644–75; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 712–48. R. P. Casey, 'The Apocalypse of Paul', JTS 34 (1933), pp. 1–32. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 146–9. Ger. tr. of the Nag Hammadi Apocalypse of Paul, with introd. by W.-P. Funk, in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 628–33; Eng. tr. 2 [1992], pp. 695–700.

Paul, Clerks Regular of St. See BARNABITES.

Paul, Martyrdom of St. An apocryphal account of the death of St *Paul dating from the latter part of the 2nd cent. It forms the concluding section of the 'Acts of St *Paul' (q.v.). It describes how Paul was brought into the presence of *Nero at Rome, sentenced to death, and led to execution by the prefect, Longus, and the centurion, Cestus (who were converted). Two of the Greek MSS containing the 'Martyrdom' also include the 'Acts of St *Peter'.

Two Gk. texts with a Lat. tr. in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet (eds.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 1 (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 104–17. Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 385–8; also in Schneemelcher, 2 (Eng. tr. [1992]), pp. 260–3. For further items see bibl. to PAUL, ACTS OF ST.

Paul III (1468–1549), Pope from 1534. Alessandro Farnese was educated at Rome and Florence at the court of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and created cardinal-deacon by *Alexander VI in 1493. He held numerous benefices, among them the bishoprics of Parma and Ostia, became

Dean of the Sacred College under *Leo X, and was unanimously elected to the Papacy on 13 Oct. 1534. Though in his personal life a typical Renaissance Pope—he had three sons and a daughter, was much given to worldly pleasures, and indulged in unlimited nepotism—he was an efficient promoter of the inner reform of the Church. He created as cardinals men of virtue and scholarship such as R. *Pole, G. P. Carafa (later *Paul IV), and G. *Morone, established ecclesiastical commissions to draw up plans for the reform of the Church, and favoured the new orders, e.g. the *Ursulines, the *Barnabites, and esp. the *Jesuits which he approved in 1540 by the bull '*Regimini militantis Ecclesiae'. In 1542 he restored the *Inquisition, and above all fought hard against the opposition to a General Council which finally opened at *Trent in 1545. He was, however, less successful in his political efforts to check the spread of Protestantism. The religious colloquies in Germany and the wars of the Emperor whom he supported could not restore unity, and the bull which he published against *Henry VIII in 1538 alienated England still further from Rome. His last years were darkened by the death of his son and the revolt of his grandson, Ottavio, who took the part of the Emperor against him. Like his immediate predecessors, Paul III was a friend of art and scholarship. He appointed prominent theologians to the chairs of the Roman University, enriched the *Vatican Library with valuable MSS, and made *Michelangelo architect-in-chief of *St Peter's.

The best collection of his bulls is that in the Bullarum Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 6 (Turin, 1860), pp. 173–401. There is a good modern study by C. Capasso (2 vols., Messina, 1923–4 [on wrappers '1925']). L. Cardauns, 'Paul III, Karl V und Franz I in den Jahren 1535 und 1536', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken herausgegeben vom koenigl. Preussischen Historischen Institut in Rom, 11 (1908), pp. 147–244. L. Dorez, La Cour du Pape Paul III d'après les registres de la Trésorerie Secrète (Collection F. de Navenne) (2 vols., 1932). W. Friedensburg, Kaiser Karl V und Papst Paul III (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, no. 153; 1932). W. H. Edwards, Paulus III oder die geistliche Gegenreformation (1933). Pastor, 11 and 12 (1912), with full bibl. J. F. Loughlin in CE 11 (1911), pp. 579–81, s.v.; L. Marchal in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 9–20, s.v., with detailed bibl.; C. L. Hohl in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 13 f. See also bibl. to TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Paul IV (1476–1559), Pope from 1555. Giovanni Pietro (Giampietro) Carafa came of a distinguished Neapolitan family. Having been brought by his uncle, Oliviero Carafa (1430–1511), into close relations with the *Curia, he became possessed from early life with a keen enthusiasm for the reform of abuses. From 1504 to 1524 he was Bp. of Chieti (Theate), sitting in 1520 on the commission at Rome appointed to deal with the affair of M. *Luther. In 1524 he resigned his bishopric in order to found, in conjunction with St *Cajetan, the *Theatine Order, which was named after him and in which he continued to be one of the chief movers. In 1536 he became Abp. of Naples and was created cardinal, and in 1542 he reorganized the *Inquisition. Finally in 1555 he was elected Pope. Despite his age he acted with great determination, though his actions in his later years seem to have been motivated more by the desire to advance his relatives than by devotion to the highest needs of the Church. His unpopularity was increased by his political sympathies, hatred of Spain making him quarrel with *Mary Tudor; and his opposition to anything savouring of *Protestantism was so violent that he even had cardinals brought before the Inquisition.

The best collection of his bulls is that in the Bullarum Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 6 (Turin, 1860), pp. 489–566. R. Ancel, OSB (ed.), Nonciatures de France: Nonciatures de Paul IV [to 4 July 1557] (Archives de l'Histoire Religieuse de la France, 2 vols., 1909–11). A. Caraccioli, Collectanea Historica de Vita Pauli Quarti (Cologne, 1612). C. Bromato, Theatine, Storia di Paolo IV (2 vols., Ravenna, 1748–53). G. M. Monti, Ricerche su Paolo IV Carafa (Benevento, 1923; repr. Turin, 1980). G. Duruy, Le Cardinal Carlo Carafa (1519–1561): Étude sur le pontificat de Paul IV (1882). L. Riess, Die Politik Pauls IV und seiner Nepoten (Historische Studien, 67; 1909). There is also a series of important arts. by R. Ancel, listed in DTC (see below). Pastor, 14 (1924), pp. 56–426, with full bibl. to date of German edn. G. Mollat in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 20–3, s.v., with detailed bibl.; H. Jedin in EC 9 (1952), cols. 736–8, s.v. 'Paolo IV'; F. Andreu, Theatine, in DIP 2 (1973), cols. 256–61, s.v. 'Carafa, Gian Pietro', with bibl.

Paul V (1552–1621), Pope from 1605. Camillo Borghese was a descendant of a noble Sienese family. He studied law at Perugia and Padua, was created Cardinal in 1596, Papal Vicar in 1603, and elected and crowned Pope in May 1605. The first years of his reign were troubled by the conflict with *Venice, whose government had attacked ecclesiastical immunities and liberties by promulgating two laws (1604 and 1605) which forbade the erection of religious buildings without the consent of the Senate and the donation or sale of secular property to the Church. After a refusal to repeal these laws, the Pope excommunicated the Senate and put the city under the *interdict. In the theological controversy which ensued, he was defended by R. *Bellarmine and C. *Baronius against the *Servite, P. *Sarpi, who in the interests of Venice denied all temporal power and privileges to the Church. About the same time the English question became once more acute in consequence of the Oath of Allegiance required by *James I, which the Pope condemned in two Briefs in 1606 and 1607. This step gave rise to a dispute between the archpriest, G. *Blackwell, who defended the Oath, and the *Jesuits, who insisted on the right of the Pope to depose kings, and later between James I himself and Bellarmine. In his Continental policy Paul V preserved a neutral attitude between the two rival powers France and Spain, whom he tried to reconcile in order to present a united Christian front to the Turks. After futile efforts at re-establishing the Roman Church in Russia, he lived to see the beginnings of the *Thirty Years War in Germany. He died of a stroke soon after the celebrations of the Catholic victory in the Battle of the White Mountain. A man of blameless life (except for his nepotism) and a skilful canonist, he endeavoured from the beginning of his reign to enforce the decrees of the Council of *Trent. He fostered the work of the Congregations devoted to education and care of the sick as well as the missions, notably those in *Africa and *Canada; and many popular saints were canonized or beatified by him, among them *Charles Borromeo and *Frances of Rome. He was greatly devoted to the city of Rome, among the works which he carried through being the completion of *St Peter's and the extension of the *Vatican Library.

Life by A. Bzovius, OP (Rome, 1626). [C. P. Goujet], Histoire du pontificat de Paul V (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1765). E. Cornet, Paolo e la Repubblica Veneta: Giornale dal 22 ottobre 1605–9 giugno 1607. Corredato di note e documenti (Vienna, 1859). P. Pirri, SJ, L'interdetto di Venezia del 1606 e i Gesuiti: Silloge di documenti con introduzione (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 14; 1959). A. Nürnberger, 'Papst Paul V und das venezianische Interdict', Hist. J. 4 (1883), pp. 189–209 and 473–515; id., 'Documente zum Ausgleich zwischen Paul V und der Republik Venedig', RQ 2 (1888), pp. 64–80, 248–76, and 354–67. C. P. de Magistris, Per la storia del componimento della contesta tra la Repubblica Veneta e Paolo V, 1605–1607: Documenti (posthumously pub., Turin, 1941). J. M. Pou y Martí, OFM, 'La intervención española en el conflicto entre Paulo V y Venecia (1605–1607)', Miscellanea Pio Paschini, 2 (Lateranum, NS 15; 1949), pp. 359–81. W. Reinhard, Papstfinanz und Nepotismus unter Paul V. (Päpste und Papsttum, 6; 2 vols., 1974). On his nepotism, see also V. Reinhardt, Kardinal Scipione Borghese (1605–1633): Vermögen, Finanzen und sozialer Aufstieg eines Papstnepoten (Bibliothek des Deutschen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 58; 1984). Pastor, 25 and 26 (1937), with full bibl. to date of Ger. edn. J. F. Loughlin in CE 11 (1911), pp. 581 f., s.v.; L. Marchal in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 23–37, s.v., with detailed bibl. G. B. Picotti in EC 9 (1952), cols. 738–41, s.v. 'Paolo V'. See also bibl. to SARPI, P.

Paul VI (1897–1978), Pope from 1963. Giovanni Battista Montini, the son of a parliamentary delegate and editor of a Catholic newspaper, Il Cittadino di Brescia, was a delicate child; he was educated at home and attended the diocesan seminary only as circumstances permitted. After his ordination in 1920 he went to the Sapienza and then the *Gregorianum in Rome. Apart from a few months at the nunciature in Warsaw in 1923, he held office in the Papal Secretariat of State from 1922 for over 30 years. In 1931 he became a domestic prelate and in 1938 he accompanied E. Pacelli (the future *Pius XII) to the *Eucharistic Congress at Budapest. After the death of L. Maglione, the Secretary of State, in 1944, Pius XII appointed no successor and Montini, as pro-secretary for the internal business of the Church, discharged his business directly under the Pope. In this capacity he was responsible for Papal relief work, and he played a large part in the organization of the *Holy Year in 1950 and the Marian Year in 1954. His appointment as Abp. of Milan in 1954, involving his departure from Rome, is sometimes thought to have been due to internal Vatican politics. In Milan he did much to restore and rebuild churches destroyed during the Second World War, as well as trying to deal with the acute social problems of a highly industrialized diocese. In 1958, on the death of Pius XII, his name was widely mentioned as a candidate for the Papacy. Pope *John XXIII, shortly after his election, created Montini a Cardinal; he continually brought him forward at the Second *Vatican Council, and during the first session Montini was a member of the Secretariat appointed to examine the questions raised by members of the Council. On the death of John XXIII in 1963 he was elected Pope. He quickly promised to continue the Council and declared his intention of pursuing the same policy as his predecessor.

Within three weeks of his election he convened the Second Session of the Vatican Council, which he opened on 29 Sept. 1963. Before the opening of the Sessions he had issued a revised Ordo Concilii to expedite business, and he introduced a number of procedural reforms, such as the admission of laymen as auditors and the establishment of a press committee. In Nov. 1963 he enlarged the Conciliar Commissions to make them more representative. Before the meeting of the Third Session in 1964, he also admitted some women, both religious and lay, as auditors. He refused to intervene in the Third Session when he was asked to overrule a decision postponing a vote on the schema on religious liberty, but on his own authority he modified the Decree on Ecumenism and he declared the BVM 'Mother of the Church' despite the fact that the fathers of the Council had refused to attribute the title to her. He also directed that an explanatory note ('nota praevia') be added to the text of the 1964 constitution on the Church containing important clarifications. At the Fourth Session he announced that he was establishing a permanent 'Synod of Bishops', which would have deliberative as well as consultative powers at the Pope's discretion. At the close of the Council he proclaimed an extraordinary Jubilee or Holy Year, to be observed from 1 Jan. to *Whitsunday (29 May) 1966, in order that the faithful might be familiarized with the teaching of the Council and the life of the Church renewed. [For the decrees of the Council, see VATICAN COUNCIL, SECOND.]

Paul VI established a number of post-conciliar Commissions to put into effect the wishes of the Council and confirmed the permanent Secretariats for the Promotion of Christian Unity, for Non-Christian Religions, and for Non-Believers. The most far-reaching reforms of his pontificate were effected largely through the working of these Commissions, most notably the publication of a new *Missal in 1970, with its accompanying *lectionary, and a new *Breviary in 1971, which together involved a reordering of the Mass and Office; these changes coincided with the introduction of the use of the vernacular. Other reforms, such as that of the Codex Iuris Canonici, were put in hand, though this was completed only under *John Paul II. Paul VI's own encyclicals generally appeared more conservative; the most important include Mysterium Fidei (3 Sept. 1965) reaffirming the traditional doctrine of the Eucharist, Sacerdotalis coelibatus (24 June 1967), insisting on the need for priestly celibacy, and Humanae Vitae (25 July 1968) condemning artificial methods of birth control. However, he also dealt with social, economic, and political issues in Populorum Progressio (16 March 1967). After 1968 he had to face growing tensions within the Church; the demand for celibacy was challenged and many religious sought secularization; there was widespread criticism of Humanae Vitae, and traditionalists, such as Abp. M. Lefebvre, refused to accept the conciliar reforms. In 1970 Paul VI proclaimed the first women, St *Teresa of Ávila and St *Catherine of Siena, *Doctors of the Church, but any idea of the ordination of women to the priesthood was firmly rejected. He also convened a number of episcopal synods on social and economic justice and on the priesthood (1971), evangelization (1974), and catechesis (1977).

In Jan. 1964 on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land he embraced *Athenagoras, the Oecumenical Patr. of Constantinople, in *Jerusalem, and at the close of the Vatican Council he took part in a historic gesture of friendship with the Eastern *Orthodox Church: before Mass on 7 Dec. 1965 a joint declaration was read in which Paul VI and Athenagoras expressed their mutual regret for the events of 1054, when Cardinal *Humbert of Silva Candida and Patr. *Michael Cerularius had excommunicated each other. After the Mass the Pope exchanged embraces with Athenagoras's envoy. With Anglicans and other Churches Paul VI fostered good relations. He received in Rome two Abps. of *Canterbury (A. M. *Ramsey and F. D. Coggan) and established the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission. He also addressed the *World Council of Churches in Geneva in 1969. He was the first Pope to travel extensively abroad, going to New York to address the United Nations General Assembly in 1965 and visiting *Uganda in 1969 and the *Philippines and *Australia in 1970. He expanded the college of cardinals, making it a truly international body, and restricted the right of cardinals to vote in Papal elections to those under the age of 80. He also fixed a retirement age of bishops and clergy at 75. He reorganized the *Curia, reduced the ceremonial pomp of the Papacy and sold his tiara for the benefit of the poor. The cause for his beatification was opened on 11 May 1993.

Official docs. are pr. in the AAS for the years of his pontificate. Insegnamenti di Paolo VI (16 vols. + index to vols. 1–12, Vatican City, 1965–79; Fr. tr., Documents Pontificaux de Paul VI, 17 vols. + 3 vols. of index covering the whole pontificate, St-Maurice, Switzerland, 1967–83). N. Vian (ed.), Anni e opere di Paolo VI [1978]. Paul VI et la modernité dans l'Église: Actes du Colloque organisé par l'École française de Rome (Rome 2–4 juin, 1983) (Rome and Brescia, 1984). P. Hebblethewaite, Paul VI: The First Modern Pope (1993). P. Arató, SJ, and N. Vian, Paulus PP. VI, 1963 1978: Elenchus Bibliographicus (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto Paolo VI, 1; Brescia, 1981). There are other specialized vols. in this series and in the series Quaderni dell'Istituto Paolo VI (ibid., 1981 ff.). A. Boland, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 522–36, s.v.

Paul of Constantinople, St (d. 350). A native of *Thessalonica, he succeeded Alexander in the see of *Constantinople in 336. He was soon displaced by the Arian *Macedonius, who had the support of the Emp. Constantius; and though he regained his see he was soon after removed again and went into exile in the W. Under pressure from Constans, the Emp. of the W., he again recovered his see, but after the death of Constans (350) he was once again exiled, first to Singara in Mesopotamia, then to Emesa, and finally to Cucusus in Armenia, where he was strangled. He was a zealous upholder of orthodoxy and a close associate of St *Athanasius and Pope *Julius. Feast day in E., 6 Nov.; in W., 7 June.

The literary refs. to Paul are scattered. W. Telfer, 'Paul of Constantinople', HTR 43 (1950), pp. 31–92, with refs.

Paul of the Cross, St (1694–1775), founder of the *Passionists. Paul Francis Danei was the eldest son of a noble family whose fortunes had declined. He led a life of prayer and great austerity in the world until, in 1720, a vision inspired him to found a religious order in honour of the Passion of our Lord. In a 40-days' retreat he drew up its rule, which is in substance that still followed by his congregation. In 1725 *Benedict XIII encouraged him to receive novices and in 1727 ordained him and his brother priests. Paul then retired to Monte Argentario, where, faced with great difficulties (desertion of novices, threat of war), he laboured as a missionary among the people. In 1737 the first Passionist 'Retreat' was opened. The rule of the order was approved by *Benedict XIV in 1741. In 1744 Paul moved to the second house near Vetralla. By this time his position as Superior-General had been officially recognized. From 1769, apart from some visits to 'Retreats', he lived in Rome. He was one of the most celebrated preachers of his age, esp. on account of his stirring meditations on the Passion, and famous as a miracle-worker and spiritual director. He was canonized in 1867. Feast day, formerly 28 Apr., now 19 Oct.

Lettere di S. Paolo della Croce, ed. Amadeo della Madre del Buon Pastore, CP (4 vols., Rome, 1924). Diario spirituale also ed., with full introd., by E. Zoffoli, CP (Rome, 1964). Eng. tr. of extracts of his writings in M. Bialas, CP, In this Sign . . . (Ways of Prayer Series, 9; Dublin, 1984 [based partly on earlier Ger. tr.]). The primary Life is that by the Bl Vincenzo Maria Strambi, CP (Rome, 1786; Eng. tr., 'Saints and Servants of God', 2 vols., 1853). Modern studies incl. those by Pius a Spiritu Sancto [A. Devine], CP (Dublin and London, 1867; rev. edn., London, 1924), Gaëtan du S. Nom de Marie [J. Cajetan], CP (Tirlemont, 1934), Father Edmund [J. E. Burke], CP (Dublin, 1946), C. Almeras (Bruges, 1957; Eng. tr., New York, 1960), and E. Zoffoli, CP (3 vols., Rome, 1963–8). Gaëtan du S. Nom de Marie, Oraison et ascension mystique de S. Paul de la Croix (Museum Lessianum, 1930); id., Doctrine de S. Paul de la Croix sur l'oraison et la mystique (ibid., 1932). C. Brovetto, CP, Introduzione alla Spiritualità di S. Paolo della Croce (Studi e testi Passionisti, 1; 1955). M. Bialas, CP, Das Leiden Christi beim hl. Paul vom Kreuz (1694 1775) (Aschaffenburg, 1978; Eng. tr., San Francisco, 1990). A. Devine, CP, in CE 11 (1911), p. 590, s.v.; E. Zoffoli, CP, in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (Rome, 1968), cols. 231–57, s.v. 'Paolo della Croce'; F. Giorgini, CP, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 540–60, s.v. 'Paul (5) de la Croix', the last two with extensive bibl. See also bibl. to PASSIONISTS.

Paul the Deacon (*c.*720–*c.*800), also 'Paulus Levita' or 'Warnefridi', 'Father of Italian History', chronicler. Of noble Lombard descent, he received an exceptionally good education, prob. at the court of Pavia, where he later taught Adelperga, the daughter of King Desiderius (756–74). At some time, perhaps *c.*760, Paul became a monk at *Monte Cassino. About 781 he visited *Charlemagne on behalf of a brother implicated in a revolt at Friuli in 776. Received with honour on account of his learning and culture, he remained in Francia until *c.*785 composing a history of the diocese of Metz ('Gesta Episcoporum Mettensium') and various didactic works. After his return to Monte Cassino he undertook his most important work, the 'Historia Gentis Langobardorum', an incomplete history in five books from 568 to the death of Luitprand (744). Based largely on documents no longer extant, it is the principal source for the Lombard history of the period, being esp. valuable for Franco-Lombard relations and its vivid picture of the life of the time. His 'Historia Romana', supplementing and continuing the 'Breviarium' of Eutropius to 553, which was undertaken at the request of Adelperga, is of much less historical value. In his later years he composed some important liturgical works, including a compilation of lessons for the Night Office and, at the request of Charlemagne, a collection of Homilies ('*Homiliary') which were ordered to be used throughout the Empire. He also wrote a Life of St *Gregory and various epitaphs and poems, although the famous hymn in honour of St John the Baptist ('Ut queant laxis', 'Let thine example', EH 223), ascribed to him, is prob. not his. An Expositio super Regulam S. Benedicti attributed to him has been shown to be the work of Hildemar (9th cent.).

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PL 95. 433–1710. Crit. edn. of his 'Historia Langobardorum' by L. Bethmann and G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Langobardicarum et Italicarum Saec. vi–ix (1879), pp. 12–187; and of Books 1–17 of his 'Historia Romana' by A. Crivellucci (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, 51; 1914); of his poetry by K. Neff (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, 3, Heft 4; 1908); and of his Life of Gregory I by H. Grisar, SJ, in ZKT 11 (1887), pp. 158–73. The Comm. on the Rule of St Benedict was first pub. by the monks of Monte Cassino (Monte Cassino, 1880). There is an Eng. tr. of his 'Historia Langobardorum' by W. D. Foulke (Philadelphia and New York, 1907). L. J. Engels, Observations sur le vocabulaire de Paul Diacre (Latinitas Christianorum Primaeva, 16; Nijmegen, 1961). [L.] Bethmann, 'Paulus Diaconus Leben und Schriften', Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtkunde, 10 (1851), pp. 247–334; id., 'Die Geschichtschreibung der Langobarden', ibid., pp. 335–414. P. S. Leicht, 'Paulo Diacono e gli altri scrittori delle Vicende d'Italia nell'età carolingia', in Atti del 2° Congresso Internazionale di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo: Grado—Aquileia—Gorizia—Cividale—Udine, 7–11 settembre 1952 (Spoleto [1953]), pp. 57–74; see also contributions to this symposium by D. Bianchi, P. Lamma, A. Lentini, A. Pantoni, and I. Peri. D. A. Bullough, 'Ethnic History and the Carolingians: An Alternative Reading of Paul the Deacon's Historia Langobardorum', in C. Holdsworth and T. P. Wiseman (eds.), The Inheritance of Historiography 350–900 (Exeter Studies in History, 12; 1986), pp. 85–105, repr., with emendations, in Bullough's Carolingian Renewal: Sources and Heritage (Manchester and New York, 1991), pp. 97–122. W. Goffart, The Narrators of Barbarian History (Princeton, NJ [1988]), pp. 329–431. K. Gamber, 'Il sacramentario di Paolo Diacono. La redazione del Gelasiano S. VIII in Pavia', Rivista di storia della Chiesa in Italia, 16 (1962), pp. 412–38. W. Hafner, Das Basiliuskommentar zur Regula S. Benedicti: Ein Beitrag zur Autorenfrage karolingischer Regelkommentare (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 23; 1959), passim. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 186–9, with refs. J. Hourlier, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 560–2, s.v.

Paul the Hermit, St. See PAUL OF THEBES, ST.

Paul of Samosata (3rd cent.), heretical Bp. of *Antioch. He was a native of Samosata, who acquired considerable wealth. About 260 he became Bp. of Antioch, though he preferred to be called, and perhaps was, a procurator ducenarius. His teaching on the Person of Christ was condemned at two, or possibly three, Synods of Antioch and in 268 he was deposed from his see. Although there are conflicting reports, he seems to have taught a form of Dynamic *Monarchianism, acc. to which the Word was simply an attribute of the Father, His reason or power (δύναμις). It is clear that in his Christology Paul was an *Adoptianist, holding that in the Incarnation the Word descended on and dwelt in the man Jesus, who thus became 'Son of God'. His use of the term '*Homoousios' to deny that the Word was a *hypostasis separate from the Father seems to have been condemned. Later he was regarded by the opponents of *Nestorius as his predecessor. The chief sources for the conflict are: (1) a synodal letter of the Antiochene Synod of 268, partly preserved by *Eusebius (HE 7. 30); (2) a stenographic report of a disputation at this Synod between Paul and an *Origenist presbyter of Antioch named Malchion; and (3) the so-called 'Hymenaeus Epistle', a letter addressed to Paul by Hymenaeus and five other bishops. The extant fragments of Paul's 'Addresses to Sabinus' are probably fabrications. Paul's followers ('*Paulianists'; q.v.) long survived his death.

G. Bardy, Paul de Samosate: Étude historique (SSL 4; 1923; new edn., 1929); F. *Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (TU 40, Heft 5; 1924); H. de Riedmatten, OP, Les Actes du procès de Paul de Samosate: Étude sur la christologie du III^e au IV^e siècle (Paradosis, 6; 1952). Collection of frags. in H. de Riedmatten, op. cit., pp. 135–58. E. *Schwartz, Eine fingierte Korrespondenz mit Paulus dem Samosatener (Sb. (Bayr.), 1927, Heft 3). P. Galtier [SJ], 'L'ὁμοούσιος de Paul de Samosate', Rech. S.R. 12 (1922), pp. 30–45. M. Richard, 'Malchion et Paul de Samosate. Le Témoignage d'Eusèbe de Césarée', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 35 (1959), pp. 325–38, repr. in his Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 25. F. Millar, 'Paul of Samosata, Zenobia and Aurelian: The Church, Local Culture and Political Allegiance in Third-Century Syria', Journal of Roman Studies, 61 (1971), pp. 1–17; F. W. Norris, 'Paul of Samosata: Procurator Ducenarius', JTS NS 35 (1984), pp. 50–70. M. Simonetti, 'Per la Rivalutazione di alcune Testimonianze su Paolo di Samosata', Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, 24 (1988), pp. 177–210. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 214 and 591. G. Bardy in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 46–51; M. Simonetti in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2633–5, s.v.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (Cambridge, 1992), p. 663.

Paul the Silentiary. See PAULUS SILENTIARIUS.

Paul of Thebes, St (d. *c.*340), traditionally the first Christian hermit. Acc. to St *Jerome's Vita Pauli, the sole authority, Paul was a native of the Thebaid. During the *Decian persecution (249–51) he fled to the desert, where he lived for some hundred years a life of prayer and penitence in a cave. St *Antony is said to have visited him when 113 years old and later to have buried him, wrapping him in the mantle which he had himself received from St *Athanasius.

The details of this narrative, which find no corroboration from other sources, are open to considerable suspicion. In later art, Paul is commonly represented with a palm tree or two lions. Feast day, 15 Jan.

Jerome's Vita Pauli (J. P. Migne, PL 23. 17–28) is prob. the source of the various Gk. and oriental Lives; cf. J. Bidez, Deux versions grecques inédites de la vie de Paul de Thèbes, publiées avec une introduction (Ghent, 1900). On his possible identification with a 'Paul of Oxyrhynchus' cf. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'La Personnalité historique de S. Paul de Thèbes', Anal. Boll. 44 (1926), pp. 64–9.

Paul and Thecla, Acts of Sts. An apocryphal work describing the adventures of Sts *Paul and *Thecla, which was part of the 'Acts of St *Paul' (q.v.). Its great popularity in the early Church is shown by its existence not only in the original Greek, but also in five separate Latin translations, as well as in Syriac, Armenian, Slavonic, and Arabic. The 'Acts' describe how St Paul, after his flight from Antioch in Pisidia (Acts 13: 51), arrived at Iconium, where in the house of Onesiphorus he preached the benefits of chastity and thereby won St Thecla away from Thamyris, to whom she was betrothed. In consequence, Paul was charged before the civil authorities and beaten, while Thecla was condemned to death by burning, but miraculously saved. Other incidents in various parts of Asia Minor are described in the lives of both Paul and Thecla, and the 'Acts' conclude with the record of Thecla's death at Seleucia. It is not impossible that the 'Acts' contain some elements of historical truth.

Gk. text pr. in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet (eds.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 1 (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 235–72, Eng. tr. in

J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 364–80. A frag. of a 4th-cent. Gk. papyrus was ed., with Eng. tr., by C. H. Roberts, The Antinoopolis Papyri (1950), pp. 26–8 (no. 13). Lat. texts ed. O. von Gebhardt (TU 22, Heft 2; 1902). Syr. text ed. W. Wright, Apocryphal Acts of the Apostles (1871), 1, pp. 128–69; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 116–45. Ethiopic text ed., with Eng. tr., by E. J. Goodspeed in American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, 17 (1900–1), pp. 65–95. Armenian text pub. Venice, 1874; Eng. tr. of this text by F. C. *Conybeare, The Apology and Acts of Apollonius and other Monuments of Early Christianity (1894), pp. 61–88, with introd., pp. 49–60. Slavonic text ed. P. Vyncke, J. Scharpé, and J. Goubert (Centrale Bibliotheek van de Rijksuniversiteit te Gent, Mededeling 10; 1967). For important Coptic text, see PAUL, ACTS OF ST. Ger. tr., taking account of Coptic version, in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 216–24; Eng. tr., 2 (1992), pp. 239–46. W. M. *Ramsay, The Church in the Roman Empire before A.D. 170 (1893), pp. 375–428.

Paula, St (347–404), Roman matron. At the age of 33, then a mother of five children (among them St *Eustochium), this Roman lady of noble birth dedicated herself to a life of devotion. In 385 she and Eustochium both followed St *Jerome to Palestine; and after visiting the Holy Places and the hermits in the Egyptian deserts, from 386 she settled permanently in *Bethlehem, where she founded a convent of monks and another of nuns. Feast day, 26 Jan.

Her character is vividly described by Jerome in Ep. 108, written shortly after her death (J. P. Migne, PL 22. 878 ff.).

Paulianists. The followers of *Paul of Samosata. Presumably because they repudiated the *Trinity, the 19th canon of the Council of *Nicaea (325) required that they should be rebaptized on being received back into Catholic communion.

Paulicians. The members of a sect of the Byzantine Empire. Their name may be derived from St *Paul, whom they held in special veneration, or, more probably, from *Paul of Samosata, with whom they had affinities. The origins of the sect are obscure; their true founder seems to have been Constantine of Mananali, a *Manichaean village near Samosata, who established a community at Kibossa in Armenia under Constantius II (641–68). Under Constantine Pogonatus they were persecuted and their founder was stoned (*c.*684). In the 9th cent. they suffered again under Emp. Leo the Armenian, and the Empress Theodora tried to exterminate them. In consequence many of them assisted the Saracens in their raids on the Empire and adopted Islam. Those who sought refuge in Bulgaria seem to have amalgamated with the *Bogomils in the 10th cent. It seems that they ceased to exist as an independent sect in the 12th century.

The Paulicians professed a *dualistic doctrine, distinguishing between the good God, the Lord of Heaven and creator of souls, and the evil God, the Demiurge and ruler of the material universe. Holding all matter to be evil they denied the reality of Christ's Body and of the Redemption and considered Christ's most important work His teaching. From this contempt of His Body they were led to reject the Cross and all images. Instead they honoured the Book of the Gospels. Like *Marcion, they repudiated the OT and held St *Luke and the Pauline Epp. in particular esteem. Originally they were organized in four grades of apostles, prophets, itinerants, and copyists, but later only the latter two remained, the itinerants being the superiors and the copyists being entrusted with transcribing the Sacred Books and keeping order in church. Their dualistic doctrines seem frequently to have led to grave moral disorders.

The primary sources incl. Petrus Siculus, 'Historia Haereseos Manichaeorum qui et Pauliciani' in J. P. Migne, PG 104. 1239–304; id., 'Sermones contra Paulicianos', ibid. 1305–50. *Euthymius Zigabenus, 'Panoplia Dogmatica, tit. xxiv', ibid. 130. 1189–244. The Greek sources are also ed., with Fr. tr., by C. Astruc and others in Travaux et Mémoires, 4 (1970), pp. 1–227. K. Ter-Mkrttschian, Die Paulikianer im byzantinischen Kaiserreiche und verwandte ketzerische Erscheinungen in Armenien (1893; with Armenian sources). N. G. Garsoïan, The Paulician Heresy: A Study of the Origin and Development of Paulicianism in Armenia and the Eastern Provinces of the Byzantine Empire (Publications in Near and Middle East Studies, Columbia University, Series A, 6; The Hague, 1967). P. Lemerle, 'L'Histoire des Pauliciens d'Asie Mineure d'après les sources grecques', Travaux et Mémoires, 5 (1973), pp. 1–144, with bibl. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 56–62, s.v. 'Pauliciens'. See also works cited under MANI AND MANICHAEISM.

Pauline Privilege. The privilege conceded by St *Paul (1 Cor. 7: 15) to the partner of a heathen marriage to contract a new marriage on becoming a Christian, if the other (non-Christian) partner wished to separate or put serious obstacles in the way of the convert's faith and practice. There is little evidence of its exercise in the earliest times, but its use is attested by *Chrysostom and *Ambrosiaster. The right gradually became established in canon law and is now provided for in the (1983) Codex Iuris Canonici (cans. 1143–9). See also DIVORCE.

G. H. Joyce, SJ, Christian Marriage (1933, 2nd edn., 1948), ch. 11. G. Oesterlé in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 229–80, s.v. 'Privilège paulin', with bibl.

Paulinus (4th–5th cent.), biographer of St *Ambrose. A deacon of the Church of Milan, he became Ambrose's secretary in his later years and was with him at the time of his death in 397. During a long stay in N. Africa on behalf of the Church of Milan, at the request of St *Augustine he wrote his Life of St Ambrose (*c.*422). It is modelled on earlier saints' Lives and, though full of interesting detail, ignores much that is now regarded as important and sets great store by the miraculous. Paulinus supported Augustine during the *Pelagian controversy and was prob. the author of the libellus sent to Pope *Zosimus listing the charges against *Celestius.

The Vita S. Ambrosii is pr. in edns. of Ambrose, e.g. in J. P. Migne, PL 14. 27–46. Modern edns. by M. Pellegrino (Verba Seniorum, 1; Rome, 1961) and A. A. R. Bastiaensen, Vita di Cipriani . . . (Vite dei Santi, 3; Milan, 1975, pp. 51–125, with notes and bibl., pp. 281–338), both with Ital. trs. Eng. tr. by F. R. Hoare, The Western Fathers (1954), pp. 145–88. The Libellus adversus Caelestium Zosimo episcopo datus is pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 711–16. É. Lamirande, Paulin de Milan et la 'Vita Ambrosii' (1983), with bibl. M. G. Mara in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2607 f., s.v. 'Paolino'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 660.

Paulinus, St (*c.*730–802), Bp. of *Aquileia. A native of Friuli, he became an assiduous and learned scholar. In 776 *Charlemagne summoned him to the Frankish court, where he made the close acquaintance of *Alcuin and other leading men of learning, and in 787 appointed him Patr. of Aquileia. Here he took a leading part in ecclesiastical affairs, notably in the relations between the Byzantine Church and the W. He also took a prominent share in the suppression of *Adoptianism, notably at the Councils of Regensburg (792), *Frankfurt (794), and Cividale (796), and in the conversion of the pagans in the Tyrol and adjacent provinces. His writings include two anti-Adoptianist works—'Libellus Sacrosyllabus contra Elipandum' and 'Libri iii contra Felicem'. He was a poet of no mean order, and was one of the first to give the rhythmical an equal place with metrical verse, as in the lament for Heric, Duke of Friuli. Feast day, 28 Jan. (otherwise, 11 Jan. and 2 Mar.).

Works ed. J. F. Madrisius, Cong. Orat. (Venice, 1737), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 99. 9–683. Modern edn. of his Epp. by E. Dümmler in MGH, Epistolae, 4 (1895), pp. 516–27; of his Poems, with introd. and comm. in Fr., by D. Norberg (Stockholm, 1979); and of Contra Felicem by id. (CCCM 95; 1990). Lives by C. Giannoni (Vienna, 1896) and P. Paschini (Udine, 1906; repr. 1977). J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 194–202; id., Weltliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters, 1 (1970), pp. 471–7. Raby (1953), pp. 168–71. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 584–8, s.v. 'Paulin d'Aquilée'. See also works cited under AQUILEIA.

Paulinus, St (353/5–431), Bp. of Nola. The son of a noble and wealthy Aquitaine family, he was educated at Bordeaux. He qualified for the senate by the exercise of a minor Roman magistracy and, as a young man, served as governor of Campania. After relinquishing this charge, he married a Spanish noblewoman, Therasia, and settled on his family estates in Aquitaine. Shortly afterwards he underwent some kind of spiritual conversion and was baptized (before 390); he and his wife then went to live in N. Spain. After the death of their only son they took a vow of continence and began distributing their fortune; at the same time Paulinus gave up secular poetry, a decision which he defended in a celebrated poetic correspondence with his former mentor *Ausonius. On Christmas Day 393 or 394 Paulinus was ordained priest in Barcelona. The next year he and his wife left Spain to lead a monastic life near the tomb of St Felix at Nola in Campania, where Paulinus was later made bishop (at some time between 403 and 413). Though a cause of scandal to certain members of his class, his renunciation of worldly interests was hailed as exemplary by advocates of monastic spirituality. He was acquainted with many of the most famous Christians of his time (e.g. St *Martin of Tours, St *Ambrose, St *Jerome, and St *Augustine) and conducted a wide-ranging correspondence, a large part of which survives. His poetic works have attracted special attention and place him beside *Prudentius as the foremost Christian Latin poet of the patristic period. Most of his poems were written for the annual celebrations in honour of St Felix and are of great interest as throwing light on the cult of saints and popular customs of the time. Feast day, 22 June. See also BELLS.

Early edns. of his works by F. *Ducaeus, SJ, and H. Rosweyde, SJ (Antwerp, 1622), J. B. Le Brun (2 vols., Paris, 1685), and L. A. *Muratori (Verona, 1736). Muratori's text is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 61. Crit. edn. by W. Hartel (CSEL 29 and 30; 1894). Passages dealing with churches of Nola ed., with comm. and Eng. tr., by R. C. Goldschmidt (Amsterdam, 1940). Eng. tr. by P. G. Walsh of his Letters (ACW 35–6; 1967) and of his Poems (ibid. 40; 1975). Life by A. Baudrillart ('Les Saints', 1905). P. Fabre, Essai sur la Chronologie de l'Œuvre de Saint Paulin de Nole (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, 109; 1948); id., Saint Paulin de Nole et l'amitié chrétienne (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 167; 1949). J. T. Lienhard, SJ, Paulinus of Nola and Early Western Monasticism (Theophaneia, 28; Cologne and Bonn, 1977), with bibl. Atti del Convegno XXXI Cinquantenario della morte di S. Paolino di Nola (431–1981), Nola, 20–21 marzo 1982 (Rome [1983]). J. Desmulliez, 'Paulin de Nole. Études chronologiques (393–397)', Recherches Augustiniennes, 20 (1985), pp. 35–64. D. E. Trout, 'The dates of the ordination of Paulinus of Bordeaux and of his departure for Nola', Revue des études Augustiniennes, 37 (1991), pp. 237–60. N. K. Chadwick, Poetry and Letters in Early Christian Gaul (1955), pp. 63–88; J. Fontaine, Naissance de la poésie dans l'Occident chrétien (Études Augustiniennes, 1981), pp. 143–54, 161–76, and bibl., pp. 297 f. J. T. Lienhard, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 592–602, s.v., with bibl.

Paulinus, St (d. 358), Bp. of Trier. He was a disciple of St Maximin, whom he succeeded in the see of Trier. A strong opponent of *Arianism, he was banished after the Synod of *Arles of 353 to Phrygia, where he died in exile. His relics were brought back to Trier in 396, where they have since remained. Feast day, 31 Aug.

AASS, Aug. 6 (1743), pp. 668–79, with 8th–9th cent. Life, pp. 676–9. S. A. Bennett in DCB 4 (1887), p. 232, s.v. 'Paulinus (4), St'.

Paulinus, St (d. 644), Bp. of *York. In 601 he was sent to England by Pope *Gregory I to reinforce the mission of St *Augustine; and when in 625 *Edwin, King of Northumbria, married Ethelburga of Kent, Paulinus was consecrated bishop and went with her to York. As a result of his preaching, Edwin and his chiefs accepted Christianity at the assembly of Goodmanham (627). A cathedral was begun at York, and, assisted by *James the Deacon, Paulinus taught the faith there until 633, when, upon Edwin's defeat by the heathen Cadwallon, he returned with Ethelburga to Kent and became Bp. of *Rochester. Feast day, 10 Oct.

The principal authority is *Bede, HE 1. 29; 2. 9, 12–14, 16–18, 20; 3. 1; 4. 23; 5. 24; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 43, 65, 67–71, 74 f., 78 f., 81 f., and 84–6. Hardy, 1, pt. 1 (1862), pp. 229 f. R. H. Hodgkin, A History of the Anglo-Saxons, 1 (1935), pp. 273–80. H. M. R. E. Mayr-Harting, 'Paulinus of York', Studies in Church History, 4 (ed. G. J. Cuming) (Leiden, 1967), pp. 15–21; P. Hunter Blair, 'The Letters of Pope Boniface V and the Mission of Paulinus to Northumbria', in P. Clemoes and K. Hughes (eds.), England before the Conquest: Studies in primary sources presented to Dorothy Whitelock (Cambridge, 1971), pp. 5–13.

Paulists. The popular name for members of 'The Missionary Society of St Paul the Apostle in the State of New York', founded by I. T. *Hecker in 1858 to further the work and interests of the RC Church in the USA. Its members live under a rule based on that of the *Redemptorists, of which order Hecker had previously been a member. Through the supposed connection of Hecker with *Americanism, the Society was under suspicion for a time.

V. F. Holden in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 29 f., s.v.; J. McVann in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 10–12, s.v. 'Sacerdoti Missionari di San Paolo Apostolo'. See also bibl. to AMERICANISM and HECKER, I. T.

Paulus Orosius. See OROSIUS.

Paulus Silentiarius (6th cent.; a silentiarius was an usher who maintained silence in the Imperial Palace), Christian poet. He wrote during the reign of *Justinian (Emp. 527–65). His principal work, a hymn to mark the consecration of *Sancta Sophia at *Constantinople on 24 Dec. 562, gives a full description (ἔκφρασις) of the church and pulpit (ἄμβων) in fluent hexameters, and is of great interest for the history of Byzantine art. Paulus also wrote some 80 epigrams, preserved in the Greek anthology. A poem on the Baths of Pythia in Bithynia has also, but wrongly, been ascribed to him.

Paulus' Ecphrasis and Ambo, ed. I. Bekker (C.S.H.Byz., 1837); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG. 86. 2119–58 and 2251–64, with C. D. *Du Cange's comm. on the former, also repr. from Bekker, cols. 2159–252. Crit. edn. in P. Friedländer, Johannes von Gaza und Paulus Silentiarius (1912), pp. 225–65, with notes pp. 266–305, and, with Ger. tr., by O. Veh in his edn. of the works of *Procopius of Caesarea, 5 (Munich [1977]), pp. 306–75, with introd. on his life, pp. 376–80. Epigrams ed., with Ital. tr. and comm., by G. Viansino (Turin, 1963). W. von Christ, Geschichte der griechischen Literatur, 2 (6th edn. by W. Schmid and O. Stählin, 1924), pp. 977 f. and 980. CPG 3 (1979), p. 402 (nos. 7513–16). W. Peck in PW 18 (pt. 4; 1949), cols. 2363–72, s.v. 'Paulus 10'.

Pax. See KISS OF PEACE and following entry.

pax brede (also pax or osculatorium). A small plate of ivory, metal, or wood, with a representation of the Crucifixion or other religious subject on the face and a projecting handle on the back, formerly used at Mass for conveying the *Kiss of Peace (q.v.) esp. to those in choir and to the laity. It was kissed first by the celebrant and then by the others who received it in turn. Pax bredes came into general use in the later Middle Ages prob. under *Franciscan influence. They have been rendered obsolete by the current regulations concerning the Kiss of Peace.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 408 f. (Eng. tr., 2, pp. 328 f.). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (1910), cols. 128 f., s.v. 'Baiser. vi: Osculatorium'.

Peace of the Church, the. The term is applied:

(1) To the new situation in the Church when persecution ceased with the 'Edict of *Milan' in 313; also, in a more specialized sense,

(2) To the temporary cessation of the *Jansenist conflict in 1668, brought about when Pope Clement IX accepted the submission of the four French bishops (28 Sept.) and Louis XIV ordered all parties to the dispute to refrain from further conflict. The settlement, also known as the 'Clementine Peace' ('Pax Clementina'), was formally ratified by Clement IX in four briefs dated 19 Jan. 1669.

Peacock, Reginald. See PECOCK, REGINALD.

Peake, Arthur Samuel (1865–1929), biblical scholar. The son of a *Primitive Methodist minister, he was educated at St John's College, Oxford, and in 1890 elected a Fellow of Merton. In 1892 he was appointed tutor at the newly founded Hartley Primitive Methodist College, Manchester, where his influence was such that he raised the whole standard of ministry in the Methodist Church. In 1904 he also became the first occupant of the Rylands Chair of Biblical Criticism and Exegesis at Manchester University. An accurate, balanced, and cautious scholar, he possessed a vast knowledge of current biblical literature. The works by which he is best remembered are The Bible, its Origin, its Significance, and its Abiding Worth (1913), The Problem of Suffering in the Old Testament (1904), and esp. his editorship of a Commentary on the Bible in one volume (1919). He also took an active part in the ecclesiastical affairs of the Free Churches and the reunion movement among Methodist bodies and beyond. He was never ordained.

Supplement to Peake's Commentary, ed. A. J. Grieve (London, 1936). The so-called new edn. of Peake's Commentary, ed. M. Black and H. H. Rowley (1962), is a completely new work. A collection of his minor works, mainly obituary notices of other scholars, ed. W. F. Howard, under the title Recollections and Appreciations (London, 1938). Memoir of Peake by his eldest son, L. S. Peake (ibid., 1930). Life by J. T. Wilkinson (ibid., 1971); id. (ed.), Arthur Samuel Peake 1865 1929: Essays in Commemoration (1958). J. W. Rogerson, 'Progressive Revelation: Its History and Value as a Key to Old Testament Interpretation', Epworth Review, 9, pt. 2 (1982), pp. 73–86 (A. S. Peake Memorial Lecture, 1981). C. H. *Dodd in DNB, 1922 1930, pp. 657 f.

Pearson, John (1613–86), Bp. of *Chester. He was educated at Eton and Queens' College, Cambridge, and ordained in 1639. During the Civil War he supported the Royalist cause, under the Commonwealth lived in semi-retirement in London, and after the Restoration became Master successively of Jesus College (1660) and of Trinity College (1662), Cambridge, and also (from 1661) Lady Margaret professor of divinity. At the *Savoy Conference in 1661 he championed the cause of episcopacy. In 1673 he became Bp. of Chester. He was perhaps the most erudite and profound divine of a learned and theological age. His classical Exposition of the Creed (1659), in origin a series of lectures extending over several years at St Clement's, Eastcheap, reveals his firm grasp of fundamental principles, his delight in clear and accurate statement, and his judicious and sober temper, while the notes which illustrate the text reflect his remarkable knowledge, esp. of the Christian Fathers. Addressed to a more scholarly public is his Vindiciae Epistolarum S. Ignatii (1672), an elaborate defence of the authenticity of the Epp. of St *Ignatius against the attacks of J. *Daillé, of which the conclusions have only been strengthened by the intensive work of later scholars. Pearson also wrote a great number of minor works, largely concerned to uphold the position of the C of E against Rome and Nonconformity.

Life by E. Churton, prefixed to Pearson's Minor Theological Works (2 vols., Oxford, 1844), 1, pp. xiii–cxxxvi. S. Cheetham, 'John Pearson', in A. Barry (ed.), Masters in English Theology (1877), pp. 213–40. E. Fraenkel (ed.), Aeschylus, Agamemnon, 1 (Oxford, 1950), pp. 40–4 and 78–85. F. Sanders in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 168–73.

Pearson, John Loughborough (1817–97), architect. His work, which was mainly ecclesiastical and in the geometrical gothic style, was characterized by refined detail, elegant proportions, and noble vaulting. The best-known example is *Truro Cathedral (begun in 1880). Among his other notable churches are St Peter's, Vauxhall (1860–5), St Augustine's, Kilburn (1870–c.1877), St Michael's, Croydon (1876–85), and St Stephen's, Bournemouth (1881–98). He was a careful restorer of many ancient churches, and practically rebuilt the front of the north transept of *Westminster Abbey.

J. E. Newberry, 'The Work of John L. Pearson, R. A.', Architectural Review, 1 (1897), pp. 1–11 and 69–82; D. Lloyd, 'John Loughborough Pearson', in J. Fawcett (ed.), Seven Victorian Architects (1976), pp. 66–83, 144–5, 153. P. Waterhouse in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 255–8.

Peasants' War, formerly called the 'Peasants' Revolt'. A series of insurrections of the German peasants in 1524–6, often seen as a continuation of movements such as the Bundschuh on the Upper Rhine (from 1493) and the Armer Konrad in Württemberg. The immediate causes of the Peasants' War have been variously explained as religious, social, economic, or political; prob. a mixture of all these factors was at play. M. *Luther's theology, and notably his doctrine of the priesthood of all believers, could well have been interpreted as postulating greater social equality than it in fact did. Moreover, the economic distress of the German peasantry was real and several preachers who came in the wake of Luther advocated the abolition of *tithes and serfdom. T. *Müntzer's apocalyptic visions, although not responsible for the War, served as inspiration in the later stages. The rebels consisted of heterogeneous groups of serfs, farmers, townspeople, and minor clergy. Although they set out their grievances in the *Twelve Articles adopted at Memmingen (demanding inter alia the freedom to choose their pastors and the abolition of serfdom and certain taxes), they had few real leaders and experienced difficulties in carrying through a plan of action. In their attempt to destroy all authority the rebels looted and burned castles and monasteries. About a third of what was then German territory was affected, notably Swabia and Thuringia but also the Tyrol and Alsace. Most of the movement was brutally stamped out by the armies of the Swabian League, the union of Protestant princes, in 1525; the remnants survived for another year in Salzburg and the Tyrol. Luther's initial attitude to the risings was not hostile and he even attempted to mediate between the princes and the peasants with the pamphlet Ermahnung zum Frieden (April 1525). His second pamphlet containing an outright condemnation, entitled Wider die räuberischen und mörderischen Rotten and prob. written in May 1525, appeared later in the year just as the uprising was being suppressed. Although Luther's attitude to the rebels has been widely criticized by historians, it was little different from that of other Reformers such as P. *Melanchthon, M. *Bucer, and U. *Zwingli who also declared their allegiance to the established civil powers. The peasants' cause found more sympathy among some of the city authorities who appreciated their social and economic distress, apart from any religious issues.

G. Franz, Der deutsche Bauernkrieg (Munich and Berlin, 1933, with Aktenband, 1935; 12th edn., Darmstadt, 1984); id. (ed.), Quellen zur Geschichte des Bauernkrieges (Munich, 1963); A Laube and H. W. Seiffert (eds.) Flugschriften der Bauernkriegszeit (Berlin, 1975; repr. ('2nd edn.'), Vienna and Cologne, 1978). Eng. tr. of primary docs. ed. T. Scott and [R. W.] 'Bob' Scribner, The German Peasants' War: A History in Documents (Atlantic Highlands, NJ, and London, 1991). M. Bensing and S. Hoyer, Der deutsche Bauernkrieg 1524 1526 (Berlin [1965]). P. Blickle, Die Revolution von 1525 (1975; 2nd edn., 1981; Eng. tr., Baltimore and London [1981]). A. Friesen, Reformation and Utopia: The Marxist Interpretation of the Reformation and its Antecedents (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte, Mainz, 71; Wiesbaden, 1974), passim. [R. W.] 'Bob' Scribner and G. Benecke (eds.), The German Peasant War of 1525 New Viewpoints (1979); H. Buszello and others (eds.), Der deutsche Bauernkrieg (Paderborn, etc., 1984). G. Maron in TRE 5 (1980), pp. 319–38, s.v. 'Bauernkrieg', with full bibl.

Pecham, John (*c.*1225–92), also, in older works, 'Peckham', Abp. of *Canterbury. He was born at Patcham (formerly Pecham), E. Sussex, and prob. educated at Lewes. He proceeded to the University of *Paris, where he studied in the faculty of arts, and then transferred to *Oxford, where he joined the *Franciscans *c.*1250. Between 1257 and 1259 he returned to Paris to study theology, and here from *c.*1269 to *c.*1271 he occupied the Franciscan chair of theology. He played a prominent part in defending his Order against the attacks of secular masters. He returned to Oxford *c.*1272 as lector in theology in the Franciscan convent, and in 1274 he was appointed Provincial. From 1277 to 1279 he was lector sacri palatii in Rome. In 1279 he succeeded Robert *Kilwardby, OP, as Abp. of Canterbury, being the Papal candidate in opposition to Robert Burnell, Bp. of *Bath and Wells, who was the nominee of Edward I. He promptly inaugurated a vigorous policy of ecclesiastical reform. At a provincial Council at Reading on 30 July 1279 he legislated against pluralities and other abuses, in conformity with the decrees of the Second Council of *Lyons. At another Council at Lambeth (1281) he sought to suppress abuses concerning the Eucharist. At the parliament of 1285 he entered negotiations for a settlement of differences between ecclesiastical and secular authorities, esp. the question of disputed jurisdiction, which led to the issue of the writ 'Circumspecte agatis'. He also concerned himself with raising the standard of the clergy; took active steps to encourage preaching; and reformed the financial administration of many religious houses. He made visitations of all the dioceses in his Province, and his zeal brought him into conflict with some of his suffragans, e.g. St Thomas de *Cantilupe of Hereford.

In theology Pecham was an upholder of the Franciscan tradition; he strongly opposed the teaching of St *Thomas Aquinas on the unity of form in man, even going so far as to insist on its condemnation as heretical (1286). His writings include a commentary on Book 1 of the Sentences, three *Quodlibets, commentaries on Lamentations and on St John's Gospel, as well as works concerning the Franciscan Order. He also produced a French adaptation of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite for Queen Margaret of France. He had scientific interests and wrote a standard treatise on optics, the 'Perspectiva Communis', which was influenced by Roger *Bacon. He was a gifted poet; his best-known composition was the 'Philomena', a lyrical meditation arranged on the plan of the seven liturgical hours, which was translated into several vernaculars.

Registrum Epistolarum Fratris Johannis Peckham, ed. C. T. Martin (3 vols., RS, 1882–5); a more complete edn. of his Register

[up to 1285; the part covering the remainder of his primacy is prob. lost] ed. F. N. Davis and others (*Canterbury and York Society, 64–5; 1968–9). His works are scattered; modern edns. incl. those of three treatises 'de paupertate' by C. L. Kingsford and others (British Society of Franciscan Studies, 2; Aberdeen, 1910), with list of his writings and edns. to date; 'Quaestiones Tractantes de Anima' by H. Spettmann, OFM (BGPM 19, Hefte 5-6; 1918); 'Quodlibet Romanum' by F. M. Delorme, OFM (Spicilegium Pontificii Athenaei Antoniani, 1; Rome, 1938); 'Tractatus de Anima' by G. Melani, OFM (Biblioteca di Studi Francescani, 1; Florence, 1948); and 'Perspectiva Communis', ed., with Eng. tr., by D. C. Lindberg (Madison etc., 1970); convenient edn. of 'Philomena' by G. M. Dreves, Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters, 2 (AHMA 50; 1907), pp. 602–10. A Life of St *Antony of Padua is attributed to Pecham by V. Gamboso (ed.), Vita del 'Dialogus' e 'Benignitas' (Fonti Agiografiche Antoniane, 3; Padua [1986]), pp. 251–616, incl. text and Ital. tr. Full list of works to date in A. Teetaert, Ord. Cap., in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 100–40, s.v. 'Pecham', with bibl., esp. cols. 107–25. D. L. Douie, Archbishop Pecham (Oxford, 1952). C. Harkins, OFM, 'The Authorship of a Commentary on the Franciscan Rule published among the Works of St Bonaventure', Franciscan Studies, 29 (1969), pp. 157–248. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 190–7; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1445–7; I. Brady, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 645–9, s.v. 'Jean (165) Pecham'.

Pecock, Reginald (*c.*1393–1461), Bp. of *Chichester. A Welshman by birth, he was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, of which he became a Fellow. In 1431 he was appointed master of Whittington College, London, and subsequently, through court influence, Bp. of *St Asaph in 1444 and of Chichester in 1450. His antagonism to the Yorkist party and his theological writings having made him unpopular, he was accused of heresy in 1457, and although he recanted, he was deprived of his bishopric and confined in Thorney Abbey, where he died probably in 1461.

Pecock's thought, which is embodied in his best-known work The Repressor of Overmuch Wijting [i.e. Blaming] of the Clergy, written to controvert the *Lollards, is notable for its very marked emphasis on the 'law of kind', 'written in mennis soulis with the finger of God', to which the Scriptures are merely subordinate and supplementary. Much of his work is an apologia for the Church against the Lollards, of whose doctrines he gives a penetrating analysis. Although his writings were medieval in form, Pecock's critical faculty and his use of the English language make him one of the most significant figures of the 15th century.

There are modern edns. of 'The Repressor' by C. Babington (2 vols., RS, 1860), his 'Book of Faith' by J. L. Morison (Glasgow, 1909), 'The Donet' by E. V. Hitchcock (EETS 156; 1921), 'The Follower to the Donet' by id. (ibid. 164; 1924), and of 'The Rule of Christian Religion' by W. C. Greet (ibid. 171; 1927). V. H. H. Green, Bishop Reginald Pecock: A Study in Ecclesiastical History and Thought (Thirlwall Prize, 1941; 1945). J. F. Patrouch, Reginald Pecock (New York [1970]). C. W. Brockwell, Bishop Reginald Pecock and the Lancastrian Church (Texts and Studies in Religion, 25; Lewiston, NY [1985]). E. F. Jacob, 'Reynold Pecock, Bishop of Chichester', Proceedings of the British Academy, 37 (1951), pp. 121–53; R. M. Haines, 'Reginald Pecock: A Tolerant Man in an Age of Intolerance', in W. J. Sheils (ed.), Persecution and Toleration (Studies in Church History, 21; 1984), pp. 125–37. A. M. Cooke in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 198–202; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1447–9.

pectoral cross. A cross of precious metal worn on the breast and suspended by a chain which goes round the neck. In the C of E its use is almost exclusively confined to bishops; but in the RC Church cardinals and abbots also wear it. In the E. it is worn by *archimandrites, *archpriests, and in Russia even by simple priests: there, the distinctive emblem of the episcopate is not the pectoral cross but the *encolpion, although the bishop wears a pectoral cross as well as an encolpion on certain formal occasions, esp. when officiating in church.

Peculiar, a place exempt from the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which it is situated; it may be a parish, a group of parishes, or a chapel. At one time or another there have been six types of Peculiars: Monastic Peculiars, where great abbeys and certain religious orders were exempt from episcopal jurisdiction; Royal Peculiars, usually where churches were situated on lands connected with a royal castle or palace (e.g. St George's Chapel, *Windsor, and *Westminster Abbey), and which are exempt from any jurisdiction other than that of the Sovereign; Archiepiscopal Peculiars, linked with rights claimed by archbishops to exercise jurisdiction where they had manors or palaces; Episcopal Peculiars, where bishops owned residences in dioceses other than their own; and Cathedral Peculiars, in which cathedral chapters had jurisdiction over their property and instituted clerks. Apart from the Royal Peculiars, most of the rights and privileges of the others have been removed, so that they now come under the jurisdiction of the diocesan bishop, although the holders of some of them retain the title of Dean (e.g. Bocking, Battle, Stamford).

P. Barber, 'What is a Peculiar?', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 3 (1995), pp. 299–312.

Peculiar People, the (also Plumstead Peculiars). A small sect of faith-healers, founded in Rochford, near Southend, in 1838. On the basis of Jas. 5: 14 f. they reject medical aid, and in cases of illness rely on anointing with oil and prayer. In 1956 they took the name of the Union of Evangelical Churches.

M. Sorrell, The Peculiar People (Exeter, 1979).

Pedilavium (Lat., 'washing of the feet'). The ceremony of the washing of the feet performed in the liturgy on *Maundy Thursday. It is attested by the 17th Synod of Toledo in 694 and for 13th-cent. Rome in (Mabillon's) tenth Ordo Romanus. When the Maundy Thursday Mass came to be celebrated in the morning, the Pedilavium remained as a separate service, confined to cathedral and abbey churches. Pope *Pius XII's Holy Week Ordinal placed it in the restored evening Mass immediately after the homily and recommended its observance in all churches. During the singing of antiphons, 12 men are led into the sanctuary, where the celebrant solemnly washes and dries the feet of each in turn. When the ceremony was observed apart from the Mass, it began with the recital of the Gospel narrative (Jn. 13). Lent, Holy Week, Easter: Services and Prayers commended by the House of Bishops of the General Synod of the Church of England (1986) includes a pedilavium in the Maundy Thursday liturgy after the sermon, and similar provision is made in modern liturgies of some other Provinces of the Anglican Communion. A similar ceremony in the Byzantine rite is still mainly confined to monasteries and cathedrals; here it follows the Eucharistic liturgy.

T. Schäfer, OSB, Die Fusswaschung im monastischen Brauchtum und in der lateinischen Liturgie (Texte und Arbeiten, Abt. 1, Heft 47; Beuron, 1956); P. F. Beatrice, La lavanda dei piedi: Contributo alla storia delle antiche liturgie cristiane (Bibliotheca Ephemerides Liturgicae, Subsidia, 28; 1983). A. Malvy, SJ, in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 16–36, s.v. 'Lavement des pieds'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2002–9, s.v. 'Lavement (Lavage liturgique de la tête, des mains, des pieds)'.

Pedrog, St. See PETROCK, ST.

Peel parish. In the C of E, a term used for a *parish set up under the New Parishes Act 1843, passed when Sir Robert Peel was Prime Minister, or one of the subsequent Acts on this subject. Under this legislation a district not containing any existing parish church might be set up as a separate parish, with the consent of the bishop, under a scheme drawn up by the *Ecclesiastical (since 1948 *Church) Commissioners; the patronage is in the hands of the Crown and the bishop alternately.

Péguy, Charles Pierre (1873–1914), French poet and philosopher. He came of a peasant and artisan family in Orléans. He won scholarships to the local lycée and then to Paris, where he studied at the École Normale Supérieure and at the *Sorbonne. His philosophy was much influenced by H. *Bergson. An ardent socialist and Dreyfusard, he gave up his studies to manage a bookshop in the rue de la Sorbonne which became a centre of intellectual activity. In 1900 he founded the Cahiers de la Quinzaine in which he and a group of able young contributors he had brought together attacked the evils of the day. Their motto sums up the spirit of the Cahiers: 'The social revolution will be moral or nothing'. All Péguy's own works published in his lifetime appeared in the Cahiers. At one time a professed atheist, *c.*1907 he came back to the Catholic faith, without giving up his socialism. His attachment to France had found early expression in the drama Jeanne d'Arc (1897), and the Maid of Orléans remained a lifelong inspiration of his work. As an anticlerical who remained unreconciled to the Church because of domestic circumstances, he was estranged from his Catholic contemporaries, and he was distrusted by republicans and socialists because of his attacks on the modern world and its belief in progress. A solitary figure, a prophetic thinker, and a great poet, he lost his life in the Battle of the Marne on 5 Sept. 1914.

Œuvres complètes (19 vols., 1916–55). Convenient edn. of his Œuvres poétiques (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 60; 1948; rev. edn., 1975) and Œuvres en Prose (ibid. 122 and 140; 1957–9). Eng. trs. of selections of his works as Basic Verities (1943) and Men and Saints (1947); several of his individual works have also been translated, incl. The Mystery of the Charity of Joan of Arc (1950), The Mystery of the Holy Innocents (1956), and The Portico of the Mystery of the Second Virtue (Metuchen, NJ, 1970). Studies by D. Halévy (Paris, 1941; rev. edn., 1979; Eng. tr., 1946), R. Rolland (2 vols., Paris, 1944; rev. edn., 1972), Y. Servais (Cork and Oxford, 1953), M. Villiers (London, 1965), B. Guyon (Connaissance des Lettres, 55; 1960; rev. edn., 1973), S. Fraisse (Écrivains de toujours, 1979), and F. Laichter (Paris, 1985). P. Duployé, OP, La Religion de Péguy (Bibliothèque Française et Romaine, Série C: Études littéraires, 10 [1965]). S. Fraisse, Péguy et le Monde Antique (1973). L'Amitié Charles Péguy: Bulletin d'informations et de recherches (1978 ff.), incl. A. Barnes, 'Péguy et Mgr Batiffol', in vol. 9 (1986), pp. 137–77.

Pelagia, St (d. *c.*311), virgin and martyr. Her name occurs in the canon of the *Ambrosian Mass of Milan, and her fate is known from mentions of her in St *Ambrose (PL 16. 229–32 and 1093) and in St *Chrysostom (PG 1. 579–85). She was a 15-year-old girl of *Antioch who, when her house was surrounded by soldiers during one of the *persecutions (probably that under *Diocletian), threw herself out of a window into the sea to preserve her chastity. Feast day, 9 June.

To the name of this historical person a legend became attached of a 4th-cent. actress of Antioch who was suddenly converted by St Nonnus, Bp. of *Edessa, and went to *Jerusalem in men's clothes, where she lived as a recluse in a grotto of the Mt. of *Olives practising severe penances. Feast day, 8 Oct.

The story of a third Pelagia, a virgin martyr of *Tarsus, seems to be a combination of the former two. This Pelagia is supposed to have been burnt to death for refusing to become the mistress of the Emperor. Her feast is also on 8 Oct. in E. calendars, in the Roman martyrology on 4 May. H. Usener's attempt to explain the cultus of Pelagia as a Christian adaptation of the myth of Astarte was severely handled by H. *Delehaye.

The legend of St Pelagia appears to have close connections with that of St *Margaret (q.v.).

For the legends, besides the items cited in the text, see BHG (3rd edn., 1957), nos. 1478–80, and BHL, nos. 6605–11. H. Usener, Legenden der hl. Pelagia (1879); H. Delehaye, SJ, Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905), pp. 222–34; Eng. tr. (1907), pp. 197–206. P. Petitmengin and others (eds.), Pélagie la Pénitente: Métamorphose d'une légende (Études Augustiniennes, 3 vols., 1981 ff.), incl. texts. J. P. Kirsch in CE 11 (1911) pp. 601 f.; J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (Rome, 1968), cols. 432–7, both s.v.

Pelagianism. Theologically, Pelagianism is the heresy which holds that man can take the initial and fundamental steps towards salvation by his own efforts, apart from Divine *grace. Historically, it was an ascetic movement composed of disparate elements united under the name of the British theologian and exegete Pelagius, who taught in Rome in the late 4th and early 5th cents.

In essence, Pelagianism was a lay movement, aristocratic in tone and membership, which arose in the circles in Rome which admired St *Jerome in the 380s. It enjoyed considerable popularity in Sicily, where many of its Roman adherents had estates and where it produced a local theologian, the anonymous writer sometimes called the 'Sicilian Briton'. Pelagius' great contribution to the movement was to supply a theology vindicating Christian asceticism against the charge of *Manichaeism by emphasizing man's freedom to choose good by virtue of his God-given nature. He does not seem to have been greatly interested in the doctrine of *Original Sin; the denial of the transmission of Original Sin seems to have been introduced into Pelagianism by *Rufinus the Syrian, who influenced Pelagius' supporter *Celestius.

In 409 or 410, when Rome was menaced by the Goths, Pelagius and Celestius left Italy for Africa, whence Pelagius soon moved to Palestine. Celestius was subsequently accused by *Paulinus of Milan of denying the transmission of Adam's sin to his descendants. He was condemned by a Council at *Carthage in 411 and went to *Ephesus. Soon afterwards St *Augustine began to preach and write against Pelagian doctrine, though he continued to treat Pelagius himself with respect until 415. In that year Pelagius was accused of heresy by the Spanish priest *Orosius, who had been sent by Augustine to Jerome at Bethlehem. Pelagius, however, succeeded in clearing himself at a diocesan synod at *Jerusalem and at a provincial synod at Diospolis (Lydda). The African bishops, however, condemned Pelagius and Celestius at two councils at Carthage and Milevis in 416 and persuaded Pope *Innocent I (410–17) to excommunicate them. Celestius went to Rome and so impressed Innocent's successor, *Zosimus (417–19), that he reopened the case. The Africans stood firm and at the Council of Carthage on 1 May 418 they issued a series of nine canons affirming in uncompromising terms the so-called 'Augustinian' doctrine of the *Fall and Original Sin. Meanwhile, on 30 April the Emp. Honorius (395–423), perhaps under African pressure, had issued an imperial decree denouncing Pelagius and Celestius. Soon afterwards Pope Zosimus decided against them and by his 'Epistola Tractoria' (418) he reaffirmed the judgement of his predecessor.

Pelagius himself had little inclination to continue the struggle. He disappears from history and his subsequent fate is unknown. However, a new defender of Pelagianism appeared in *Julian of Eclanum, who conducted a literary debate of great bitterness with Augustine, which ended only with Augustine's death in 430. In 429 Celestius appealed to *Nestorius to intercede for him with Pope *Celestine I, but he and his supporters, like Nestorius, were condemned at the Council of *Ephesus in 431. Doctrines henceforth identified as Pelagian continued to find favour in Britain, where the intervention of *Germanus of Auxerre was needed to extirpate the heresy, while in Gaul the debate on grace gave rise to the movement misleadingly called '*Semipelagianism'. This was a rejection of Augustine's extreme predestinarian views without any corresponding approval of Pelagius. Controversy continued in Gaul during the 5th cent., and a satisfactory theological formula was reached only at the Second Council of *Orange in 529 through the influence of *Caesarius of Arles. The issues raised by Pelagianism, however, continually reappeared during the Middle Ages, only to break out afresh at the *Reformation.

See also SEMIPELAGIANISM.

Owing to Pelagius' condemnation his extensive writings have been largely lost or transmitted under other names. The most considerable surviving work is his 'Commentary on St Paul's Epp.' (on all 13, but not Heb.; written in Rome before 410), which has come down in a worked-over form ascribed to Jerome (PL 30. 645–902) and to *Primasius of Hadrumetum (ibid. 68. 413–686). The orig. text was discovered by A. *Souter and ed. by him with introd. (Texts and Studies, 9. 1–3; Cambridge, 1922–31; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL, Suppl. 1, ed. A. Hamman, OFM (1958), cols. 1110–374); Eng. tr. and comm. by T. de Bruyn (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1993). Other works which are certainly the work of Pelagius are his 'Ep. ad Demetriadem', addressed to a Roman lady of high standing who became a nun (wrongly incl. among the works of Augustine and Jerome, PL 30. 15–45, and 33. 1099–120), and the short 'Libellus Fidei ad Innocentium Papam' (ibid. 48. 488–91). G. de Plinval has defended as indisputably the work of Pelagius a small collection of Epp. and other writings brought together in C. P. *Caspari, Briefe, Abhandlungen und Predigten (Christiania, 1890), pp. 3–167 (with comm. pp. 223–389 and hence known as the 'Corpus Casparianum'), as well as a number of other lesser writings. Most of the other works attributed to Pelagius in modern times are repr. in PL, Suppl. 1, cols. 1375–570, with introd. cols. 1101–9; for further details see CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 250–61 (nos. 728–66). Eng. tr. of 18 letters of Pelagius and his followers by B. R. Rees (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1991).

The classic account of the subject is H. *Noris, Historia Pelagiana (Padua, 1673; with strong *Jansenist leanings). Modern studies include A. Souter, The Earliest Latin Commentaries on the Epistles of St Paul (1927), pp. 205–30; G. de Plinval, Pélage: Ses écrits, sa vie et sa réforme (Lausanne, 1943); id., Essai sur le style et la langue de Pélage, suivi du traité inédit De Induratione Cordis Pharaonis (Collectanea Friburgensia, NS 31; 1947); J. Ferguson, Pelagius (Cambridge, 1956); T. Bohlin, Die Theologie des Pelagius und ihre Genesis (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis, 1957, no. 9); J. N. L. Myres, 'Pelagius and the End of Roman Rule in Britain', Journal of Roman Studies, 1 (1960), pp. 21–36; J. Morris, 'Pelagian Literature', JTS NS 16 (1965), pp. 26–60; id., 'The Literary Evidence', in M. W. Barley and R. P. C. Hanson (eds.), Christianity in Britain, 300–700 (Leicester, 1968), pp. 55–73; R. F. Evans, Pelagius: Inquiries and Reappraisals (1968), and other works of this author; P. Brown, 'Pelagius and his Supporters: Aims and Environment', JTS NS 19 (1968), pp. 93–114; id., 'The Patrons of Pelagius', ibid. 21 (1970), pp. 56–72; G. Bonner, Augustine and Modern Research on Pelagianism (St Augustine Lecture, 1970; Villanova, Pa., 1972); G. Greshake, Gnade als konkrete Freiheit: Eine Untersuchung zur Gnadenlehre des Pelagius (Mainz, 1972); O. Wermelinger, Rom und Pelagius (Päpste und Papsttum, 7; Stuttgart, 1975); R. A. Markus, 'Pelagianism: Britain and the Continent', JEH 37 (1986), pp. 191–204; B. R. Rees, Pelagius: A Reluctant Heretic (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1988). L. [R.] Wickham, 'Pelagianism in the East', in R. [D.] Williams (ed.), The Making of Orthodoxy: Essays in honour of Henry Chadwick (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 200–13. Useful collection of texts in A. Bruckner, Quellen zur Geschichte des pelagianischen Streites (Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, Reihe 2, 7; 1906). H. J. Frede, Pelagius, Der irische Paulustext, Sedulius Scottus (Vetus Latina. Die Reste der Altlateinischen Bibel. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 3; 1961), pp. 9–58. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 513–15; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 374–7 and 628 f. F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 747–74, s.v. 'Pelagius und der pelagianische Streit' [at end of the vol.]; R. Hedde, OP, and É. Amann in DTC, 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 675–715; F. G. Nuvolone and A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 13 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2889–942, s.v. 'Pélage et Pélagianisme' [at end of the vol.]. See also works cited under AUGUSTINE OF HIPPO, ST.

Pelagius. See PELAGIANISM.

pelican. The image of the pelican, 'vulning herself' with her beak to feed her young with her blood, has been widely used in Christian symbolism to typify the Lord's redeeming work, esp. as mediated through the Blessed Sacrament. Well-known instances are the first line of the 6th stanza of '*Adoro te devote', and the figure of the pelican on the column in the quadrangle of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. At *Durham the Blessed Sacrament used to be reserved in a silver pelican suspended over the high altar.

W. Lampen, OFM, '"Pie Pelicane, Jesu Domine"', Antonianum, 21 (1946), pp. 68–92. A. P. Frutaz in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1088 f., s.v. 'Pellicano'. See also works cited under ICONOGRAPHY.

penalties, ecclesiastical. The punishments which can be imposed upon an offender against the law of the Church are divided into three categories: (1) 'censures' or 'medicinal penalties' designed to secure the correction of the offender and his reintegration into the life of the Church. They comprise *excommunication, *interdict, and *suspension of clerics from their office; (2) 'expiatory penalties' designed to punish the offender and safeguard the community; they include prohibition to live in a certain area and dismissal from the clerical life; (3) 'penal remedies' and penances. These remedies (i.e. warning and rebuke) are intended to prevent likely wrongdoing or to deal with the serious suspicion that an offence has been committed. Penances, imposed in the external *forum, may be given either as a substitute for, or in addition to, other penalties. Current RC legislation is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 1312–99.

T. J. Green in J. A. Coriden, T. J. Green, and D. E. Heintschel (eds.), The Code of Canon Law: A Text and Commentary (1985), pp. 893–941.

Penance. Of the earliest history of the Sacrament of Penance very little is known. By the 3rd cent. there had emerged a developed system of public Penance which was regarded as a 'second Baptism'. After the sinner, voluntarily or under threat of *excommunication, had asked the bishop for Penance, he was enrolled in the order of *penitents, excluded from Communion, and committed to a severe course of prayer, fasting, and almsgiving. At the end of a period whose length was determined by the gravity of the sin, the sinner was reconciled and rejoined the congregation of the faithful. Certain prohibitions, however, attached to him for life, e.g. he must not be a soldier and he might not marry. The outstanding characteristics of this system were: (1) the enrolment into the distinct order of penitents, (2) it could be undergone only once in a lifetime, and (3) the enforcement of lifelong continence. Because of these characteristics the system broke down, and Penance was usually postponed until the eve of death.

In consequence, a new system was developed in the W. through the influence of *Celtic or *Anglo-Saxon monk-missionaries, which was administered by means of the *Penitential Books (q.v.). This differed from the earlier system in the absence of the three features mentioned above; but the Penance remained public, long, and arduous, even in the new. Confession of the details of sin was secret. Absolution, at any rate at the start of the new system, was withheld until the completion of the Penance. Gradually it was pushed back until it was granted on confession and before the Penance was begun. From this developed the modern 'private Penance', with its confession, absolution, and light formal Penance. Although this procedure was established by the early 12th cent., its practice was systematically enjoined after the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215). Can. 25 of that Council, Omnis utriusque sexus, required every Christian to confess his or her sins in Penance to the parish priest at least once a year. The canon became both a charter and a stimulus to the further development of regular confession, a development witnessed by the birth, *c.*1200, of a burgeoning new literary genre, the confessor's handbook, and fostered by the appearance of an army of qualified confessors in the *mendicant orders. By 1500 the system was sufficiently ubiquitous to be a major target for the Church's more radical critics. In the E. a similar development took place. Here, however, Penance was intimately bound up with spiritual direction which was not confined to the priesthood, but rather something sought from members of the monastic order. Absolution is not always mentioned in connection with such confession and it is certain that many confessors were lay, especially to other monks. By the 15th cent., private confession to a priest, followed by a prayer for forgiveness, was a generally accepted practice among lay people.

'Penance' means 'poena', i.e. punishment. In the W. it was apparently held that post-Baptismal sins must be atoned for in part by the punishment of the sinner, on the ground that it was better to endure the punishment in this world than in the next. Though the essential part played in the redemption of sin by Christ's *Atonement on the Cross was never overlooked, yet great weight was attached to the amends offered by the penitent, and the use of the word '*satisfaction' for the Penance, as well as its relative severity, reflected this belief. But from the first another idea was also present, namely that the practice of asceticism controlled and eradicated the passions that led to the sin, and by enforcing a semi-retirement from the world shielded the sinner from further temptations. These ideas were carried over into the Celtic system, together with the more secular purpose of enforcing obedience to the law and exercising over barbarians a moderating and civilizing influence. The Penance consisted generally of fasts (of greater or less severity), continence, pilgrimages, floggings, and imprisonment. Owing to the great inconvenience and interruption to ordinary life occasioned by long and arduous Penances, the system of commutation grew up. A Penance of years or a lengthy pilgrimage could be compressed into a single day by the payment of money or its place taken by the repeated recitation of the Psalter in a position of physical discomfort. The idea of commutation affected the later development of *indulgences. Their development also owed much to the greater doctrinal precision of the *Schoolmen, who distinguished between 'culpa' and 'poena', and between 'poena damnationis' and 'poena temporalis', the last alone being the object of Penance. 'Culpa' and 'poena damnationis' were held to be removed by contrition and absolution, whereas 'poena temporalis' required the Penance of the sinner or its equivalent drawn from the treasury of *merit. At every stage, the ability of the Church to intercede for sinners and the power of its ministers to absolve and reconcile them has lain behind the theology of Penance.

The Second *Vatican Council's 'Constitution on the Liturgy' (sect. 72; 1963) decreed that the rites and formulas of the Sacrament of Penance should be revised so that they might better express the nature and effect of the Sacrament. The Ordo Poenitentiae, issued in 1973, lays emphasis on the aspects of reconciliation and amendment of life rather than on confession, judgement, and punishment; it also stresses the social dimensions of sin and reparation. It provides three rites: (1) for the reconciliation of individual penitents, on the traditional pattern, though either the penitent or the confessor is urged to read a short passage of Scripture as an aid to conscience; (2) for the reconciliation of several penitents in a service of penitence, with prayers, Psalms, Bible readings, and a sermon, followed by individual private confession and absolution; and (3) for the reconciliation of many penitents in a service similar to (2) but without private confession; the service concludes with a general confession followed by a public act of reconciliation with absolution. The conditions for the use of this third rite are restricted: it may be used only when there is 'grave cause', i.e. where there is a considerable number of penitents and an insufficient number of confessors, so that those in need of the Sacrament would otherwise be deprived of it; and penitents who profit from this rite are obliged to confess their sins in due course, at least within the following 12 months.

In the C of E the use of Penance for those who wished for it was revived in the 19th cent. by E. B. *Pusey and other *Tractarians on the basis of the provisions in the BCP *Visitation of the Sick. Several modern Anglican liturgies (though not the ASB) include a separate rite for the Reconciliation of a Penitent.

See also SEAL OF CONFESSION and CONFESSION ROOMS.

Useful historical account in O. D. Watkins, A History of Penance (2 vols., 1920). J. A. Jungmann, SJ, Die lateinischen Bussriten in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Forschungen zur Geschichte des innerkirchlichen Lebens, 3–4; 1932). B. Poschmann, Busse und letzte Ölung (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 4, Fask. 3; 1951), pp. 1–123; Eng. tr. [1964], pp. 1–232, incl. additional bibl. The orig. Ger. of this last vol. has been partly superseded by the new vol. in the same series by H. Vorgrimler, Busse und Krankensalbung (ibid. 4, Fask. 3; 1978), pp. 1–214. P. Anciaux, Le Sacrement de la pénitence (Questions de Morale, 1957). W. Telfer, The Forgiveness of Sins: An Essay in the History of Christian Doctrine and Practice (1959). J. [T. A.] Gunstone, The Liturgy of Penance (Studies in Christian Worship, 7; 1966). J. Fitzsimons (ed.), Penance: Virtue and Sacrament (1969). Groupe de la Bussière [J.-C. Guy, SJ, and others], Pratiques de la confession des pères du désert à Vatican II. Quinze études d'histoire (1983), with bibl. M. Dudley and [D.] G. Rowell (eds.), Confession and Absolution (1990). J. Morinus [*Morin], Commentarius Historicus de Disciplina in Administratione Sacramenti Poenitentiae (Paris, fol., 1651). Collection of early texts ed., with Ger. tr., by H. Karpp, Die Busse (Traditio Christiana, 2 vols., Zurich, 1969; Fr. tr., 1970). Fr. tr. of primary texts also by C. Vogel, Le Pécheur et la Pénitence dans l'Église ancienne (1966); id., Le Pécheur et la Pénitence au moyen âge (1969). P. Galtier, SJ, L'Église et la rémission des péchés aux premiers siècles (1932); id., Aux origines du sacrement de pénitence (Analecta Gregoriana, 54; 1951), and other works by this author; R. C. Mortimer, The Origins of Private Penance in the Western Church (1939). C. Vogel, La Discipline pénitentielle en Gaule des origines à la fin du VII^e siècle (1952). P. Anciaux, La Théologie du sacrement de pénitence au XII^e siècle (Louvain, 1949). L. Braeckmans, SJ, Confession et Communion au moyen âge et au concile de Trente (Recherches et Synthèses, Section de Morale, 6; Gembloux [1971]). T. N. Tentler, Sin and Confession on the Eve of the Reformation (Princeton, NJ, 1977). M. Thurian, La Confession (Collection Communauté de Taizé, 1953; Eng. tr., 1958). D. Crichton, The Ministry of Reconciliation: A Commentary on the Order of Penance 1974 (1974). J. A. Favazza, The Order of Penitents: Historical Roots and Pastoral Future (Collegeville, Minn. [1988]). É. Amann, A. Michel, and M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 722–1138, s.v. 'Pénitence'; P. Palmer and P. E. McKeever in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 73–83, s.v.; P. Adnès, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 943–1010, s.v. 'Pénitence'.

Penington, Isaac, the 'Younger' (1616–79), also spelled 'Pennington', *Quaker. He was the eldest son of Sir Isaac Penington (*c.*1590–1661), Lord Mayor of London in 1642–3. Little is known of his education, but he matriculated at Cambridge in 1637. After years of religious perplexity, during which he attached himself for a time to the *Independents, he heard George *Fox speak near Luton in 1657 and, together with his wife, joined the Quaker body in 1658. His conversion was an important accession of strength to the Quakers, who hitherto had had no one of his station in their ranks. From 1658 Quaker worship took place at 'The Grange', his house at Chalfont St Peter. After 1660 he was imprisoned five times; his house and other property confiscated; and his health progressively undermined by the severity of prison life. At Jordans, Chalfont St Giles, where he was buried, a meeting-house that still survives was built on his property. He wrote many books and pamphlets, all of them in a spirit quite free from controversial bitterness, which were of great assistance in the building up of the new Quaker Society.

Works (2 parts, London, 1681, 1680). J. G. Bevan, Memoirs of the Life of Isaac Penington; to which is added a review of his writings (1807). M. Webb, The Penns and Peningtons of the 17th Century (1867). C. Fell-Smith in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 297–300.

Penitential Books. Books containing directions for confessors which included lists of sins with a set of graded *penances for each. They first appeared in the *Celtic Church in the 6th cent. Though the use of repeated and variable penances for specific sins was attacked as infringing the ancient discipline of public penance at the Council of Toledo in 589, the practice was commended at the Council of Chalon-sur-Saône (between 647 and 653), and the Penitentials which reflected it spread rapidly throughout the W. in the following cents. In a bewildering variety of forms they recommend inconsistent penalties; some allow commutation of penance for money, and even the employment of substitutes. The Carolingian reformers denounced their 'certain errors and uncertain authors' at Chalon-sur-Saône in 813, and the Council of Paris in 829 commanded bishops to burn all unauthorized texts of the kind. Several efforts to provide more orderly handbooks culminated in Book 19 of the Decretum of *Burckard of Worms (the 'Corrector'), which had an enormous influence. By the end of the 12th cent. this mechanistic discipline was giving way to a more individual approach, reflected in such handbooks for confessors as those of *Alan of Lille and St *Raymond of Peñafort.

Selection of texts, with discussion, pr. by F. W. H. Wasserschleben (Halle, 1851) and H. J. Schmitz (vol. 1, Mainz, 1883; vol. 2, Düsseldorf, 1898). Eng. trs. (various items) by J. T. McNeill and H. M. Gamer (Records of Civilization, 29; New York, 1938). The Irish Penitentials, ed. L. Bieler with appendix by D. A. Binchy (Scriptores Latini Hiberniae, 5; 1963). C. Vogel, Les 'Libri Paenitentiales' (Typologie des sources du moyen âge occidental, 27; 1978, with 'Mise à jour' by A. J. Frantzen, 1985). R. Kottje, Die Bussbücher Halitgars von Cambrai und des Hrabanus Maurus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Quellenkunde des Mittelalters, 8; 1980). A. J. Frantzen, The Literature of Penance in Anglo-Saxon England (New Brunswick, NJ [1983]), with bibl. G. Le Bras in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1160–79, s.v. 'Pénitentiels'; P. J. Payer in Dictionary of the Middle Ages, 9 (1987), pp. 487–93, s.v. 'Penance and Penitentials', with extensive bibl.

Penitential Psalms. See SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS.

Penitentiary. In the RC Church a Penitentiary in general is a cleric charged with certain aspects of the administration of the Sacrament of *Penance and related matters. A Canon Penitentiary is a member of a cathedral chapter who holds special powers to absolve in the sacramental *forum from certain automatically incurred censures (CIC (1983), can. 508). The 'Major Penitentiary' is the *cardinal who presides over a tribunal which deals with important matters to do with the internal and sacramental forum world-wide, as well as with the granting and uses of *indulgences.

E. Göller, Die päpstliche Pönitentiarie von ihrem Ursprung bis zu ihrer Umgestaltung unter Pius V. (Bibliothek des Kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 3–4 and 7–8; 1907–11). F. Tamburini, 'Per la Storia dei Cardinali Penitenzieri Maggiori e dell'Archivio della Penitenzieria Apostolica', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 36 (1982), pp. 332–80. R. Naz in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 1327–34, s.v. 'Pénitencerie'; P. Lumbreras in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 87 f., s.v.

penitents. In the ancient system of public *Penance (q.v.), penitents were segregated from the rest of the congregation by wearing a special robe, having close-cropped hair and worshipping apart in the church. Here, towards the W. end of the nave, placed between the *catechumens and the faithful, they received from the bishop special laying on of hands each Sunday. In the E. Church, though not in the W., the order of penitents may have been divided into four stages, though the prevalence of this procedure has been contested by F. X. Funk and E. *Schwartz. The penitent remained in the order till he was readmitted to Communion. Certain disabilities attached to him for life.

The disciplinary regulations controlling the exercise of Penance in the early Church will be found in the primitive collections of canons (for bibl. see CANON LAW). E. Vacandard, La Pénitence publique dans l'Église primitive (2 vols., 1903). C. Vogel, Le Pécheur et la Pénitence dans l'Église ancienne (1966), esp. pp. 34–41. F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, 1 (1897), pp. 151–209; E. Schwartz, Bussstufen und Katechumenatsklassen (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft in Strassburg, 7; 1911). G. Mead in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1591–6, s.v. 'Penitence, iii: The Penitential Stations' (useful collection of material, but assumes older view). See also bibl. to PENANCE.

Penn, William (1644–1718), *Quaker and founder of Pennsylvania. The eldest son of Admiral Sir William Penn (1621–70), who captured Jamaica from the Dutch (May 1655), he was for a time an undergraduate at Christ Church, Oxford, whence he was sent down in 1661 for refusal to conform with the restored Anglicanism. After some years of travel abroad he was admitted in 1665 a student at Lincoln's Inn. A sermon of Thomas Loe, an Oxford tradesman with whom he had been acquainted since boyhood, which he heard at Cork in 1666, had a decisive influence and in 1667 he attached himself to the Quakers. He soon began writing in defence of his newly won faith and in 1668 his The Sandy Foundation Shaken, an attack on the orthodox doctrines of the *Trinity and *Atonement and the *Calvinistic account of *justification, led to his imprisonment in the Tower. During his confinement he wrote No Cross, No Crown (1669), a recognized classic of Quaker practice. In 1670 the acquittal of him and William Meade at the Old Bailey by the jury, who gave a verdict against the ruling of the Court and were forthwith imprisoned, led to the famous 'Bushell's Case', in which 12 judges unanimously upheld the jury's rights and declared their imprisonment illegal. During the 1670s Penn became increasingly interested in the foundation of a colony in America which would assure liberty of conscience for Quakers and others. From 1677 he and two other Friends were trustees of West New Jersey, which was given a constitution on Quaker principles, and in April 1681 he joined with 11 other Friends to purchase East New Jersey. Also in 1681 he obtained by letters patent a grant of Pennsylvania, confirmed the following year. He then founded the 'Free Society of Traders' to develop the colony economically, drew up a constitution which, like that of West New Jersey, permitted all forms of worship compatible with monotheism and religious liberty, and himself sailed for America. After establishing the colony he returned to England in 1684. Believing that *James II, with whom he had had relations from the days of his father's admiralship, was a true advocate of toleration, he expressed the Quakers' thanks for the *Declaration of Indulgence (1687) in a loyal address and followed it with a pamphlet, Good Advice to the Church of England, Roman Catholic and Protestant Dissenter. For a short time after the Revolution he was held to bail as one of James' adherents, and in 1692 he was deprived by an order in council of the Governorship of Pennsylvania. In 1693 he published An Essay towards the Present and Future Peace of Europe, advocating the establishment of a European Parliament. In the same year he resumed his practice of itinerant preaching and in 1696 wrote his Primitive Christianity, upholding the identity of Quaker principles with those of the early Church. In 1699 he paid a second visit to Pennsylvania, intending to settle there for good, but in 1701 the proposal to introduce legislation changing the status of the province into a Crown Colony brought him back to England, where he lived successively at Kensington, Knightsbridge, Brentford, and Field Ruscombe (near Twyford). He is buried at Jordans, near Chalfont St Giles. His prolific writings were almost all occasional.

Collected edn. of his works (2 vols., fol., London, 1726), with Life, written by Joseph Besse eight years after Penn's death, pr. anon. in vol. 1, pp. 1–150. Modern edn. under the title The Papers of William Penn, ed. M. M. Dunn and others (5 vols., Philadelphia, 1981–7, incl. as vol. 5: E. B. Bronner and D. Fraser, William Penn's Published Writings 1660–1726: An Interpretive Bibliography, 1986). Convenient edn. of The Peace of Europe and various other works in Everyman Library, 724 [1915]. Secondary Lives by T. Clarkson (2 vols., London, 1813); S. M. Janney (Philadelphia, 1851; 2nd edn., 1856; with many useful orig. docs.); Mrs. Colquhoun Grant (London, c.1907); M. R. Brailsford (ibid., 1930); B. Dobrée (ibid., 1932); C. E. Vulliamy (ibid., 1933); W. I. Hull (ibid., 1937); W. W. Comfort (Philadelphia, 1944); and C. O. Peare (ibid. and New York, 1957; London, 1959). V. Buranelli, The King and the Quaker: A Study of William Penn and James II (Philadelphia, 1962). M. M. Dunn, William Penn: Politics and Conscience (Princeton, NJ, 1967). M. B. Endy, William Penn and early Quakerism (ibid. [1973]). R. S. and M. M. Dunn (eds.), The World of William Penn (Philadelphia, 1986), pp. 3–84. J. M. Rigg in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 311–20; R. W. Kelsey in Dict. Amer. Biog. 14 (1934), pp. 433–7. See also bibl. to FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF.

Pennefather, William (1816–73), *Evangelical divine. Of Irish extraction, he was ordained priest in 1842; he was incumbent of Christ Church, Barnet (1852–64) and of St Jude's, Mildmay Park, Islington (1864–73), now both parts of London. His influence spread far beyond his parishes. In 1861 he founded what was to become the Mildmay Deaconess Institution, modelled on *Kaiserswerth.

Though originally devoted to various forms of social work, some of its members were to become *deaconesses; the Mildmay Institution, which in 1917 became St Catherine's Deaconess House, Highbury, was the only sizeable training institution in the Evangelical tradition, surviving until 1940. Pennefather invited D. L. *Moody and I. Sankey to conduct their first mission in Britain in 1873, but died before they arrived.

R. Braithwaite (ed), The Life and Letters of the Rev. William Pennefather (1878). A. R. Buckland in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 327 f.

Pennington, Isaac. See PENINGTON, ISAAC.

Penry, John (1559–93), *Separatist. Of Welsh descent, he was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and St Alban's Hall, Oxford. After leaving Oxford, he quickly came into conflict with the bishops on account of his *Puritan ideas. His Equity of an Humble Supplication in the behalf of the Country of Wales, that some Order may be taken for the Preaching of the Gospel among those People (1587), an attack on the C of E, angered Abp. J. *Whitgift, who brought him before the Court of High Commission. In 1588, when the scurrilous *Marprelate tracts appeared, Penry was almost certainly unjustly suspected of being their author, and in consequence of these suspicions early in 1590 fled to Scotland, where he remained for nearly three years. On his return to England in the autumn of 1592 he became an adherent of the London Separatist congregation. Now considered a danger to the Church, he was hanged on 29 May 1593, on an ill-grounded charge of treason.

An Account of Penry's Trial, in Lat. (but with extracts from his works in Eng.), together with a collection of citations apparently collected for his trial and which Penry intended to present to Queen *Elizabeth I, the original MS of his defence against his first indictment and some of his final remarks to Lord Burghley on the day of his execution, were ed., with introd., by C. Burrage (Oxford, 1913). The Notebook containing the passages mainly responsible for his condemnation, ed. A. Peel (Camden Society, 3rd ser. 67; 1944). Three Treatises concerning Wales, by Penry are repr., with introd. by D. Williams (Cardiff, 1960). W. Pierce, John Penry: His Life, Times and Writings (1923). D. J. McGinn, John Penry and the Marprelate Controversy (New Brunswick, NJ, 1966). S. Lee in DNB 44 (1895), pp. 346–50. See also bibl. to MARPRELATE TRACTS.

Pentateuch (Gk. πεντα, 'five' + τεῦχος, 'book'). A title in general use among biblical scholars for the five 'Books of *Moses': *Genesis, *Exodus, *Leviticus, *Numbers, and *Deuteronomy. Traditionally, these Books were held to have been written, almost in their entirety, by Moses himself. However, during the 19th cent. the 'documentary hypothesis' was developed by scholars, notably J. *Wellhausen; according to this theory, the Pentateuch was compiled from previously written documents dating from the 9th to the 5th cent. BC. Following the work of H. *Gunkel early in the 20th cent., much research concerned itself with the oral traditions which lay behind these postulated documents; thus M. *Noth, G. von *Rad, and many others retained the 'documentary hypothesis', but supplemented it with insights from Gunkel's *form critical approach. Such a position is still widely accepted. An alternative approach has been to reject altogether the notion that previously independent written documents were combined to form the Pentateuch. Scholars who favour this course have frequently emphasized the thematic unity of the Pentateuch and the importance of oral tradition, and have argued that cycles of tradition gradually evolved until something like the present form of the Pentateuch emerged. Rejection of Wellhausen's thesis long characterized Scandinavian scholarship (e.g. I. Engnell), but in recent years somewhat similar theories have found support elsewhere (including Germany, e.g. R. Rendtorff). See also entries 'J', 'E', 'D', 'P', and HOLINESS CODE.

J. Wellhausen, Geschichte Israels, 1 (1878; 2nd edn. as Prolegomena zur Geschichte Israels, 1883; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1885, repr. 1957). H. Gunkel, 'Die israelitische Literatur' in Die Kultur der Gegenwart, ed. P. Hinneberg, 1. 7 (1906), pp. 51–102. G. von Rad, Das formgeschichtliche Problem des Hexateuchs (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, 4. Folge, 26; 1938), repr. in his Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (Munich, 1958), pp. 9–86; Eng. tr. in The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays (1966), pp. 1–78; M. Noth, Überlieferungsgeschichte des Pentateuch (Stuttgart, 1948; Eng. tr., Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1972); I. Engnell, 'Moseböckerna', Svenskt Bibliskt Uppslagsverk, 2 (2nd edn., 1962), cols. 152–65; Eng. tr., 'The Pentateuch', in Critical Essays on the Old Testament (1970), pp. 50–67. R. Rendtorff, Das überlieferungsgeschichtliche Problem des Pentateuch (Beihefte zur ZATW, 147; 1977; Eng. tr., The Problem of the Process of Transmission in the Pentateuch, Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 89; Sheffield, 1990); cf. J. Van Seters, 'Recent Studies on the Pentateuch: a Crisis in Method', Journal of the American Oriental Society, 99 (1979), pp. 663–73. R. N. Whybray, The Making of the Pentateuch: A Methodological Study (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 53; Sheffield [1987]). Soggin, pp. 91–163, with good bibl.

Pentecost (Gk. πεντηκοστή, the 'fiftieth day'). The Greek name given to the Feast of *Weeks (e.g. Tob. 2: 1; *Josephus, Ant. 17. 10. 2), so called because it fell on the 50th day after *Passover. At this feast the first-fruits of the corn harvest were presented (Deut. 16: 9) and, in most later times, the giving of the Law by Moses was commemorated. As the Holy Spirit descended on the Apostles on this day (Acts 2: 1), the name was applied by the Church to the feast celebrating this event, popularly called *Whitsunday (q.v.). In early times, e.g. in the *Nicene canons (can. 20), the word 'Pentecost' was also used for the whole period between Easter and Whitsunday, i.e. the Paschal time, during which no fast was allowed and prayer was only made standing. For further liturgical details see WHITSUNDAY.

E. Lohse in TWNT 6 (1959; Eng. tr., 1969), pp. 44–53, s.v. πεντηκοστή, with refs.; M. Delcor in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 858–79, s.v. 'Pentecôte (la Fête de la)'. For the Hebrew feast, see also WEEKS, FEAST OF; for the Christian, see WHITSUNDAY.

Pentecostalism. The modern Pentecostal movement is characterized by belief in the possibility of receiving the same experience and spiritual 'gifts' as did the first Christians 'on the day of Pentecost' (Acts 2: 1–4). Its adherents emphasize the corporate element in worship (often marked by great spontaneity) and lay special stress on the practice of the gifts listed in 1 Cor. and recorded in Acts (e.g. speaking in tongues or '*glossalalia', prophecy, divine [*spiritual] healing, and *exorcism), and on possession of these gifts by all true believers. Most of them claim that the 'power' to exercise these gifts is given initially in an experience known as '*baptism in the Holy Spirit', usually regarded as distinct from conversion and from sacramental (or water) *Baptism, and the movement came to be distinguished by the claim (first made in 1900) that 'Spirit baptism' is normally signified by the recipient's breaking into tongues.

In the early years of the 20th cent. experiences of 'Spirit baptism' were reported among various denominational revivalist or *Holiness groups in America; those occurring in Los Angeles in 1906 attracted much attention and had widespread repercussions. Pentecostalism's origins were strongly apocalyptic, and its early adherents widely believed that it was to be preached throughout the world 'before the end came'. Of the many specifically Pentecostal Churches which came to be formed, one of the earliest was the 'Church of God', commonly designated of Cleveland, Tenn., to distinguish it from other bodies taking the same name. The structure of *Black slave religion contributed to the success of early Pentecostalism, but Pentecostals in America quickly segregated; the largest Black Pentecostal Church, the 'Church of God in Christ', was originally a Holiness body which adopted Pentecostal teaching in 1907. The largest Pentecostal body in America is the '*Assemblies of God', an affiliation of Churches formed in 1914.

Pentecostalism in Britain is usually dated from a visit to Sunderland in 1907 of T. B. Barratt, a *Methodist minister from Oslo who claimed to have received 'Spirit baptism' in New York. In 1915 the 'Elim Foursquare Gospel Alliance' came into being under George Jeffreys in Ireland, and in 1924 the 'Assemblies of God in Britain and Ireland' was constituted by *c.*70 independent assemblies. In 1953 immigrants from Jamaica established in Britain the 'New Testament Church of God', an offshoot of the Cleveland 'Church of God'. Pentecostalism also spread early to other W. European countries, above all through Barratt's influence. It is now expanding in the Third World, esp. in Latin America, *Indonesia, and among the African Independent Churches, but it is not always clear whether the 'pentecostal-type' features found in some Third-World Christianity have N. American origins or origins in the local culture; often the two have mingled.

Pentecostal Churches vary considerably, depending on the theology of their founders or the local culture, and since *c.*1960 the Pentecostal movement has come to be widely represented not only by the 'classical' Pentecostal Churches, but also within the main Christian denominations, where it is sometimes called 'Neo-Pentecostalism' (see CHARISMATIC RENEWAL MOVEMENT). Originally 'a religion of the poor', in N. America and Europe White Pentecostalism is becoming increasingly middle-class.

D. Gee, The Pentecostal Movement (1941; rev. edn., Wind and Flame, Croydon, 1967). W. J. Hollenweger, Enthusiastisches Christentum: Die Pfingstbewegung in Geschichte und Gegenwart (Wuppertal, 1969; Eng. tr., The Pentecostals, 1972). M. J. C. Calley, God's People: West Indian Pentecostal Sects in England (1965). [H.] V. Synan, The Holiness-Pentecostal Movement in the United States (Grand Rapids [1971]), pp. 95–224. R. Laurentin, Pentecôtisme chez les Catholiques ([1974] Eng. tr., 1977). R. M. Anderson, Vision of the Disinherited: The Making of American Pentecostalism (New York and Oxford, 1979). J. Sandige, Roman Catholic/Pentecostal Dialogue (1977–1982): A Study in Developing Ecumenism (Studien zur interkulturellen Geschichte des Christentums, 44; Frankfurt etc. [1987]). S. M. Burgess and G. B. McGee (eds.), Dictionary of Pentecostal and Charismatic Movements (Grand Rapids [1988]).

Pentecostarion (Gk. πεντηκοστάριον). In the E. rite the liturgical book which contains the variable portions of the services for the season between *Easter and the Sunday of All Saints (the Sunday after *Pentecost) inclusive. In Slav usage, it is known as the 'Flowery' or 'Festal' *Triodion (Tsvetnaya Triod).

Pepin (or more correctly Pippin) III (714–68), 'Pepin the Short', Frankish King. The son of *Charles Martel, he was educated by the monks of *St-Denis, near *Paris, and with his brother Carloman, succeeded to his father's office as Mayor of the Palace of the Frankish kingdom in 741. In 747 Carloman retired into a monastery, leaving Pepin sole ruler. With the assent of Pope *Zacharias he was elected King by the nobles in 751 in place of the purely nominal Merovingian King, Childeric III, and anointed by Frankish bishops. In 754 the ceremony was repeated by the Pope himself, *Stephen II (III), from whom he received the title 'patricius' in exchange for his promise to win back for him the exarchate of *Ravenna and the rights and territories of the Roman republic. Having defeated the Lombards under Aistulf in the same year and again in 756, Pepin fulfilled his promise by giving the Pope the territories specified in the no-longer-extant document known as the 'Donation of Pepin' and constituted himself and his successors protectors of the Holy See. Throughout his reign, in collaboration with Bp. *Chrodegang of Metz, he took an active part in furthering the ecclesiastical reforms begun by St *Boniface and thereby considerably increased the prestige of the Church among his people. He pursued a complex monastic policy, closely integrated with his political activities, which broke the power of aristocratic bishops. He also considerably extended Frankish dominion with campaigns in Saxony, Aquitaine, and Alemannia, and inaugurated a reform of the coinage under royal control. He died at St-Denis on 24 Sept. 768 and was succeeded by his son *Charlemagne. See also PATRIMONY OF ST PETER.

A. Dopsch, J. Lechner, M. Tangl, and E. Mühlbacher (eds.), Die Urkunden Pippins, Karlmanns und Karls des Grossen (MGH, Diplomata Karolinorum, 1; 1906), pp. 1–60. The Fourth Book of the Chronicle of Fredegar with its Continuations, tr. from Lat., with introd. and notes, by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (1960), esp. pp. 97–121. E. Caspar, Pippin und die römische Kirche (1914; repr., Darmstadt, 1973); L. Levillain, 'L'Avènement de la dynastie carolingienne et les origines de l'État pontifical (749–757)', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 94 (1933), pp. 225–95. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), pp. 65–116 and 256–80 passim, with refs. to earlier studies on the subject. J. Semmler, 'Pippin III. und die fränkischen Klöster', Francia, 3 (for 1975; 1976), pp. 88–146. R. McKitterick, The Frankish Kingdoms under the Carolingians, 751–987 (1983), esp. pp. 33–59; J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 162–80.

Perceval, Arthur Philip (1799–1853), *Tractarian theologian. He was educated at Oriel College, and from 1821 to 1825 held a fellowship at All Souls, Oxford. In 1824 he became rector of East Horsley in Surrey; from 1826 until deprived in 1850 he was a royal chaplain. In the early stages of the *Oxford Movement he was one of its chief supporters, being present at the celebrated conference at Hadleigh in July 1833. In his Churchman's Manual, a set of questions and answers conceived as a supplement to the Prayer Book *Catechism and issued shortly after the Conference, he stressed the Apostolic Succession and thus produced a useful complement to No. 1 of the Tracts for the Times. In 1842 he published A Collection of Papers Connected with the Theological Movement of 1833, largely in defence of J. H. *Newman's 'Tract No. 90'. He had himself been the author of Tracts Nos. 23, 35, and 36. Queen Victoria deprived him of his chaplaincy because of his opposition to the *Gorham Judgement (1850).

A. F. Pollard in DNB 44 (1895), p. 368.

Percival, John (1834–1918), Bp. of *Hereford. Elected Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1858, he became successively first headmaster of Clifton College (1862), president of Trinity College, Oxford (1878), headmaster of Rugby (1887), and Bp. of Hereford (1895). He was keenly interested in religious and secular education, and did much to promote the university extension movement and the higher education of women; and as headmaster of Clifton exercised a great spiritual influence on his school. During his latter years he sought to further the cause of reunion between the C of E and the Nonconformist Churches, and met with the opposition both of *Convocation and of his own clergy when he invited Nonconformists to receive Communion in Hereford Cathedral.

W. *Temple, Life of Bishop Percival (1921). G. F. Bradby in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 432 f.

Percy, John. See FISHER THE JESUIT.

Peregrinatio Egeriae (or Etheriae or Silviae). See EGERIA, PILGRIMAGE OF.

perfection. The primary meaning of the term is completeness and in an absolute sense it may be attributed only to God. In the OT, however, Job is described as a 'man that was perfect' (Job 1: 1) and in the NT perfection is frequently enjoined on the Christian. According to Mt. 5: 48 the perfection required of man is related to that of God ('Be ye therefore perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect'). In some passages (e.g. Phil. 3: 15 and Heb. 6: 1) it would appear that perfection is in some degree realizable even in this life. In Col. 3: 14 charity is described as 'the bond of perfection'. The close association of perfection and charity was developed in detail by later writers. The verb 'to perfect' was regularly used of the operation of the Sacraments, esp. *Baptism.

From early times *martyrdom was described as perfection (or fulfilment), and the term was soon also applied to the state of virginity. From the 4th cent. onwards, *monasticism came to be regarded as the way of perfection par excellence, and a double standard of perfection developed. This was held to be foreshadowed in Mt. 19: 11 f., 21 (cf. Didache*, 6. 2). 'Religious Perfection', involving the practice of the so-called '*Counsels of Perfection', was distinguished from 'Christian Perfection' made possible by Baptism. In the W. the *Pelagian view of perfection as the crown of human endeavour led to a compensating emphasis on the need for Divine *grace. When the Council of *Trent laid down that perfect obedience to the Divine Law was possible, it made it clear that the perfection envisaged was only that accommodated to the fallen state of man and to be distinguished from the perfect law of love.

In general, the Reformers held that perfection is possible in this life only through imputation of the perfection of Christ to the believer. Among the *Methodists, however, the idea of perfection has played a central part. The *Wesleys persistently sought perfection and held that every Christian believer could be perfected in the love of God and man and wholly delivered from sin. Acc. to Methodist spiritual writers the entrance on the way of perfection takes place some time after conversion; it is instantaneous, and those who receive the experience, known as the 'Great Salvation', are thereby convinced that all sin has been completely and permanently rooted out in them. Those that are made perfect in this way pray constantly without interruption, they feel nothing but love, and are restored to the original image of God.

R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, Perfection chrétienne et contemplation (1923); R. N. Flew, The Idea of Perfection in Christian Theology (1934); G. Feckes, Die Lehre vom christlichen Vollkommenheitsstreben (Freiburg i.B., 1949); I. Hausherr, SJ, La Perfection du chrétien, ed. M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ [1968]. J. Wesley, Plain Account of Christian Perfection (1766). G. S. Wakefield in id. (ed.), A Dictionary of Christian Spirituality (1983), pp. 297–9, s.v.; S. Legasse and others in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 1074–156, s.v. See also DEIFICATION.

Perfection, Counsels of. See COUNSELS OF PERFECTION.

Perfectionists. See ONEIDA COMMUNITY.

Pergamum. The town was situated *c.*50 miles north of *Smyrna and *c.*15 miles from the sea, on a hill 1,000 feet above the surrounding plain. In the 2nd cent. BC it became one of the greatest centres of art and culture in the ancient world, reaching the height of its glory in the reign of Eumenes II (197–159). This Eumenes erected the great altar of Zeus the Saviour (now in the Pergamon Museum, Berlin) with the frieze depicting the gods and goddesses of Hellas hurling back the earth-born giants, typifying the triumph of civilization over barbarism. To the same period belongs the invention of parchment ('pergamena carta') as a substitute for papyrus.

To the NT student the chief interest of Pergamum lies in its being one of the 'Seven Churches' in Rev. (2: 12–17). Here it is referred to as the place 'where Satan's throne is' and 'where Satan dwelleth' (2: 13). As Pergamum was the first city in Asia to receive permission to worship the living ruler, the allusion here is presumably to Emperor-worship. This permission had been granted by Octavian (Augustus) in 29 BC, although the temple was not erected until 19 BC. Pergamum was also one of the chief centres of the worship of the healing god Aesculapius, and a large 'Aesculapium' was uncovered by German excavators in 1928; further excavations began in 1958. The modern town is known as Bergama.

Inscriptions and other antiquities in Altertümer von Pergamon, pub. by the Königliches Museum at Berlin (10 vols. + plates, var. dates, 1885–1937; vols. 11 ff. pub. by the Deutsches Archäologisches Institut at Berlin, 1968 ff.). T. Wiegand, Bericht über die Ausgrabungen in Pergamon in 1927 (Abh. (Berl.), 1928, Heft 3); id., Zweiter Bericht über die Ausgrabungen in Pergamon, 1928–32: Das Asklepieion (ibid., 1932, Heft 5). Pergamenische Forschungen, ed. E. Boehringer and others (1968 ff.). W. Radt, Pergamon: Geschichte und Bauten, Funde und Erforschung einer antiken Metropole (Cologne, 1988), with bibl. E. V. Hansen, The Attalids of Pergamon (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, 29, Ithaca, NY, 1947; 2nd edn., ibid. 36, Ithaca, NY, and London, 1971). W. M. *Ramsay, Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904), pp. 281–315; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 78–105. W. Zschietzschmann in PW 19 (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1235–63 (Nachträge, s.v. 'Pergamon'); J. Schäfer in R. Stillwell (ed.), The Princeton Encyclopedia of Classical Sites (Princeton, NJ, 1976), pp. 688–92, s.v.

pericope (Gk. περικοπή, 'section'). A passage from the Scriptures, esp. one appointed to be read in the Church services. The use of such prescribed portions of Scripture in the Eucharist appears to date from the 4th–5th cents. In earlier times, both in E. and W., the passages were selected at choice by the officiating clergy. See also LECTIONARY.

Περικοπή for a section of the Bible occurs as early as St *Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 65. 3. W. Caspari in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 131–59, s.v. 'Perikopen', where the writer shows that the word was first used as a liturgical term by Protestant writers of the 16th cent.

pericope adulterae, i.e. Jn. 7: 53–8: 11. These verses, which narrate the Lord's compassionate dealing with the woman taken in the act of adultery, are certainly not part of the original text of St John's Gospel. They are not found in any of the early Greek MSS, with the one exception of *Codex Bezae, and they are also wanting in many of the more important MSS of the Syriac, Latin, and Coptic versions. Nor does any Greek commentator before *Euthymius Zigabenus (c. AD 1118) discuss the passage. On the other hand, the story is very much in line with many of those in the Synoptic Gospels, and the facts that it is definitely referred to in a passage in the 3rd cent. Didascalia Apostolorum* (2. 24; ed. R. H. *Connolly, p. 76), and was perhaps known to *Papias, point to its primitiveness. In the *Ferrar group of MSS the passage is placed after Lk. 21: 38; this fact, together with certain stylistic similarities, have led to the suggestion that the passage belongs to St Luke.

The passage is discussed in comm. on St John's Gospel, cited s.v. JOHN, GOSPEL OF ST. H. J. *Cadbury, 'A Possible Case of Lukan Authorship (John 7. 53–8. 11)', HTR 10 (1917), pp. 237–44. H. Riesenfeld, 'Perikopen de adultera i den fornkyrkliga traditionen', Svensk Exegetisk Årsbok, 17 (1953), pp. 106–18; Eng. tr. in The Gospel Tradition (Philadelphia, 1970; Oxford, 1971), pp. 95–110. U. Becker, Jesus und die Ehebrecherin (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 28; 1963). E. Bammel, 'The Cambridge Pericope. The Addition to Luke 6. 4 in Codex Bezae', New Testament Studies, 32 (1986), pp. 404–26.

peripatetic (Gk. περιπατητής, 'one who walks about'). A philosopher of the school of *Aristotle. The name was adopted in reference to Aristotle's practice of teaching while moving about in a covered walk (περίπατος) in the Lyceum at Athens.

Perkins, William (1558–1602), *Puritan theologian. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he was a Fellow from 1584 to 1594, he soon became prominent in the university by his preaching, lectures, and writings as a vigorous anti-Romanist theologian and a supporter of Puritan principles. His writings, mainly occasional, were marked by candour, an honest desire to understand his opponents, and, despite his use of the traditional scholastic methods which still survived at Cambridge, an evident concern for history. They include his Reformed Catholike (1597) on the Roman controversy, which W. Bishop, titular Bp. of Chalcedon (d. 1624), answered in his Reformation of a Catholic Deformed by W. Perkins (2 pts., 1604, 1607), and De Praedestinationis Modo et Ordine (1598), which evoked a reply from J. *Arminius in the same year. His works were held in high repute throughout the 17th cent. by theologians with Calvinist sympathies. They also include An Exposition of the Lord's Prayer (1592) and An Exposition of the Symbol or Creed of the Apostles (1595).

The numerous collected edns. of his works (all very incomplete) incl. those pub. Cambridge, 1603; ibid., 1605; 3 vols., fol., ibid., 1608–9, and 3 vols., fol., London and Cambridge, 1612–13. Modern collection of extracts, ed., with introd., by I. Breward (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 3; Sutton Courtenay, Oxon, 1970). 'A Discourse of Conscience' (orig. pub. 1596) and 'The Whole Treatise of the Cases of Conscience' (pub. 1606) also ed. T. F. Merrill (Nieuwkoop, 1966), with introd. H. C. Porter, Reformation and Reaction in Tudor Cambridge (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 288–313; R. T. Kendall, Calvin and English Calvinism to 1649 (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1979), pp. 51–76; R. A. Muller, Christ and the Decree: Christology and Predestination in Reformed Theology from Calvin to Perkins (Durham, NC, 1986), esp. pp. 142–73.

Perpetua, St (d. 7 Mar. 203), African martyr. The *Passion of St Perpetua and St Felicity tells how Perpetua and her slave, with other African catechumens, were imprisoned and, after their Baptism, condemned to execution in the arena at Carthage. It is a contemporary document, possibly edited by *Tertullian, which records, besides the story of their martyrdom, the interesting visions of Perpetua and the priest, Saturus. The basilica of Sts Perpetua and Felicity was among the most important in Carthage. Feast day, formerly 6 Mar. (transferred to make 7 Mar. free for St *Thomas Aquinas); since 1969, 7 Mar.

Crit. edn. of Lat. text of Passio by J. A. *Robinson (Texts and Studies, 1, no. 2; Cambridge, 1891). Gk. text first ed. from a Jerusalem MS by J. R. *Harris and S. K. Gifford, London, 1890 (Harris's defence of the priority of the Gk. text, however, has been generally rejected by later scholars). Lat. and Gk. texts also ed. by C. I. M. I. van Beek (Florilegium Patristicum, 43; Bonn, 1938). Lat. text repr., with Eng. tr. by H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 106–31. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, La Passio SS. Perpetuae et Felicitatis (RQ, Supplementheft, 5; 1896). Å. [J.] Fridh, Le Problème de la Passion des saintes Perpétue et Félicité (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, 26; 1968). E. R. Dodds, Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety (Wiles Lectures, 1963; Cambridge, 1965), pp. 47–53, with refs. E. Corsini, 'Proposte per una lettura della "Passio Perpetuae"', in Forma Futuri: Studi in onore del Cardinale Michele Pellegrino (Turin, 1975), pp. 481–541; other arts. by C. M. and V. Lamanto, ibid., pp. 542–86. L. Robert, 'Une vision de Perpétue martyre à Carthage en 203', Comptes rendus de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres (1982), pp. 228–76. P. Habermehl, Perpetua und der Ägypten (TU 140 [1992]). J. Quasten, Patrology, perpetual curate. The name formerly given to a clerk who officiated in a parish or district to which he had been nominated by the *impropriator and licensed by the Bishop. Exemption from the *Appropriation of Benefices Act 1402 was allowed to benefices granted to monasteries ad mensam monachorum and in certain other cases, which meant that no *vicar was endowed. When, after the *dissolution of the monasteries, such exempt parishes passed to *lay rectors, these rectors were obliged to discharge the spiritual duties by nominating some particular person to the *Ordinary for his licence to serve the cure on their behalf. Curates thus licensed became perpetual, removable only by revocation of the licence of the Ordinary. The ministers of new churches of separate parishes, ecclesiastical districts, consolidated chapelries and district chapelries were also perpetual curates (Church Building Act 1845) as were the ministers appointed to new parishes or districts created by the Church Building Acts 1831 and 1839, and the New Parishes Act 1843.

1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 181–3. J. P. Kirsch in CE 6 (1909), p. 29, s.v. 'Felicitas and Perpetua'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 393–444, s.v. 'Perpétue et Félicité (Saintes)'.

Because curacies had no corporate personality (unlike bishoprics, rectories and vicarages), property could not be settled on the office rather than the individual. To remedy this, curacies which were augmented from *Queen Anne's Bounty were declared perpetual benefices and the incumbents bodies politic by Queen Anne's Bounty Act 1714 s. 4. All other perpetual curacies were also classified as ecclesiastical *benefices in, but not before, the *Pluralities Act 1838 s. 124 and subsequent legislation, including the Interpretation Measure 1925 s. 3.

Perpetual curates obtained possession of their benefices by licence from the Bishop without *institution or *induction. They were styled vicars by the Incumbents Act 1868 for the purposes of title only, but they were not made vicars in fact. However, the Pastoral Measure 1968 s. 87 has now converted all perpetual curacies into vicarages and all perpetual curates at that date have become vicars in law without further formality. Perpetual curacies therefore ceased to exist on 1 April 1969, when the Measure came into force.

Perrone, Giovanni (1794–1876), Italian *Jesuit theologian. He joined the Society of Jesus in 1815 and in 1824 was made professor of dogmatic theology in the Roman College, a post which he held (not quite continuously) till his death. His Praelectiones Theologicae (9 vols., 1835–42) were one of the most widely used manuals on Catholic dogmatics in the 19th century.

Sommervogel, 6 (1895), cols. 558–71; Polgár, 2 (1990), p. 653. T. Lynch (ed.), 'The Newman–Perrone paper on Development', Gregorianum, 16 (1935), pp. 402–47; F. Cavallera, SJ, 'Le Document Newman-Perrone et le développement du dogme', Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique, 47 (1946), pp. 132–42. W. Kasper, Die Lehre von der Tradition in der römischen Schule (Freiburg, 1962), pp. 29–181.

per saltum (Lat., 'by a leap'). A term sometimes used of the conferring of a particular rank of orders when a candidate has not previously received the lower grades, e.g. the ordination to the priesthood of a man who is not already a deacon. In RC canon law it is held that such ordinations are valid, but illicit. In early times, however, they were a common occurrence. See also INTERSTICES.

persecutions, early Christian. Christianity at first appeared to the Roman authorities as a form of *Judaism, which enjoyed toleration, but Jewish agitation against the Christians (e.g. Acts 17: 5; 18: 12) revealed its separate identity. The secrecy of the early Christian rites and misunderstandings of Christian language (e.g. Jn. 6: 35) and of the *agape and *Eucharist led pagans to suppose them guilty of flagitia, promiscuity, incest, and cannibalism. This fact explains why *Nero in 64 could make them scapegoats for the fire of Rome, which by popular report was his own doing; to *Tacitus, though guiltless on this charge, they were enemies of mankind. From then on, persecution prob. continued, though intermittently. It is, for instance, attested under *Domitian; St *Ignatius was martyred under Trajan, and in his reign *Pliny, as governor of Bithynia-Pontus, assumed that avowed Christians as such deserved death. No general enactment was directed against the faith before 249; the later Christian notion of ten persecutions initiated by particular emperors (analogous to the ten plagues of Egypt) has no foundation.

Pliny found no proof that the Christians were guilty of flagitia and was therefore disposed to pardon *apostates. Trajan accepted his findings, as if he were already aware of the truth, and confirmed his decision. He also ruled that Christians were not, like ordinary criminals, to be searched out, but to be punished only on information laid by private persons (not anonymously), if they would not recant. These rulings applied only to Bithynia-Pontus, but the evidence of Christian writings contemporary with later persecutions before *Decius shows that they came to be valid throughout the empire; the imperial rescripts affecting Christians collected *c.*215 by the jurist Ulpian and now lost cannot have introduced any essential change. Though *Apologists still found it necessary to demonstrate that the Christians were neither flagitious nor disloyal, the government, since it made no effort to exterminate them, evidently needed no convincing; humble folk, such as nearly all Christians were, taught to obey the authorities ordained of God (Rom. 13: 1–6), presented no political danger.

In general Rome practised religious toleration. Roman citizens, like the colonists at Philippi (Acts 16: 21), might not legally worship any god not recognized by the State, but the ban was seldom enforced, and in any case it cannot explain the punishment of those Christians who were not Roman citizens. Rome also protected the ancestral religions of all her subject peoples. Toleration extended to Judaism, as the ancestral religion of the Jews, even though the Jews denied the divinity of all pagan gods. As the Christians' claim to be 'the true Israel' was rejected, they did not benefit from the protection given to Judaism. They were regarded as atheists because they would take no part in the prescribed cults of the gods. These cults were widely supposed to be indispensable for maintaining peace with the gods (pax deorum); their neglect would entail divine retribution. Enlightened men did not all entertain this belief, but Trajan and his successors regarded traditional religious practices as the cement of society, and public order would have been at risk if they had withstood popular indignation against the Christians. This was aroused not only by their 'atheism', but by lingering credulity in their flagitia, and by their alienation from ordinary social life which was penetrated by civic and family cults; harmony in the household could be dissolved by the conversion of husband or wife. Disasters thought to betoken divine wrath exacerbated hostility. 'If the Tiber floods the city or the Nile does not inundate the fields, if there is an eclipse, or earthquake, or famine, or plague, men cry, "Christians to the lion" ' (Tertullian, Apol. 40). When St *Polycarp wished to justify his creed to the governor of Asia, the governor answered, 'convince the people'. The emperors would not protect men they saw as fanatics who irrationally set their private judgements against tradition and the wisdom of centuries, and some governors shared popular sentiments.

The persecutions, though attested in every reign of any length, were not yet initiated by the central government; they were sporadic and therefore ineffectual. *Martyrs were relatively few, but their impressive constancy made new converts. The Church grew in strength and respectability; as the new faith became more familiar, popular hostility abated: it played little part in later persecutions. But in the 3rd-cent. crisis of the empire, some emperors took more seriously the old conception that Rome's welfare rested on the favour of the gods; Christianity prob. seemed the more dangerous precisely because it was organized, and its adherents were more numerous and now included more persons of conspicuous station. In 249 Decius commanded all subjects to sacrifice and obtain certificates of their obedience. Those who refused were marked out as Christians and suffered accordingly. The persecution did not outlast Decius' defeat and death in 251. Valerian in 257 forbade Christian meetings and ordered the clergy to sacrifice; in 258 he subjected them to death, and high-ranking laymen to other severe penalties. After he was captured by the Persians in 260, his successor, Gallienus, allowed the Christians to resume their meetings and to receive back their property.

After a period of peace, lasting till *Diocletian's later years, systematic persecution was resumed. Diocletian apparently believed that the piety of the old religion was essential for divine protection, and that men were not entitled to set up their private judgement against traditional wisdom. On the latter principle he banned *Manichaeism *c.*298. The execution of the centurion Marcellus in Mauretania for refusing to participate in official cults prob. took place in 298. In 299 he took steps to purge the army and court of Christians, but only in 303, perhaps under the influence of *Galerius, did he issue edicts of general persecution. The first, in 303, was designed to avoid bloodshed: churches were to be demolished and the Scriptures seized and burnt, Christians were not to assemble, those of high rank were to lose their social and legal privileges, and sacrificing was required as a precondition of bringing legal suits. Then the Christians were held to have sought his life; and further edicts ordered first the incarceration of the clergy, and then their punishment on refusal to sacrifice; finally sacrifice was enjoined on all subjects. A fearful persecution ensued throughout the empire, though only the first edict was given effect in the W., and in Gaul and Britain Constantius Chlorus was content merely to pull down the churches. After Diocletian and his co-Augustus Maximian had abdicated in 305, the persecution subsided in the W., but not in the E., where Galerius succeeded with Maximin Daia as his Caesar. At last in 311, frustrated generally in his political designs as well as in his efforts to extinguish Christianity, and dying of a painful illness, Galerius issued an edict of toleration, which permitted the Christians to meet and build churches and begged them to pray for his safety and that of the empire. On his death Maximin Daia promoted some persecution on a small scale, which lasted till his defeat by Licinius (313). *Constantine, an avowed convert, on acceding to power in Gaul and Britain in 306 had granted the Christians toleration and restitution of their possessions, and in Italy Maxentius had followed suit in 311; in the so-called Edict of *Milan (313) Licinius made the same concessions in the E. All men (including Christians) were to be free to worship as they pleased. Licinius' later measures against the Christians were terminated by Constantine's victory over him in 324. Christian emperors, from Constantine onwards, placed the Church in an increasingly privileged position; the anti-Christian policy of *Julian, Constantine's only pagan successor, hardly amounted to persecution; and from the time of *Theodosius I the State was to coerce pagans into conversion, with more fervour and success than it had shown in suppressing Christianity.

The victims of persecutions might be executed and, if of low degree, by the cruel methods authorized in Roman law; they enjoyed the fame of martyrs. But some governors were reluctant to shed blood. Many Christians were merely imprisoned for a time, or sent to the mines; survivors, who had often suffered hideous tortures (commonly used to induce apostasy) acquired great prestige in the Church as confessors. Many too recanted, or persuaded the authorites that they had done so. Controversy about whether, and on what conditions, these lapsi, libellatici*, or traditores* might be reconciled gave rise to the *Novatian, *Melitian, and *Donatist schisms within the Church.

Apart from Pliny, Tacitus, unreliable statements in the Historia Augusta, and certificates of sacrifice preserved on papyri from Egypt from the Decian persecution (see bibl. to LIBELLATICI), the evidence for the persecutions comes from Christian sources; that which is not contemporary with the events must be used with caution. *Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum, and *Eusebius, Martyrs of Palestine and Ecclesiastical History, were contemporary with the persecutions from 303, and Eusebius in the latter work preserves Christian writings relevant to earlier persecutions, for which further good evidence can be found (apart from scattered allusions) in the Apologists, in some *Acts of the Martyrs, and in St *Cyprian's letters and De Lapsis. The Christian writers had no direct knowledge and prob. no understanding of imperial policy, at least before Decius. Decius, and later persecutors, sometimes gave reasons for their actions in the general edicts against Christianity; cf. Diocletian's edict against the Manichees (Mosaicarum et Romanarum Legium Collatio, 15. 3; conveniently pr. in S. Riccobono and others (eds.), Fontes Iuris Romani Antejustiniani, pt. 2, 2nd edn., Florence, 1940, pp. 580 f.), which reveals his outlook. Lactantius and Eusebius give texts of imperial enactments of toleration from 311, which themselves cast light on the causes of persecution. What is known of pagan attitudes to Christians, esp. *Celsus and *Porphyry, analysed by P. de Labriolle, La Réaction païenne: Étude sur la polémique antichrétienne du Ier au VIe siècle (1934) is also relevant. See also bibl. to authors mentioned above.

All histories of the early Church and of Rome discuss the persecutions. Introductory account by H. B. Workman, Persecution in the Early Church (1906). J. Moreau, La Persécution du christianisme dans l'Empire romain (Mythes et Religions, 1956). W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965), with bibl. R. Freudenberger, Das Verhalten der römischen Behörden gegen die Christen im 2. Jahrhundert (Münchener Beiträge zur Papyrusforschung und Antiken Rechtsgeschichte, 52; 1967). R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 419–92. A. N. Sherwin-White, 'The Early Persecutions and Roman Law Again', JTS NS 3 (1952), pp. 199–213; T. D. Barnes, 'Legislation against the Christians', Journal of Roman Studies, 58 (1968), pp. 32–50. G. E. M. de Ste Croix, 'Why were the Early Christians Persecuted?', Past and Present, 26 (1963), pp. 6–38; 'An Amendment' by A. N. Sherwin-White, ibid. 27 (1964), pp. 23–7, and a rejoinder by G. E. M. de Ste Croix, ibid., pp. 28–33; all repr. in M. I. Finley (ed.), Studies in Ancient Society (1974), pp. 210–62. P. A. Brunt, 'Marcus Aurelius and the Christians', in C. Deroux (ed.), Studies in Latin Literature and Roman History, 1 (Collection Latomus, 164; 1979), pp. 483–520. On the final phase, G. E. M. de Ste Croix, 'Aspects of the "Great" Persecution', HTR 47 (1954), pp. 75–113; T. D. Barnes, Constantine and Eusebius (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1981), chs. 1–4 and 8–9; P. S. Davies, 'The Origin and Purpose of the Persecution of AD 303', JTS NS 40 (1989), pp. 66–94. J. Vogt and H. M. Last in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 1159–228, s.v. 'Christenverfolgung'; W. H. C. Frend in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2756–69; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), pp. 671–4, s.v.

perseverance. In addition to its general meaning, the word is used technically in connection with the doctrine of *predestination, to mean steady continuance, after conversion, in the faith and life proper to the attainment of eternal life. St *Augustine held that God bestowed on those elected to salvation, not only the initial call to be baptized and accept the Christian faith, but also the gift of such final perseverance. *Calvinism maintained that the elect could be certain that God would never allow them to fall away from Him. Outside Calvinism it would generally be held that none can be personally certain of persevering to the end and that the gift must be sought by prayer and effort.

Persia, Christianity in. See CHURCH OF THE EAST.

Person of Christ. See CHRISTOLOGY, also INCARNATION.

personal prelature. An institution established in 1982 with the creation of *Opus Dei into a personal prelature. Erected in each case by the Holy See, a personal prelature consists of priests and deacons of the secular clergy presided over by a prelate who can incardinate students and promote them to *Orders under the title of service to the prelature; by agreement lay persons may dedicate themselves to the work of a personal prelature. In each case it is governed by the statutes establishing it, which also regulate its relations with local bishops. Acc. to CIC (1983), can. 294, the purpose of personal prelatures is 'to promote an appropriate distribution of presbyters or to perform particular pastoral or missionary works for various regions or different social groups'.

P. Rodríguez, Iglesias particulares y prelaturas personales (Pamplona, 1985; Eng. tr., Blackrock, Co. Dublin [1986]). R. Ombres, OP, 'Opus Dei and Personal Prelatures', Clergy Review, 70 (1985), pp. 292–5.

Persons, Robert. See PARSONS, ROBERT.

Perth, Articles of (1618). Five articles forced on the Church in *Scotland at Perth in 1618 by *James I. They required (1) kneeling at Communion; (2) the observance of Easter and Christmas; (3) Confirmation; (4) provision for administering Communion to the dying in their houses; and (5) Baptism on the Sunday following the child's birth. In 1621, much to the horror of older Scottish Churchmen, the articles were carried with a majority through the Scottish parliament.

The text will be found in J. *Spottiswoode, The History of the Church of Scotland (1655), pp. 538 f. I. B. Cowan, 'The Five Articles of Perth' in D. Shaw (ed.), Reformation and Revolution: Essays Presented to . . . Hugh Watt (Edinburgh, 1967), pp. 160–77. W. R. Foster, The Church before the Covenants (Edinburgh and London, 1975), pp. 124 f., and 181–92. J. D. Ford, 'Conformity in Conscience: The Structure of the Perth Articles Debate in Scotland, 1618–38', JEH 46 (1995), pp. 256–77.

Perugino, Pietro Vannucci (*c.*1446–1523), Italian painter of the Umbrian school. He studied first at Perugia and afterwards at Florence under Verrocchio, where he learned the art of composition and perspective in which he became a master. In 1482 he painted the Delivery of the Keys to St Peter in the *Sistine Chapel. (His other frescoes in the Chapel gave way to *Michelangelo's Last Judgement.) The devotional warmth of his style soon caused a great demand for his religious pictures, and among his masterpieces were the Adoration of the Holy Child (1491; Torlonia Collection, Rome), the Vision of St Bernard (*c.*1494; Uffizi, Florence), and the Lamentation (1495; Pitti, Florence). In 1496 he completed his greatest work, the well-known fresco of the Crucifixion in Sta. Maria Maddalena dei Pazzi at Florence. In the same year he began work on the fresco cycle in the Sala del Cambio, Perugia (completed *c.*1500), in which *Raphael, then his apprentice, is generally thought to have had some part. After that his art showed a marked decline.

Good reprod. of his works ed. C. Castellaneta and E. Camesasca (Milan, 1969). F. Canuti, Il Perugino (2 vols., Siena [1931]); P. Scarpellini, Perugino (Milan [1984]), both with reprods. and bibl. P. J. Murray in EB (1974 edn.), Macropaedia, 14, pp. 136–8.

Peshitta, from the early 5th cent., the official text of the Bible in Syriac-speaking Christian lands. (The word 'Peshitta' means literally 'simple', or, as applied to a text, 'current'.) The NT portion was held by F. C. *Burkitt to have been the work of *Rabbula, Bp. of Edessa from 412 to 435. It now, however, seems more likely that the process of revision which produced the Peshitta NT had already begun before the end of the 4th cent. The NT did not include the Book of Rev. or the four lesser *Catholic Epistles (2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn., and Jude). A large number of MSS have survived, the oldest dating from the 5th cent. The origins of the Peshitta OT are shrouded in obscurity, but in part it would seem to be the work of Jews, and in the Pentateuch, at least, there appear to be tenuous links with the *Targums.

Older edns. of NT by E. Widmanstadt (Vienna, 1555) and J. Leusden and C. Schaff (Leiden, 1709). Best edn. of Peshitta Gospels by P. E. *Pusey and G. H. Gwilliam (Oxford, 1901); complete edn. of NT ed. *British and Foreign Bible Society (London, 1905–20). Edns. of the OT incl. the London *Polyglot (1657) and that of S. Lee (London, 1823; reissued, with Apocrypha, by the United Bible Societies, ibid., 1979); a crit. edn. is in course of publication by the Peshitta Institute, Leiden (1966 ff.). L. Haefeli, Die Peshitta des Alten Testaments (Alttestamentliche Abhandlungen, 11, Heft 1; 1927); P. B. Dirksen, 'The Old Testament Peshitta', in M. J. Mulder (ed.), Mikra (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, 2. 1; Assen/Maastricht and Philadelphia, 1988), pp. 255–97. Id., An Annotated Bibliography of the Peshitta of the Old Testament (Monographs of the Peshitta Institute, 5; Leiden, 1989). M. Black, 'The New Testament Peshitta and its Predecessors', Studiorum Novi Testamenti Societas, Bulletin 1 (1950), pp. 51–62. Id., 'The Syriac versional tradition', in K. Aland (ed.), Die alten Übersetzungen des Neuen Testaments, die Kirchenväterzitate und Lektionare (Arbeiten zur neutestamentlichen Textforschungen, 5; 1972), pp. 120–59. B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 48–63. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 843–55 and 872–5, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)'; S. P. Brock and B. Aland in TRE 6 (1980), pp. 181–96, s.v. 'Bibelübersetzungen', 1. 4: 'Die Übersetzungen ins Syrische'. See also bibl. to SYRIAC VERSIONS OF THE BIBLE.

Petavius, Dionysius (1583–1652), Denis Pétau, *Jesuit historian and theologian. A native of Orléans, he studied at Paris where I. *Casaubon aroused his interest in the Fathers. In 1605 he became a Jesuit. He taught rhetoric at Reims (1609–13), La Flèche (1613–18), and at the Collège de Clermont (1618–21), where he was given the chair of Dogmatic Theology in 1621. He lived at Paris for the rest of his life, one of the most brilliant and learned scholars of his age. His Opus de Doctrina Temporum (2 vols., 1627), in substance a thorough revision and expansion of J. J. *Scaliger's De Emendatione Temporum (1583), was a fundamental contribution to the study of ancient chronology; in 1633 he issued an abridged edition with the title Rationarium Temporum. He also published notable editions of the writings of *Synesius (1612; new edn., 1633) and St *Epiphanius (1622; not superseded until K. *Holl's edition of 1915–33).

Petavius was also an outstanding dogmatic theologian, strictly orthodox in doctrine but one of the first to accept the idea of doctrinal development (here he influenced J. H. *Newman) and to concede the imperfections of much patristic teaching judged by later standards. His vast and still valuable De Theologicis Dogmatibus (vols. 1–3, 1644; vol. 4, 1650) was unfinished at the time of his death. G. *Bull's famous Defensio Fidei Nicaenae (1685) was written primarily to defend the orthodoxy of pre-Nicene teaching on the Trinity against Petavius's criticisms. His De la pénitence publique et de la préparation à la communion (1644) was an attack on A. *Arnauld's Fréquente Communion (1643).

The primary source is the Life [by F. Oudin, SJ] in [J. P.] Nicéron, *Barnabite, Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire des hommes illustres dans la république des lettres, 37 (1737), pp. 81–234. Full Life by J. C. Vital Châtellain (Paris, 1884). Shorter study by J. Martin ('Science et religion. Les Grands Théologiens', fasc. 545; 1910). P. Di Rosa, SJ, 'Denis Petau e la cronologia', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 29 (1960), pp. 3–54. L. Karrer, Die historisch-positive Methode des Theologen Dionysius Petavius (Münchener theologische Studien, 2. Systematische Abteilung, 37; 1970). M. Hofmann, Theologie, Dogma und Dogmenentwicklung im theologischen Werk Denis Petau's (Regensburger Studien zur Theologie, 1; 1976). Sommervogel, 6 (1895), cols. 588–616; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 658–60. P. Galtier, SJ, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1313–37; F. X. Murphy, CSSR, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 199 f., both s.v. 'Petau'.

Peter, St, Prince of the *Apostles. Our knowledge of his life and personality is derived chiefly from the Gospels, Acts, St *Paul's Ep. to the *Galatians, and tradition. Acc. to the Gospel of St John (1: 44) he was a native of *Bethsaida, a village near Lake Tiberias, and in the Johannine account (1: 35–42) he is introduced to the Lord by his brother St *Andrew and given the name 'Cephas', the Aramaic equivalent of the Greek 'Peter' (πέτρα, 'rock'). In the Gospels of Sts Matthew (4: 18–20) and Mark (1: 16–18) he and Andrew, who are described as 'fishers', are together called from their fishing to follow Jesus. In St Luke's Gospel (5: 1–11) there is a variant account of this incident, in which Peter, at the Lord's command, catches a large draught of fishes. Some time later he is formally called to become one of the Twelve [Apostles] and in all the lists of the Twelve he is named first. He is present on all the occasions when only a small 'inner group' is admitted, namely at the raising of Jairus's daughter (Mt. 9: 18–26), at the *Transfiguration (Mt. 17: 1–8), and at the Agony in the Garden (Mt. 26: 37). He usually takes the lead and is the mouthpiece of the disciples, as when he says that they could not 'go away' (Jn. 6: 66–9). After his confession of faith at *Caesarea Philippi (Mk. 8: 27–30), when he professes his belief that Jesus is the Christ (in Mt. 16: 17, 'the Christ, the Son of the living God') and the disciples are silenced, Mt. adds the Lord's promise 'Thou art Peter, and on this rock will I build my church', together with the keys of heaven and the power of binding and loosing (16: 18 f.). (The precise interpretation of this passage, on which the claims of the Papacy have been based, has been the subject of much controversy.) Together with St *John, Peter is entrusted with the preparations for the *Last Supper, during which the Lord reaffirms his pre-eminence (Lk. 22: 31 f.). On the way to the Mount of Olives, his boast that he will never leave his Lord is answered by Christ's prediction that before the end of the night he will deny Him thrice (Mt. 26: 33 f.). At the arrest of Jesus, Peter strikes off the ear of a servant of the high priest (Jn. 18: 10). Having followed the Lord to the court of the high priest, he is accused of being one of His followers; he denies three times that he knows Him, then remembers His prediction and repents bitterly (Mt. 26: 69–75). After the Resurrection he goes to the Sepulchre as soon as the women report that it is empty (Lk. 24: 12; cf. Jn. 20: 2–6) and is later favoured with a special appearance of the risen Christ (Lk. 24: 34). At 1 Cor. 15: 5 Paul quotes a very early tradition that Peter was the first to receive a resurrection appearance. Acc. to the Johannine account, when the Lord appears to him and other disciples at the Sea of Tiberias, he makes a triple protestation of his love to Christ and receives the charge to feed His sheep and the prediction of his martyrdom (Jn. 21: 15–18).

After the Ascension Peter immediately takes the lead of the Apostles in designating the successor of Judas (Acts 1: 15–22) and throughout the first half of Acts he appears as their head. He speaks on the day of *Pentecost (Acts 2: 14–41); he is the first of the Apostles to perform a miracle in the name of Jesus (3: 1–10); he is the speaker when brought before the *Sanhedrin with John (4: 1–21); and he pronounces the condemnation of Ananias and Sapphira

(5: 1–11). He also is the greatest miracle-worker among the Apostles, whose shadow even heals the sick (5: 15); he opens the Church to the Gentiles by admitting Cornelius (10: 1–11: 18), and his authority is again evident at the Apostles' Council at Jerusalem (15: 7–11). Of the later years of his Apostolate outside Palestine very little is known. His visit to *Antioch is mentioned in Gal. 2: 11–21 by Paul, who sharply rebukes him for giving way to the demands of the Jewish Christians to dissociate himself from the Gentiles. Possibly he visited Corinth, as a party of 'Cephas' existed in that city (1 Cor. 1: 12).

The tradition connecting Peter with Rome (q.v.) is early and unrivalled. Against it can be placed only the silence of the NT; but even here Rom. 15: 20–2 may point to the presence of another Apostle in Rome before Paul wrote, while the identification of 'Babylon' in 1 Pet. 5: 13 (see PETER, EPISTLES OF ST) with Rome seems highly probable. St *Clement of Rome (I Clem. 5) conjoins Peter and Paul as the outstanding heroes of the Faith and prob. implies that Peter suffered martyrdom (μαρτυρήσας). St *Ignatius uses words (Rom. 4. 2) which suggest that Peter and Paul were the Apostles of special authority for the Roman Church, and St *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 3. 1. 2; 3. 3. 1) states definitely that they founded that Church and instituted its episcopal succession. Other early witnesses to the tradition are *Gaius of Rome and *Dionysius of Corinth, both cited by *Eusebius (HE 2. 25. 5–8), who also (HE 3. 1. 2 f.) quotes a statement of *Origen that Peter was crucified head downwards, having requested this form of death. The later tradition (first found in St *Jerome) which attributes to him an episcopate (or apostolate) in Rome of 25 years preceding his martyrdom is less well supported. His death is placed by Eusebius in the reign of *Nero (54–68) and was prob. in the *persecution of 64—not, as Eusebius himself asserts (Chron.), in 68. That he and St Paul suffered on the same day is perhaps a mistaken deduction from their common feast (prob. date of translation of their relics, not of martyrdom) on 29 June. Some modern Anglican calendars provide a feast of the Confession of St Peter on 18 Jan. See also LAMMAS DAY.

The tradition, which is found in *Papias, that Peter's memoirs lie behind the Gospel of St Mark, is still accepted by some scholars (see MARK, GOSPEL OF ST). For the Epistles, see PETER, EPISTLES OF ST. There are historical grounds for believing that his tomb in St Peter's, Rome, is authentic (see ST PETER'S, ROME). See also the following entries and QUO VADIS?

Modern studies with discussion of the main historical questions by F. J. Foakes Jackson, Peter, Prince of Apostles (1927), O. Cullmann, Petrus: Jünger, Apostel, Märtyrer (Zurich, 1952; Eng. tr., 1953), and R. Pesch, Simon-Petrus: Geschichte and geschichtliche Bedeutung des ersten Jüngers Jesu Christi (Päpste und Papsttum, 15; 1980). Works on the question of Peter's connection with Rome incl. H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (1915; 2nd edn., Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 1; 1927); J. Munck, Petrus und Paulus in der Offenbarung Johannis (Copenhagen, 1950); K. Heussi, Die römische Petrustradition in kritischer Sicht (Tübingen, 1955), and other works of this author; T. Klauser, Die römische Petrustradition im Lichte der neuen Ausgrabungen unter der Peterskirche (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen. Geisteswissenschaften, 24 [1956]). See also other works cited under ST PETER'S, ROME. J. Dauvillier, Les Temps apostoliques (Histoire du droit et des institutions de l'Église en occident, publiée sous la direction de G. Le Bras, 2; 1970), pp. 144–50 and 273–93; R. E. Brown and others (eds.), Peter in the New Testament: A Collaborative Assessment by Protestant and Roman Catholic Scholars (Minneapolis, etc., 1973). T. V. Smith, Petrine Controveries in Early Christianity: Attitudes towards Peter in Christian Writings of the First Two Centuries (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 2. Reihe, 15; 1985). E. Fascher in PW 19 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1335–61, s.v. 'Petrus (121)'; P. de Ambroggi, E. Josi, and others in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1400–27, s.v. 'Pietro apostolo'; É. Cothenet in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1452–86, s.v. 'Pierre (1)'.

Peter, Acts of St. An apocryphal Book composed in Greek *c.*180–90, perhaps in Asia Minor. Apart from the 'Martyrdom of St Peter' which forms part of it and survives in Greek as well as in several versions, most of it is preserved in Latin in a Vercelli MS. A Coptic fragment also survives which describes St Peter's miraculous treatment of his paralytic daughter. In the Martyrdom are recorded both the '*Quo Vadis?' incident and the crucifixion of St Peter head downwards. In places its teaching has a *Docetic ring, perhaps occasioned by the writer's limited theological capacities rather than by any connection with unorthodox circles.

The Lat. text, with Gk. text on the opposite pages where then available, in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet (eds.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 1 (Leipzig, 1891), pp. 45–103; corrections by C. H. *Turner in JTS 32 (1931), pp. 119–33. Coptic frag. ed. C. Schmidt, Die alten Petrusakten in Zusammenhang der Apokryphen Apostelliteratur nebst einem neuentdeckten Fragment (TU 24, Heft 1; 1903), pp. 3–7, with Ger. tr., pp. 7–10. Further Gk. fragment in B. P. Grenfell and A. S. Hunt, The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, 6 (1908), pp. 6–12. Eng. tr. of the 'Martyrdom' from the Gk. text and the rest of the Acts from the Lat. and Coptic, in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 390–426. A Lat. paraphrase of the 'Martyrdom', attributed to St *Linus but dating from the 4th–6th cent., is pr. in R. A. Lipsius and M. Bonnet, op. cit., pp. 1–22. L. Vouaux, Les Actes de Pierre (1922; text, Fr. tr. and comm., with good bibl.). C. Schmidt, 'Studien zu den alten Petrusakten', ZKG 43 (1924), pp. 321–48; 45 (1926), pp. 481–513. Ger. tr., with introd. by W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 243–89; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 271–321. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 133–5. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 550–4. É. Amann in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 496–501.

Peter, Apocalypse of St. This, the most important of the apocryphal apocalypses, dates from the early 2nd cent. Small portions of it have survived in quotations in *Clement of Alexandria and others, and in some scattered fragments (e.g. those discovered at Akhmîm in Egypt in 1886–7); and an Ethiopic version, in a modified form, was published by S. Grébaut in 1910. The Apocalypse describes how the Lord granted to the Apostles a vision of their brethren in the next world and of their rewards. Both Clement and the *Muratorian Canon held it to be Scripture; and acc. to *Sozomen (HE 7. 19; 5th cent.) it was still read in his day on *Good Friday in some Palestinian churches. An 'Apocalypse of Peter' found at *Nag Hammadi has only the title in common.

Akhmîm frag. of Gk. text ed. A. Lods in Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission Archéologique Française du Caire, 9 (1893), pp. 224–8; repr. by E. Klostermann, Apocrypha, 1 (Kleine Texte, ed. H. *Lietzmann, 3, 1908), pp. 8–12. There is a small Gk. papyrus frag. in the *Bodleian Library (MS Gr. th. f. 4 (P)); cf. M. R. James, 'The Rainer Fragment of the Apocalypse of Peter', JTS 32 (1931–2), pp. 270–9, with text. Ethiopic text ed.

S. Grébaut in Revue de l'Orient chrétien, 15 (1910), pp. 199–208, 307–16, 425–33, with Fr. tr., pp. 208–14, 316–323, 433–9. Eng. tr. of the Patristic citations, the Akhmîm fragment, the Rainer fragment, and part of the Ethiopic text in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 593–612, with portion of the *Sibylline Oracles which appears to have been taken from the Apocalypse of Peter, pp. 613–5. M. R. James, 'The Recovery of the Apocalypse of Peter', CQR 80 (1915), pp. 1–36. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 610–15; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 141 f. Ger. tr., with introd. by C. D. G. Müller in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 562–78; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 620–38. On the Apocalypse found at Nag Hammadi, A. Werner in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 633–43; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 700–12. E. Amann in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 525–7, with bibl.

Peter, Epistles of St. There are two Epistles ascribed to St *Peter in the NT.

(1) The First Epistle of Peter was written from *Rome (if this is the city referred to in 5: 13 as 'Babylon') to Christian communities in 'Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia' (1: 1), i.e. all lands in what is now Asia Minor, to encourage them under persecution. The author reminds his readers that, as the chosen people of God, they are heirs to the glorious promises made to Israel and insists on the central place of Christ's death and resurrection in the Christian plan of salvation (1: 2–25). As believers, they are called to love one another, to look for the coming of Christ, and esp. to witness by their good lives in their heathen surroundings, where trials are constantly awaited. It is widely accepted that Baptism is an important theme in the Epistle. It is specifically mentioned in 3: 20 f.; it is reflected in the imagery of rebirth (1: 23, 2: 2); and it is naturally connected with the overall stress on the new life of the Christian. The further claim that the Epistle was based on a Baptismal sermon or even liturgy has not won general approval. The apparent break after 4: 11 has led some critics to argue that separate elements have been combined in the one writing.

The Epistle was written 'through Silvanus' (5: 12), i.e. he was the scribe or messenger; he has sometimes been suggested as author. If tradition is correct in attributing it to Peter, its terminus ad quem is the date of his death, i.e. prob. *c.*65. Its Petrine authorship, however, has often been questioned. It is urged that its literary style is not that of a Galilean fisherman; that passages in the Epistle reflect Pauline teaching; and that *persecution of the Church in Asia Minor is not otherwise clearly attested before 112 (in *Pliny). What is envisaged in 1 Peter, however, may not be official persecution by the state. The arguments for and against Petrine authorship are inconclusive. External evidence for ascribing it to Peter goes back to St *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 4. 19. 1) and *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 3. 18 [110]).

(2) The Second Epistle, though it is written as if by Peter, with a ref. to his presence at the *Transfiguration (1: 18; cf. Mk. 9: 2), is markedly different from the First in contents and manner, e.g. in the treatment of redemption with which it opens. Its main message is a warning against false and ungodly teachers, upon whom the future judgements of God are prophesied from the OT and Jewish writings. The chief passage in which this warning is given (2: 1–3: 3) is parallel to Jude 4–18, from which it is probably borrowed.

There are several indications that the Epistle is of a late date. Thus the passage (3: 3 ff.) dealing with the delay of the Coming of the Lord presupposes that the first generation of Christians had passed away. The author classes the Epp. of St Paul as 'scripture' (3: 16), a position which they apparently did not attain until some considerable time after the Apostle's death. It is first definitely referred to by *Origen (in *Eusebius, HE 6. 25. 8) in the 3rd cent., and he writes of it as of disputed authenticity. It also has some close points of literary contact with the 'Apocalypse of St *Peter' (q.v.). These indications of date, and the difference in style and interest from 1 Peter, make it virtually impossible to hold that St Peter was the author. The Epistle was received into the *canon with considerable hesitation. Its date is probably the second or third Christian generation, perhaps c. AD 150.

Modern comm. on both Epp. incl. those of C. Bigg (ICC, 1901, with Jude, pp. 1–304), H. *Windisch (Hb. NT 4, Th. 2, 1911, on the Catholic Epp.; 2nd edn., 15, 1930, pp. 50–105; 3rd edn., by H. Preisker, 1951, with addenda, pp. 152–63), C. Spicq, OP (Sources Bibliques, 1966), and J. N. D. Kelly (Black's NT Comm., on Pet. and Jude, 1969). On 1 Pet. only, by F. J. A. *Hort (London, 1896; on 1 Pet. 1: 1–2: 17 only), E. G. Selwyn (ibid., 1946), F. W. Beare (Oxford, 1947, 3rd edn., 1970), C. E. B. Cranfield (London, 1950), E. Best (New Cent. Bib. [1971]), L. Goppelt (KEK 12/1, 8th edn., 1978; Eng. tr., Grand Rapids [1993]), N. Brox (Evanglisch-katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 21, 1979), J. R. Michaels (Word Biblical Comm. 49, Waco, Tex. [1988]), and P. H. Davids (New International Comm. on the NT, Grand Rapids [1990]). On 2 Pet. only, by J. Chaine (Études Bibliques, 2nd edn., 1939, on Catholic Epp., pp. 1–96), R. J. Bauckham (Word Biblical Comm. 50, on Jude and 2 Pet., Waco, Tex. [1983], pp. 131–342), H. Paulsen (KEK 12/2, on Jude and 2 Pet., 1992, pp. 89–175), and J. H. Neyrey (Anchor Bible 37 C, on Jude and 2 Pet., 1993, pp. 106–260). F. L. Cross, 1 Peter: A Paschal Liturgy (1954). J. H. Elliott, A Home for the Homeless: Sociological Exegesis of I Peter, Its Situation and Strategy (Grand Rapids, 1981; London, 1982). Id. in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 269–78 (on 1 Pet.) and pp. 282–7 (on 2 Pet.).

Peter, Gospel of St. An early apocryphal Gospel of which the only surviving section is contained in an 8th-cent. MS discovered at Akhmîm in Egypt in 1886–7 (now in Cairo). A fragment of text in a late 2nd- or early 3rd-cent. *Oxyrhynchus papyrus (no. 2949) has affinities with it. Acc. to *Serapion, Bp. of Antioch (*c.*190), the Gospel of Peter was in use at Rhossus in his time, and in the next century *Origen knew of its existence. It seems to have been a largely legendary work, showing strong antipathy to the Jews and apparently with some *Docetic elements. It was prob. composed in Syria in the first half of the 2nd cent.

Editio princeps of the Akhmîm frag. by A. Lods in Mémoires publiés par les membres de la Mission Archéologique Française du Caire, 9 (1893), pp. 218–24, with facsimiles in plates II–VI. Text also ed., with introd., notes, and Eng. tr., by H. B. *Swete (London, 1893). Modern edn., with Fr. tr., introd. and comm., by M. G. Mara (SC 201; 1973). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 150–8. Fr. tr., with full comm. and bibl., by L. Vaganay (Études Bibliques, 1930). The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, 41 (1972), pp. 15 f. (no. 2949. 'Fragments of an Apocryphal Gospel(?)'); D. Luhrmann, 'POx 2949: EvPt 3–5 in einer Handschrift des 2./3. Jahrhunderts', ZNTW 72 (1981), pp. 216–26. J. A. *Robinson in id. and M. R. James, The Gospel according to Peter and the Revelation of Peter (1892), pp. 13–36. J. Denker, Die theologiegeschichtliche Stellung des Petrusevangeliums (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 36; 1975). C.

Maurer and W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 180–8; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 216–27.

Peter, Letter of St, to Philip. A *Coptic document contained in Codex VIII of the *Nag Hammadi library. The title strictly applies only to the first page or so of the text, which goes on to tell of St *Philip's response, a gathering of the Apostles on the Mount of *Olives, an appearance of the risen Christ, and the ensuing conversation. At the end Christ takes His leave in terms reminiscent of Jn. 20: 19–23 and Mt. 28: 20, and the Apostles disperse to preach. There are numerous NT echoes and parallels, although it is not always certain that there is any literary dependence. It is reported that another copy of the text has been found, but this has not so far been published.

Text ed., with Fr. tr. and comm., by J.-É. Ménard (Bibliothèque Copte de Nag Hammadi, Section 'Textes', 1; Quebec, 1977); also, with Eng. tr. and comm., by M. W. Meyer, (Society of Biblical Literature Dissertation Series, 53; Chico, Calif. [1981]). Eng. tr. by F. Wisse, with introd. by M. W. Meyer, in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 431–7. H.-G. Bethge, Die Brief des Petrus an Philippus (TU 141; 1996). Id. in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 275–84; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 342–53.

Peter, Liturgy of St. A Mass combining elements from the Byzantine and Roman rites which was probably drawn up for the use of Greek communities in Italy, but may have been put together only as a literary experiment. The *canon is that of the Roman Mass. It was first published, apparently from Vat. graec. 1970 (12th cent.), by G. Linden in Apologia pro Liturgia Petri Apostoli et Commentarius in eandem cum Missa Apostolica Petri Apostoli (Antwerp, 1589, and Paris, 1595). It is to be distinguished from the *Maronite Third Anaphora of St Peter, which has affinities with the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari.

Text in C. A. *Swainson, The Greek Liturgies (1884), pp. 191–203. Brightman, LEW 1, p. 91, with refs. to other edns. H. W. Codrington, The Liturgy of St Peter, with Preface and Introduction by P. de Meester, OSB (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, Heft 30; 1936). J. M. Hanssens, SJ, 'La Liturgie romano-byzantine de saint Pierre', OCP 4 (1938), pp. 235–58; 5 (1939), pp. 103–50.

The Third Anaphora of St Peter ed. J.-M. Sauget in Anaphorae Syriacae, 2, fasc. 3 (Rome, 1973), pp. 275–323.

Peter, Martyrdom of St. See PETER, ACTS OF ST.

Peter, Patrimony of St. See PATRIMONY OF ST PETER.

Peter, Preaching of St. (Gk. Κήρυγμα Πέτρου). A treatise, of which but few fragments survive, purporting to be the work of the Apostle St *Peter, but probably dating from the earlier half of the 2nd cent. It was very popular in the early Church and known in its entirety to *Clement of Alexandria. Apparently intended for missionary propaganda, it emphasized the superiority of Christian monotheism to the current beliefs of Greeks and Jews. *Origen thought that it was possibly genuine in whole or in part.

Frags. conveniently pr. in E. Klostermann, Apocrypha, 1 (Kleine Texte ed. H. *Lietzmann, 3; 1908), pp. 13–16; Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 20–4. E. von Dobschütz, Das Kerygma Petri kritisch untersucht (TU 11, Heft 1; 1893). J. N. Reagan, The Preaching of Peter: The beginning of Christian apologetic (Diss., Chicago, 1923). H. Paulsen, 'Die Kerygma Petri und die urchristliche Apologetik', ZKG 88 (1977), pp. 1–37. W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 34–41; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 34–41.

Peter of Alcántara, St (1499–1562), Spanish *Discalced Franciscan. Born Juan de Sanabria at Alcántara, in Extremadura, he studied at Salamanca from 1511 to 1515. He then immediately joined the Franciscans of the custodia (or sub-province) of Santo Evangelio, then attached to the Conventuals of the province of Santiago but transferred by *Leo X to the *Observantines in 1517. In 1519 it became the province of St Gabriel, regarded as the mother province of the Spanish Discalced Franciscans. Peter, who was ordained priest in 1524, was to remain in this province until 1557, serving as provincial from 1538 to 1541, though with numerous visits to Portugal, where he was guardian and novice master at Palhães from 1542 to 1544. In 1557 he became Commissary General of the reformed *Conventuals and founded the celebrated convent of El Pedroso del Acim. In 1560 St *Teresa met him at Ávila, receiving much valued spiritual guidance from him together with encouragement and help in her reform of the *Carmelite Order. Her Life records her admiration for his extreme asceticism. Thereafter, he devised Constitutions for the province of St Joseph, established through his efforts in 1561 and, though dependent on the Conventuals, strongly tending towards the Observance. These Constitutions are focused on the life of prayer and penitence. A small Tratado de la oración y meditación bearing Peter's name (earliest surviving edition, Lisbon *c.*1556) was much printed and translated. The question of the relation and indebtedness of this work to *Luis of Granada and his Libro de la oración y meditación (1554) has provoked long debate. According to Fr. Acerbal Luján's recent statement of the position, the Tratado is basically Peter's work: while it often summarizes and borrows substantially from the Libro, it contains much of Peter's own; it is more concentrated, more contemplative, more insistent on poverty, penitence, and prayer. Its treatment of the latter gives the treatise its particular value. Peter of Alcántara was canonized in 1669. Feast day, 19 Oct.

Eng. trs. of the Tratado by G. Willoughby (Brussels, 1632; 2nd edn., Liverpool, 1843), G. F. Bullock (ed. G. S. Hollings) (London, 1905), and D. Devas (ibid., 1926). Lives by F. Marchese (Rome, 1667), Juan de San Bernardo (Naples, 1710) and A. Barrado Manzano, OFM (Madrid, 1965). Cf. also AASS, Oct. 8 (1866), pp. 623–809. Estudios sobre San Pedro de Alcántara en el IV centenario de su muerte (1562 1962) (Archivo Ibero-Americano, 22; 1962), with full bibl. A. Huerga, OP, 'Génesis y autenticidad del "Libro de Oración y Meditación"', Rivista de Archivos, Bibliotecas y Museos, 59 (1953), pp. 135–83; M. Ledrus, SJ, 'Grenade et Alcántara. Deux manuels d'oraison mentale', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 38 (1962), pp. 447–60; 39 (1963), pp. 32–44. E. A. Peers, Studies in the Spanish Mystics, 2 (1930), pp. 97–120, with bibl. pp. 411–16. M. Acerbal Luján, OFM, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1489–95, s.v. 'Pierre d'Alcántara', with bibl.

Peter of Alexandria, St (d. 311), Bp. of *Alexandria from 300. Peter is described by *Eusebius as 'a model bishop, remarkable alike for his virtuous life and for his keen study of the Scriptures'. He survived the persecution of *Diocletian, and drew up rules governing the readmission to the Church of those who had lapsed from Christianity under the influence of fear or torture. While he was himself in hiding, another bishop, *Melitius, began to ordain priests and subsequently claimed authority over Alexandria. It seems that Peter came back to his see when peace was restored in 311, but was beheaded in the persecution of Maximin shortly afterwards. Little of his work survives except in fragments, from which it appears that he was a staunch opponent of *Origenism. Feast day in E., 24 Nov.; in W., 26 Nov.

Frags. in M. J. *Routh (ed.), Reliquiae Sacrae (2nd edn., Oxford, 1846), 4, pp. 19–82. J. P. Migne, PG 18. 449–522. Eng. tr. by J. B. H. Hawkins in ANCL 14 (1869), pp. 269–332, incl. introd. For more recently discovered frags., see CPG 1 (1983), pp. 202–9 (nos. 1635–62). Eusebius, HE 7. 32. 31; 8. 13. 7; and 9. 14. 2. L. B. Radford, Three Teachers of Alexandria: Theognostus, Pierius and Peter (1908), pp. 58–86. W. Telfer, 'St Peter of Alexandria and Arius', Anal. Boll. 67 (1949), pp. 117–30. P. Devos, 'Une Passion grecque inédite de S. Pierre d'Alexandrie et sa traduction par Anastase le Bibliothécaire', ibid. 83 (1965), pp. 157–87, incl. texts. T. Vivian, St Peter of Alexandria, Bishop and Martyr (Studies in Antiquity and Christianity, Philadelphia [1988]). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 113–18; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 212 f. and 591. F. H. Kettler in PW 19 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 1281–8, s.v. 'Petros I'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1495–502, s.v. 'Pierre (5) d'Alexandrie'.

Peter de Bruys (d. prob. soon after 1130), medieval heretic. He is known through the writings of *Peter the Venerable and *Abelard. It would appear that he was a priest who was deprived of his office and then began to preach in Dauphiné and Provence. He rejected infant baptism, the Mass, church buildings (because every place is equally suitable for prayer), prayers for the dead, the veneration of the Cross (as being the instrument of crucifying Christ afresh), as well as large parts of the Scriptures and the authority of the Church. He gained a considerable number of followers, called 'Petrobrusians', who ill-treated priests and incited monks to marry. His teaching was frequently condemned, e.g. by the second *Lateran Council in 1139. He himself was thrown into the flames at St-Gilles, near Nîmes, by the people infuriated at his burning the crosses.

The principal sources are Peter the Venerable, 'Tractatus adversos Petrobrusianos Haereticos' (crit. edn. by J. Faerns (CCCM 10; 1968)), and Peter Abelard, 'Introductio ad Theologiam', 2. 4 (PL 178. 1056). J. Kramp, SJ, 'Chronologisches zu Peters des Ehrwürdigen Epistola adversus Petrobrusianos', in Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, 1 (ST 37; 1924), pp. 71–9. J. C. Reagan, 'Did the Petrobrusians Teach Salvation by Faith Alone?', Journal of Religion, 7 (1927), pp. 81–91, with refs. R. Manselli, Studi sulle Eresie del Secolo XII (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo, Studi Storici, 5; 1953), esp. pp. 25–43. J. Fearns, 'Peter von Bruis und die religiöse Bewegung des 12. Jahrhunderts', Archiv für Kulturgeschichte, 48 (1966), pp. 311–35. R. I. Moore, The Origins of European Dissent (1977), esp. pp. 102–5; M. D. Lambert, Medieval Heresy: Popular Movements from Bogomil to Hus (1977), pp. 51–5; 2nd edn. (1992), pp. 47–50.

Peter of Candia. See ALEXANDER V.

Peter Canisius, St. See CANISIUS, ST PETER.

Peter Celestine, St. See CELESTINE V, ST.

Peter the Chanter (d. 1197), medieval theologian. Prob. of a knightly family from Hodenc-en-Bray in the Beauvaisis, he was educated at *Reims and *Paris, where he taught theology from 1173 or earlier. In 1183 he became precentor of *Notre-Dame in Paris, and in 1197 dean of Reims. His works include glosses on all the books of the OT and NT, a collection of quaestiones known as the Summa de Sacramentis, and a work on virtues and vices, the Verbum abbreviatum. Peter was one of the most influential masters at Paris in the late 12th cent.; he concentrated on practical questions of ethics, and by his discussion of concrete cases for the guidance of confessors he contributed much to the elaboration of the doctrine of circumstances to be observed in the administration of *Penance. It is probable that Peter's views were influential in the reform programme of the *Lateran Council of 1215, notably in his strong condemnation of the use of *ordeals in the administration of justice. One respect in which his views did not prevail was his advocacy of life imprisonment and not the death penalty for heretics.

Verbum abbreviatum ed. G. Galpin, OSB (Mund, Switzerland, 1639), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 205. 21–554. Summa de Sacramentis ed. J.-A. Dugauquier (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, 4, 7, 16, 21; 1954–67). For edns. of his other works to date, see F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, 4 (Madrid, 1954), pp. 248–75. An illustrated Prayer Manual attributed to Peter is ed., with a study of his De Penitentia, by R. C. Trexler, The Christian at Prayer (Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies, 44; New York, 1987). F. S. Gutjahr, Petrus Cantor Parisiensis: Sein Leben und seine Schriften (Graz, 1899). J. W. Baldwin, Masters, Princes, and Merchants: The Social Views of Peter the Chanter and his Circle (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1970). G. Dahan, 'Les interprétations juives dans les commentaires du Pentateuque de Pierre le Chantre', in The Bible in the Medieval World: Essays in Memory of Beryl Smalley, ed. K. Walsh and D. Wood (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 4; 1985), pp. 131–55. J. W. Baldwin in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1533–8, s.v. 'Pierre (16) le Chantre'.

Peter Chrysologus, St. See CHRYSOLOGUS, ST PETER.

Peter Claver, St (1581–1654), 'Apostle of the Negroes'. A native of Verdu in Catalonia, he entered the *Jesuit novitiate at Tarragona in 1601. While studying at Palma, Majorca, he was inspired by St Alphonsus Rodríguez with a longing to convert the heathen in the New World. In 1610 he landed at Cartagena in what is now Colombia and at once began ministering to the slaves who were brought over in terrible conditions from W. Africa. In 1615 he was ordained priest. He declared himself 'the slave of the negroes for ever' and, despite much opposition from slave-owners and people of fashion, he championed their cause and devoted himself for long years to their temporal and spiritual welfare. He is said to have instructed and baptized over 300,000 people. He was canonized by *Leo XIII in 1888. Feast day, 9 Sept.

J. Fernández, SJ, Apostólica y penitente vida de el V. P. Pedro Claver (Saragossa, 1666). The principal modern work is the Life by A. Valtierra, SJ, El Santo que libertó una raza (Bogotá, 1954; rev. edn., Pedro Claver: El Santo Redentor de los negros, 2 vols, ibid., 1980; Eng. tr., 1960). G. Ledos, Saint Pierre Claver ('Les Saints', 1923); A. Lunn, A Saint in the Slave Trade: Peter Claver (1935). A. Astráin, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, 5 (1916), pp. 479–95. Polgár, 1 (1990), pp. 493–500.

Peter Comestor (d. 1178/9), biblical scholar. Acc. to *Henry of Ghent he was a native of Troyes; he became dean of the cathedral there in 1147. By 1168 he was also Chancellor of *Notre-Dame in *Paris. He retained both offices when he retired to the *Victorine house in Paris towards the end of his life. A disciple of *Peter Lombard, he wrote Glosses on the four Gospels and on Lombard's Sentences, a treatise 'De Sacramentis' (a summary of the Sentences intended as a handbook for priests), a large number of sermons, and his best-known work, the 'Historia Scholastica'. Written towards the end of his life, the 'Historia' is a continuous history from Creation to the Ascension; a section on the Acts of the Apostles was added by Peter of Poitiers (d. *c.*1216). The work is based on the text of the OT, the Gospels, and Acts, with many scriptural quotations and literal and allegorical explanations frequently reflecting the tenets of contemporary science. The works of the Fathers and of pagan authors are used to fill up the gaps in the biblical narrative. It became the standard work on biblical history for the Middle Ages and was frequently annotated and commented on, e.g. by Stephen *Langton. Peter Comestor was known as the 'Magister Historiarum'.

The 'Historia Scholastica', first pr. Strasbourg, not later than 1473, is repr. from the edn. of E. Navarro, OSB (Madrid, 1699), in J. P. Migne, PL 198. 1049 (text 1053)–1722; the 'Sermons' are to be found ibid. 198, 1721–1844, and ibid. 171, passim; details of MSS and edns. in M. M. Lebreton, 'Recherches sur les manuscrits contenant des sermons de Pierre le Mangeur', Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Publications de l'Institut de Recherche et d'Histoire des Textes. Bulletin d'Information, 2 for 1953 (1954), pp. 25–44; 4 for 1955 (1956), pp. 35–6. Crit. text of the 'Tractatus De Sacramentis' with full bibl. by R. M. Martin, OP (as appendix in SSL 17; 1937). R. M. Martin, OP, 'Notes sur l'œuvre littéraire de Pierre le Mangeur', RTAM 3 (1931), pp. 54–66; A. Landgraf, 'Recherches sur les écrits de Pierre le Mangeur', ibid., pp. 292–306, 341–72; S. R. Daly, 'Peter Comestor: Master of Histories', Speculum, 32 (1957), pp. 62–73; B. Smalley, 'Some Gospel Commentaries of the Early Twelfth Century', RTAM 45 (1978), pp. 147–80; id., 'Peter Comestor on the Gospels and his Sources', ibid. 46 (1979), pp. 84–129; both repr. in id., The Gospels in the Schools c.1100–c.1280 (1985), pp. 1–83; D. Luscombe, 'Peter Comestor', in The Bible in the Medieval World: Essays in Memory of Beryl Smalley, ed. K. Walsh and D. Wood (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 4; 1985), pp. 109–29. J. Longère in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1614–26, s.v. 'Pierre (39) le Mangeur'.

Peter Damian, St (1007–72), reformer and *Doctor of the Church. Born at Ravenna, he studied at Faenza and Parma. In 1035 he entered the hermitage at Fonte Avella, where he began to lead a life of extreme austerity. About 1043 he was chosen prior and spent the next years founding new monasteries and reforming old ones; before long he became famous as an uncompromising preacher against the worldliness and simoniacal practices of the clergy. In 1057, much against his will, he was made Cardinal Bishop of Ostia, and as such he took a prominent part in the work of ecclesiastical reform. Though he was relieved of his cardinalate by *Alexander II, he was sent several times on diplomatic missions to France and Germany.

During his life Peter enjoyed great authority in the Church, on account of his learning, zeal, and integrity. In his numerous writings he enjoined strict monastic discipline and severe mortification, and denounced immorality and simony. He campaigned for the creation of clerical communities living the 'apostolic life' without property. He was an important thinker in the spheres of theology and canon law; in particular his Liber Gratissimus defended the *validity of sacraments administered by priests guilty of *simony against the rigorist views of Cardinal *Humbert. He was never formally canonized, but since his death a local cult has existed in several places, and in 1828 Leo XII extended his feast to the universal Church, at the same time pronouncing him a 'Doctor of the Church'. Peter is said to have adopted the title Damian in gratitude to his brother of that name who had arranged for his education. His other writings include Liber Gomorrhianus (against *homosexuality) and Disceptatio Synodalis. Feast day, 21 Feb.

His works are listed, with details of edns., by C. Lucchesi, 'Clavis S. Petri Damiani', in Studi su S. Pier Damiano in onore del Cardinale Amleto Giovanni Cicognani (Faenza, 2nd edn., 1970), pp. 1–215. Editio princeps of Peter's collected works by C. Cajetan (4 vols., Rome, 1606–40), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 144 and 145. Crit. edns. of his Sermons by I. Lucchesi (CCCM 57; 1983); of letters and treatises by K. Reindel (MGH, Briefe der deutschen Kaiserzeit, 1983 ff.); of Liber Gratissimus by L. de Heinemann in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum in Saeculis XI et XII, 1 (1891), pp. 15–75; of 'De Divina Omnipotentia' and other opuscula by P. Brezzi and B. Nardi (Florence, 1943); of 'Vita Beati Romualdi' by G. Tabacco (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, 94; 1957); and of Opera Poetica by M. Lokrantz (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis, 12; 1964). The 'De Divina Omnipotentia' is also ed., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by A. Cantin (SC 191; 1972). Eng. trs. of Selected Writings on the Spiritual Life by P. McNulty (1959), of Liber Gomorrhianus by P. J. Payer (Waterloo, Ont., 1982), and of Letters by O. J. Blum, OFM (Fathers of the Church, Washington, DC, 1989 ff.). K. Reindel, 'Studien zur Überlieferung der Werke des Petrus Damiani', Deutsches Archiv, 15 (1959), pp. 23–102; 16 (1960), pp. 73–154; 18 (1962), pp. 317–417. Life by his disciple, John of Lodi, OSB, pr. in the edn. of his works by C. Cajetan, 1, pp. v–xviii; repr. in AASS, Feb. 3 (1658), pp. 416–27, and in J. P. Migne, PL 144. 113–46. Modern studies by F. Dressler (Studia Anselmiana, 34; 1954, with bibl.) and J. Leclercq, OSB (Uomini e Dottrine, 8; 1960). J. J. Ryan, Saint Peter Damiani and his Canonical Sources (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies. Studies and Texts, 2; Toronto, 1956); J. Gonsette, SJ, Pierre Damien et la culture profane (Essais philosophiques, 7; 1965); R. Bultot, La Doctrine du mépris du monde, 4. Le XIe siècle, 1: Pierre Damien (1963). San Pier Damiano nel IX Centenario della Morte (4 vols., Cesena, 1972–[1978]). C. Lohmer, Heremi Conversatio: Studien zu den monastischen Vorschriften des Petrus Damiani (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinertums, 39; 1991). I. M. Resnick, Divine Power and Possibility in St Peter Damian's De Divina Omnipotentia (Studien und Texte zur Geistesgeschichte des Mittelalters, 31; Leiden, etc., 1992). Studi Gregoriani, 10 (1975) is devoted to him. J. P. Whitney, Hildebrandine Essays (1932), pp. 95–120. Raby, pp. 250–6; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 393–8. Bibl. of works on Peter Damian, 1950–70, in Studi su S. Pier Damiano in onore . . . Cicognani, op. cit., pp. xxi–xxxi. B. Calati in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1551–73, s.v. 'Pierre (25) Damien', with bibl.

Peter the Fuller (d. 488), Patr. of *Antioch. Acc. to an uncertain tradition, recorded by a 6th-cent. monk, Alexander of Cyprus, Peter had been a monk of the convent of the *Acoemetae at *Constantinople, where he practised the trade of a fuller. Expelled for his *Monophysite leanings, he went to Chalcedon, but after a brief stay returned and became known to the Emp. *Zeno the Isaurian, whom he accompanied to Antioch *c.*470. Here he joined the *Apollinarians and violently opposed Martyrius, Bp. of Antioch, a supporter of the *Chalcedonian Definition. During an absence of Martyrius, in search of assistance against the Apollinarians in Constantinople, Peter, backed by Zeno, had himself made bishop in his place (470). *Gennadius of Constantinople, however, obtained a decree of exile against him which was commuted to imprisonment in the convent of the Acoemetae. In 475 he succeeded in regaining his see, but in 477 he was once more deposed and interned, this time with the *Messalians. In 482 he gave his assent to Zeno's '*Henoticon' and again became Patr. of Antioch, where he remained till his death. At a Council he succeeded in inducing his bishops to assent to the Emperor's formula. He is chiefly remembered for his addition to the *Trisagion of the clause ὁ σταυρωθεὶς δι' ἡμᾶς ('who was crucified for us'). Acc. to *Theodore Lector he also introduced the recitation of the *Nicene Creed at the *Eucharist, the solemn blessing of the *chrism, and the commemoration of the *Theotokos at every service.

Theodore Lector, HE 1. 20–2 (repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (1). 175–8). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 253 f. (nos. 6522–5). E. Venables in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 338–40, s.v. 'Petrus (10)'; G. Fritz in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1933–5, s.v. 'Pierre le Foulon'; L. Perrone in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2794 f., s.v. 'Pietro il Fullone'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 679, with bibl.

Peter Gonzales, St. See ELMO, ST.

Peter the Hermit (d. 1115), preacher of the First *Crusade. He was born at or near Amiens. Little is known of his early years, except that he was a hermit and may have had links with the 'poverty and preaching' movement of N. France. 12th-cent. sources report that he visited *Jerusalem as a pilgrim and returned with an appeal to Pope *Urban II to send help from the West. Historians have usually regarded this account as legendary, but it has recently been argued that it contains a kernel of historical truth. After the Council of *Clermont in 1095, Peter raised a considerable force which arrived at *Constantinople ahead of the rest of the First Crusade and was destroyed by the Turks on entering Anatolia. Peter himself then joined the main army. During the siege of Antioch (1098) he made an unsuccessful effort to escape but later apparently regained his reputation and entered Jerusalem with the victorious army. On his return to Europe he became prior of the *Augustinian monastery of Neufmoutier (Huy), which he had helped to found. He is commemorated on 8 July.

The standard study is H. Hagenmeyer, Peter der Eremite (1879; Fr. tr., 1883). E. O. Blake and C. Morris, 'A Hermit goes to War: Peter and the Origins of the First Crusade', in W. J. Sheils (ed.), Monks, Hermits and the Ascetic Tradition (Studies in Church History, 22; 1985), pp. 79–107; M. D. Coupe, 'Peter the Hermit—A Reassessment', Nottingham Medieval Studies, 31 (1987), pp. 37–45. See also works cited under CRUSADES.

Peter of Laodicea (*c.*7th–8th cent.), Gk. patristic writer and reputed Commentator on the Gospels. His name is attached to extracts from Gospel commentaries in two late MSS, though in others the passages are anonymous. In 1908 C. F. G. Heinrici argued that they were actually the work of this author; but further investigation has made this improbable. The only undoubted work of Peter's to survive is a short 'Exposition of the Lord's Prayer'.

The 'Expositio in Orationem Domini' and other frags. in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (2). 3321–36. The surviving portions of his supposed Comm. on Mt., ed. C. F. G. Heinrici (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung des Neuen Testamentes, 5; 1908). M. Rauer, Der dem Petrus von Laodicea zugeschriebene Lukaskommentar (Neutestamentliche Abhandlungen, 8, Heft 2; 1920). Krumbacher, pp. 136 f. R. Devreesse in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 1 (1928), cols. 1165–7, s.v. 'Chaînes exégétiques grecques'.

Peter Lombard (*c.*1100–60), the 'Master of the Sentences'. He was born near Novara in Lombardy, and after studying in Italy went to *Reims and then to *Paris, where he taught at the Cathedral School from 1143 or 1144. In 1148 he opposed *Gilbert de la Porrée at the Council of Reims, and in 1159, shortly before his death, was appointed Bp. of Paris. His Commentaries on the Psalms and on the Pauline Epistles were written before and after 1148 respectively, and his chief work, the 'Sententiarum libri quatuor', probably 1155–8. This last work, to which he owes his fame, is arranged in four books, on (1) the Trinity, (2) the Creation and Sin, (3) the Incarnation and the Virtues, and (4) the Sacraments and the Four Last Things. It contains a wealth of quotations from the Latin Fathers, esp. Sts *Augustine and *Hilary, as well as (of the Greeks) from St *John of Damascus, hitherto almost unknown in the W. After Peter Lombard's death the book was violently attacked by *Walter of St-Victor on the ground of its *Abelardian Christological '*Nihilianism', i.e. the doctrine that Christ acc. to His humanity is nothing (quod Christus secundum quod est homo non est aliquid), which, however, was apparently given only as an opinion. Later, under the influence of *Joachim of Fiore's 'Liber de vera et falsa philosophia', which attacked Peter Lombard's Trinitarian teaching, efforts were made to have the work censured at the Fourth *Lateran Council in 1215, with the result that Joachim's doctrine was rejected and the 'Sentences' pronounced orthodox. After this rehabilitation it became the standard textbook of Catholic theology during the Middle Ages, despite the early rejection of several opinions advanced in it, e.g. the identification of the Holy Spirit with the virtue of charity. Its teaching on the Sacraments marked an important development; Peter Lombard is one of the first to insist on the number seven, to distinguish them (like *Alexander of Hales later) from the *sacramentals, and to clarify the conception by asserting the efficacity and causality of the sign. The book, which owed its success chiefly to its lucid arrangement, its comprehensiveness, and its absence of individuality, was commented on by nearly all theologians of repute and even versified. It was finally superseded as a textbook by the 'Summa Theologiae' of St *Thomas Aquinas, but in the 17th cent. commentaries were still produced, among the last being that of the *Jesuit, J. M. de Ripalda (1635).

Works collected in J. P. Migne, PL 191 and 192. Crit. edn. of the Sentences by the Franciscans of Grottaferrata [in fact by I. Brady] (Spicilegium Bonaventurianum, 4–5; Grottaferrata, 1971–81), incl. important survey of his life and works. J. N. Espenberger, Die Philosophie des Petrus Lombardus und ihre Stellung im zwölften Jahrhundert (BGPM 3, Heft 5; 1901). O. Baltzer, Die Sentenzen des Petrus Lombardus (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 8, Heft 3; 1902). F. Stegmüller (ed.), Repertorium Commentariorum in Sententias Petri Lombardi (2 vols., Würzburg, 1947). Miscellanea Lombardiana pubblicata a chiusura delle celebrazioni centenarie organizzate in Novara per onorare Pietro Lombardo, a cura del Pontificio Ateneo Salesiano di Torino (Novara, 1957), esp. D. Van den Eynde, OFM, 'Essai chronologique sur l'œuvre littéraire de Pierre Lombard', pp. 45–63. P. Delhaye, Pierre Lombard (Montreal and Paris, 1961). M. L. Colish, Peter Lombard (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 41; 2 vols., Leiden, 1994). J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Le Mouvement théologique du XII^e siècle (2nd edn., Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 10; 1948), pp. 113–373. Id. in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1941–2019, s.v. 'Pierre Lombard', with good bibl.; I. Brady in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1604–12, s.v. 'Pierre (37) Lombard'. J. de Ghellinck, SJ, in CE 11 (1911), pp. 768 f., s.v.

Peter Martyr, St (*c.*1200–52), *Dominican preacher and Inquisitor. Born at *Verona (hence known also as Veronensis), into a predominantly *Catharist family, he nevertheless grew up as a Catholic. He was sent to study in *Bologna, where he entered the Dominican Order, prob. *c.*1220–1. He was renowned as an eloquent and dedicated preacher and a successful controversialist against the Cathari. In Sept. 1251 he was appointed Inquisitor in Milan and Como by Pope *Innocent IV. He and his companion were assassinated on 6 Apr. 1252 between Como and Milan. As he died he prayed for his murderer, commended himself to God and began to recite the Creed. A late tradition asserts that he wrote the first words of the Creed on the ground in his own blood. Fra *Angelico depicted him in a famous painting in the convent of S. Marco, Florence, with wounded head, his finger to his lips. Feast day, 4 June, formerly 29 April.

Life by Thomas Agni de Lentino, OP, written before 1257, pr. from a redaction made *c.*1517 in AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 686–719; other material, pp. 678–86; Gerard de Fracheto, OP (d. 1271), Vitae Fratrum Ordinis Praedicatorum, ed. B. M. de Reichert, OP (Monumenta Ordinis Praedicatorum, 1; Rome, 1897), pp. 236–48. Life by P. T. Campana (Milan, 1741). F. T. Perrens, 'Saint Pierre Martyr et l'hérésie des Patarins à Florence', Revue historique, 2 (1876), pp. 337–66. G. Meersseman, OP, 'Études sur les anciennes confréries dominicaines, 2. Les confréries de saint Pierre Martyr', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 21 (1951), pp. 51–196, with docs. A. Dondaine, OP, 'Saint Pierre Martyr', ibid. 23 (1953), pp. 66–162, with refs. V. J. Koudelka and A. Silli in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (Rome, 1968), cols. 746–62, s.v. 'Pietro de Verona', with further bibl.

Peter Martyr (1499–1562), an Anglicized form of 'Pietro Martire Vermigli', Reformer. He was born at Florence, the son of Stefano Vermigli (a follower of *Savonarola), who, having lost several children, vowed to dedicate any that lived to St Peter Martyr (see previous entry). The traditional date for his birth (1500) rests upon a misreading of the Florence baptismal register. After education at Fiesole by the *Augustinians and joining that order, he became in 1530 abbot of the Augustinians at Spoleto, and in 1533 prior of St Petrus-ad-aram at Naples. He was now a serious student of the Bible, and was much impressed by a reading of M. *Bucer's Commentaries on the Gospels and Psalms, and U. *Zwingli's De vera et falsa religione. The sympathy with the Reformers which he displayed in his lectures led him to be accused of error and prohibited from preaching, though the prohibition was removed on appeal to Rome, through the help of R. *Pole and other friends. In 1542, however, he was forced to flee from Italy and take refuge at Zurich and Basle, and lastly at Strasbourg, where, with Bucer's help, he was appointed professor of theology (1542). Here he married Catherine Dammartin, a nun. At T. *Cranmer's invitation he came to England with B. *Ochino in 1547, was given a government pension of 40 marks, made Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1548), and took part in a great disputation (1549) on the Eucharist. He was consulted on the BCP of 1552, and was one of the commissioners for the reform of canon law. In 1553 his wife died, and was buried in *Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, near the tomb of St *Frideswide, but, at the order of Cardinal Pole, the body was subsequently disinterred. (In 1561 her remains were mingled with the supposed relics of St Frideswide and buried at the NE end of the cathedral; hence N. *Sanders' epigram 'hic requiescit religio cum superstitione'.) At *Mary's accession, Martyr was briefly put under house arrest, but in Sept. 1553 was allowed, through S. *Gardiner's influence, to go to Strasbourg, where he was reappointed professor of theology (1554). In 1556, owing to opposition to his Eucharistic views, he removed to Zurich, where he became professor of Hebrew, maintaining a long correspondence on English affairs with J. *Jewel, R. *Cox, John Parkhurst, and Edwin *Sandys.

Some of his correspondence is incl. in the Zürich Letters, ed. H. Robinson (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1842–5). The primary source is J. Simler, Oratio de Vita et Obitu (Zurich, 1563; it was also appended to the collection of Martyr's miscellaneous works pub. under the title Loci Communes Sacrarum Literarum, Zurich, 1583; Eng. tr. of the latter, with the Oratio appended, by A. Marten, London, 1583). Eng. tr. of Early Writings, ed. J. C. McLelland (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 30; Kirksville, Mo., 1994). Id., The Visible Words of God: An Exposition of the Sacramental Theology of Peter Martyr Vermigli, A.D. 1500 1562 (1957). P. McNair, Peter Martyr in Italy: An Anatomy of Apostasy (Oxford, 1967). K. Sturm, Die Theologie Peter Martyr Vermiglis während seines ersten Aufenthalts in Strassburg 1542–1547 (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 31; 1971). M. W. Anderson, Peter Martyr: A Reformer in Exile (1542–1562) (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 10; Nieuwkoop, 1975). J. P. Donnelly, SJ, Calvinism and Scholasticism in Vermigli's Doctrine of Man and Grace (Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Thought, 18; Leiden, 1976). J. C. McLelland (ed.), Peter Martyr Vermigli and Italian Reform (Waterloo, Ont. [1980]), pp. 65–151. M. A. Overell, 'Peter Martyr in England 1547–1553: An Alternative View', Sixteenth Century Journal, 15 (1984), pp. 87–104. J. P. Donnelly, SJ, and R. M. Kingdon, A Bibliography of the Works of Peter Martyr Vermigli (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 13; Kirksville, Mo. [1990]).

Peter Mogila. See MOGILA, PETER.

Peter Mongo (d. 490) (Gk. Μογγός, 'hoarse'), Patr. of *Alexandria. In 477 he was elected the successor of the *Monophysite *Timothy Aelurus. As both Rome and Constantinople recognized the Patriarchate of Timothy Salophaciolus (Patr. 460–82), Mongo, fearing the Emp. *Zeno, went into hiding. On the death of Salophaciolus in 482, however, Acacius, Patr. of *Constantinople (see ACACIAN SCHISM), persuaded the Emperor to recognize Mongo in return for his acceptance of the *Henoticon. While his acceptance of the Henoticon annoyed the extreme Monophysites in Alexandria, his endeavours to placate them by a Monophysite interpretation of it also offended the orthodox. The compromise served, however, to maintain peaceful relations with Constantinople during the patriarchate of Acacius. Euphemius, who became Patr. of Constantinople in 490, had his name erased from the *diptychs and intended to depose him, an action prevented by Mongo's death.

The sources incl. *Evagrius, HE 3, *Zacharias Scholasticus, HE 5, and Theophanes, Chronogr. 194. T. Niggl in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 370 f., s.v., with bibl.

Peter Nolasco, St (*c.*1180–*c.*1249), founder of the *Mercedarian Order. The hagiographical tradition, according to which he took part in the *Crusade against the *Albigensians and later achieved remarkable feats in ransoming captives, has been largely exploded by historians, leaving little that can be confidently asserted about his life. Even the authenticity of crucial documents is contested. He was prob. engaged in his life's work of ransoming captives by the mid-1220s, if not earlier. The focus of this work was Catalonia, but he was possibly of French extraction. When other people associated themselves with his activities, the Mercedarian Order began to take shape. The date of his death is disputed, but he was clearly no longer head of the Order after 1245. He was canonized by *Urban VIII in 1628. Feast day 28 (formerly 31) Jan., now suppressed from the universal calendar.

Lives by F. Zumel, Mercedarian, pr. in AASS, Jan. 2 (1643), pp. 981–8, F. Olignano, Mercedarian (Naples, 1668), F. Colombo (Madrid, 1674) and P. N. Pérez, Mercedarian (Barcelona, 1915; It. tr., 1921). For modern crit. appraisal, see recent works on the Mercedarians cited s.v., esp. art. by Y. Dossat. A. Rubino, Mercedarian, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 1704–11, s.v. 'Pietro Nolasco'.

Peter of Spain. See JOHN XXI.

Peter of Tarentaise, St (d. 1175). (Not to be confounded with Pope Innocent V (1276), also 'Peter of Tarentaise'.) A native of the Dauphiné, at the age of 20 he became a *Cistercian monk at the Abbey of Bonnevaux, founded by St *Bernard, where he lived a life of great piety. In 1142 he was appointed Abp. of Tarentaise (Moutiers, in Savoy), and with great difficulty thoroughly reformed his diocese, founding many hospitals. His practice of distributing free bread and soup ('May Bread') in the weeks before harvest is said to have survived until the Revolution. In 1155 he sought release in flight, but being discovered as a lay brother in a Swiss monastery he was compelled to return to his see. He stood high in the confidence of the Popes and was commissioned to try to reconcile Prince Henry (later Henry II) of England and Louis VII of France. Feast day, 8 May.

AASS, Mai. 2 (1680), pp. 320–45, incl. Life by Godfrey, Abbot of Hauteville, written at the request of Pope Lucius III and completed before 1185. J. M. Chevray, La Vie de saint Pierre II, archevêque de Tarentaise (1841). H. Brultey, Saint Pierre de Tarentaise: Ses miracles, ses reliques, son culte (Besançon, 1874). Un Moine de Tamié [i.e. A. Dimier], Saint Pierre de Tarentaise: Essai historique (Ligugé, 1935). L. F. Barmann, SJ, 'Peter of Tarentaise. A Biographical Study of the Twelfth Century', Revue de l'Université d'Ottawa, 31 (1961), Section Spéciale, pp. 96*–125*.

Peter of Verona, St. See PETER MARTYR, ST.

Peter the Venerable (1092 or 1094–1156), eighth Abbot of *Cluny. A descendant of the noble family of Montboissier, he was educated at the monastery of Sauxillanges of the congregation of Cluny, and made his profession to its abbot, St *Hugh, shortly before the latter's death in 1109. After being prior at Vézelay and Domène (1120), he was elected abbot of Cluny in 1122. Against much opposition he carried through important reforms, esp. in the financial and educational spheres, in the two general chapters of 1132 and 1146 by enforcing the detailed constitutions which he had drawn up for the congregation. His interest in the pursuit of studies at Cluny brought about a controversy with his intimate friend, St *Bernard, who wished to see the monastic life confined to prayer and manual work. In 1130 Peter supported Innocent II against the antipope Anacletus II, himself a Cluniac monk, and in 1140 he gave shelter to *Abelard first at Cluny and later at the priory of St-Marcel-de-Chalon. Between his numerous journeys, which took him to Spain in 1142, to Germany in 1147, twice to England, and ten times to Italy, he frequently retired to a hermitage to devote himself to study and meditation. He was the first to have the *Koran translated into Latin (completed 1143) and himself wrote against the Muslims. His works, among which are treatises against *Peter de Bruys and against the Jews (1144–7), a number of sermons, and some poems, show comparatively little acquaintance with the Fathers but profound knowledge of the Scriptures, and a preference for the literal sense which causes him to avoid allegorical speculations. His moderation and gentleness earned him the veneration of his contemporaries, but in the eyes of posterity he was overshadowed by the great figure of his friend, St Bernard. Though honoured as a saint, he was never canonized. Commemoration in several martyrologies is on 29 Dec.

Collected edn. of his works, Paris, 1522 (very incomplete); further collection, incl. text of statutes of Cluny during his time, in M. Marrier, OSB (ed.), Bibliotheca Cluniacensis (Paris, 1614), cols. 621–1420; works repr., with additions from E. *Martène and elsewhere (details in DTC, see below), in J. P. Migne, PL 189. 61–1054. Crit. edns. of his letters, with introd., by G. Constable (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1967); of his 'Contra Petrobrusianos Hereticos' by J. Fearns (CCCM 10; 1968); of his 'Adversus Iudaeorum inveteratam duritiem' by Y. Friedman (ibid. 58; 1985); of his 'De miraculis' by D. Bouthillier (ibid. 83; 1988); and of three of his sermons by G. Constable, in R. Bén. 64 (1954), pp. 224–72. Life by his friend, Rudolphus, pr. from a MS no longer known, in E. Martène, OSB, and U. Durand, OSB (eds.), Veterum Scriptorum et Monumentorum Amplissima Collectio, 6 (Paris, 1729), cols. 1187–202; repr. in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 15–28. Further Life in M. Marrier, op. cit., cols. 589–602, repr. with other biog. material in J. P. Migne, op. cit., cols. 27–62. J. H. Pignot, Histoire de l'ordre de Cluny depuis la fondation de l'abbaye jusqu'à la mort de Pierre-le-Vénérable, 3 (1868), pp. 47–609. Good modern study by J. Leclercq, OSB ('Figures monastiques'; Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1946), with bibl. Festschrift commemorating the 8th centenary of his death, Petrus Venerabilis, ed. G. Constable and J. Kritzeck (Studia Anselmiana, 40; 1956); Pierre Abélard—Pierre le Vénérable: Les courants philosophiques, littéraires et artistiques en Occident au milieu du XII^e siècle, Abbaye de Cluny, 2 au 9 juillet 1972 (Colloques internationaux du centre national de la recherche scientifique, 546; 1975), esp. pp. 99–269. J. P. Torrell, OP, and D. Bouthillier, Pierre le Vénérable et sa Vision du Monde (SSL 42; 1986). J. Kritzeck, Peter the Venerable and Islam (Princeton Oriental Studies, 23; 1964), incl. text of his writings against the Muslims. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Le Poème apologétique de Pierre le Vénérable et les poèmes connexes', R. Bén. 51 (1939), pp. 53–69. H. Hoffmann, 'Zu den Briefen des Petrus Venerabilis', Quellen und Forschungen aus Italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 49 (1969), pp. 399–441; 50 (1970), pp. 447–9. A. H. Bredero, Cluny et Cîteaux au douzième siècle: L'Histoire d'une controverse monastique (Amsterdam and Maarssen, 1985), passim. M. D. *Knowles, 'Peter the Venerable', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 39 (1956–7), pp. 132–45. Manitius, 3, pp. 136–44. P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2065–81; J. Hourlier, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1669–76, both s.v. 'Pierre le Vénérable'.

Peterborough. At the Saxon village of Medehamstede, which had existed on the site, a monastery was established c.655, Peada, son of Penda, King of the Mercians, being one of its founders. After the monastery church had been destroyed by the Danes in 870, it was rebuilt c.966 by *Ethelwold, Bp. of *Winchester, who dedicated it to St Peter, and hence the village came to be called 'Peterborough'. This church being accidentally burnt in 1116, the foundations of a new church were laid in the following year. It was completed in 1237 and consecrated by R. *Grosseteste, Bp. of *Lincoln, and in 1541 became the cathedral of the newly constituted diocese. Though containing architecture of every period from the Norman to the Perpendicular, it is fundamentally a Norman church, exceptionally well preserved, with a fine early 13th-cent. painted ceiling over the nave. Catherine of Aragon was buried here in 1536 and *Mary Queen of Scots in 1587, Mary's body being removed to *Westminster Abbey in 1612. In 1895 the site of a cruciform Saxon church was discovered under the south transept.

The Peterborough Chronicle, 1070–1154, ed. C. Clark (Oxford, 1958; 2nd edn., 1970). Chronicle of Hugh Candidus, ed. J. Sparke, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Varii (London, 1723), separate pagination; mod. edn. by W. T. Mellows (ibid., 1949); Eng. tr., Peterborough, 1941). Chronicles of Robert of Swaffham and Walter of Whittlesey also ed. J. Sparke, op. cit. Chronicon Petroburgense, ed. T. Stapleton (Camden Society, 47; 1849). Account Rolls of the Obedientiaries of Peterborough, ed. J. Greatrex (Northamptonshire Record Society, 33; 1984). Various docs. on the church of St John the Baptist, Peterborough, on the monastery, and on the cathedral, ed. W. T. Mellows, Peterborough Local Administration (ibid. 9, 12, and 13; 1939–47); id. and D. H. Gifford, Elizabethan Peterborough (ibid. 18; 1956). J. D. Martin, The Cartularies and Registers of Peterborough Abbey [A Handlist] (ibid. 28; 1978). S. Gunton, The History of the Church of Peterborough (1686). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 344–404. E. [J.] King, Peterborough Abbey 1086–1310: A Study in the Land Market (Cambridge, 1973). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of Lincoln, Ely, Oxford and Peterborough (1730), pp. 475–540. W. D. Sweeting, The Cathedral Church of Peterborough (Bell's Cathedral Series, 1898). J. C. Cox in VCH, Northampton, 2, ed. R. M. Serjeantson and W. R. D. Adkins (1906), pp. 83–95, with refs. G. F. Assinder in DECH, pp. 455–7, s.v.

Peter's Chains, Feast of St. See LAMMAS DAY.

Peter's Pence (Lat. denarii S. Petri), also 'Rome-Scot', formerly an ecclesiastical tax in England paid to the Pope. It was first paid by King *Offa after the visit of the two Papal legates concerned in the establishment of the archbishopric of *Lichfield in 787, and appears to have been continued by Offa's successors. *William of Malmesbury records that it was paid by King Aethelwulf (d. 858), the father of *Alfred the Great. After a lapse it was renewed by *William I. At one time a levy, collected at midsummer on all but the poorest houses, in the 12th cent. it was commuted by the bishops to an annual sum of £199. 6*s*. 8*d*. As a tax it was finally abolished by *Henry VIII in 1534. After the restoration of the RC hierarchy in 1850, however, the bishops agreed to resume more regularly constituted contributions to Rome, and from the 1860s Peter's Pence was collected on an informal diocesan basis; the practice received official sanction in 1871 and has continued.

Act forbidding the payment (Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533) repr. in Gee and Hardy, pp. 209–32 (no. 53). P. Fabre, 'Recherches sur le denier de saint Pierre en Angleterre au moyen âge', in Mélanges G. B. de Rossi (Supplément aux Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire publiés par l'École française de Rome, 12; 1892), pp. 159–82; O. Jensen, 'The "Denarius Sancti Petri" in England', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, NS 15 (1901), pp. 171–247. W. E. Lunt, Papal Revenues in the Middle Ages (Records of Civilization, 19; New York, 1934), 1, pp. 65–71, with docs., 2, pp. 55–81; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England to 1327 (Studies in Anglo-Papal Relations during the Middle Ages, 1; Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 33; 1939), pp. 3–84; id., Financial Relations of the Papacy with England 1327–1534 (ibid. 2; Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 74; 1962), pp. 1–53; 717–20, all with refs. E. W. Watson in DECH, pp. 457 f.

Petite Église. The body of French Catholics who refused to recognize the *Concordat of 1801 (q.v.) and separated themselves from the communion of the Pope. Its members, who were known by various names, such as 'Illuminés' and 'Fidèles', remained faithful to a number of exiled bishops who had resisted the Pope's order to resign their old dioceses, and met in private houses for worship. When at the restoration, between 1817 and 1818, all schismatic bishops were reconciled to the Holy See except the Bp. of Blois, he came to be regarded as the head of the Petite Église till his death in 1829, which left them without a bishop. From that date their number rapidly decreased, esp. after their last priest died in 1847. By 1900 the schism had practically ceased to exist.

C. De Clercq in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 1438–47, s.v.

Petrarch, Francesco (1304–74), Italian poet and humanist. He spent part of his youth at Carpentras, near *Avignon, where his father had settled after being exiled from Florence for embracing, like *Dante, the cause of the White Guelphs. After studying law at Montpellier from 1319 to 1323 and at *Bologna from 1323 to 1325, he received minor orders at Avignon in 1326 which enabled him to hold several benefices. In 1327 he first saw Laura, who was to inspire his most famous poems collected in the 'Canzoniere'. From 1330 to 1337 he journeyed through N. France, Germany, and Italy, visiting many scholars and copying classical MSS until, in 1337, he settled down to a life of solitude at Vaucluse, where most of his important works were written. His poems on Laura and his epic 'Africa' (begun in 1338) on Scipio Africanus won him the poet's crown in 1341. In the following year he wrote the treatise 'Secretum' (sometimes known as 'De Contemptu Mundi'), consisting of three dialogues between himself and St *Augustine, who seeks to turn the poet's mind from the transitory things of this world to thoughts of eternal life. In 1347 Petrarch supported the short-lived republican movement of Cola di *Rienzo and in 1350 began his famous friendship with Boccaccio. In the following years he was employed on several political embassies, e.g. to the Emp. Charles IV at Prague (1356). The last years of his life were spent again in retirement at Padua and the neighbouring village of Arquà. His religious nature, which was often in conflict with the sensuousness of the fame-loving poet and the passion of the scholar for pagan culture, found expression in several Latin treatises. 'De Otio Religioso' (begun in 1347), dedicated to the Carthusians of Montrieu, is a panegyric on the contemplative life; 'De Vita Solitaria' (1356) is a praise of solitude; and in the 'De Remediis Utriusque Fortunae' (1358–66) the ageing poet meditates on the transitoriness of human life. His last great poetical work, the 'Trionfi', strongly influenced by Dante's Divina Commedia, celebrates in allegorical form the triumph of the Divine over all things and the ultimate redemption of man from the dominion of the senses.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Basle, 1496 (Lat. works only); fuller edn. [by J. Herold] (4 vols. bound in 1, ibid., 1554). A. Hortis (ed.), Scritti inediti di Francesco Petrarca (Trieste, 1874). Crit. text in the Edizione nazionale delle opere di Francesco Petrarca by various eds. (Florence, 1926 ff.). Crit. edns. of Prose, with Ital. tr., by G. Martellotti and others (Letteratura Italiana, Storia e Testi, 7; 1955), incl. 'De Vita Solitaria', pp. 286–591, 'De Otio Religioso', pp. 594–603, and 'De Remediis Utriusque Fortunae', pp. 606–45; also of 'De Otio Religioso' by G. Rotondi (ST 195; 1958) and of 'Le Familiari', bks. 1–11, by U. Dotti (2 vols., Urbino, 1974). Eng. tr. of his 'De Vita Solitaria' by J. Zeitlin (Urbana, Ill., 1924); of his 'Letters on Familiar Matters' by A. S. Bernardo (bks. 1–8, Albany, NY, 1975; 9–24, 2 vols., Baltimore and London, 1982–5); of his 'Bucolicum Carmen' by T. G. Bergin (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1974); of his Lyric Poems by R. M. Durling (Cambridge, Mass., 1976), and of 'Africa' by T. G. Bergin and A. S. Wilson (ibid., 1977). The fullest account in Eng. is E. H. R. Tatham, Francesco Petrarca . . .: His Life and Correspondence (2 vols., 1925–6). The very extensive lit. incl. general studies by F. De Sanctis (Naples, 1869; ed. B. *Croce, 1907; also ed. among De Sanctis's works, by N. Gallo, Turin, 1952), U. Bosco (Turin, 1946; rev. edn., Bari, 1961), K. Foster [OP] (Edinburgh, 1984), and N. Mann (Past Masters; Oxford and New York, 1984). P. de Nolhac, Pétrarque et l'humanisme (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes-Études. Sciences Philologiques et Historiques, 91; 1892; rev. edn., Bibliothèque Littéraire de la Renaissance, NS 1 and 2; 1907). J. H. Whitfield, Petrarch and the Renaissance (1943). Collection of essays by E. H. Wilkins (Chicago, 1961); id., Life of Petrarch (ibid., 1961); U. Dotti, Vita di Petrarca (1987). M. O'R. Boyle, Petrarch's Genius: Pentimento and Prophecy (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., and Oxford [1991]). A. S. Bernardo, Petrarch, Scipio and the 'Africa' (Baltimore [1962]); id., Petrarch, Laura, and the Triumphs (Albany, NY, 1974). H. Baron, Petrarch's Secretum: Its Making and Meaning (Cambridge, Mass., 1985). P. Hainsworth, Petrarch the Poet: An Introduction to the Rerum vulgarium fragmenta (1988). The Catalogue of the Petrarch Collection Bequeathed by W. Fiske [to the Cornell University Library], compiled by M. Fowler (1916), contains extensive bibl. to date. E. Carrara in Enciclopedia italiana, 27 (1935), pp. 8–23, s.v. 'Petrarca', with full bibl.; A. Niero in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 1208–17, s.v. 'Pétrarque', with more recent bibl.

Petri, Olaus (1493–1552), Swedish Reformer. The son of a blacksmith of Örebro, he studied at *Wittenberg (1516–18) and, returning home imbued with strict *Lutheran views, was made master of the chapter school at Strängnäs, and later appointed city clerk at Stockholm (1524). Gaining the favour of Gustavus Vasa, by whom he was made chancellor (1531–3), he became the leading exponent of doctrinal change in Sweden. After his marriage in 1525 he produced a continuous stream of tracts, pamphlets, and a book of homilies, which were widely read. He published the first Swedish service book, En handbok på svenska (1529) and was almost certainly responsible for the Swedish translation of the NT (1526). The latter years of his life (after 1539) were spent in retirement.

His brother, Laurentius Petri (1499–1573), was also a leading Reformer. In 1551 he was appointed the first Protestant Abp. of *Uppsala. He was responsible for the Swedish Church Order of 1571.

Collected Works (4 vols., Uppsala, 1914–17). The Manual of Olavus Petri (ed. E. E. Yelverton, Church Historical Society, 1953). Lives by R. Holm (Uppsala, 1917), H. Schück (Stockholm, 1893) and R. Murray (ibid., 1952). S. Ingebrand, Olavus Petris Reformatoriska Åskådning (Acta Universitatis Upsaliensis. Studia Doctrinae Christianae Upsaliensia, 1; Lund, 1964); C. Gardemeister, Den suveräne Guden: En studie i Olavus Petris teologi (Studia theologica Lundensia, 43; 1989). C. J. I. Bergendoff, Olaus Petri and the Ecclesiastical Transformation in Sweden (New York, 1928).

On Laurentius Petri there is a brief study by E. E. Yelverton, An Archbishop of the Reformation (1958). B. Ahlberg, Laurentius Petris Nattvardsuppfattning (Studia theologica Lundensia, 26; 1964).

Petrobrusians. See PETER DE BRUYS.

Petrock, St (6th cent.) also 'Pedrog', 'the captain of Cornish saints' (T. *Fuller). He is said to have been the son of a Welsh chieftain who after studying in Ireland (where he is said to have instructed St *Kevin) made his way to Cornwall and founded monasteries at Padstow (i.e. 'Petrockstowe') and Bodmin. It is almost impossible to disentangle the facts of his life from the extravagant embellishments of later times. In 1177 his relics were stolen from Bodmin by a Breton canon and given to the abbey of St-Méen, but Henry II secured their restoration. Many churches in Cornwall and Devon bear his dedication; and he is also venerated in Brittany as St Perreux. He is commonly represented with a stag. Feast day, 4 June.

14th-cent. Life by John of Tynemouth repr. in AASS, Jun. 1 (1695), pp. 400–2. P. Grosjean, SJ, 'Vies et miracles de S. Pétroc', Anal. Boll. 74 (1956), pp. 131–88 and 470–96, incl. texts and further refs. G. H. Doble, Saint Petrock, Abbot and Confessor ('Cornish Saints' Series, no. 11 [*c.*1929]), with Eng. tr. of Life in MS Bibl. Nat. Lat. 9889. C. W. Boase in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 326 f.

Petronius, St (early 5th cent.), Bp. of *Bologna *c.*432–50. He is briefly mentioned by contemporary historians. His Life describes him as a member of the imperial family, and says that he visited *Jerusalem, and that on becoming bishop he erected a church and monastery, dedicated to St *Stephen, modelled on the *Constantinian buildings at the *Holy Sepulchre. However, his cultus at Bologna developed rapidly after the finding of his relics in 1141, and the Life was apparently written between 1162 and 1180. It is largely legendary, and its statement about Petronius' buildings is highly controversial. Various writings have also been ascribed to him, mostly incorrectly. The present church of San Petronio, a vast Gothic structure, was begun in 1390 and completed in the 17th cent. Feast day, 4 Oct.

*Gennadius, De Vir. Ill. 41. G. *Morin, OSB, 'Deux petits discours d'un évêque Petronius, du Ve siècle', R. Ben. 14 (1897), pp. 3–8. F. Lanzoni, San Petronio vescovo di Bologna nella storia

e nella legenda (Rome, 1907) (text of Life, pp. 219–40); A. Testi Rasponi, 'Note Marginali al L. P. di Agnello', 4, 'Vita Sancti Petronii Episcopi et Confessoris', Atti e Memorie della R. Deputazione di Storia Patria per le Provincie di Romagna, 4th ser. 2 (1912), pp. 120–262; M. Corti, Vita di San Petronio (Bologna, 1962). W. Montorsi, S. Stefano in Bologna (Deputazione di Storia Patria per le Antiche Provincie Modenesi, Biblioteca, NS 52; 2 vols., Modena, 1980); L. Serchia (ed.), Nel segno del S. Sepolcro (Vigevano, 1987).

pew. At first the customary postures of the worshippers in the W., as to this day in E. churches, were standing and kneeling, and no seats were provided for the congregation. Later on, as a concession to the infirm, stone seats were attached to the walls, or, more rarely, to the piers of the nave; and by the end of the 13th cent. many English churches appear to have been equipped also with a number of fixed wooden benches. These were often known as 'pews' (probably derived from the Latin podium and meaning a seat raised up above floor-level). Such pews, even in village churches, were sometimes elaborately carved, at the ends and on the back, with figures of saints, symbols of the Passion of Christ, or grotesque animals. To finance the endowment of new churches and chapels built in the populous suburbs in the 19th cent., the Church Buildings Act 1818 and subsequent Acts allowed for payment for the exclusive use of certain pews. The pew-rents, as these payments were called, were normally to be used for the salary of a 'spiritual person' and clerk to serve in the church or chapel. Few, if any, now remain.

A. Heales, The History and Law of Church Seats or Pews (2 vols., 1872). J. C. Cox, Bench Ends in English Churches (1916). G. W. O. Addleshaw and F. Etchells, The Architectural Setting of Anglican Worship (1948), pp. 86–98. See also J. M. *Neale, The History of Pews (Paper read before the *Cambridge Camden Society, 22 Nov. 1841; 1841; suppl., 1842; 3rd edn., incl. suppl. and additions, 1843).

Pfaff Fragments of Irenaeus. Four fragments first pub. in F. S. *Maffei's Giornale de' letterati d'Italia in 1713 by C. M. Pfaff (d. 1760), who alleged that he had found them in the Turin library and believed them to be written by St *Irenaeus. Among other subjects they dealt with 'true Gnosis' and the 'new oblation' (i.e. the Eucharist). Though their Irenaean authorship was constantly challenged from the outset, they were regularly quoted and discussed down to the end of the 19th cent., when A. *Harnack showed convincingly that they were a fabrication of Pfaff himself. He proved that they made use of the (late) *Textus Receptus of the NT and of the defective printed editions of the Greek text of Irenaeus current in the early 18th cent., as well as reflecting Pfaff's own theological tenets, e.g. the *Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist.

A. Harnack, Die Pfaff'schen Irenäus-Fragmente als Fälschungen Pfaffs nachgewiesen (TU 20, Heft 3; 1900), a magisterial monograph. On Pfaff himself, cf. E. Preuschen in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 233–7, with useful bibl.

Pflug, Julius von (1499–1564), Bp. of Naumburg. Of Saxon descent, he was educated at Leipzig, *Bologna, and Padua, and appointed Provost of Zeitz in 1522 and Dean of Meissen in 1537. His humanistic sympathies made him eager for peace with the Protestants and to that end he took part in several conferences, e.g. at Leipzig in 1534 and at *Ratisbon in 1541. He indicated his willingness even to tolerate a married clergy and communion in both kinds. In 1541 he was elected Bp. of Naumburg-Zeitz, but as the Elector Johann Friedrich of Saxony refused to acknowledge him, he was unable to take possession of his see till after the Elector's defeat at Mühlberg in 1547. The 'Interim of *Augsburg' (1548; q.v.) was largely Pflug's work. His rule was much disturbed by the Protestantism in his diocese. In his theology he was greatly influenced by G. *Contarini.

Correspondence, ed. J. V. Pollet, OP (5 vols in 6, Leiden, 1969–82). Id., Julius Pflug (1499–1564) et la crise religieuse dans l'Allemagne du XVIe siècle (Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 45; Leiden, 1990). E. Neuss and J. V. Pollet (eds.), Pflugiana: Studien über Julius Pflug (1499–1564) (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 129; 1990). J. Wicks, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 1253–8, s.v. See also bibl. to AUGSBURG (INTERIM OF).

Phanar, the. The official residence and court of the *Oecumenical Patriarch at *Constantinople. It is in the Greek quarter of the city, on the Golden Horn.

Pharisees (Heb. פְּרוּשִׁין, 'separated ones'; Gk. Φαρισαῖοι). A Jewish religious party. The name occurs in *Josephus and in rabbinic sources, as well as in the NT. It is, however, far from certain that the Perushin, who are attacked in rabbinic sources as a separatist sect, are to be identified with the Pharisaioi of Josephus and the NT.

Josephus (Ant. 13. 5. 9) records the existence of the Pharisees as a distinct group in the time of Jonathan *Maccabaeus, *c.*145 BC, though some scholars hold that the term is here applied retrospectively. They opposed John Hyrcanus I (135–104 BC) for religious reasons and instigated a revolt against Alexander Jannaeus (103–76 BC), but they were favoured by Alexander's widow, Alexandra (76–67 BC). They refused to swear allegiance to *Herod on one occasion, but were respected by him. Unlike the *Sadducees, who tried to apply the Mosaic Law precisely as it was given, the Pharisees allowed some interpretation of it to make it more applicable to different situations. According to Josephus, they gradually secured a large following among the common people with regard to prayers and sacrifices, but modern scholars, reflecting the contradictory accounts in the ancient evidence, have reached no agreement either about the extent of the Pharisees' political and spiritual influence in 1st-cent. Palestine or about their main religious concerns.

In the Gospels the Pharisees appear as the chief opponents of the Lord, whom they attacked, e.g., for forgiving sins, breaking the Sabbath, and consorting with sinners. Christ repeatedly denounced what the Gospels describe as their purely external observance of the Law, their multitude of formalistic precepts which even they themselves could not keep (e.g. Mt. 23: 13–36), and their self-righteousness (Lk. 18: 9–14). During the Passion they remained in the background, when their place was taken by the Sadducees. After the Resurrection they appear less hostile to the nascent Church than the Sadducees; they share its belief in the resurrection and a retribution in the next world, in angels, in human freedom and Divine Providence; and it was a Pharisee, *Gamaliel, who publicly defended the Apostles before the Sanhedrin (Acts 5: 34–40).

After the fall of *Jerusalem (AD 70) the Pharisees disappear from history; but their influence survived in part in the teaching of the Rabbis and the *Mishnah. Several modern scholars have questioned whether the Pharisees depicted in the Gospels are representative of the party as a whole.

J. *Wellhausen, Die Pharisäer und die Sadducäer (1874). L. Finkelstein, The Pharisees: The Sociological Background of their Faith (2 vols., Philadelphia, 1938; 3rd edn., 1962). I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels (2 vols., 1917–24). A. Finkel, The Pharisees and the Teacher of Nazareth: A Study of their Background, their Halachic and Midrashic Teachings, the Similarities and Differences (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Spätjudentums und Urchristentums, 4; Leiden, 1964). J. Neusner, The Rabbinic Traditions about the Pharisees before 70 (3 vols., Leiden, 1971); id., From Religion to Piety: The emergence of Pharisaic Judaism (Englewood Cliffs, NJ [1973]). J. W. Bowker, Jesus and the Pharisees (Cambridge, 1973). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 381–403, incl. bibl. J. M. Baumgarten, 'The Name of the Pharisees', Journal of Biblical Literature, 102 (1983), pp. 411–28. E. P. Sanders, Jewish Law from Jesus to the Mishnah (1990), pp. 97–254. A. Michel and J. Le Moyne, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 1022–115, s.v.; R. Meyer and H. F. Weiss in TWNT 9 (1973), pp. 11–51; Eng. tr. (1974), pp. 11–48, s.v. Φαρισαῖος, with full refs. A. J. Saldarini in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 289–303.

phelonion (Gk. φελόνιον). The E. form of the *chasuble. In shape it is somewhat like the W. Gothic vestment, but is gathered up in front instead of at the sides, so that when in use it looks more like a *cope.

Braun, LG, pp. 234–9.

phenomenalism. (1) The belief that what we term physical objects have no existence except as experienced as 'sense data' in men (or animals) who perceive them.

(2) The theory that such objects, though they may in reality exist, can be known only as the experiences ('sense data') which they occasion in us.

(3) As used by E. *Caird and N. Kemp Smith, the theory of knowledge expounded in, or implied by, The Critique of Pure Reason of I. *Kant, on the basis of his fundamental distinction between appearance and reality.

phenomenology (Gk. τὰ φαινόμενα, 'appearance', and λογία, 'discourse'), lit. 'the science of phenomena'. The term was occasionally employed by I. *Kant in its literal sense. By G. W. F. *Hegel, whose first large philosophical treatise bore the title Phänomenologie des Geistes (1807), it was applied to the description of the stages whereby the mind (Geist) develops from naïve consciousness (for Hegel, sense experience) to absolute knowledge. In recent times, however, it has been used esp. of the philosophical doctrines of Edmund Husserl (1859–1938) and his school. Acc. to Husserl phenomenology is a descriptive science concerned with the discovery and analysis of essences and essential meanings. It professes to exclude all metaphysical questions; but much in Husserl's first elaboration of the science tended towards a *Platonic realism. These Platonist elements were developed by his disciples and used e.g. by Max Scheler and Johannes Hessen for the defence of a Christian metaphysic of an *Augustinian (non-Thomistic) type. Husserl himself in his later writings embraced a form of Subjective Idealism.

Husserl, who already employed the phenomenological method in parts of the Logische Untersuchungen (2 vols. in 3, 1900; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1970), developed it in academic lectures in the years 1900–13 and systematically elaborated it in the programmatic Ideen zu einer reinen Phänomenologie und phänomenologischen Philosophie (1913; Eng. tr. by W. R. Boyce Gibson, Ideas, 1931). This book, which came to be known as Ideen 1, was the first part of a much larger work, of which the second and third parts were published only in 1952. The chief organ of the Phenomenological Movement was the Jahrbuch für Philosophie und phänomenologische Forschung (11 vols., 1913–30). Phenomenology was the most influential movement in German philosophy in the period 1910–33; but Husserl's Jewish ancestry brought it into disrepute under the Nazis and it had few followers at the time of his death, though these included Edith *Stein (q.v.). After the 1939–45 war, it was revived in a somewhat modified form by Maurice Merleau-Ponty (1908–61) in France, where it it still has disciples, notably Paul Ricoeur and the Jewish philosopher Emmanuel Levinas. Its influence has continued to be felt in RC circles, e.g. by the Jesuit philosopher, Bernard Lonergan (1904–84), and also by Pope *John Paul II, whose work The Acting Person was published in English translation in the series Analecta Husserliana (vol. 10; 1979). Phenomenology has also enjoyed renewed favour in America; the American periodical Philosophy and Phenomenological Research (1940 ff.) was founded by M. Farber as a successor to the Jahrbuch. See also EXISTENTIALISM.

Until his last years Husserl showed reluctance to publish. His later writings incl. Vorlesungen zur Phänomenologie des inneren Zeitbewusstseins (ed. M. *Heidegger, 1928; Eng. tr., The Hague, 1964), Formale und transzendentale Logik (1929; Eng. tr., ibid., 1969) and Erfahrung und Urteil (1939; Eng. tr., 1973). His works are being ed. from the Husserl Archiv at Louvain under the direction of H. L. Van Breda and others, Husserliana (The Hague, 1950 ff.); Eng. tr. of Cartesianische Meditationen from vol. 1, by D. Cairns (The Hague, 1960), of Die Idee der Phänomenologie from vol. 2, by W. P. Alston and G. Nakhnikian (ibid., 1964), and of Ideen III from vol. 5, by T. E. Klein and W. E. Pohl as Phenomenology and the Foundations of the Sciences (ibid., 1980; vol. 1 of an Eng. tr. of Husserl's Collected Works). Among Scheler's chief works were Der Formalismus in der Ethik und die materiale Wertethik (2 pts., 1913–16; Eng. tr., 1973), Vom Ewigen im Menschen (collected essays, 1921; Eng. tr., 1960), Die Wissensformen und die Gesellschaft (1926) and Die Stellung des Menschen im Kosmos (1928); Eng. tr. of Selected Philosophical Essays (Evanston, Ill., 1973). J. Hessen, Augustins Metaphysik der Erkenntnis (1931; 2nd edn., The Hague, 1960); M. Merleau-Ponty, La Phénoménologie de la perception (1945; Eng. tr., 1962); B. J. F. Lonergan, SJ, Insight: A Study of Human Understanding (1957); and E. Levinas, Totalité et Infini (Phaenomenologica, 8; The Hague, 1961; Eng. tr., Pittsburgh and The Hague [1969]).

M. Farber, The Foundation of Phenomenology: Edmund Husserl and the Quest for a Rigorous Science of Philosophy (Cambridge, Mass., 1943). H. Spiegelberg, The Phenomenological Movement: A Historical Introduction (Phaenomenologica, 5–6; The Hague, 1960, with suppl., 1965). J. J. Kockelmans, A First Introduction to Husserl's Phenomenology (Pittsburgh and Louvain, 1967); id., Edmund Husserl's Phenomenological Psychology: A Historico-Critical Study (ibid., 1967), and other works of this author. P. Ricoeur, Husserl: An Analysis of his Phenomenology (Evanston, Ill., 1967; Eng. tr. of a selection of articles). E. Pivčević, Husserl and Phenomenology (1970). T. de Boer, The Development of Husserl's Thought (Phaenomenologica, 76; The Hague, 1978; rev. Eng. tr. of Dutch, orig. pub. 1966). E. Duplacy, La Philosophie de Max Scheler (2 vols., 1959); J. R. Staude, Max Scheler 1874–1928: An Intellectual Portrait (New York and London, 1967). R. Schmitt in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 6 (1967), pp. 135–51, s.v.

Philadelphia. A city of the Roman province of Asia. It was the seat of one of the '*Seven Churches of Asia', addressed in Rev. 2–3, and was there commended for its faithfulness and given promises for the future (3: 7–13). The circumstances in which this Church was founded are unknown. In the 14th cent. the city was a Christian stronghold and withstood several sieges by the Turks.

W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia (1904), pp. 391–412, with notes, p. 446; C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 153–77. W. M. Ramsay in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 830–2, s.v.

Philadelphians. A religious sect which flourished at the end of the 17th cent. Their doctrines derived ultimately from J. *Boehme, whose notions were eagerly adopted by John Pordage (1607–81), rector of Bradfield, Berks. There gathered round Pordage, who was ejected from his living by the *Triers in 1655, but reinstated in 1660, a group of followers who shared his enthusiasm for Boehme, the chief of them being Mrs Jane Leade (1623–1704), who from her childhood had experienced visions which from 1670 she recorded in a diary entitled A Fountain of Gardens. In 1670 the group was organized as the Philadelphian Society for the Advancement of Piety and Divine Philosophy, the term 'Society' being preferred to 'Church' as its members were to retain their respective ecclesiastical allegiances. They professed a kind of nature pantheism, imbued with esoteric and pseudo-mystical teachings, and held that their souls were immediately illuminated by the Holy Spirit. Its headquarters later removed from Bradfield to London. A certain Francis Lee (1661–1719), who had been a Fellow of St John's College, Oxford, but refused the oaths on William III's accession, was much impressed by Mrs Leade's writings, which he had come across in the Netherlands, and, becoming an ardent disciple, was instrumental in spreading Philadelphian doctrines on the Continent. A formal confession of belief was drawn up in 1703; but the Society rapidly declined after Mrs Leade's death in 1704.

A number of Mrs Jane Leade's works were reissued in the 19th cent., incl. The Wars of David and other works, repr. 1816 and 1886; The Revelation of Revelations, repr. 1884, and The Wonders of God's Creation, repr. 1887. N. Thune, The Behmenists and the Philadelphians (Uppsala diss., 1948), pp. 68–216. S. Hutin, Les Disciples anglais de Jacob Boehme aux XVIIᵉ et XVIIIᵉ siècles [1960], pp. 81–123. [E.] G. Rupp, Religion in England 1688–1791 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 214–7. W. T. Whitley in HERE 9 (1917), pp. 836 f., s.v.

Philaret, Theodore Nikitich Romanov (*c.*1553–1633), Patr. of Moscow and father of the first Romanov Tsar. Under his cousin, Theodore I (d. 1598), the last Tsar of the House of Rurik, he fought against the Swedes in 1590, and in 1593–4 conducted negotiations with the Emp. Rudolph II. Banished into a monastery by Boris Godunov (1598–1605), Theodore's successor, he was released by Pseudo-Dimitri I, who made him Metropolitan of Rostov. In 1610 he was imprisoned by the Poles. On their expulsion his son Michael was elected Tsar (1613), but Philaret was not freed until the truce of Deulino in 1619. In the same year he was made patriarch and until his death remained the virtual ruler of Russia, introducing measures to stop the migration of the serfs from the land into the steppes and reorganizing the army. A zealous reformer, he made it his aim to establish a seminary in each diocese and to encourage the study of theology. He also founded the Patriarchal Library.

P. Pascal, Avvakum et les débuts du Raskol: La crise religieuse au XVIIᵉ siècle en Russie (Bibliothèque de l'Institut Français de Léningrad, 18; 1938), esp. pp. 25–30 (repr., with additional material, 1963). J. L. H. Keep, 'The Régime of Filaret, 1619–1633', Slavonic and Eastern European Review, 38 (1959–60), pp. 334–60. G. Vernadsky, The Tsardom of Moscow 1547–1682 (History of Russia, 5, pt. 1; 1969), pp. 307–51 passim. See also bibl. to RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Philaret Drozdov (1782–1867), Russian theologian and Metropolitan of Moscow. Educated at the Trinity Monastery, near Moscow, he became lecturer at its academy in 1803, and in 1808 took the monastic habit. In the same year he was called to the academy at St Petersburg as professor of philosophy, and subsequently taught most branches of theology at the Ecclesiastical Academy. His rise to high office took place very rapidly. In 1818 he became a member of the Holy Synod, in 1820 Bp. of Jaroslav, and in 1821 he was transferred to Moscow with the title of Archbishop, which was changed into that of Metropolitan in 1826. He was an exemplary bishop, famous for his sermons and the wise administration of his diocese as well as for his profound influence in Church and State. He was the author of many theological works, but his best-known writing is his Christian Catechism of the Orthodox Catholic Eastern Greco-Russian Church (1823). It is composed of three parts, dealing with (1) the *Nicene Creed, (2) the *Lord's Prayer and the *Beatitudes, and (3) the *Decalogue. It underwent several redactions through the attempt of the procurator, Protasov, an opponent of the infiltration of *Lutheran teaching into the Russian Church, to eliminate its supposedly Protestant elements which Philaret had imbibed in his youth esp. through the works of T. Prokopovich (1681–1736). Though its doctrinal authority has been contested by other sections of the E. Church, it had a great influence on 19th-cent. Russian theology and has frequently been commented on.

Eng. tr. of his Christian Catechism conveniently repr. from the tr. of R. W. Blackmore in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 2 (1877), pp. 445–542. Fr. tr. of Selected Sermons by A. Serpinet (3 vols., Paris, 1866). C. Kern, 'Philarète, métropolite de Moscou. Cinquante ans de gloire épiscopale', Istina, 5 (1958), pp. 133–60, 261–82, 389–414. M. Rodes, La Mariologia de Filaret Drozdov, Metropolita de Moscú (Milan, 1966). M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1376–95, with bibl. (mainly Russ.). See also bibl. to RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Philaster, St (d. *c.*397), more correctly 'Filaster', Bp. of Brescia and anti-heretical writer. After travel undertaken for the purpose of preaching the Gospel and of confounding the *Arians and other heretics, he became Bp. of Brescia towards the end of the 4th cent. In 381 he took part in the Council of *Aquileia which deposed two Arian bishops. About 385 he wrote a treatise designed to refute 28 Jewish and 128 Christian heresies. This work, which was based largely on the similar compositions of *Irenaeus and *Epiphanius (and possibly also the 'Syntagma' of *Hippolytus), suffers from clumsy arrangement and a certain lack of proportion. Thus, the number of those stigmatized includes not only such notable heretics as *Simon Magus but also persons whose sole aberration was to believe that the stars occupied a fixed place in the sky instead of being set in position every evening by God. Despite its limitations, however, the book seems to have filled a real need in the W., and was freely used by St *Augustine. Philaster was succeeded in his see by St *Gaudentius. Feast day, 18 July.

Liber de Haeresibus first ed. by J. Sichard (Basle, 1528); later edns. by J. A. *Fabricius (Hamburg, 1721), P. Galeardi (Brescia, 1738; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 12. 1111–302), F. Marx (CSEL 38; 1898), and F. Heylen in CCSL 9 (1957), pp. 207–324, with refs. The main source for his life is the 'Sermo de vita et obitu beati Filastrii' by Gaudentius, ed. A. Glueck in CSEL 68 (1936), pp. 184–9. R. A. *Lipsius, Zur Quellenkritik des Epiphanios (1865); id., Die Quellen der ältesten Ketzergeschichte neu untersucht (1875), pp. 91–137. P. C. Juret, 'Étude grammaticale sur le latin de S. Filastrius', Romanische Forschungen, 19 (1906), pp. 130–320. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 481–5. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 130–3. A. Rimoldi in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 1473 f., s.v. 'Filastre'.

Phileas, St (d. 306/7), Bp. of Thmuis in Lower Egypt. Of noble birth and great wealth, he was imprisoned, tried before the prefect, Culcianus, and executed at *Alexandria. A Roman official, Philoromus, suffered at the same time. A letter to his flock from his dungeon is preserved by *Eusebius (HE 8. 10). The acta of his trial are prob. not so much a transcript of the official proceedings as an account based on them by a sympathetic eyewitness. A Latin translation has long been known; recently parts of the Greek text dating from the first half of the 4th cent. have been identified among the *Bodmer and *Chester Beatty Papyri. Feast day, 4 Feb.

Eusebius, HE 8. 9. 7 f. and 10 (with additions in *Rufinus' Lat. version). Latin text of the acta pr. in T. *Ruinart, OSB (ed.), Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera (Paris, 1689), pp. 547–51; crit. text by P. Halkin (see below). The Bodmer Papyrus text of his Apology ed. V. Martin, Papyrus Bodmer XX (Geneva, 1964). Both are conveniently repr., with text of letter from Eusebius, and Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo, SJ, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972), pp. 320–53. The Chester Beatty Papyrus, XV, is ed., with Eng. tr. by A. Pietersma, who also repr. the Bodmer Papyrus and the Lat. version of the Apology (Cahiers d'Orientalisme, 7; 1984). F. Halkin, SJ, 'L'"Apologie" du martyr Philéas de Thmuis (Papyrus Bodmer XX) et les Actes latins de Philéas et Philoromus', Anal. Boll. 81 (1963), pp. 5–27, incl. texts. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Les Martyrs d'Égypte', ibid. 40 (1922), pp. 5–154 and 299–364, esp. pp. 299–314. M. Simonetti, Studi agiografici (1955), pp. 109–32 ('Sugli Atti di Filea e Filoromo').

Philemon. The recipient of St *Paul's brief epistle of that name. He was a Christian of Colossae or the neighbourhood, whose slave, *Onesimus, had run away and somehow come to meet Paul, either in *Rome, or perhaps in *Ephesus. Paul sent Onesimus, now a Christian and therefore a 'beloved brother', back to his master with this epistle, which is a tactful plea for his forgiveness. Many of the personal references correspond closely with those in Col. 4: 9–14, suggesting that the Epistle to the *Colossians is also authentic. The two letters would have been written and sent together. Acc. to tradition, Philemon and his wife, Apphia, were martyred at Colossae. Feast day, 22 Nov.

Modern comm. on the Ep. incl. those of J. B. *Lightfoot (London, 1875, with Col., pp. 369–412), C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge, 1957, with Col., pp. 1–42 and 140–9), E. Lohse (KEK 9, Heft 2, 14th edn., 1968, with Col., pp. 261–88; Eng. tr., Hermeneia, Philadelphia, 1971, pp. 185–208), J. H. Houlden (Pelican NT Comm. 1970, with Phil., Col., and Eph., pp. 223–32), R. P. Martin (New Cent. Bib., 1974, with Col., pp. 143–70), P. Stuhlmacher (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament [18]; Zurich and Neukirchen, 1975), G. B. Caird (New Clar. Bibl., 1976, with Eph., Phil., and Col., pp. 213–23), P. T. O'Brien (Word Biblical Comm. 44; Waco, Tex., 1982, with Col., pp. 263–308), and F. F. Bruce (New International Comm. on the NT, Grand Rapids [1984], with Col. and Eph., pp. 189–225). J. Knox, Philemon among the Letters of Paul: A New View of its Place and Importance (Chicago, 1935; 2nd edn., 1959; London, 1960). N. R. Petersen, Recovering Paul: Philemon and the Sociology of Paul's Narrative World (Philadelphia [1985]). G. S. Duncan, St Paul's Ephesian Ministry (1929), pp. 72–5. P. Benoit, OP, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 1204–11, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Philibert, St (d. 684), founder and first abbot of *Jumièges. Under the influence of St *Ouen he took the monastic habit at Rebais, of which he became abbot. Led by the refractory character of his monks to retire to Neustria, he here founded the monastery of Jumièges on some land given him by Clovis II. In 674 his reproval of Ebroin, the mayor of the palace, for gross injustice was followed by his expulsion, and he retired first to Poitiers and later to the island of Her (now Noirmoutier, orig. 'Hermonasterium'), where he established another monastery. Feast day, 20 August.

The principal source is the 8th-cent. Life by an anonymous monk, pr. in AASS, Aug. 4 (1739), pp. 75–81; also ed. R. Poupardin, Monuments de l'histoire des abbayes de Saint-Philibert (Collection de textes pour servir à l'étude et à l'enseignement de l'histoire, 38; 1905), pp. 3–18; also ed. W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 5 (1910), pp. 583–604, with discussion, pp. 568–83. The 9th-cent. 'Translationes et Miracula' by Ermentarius of Noirmoutier is pr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 81–95, and in R. Pouardin, op. cit., pp. 19–70. P. Antin, OSB, 'La critique de la Vita de saint Philibert', in Jumièges: Congrès Scientifique du XIII^e Centenaire, 1 (Rouen, 1955), pp. 15–22. Modern Life by L. Jaud (Paris, 1910). P. Rouillard and C. Colafranceschi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (1964), cols. 702–5, s.v. 'Filiberto', with bibl. See also bibl. to JUMIÈGES.

Philip, Gospel of. A *Gnostic treatise preserved in *Coptic among the papyri found at *Nag Hammadi in 1945–6. It is a series of reflections on the quest for salvation, loosely linked by catch-phrases; it contains no narrative, and only a few incidents and sayings attributed to Christ. It shows marked Jewish influence, but also traces of Greek philosophy, and reflects *Valentinian doctrine in its references to the 'bridal chamber'. It dates from the 2nd, or perhaps the 3rd cent.; it is generally regarded as unconnected with the Gospel of Philip quoted by Epiphanius (Haer. 26. 13), but H.-M. Schenke has argued for their identity.

Edns. of the Coptic, with Fr. tr. and comm., by J.-E. Ménard (Paris, 1967), and, with Eng. tr. by W. W. Isenberg, in B. Layton

(ed.), Nag Hammadi Codex II, 2-7 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 20; Leiden, 1989), pp. 131–215; Eng. tr. also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn.; Leiden, 1988), pp. 139–60. Eng. tr., with introd. and comm., by R. McL. Wilson (London, 1962). Sp. tr., with useful introd. and bibl., in A. de Santos Otero, Los Evangelios Apócrifos (6th edn.; 1988), pp. 706–47. H.-M. Schenke in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 148–73; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 179–208. D. M. Scholer, Nag Hammadi Bibliography 1948–1969 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 1; Leiden, 1971), pp. 165–71, with annual suppl. in Novum Testamentum.

Philip (1504–67), Landgraf of Hesse. He was the ablest of the German princes who supported M. *Luther. Declared of age in 1518, he led the suppression of the *Peasants' War (1525) and, though there seems to have been no popular sympathy for it, determined to introduce the Reformation into Hesse. In 1527 he founded the University of *Marburg as a school for Protestant theologians. Two years later he signed the Protest of *Speyer and summoned the Conference of Marburg, which failed, however, to bring about an understanding between M. Luther and U. *Zwingli on the subject of the Real Presence in the Eucharist. Philip's policy of uniting the Protestant princes was more successful. In 1530 the *Schmalkaldic League was founded with himself and the Elector of Saxony as leaders, but the dissension between the two Protestant parties largely hampered its striking power. This, as well as the whole cause of Protestantism, was further impaired by Philip's bigamous marriage (1540), which had been approved by Luther. Seriously compromised among his own followers, Philip now made peace with the Emperor and thereby lost his leadership of the Protestant party. His policy during the next years was wavering, resulting in the Schmalkalden War (1546–7), at the end of which he was imprisoned. Set free in 1552, he devoted his remaining years to the work of reunion between Catholics and Protestants.

Philip of Hesse figures prominently in all works on the *Lutheran Reformation. Festschrift zum Gedächtnis Philipps des Grossmütigen ed. Verein für hessische Geschichte und Landeskunde (Cassel, 1904). W. W. Rockwell, Die Doppelehe des Landgrafen Philipp von Hessen (1904). H. Grundmann, Landgraf Philipp von Hessen auf dem Augsburger Reichstag 1530 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, no. 176; 1959). R. Hauswirth, Landgraf Philipp von Hessen und Zwingli (Schriften zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, 35; 1968). Brief sketch (in Eng.) by H. J. Hillerbrand (Reformation Essays and Studies, 1; St Louis, 1967); also later assessment by id. (in Ger.) in M. Greschat (ed.), Die Reformationszeit, 2 (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 6; Stuttgart, 1981), pp. 185–96. T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 296–316, with bibl.

Philip II (1527–98), of Spain. On the abdication of *Charles V in 1556 Philip inherited a composite monarchy which included all the Spanish kingdoms, Naples, Sicily and Milan, the Netherlands, and the Spanish empire in America and the Philippines. From 1554 to 1558, as husband of *Mary (Tudor) he was also titular king of England, though never crowned. After 1559 he stayed in Spain and ruled most of his dominions through viceroys and governors (where possible members of his family), maintaining his own influence through regular correspondence and through the control of local patronage. At first his polices were largely defensive: against France in W. Europe and Italy, against the Turks in the Mediterranean, and against the enemies of the Catholic religion in all his dominions. By 1559 France, and its ally, Pope *Paul IV, were defeated, and from then onwards Philip helped to keep France paralysed by judicious intervention in its civil wars. Against the Turks he never launched a major offensive, in spite of the great naval victory of *Lepanto (1571). In Spain itself the *Inquisition was no longer mainly concerned with heresy (never very widespread) nor with converted Jews but rather with enforcing orthodox religious teaching and sexual morality on all Spaniards. In the Netherlands Philip's religious policies and disregard of local laws led to civil wars and foreign intervention. From *c.*1580 his policies became more aggressive and were financed by increasing imports of American silver and foreign loans. He conquered *Portugal (1580), reconquered the southern Netherlands (modern Belgium), organized the abortive *Armada against England (1588), and sent his armies into France, even claiming the French Crown for his daughter. When the Papacy proved unwilling to accept his identification of the good of Catholicism with the greatness of Spain, he used his ecclesiastical patronage to make three successive conclaves elect pro-Spanish Popes (1590–2); in 1592, however, the cardinals chose a more independent candidate as *Clement VIII. While Philip failed in his most ambitious aims, he successfully defended his many dominions (except for a few Netherlands provinces which he hoped would be reconquered), maintained his subjects' religion, neutralized the Turks, and had some part in forcing *Henry IV of France to renounce his Protestant faith. But the cost had been high: the squandering of American treasure, the overburdening of the Spanish economy, and the confirmation of an imperialist and military tradition which was to lead Spain to military and political disaster in the 17th cent. Personally, Philip was intelligent, hard-working, reserved, suspicious, and vengeful. The monastery-palace of El Escorial, with its austere façades and brilliant interior decoration, presents an idealized expression of his personality.

Much of his correspondence has been pub. in the Colección de documentos inéditos para la historia de España, esp. vols. 2–6, 27–43, 50 f., 68, and 87–102 (Madrid, 1843–92), passim (incl. the Correspondencia de Felipe II con sus embajadores en la corte de Inglaterra 1558 á 1584 as vols. 87 and 89–92; 1886–8) and in [L. P.] Gachard, Correspondance de Philippe II sur les affaires des Pays-Bas (5 vols., 1848–79 + index, 1936), cont. by J. Lefèvre (4 vols., 1940–60). R. B. Merriman, The Rise of the Spanish Empire in the Old World and the New, 4: Philip the Prudent (New York, 1934). P. Pierson, Philip II of Spain [1975]; G. Parker, Philip II (1979). F. [P.] Braudel, La Méditerranée et le monde méditerranéen à l'époque de Philippe II (1949; 2nd edn., 2 vols., 1966; Eng. tr., 1972–3; abridged edn., 1992). H. [G.] Koenigsberger, The Government of Sicily under Philip II of Spain (1951); id., The Habsburgs and Europe 1516–1660 (1971), pp. 63–217 passim; id., 'The Statecraft of Philip II', European Studies Review, 1 (1971), pp. 1–21; repr. with minor changes, in id., Politicians and Virtuosi (1986), pp. 77–96; see also other papers in this vol. J. H. Elliott, Imperial Spain, 1469–1716 (1963), esp. pp. 200–295; J. Lynch, Spain under the Habsburgs, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 167–348 (2nd edn., 1981, pp. 177–367), passim; I. A. A. Thompson, War and Government in Habsburg Spain 1560–1620 (1976), passim. M. J. Rodríguez-Salgada, The Changing Face of Empire: Charles V, Philip II and Habsburg Authority, 1551–1559 (Cambridge Studies in Early Modern History, 1988). C. Martin and G. Parker, The Spanish Armada (1988).

Philip the Arabian, Roman Emperor from 244 to 249, when he was killed in battle with *Decius. In 248 he celebrated the millennium of Rome's foundation with great magnificence and the customary religious ceremonies. This fact, and his coins, tell against the tradition that he was a Christian. This tradition is reported by *Eusebius (HE 6. 34), who gives an edifying story of his submission to a bishop (later identified with *Babylas of Antioch) who debarred him from church until he had made confession of his sins. That *Origen wrote a letter to him and one to his wife (ibid. 36) may suggest that they were thought to have an interest in religious questions. In any case Philip seems to have tolerated Christianity.

W. Ensslin in C. Anc. H. 12 (1939), pp. 87–95. E. Stein in PW 10 (pt. 1; 1917), cols. 755–70, s.v. 'Julius (Philippus) 386'.

Philip Neri, St (1515–95), the 'Apostle of Rome'. Son of a Florentine notary, he was educated by the *Dominicans of San Marco and later became a business apprentice. Resolving to give himself entirely to God, he went to Rome in 1533. Here he undertook the education of the two sons of a Florentine countryman, leading at the same time a very austere life. In 1535 he began to study philosophy and theology, but after three years sold his books and gave himself up to works of charity and instruction, spending the nights in prayer, mostly in the *catacomb of San Sebastiano on the *Appian Way. Here he experienced in 1544 the ecstasy which is believed to have miraculously enlarged his heart. In 1548 he became the co-founder of the Confraternity of the Most Holy Trinity for the care of pilgrims and convalescents which, in the year of the *Jubilee, 1575, assisted 145,000 pilgrims. In 1551, after being ordained, he went to live in a community of priests at San Girolamo, where his confessional soon became the centre of his apostolate and where he held spiritual conferences for men and boys often combined with visits to the Seven Churches. From these activities, which attracted more and more priests to the community, sprang the Congregation of the Oratory (see ORATORIANS), probably so called from the room at San Girolamo where the meetings were held. By 1575, when the Oratory was finally approved by *Gregory XIII, Philip Neri had become the most popular figure in Rome. His advice and direction were sought by Popes and cardinals no less than by the common people, and in 1593 he prevented a serious conflict between France and the Holy See by insisting on the absolution of *Henry IV. His chief characteristics were his gentleness and gaiety. Venerated as a saint during his lifetime, he was canonized by Gregory XV in 1622. Feast day, 26 May.

Il primo processo per San Filippo Neri, ed. G. Incisa della Rocchetta and N. Vian, with the collaboration of C. Gasbarri (ST 191, 196, 205, 224; 1957–63). The Canonization Process supplied the main material for the first and fundamental Life, written in Lat., by A. Gallonio, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1600; repr. in AASS, Mai. 6 (1688), pp. 463–524). An Ital. tr., said to be clearer and more complete, pub. Rome, 1601. Other early Lives by P. J. Bacci, Cong. Orat. (Rome, 1622; ed. G. F. Ricci, 1678; Eng. tr., Paris, 1659; Eng. tr. of edn. of 1837 by F. W. *Faber (Saints and Servants of God, 2 vols., 1847); new edn. of Eng. tr. by F. I. Antrobus, Cong. Orat. (2 vols., 1902)), G. Crispino (Naples, 1675; Eng. tr. of last part by F. W. Faber, 1850) and J. Bernabei, Cong. Orat., pr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 524–649. The most important modern works are those by L. Poncelle and L. Bordet (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1932) and A. Cistellini (3 vols., Brescia, 1989). More popular accounts incl. [L.] M. Trevor, Apostle of Rome: A Life of Philip Neri 1515–1595 (1966), with bibl., and P. Türks, Cong. Orat., Philipp Neri oder das Feuer der Freude (1986). Study by D. Fenlon (in preparation). C. Gasbarri, Cong. Orat., in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (Rome, 1964), cols. 760–99, s.v. 'Filippo Neri'. See also bibl. to ORATORIANS (1).

Philip Sidetes (early 5th cent.), historian. A native of Side, in Pamphylia, early in the 5th cent. he removed to *Constantinople, where he became the friend of St *Chrysostom, who ordained him deacon. After having become a priest he was three times an unsuccessful candidate for the patriarchate. He wrote a voluminous historical work, Χριστιανικὴ Ἱστορία, in 36 books which, to judge by *Socrates, appears to have been a hotch-potch of miscellaneous learning and to have dealt with the whole period from the creation of the world until AD 430. Only small fragments of this work remain, including the much-discussed assertion that *Papias had stated that *John the Apostle and his brother, *James, were martyred by the Jews. A defence of Christianity against *Julian the Apostate, mentioned by Socrates, seems to be wholly lost.

The frag. on the Alexandrian *Catechetical School was pub. by H. *Dodwell in his Dissertationes in Irenaeum (Oxford, 1689), p. 488; on this cf. C. de Boor, 'Zur Kenntnis der Handschriften der griechischen Kirchenhistoriker. Codex Baroccianus 142', ZKT 6 (1884), pp. 478–94, esp. p. 487 (variant readings). Id., Neue Fragmente des Papias, Hegesippus und Pierius . . . aus der Kirchengeschichte des Philippus Sidetes (TU 5, Heft 2; 1888), pp. 165–84. E. Bratke, Das sogenannte Religionsgespräch am Hof der Sasaniden (ibid. 19, Heft 3; 1899), esp. pp. 157–64. E. Honigmann, Patristic Studies (ST 173; 1953), pp. 82–91 ('Philippus of Side and his "Christian History" (written about 434–439)'). CPG 3 (1979), p. 165 (no. 6026). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 528–30. [H. G.] Opitz in PW 19 (pt. 2; 1938), cols. 2350 f., s.v. 'Philippos 41'.

Philip, John (1771–1851), missionary and reformer in *South Africa. Born of weaving stock in Kirkcaldy, Fife, he underwent a conversion experience during a revival led by the *Congregationalists Robert and James Haldane. He entered the Congregational ministry and in 1804 became minister of Belmont Church in Aberdeen. A warm supporter of the *LMS, in 1819 he was sent by the Society to S. Africa on a commission of inquiry; he remained as Director of the Society resident in S. Africa.

Philip belonged to that wing of the evangelical movement which held that the transformation of society was, with individual conversion, the aim of evangelism, and he became for the rest of his life a passionate defender of native rights. He was especially concerned over the treatment of the Khoi or 'Hottentot' population and his campaign on their behalf prepared the ground for the 1828 Ordinance 50 which extended civil rights to all races. He defended the Xhosa people against those who wished to remove them from their lands, and tried to persuade the imperial authorities to protect the tribes to the north against the incursions of the Great Trek. He was responsible for bringing the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society to the Sotho people and the American Board of Missionaries to the Zulus.

Study by A. [C.] Ross (Aberdeen, 1986). W. M. MacMillan, The Cape Colour Question: A Historical Survey (1927), passim; id., Bantu, Boer and Briton: The Making of the South African Native Problem (1929; rev. edn., Oxford, 1963), passim.

Philips in the New Testament. (1) St Philip the Apostle. Mentioned in the Synoptic Gospels and in Acts 1: 13 as one of the Twelve, but Jn. alone supplies any details. Jn. 1: 43–51, where he is described as 'from *Bethsaida', relates how he obeyed the call of Jesus and then persuaded *Nathanael to appear before Jesus. In Jn. 6: 5–7 Philip, present at the feeding of the 5,000, observes that 200 pennyworth of bread would not provide even a scanty meal for those assembled. Philip is again referred to in Jn. 12: 21 f., and Jn. 14: 8 f. records his request to Jesus, 'Show us the Father', and its answer. The Apostle's subsequent career is obscure. *Polycrates of Ephesus connects him with Asia and declares that he died, apparently from natural causes, at Hierapolis; but other traditions describe him as having suffered crucifixion so that, in medieval art, his symbol—when not loaves, as suggested by Jn. 6—is a tall cross. He was confused with Philip the Evangelist, certainly by the time of *Eusebius. Feast day in the E., 14 Nov.; in the W. (jointly with St *James the Less), 1 May, transferred in the RC Church to 11 May in 1955 and to 3 May in 1969.

(2) Philip the Evangelist. One of the 'seven men of honest report' whose appointment for the service of the poor and distribution of alms is recorded in Acts 6: 1–6 (later regarded as *deacons). According to Acts 8: 5–13, he preached in Samaria and was successful in winning over the Samaritans from belief in the sorceries of *Simon Magus to Christianity. After the conversion and baptism of the Ethiopian eunuch Philip went on a missionary tour from Ashdod northwards and settled at Caesarea (Acts 8: 26–40). Here at a later date he entertained St *Paul (Acts 21: 8). Uncertainty shrouds the latter years of Philip. One tradition makes him Bp. of Tralles, in Lydia. Feast day in E., 11 Oct.; in W., 6 June.

(3) Philip the Tetrarch. One of the sons of *Herod the Great, he was ruler from 4 BC to AD 33 or 34 of 'the region of Ituraea and Trachonitis' (Lk. 3: 1). Acc. to *Josephus (Antiq. 18. 4. 6), he ruled with moderation, simplicity and good sense.

Philippians, Epistle to the. One of the so-called '*Captivity Epistles' of St *Paul, the authenticity of which is solidly attested by antiquity and almost unanimously accepted by modern scholars. It is addressed to the Christian community at Philippi in Macedonia, the first of the Churches founded by Paul in Europe, to which he was united by ties of particular affection and tenderness. According to the Apostle's own account (2: 25 and 4: 18), the Philippian Epaphroditus had come with presents from the community to relieve his needs during his imprisonment. This is generally held to refer to his captivity in *Rome, and the references to the Praetorian guard and to the members of Caesar's household would seem to favour this traditional opinion; but they would not be out of place in provincial capitals, and arguments can be maintained in favour of an origin in *Ephesus (so many, e.g. G. S. Duncan) or *Caesarea (so by E. Lohmeyer and e.g. W. G. Kümmel). Its date has also been a matter of discussion. Some, e.g. J. B. *Lightfoot, assign it to the beginning of his captivity, and there are similarities with Gal., 2 Cor., and Rom. which favour a date not long after these Epistles were written. On the other hand, a date at the end of his process of appeal would fit the internal indications that the Apostle has had a considerable period of time in prison, and that the issue of his trial is soon to be resolved. The unity of the Epistle has been contested, e.g. by A. F. *Loisy, because of the sudden attack on certain persons in 3: 1b ff.; the apparent break has been explained by others as due to the informal character of the letter (which follows the successive emotions of the writer) or on other grounds. The persons attacked have been variously identified as Jews or Christian Judaizers; they may be the same as those denounced in 1: 15 f. or 3: 18 ff., or there may be more than one group. It has also been argued that Paul's expression of thanks to the Philippians for a recent gift reads awkwardly in its present place (4: 11–18) and may be interpolated from an earlier letter.

After thanking the Philippians for their partnership (1: 1–11), Paul tells them of the success of his preaching in his captivity (1: 12–18) and asks them to make his joy perfect by charity, self-denial, and humility, of which Christ is the sublime example (1: 19–2: 11). He, too, wishes to give them joy and therefore promises to send them *Timothy and Epaphroditus (2: 12–30). After various warnings he again exhorts them to lead a blameless life of peace and concord (3: 1–4: 7) and ends with a doxology and salutations (4: 8–23).

The Epistle contains in 2: 5–11 a Christological passage of great importance. These verses present Christ, who 'being in the form of God' was 'found in fashion as a man' and 'humbled Himself' and was consequently exalted by God, as the sublime example of humility. In the traditional interpretation the 'humbling' consisted in the incarnation of the Son of God; but many modern scholars refer it to Christ's human obedience and see the passage as a strong contrast with *Adam, who snatched at equality with God (Gen. 3). The commentators discuss varying interpretations of a number of words, e.g. 'being' (ὑπάρχων), 'form' (μορφή), and esp. ἁρπαγμός ('robbery', AV; 'prey', RV; 'a thing to be grasped', RSV) in verse 6, and ἑαυτὸν ἐκένωσεν ('emptied himself') in verse 7. From the time of Lohmeyer it has commonly been held that the verses originally existed as a hymn, and that Paul has incorporated them with some changes. See also KENOTIC THEORIES.

Modern comm. incl. those of J. B. Lightfoot (London, 1868), E. Lohmeyer (KEK 9, Heft 1, 8th edn.; 1928), K. *Barth (Munich, 1928; 2nd edn., 1947; Eng. tr., 1962), F. W. Beare (Black's NT Comm., 1959; 2nd edn., 1969), J. Gnilka (Herders theologischer Kommentar zum neuen Testament, 10, fasc. 3; Freiburg, 1968), J.-F. Collange (Commentaire du Nouveau Testament, 10 A [1973]; Eng. tr., 1979), R. P. Martin (New Cent. Bib., 1976), G. B. Caird (New Clar. Bib., RV, on Eph., Phil., Col., and Philem., 1976, pp. 95–154), and G. F. Hawthorne (Word Biblical Comm. 43; Waco, Tex. [1983]). R. P. Martin, Carmen Christi: Philippians ii. 5–11 in Recent Interpretation and in the Setting of Early Christian Worship (Society of New Testament Studies Monograph, 4; Cambridge, 1967). Kümmel, pp. 320–335. J. T. Fitzgerald in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 318–27, with extensive bibl.

Philippines, Christianity in the. Christianity was introduced into the Philippines with the Spanish conquest and occupation of the archipelago which began in the 16th cent. The first Baptisms were conducted on the island of Cebu in 1521 by RC priests accompanying the explorer Ferdinand Magellan. From the beginning of Spanish rule in 1565 until the end of the 19th cent., the RC Church was supported and largely controlled by the Spanish Crown. The first episcopal see was founded at Manila in 1579. Missionary work among the Filipino people was undertaken by religious orders from Spain and Mexico. The *Augustinian friars arrived in 1565, and were later joined by *Franciscans, *Dominicans, *Jesuits, and Augustinian Recollects. The orders founded schools and universities, including the Dominican University of St Thomas in Manila (1611). They accumulated great wealth, esp. in land. By the end of the 18th cent. the majority of the population of the Philippines had been baptized, but indigenous secular priests held an inferior position. The first Filipino bishop was appointed in 1905. In the nationalist movement of the 1890s the resentment of many Filipinos against the continued domination of the RC Church by Spanish clergy and the wealth of the friars led to the emergence of a national Church, independent of Rome. The Philippine Independent Church, led by Gregorio Aglipay and I. de los Reyes, was founded in 1902. Initially it had wide popular support, but its membership rapidly dwindled and now comprises 5 per cent of the population. Since the Second World War it has established close links with the *Episcopal Church in the USA, and in 1961 the two Churches entered into full communion.

With the cession of the Philippines to the United States in 1898, and the resulting separation of Church and State, the way was opened for Protestant missionary activity. Between 1899 and 1901 American *Methodists, *Presbyterians, United Brethren, *Baptists, and Episcopalians began work in different parts of the Philippines. Because of continued schisms and the arrival of many new religious bodies, Protestantism in the Philippines became very fragmented. The *ecumenical movement found expression in a merger of several denominations to form the United Church of Christ in the Philippines (1948) and the foundation of the National Council of Churches of the Philippines (1963), but some 80 per cent of Evangelical Protestants belong to the large number of sects not affiliated to the National Council.

The Philippines, an independent republic since 1946, has the largest Christian population in Asia (49 million in 1980). More than 80 per cent of Filipinos are RCs and the RC Church has an influential role in national political life. It has over 60 dioceses, but an acute shortage of priests. As in Latin America, there is a sharp division between those in the Church who are influenced by *Liberation Theology and conservatives.

P. G. Gowing, Islands under the Cross: The Story of the Church in the Philippines (Manila, 1967); G. H. Anderson (ed.), Studies in Philippine Church History (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1969). M. A. Bernad, SJ, The Christianization of the Philippines: Problems and Perspectives (Manila, 1972). H. de la Costa, SJ, The Jesuits in the Philippines 1581–1768 (Cambridge, Mass., 1961). P. S. de Achútegui, SJ, and M. A. Bernad, SJ, Religious Revolution in the Philippines: The Life and Church of Gregorio Aglipay 1860–1960 (4 vols., Manila, 1960–72), incl. 2 vols. of docs. P. T. Giordano, Awakening to Mission: The Philippine Catholic Church, 1965–1981 (Quezon City, 1988). R. L. Deats, Nationalism and Christianity in the Philippines (Dallas [1967]). R. C. Asedillo and B. D. Williams (eds.), Rice in the Storm: Faith in Struggle in the Philippines (New York, 1989). K. J. Clymer, Protestant Missionaries in the Philippines, 1898–1916: An Inquiry into the American Colonial Mentality (Urbana, Ill. [1986]). H. de la Costa, SJ, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 280–4, s.v.

Philippists. The followers of the *Lutheran theologian, Philip *Melanchthon ('Dr Philippus'), also known as '*Crypto-Calvinists' and '*Synergists' (qq.v.).

Philip's Lent, St. A name in use in the E. Church for the period from 15 Nov. to 24 Dec., i.e. the counterpart of *Advent in the W. Church. It is so named because it begins on the day following the Feast of St Philip (14 Nov. in the E.).

Phillimore, Robert Joseph (1810–85), English judge. Educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, he became a prominent Anglican *High Churchman, numbering among his friends W. E. *Gladstone, G. A. *Denison, and H. P. *Liddon. In 1841 he was called to the bar at the Middle Temple. He held a succession of ecclesiastical appointments and in 1867 became *Dean of the Arches. In 1868, in the case against A. H. *Mackonochie, in which he had first appeared as defending counsel, he delivered judgement declaring the legality of altar lights and of kneeling during the prayer of consecration. The Judicature Act of 1875 caused him to resign his ecclesiastical judgeship. Deeply learned, he was the author of several legal writings, and his Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (2 vols., 1873; 2nd edn., 1895) long remained a standard treatise. His other writings include Thoughts on the Law of Divorce in England (1844) and Commentaries upon International Law (4 vols., 1854–61).

His son, W. G. F. Phillimore (High Court Judge, 1897–1913, and Lord Justice of Appeal, 1913–16), also appeared as counsel in many ritual cases.

R. J. Phillimore himself published a collection of The Principal Ecclesiastical Judgements delivered in the Court of Arches, 1867 to 1875 [by himself] (1876). W. P. W. and W. G. F. Phillimore, Genealogy of the Family of Phillimore (Devizes, 1922), pp. 240–52. J. A. Hamilton in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 186–8; G. Crosse in DECH, p. 458.

On W. G. F. Phillimore, John, Baron Sankey, in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 677 f.

Phillipps, Ambrose Lisle. See DE LISLE, AMBROSE LISLE MARCH PHILLIPPS.

Phillipps Manuscripts. The famous collection of MSS assembled at Cheltenham in the 19th cent. by the antiquary, Sir Thomas Phillipps (1792–1872). Phillipps, who had been educated at Rugby and University College, Oxford, began his collection by purchasing the bulk of the Meerman Collection at The Hague in 1824. Later acquisitions included the 9th-cent. MSS of Professor van Ess of Darmstadt, the Muschenbroek Collection of Chronicles and other documents on Dutch history, the Williams Collection (incl. Bp. Gundulf's Bible), the Knaresborough MSS on Mexico, many MSS on the history of Wales and of Ireland, as well as some Gk. MSS (incl. an illuminated 10th–11th cent. Dioscorides). His library was orig. located at Middle Hill, near Broadway, Worcs, whence Phillipps transferred it to Thirlestane House, Cheltenham, in 1862.

The collection passed at his death into the hands of his younger daughter, Mrs Fenwick. The MSS have since been gradually sold, the greater part of the Meerman Collection being now in the Staatsbibliothek at Berlin. See also MOMMSEN CATALOGUE.

Phillipps, who had installed a printing press at Middle Hill, pr. his own catalogue in fol., successive sections appearing as the collection grew: Catalogus Librorum Manuscriptorum in Bibliotheca D. Thomae Phillipps (1824–[1867]). A. N. L. Munby, Phillipps Studies (5 vols., 1951–60).

Phillpotts, Henry (1778–1869), Bp. of *Exeter. He was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and in 1795 elected a Fellow of Magdalen. From 1805 to 1826 he held a number of benefices in the diocese of *Durham. In 1828 he was appointed Dean of *Chester, and in 1830 Bp. of Exeter. An old-fashioned *High Churchman, he was sympathetic to the *Oxford Movement, although he disapproved of the more extreme activities of some of its adherents. He greatly desired to raise the standard of public worship and in 1844 ordered the surplice to be worn at all ministrations in his diocese, though the order raised so fierce a storm that it had to be withdrawn. His refusal to institute G. C. *Gorham (q.v.), who had been presented to the living of Brampford Speke, on the grounds of his denial of baptismal regeneration, gave rise to one of the most famous ecclesiastical lawsuits in the 19th cent. When the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that Gorham should be instituted and J. B. *Sumner, Abp. of Canterbury, directed that this should be done, Phillpotts declared that he would 'renounce and repudiate communion' with anyone instituting Gorham. He none the less remained in office. He was a champion of the revival of *religious orders in the Anglican Church and aided the efforts of E. B. *Pusey for the sisterhood at Devonport founded by Miss P. L. *Sellon.

A Life was begun by R. N. Shutte (vol. 1 only, London, 1863 [to 1832]; publication was suspended on an injunction granted to Phillpotts). Brief sketch by E. C. S. Gibson in W. E. Collins (ed.), Typical English Churchmen (1902), pp. 299–323. Full Life by G. C. B. Davies (CHS, 1954), with bibl. J. C. S. Nias, Gorham and the Bishop of Exeter (ibid., 1951). J. A. Hamilton in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 222–5.

Philo (*c.*20 BC–c. AD 50), Jewish thinker and exegete. He belonged to a prosperous priestly family of *Alexandria; but nothing is known of his life except that in 39 he took part in an embassy to *Rome, described in his Legatio ad Caium, to plead the religious rights of the Jews with Emp. Caligula. He was the most important figure among the Hellenistic Jews of his age and a fertile author. His numerous writings include: (1) Philosophical works, written in his youth, among them De Aeternitate Mundi, Quod omnis probus liber sit, and De Providentia; (2) Exegetical writings on the *Pentateuch, incl. Quaestiones et Solutiones in Genesim et Exodum and Legum Allegoriae; and (3) Historical and apologetic writings, incl. De Vita Mosis, De Vita Contemplativa (on the *Therapeutae, q.v.), and Contra Flaccum (against Flaccus, Procurator of Egypt, AD 32–8).

In his religious outlook Philo was essentially an eclectic. He reproduced a variety of doctrines, gathered from contemporary philosophical systems as well as from Jewish sources, without welding them into an harmonious whole. His most influential achievement was his development of the allegorical interpretation of Scripture which enabled him to discover much of Greek philosophy in the OT, and to combine the respect of his religion for the Pentateuchal law with his personal aspirations towards a more spiritual interpretation of it. In his theological ideas also, Greek and Jewish elements were interwoven. On the one hand he emphasized the complete transcendence of God, whom he asserted to be above virtue, above knowledge, and even above the Good, while on the other he maintained that God was the Father who governed the world as well as each individual soul by His Providence. He accorded a central place in his system to the *Logos, who was at once the creative power which orders the world and the intermediary through whom men know God. It was the Logos who spoke to *Moses in the burning bush, and who is represented in the OT under the figure of the *high priest. Many of Philo's ideas were taken up in the Christian mystical tradition, but whether he himself should be regarded as a mystic is much disputed.

Philo's influence was esp. strong in the *Alexandrian school of theology. *Clement and *Origen used him freely, and through them and later through St *Ambrose and other Latin Fathers his allegorical interpretation of Scripture became an accepted form of biblical exegesis in the Christian Church. His influence on the Logos doctrine of the Fourth Gospel and of the Apologists, notably St *Justin, has often been alleged, but in recent times the differences between the Christian and the Philonic conceptions have been very widely admitted.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Paris, 1522; much improved edn., with Lat. tr., by T. Mangey (2 vols., London, 1742); crit. edn. by L. Cohn, P. Wendland, and S. Reiter (6 vols., Berlin, 1896–1915; index by I. Leisegang, 2 pts., 1926–30); also ed. R. Arnaldez, J. Pouilloux, and C. Mondésert, SJ (Paris, 1961 ff.). Eng. tr. by F. H. Colson, G. H. Whitaker, and R. Marcus (Loeb, 10 vols. + 2 suppl. vols., 1929–62). De Vita Contemplativa also ed., with full notes, by F. C. *Conybeare (Oxford, 1895). G. Mayer, Index Philoneus (Berlin and New York, 1974).

J. *Drummond, Philo Judaeus (2 vols., 1888); E. R. Goodenough, An Introduction to Philo Judaeus (New Haven, Conn., 1940; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1962); M. Pohlenz, 'Philon von Alexandreia', Nachr. (Gött.), 1942, pp. 409–87; H. A. Wolfson, Philo: Foundations of Religious Philosophy in Judaism, Christianity and Islam (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1947); J. *Daniélou, SJ, Philon d'Alexandrie (1958); R. Arnaldez and others, Philon d'Alexandrie: Colloques nationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, Lyon, 11–15 septembre 1966 (1967). S. Sandmel, Philo of Alexandria: An Introduction (New York and Oxford, 1979). R. Williamson, Jews in the Hellenistic World: Philo (Cambridge, 1989). E. Bréhier, Les Idées philosophiques et religieuses de Philon d'Alexandrie (Paris thesis, 1907; 2nd edn., Études de Philosophie médiévale, 8; 1925). I. Heinemann, Philos griechische und jüdische Bildung (1932). R. Radice, Platonismo e Creazionismo in Filone di Alessandria (Metafisica del Platonismo nel suo Sviluppo Storico nella filosofia patristica, 7; Milan, 1989). E. R. Goodenough, The Politics of Philo Judaeus (New Haven, Conn., 1938), with general bibl. of Philo by H. L. Goodhart and E. R. Goodenough, pp. 127–321. W. Völker, Fortschritt und Vollendung bei Philo von Alexandrien (TU 49; 1938). D. T. Runia, Philo of Alexandria and the Timaeus of Plato (Philosophia Antiqua, 44; Leiden, 1986). E. Stein, Die allegorische Exegese des Philo aus Alexandreia (Beiheft zur ZATW 51; 1929); id., Philo und der Midrasch (ibid. 57; 1931). P. Katz, Philo's Bible: The Aberrant Text of Bible Quotations in some Philonic Writings and its Place in the Textual Tradition of the Greek Bible (1950). J.

Cazeaux, La Trame et la Chaîne, ou les Structures littéraires et l'Exégèse dans cinq des Traités de Philon d'Alexandrie (Arbeiten zur Literatur und Geschichte des hellenistischen Judentums, 15; Leiden, 1983); T. H. Tobin, SJ, The Creation of Man: Philo and the History of Interpretation (Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series, 14; Washington, DC, 1983). S. Sandmel, Philo's Place in Judaism (Cincinnati, 1956). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 809–89. W. Haase (ed.), Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, 2. 21 (pt. 1; 1984), with 'Bibliographia Philoniana 1935–1981' by E. Hilgert, pp. 47–97. R. Radice and D. T. Runia, Philo of Alexandria: An Annotated Bibliography, 1937–1986 (Supplements to Vigiliae Christianae, 8; 1988). E. Schürer and C. Bigg in EB (11th edn.), 21 (1911), pp. 409–13, s.v.; H. Leisegang in PW 20 (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 1–50, s.v. 'Philon (41)'; C. Mondésert, SJ, and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 7 (1966), cols. 1288–351; R. Arnaldez in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 287–91; Y. Amir in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 409–15; V. Nikiprowetzky and A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 1352–74, all s.v.

Philocalia. A title meaning 'Love of what is beautiful', applied in particular to two works:

(1) The Philocalia of *Origen: an anthology from his writings, compiled by Sts *Basil the Great and *Gregory of Nazianzus during 358–9, and containing many passages which would otherwise have been lost in the original Greek.

(2) The Philocalia of Sts Macarius Notaras and *Nicodemus of the Holy Mountain, first published at Venice in 1782. This is a collection of ascetic and mystical writings dating from the 4th to the 15th century, dealing in general terms with the teaching of *Hesychasm and more particularly with the *Jesus Prayer. Translated into Slavonic by St Paisy *Velichovksy (1793) and into Russian by St *Theophan the Recluse (enlarged edn. in 5 vols., 1876–90), the book has exercised an important influence throughout the modern Orthodox world.

Convenient edn. of the Greek text of (1) by J. A. *Robinson, The Philocalia of Origen (Cambridge, 1893). Chapters 1–20 also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by M. Harl (SC 302, 1983, pp. 7–468); chs. 21–7 ed., with Fr. tr., by E. Junod (ibid. 226; 1976). Eng tr. of (2) by G. E. H. Palmer, P. Sherrard, and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Philokalia (1979 ff.).

Philocalian Calendar, the. A name sometimes given to the list of Roman bishops (also known as the '*Liberian Catalogue') compiled by the '*Chronographer of 354' (q.v.). It takes this name from the fact that part of the document in which it occurs was illuminated by the artist, Furius Dionysius Philocalus (prob. better Filocalus).

On Filocalus, also known for his skilful incision of *Damasus' metrical inscriptions between 370 and 384, A. Ferrua, SJ, Epigrammata Damasiana (Sussidi allo Studio delle Antichità Cristiane, 2; 1942), pp. 21–35; and H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1594–1600, s.v. For further bibl. see s.v. CHRONOGRAPHER OF AD 354.

Philomena, St. She was formerly held to be a virgin martyr of the early Church. Her cultus dates from 1802, when a loculus* was found in the Catacomb of St *Priscilla, near Rome, closed with three tiles on which were painted the letters LUMENA/PAX TE/CUM FI, which, arranged in the right order, read 'Pax tecum Filumena'. Taken in conjunction with an *ampulla supposed to have contained blood, the bones found in the tomb were held to be those of a martyred Christian virgin. She came to be venerated as a saint when many miracles took place at the translation of her relics to Mugnano in 1805. A proper Office and Mass were granted to her by *Pius IX in 1855, and she temporarily became one of the most popular saints on account of the devotion to her of the *Curé d'Ars. Subsequent research, however, has cast grave doubt on the connection between the relics and the tiles, which seem to have belonged to another grave, so that nothing seems known about the saint venerated under this name. Feast day, 11 Aug.; suppressed 1961.

The identification was first made by F. di Lucia, Relazione istorica della translazione del sacro corpo di Santa Filomena (4th edn., 1833). It was refuted by A. de Waal, 'Die Grabschrift der Philumena aus dem Coemeterium der Priscilla', RQ 12 (1898), pp. 43–54; O. *Marucchi, 'Osservazioni archeologiche sulla iscrizione di S. Filomena', Miscellanea di Storia ecclesiastica e di Studi ausiliari, 2 (1904), pp. 365–86; id., 'Studio archeologico sulla celebre iscrizione di Filumena scoperta nel cimitero di Priscilla', Nuovo Bullettino di Archaeologia cristiana, 12 (1906), pp. 253–300. F. Trochu, La 'Petite Sainte' du curé d'Ars: Sainte Philomène (Lyons, 1924). In Eng. there is a popular, mainly devotional, account by C. Hallack (Dublin [1936]). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1600–2, s.v. 'Filumena', with detailed bibl.; D. Balboni in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (1964), cols. 796–800, s.v. 'Filomena'.

Philopatris. A Greek dialogue, formerly thought to be a veiled attack on Christianity by *Lucian of Samosata. The scene is laid at *Constantinople, where one Triephon, converted to the Christian faith, is transported into the third heaven and engages in a discussion on paganism, which concludes with reflections on the political situation of the time. The work, long assigned to the reign of *Julian (361–3), has been commonly put since B. G. Niebuhr in the time of Nicephorus Phocas (963–9).

The text is pr. in many edns. of the works of Lucian of Samosata (q.v.), e.g. that of C. Jacobitz, 3 (Teub. edn. of 1886, pp. 411–25); also ed. C. B. Hase appended to his edn. of the History of Leo the Deacon (C.S.H.Byz. 25; 1828), pp. 324–42. B. G. Niebuhr, Kleine historische und philologische Schriften, 2 (1843), pp. 73–8 ('Ueber das Alter des Dialogus Philopatris'). E. von Dobschütz in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 363–5, s.v.; there is a summary of this art. in Eng. in EB (11th edn.), 21 (1911), p. 439, s.v.

Philoponus, John. See JOHN PHILOPONUS.

philosophic sin. Acts of sin held to violate the natural order of reason without consciously transgressing the Divine law, and hence not to merit the punishments meted out to offences against the latter. The theory that sin under such conditions is possible presupposes the existence of a distinction between the Divine and natural moral law of contestable validity and was censured by Pope *Alexander VIII on 24 Aug. 1690.

Pope Alexander VIII's condemnation of 24 Aug. 1690 is pr. in C. Duplessis d'Argentré (ed.), Collectio Judiciorum de Novis Erroribus, 3 (Paris, etc., 1736), p. 365; main clauses repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 658 f. (nos. 2290 f.). H. Beylard, 'Le Péché philosophique. Quelques précisions historiques et doctrinales', Nouvelle Revue théologique, 62 (1935), pp. 591–616 and 673–98. T. Deman, OP, in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 255–72, s.v. 'Péché. IX', with bibl. col. 275.

philosophy of religion. The notion of the philosophy of religion as a distinct discipline was the creation of the *Enlightenment. The term is first met with in Germany in the last years of the 18th cent. Early occurrences in titles are J. C. G. Schaumann, Philosophie der Religion (1793), and J. Berger, Geschichte der Religionsphilosophie (1800). Properly its aim, as the expression implies, is the philosophical investigation of the particular group of phenomena covered by the terms 'religion' and 'religious experience'. It studies the essence, content, origin, and, to some extent, value of religion as a factor in human life, and examines the claims of religion to be true. The '*natural theology' of earlier writers could be considered as philosophy of religion in the broadest sense, but whereas natural theology was regarded as the prelude to revealed theology, the philosophy of religion takes no cognizance of this distinction. Thus it is free to examine concepts found in any religion, not just Christianity. In so far as religions make conflicting claims to truth, the exploration of what kind of a conflict is entailed has become an increasing concern for the philosophy of religion, which thus overlaps with *comparative religion (q.v.).

The philosophy of religion has taken many forms. D. *Hume's Dialogues concerning Natural Religion (1779) and I. *Kant's Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft (1793) are two very different examples of the rationalist 18th-cent. approach to religion. G. W. F. *Hegel's posthumously published Vorlesungen über die Philosophie der Religion (1832, 2nd edn., 1840; Eng. tr., 1895) is the most celebrated of the many works on the philosophy of religion that have come out of the tradition of speculative idealism. In the latter part of the 19th cent. there was a tendency to move away from the speculative style of philosophy. Thus history is the controlling idea in O. Pfleiderer's Religionsphilosophie (1878), while H. *Høffding's Religions Filosofi (1901; Eng. tr., 1906) centres on the notion of value. In the 20th cent., still newer types of philosophy of religion have been developed. C. Hartshorne applied the insights of *process philosophy to the problems of religion, while K. *Jaspers constructed a 'philosophical faith' on the basis of an *existentialist type of thought. More recently still, esp. under the influence of post-war Oxford philosophy, the philosophy of religion has been understood as the analysis of religious language.

As a distinct discipline, the philosophy of religion has been cultivated for the most part by philosophers with religious leanings. Catholic theologians have more commonly envisaged the matters at issue from the standpoint of natural theology and *Thomist metaphysics. While some liberal Protestants have been attracted to the philosophy of religion, the more orthodox Protestant tradition, believing that the knowledge of God can be had only from revelation, has been suspicious of philosophical studies of religion.

Modern works incl. C. C. J. *Webb, Problems in the Relations of God and Man (1911); id., Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), and other writings of this author; E. *Troeltsch, Gesammelte Schriften (4 vols., 1912–25); F. *von Hügel, Essays and Addresses on the Philosophy of Religion (1921); id., 2nd ser. (1926); A. E. *Taylor, 'Theism', HERE 12 (1921), pp. 261–87; id., The Faith of a Moralist (Gifford Lectures [= 'GL']; 2 vols., 1930); id., Philosophical Studies (1934); J. W. *Oman, The Natural and the Supernatural (1931); F. R. Tennant, Philosophical Theology, 1: The Soul and its Faculties (1935), 2: The Word, the Soul and God (1937); E. Bevan, Symbolism and Belief (1938); J. *Baillie, Our Knowledge of God (1939); V. A. Demant, The Religious Prospect (1939); C. Hartshorne, Man's Vision of God and the Logic of Theism (New York, 1941); E. L. Mascall, He Who Is: A Study in Traditional Theism (1943); id., Existence and Analogy: A Sequel to He Who Is (1949); id., The Openness of Being: Natural Theology Today (GL, 1971); D. M. Emmet, The Nature of Metaphysical Thinking (1945); A. [N. G.] Flew and A. MacIntyre (eds.), New Essays in Philosophical Theology (1955); C. A. Campbell, On Selfhood and Godhood (GL, 1957); B. [G.] Mitchell (ed.), Faith and Logic: Oxford Essays in Philosophical Theology (1957); id. (ed.), The Philosophy of Religion (Oxford, 1971); id., The Justification of Religious Belief (1973); K. Jaspers, Der philosophische Glaube angesichts der Offenbarung (1962; Eng. tr., 1967); N. Smart (ed.), Historical Selections in the Philosophy of Religion (1962); J. Hick, Philosophy of Religion (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1963); id., God and the Universe of Faiths: Essays in the Philosophy of Religion (1973); H. D. Lewis, Philosophy of Religion (1965); J. Macquarrie, God-Talk: An Examination of the Language and Logic of Theology (1967); F. [B.] Ferré, Basic Modern Philosophy of Religion (New York, 1967; London, 1968); R. G. Swinburne, The Coherence of Theism (Oxford, 1977); id., The Existence of God (ibid., 1979); S. R. L. Clark, The Mysteries of Religion: An Introduction to Philosophy through Religion (ibid., 1986); K. Ward, Images of Eternity: Concepts of God in Five Religious Traditions (1987); F. Kerr [OP], Theology after Wittgenstein (Oxford, 1986); G. Moore, OP, Believing in God: A Philosophical Essay (Edinburgh, 1988).

Philostorgius (*c.*368–*c.*439), *Arian ecclesiastical historian. A native of Borissus in Cappadocia Secunda, Philostorgius became a follower and warm admirer of *Eunomius (q.v.) and spent most of his active life in *Constantinople. His principal work, a 'History of the Church' from the Arian standpoint for the period *c.*300–430, survives only in fragments, esp. in the 'Passion of Artemius' (Artemius was an Arian martyr, *c.*362), and in an epitome by *Photius, who writes very disparagingly of its author. His work was inaccurate and biased, but what survives is of value through its use of excellent sources as well as on account of Philostorgius' descriptions of several of the chief Arian personalities.

Editio princeps of frags. by J. Gothofredus (Geneva, 1643); they are also pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 65. 459–624; crit. edn., with important introd., by J. Bidez (GCS 21; 1913; 3rd edn. rev. by F. Winkelmann, 1981). P. *Batiffol, Quaestiones Philostorgianae (thesis, Paris, 1891). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 530–32. G. Fritz in DTC 14 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1495–8, s.v.; G. Geutz in PW 20 (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 119–22, s.v.

Philoxenian Version of the NT. The Syriac version of the NT made from the Greek in 508 for *Philoxenus (q.v.) by Polycarp, a *chorepiscopus. Unlike the *Peshitta, it probably contained the four lesser Catholic Epistles (2 Pet., 2 and 3 Jn., Jude) and the Book of Rev. In 616 it was drastically revised throughout by Thomas of Harkel, and its original text has thus been almost completely lost, apart perhaps from that of the four lesser Catholic Epistles and Rev., for which a version different from, and earlier than, the *Harklean survives. For the rest of the NT, however, the surviving manuscripts do not take us back behind Thomas of Harkel's revision. J. White, the editor of this revised text (see HARKLEAN VERSION), was under the impression that Thomas confined his corrections to the margin, and so he called the text 'Versio Philoxeniana'; in this he has been followed (mistakenly) by several modern scholars.

Editio princeps of the four 'Philoxenian' Epp. by E. *Pococke, Leiden, 1630; modern edn. by J. Gwynn, Text and Translation Society, London and Oxford, 1909. 'Philoxenian' text of Rev. first discovered and pub. by J. Gwynn, The Apocalypse of St John in a Syriac Version hitherto Unknown (Dublin and London, 1897). A. Vööbus, 'New Data for the Solution of the Problem concerning the Philoxenian Version', in Spiritus et Veritas [Festschrift C. Kundziņš] (Eutin, 1953), pp. 169–86; S. [P.] Brock, 'The Resolution of the Philoxenian/Harclean Problem', in E. J. Epp and G. D. Fee (eds.), New Testament Textual Criticism: Its Significance for Exegesis. Essays in Honour of Bruce M. Metzger (Oxford, 1981), pp. 325–43; B. Aland, 'Die philoxenianisch-harklensische Übersetzungstradition', Muséon, 94 (1981), pp. 321–83. C. van Puyvelde in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 875–8, s.v. 'Orientales de la Bible (Versions)', v. 1, with bibl.

Philoxenus (*c.*440–523), Bp. of Mabbug (Hierapolis), to which office he was appointed in 485 by *Peter the Fuller. Along with his contemporary, *Severus, he was one of the leading thinkers and writers of the nascent *Syrian Orthodox Church. His extensive writings, in Syriac, include a set of thirteen 'Discourses on the Christian Life', several works on the Incarnation and a number of exegetic and ascetic works. He also conducted a large correspondence which has partly survived. See also preceding entry.

The more important works incl. an edn. of his Discourses, with Eng. tr., by E. A. W. Budge (2 vols., London [1893]–1894); his 'Tractatus de Trinitate et Incarnatione' ed., with Lat. tr., by A. Vaschalde (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 2nd ser. 27; 1907), and 'Dissertationes Decem de Uno e Sancta Trinitate Incorporato et Passo', ed., with Lat. or Fr. tr., by M. Brière and F. Graffin, SJ, in PO 15 (1927), pp. 441–542; 38 (1976–77), pp. 475–641; 39 (1978–9), pp. 541–764; 40 (1979–81), pp. 197–362; and 41 (1982–4), pp. 1–143. The more important letters incl. one sent to a friend, one to Patricius of Edessa, ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Lavenant, SJ, in PO 30 (1963), pp. 725–873 (a Gk. tr. of this is pub. among the works of *Isaac of Nineveh); one to the Monks of Senoun, ed. by A. de Halleux (CSCO 231, Scriptores Syri, 98; 1963, with Fr. tr., CSCO 232, Scriptores Syri, 99; 1963); and another to the monasteries of Beth Gaugal, ed., with Fr. tr., by id., in Muséon, 96 (1983), pp. 5–79. Verse Life by Elī of Qartamin, ed. by id. (CSCO 233, Scriptores Syri, 100; 1963; Fr. tr., CSCO 234, Scriptores Syri, 101; 1963), with further refs. A. de Halleux, OFM, Philoxène de Mabbog: Sa vie, ses écrits, sa théologie (Louvain, 1963). R. C. Chesnut, Three Monophysite Christologies: Severus of Antioch, Philoxenus of Mabbug, and Jacob of Sarug (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1976), pp. 57–112. A. Grillmeier, 'Die Taufe Christi und die Taufe Christen. Zur Tauftheologie des Philoxenus von Mabbug und ihrer Bedeutung für die christliche Spiritualität', in H. J. Auf der Maur and others (eds.), Fides Sacramenti, Sacramentum Fidei: Studies in honour of Pieter Smulders (Assen, 1981), pp. 137–75. G. Lardreau, Discours philosophique et discours spirituel: Autour de la philosophie spirituelle de Philoxène de Mabboug [1985] and R. G. Jenkins, The Old Testament Quotations of Philoxenus of Mabbug (CSCO 514, Subsidia, 84; 1989). I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 157–61. E. Tisserant in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1509–32; R. Graffin, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 1392–7, both s.v.

Philpot, John (1516–55), Reformation divine. Few facts are known with certainty about Philpot's life. After being educated at *Winchester and New College, *Oxford, where he was in 1535 elected to a Fellowship which he had vacated by May 1541, he went abroad and developed doubts about the traditional Catholic doctrines. A controversial discussion with a *Franciscan friar near Padua almost led to his seizure by the *Inquisition. At an unknown date under *Edward VI (1547–53) he became Archdeacon of Winchester. An attack on *transubstantiation in the first Convocation of Mary's reign (1553) was followed by imprisonment. In Oct. 1555, despite E. *Bonner's defence, he was convicted, and on 18 Dec. burnt at *Smithfield. Besides many occasional writings dealing with current controversies he translated some of J. *Calvin's Homilies and *Chrysostom, 'Against Heresies'.

Extant works, with account of his 'Examination' taken mainly from J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, ed. R. Eden (*Parker Society, 1842), with biog. introd., pp. i–xxii. W. A. J. Archbold in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 226 f.; C. P. S. Clarke in DECH, p. 459; BRUO, 1501–40, pp. 449 f.

Phocas, St (d. 117), Bp. of Sinope in Pontus. A martyr of this name who suffered under Trajan by suffocation in a bath is commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 14 July. He has constantly been confused with 'St Phocas the Gardener', commemorated in the W. Church on 23 July and in the E. on 22 Sept., who is stated to have been martyred in the *Diocletianic persecution, as well as with St Phocas of Antioch, named in the Roman Martyrology on 5 Mar. St Phocas the Gardener was the subject of a panegyric pronounced in 400 by Asterius, Bp. of Amasea. When the various traditions had become fused, the cult of St Phocas became very popular, esp. among seafaring people, perhaps through a superficial resemblance of his name to φώκη, 'seal'. Several attempts (for the most part unconvincing) have been made in recent times by students of folklore to connect the cultus of St Phocas with pagan myths.

Gk. text of Asterius' panegyric on Phocas the Gardener in AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 294–9. K. Lübeck, 'Der hl. Phocas von Sinope', Hist. J. 30 (1909), pp. 743–61. C. Van de Vorst, 'Saint Phocas', Anal. Boll. 30 (1911), pp. 252–72, with discussion of the relation of the various saints of this name and full refs. to earlier lit.; various primary texts, ibid., pp. 272–95. J.-M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 5 (1964), cols. 948–50, s.v. 'Foca l'Ortolano'.

Phocylides, Pseudo-. The name given to the author of 230 hexameters inserted into the work of Phocylides of Miletus (6th cent. BC). The strictly ethical character of the poem, combined with the absence of specifically Jewish allusions, and esp. of all ref. to Jewish ceremonial law, has suggested that the author was a Christian (A. *Harnack); on the other hand, there is no mention of Christ or of anything definitely Christian, while the moral teaching seems closely to follow that of the OT. The poem may have been written at any time within the period of the Judaeo-Hellenistic civilization up to c. AD 150. It was widely used as a school-book in the Byzantine period and has survived in many MSS.

Crit. edns. by D. [C. C.] Young, Theognis (Teub., 1971), pp. 95–112, and, with Fr. tr. and introd., by P. Derron (Collection des Universités de France, 1986). Young's edn. is repr., with Eng. tr. by P. W. van der Horst, The Sentences of Pseudo-Phocylides (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 4; Leiden, 1978), pp. 87–103. Further Eng. tr. by id. in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 565–82. J.

Bernays, Ueber das phokylideische Gedicht: Ein Beitrag zur hellenistischen Litteratur (1856); cf. review by A. Harnack in TLZ 10 (1885), col. 160. J. Thomas, Die jüdische Phokylides: Formgeschichtliche Zugänge zu Pseudo-Phokylides und Vergleich mit der neutestamentlichen Paränese (Novum Testamentum et Orbis Antiquus, 23; Göttingen, 1992). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 687–92.

Phoebadius, St (d. *c.*395), also 'Fiari', Bp. of Agen (Agennum) in Guyenne. A friend of St *Hilary of Poitiers, he was a strong opponent of *Arianism and attacked the *Sirmian formula of 357 in his Liber contra Arianos (partly based on *Tertullian). In 359 he signed the formula of *Ariminum, but vigorously denounced the Council when he realized its import. A work, 'De Fide Orthodoxa contra Arianos', also passes under his name, but this probably belongs to *Gregory of Elvira. Feast day, 26 April.

Crit. edn. of his Liber contra Arianos by R. Demeulenaere (CCSL 64, 1985, pp. 3–52, incl. introd. [in Fr.] and bibl.). Text also in J. P. Migne, PL 20. 13–30. *Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 108. P. P. Gläser, Phoebadius von Agen (Augsburg Diss., 1978). V. C. De Clercq in DHGE 16 (1967), cols. 785–90, s.v. 'Fébade d'Agen', with bibl.

phoenix (Gk. φοῖνιξ), a gorgeously arrayed mythical bird which was the subject of several legends in antiquity, notably one to the effect that after living 500–600 years it burnt itself to ashes and then came back to life again with renewed youth. From St *Clement of Rome (I Clem. 25) and *Tertullian (De Res. Carnis, 13) onwards, Christian writers frequently regarded it as an image of the Resurrection. A poem on the religious significance of the phoenix, De Ave Phoenice, is prob. the work of *Lactantius; it enjoyed wide popularity and in its turn influenced the Anglo-Saxon poem, The Phoenix, contained in the *Exeter Book and at one time attributed to *Cynewulf. In Christian art the phoenix was occasionally used from *Constantinian times, representations of it being found, e.g., in the Roman churches of Sts *Cosmas and Damian, St Praxedes and St Cecilia, as well as on a variety of funerary monuments.

J. Hubaux and M. Leroy, Le Mythe du phénix dans les littératures grecque et latine (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 82; 1939). R. van den Broek, The Myth of the Phoenix according to Classical and Early Christian Traditions (Eng. tr. by I. Seeger, Leiden, 1972). F. Bisconti, 'Aspetti e significati del simbolo della fenice nella letteratura e nell'arte del Cristianesimo primitivo', Vetera Christianorum, 16 (1979), pp. 21–40. Modern edns. of De Ave Phoenice by M. C. Fitzpatrick (Philadelphia, 1933) and of the Anglo-Saxon poem by N. F. Blake (Manchester, 1964); on its relationship with the De Ave Phoenice, O. F. Emerson, 'Originality in Old English Poetry', Review of English Studies, 2 (1926), pp. 18–31; J. E. Cross, 'The Conception of the Old English Phoenix', in R. P. Creed (ed.), Old English Poetry (Providence, RI, 1967), pp. 129–52. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 682–91, s.v. 'Phénix'; F. Bisconti in DPAC 1 (1983), cols. 1350–2, s.v. 'Fenice'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (1992), p. 685, s.v.

Phos Hilaron (Gk. Φῶς ἱλαρόν). In the E. Church, the hymn sung at 'Hesperinos' (the counterpart of the W. *Vespers) during 'the lighting of the lamps' and the central item in the office. It is found already in St *Basil (De Spir. Sanct. 73); he regarded it as ancient. Some modern Anglican liturgies provide for its use in Evening Prayer. Translations include J. *Keble's 'Hail! gladdening light' and R. S. *Bridges' 'O gladsome light, O grace'.

Text pr., with Lat. tr., in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae, 3 (Oxford, 1815), p. 299, with notes, pp. 300–4; and in H. A. Daniel, Thesaurus Hymnologicus, 3 (Leipzig, 1846), p. 5, repr. by J. Julian in id. (ed.), A Dictionary of Hymnology (1892), p. 894, s.v., with list of Eng. trs. A. Tripolitis, 'Φῶς ἱλαρόν. Ancient Hymn and Modern Enigma', VC 24 (1970), pp. 189–96. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 131 f. (no. 1355).

Photinus (4th cent.), heretic. A pupil of *Marcellus of Ancyra, he became Bp. of Sirmium *c.*344. He was recognized as a man of learning and eloquence. Though involved in the condemnation of Marcellus by a Council of Antioch *c.*345, he retained his see until 351, when he was deposed and exiled after his errors had been exposed at a Council called by the Emp. Constantius at Sirmium. None of his writings have survived and his doctrine is variously described by his detractors. It was clearly a form of *Sabellianism. Acc. to St *Augustine, he denied the pre-existence of Christ, though he allowed that He was born of the Virgin and was endowed with superhuman excellences. His followers, the 'Photinians', were formally condemned at the Council of *Constantinople in 381.

The primary sources are scattered. D. *Petavius, De Photino Haeretico eiusque Damnatione (Paris, 1636). M. Simonetti, Studi sull'Arianesimo (Verba Seniorum, NS 5 [1965]), pp. 135–59. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 123 f. F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 372–4, and G. Bardy in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1532–6, both s.v.

Photius (*c.*810–*c.*895), Patriarch of *Constantinople. Of a noble Constantinopolitan family, he received a good education and gave up his original plan of entering a monastery for the career of a scholar and statesman. Close relations with the court made him the first Imperial Secretary and, in 838, Imperial Ambassador to Baghdad. When the Emp. Michael III deposed Ignatius, Patr. of Constantinople, in 858, Photius, still a layman, was appointed his successor. He was consecrated by his friend, Gregory Asbestas, Abp. of Syracuse, whom Ignatius had himself deposed. On Ignatius' refusal to abdicate, Michael and Photius sent an embassy to Pope *Nicholas I, asking for legates to a synod at Constantinople which, besides regulating the *Iconoclastic Controversy, should also settle the dispute of the two Patriarchs. Nicholas's legates exceeded their powers, probably under pressure from the E. court, and took part in the synod of 861, which deposed Ignatius. In 862 the Pope, in letters to Photius and to Michael III, blamed his legates' conduct and complained that his former letter had been tampered with at Constantinople; and, at a synod at Rome (863), annulled the proceedings at Constantinople. He maintained that Ignatius was still Patriarch; and after the arrival of an embassy from Ignatius declared Photius deposed and his friend, Gregory Asbestas, deprived of the priesthood and of all ecclesiastical offices. All clerics promoted by Photius were also deposed, and the deposition of Ignatius declared null and void. This assertion of Papal authority naturally gave great offence at Constantinople. Photius himself kept silence, but the Emperor wrote a strongly worded letter to the Pope, who in 865 declared himself ready to reopen the case. A reconciliation was prevented by the dispute whether Christianity in *Bulgaria, then being converted, was to depend on Rome or on Constantinople. In 867 Photius, in an encyclical, denounced the presence of Latin missionaries in Bulgaria as an intrusion, and also gave an exposition of his objections to the *Filioque clause in the creed. In the same year, at a Council at Constantinople, sentence of deposition was pronounced against the Pope, who was declared anathema and excommunicated.

With the accession of Basil (867), the murderer and successor of the Emp. Michael, the situation changed. Ignatius was reinstated, and a sentence of a Council at Rome in 869, anathematizing Photius, was confirmed by the Council of Constantinople of 869–70, later counted as the 8th General Council by the Latins. The restored harmony between E. and W. was of short duration. When Ignatius consecrated an archbishop and bishops for the Bulgarians (870) he was threatened by the Pope with excommunication. This action at Rome assured his continuance in his see, and it was only after Ignatius' death (877) that Photius, by order of the Emperor, once more became Patriarch. At a Council held at Constantinople in 879–80 the Papal legates seem to have approved Photius and annulled the decision of the Council of 869–70. Photius, however, still faced difficulties within the Byzantine Church, and when *Leo VI became Emperor (886), he resigned and disappears from history; he died at the monastery of Armeniaki towards the end of the 9th cent.

The Photian schism was only one among many similar incidents in the history of the relations between the Greek and Latin Churches, but it had grave consequences for the future. It accentuated the conflict between the Roman claim to be the centre of unity for Christendom and the Greek conception of the five patriarchates of almost equal status. Moreover, Photius was the first important theologian to accuse Rome of innovating in the matter of the Filioque. Hence in the 13th and 14th cents. the name of Photius became the watchword of those who opposed the union of the two Churches.

Photius was a scholar of wide interests and encyclopaedic knowledge. His most important work, his 'Bibliotheca' or 'Myriobiblion', is a description of several hundred books, often with exhaustive analyses and copious extracts. It is an invaluable mine of information, as a great number of the works mentioned in it are now lost. His 'Lexicon' provides further evidence of his great learning. The 'Amphilochia', written during his first exile, deals mainly with exegetical and doctrinal problems; his treatises against the *Manichaeans are chiefly concerned with the *Paulicians. The 'Treatise on the Holy Spirit', written after his resignation, has furnished all subsequent Greek theologians with their objections to the W. dogma. The 'Nomocanon', which is sometimes attributed to him, is not really his, though he may have re-edited it. A number of his homilies and letters have also been preserved. In the Orthodox Church Photius is venerated as a saint; feast day, 6 Feb.

The only collected edn. of Photius' writings is that of J. P. Migne, PG 101–4, which Migne prepared with the help of J. B. Malou, Bp. of Bruges, and J. *Hergenröther. Modern edns. of his 'Bibliotheca', with Fr. tr., by R. Henry (Collection Byzantine, 8 vols., 1959–77 + index by J. Schamp, 1991); of his 'Homilies' by B. Laourdas (Thessalonica, 1959); of his 'Lexicon' by C. Theodoridis (Berlin and New York, 1982 ff.); and of his Letters and 'Amphilochia' by B. Laourdas and L. G. Westerink (6 vols. in 7 parts, Teub., 1983–8). Eng. tr. of his 'Homilies', with comm., by C. Mango (Cambridge, Mass., 1958). Other sources incl. J. Hergenröther, Monumenta Graeca ad Photium eiusque Historiam Pertinentia (Ratisbon, 1869), and A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Φωτιακά (St Petersburg, 1897). V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fascs. 2–3, 2nd edn. rev. by J. Darrouzès, AA (1989), pp. 95–164 (nos. 456–589). Earlier works are now superseded by F. Dvornik, The Photian Schism: History and Legend (1948), with full bibl. R. Haugh, Photius and the Carolingians: The Trinitarian Controversy (Belmont, Mass. [1975]). W. T. Treadgold, The Nature of the Bibliotheca of Photius (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, 18; Washington, DC, 1980); D. S. White, Patriarch Photios of Constantinople (Brookline, Mass., 1981), incl. Eng. tr. of 52 letters; J. Schamp, Photios, historien des Lettres (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 248; 1987). J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 72–90. Beck, pp. 520–8. É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1536–604, with bibl.; K. Ziegler in PW 20 (pt. 1; 1941), cols. 667–737, s.v. 'Photios (13)'; F. Dvornik in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 326–9, s.v., with further bibl.

phylactery (Gk. φυλακτήριον; Heb. tephillin). A small leather case containing vellum strips inscribed with four passages from the OT, namely Exod. 13: 1–10, Exod. 13: 11–16, Deut. 6: 4–9, Deut. 11: 13–21. They have been worn by orthodox Jews from pre-Christian times on the forehead and arm during morning prayer on all days except the Sabbath and certain festivals, to remind them of their obligation to keep the law. The *Pharisees and scribes were condemned by Christ for their ostentatious broadening of their phylacteries (Mt. 23: 5).

There is a brief monograph by G. Langer, Die jüdischen Gebetsriemen (1931). H. L. Strack and P. Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrasch, 4 (1928), pp. 250–76 (Elfter Exkurs, 'Die Tephillin oder Gebetsriemen'). K. G. Kuhn, Phylakterien aus Höhle 4 von Qumran (Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, philosophisch-historische Klasse, Jahrgang 1957, Abh. 1; 1957). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), p. 480 f. See also comm. to Exod., Deut., and Mt.

physico-theological argument. The name commonly applied in the 18th cent., e.g. by I. *Kant, to the *teleological argument for the existence of God. In 1713 William Derham (Canon of Windsor from 1716; d. 1735) published two series of *Boyle Lectures under the title Physico-Theology; or, a Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God from His Works of Creation, which won great popularity and, through translations issued a few years later in Italian, French, and Dutch, probably did much towards bringing the expression into general currency.

Pia Desideria. P. J. *Spener's book which aimed at fostering a religious revival in German Protestantism and thus created the *Pietist Movement. Written in German, it was published in 1675 at Frankfurt, where Spener was then pastor. He stated his main immediate objectives under the head of six 'simple proposals' (einfältige Vorschläge): (1) an intensified study of the Bible, aiming at enhanced personal devotion as the chief end; (2) a fuller exercise by the laity of their spiritual priesthood; (3) emphasis on the practical, as opposed to the merely intellectual, side of Christianity, culminating in the spirit of love; (4) the manifestation of charity in religious controversy, which by the sympathetic presentation of truth should seek to win the heart rather than to gain controversial victory; (5) the reorganization of theological studies at the universities and the establishment of higher standards of religious life among both professors and students; (6) the reform and revival of preaching with a view to edification. The author also looked forward to an age of prosperity for the Church when these ideals would be largely realized, after the conversion of the Jews and the fall of Papal Rome. Spener further developed his programme in Das geistliche Priesterthum (1677) and Allgemeine Gottesgelehrtheit (1680).

Convenient Eng. tr., with introd., by T. G. Tappert (Philadelphia, 1964). For other bibl. see SPENER, P. J.

Piarists. An order of *regular clergy devoted to the education of children and youths, esp. among the poor. The 'Regulares pauperes Matris Dei scholarum piarum', as they are officially called, derive their name from the 'Pious Schools', or free public schools, of which the first was opened in a poor district of Rome by St *Joseph Calasanctius in 1597. (In some countries they are called 'Scopoli' or 'Escolapios' from the Italian or Spanish for 'school'.) The teachers at Calasanctius's school were recognized as a congregation by *Paul V in 1617 and made into an order by Gregory XV in 1621. Though reduced to an association of independent houses in 1646, it was reinstated as an order in 1669. Its members live in community, adding a fourth vow dedicating themselves to education. They operate in many countries of Europe, N. and S. America, Africa, and Asia, running primary and secondary schools and a university (Veracruz) in Mexico. They did much to keep alive RC education when the *Jesuits were suppressed. The importance which Calasanctius attached to science is maintained by the Piarists, who are responsible for the Observatorio Ximeniano in Florence. The Superior General of the order, who resides in Rome, is elected by the General Chapter and holds office for six years; he is supported by four Assistants General. In each of the 29 provinces there is a Provincial General (elected for four years), with at least two Assistant Provincials.

L. Picanyol, Sch. P., Brevis Conspectus Historico-Statisticus Ordinis Scholarum Piarum (Rome, 1932); S. Giner Guerri, Sch. P., Escuelas Pias: ser e historia (Salamanca, 1978). J. M. Lesaga and others (eds.), Documentos Fundacionales de las Escuelas Pías (ibid., 1979). C. Rabaza, Historia de las Esculas Pías de España (4 vols., Valencia, 1917–18); G. Pelliccia, La Scuola Primaria a Roma dal Secolo XVI al XIX (Studi e fonti per la Storia dell'Università di Roma, 8; 1985). T. Viñas, Index Bio-bibliographicus . . . [Scriptorum] Scholarum Piarum (3 vols., Rome, 1908–11). Diccionario Enciclopédico Escolapio, ed. C. Vilá Pila, Sch. P., and L. M. Bandrés Rey (Salamanca, 1983 ff.). G. Ausenda, Sch. P., in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 927–45, s.v. 'Chierici regolari poveri della Madre di Dio delle Scuole Pie'.

Pica. See PIE.

Pico della Mirandola, Giovanni (1463–94), Italian nobleman, scholar, and writer on philosophy and theology. After studying at *Bologna he spent some years wandering among schools of learning in Italy and France and collecting a library. Besides being a good classic, he knew also Hebrew, Aramaic, and Arabic; and he was the first to seek in the *Kabbala a clue to the Christian mysteries. His vivid imagination led him to many unorthodox views, several of which found expression in a set of 900 Conclusiones on a great variety of topics which he proposed to defend in Rome in 1487. As, however, some of them appeared to Innocent VIII definitely heretical, Pico abandoned the enterprise and withdrew briefly to France, then returned to Florence, where he spent the years 1488–94. He had earlier dedicated an Apology to Lorenzo de' Medici, and in Florence he presented to him the Heptaplus, an interpretation of Genesis; he also composed De Ente et Uno and the incomplete Disputationes adversus Astrologiam. Pico took a generous view of the existence of truth in non-Christian religions and was an early exponent of *syncretism. His Oratio de Hominis Dignitate asserted the unique position of man outside the *Neoplatonic hierarchy. On his deathbed he was clothed in the *Dominican habit by G. *Savonarola.

Collections of his works (2 parts, Bologna, 1495–6), with Life by his nephew G. F. Pico prefixed [no pagination]; also Basle, 1557, repr., with introd. by C. Vasoli (Hildesheim, 1969). Crit. edn. of his 'Oratio de Hominis Dignitate', 'Heptaplus', and 'De Ente et Uno' by E. Garin (Edizione Nazionale dei Classici del Pensiero Italiano, 1; Florence, 1942), of his 'Disputationes adversus astrologiam Divinatricem' by id. (ibid. 2 and 3; 1946–52), of his Carmina Latina by W. Speyer (Leiden, 1964), and of his Conclusiones by B. Kieszkowski (Travaux d'humanisme et renaissance, 131; Geneva, 1973). His 'Liber de Imaginatione' ed., with Eng. tr., by H. Caplan (Cornell Studies in English, 9; 1930). Eng. tr. of his Commento by S. Jayne (American University Studies, 2nd ser. 19; New York etc. [1984]). The Life by his nephew, three of his letters and certain other works were tr. into Eng. by Sir Thomas *More (London [*c.*1510]; modern edn. with introd. by J. M. Rigg, London, 1890; also among the works of Sir Thomas More). Modern studies by G. Semprini (Todi, 1921), E. Anagnine (Bari, 1937), E. Garin (Pubblicazioni della R. Università degli Studi di Firenze, Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, 3rd ser. 5; 1937), P. M. Cordier (Paris, 1957), E. Monnerjahn (Wiesbaden, 1960), and G. di Napoli (Collectio Philosophica Lateranensis, 8; Rome [1965]), H. de *Lubac (Paris [1974]), and F. Roulier (Bibliothèque Franco Simone, 17; Geneva, 1989). A. Dulles, Princeps Concordiae: Pico della Mirandola and the Scholastic Tradition (Harvard Phi Beta Prize Essay for 1940; Cambridge, Mass., 1941). A.-J. Festugière, OP, 'Studia Mirandulana' AHDLMA 7 (vol. for 1932; 1933), pp. 143–50, with text of 'De Ente et Uno', pp. 208–24, and Fr. tr., pp. 225–50. P. O. Kristeller, 'Giovanni Pico della Mirandola and his sources', in L'Opera e il Pensiero di Giovanni Pico della Mirandola nella Storia dell'Umanesimo: Convegno Internazionale (Mirandola: 15–18 settembre 1963), 1 (Florence, 1965), pp. 35–133. P. Kibre, The Library of Pico della Mirandola (New York, 1936). H. Reinhardt, Freiheit zu Gott: Der Grundgedanke des Systematikers Giovanni Pico della Mirandola (1463–1494) (Weinheim [1989]). P. O. Kristeller in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 6 (1967), pp. 307–11; A. Niero in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1986), cols. 1420–6; C. Trinkaus in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 3 (1987), pp. 81–4, all s.v.

Pie, or Pica. The name given in England in the 15th cent. to the Ordinale or Directorium, the book of directions for saying the service, and relating its various parts, esp. the *occurrence and *concurrence of *movable and immovable feasts. This work, which took the place of the modern Ordo recitandi divini officii or Calendar, is censured in the Preface to the 1549 BCP (since 1662 headed 'Concerning the Service of the Church') for 'the number and hardness of its rules'.

Pierre d'Ailly. See D'AILLY, PIERRE.

Pietà. A representation, often in sculpture, of the BVM lamenting over the dead body of Christ, which she holds on her knees. Of 13th-cent. German origin, this image is associated with devotion to the sufferings of the BVM during the Passion of Christ. The most famous Pietà is that of *Michelangelo in *St Peter's, Rome. In England there is a fine Pietà in a window in the church at Long Melford, Suffolk.

W. Passarge, Des Deutsche Vesperbild im Mittelalter (Cologne, 1924), E. Reiners-Ernst, Das Freudvolle Vesperbild und die Anfänge der Pietà-Vorstellung (Abhandlungen der Bayerischen Benediktiner-Akademie, 2; 1939); T. Dobrzeniecki, 'Mediaeval Sources of the Pietà', Bulletin du Musée National de Varsovie, 8 (1967), pp. 5–24. G. Schiller, Ikonographie der christlichen Kunst, 2 (1968), pp. 192–5 (Eng. tr., 2 (1972), pp. 179–81), with further refs. and figs. 622–37.

Pietism. A late-17th- and 18th-cent. movement within (primarily German) Protestantism which sought to supplement the emphasis on institutions and dogma in orthodox Protestant circles by concentrating on the 'practice of piety', rooted in inner experience and expressing itself in a life of religious commitment. The way for it was prepared by the writings of J. *Arndt and other mystical authors, as well as by translations of the works of English *Puritans such as L. *Bayly. At the same time, within Protestant orthodoxy there were movements towards a new reformation or revival of religious life ('Reformorthodoxie'). The word 'Pietist' came into use in the last quarter of the 17th cent., originally as a nickname. The *Lutheran minister P. J. Spener had already published his Pia Desideria, a set of six proposals for restoring true religion; the publication of this work in 1675 was a decisive moment in the development of the Pietist movement. Spener instituted devotional circles for prayer, Bible reading, etc.; he emphasized the universal priesthood of all the faithful, without, however, in essence deviating from Lutheran doctrine or intending to separate from the Church. Anti-establishment tendencies, sometimes combined with *millenarian expectations and more or less unorthodox doctrines, were to be found in the circle of 'radical Pietism' which, in its emphasis on the work of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men, was heir to the mystical tradition. The relationship between mainstream Lutheran and Reformed Pietism on the one hand, and radical Pietism on the other, is a subject of current research. In its more orthodox and moderate form, as initially represented by Spener, the movement quickly won support from a large body of pastors, and in P. *Gerhardt it found a hymn-writer whose compositions did much to spread its ideals. But a clash with the orthodox became inevitable when his friend, A. H. *Francke, who through his 'Collegia Philobiblica' had been instrumental in bringing about a revival among the students in Leipzig, attacked the Leipzig theologians on account of their inquisitorial attitude. He had to leave Leipzig, but before long a new university at Halle was founded by Frederick III, Elector of Brandenburg and later King of Prussia, and in 1691 Francke received a professorship. For several years Halle was the centre of the movement. A body, chiefly of younger theologians, helped to carry the movement throughout Protestant Germany. It took on different aspects in different districts. In Halle it developed into a hard-and-fast system of penance, grace, and rebirth, while at *Herrnhut, in the settlement of Spener's godson, Count von *Zinzendorf, it consisted chiefly of personal devotion to the Redeemer. In the 18th cent. Pietism was characterized by various philanthropic activities (centred in Halle) and by its contribution to the missionary movement (the Danish-Halle mission in Tranquebar in S. *India, which started in 1706; *Moravian missionary activity in many parts of the world). In various forms Pietism has lasted into the present century, and has affected many similar movements in other countries, J. *Wesley's *Methodism among them.

H. [L. J.] Heppe, Geschichte des Pietismus und der Mystik in der reformirten Kirche, namentlich der Niederlande (Leiden, 1879); A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus (3 vols., 1880–6). W. Goeters, Die Vorbereitung des Pietismus in der reformierten Kirche der Niederlande bis zur Labadistischen Krisis 1670 (1911). A Lang, Puritanismus und Pietismus: Studien zu ihrer Entwicklung von M. Butzer bis zum Methodismus (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 6; Neukirchen, 1941). F. E. Stoeffler, The Rise of Evangelical Pietism (Studies in the History of Religions, 9; Leiden, 1965); id., German Pietism in the Eighteenth Century (ibid. 24; 1973). H. Weigelt, Pietismus-Studien, 1 (Arbeiten zur Theologie, 2. Reihe, 4; 1965; all pub.). M. Schmidt, Wiedergeburt und neuer Mensch: Gesammelte Studien zur Geschichte des Pietismus (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 2; 1969); id., Pietismus (Urban-Taschenbücher, 145; 1972). J. Wallmann, Philipp Jakob Spener und die Anfänge des Pietismus (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 42; 1970). H. Bornkamm and others (eds.), Der Pietismus in Gestalten und Wirkungen: Martin Schmidt zum 65. Geburtstag (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 14; 1975). M. Greschat (ed.), Zur neueren Pietismusforschung (Wege der Forschung, 440; 1977); id. (ed.), Orthodoxie und Pietismus (Gestalten der Kirchengeschichte, 7; 1982). Pietismus und Neuzeit: Ein Jahrbuch zur Geschichte des neueren Protestantismus, ed. M. Brecht and others, 4: Die Anfänge des Pietismus (1977–8) and 8: Der radikale Pietismus (1982). J. van den Berg and J. P. van Dooren (eds.), Pietismus und Reveil. Referate der internationalen Tagung: Der Pietismus in den Niederlanden und seine internationalen Beziehungen, Zeist 18.–22. Juni 1974 (Kerkhistorische Bijdragen, 7; 1978). E. Beyreuther, Geschichte des Pietismus (Stuttgart, 1978). D. Meyer (ed.), Pietismus – Herrnhutertum – Erweckungsbewegung: Festschrift für Erich Beyreuther (Schriftenreihe des Vereins für Rheinische Kirchengeschichte, 70; 1982). W. R. Ward, The Protestant Evangelical Awakening (Cambridge, 1992). G. Mälzer, Die Werke der Württembergischen Pietisten des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts (Bibliographie zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 1; 1972). E. Beyreuther in EKL 3 (1959), cols. 216–21; K. Aland in Weltkirchen Lexikon (1960), cols. 1151–16; M. Schmidt and M. Stallmann in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 370–83, with full bibl.; E. W. Zeeden in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 499–501, all s.v. 'Pietismus'; B. Weber in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1743–58, s.v. 'Piétisme', with bibl. See also bibl. to SPENER, P. J., and FRANCKE, A. H.

Pighi, or Pigge, Albert (*c.*1490–1542), theologian. A native of Kampen in the Netherlands, he studied at Louvain and *Cologne and in 1522 was called to Rome by *Hadrian VI. Here he took a prominent part in writing on the main issues of his time. In 1525 he wrote a treatise Adversus Graecorum Errores (preserved in MS in the *Vatican Library) to pave the way for reunion with the Orthodox Church. He also prepared a memorandum, since lost, on *Henry VIII's divorce project. His principal work, Hierarchiae Ecclesiasticae Assertio (Cologne, 1538) was an elaborate defence of *tradition as a source of Christian truth co-ordinate with Scripture; it defended a doctrine of Papal infallibility and denied the proposition that a pope might personally lapse into heresy. His emphasis on human free will in his opposition to M. *Luther and J. *Calvin led him to minimize the effects of *original sin, but under the influence of J. *Gropper he adopted the doctrine of '*double justice'. At the Colloquy of *Ratisbon (1541) he took part on the Catholic side.

Correspondence ed. W. Friedensburg in ZKG 23 (1902), pp. 110–55. H. Jedin, Studien über die Schriftstellertätigkeit Albert Pigges (Reformationsgeschichtliche Studien und Texte, 55; 1931). R. Bäumer, 'Albert Pigge (†1542)', in E. Iserloh (ed.), Katholische Theologen der Reformationszeit, 1 (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 44; Münster, 1984), pp. 98–106. É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2094–104, s.v., with useful bibl.

Pilate, Acts of. An apocryphal work giving an account of the trial, death, and resurrection of Christ. In some MSS an independent treatise on the *Descent of Christ into *Hades is attached to it. From the 13th cent. onwards, the two together have been sometimes known as the 'Gospel of Nicodemus'.

The first part, the 'Acts' proper, is generally held to be not earlier than the 4th cent., though references to the existence of Acts of Pilate in earlier writers, notably in *Justin Martyr (Apol. 1. 35, 48), have led some scholars to contend that the book is based on a 2nd-cent. original, and that this work may even have been founded on authentic records of Christ's trial. It seems more probable, however, that Justin was referring to an independent treatise. As it is known that fictitious accounts of the trial were put into circulation under the Emp. Maximin (early 4th cent.) in the interests of paganism, it is not impossible that the Acts of Pilate were compiled as a reply. The book draws extensively on the four canonical Gospels, to which it is evidently seeking to provide supplementary material, including fresh grounds for belief in Christ's *Resurrection.

The second part purports to have been written by the two sons of the aged *Simeon, Carinus and Leucius. It describes with much detail the effect of Christ's presence among the imprisoned souls in Hades (cf. 1 Pet. 3: 19, on which it is based).

The two documents were probably not united before the 5th cent. The work forms the basis of the medieval play-cycle on the *Harrowing of Hell and of the legends of St *Joseph of Arimathaea and the Holy *Grail.

Lat. and Gk. recensions ed. C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (Leipzig, 1853), pp. 203–412 (2nd edn., 1876, pp. 210–434); also in A. de Santos Otero, Los Evangelios Apócrifos (6th edn., 1988), pp. 391–465; Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 164–204; also in Schneemelcher (see below). Further edn. of Lat. and Gk. in parallel cols. by P. Vannutelli (Rome, 1938). Coptic text ed. E. Revillout in PO 9 (1913), pp. 57–132. Syriac text ed., with Lat. tr., by I. E. Rahmani, Studia Syriaca, 2 (Charfat, 1908). Armenian text, retranslated into Lat. and Gk., by F. C. *Conybeare in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 4 (Oxford, 1896), pp. 59–132. R. A. *Lipsius, Die Pilatus-Acten kritisch untersucht (1871). S. Brock, 'A Fragment of the Acta Pilati in Christian Palestinian Aramaic', JTS NS 22 (1971), pp. 157 f., with further refs. J.-P. Lémonon, Pilate et le gouvernement de la Judée (Études Bibliques, 1981), pp. 258–65. F. Scheidweiler in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 395–424; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 501–36, incl. Eng. tr. of text. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 115–18; E. von Dobschütz in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 544–7, with bibl.

Pilate, Pontius. The governor ('prefect', not 'procurator') of Judaea from AD 26 to 36 under whom Christ was crucified. The Gospels represent him as at first well disposed towards Jesus, but as having finally yielded to the populace through fear of the consequences of an acquittal. The data as to his character contained in *Josephus and *Philo are in full accord with the NT narratives, their additional evidence showing him in anything but a favourable light. Lucius Vitellius, governor of Syria, removed him from his post for misgovernment. The tradition in *Eusebius (HE 2. 7) that he committed suicide may well be correct. Late legends embroidered this theme in the interest of Christianity, and also gave the name of his wife (Mt. 27: 19) as 'Claudia Procula'. In the *Coptic Church he is revered as a martyr (feast day, 25 June). See also previous entry.

The principal authorities, apart from the NT, include Philo, Leg. ad Gaium, 38; Josephus, Antiquitates, 18. 3–4, and Bell. Jud. 2. 8 f. An inscription discovered at *Caesarea in 1961 describes him as 'Prefect'; it was reported by A. Frova, 'L'iscrizione di Ponzio Pilato a Cesarea', Rendiconti dell'Istituto Lombardo, Accademia di Scienze e Lettere, Classe di Lettere e Scienze Morali e Storiche, 95 (1961), pp. 419–34. J.-P. Lémonon, Pilate et le gouvernement de la Judée: Textes et Monuments (Études Bibliques, 1981). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 357–62. D. R. Schwartz in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 395–401, s.v. 'Pontius Pilate'.

Pilgrim Fathers. The English founders of the colony of Plymouth, Massachusetts, who sailed from Holland and England in the Mayflower in Sept. 1620. The title 'Pilgrim Fathers' is comparatively modern. In 1630 William Bradford, the Governor, wrote of his company as 'pilgrims' (with a ref. to Heb. 11: 13), and such language was gradually adopted in New England, e.g. on 22 Dec. 1798 a feast of the 'Sons' or 'Heirs of the Pilgrims' was held at Boston, at which the memory of 'the Fathers' was celebrated. In this way the phrase 'Pilgrim Fathers' eventually came into common use.

G. D. Langdon, Pilgrim Colony: A History of New Plymouth 1620–1691 (Yale Publications in American Studies, 12; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1966).

Pilgrimage of Grace, the. A series of risings in Lincs, Yorks, and other counties of the N. of England, which took place between Oct. 1536 and Feb. 1537. The rising in Yorks, which was the most serious, was called by the participants 'this pilgrimage of grace for the commonwealth'. The religious element in the risings varied, and has been variously assessed. There was widespread hatred of T. *Cromwell and of government innovations in ecclesiastical matters (esp. the *dissolution of the lesser monasteries, and the attacks on the Sacraments and on saints' days in the *Ten Articles). In addition, there were economic and social grievances, such as resentment at new forms of taxation and at the threat to the rights of landowners posed by the Statute of Uses (1536). Dissatisfied conservative courtiers may also have had some part in fomenting unrest. In Lincs and Yorks some peers and gentry took the lead. R. *Aske, who led the Yorks rebellion, assembled *c.*30,000 men and treated with the government on equal terms; but promises of a parliament and a free pardon led him to disband his force and the King won him over at a private interview. Unrest, however, continued and might have become general, and it is unlikely that the King's intentions were at any stage honourable; a further outbreak in E. Yorks early in 1537 afforded a pretext for government action. At Henry's order over 200 rebels were hanged in the N. as a 'fearful spectacle' to others; Aske himself was charged with treason and hanged in chains.

M. H. and R. Dodds, The Pilgrimage of Grace 1536–37 and the Exeter Conspiracy 1538 (2 vols., Cambridge, 1915). A. G. Dickens, Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York 1509–1558 (1959; repr., with list of corrections, 1982), passim. C. [A.] Haigh, The Last Days of the Lancashire Monasteries and the Pilgrimage of Grace (Chetham Society, 3rd ser. 17; 1969). R. B. Smith, Land and Politics in the England of Henry VIII: The West Riding of Yorkshire: 1530–46 (Oxford, 1970). S. M. Harrison, The Pilgrimage of Grace in the Lake Counties, 1536–7 (Royal Historical Society Studies in History, 27; 1981). A. Ward, The Lincolnshire Rising 1536 (Nottingham [1986]). C. S. L. Davies, 'The Pilgrimage of Grace Reconsidered', Past and Present, 41 (1968), pp. 54–76, repr. in P. Slack (ed.), Rebellion, Popular Protest and the Social Order in Early Modern England (Past and Present Publications, Cambridge, 1984), pp. 16–38; id., 'Popular Religion and the Pilgrimage of Grace', in A. Fletcher and J. Stevenson (eds.), Order and Disorder in Early Modern England (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 58–91; M. E. James, 'Obedience and Dissent in Henrician England: The Lincolnshire Rebellion 1536', Past and Present, 48 (1970), pp. 3–78, repr., id., Society, Politics and Culture: Studies in Early Modern England (Past and Present Publications, Cambridge, 1986), pp. 188–269; G. R. Elton, 'Politics and the Pilgrimage of Grace', in B. C. Malament (ed.), After the Reformation: Essays in Honor of J. H. Hexter (Philadelphia, 1980), pp. 25–56, repr. in id., Studies in Tudor and Stuart Politics and Government, 3 (Cambridge, 1983), pp. 183–215; R. W. Hoyle, 'Thomas Master's Narrative of the Pilgrimage of Grace', Northern History, 21 (1985), pp. 53–79; S. J. Gunn, 'Peers, Commons and Gentry in the Lincolnshire Revolt of 1536', Past and Present, 123 (1989), pp. 52–79; M. L. Bush, ' "Enhancements and Importunate Charges": An Analysis of the Tax Complaints of October 1536', Albion, 22 (1990), pp. 403–19; id., ' "Up for the Commonweal": The Significance of Tax Grievances in the English Rebellions of 1536', EHR 106 (1991), pp. 299–318.

pilgrimages. Generally, journeys to holy places undertaken from motives of devotion in order to obtain supernatural help or as acts of penance or thanksgiving. However, the word for a pilgrim (ξένος, πάροικος; peregrinus) meant a 'resident alien', and the notion that Christians were 'strangers and pilgrims on the earth' (Heb. 11: 13), whose true citizenship was in heaven (Phil. 3: 20; cf. Eph. 2: 19, Heb. 13: 14), is one firmly rooted in the NT and further developed in the Epistle to *Diognetus (5–6, esp. 5. 5) and in some early ascetic writers. In accordance with this ideal, pilgrimage could be seen essentially, not as a journey to a particular place, but as exile from one's native land voluntarily undertaken as a form of asceticism, in imitation esp. of *Abraham, who in obedience to God left his native land (Gen. 12: 1). Such an understanding of pilgrimage reached its full development among Irish monks in the 6th and following cents. in the ascetic ideal of perpetual pilgrimage for the love of God which inspired men such as Sts *Columba, *Columbanus, and Fursey (d. *c.*650) to leave Ireland, so indirectly giving rise to extensive Irish influence upon W. Europe. From Carolingian times, however, monastic stability was emphasized and wandering monks discouraged, so gradually the practice lapsed, at least in the W. In the E. such pilgrimage continued and can be seen in the stranichestvo of 18th- and 19th-cent. Russia.

Meanwhile the idea of pilgrimage to special holy places had developed. The practice is common to most higher religions, e.g. Hinduism (Benares) and *Islam (Mecca) and is due to the natural desire of people to visit the places where their great heroes have lived and died and to the deep-seated conviction that certain localities are particularly favoured by the godhead. In Christianity the fact of the Incarnation is sufficient explanation of the early custom of visiting the places consecrated by the presence of Christ. The practice received a strong impulse from the conversion of *Constantine, followed by the visit of the Empress *Helena to *Jerusalem (326), and later in the 4th cent. from the example of St *Jerome. The 'Peregrinatio *Egeriae' (q.v.) is an illuminating account of one of these pilgrimages in the early Church. Almost on an equal footing with those to Palestine were pilgrimages to Rome, to the tomb of the Apostles, Sts *Peter and *Paul ('ad limina Apostolorum'), which came to be much frequented by Anglo-Saxon princes and nobles. To these the growing veneration of saints and images soon added many others, the most famous being Santiago de *Compostela. From the 8th cent. the practice of imposing a pilgrimage in the place of a public penance added to the number of pilgrims, so that throughout the Middle Ages they were organized on a grand scale and provided for by special ecclesiastical and civil legislation. Abuses which had already called forth the censure of St *Chrysostom and St Jerome increased with the popularity of the devotion and were satirized by *Erasmus in his 'Religious Pilgrimage'. The Reformation marked a notable setback, but the growth of popular piety in the period of the *Counter-Reformation led to a revival of the practice. In modern times *Lourdes has acquired an unrivalled fame as a place of pilgrimage, and in England the restoration of the shrines of the BVM at *Walsingham has once more attracted Anglican, RC, and Orthodox worshippers.

P. Geyer (ed.), Itinera Hierosolymitana Saeculi iv–viii (CSEL 39; 1898). Various texts also collected in Itineraria et Alia Geographica (CCSL 175–6; 1965). Convenient Eng. trs. by J. [D.] Wilkinson (ed.), Jerusalem Pilgrims before the Crusades (Warminster [1977]); id., with J. Hill and W. F. Ryan, Jerusalem Pilgrimage 1099–1185 (Hakluyt Society, 2nd ser. 167; 1988). B. Kötting, Peregrinatio Religiosa: Wallfahrten in der Antike und das Pilgerwesen in der alten Kirche (1950). H. von Campenhausen, Die asketische Heimatlosigkeit im altkirchlichen und frühmittelaltlichen Mönchtum (Sammlung gemeinverständlicher Vorträge und Schriften aus der Gebiet der Theologie, 149; Tübingen, 1930; repr. in id., Tradition und Leben (Tübingen, 1960, pp. 290–317; Eng. tr., 1968, pp. 231–51). K. Hughes, 'The Changing Theory and Practice of Irish Pilgrimage', JEH 11 (1960), pp. 143–51. A. Angenendt, Monachi Peregrini: Studien zu Pirmin und den monastischen Vorstellung des frühen Mittelalters (Münsterische Mittelalter-Schriften, 6; 1972). E. D. Hunt, Holy Land Pilgrimage in the Later Roman Empire AD 312–460 (Oxford, 1982). P. Maraval, Lieux saints et pèlerinage d'Orient: Histoire et géographie des origines à la conquête arabe (1985). Pellegrinaggi e Culto dei Santi in Europa fino alla 1ª Crociata (Convegni del Centro di Studi sulla Spiritualità medievale, 4; Todi, 1963); R. Oursel, Les Pèlerins du moyen âge (1963); L. Bonilla, Los peregrinos: Sus origenes, ritus y religiones (1965); A. Kendall, Medieval Pilgrims (1970); J. [P. C.] Sumption, Pilgrimage: An Image of Mediaeval Religion (1975). R. A. Fletcher, Saint James's Catapult (Oxford, 1984), pp. 78–101 (ch. 4: 'Pilgrimage and pilgrims, to Compostela and elsewhere'). L. de Sivry and M. Champagnac, *Dictionnaire géographique, historique, descriptif, archéologique des pèlerinages anciens et modernes, publié par l'Abbé Migne (2 vols., 1850–1). Bede Camm, OSB, Forgotten Shrines: An Account of some old Catholic Halls and Families in England and of Relics and Memorials of the English Martyrs (1910); id., Pilgrim Paths in Latin Lands (1923). L. Vázquez de Parga, J. M. Lacarra, and J. Uria Riu, Las peregrinaciones a Santiago de Compostela (3 vols., 1948–9). V. and E. Turner, Image and Pilgrimage in Christian Culture: Anthropological Perspectives (Oxford, 1978). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 65–176, s.v. 'Pèlerinages aux lieux saints', with bibl.; id. ibid., cols. 40–65, s.v. 'Pèlerinage à Rome'; S. M. Polan, M. C. McCarthy, and E. R. Labande in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 362–72, s.v.; A. Solignac, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1984), cols. 888–940, s.v. 'Pèlerinages'.

Pilgrim's Progress, The. The First Part of the masterpiece of J. *Bunyan (q.v.), written either during his long imprisonment in Bedford gaol (1660–72) or during a second six months' imprisonment in 1676–7, was published in February 1678 (NS); a fresh edition, with many additions, appeared later in the same year; while the Second Part, depicting 'the manner of setting out of Christian's wife and children', did not appear until 1684. Attempts to identify an underlying medieval or Renaissance model have failed. Bunyan had but the most meagre historical knowledge and interests; and it is far more probable that the work owes everything to his own originality.

Its unrivalled place in the world's religious literature rests on its artless directness, its imaginative power, the homeliness and rusticity of its method and its plainness of style, which give it its universal appeal, even to the most simple-minded. The persons and incidents encountered by Christian on his journey from the 'City of Destruction' to the 'Heavenly City'—'Evangelist', 'Mr Worldly-Wiseman', 'Mr Legality' and his son 'Civility', Mr 'Talkative, the son of one Saywell, who dwelt in Prating Row', 'Mr Facing-both-ways', and 'Greatheart', and, of places, the 'Slough of Despond', the 'Hill Difficulty', the 'House Beautiful' (supposed to have been modelled on an actual house in Houghton Park), the 'Valley of the Shadow of Death', and 'Vanity Fair'—have become part and parcel of the language of religion in England.

The book, which circulated at first mainly in uneducated circles and whose supreme qualities were only gradually recognized, has appeared in a vast number of editions, and been translated into well over 100 languages. It has also been the subject of many adaptations (issued under similar titles), for the most part wholly without independent merit. The well-known hymn, 'He who would valiant be', is a modification of some lines sung by the pilgrims on the way to the 'Enchanted Ground'.

Good modern edn. by J. B. Wharey (Oxford, 1928; rev. by R. Sharrock, 1960), with full discussion of earlier edns. and bibl.; convenient edn., with introd. by N. H. Keeble (World's Classics, 1984). U. M. Kaufmann, The Pilgrim's Progress and Tradition in Puritan Meditation (Yale Studies in English, 163; 1966). V. Newey (ed.), The Pilgrim's Progress: Critical and Historical Views (Liverpool English Texts and Studies, 1980). See also bibl. to BUNYAN, J.

Pilkington, James (*c.*1520–76), Bp. of *Durham. A native of Lancs, he went to St John's College, Cambridge, as an undergraduate; in 1539 he was elected a Fellow, and in 1559 became Master of it. In warm sympathy with the Reformation, he disputed at Cambridge, on 24 June 1549, against *transubstantiation. During the Marian Persecution he lived principally at Protestant centres on the Continent. Returning to England from Frankfurt after Mary's death in 1558, he now became a prominent member of the Protestant party in the C of E. He took an active part in the revision of the BCP and, as Master of St John's and Regius professor of divinity at Cambridge, upheld the tenets of Reformation theology in the university. Towards the end of 1560 he was appointed Bp. of Durham, thus becoming the first Protestant occupant of the see. His strong support of the Protestant cause in his diocese provoked much hostility and he and his family fled when the insurgents broke into Durham Cathedral during the Northern Rebellion of 1569. He upheld the temporal rights of his see with vigour, but failed as an administrator, allowing many of the buildings in his diocese to fall into decay. His writings include commentaries on *Haggai (Aggeus, 1560), *Obadiah (Abdias, pub. with a new edition of Aggeus, 1562), and *Nehemiah (1585, ed. posthumously by John Fox), as well as a treatise on 'The Burning of Paul's Church in London [4 June 1561] by Lightning'.

Works ed. J. Scholefield (*Parker Society, 1842), with biog. introd., pp. i–xvi. Episcopal Register ed. and calendared by G. Hinde (Surtees Society, 161, 1952, pp. 140–82). J. Pilkington, The History of the Lancashire Family of Pilkington and its Branches from 1066 to 1600 (2nd edn., Liverpool, 1894), pp. 43–9, with portrait, and text of his will, pp. 94–7. C. W. Sutton in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 293–5.

Pillar Saint. See STYLITE.

Pin, L. E. Du. See DUPIN, L. E.

Pionius, St (d. 250), martyr. He was executed at Smyrna during the *Decian persecution, having been arrested while celebrating the anniversary of the martyrdom of St *Polycarp. The 'Acta Pionii', which describe his death, were known to *Eusebius, and are reliable documents. It was he who was responsible for the preservation of the 'Martyrium Polycarpi', but the attribution to him of the extant Life of St Polycarp is probably incorrect, though its authenticity has been defended (e.g. by C. J. Cadoux). Feast day in the E., 11 Mar.; in Latin martyrologies, 1 Feb.

Eusebius, HE 4. 15. 46 f. The Gk. 'Acta' (contemporary, but with slight 4th-cent. revision) discovered by O. von Gebhardt in 1896 in the Cod. Ven. Marc. 359. Text in id., Acta Martyrum Selecta (1902), pp. 96–114; repr., with Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 137–67. J. den Boeft and J. Bremmer, 'Notiunculae Martyrologicae III. Some Observations on the Martyria of Polycarp and Pionius', VC 39 (1985), pp. 110–30, esp. pp. 113–30. Lat. text in AASS, Feb. 1 (1735), pp. 40–6. E. *Schwartz, De Pionio et Polycarpo (Göttingen, 1905); H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 28–59. H. Grégoire, P. Orgels, and J. Moreau, 'Les Martyres de Pionios et de Polycarpe', Académie Royale de Belgique, Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences

Morales et Politiques, 5th ser. 47 (1961), pp. 72–83. R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 460–92. L. Robert, Le martyre de Pionios, prêtre de Smyrne, posthumously ed. G. W. Bowersock and C. P. Jones (Washington, DC, 1994), incl. Greek text and Fr. tr. (pp. 21–45). C. J. Cadoux, Ancient Smyrna (1938), pp. 306–10 note. See also bibl. to POLYCARP, ST.

Pippin III. See PEPIN III.

Pirckheimer, Willibald (1470–1530), German humanist. Born at Eichstätt, he studied Greek at Padua (1489) and Law at Pavia (1492). In 1496 he became a town councillor at Nuremberg, where his house soon became a centre of learning. In 1499 he led the Nuremberg contingent in the Swiss War, of which he wrote a famous history, Bellum Helveticum (first pub. 1610). After his return he devoted himself to the translation of the Greek classics and Fathers into Latin, as well as to historical, astronomical, and artistic studies. He became a friend of A. *Dürer and a defender of J. *Reuchlin. At the beginning of the Reformation he favoured M. *Luther, whose chief opponent, J. *Eck, he attacked in the virulent pamphlet Eccius Dedolatus, now generally acknowledged to be his work. He regretted, however, Luther's break with the Church. In 1521, under the influence of his brilliant and devout sister, Charitas, abbess of the convent of *Poor Clares at Nuremberg, he asked to be absolved from the ban of excommunication which he had incurred as a follower of the Reformer. In his later years he completely abandoned Luther. His last work is an apology for the persecuted convent of his sister, entitled Oratio Apologetica (1529).

Collected edn. of Pirckheimer's works ed. M. Goldas (Frankfurt a.M., 1610). Modern edn. of Eccius Dedolatus by S. Szamatólski (Berlin, 1891); of his writings on the Swiss War (from the autograph in the Brit. Lib.) and his Autobiography by K. Rück (Munich, 1895). Correspondence ed. E. Reicke (vol. 1, Munich, 1940; vol. 2, ibid., 1956). Eng. tr. of Eccius Dedolatus by T. W. Best (Kentucky University Studies in the Germanic Languages and Literatures, 1; Lexington, Ky., 1971). Modern Life by E. Reicke ('Deutsche Volkheit', Jena, 1930). N. Holzberg, Willibald Pirckheimer: Griechischer Humanismus in Deutschland (Humanistische Bibliothek, Reihe 1, Band 41; 1981), with extensive bibl. P. Drews, Willibald Pirckheimers Stellung zur Reformation (1887). L. W. Spitz, The Religious Renaissance of the German Humanists (Cambridge, Mass., 1963), pp. 155–96. F. List in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 405–9; K. Löffler in CE 12 (1911), p. 109.

Pirminius, St (d. prob. 753), also 'Priminius', first Abbot of *Reichenau. His nationality is unknown but his monastic ideals seem to reflect a Frankish background, with strong Irish influences. He founded Reichenau (724) and other monasteries among the Alamanni in Baden and in Alsace, which became important centres of religious and cultural development. He is traditionally regarded as the author of the Scarapsus (called in one MS, Dicta Pirminii), a work of pastoral instruction which circulated widely in Carolingian times and which contains the earliest evidence for the present form of the *Apostles' Creed. Feast day, 3 Nov.

Life (9th cent.) and other material in AASS, Nov. 2 (pt. 1; 1894), pp. 2–56. G. Jecker, Die Heimat des hl. Pirmin des Apostels der Alamannen (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 13; 1927), with text of 'Dicta', pp. 34–73. 'Dicta' also ed., with Ger. tr., by U. Engelmann, OSB, Der heilige Pirmin und sein Missionsbuchlein (Constance [1959]; 2nd edn., with rev. introd. and slightly different title, Sigmaringen, 1976). A. Angenendt, Monachi peregrini: Studien zu Pirmin und den monastischen Vorstellungen des frühen Mittelalters (Münstersche Mittelalter-Schriften, 6; 1972). On his connections with the Apostles' Creed, see J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Creeds (1950; 3rd edn., 1972), esp. pp. 407–9. A. Angenendt in DIP 7 (1983), cols. 6–9, s.v.

Pirqe Aboth (Heb. פִּרְקֵי אָבוֹת, 'Sayings [lit. 'Sections'] of the Fathers'). A set of Jewish aphorisms assigned to some 60 different doctors ranging in date from the 3rd cent. BC to the 3rd cent. AD. Many are purely utilitarian, others are on a high moral level and constant stress is laid on the study of the *Torah. There are several points of contact with the sayings in the Gospels. The text is preserved as a tractate of the *Mishnah, and also in Jewish prayer books, where it is recommended for study on Sabbath afternoons in summer. An expanded form of the text is preserved in the so-called Aboth de Rabbi Nathan (one of the Minor Tractates of the Babylonian *Talmud), which exists in two versions (known as A and B).

Modern edns., with Eng. tr. and comm., by C. Taylor (Cambridge, 1877, 2nd edn., 2 vols., 1897–1900) and R. T. Herford (New York, 1925; 3rd edn., 1945). Eng. trs. also by R. T. Herford in R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 686–714, and in H. Danby, The Mishnah (ibid., 1933), pp. 446–61; also, with comm., by J. Neusner, Torah from our Sages: Pirke Avot (New York [1984]). Text of Aboth de Rabbi Nathan (both versions) ed. S. Schechter (Vienna, 1877); Eng. tr. of Version A by J. Goldin (Yale Judaica Series, 10; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1955); of Version B by A. J. Saldarini, SJ (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 11; Leiden, 1975).

Pisa, Council of. It was convoked by the cardinals in 1409 in order to end the *Great Schism which had divided W. Christendom since 1378. Though both Popes held rival councils, *Benedict XIII at Perpignan and Gregory XII at Cividale near *Aquileia, the assembly at Pisa was fairly representative, comprising besides a number of prelates the ambassadors of most European princes. After declaring itself canonically convoked and *oecumenical, the Council deposed both Popes as schismatics and heretics and elected Cardinal Peter Philargi, who took the name of *Alexander V, promised to work for the reform of the Church, and dissolved the Council.

The authority of the Council of Pisa has been much discussed. It is not normally recognized by the RC Church as oecumenical, partly on the ground of its not having been convoked by the Pope, but it was defended by J. *Gerson and P. *d'Ailly and later by the *Gallicans. Though it did not end the Schism, which, on the contrary, became worse than before by the existence of three Popes, it is generally admitted that it paved the way for the final solution found at the Council of *Constance (1417).

Hardouin, 8, cols. 1–204; Mansi, 26 (1784), cols. 1131–56, 27 (1784), cols. 1–502. Crit. edn. of the Acta by J. Vincke in RQ 46 (1941), pp. 81–331. Id., Briefe zum Pisaner Konzil (Beiträge zur Kirchen- und Rechtsgeschichte, 1; 1940); id., Schriftstücke zum Pisaner Konzil: Ein Kampf um die öffentliche Meinung (ibid. 3; 1942). Hefele and Leclercq, 7 (pt. 1; 1914), pp. 1–69. J. Lenfant, Histoire du concile de Pise, et de ce qui s'est passé de mémorable depuis ce concile jusqu'au concile de Constance (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1724). F. Bliemetzrieder, Das Generalkonzil im grossen abendländischen

Schisma (1904), esp. pp. 221–329. A. Landi, Il Papa Deposto (Pisa 1409): L'idea conciliare nel Grande Scisma (Turin [1985]). M. Harvey, 'England and the Council of Pisa: some new information', Annuarium historiae conciliorum, 2 (1970), pp. 263–83. J. Vincke in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 520 f., s.v.; L. E. Boyle, OP, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 384 f., s.v. See also works cited under CONCILIAR THEORY.

piscina (Lat., 'basin'). A small bowl with a drain (sacrarium) connected with the earth, usually in a niche in the wall on the S. side of the altar; it is intended for the ablutions of the priest's hands and of the chalice and paten at Mass. The niche is often furnished with a shelf to hold the cruets. The piscina is of medieval origin; in a few English parish churches and in the crypt of *Gloucester Cathedral, piscinas date back to the Norman period. Sometimes two piscinas were set side by side, the one perhaps being reserved for the washing of the priest's hands, the other for the cleansing of the sacred vessels. They are often richly decorated.

Rohault, 3 (1883), pp. 140–4. F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 143–63. I. McD. Jessiman, 'The Piscina in the English Medieval Church', Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd ser. 20–1 (1958), pp. 53–71.

Pisgah (Vulg. 'Phasga'). The mountain or mountain-range to the E. of the river *Jordan where *Moses was granted a sight of the Holy Land at the end of his life and the promise made that his descendants would possess it (Deut. 34: 1–4). Scholarly opinion identifies Pisgah with Ras Siyagha, NW of Mount Nebo. This revelation to Moses is the source of such phrases as a 'Pisgah view', a 'Pisgah prospect', for any vision or hope of which a man will not himself see the realization.

Pistis Sophia. This curious work, a product of 3rd-cent. Egyptian Christianity, is contained in a solitary *Coptic MS in the British Library (Add. 5114), formerly the property of Dr Anthony Askew (d. 1774). It purports to record instruction given by Jesus to certain disciples at the end of a 12-year sojourn upon earth after the Resurrection. Among other things, it relates the salvation of the personified 'Pistis Sophia' (i.e. 'Faith-Wisdom') from a demon named 'Self-Will'. The concluding chapters comprise a separate work of slightly earlier date. Both works appear to be translations from the Greek. Acc. to C. Schmidt, the MS dates from the later 4th cent.

Modern edn. of Coptic text by C. Schmidt (Copenhagen, 1925; repr., with Eng. tr., notes and bibl. by V. MacDermot, Nag Hammadi Studies, 9; Leiden, 1978). Earlier Eng. tr. by G. Horner, with introd. by F. Legge (London, 1924). A. *Harnack, Über das gnostische Buch Pistis Sophia (TU 7, Heft 2, 1891, pp. 1–114). H.-C. Puech in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 290–97; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 361–9. H. Leisegang in PW 20 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 1813–21; P. Perkins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 375 f., both s.v.

Pistoia, Synod of (1786). The synod met under the presidency of Scipione de' *Ricci, Bp. of Pistoia-Prato, to give support to the policy of Leopold I, Grand Duke of Tuscany (1765–90), who was strongly in favour of a reform of the Church along the lines pursued by *Gallicanism in France and *Josephinism in Austria-Hungary. The synod adopted the Four *Gallican Articles of 1682, based the authority of the Church upon the consent of the body as a whole, and that of bishops upon the assent of their clergy in synod, and held that the jurisdiction of a diocesan bishop is independent of the Pope. It exalted the civil power, and also decreed alterations in religious practice, requiring that there should be one altar only in each church, and one Mass only each Sunday; it also condemned the use of Latin in services, and the cult of the *Sacred Heart. Not unnaturally the proposals aroused popular opposition as well as official displeasure. In 1791 Ricci resigned his see; but on the issue of the bull '*Auctorem Fidei', condemning 85 of the Pistoian articles, he recanted.

The acts of the synod were pub. in 1786 in Lat. and Ital. at Florence, and in Fr. at Pistoia; 2nd edn. of the Lat. and Ital., Florence, 1788, and of the Fr., Pistoia and Paris, 1789. Mansi (cont. by J. B. Martin and L. Petit, AA), 38 (Paris, 1907), cols. 989–1282. Much primary information in de' Ricci's Memorie and in his letters. M. Rosa, 'Italian Jansenism and the Synod of Pistoia', Concilium, 2, pt. 7 (Sept. 1966), pp. 19–26, with refs. C. Lamioni (ed.), Il Sinodo di Pistoia del 1786: Atti del Convegno internazionale per il secondo centenario Pistoia-Prato, 25–27 settembre 1986 (Rome, 1991). In Eng., C. A. Bolton, Church Reform in 18th Century Italy (The Synod of Pistoia, 1786) (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, 29; The Hague, 1969), esp. pp. 55–114. J. Carreyre in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2134–230, s.v. 'Pistoie (Synode de)', with bibl.; B. Matteucci in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 388–90, s.v. See also bibl. to RICCI, S. DE' and AUCTOREM FIDEI; also works on PIUS VI.

Pithou, Pierre (1539–96), *Gallican theologian. He came of a family of distinguished jurists. Brought up a Calvinist and called to the bar at Paris in 1560, he was converted to Catholicism in 1573. Later he received legal appointments from *Henry IV, whom he supported in his struggles with the League. Besides important political writings, which include his Satire ménippée (1593) and editions of several texts of the classics, he prepared for publication (in conjunction with his brother François) a text of the Corpus Iuris Canonici* (issued in 1687). In his treatise, Les Libertés de l'Église gallicane (1594), the leading principles of Gallicanism were formulated for the first time. His extensive collection of MSS, some of them of great value for the text of the early conciliar canons, is now in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris.

Collected edn. of Pithou's Opera Sacra, Iuridica, Historica, Miscellanea, Paris, 1609, with Life by I. Mercerus, dated 1597, pp. 819–27. [P. J.] Grosley, Vie de Pierre Pithou; avec quelques mémoires sur son père, et sur ses frères (2 vols., 1756), vol. 1, and vol. 2, pp. 1–105. L. de Rosanbo, 'Pierre Pithou', Revue du Seizième Siècle, 15 (1928), pp. 279–305; id., 'Pierre Pithou érudit', ibid. 16 (1929), pp. 301–30. G. Goyau in CE 12 (1911), pp. 118 f., s.v.; J. Carreyre in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2235–8, s.v.

Pitra, Jean Baptiste François (1812–89), *patristic scholar. He was ordained priest in 1836, and his reputation as an archaeologist was soon established by his decipherment (1839) of the 'Inscription of Autun', a (probably 3rd-cent.) grave-inscription. In 1843 he was professed as a Benedictine at *Solesmes, and for a short time he gave valuable co-operation to J. P. *Migne in the editing of his Patrologiae. He then travelled widely in search of MSS, in 1858 at the behest of *Pius IX visiting several Russian libraries. His knowledge of many branches of patristic and Byzantine literature was unrivalled.

Having been created cardinal in 1863, in 1869 he was appointed Librarian of the *Vatican, in which capacity *Leo XIII employed him to catalogue the Palatine Greek codices in the library. His publications include Spicilegium Solesmense (4 vols., 1852–8) and Analecta Sacra (8 vols., 1876–91), both containing many previously unpublished patristic texts, and an important collection of canonical material, Iuris Ecclesiastici Graecorum Historia et Monumenta (2 vols., 1864–8).

Lives by F. *Cabrol, OSB (Paris, 1893), and A. Battandier (ibid., 1896). There is also a short biog. introd. by A. Battandier prefixed to the posthumously pub. vol. 6 of the Analecta Sacra (Paris and Rome, 1891), pp. viii–xix. List of his works in F. Cabrol, OSB (ed.), Bibliographie des Bénédictins de la Congrégation de France (Solesmes, 1889), pp. 37–52 and 197. J.-P. Laurant, Symbolisme et Écriture: Le Cardinal Pitra et la 'Clef' de Méliton de Sardis (1988). M. Ott in CE 12 (1911), pp. 119 f.; P. Séjourné, OSB, in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2238–45, s.v.

Pius I, St (d. *c.*154), Bp. of *Rome from *c.140. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis he was a native of *Aquileia and acc. to the *Muratorian Canon he was the brother of *Hermas, the author of the 'Shepherd', but nothing certain is known of his pontificate. The tradition that he was a martyr has no early authority. Feast day, 11 July, suppressed in 1969.

LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 132 f. J. Barmby in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 416 f., s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1612 f., s.v. 'Pie Ier'.

Pius II (Aeneas Sylvius) (1405–64), Pope from 1458. Enea Silvio de' Piccolomini, born of a poor noble family at Corsignano (near Siena), studied at Siena and Florence, where he became one of the greatest representatives of the humanism of his age. In 1432 he went to the Council of *Basle as secretary of Cardinal D. Capranica, and later served several other prelates in the same capacity; and in 1435 he was sent on a secret mission to *Scotland by Cardinal N. Albergati. On his return to Basle in the following year his personal influence on the Council began to increase; he supported the adversaries of Pope *Eugenius IV and worked for the antipope, Felix V, who made him his secretary in 1439 after Enea had refused to take orders on account of his dissolute life. In the service of Felix he became an eloquent advocate of the *Conciliar Theory set forth in his Libellus Dialogorum de Concilii Auctoritate (1440). Crowned Imperial poet by the Emp. Frederick III in 1442, he became his secretary in the same year. In 1444 he wrote his much-admired love story, Euryalus and Lucretia. In 1445 he left the party of the antipope, was absolved of excommunication, and reconciled to Eugenius IV, to whom he now rendered valuable services by winning over the Emperor to his side and breaking up the Electors' League. At the same time he reformed his moral life and, in 1446, received holy orders. Appointed Bp. of Trieste by *Nicolas V in 1447, he was translated to Siena in 1450. From the fall of *Constantinople in 1453 he began to work enthusiastically for a *Crusade. In 1456 he was created cardinal by *Callistus III, whom, after a fierce conflict in the *conclave, he succeeded in 1458.

Pius II now subordinated all other interests to the war against the Turks, who became a daily increasing menace to Europe. When the Congress of Mantua (1459–60) had revealed the selfishness and lack of solidarity of the European princes, the Pope took the initiative in proclaiming a three-year Crusade. At the end of the Congress he promulgated the bull 'Execrabilis' (18 Jan. 1460), in which he condemned the practice of appealing to a General Council. He won a victory for these doctrines in Louis XI's repeal of the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges in 1461, but Bohemia under Podiebrad and a great number of German princes were in more or less open revolt against Pius, invoking his own former views in their support. This led him to publish his bull, 'In minoribus agentes' (26 Apr. 1463), in which occur the famous words 'Aeneam rejicite, Pium suscipite', retracting his earlier political doctrines. As he could not expect more than a strictly limited support from the European powers, Pius resolved, in 1463, to put himself at the head of the Crusaders, but he died at Ancona soon afterwards. His character and motives have been variously judged; but he was at least one of the best Popes of his age.

Opera, pub. Basle, 1551; Orationes Politicae et Ecclesiasticae, ed. G. D. *Mansi (3 pts. in 2 vols., Lucca, 1755–9); Epistolae, ed. R. Wolkan (Fontes Rerum Austriacarum, 61, 62, 67, and 68; 1909–18). 'Aeneae Silvii Piccolomini Senensis qui postea fuit Pius II Pont. Max. Opera Inedita descripsit ex codicibus Chisianis vulgavit notisque illustravit J. Cugnoni', Atti della R. Accademia dei Lincei, ser. 3, Memorie della Classe di Scienze morali, storiche e filologiche, 8 (1883), pp. 319–686. Selection of his writings ed. B. Widmer (Basle and Stuttgart, 1960). The standard (though incomplete) edn. of his Comm. on the memorable events of his times is that pub. at Frankfurt, 1614; Eng. tr. by F. A. Gragg, with introd. and notes by L. C. Gabel (Smith College Studies in History, 22, nos. 1–2, 25, nos. 1–4, 30, 35, 43; Northampton, Mass., 1937–57). Abridged version ed. L. C. Gabel, Memoirs of a Renaissance Pope (London, 1960). Modern edns. of Lives by Giovanni Antonio Campano and B. *Platina ed. G. C. Zimolo (Raccolta degli Storici Italiani, nuova edizione, Tomo 3, Parte 2; Bologna, 1964) and by A. van Heck (ST 341; 1991); also, with Eng. tr., of his De Gestis Concilii Basiliensis Commentariorum Libri II by D. Hay and W. K. Smith (Oxford, 1967). G. Voigt, Enea Silvio de Piccolomini, als Papst Pius der Zweite und sein Zeitalter (3 vols., 1856–63). C. M. Ady, Pius II . . .: The Humanist Pope (1913). T. Buyken, Enea Silvio Piccolomini: Sein Leben und Wirken bis zum Episkopat (1931). G. Paparelli, Enea Silvio Piccolomini: Pio II (1950; 2nd edn. [1978]). R. J. Mitchell, The Laurels and the Tiara: Pope Pius II 1458–1464 (1962). B. Widmer, Enea Silvio Piccolomini in der sittlichen und politischen Entscheidung (Basler Beiträge zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 88; 1963). D. Maffei (ed.), Enea Silvio Piccolomini Papa Pio II: Atti del Convegno per il quinto centenario della morte e altri scritti (Siena, 1968). G. Bernetti, Saggi e Studi sugli Scritti di Enea Silvio Piccolomini Papa Pio II (Florence, 1971). C. Ugurgieri della Berardenga, Pio II Piccolomini con notizie su Pio III (Biblioteca dell'Archivio Storico Italiano, 18; 1973), pp. 31–498. L. Totaro, Pio II nei suoi Commentarii (Bologna [1978]). M. Harvey, England, Rome and the Papacy 1417–1464 (Manchester [1993]), esp. pp. 193–211. Pastor, 3 (1894), with full bibl. to date. Fliche and Martin, 15 (1951), esp. pp. 46–65, with bibl. E. Vansteenberghe in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1613–32, s.v. 'Pie II', with bibl.; G. B. Picotti in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1492–6, s.v. 'Pio II', with bibl.

Pius IV (1499–1565), Pope from 1559. Gian Angelo Medici, son of a Milanese family, after studying medicine and law at Pavia, came to Rome in 1527 where he held several offices at the Curia. Having been made Abp. of Ragusa in 1545, he was created cardinal by *Paul III in 1549, and under Julius III (1550–5) was Papal legate in Romagna. Elected Pope in 1559, he reversed the anti-

Imperial policy of his predecessor, *Paul IV, whose relatives he brought to trial. If he could be charged with nepotism this at least had beneficial results for the Church in the cardinalate of his nephew, St *Charles Borromeo. Probably his greatest achievement was the reassembling and successful conclusion of the Council of *Trent (1562–3), whose decrees he began to put into execution during the last two years of his reign. He published a new *Index in 1564, prepared the '*Roman Catechism', imposed the 'Professio Fidei Tridentina' on all holders of an ecclesiastical office, and reformed the *Sacred College. At the instance of the Emperor he conceded the chalice to the laity of Germany, Austria, Hungary, and several other countries (1564), to check the spread of Protestantism, a measure abolished by his successors. An unsuccessful attempt on his life was made in the last year of his pontificate, owing to the dissatisfaction of the heavily taxed subjects of the States of the Church. His artistic commissions contributed to the strains on the Papal finances.

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum S.R. Pontificum Taurinensis editio, 6 (Naples, 1860), pp. 489–566, and 7 (ibid., 1882), pp. 1–422. Docs. also in J. Šusta (ed.), Die römische Kurie und das Konzil von Trient unter Pius IV (4 vols., Vienna, 1904–14). P. Herre, Papsttum und Papstwahl im Zeitalter Philipps II. (Leipzig, 1907), pp. 33–102. G. Constant, Concession à l'Allemagne de la communion sous les deux espèces: Étude sur les débuts de la réforme catholique en Allemagne, 1548–1621 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 128; 2 vols., 1923). J. Birkner, 'Das Konzil von Trient und die Reform des Kardinalkollegiums unter Pius IV', Hist. J. 52 (1932), pp. 340–55. G. Smith, The Casino of Pius IV (Princeton, NJ, 1977). Pastor, 15 and 16 (1928), with bibl.; Fliche and Martin, 17 (1948), pp. 148–222. G. Constant in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1633–47, s.v. 'Pie IV', with bibl.; H. Jedin in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1496–8, s.v. 'Pio IV', with bibl. See also bibl. to TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Pius V, St (1504–72), Pope from 1566. Michele Ghislieri entered the *Dominican Order at the age of 14, was ordained priest in 1528, and subsequently lectured in philosophy and theology and held the offices of novice master and prior in his order. Conspicuous for his zeal and austerity of life, he was made Commissary General of the *Inquisition in 1551 by Cardinal G. P. Carafa who, having become Pope under the name of *Paul IV, appointed him Bp. of Nepi and Sutri in 1556 and created him cardinal in the following year, at the same time making him 'Inquisitor General of Christendom'. He opposed vigorously the nepotism of Paul's successor, *Pius IV (1559–1565), on whose death he was unanimously elected Pope (1566). Throughout his short but important pontificate he worked zealously for the reform of the Church. Continuing to observe the ascetical practices of the religious life—the Papal custom of wearing a white cassock is said to derive from the colour of his Dominican habit—he transformed his household into a model of regularity. In this task he was generously assisted by St *Charles Borromeo. He compelled bishops and clergy to accept the recommendations of the Council of *Trent, had the *Roman Catechism completed (1566) and translated into several languages, reformed the *Breviary (1568) and the *Missal (1570), and ordered a new complete edition of the works of St *Thomas Aquinas (1570), whom he had declared '*Doctor of the Church' in 1567. In his struggle against the spread of the Reformation he made successful use of the Inquisition in Italy, but his excommunication of Queen *Elizabeth I in 1570 is generally considered a mistake, as it seriously aggravated the position of RCs in England. Politically his reign was marked by the decisive victory over the Turks of the combined Papal, Spanish, and Venetian fleets at *Lepanto in 1571. He was canonized in 1712. Feast day, 30 Apr. (formerly 5 May).

Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum S.R. Pontificum Taurinensis editio, 7 (Naples, 1882), pp. 422–973. Epp. ed. F. Goubau (Antwerp, 1640); later collections of his Epp. ed. [J. L. A.] de Potter (Brussels, 1827), W. E. Schwartz (Paderborn, 1889), and L. Serrano, OSB (4 vols., Madrid, 1914). The oldest Life, anon. but almost certainly by Tommaso Porcacchi (d. 1585), ed., with other docs., by F. Van Ortroy in Anal. Boll. 33 (1914), pp. 187–215. Other early Lives by G. Catena (Rome, 1586), A. de Fuenmayor (Madrid, 1595; ed. L. Riber, ibid., 1953), and J. A. Gabutius (Rome, 1605; repr. in AASS, Mai. 1 (1680), pp. 617–714). Modern Lives by [A. F. P.] de Fallow (2 vols., Paris, 1844), G. Grente ('Les Saints', 1914), and L. Browne-Olf (Milwaukee, 1943). P. Herre, Papsttum und Papstwahl im Zeitalter Philipps II. (Leipzig, 1907), pp. 103–91. O. Braunsberger, SJ, Pius V und die deutschen Katholiken (Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, Ergänzungsheft, 108; 1912); C. Hirschauer, La Politique de St Pie V en France, 1566 1572 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 120; 1922). Pastor, 17 and 18 (1929), with full bibl. and notes on sources. R. Hedde, OP, and É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1647–53, s.v. 'Pie V'; H. Jedin in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1498–1500, s.v. 'Pio V'; A. Iszak, OP, and A. Silli, OP, in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (1968), cols. 883–901, s.v. 'Pio V', all with bibl.

Pius VI (1717–99), Pope from 1775. Giovanni Angelico Braschi, of a noble family of Cesena, was educated by the *Jesuits and, after having studied law, became secretary to Cardinal Raffo in 1740. Appointed Papal secretary and Canon of *St Peter's in 1755, he was ordained priest three years later. In 1766 *Clement XIII made him treasurer of the Roman Church, and his successor, *Clement XIV, created him cardinal in 1773. Elected Pope in 1775, his rule was marked by the struggle against the rising tide of atheism and secularism. Local Roman affairs, such as the draining of the Pontine marshes, the reorganization of the finances of the States of the Church, and the embellishment of the Vatican Museum and St Peter's, at first claimed his attention. Before long he became involved in a struggle against '*Febronianism' (q.v.); and though J. N. von *Hontheim made his submission in 1778, his ideas led to practical results in the ecclesiastical reforms of Joseph II (see JOSEPHINISM), who forbade the Austrian bishops to apply for dispensations to Rome and secularized a great number of monasteries. A visit of Pius to Vienna, in 1782, remained without result; Joseph's example was followed by his brother, Leopold, Grand Duke of Tuscany; and Febronianist doctrines were adopted in 1786 at the Synod of *Pistoia under the leadership of Bp. Scipione de' *Ricci. In 1794 Pius formally condemned Febronian teaching in the bull '*Auctorem fidei' (q.v.). Meanwhile, under pressure from Catherine II, Pius, who had already granted Frederick II an exemption from the decree of suppression for individual Jesuits in Silesia, permitted the continuation of the Jesuits in *Russia (1783–4). In 1791, after Louis XVI had sanctioned the *Civil Constitution of the Clergy, a decree subjecting the French clergy to the secular authorities (1790), Pius condemned it as schismatical and heretical and suspended all priests and prelates who had taken the civil oath. In the same year France annexed the Papal territories of *Avignon and the Venaissin. The strained relations between the two powers led to the occupation of the States of the Church by Napoleon, and the occupation was terminated only by the Peace of Tolentino (1797), which required the surrender of Ferrara, Bologna, and the Romagna, and, in addition, many valuable MSS and works of art. In the same year the French general, Duphot, was killed in an attempt to stir up revolution in Rome, whereupon Berthier occupied the city in the following year and declared it a republic. Pius VI was taken prisoner and, in spite of his age and infirmity, removed first to Siena and Florence, then (1799) to Bologna, and thence through several other places across the Alps to Briançon, Grenoble, and Valence, where he died. In his troubled reign Papal prestige was at its lowest before its regeneration in the 19th century.

Bullarii Romani Continuatio, coll. A. A. Barbèri, 5–10 (Rome, 1842–5). Collectio Brevium atque Instructionum SS.D.N. Pii Papae VI quae ad Praesentes Gallicanarum Ecclesiarum Calamitates pertinent (2 pts., Augsburg, 1796). [J. F. de Bourgoing], Mémoires historiques et philosophiques sur Pie VI et son pontificat (2 vols. [1799]; 2nd edn. [1800]; Eng. tr., 1799). P. P. Wolf, Geschichte der römischkatholischen Kirche unter der Regierung Pius des Sechsten (7 vols., 1793–1802). G. B. Tavanti, Fasti del S.P. Pio VI (3 vols., 1804). I. Bertrand, Le Pontificat de Pie VI et l'athéisme révolutionnaire (2 vols., 1879). J. M. Gendry, Pius VI (2 vols. [1906]). G. Soranzo, Peregrinus Apostolicus: Lo spirito pubblico e il viaggio di Pio VI a Vienna (Pubblicazioni della Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore, 5th ser. 14; 1937). A. Latreille, L'Église catholique et la Révolution française, 1, Le pontificat de Pie VI et la crise française, 1775–1799 (1946). E. E. Y. Hales, Revolution and Papacy 1769–1846 (1960), pp. 45–129. Pastor, 39–40 (1952–3), with full refs. Fliche and Martin, 20 (1949), pp. 17–158. G. Bourgin in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1653–69, s.v. 'Pie VI', with bibl.; A. Latreille in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 398–400, s.v.

Pius VII (1742–1823), Pope from 1800. Luigi Barnaba Chiaramonti entered the *Benedictine Order in 1756, making his profession in 1758 and taking the name of Gregorio. In 1775 *Pius VI appointed him abbot of San Callisto at Rome and, in 1782, Bp. of Tivoli. Three years later he was translated to Imola and created cardinal, and in 1800 elected Pope at Venice. The main problem confronting him concerned the relations between Church and State in France. By the *Concordat of 1801 (q.v.), negotiated between Napoleon and Cardinal *Consalvi, religion had been restored in France; but the success of the plan was vitiated by the secretly drawn-up *Organic Articles (q.v.), published simultaneously, against the Gallican tendencies of which the Pope protested in vain. A concordat with the Italian republic followed in 1803; and at the same time the Church in Germany was seriously threatened by extensive secularizations. In 1804 Napoleon was proclaimed Emperor and the Pope accepted his invitation to consecrate him in Paris, but did not obtain the hoped-for concessions. In 1805 Napoleon occupied Ancona, despite the protests of the Pope, who had to dismiss Consalvi in the following year. When, in 1808, a French army entered Rome, Pius VII considered himself a prisoner and refused negotiations, and in 1809 the States of the Church were incorporated into the French Empire. When Pius in protest excommunicated the responsible parties by the bull 'Quum memoranda', he was arrested and deported to Grenoble and thence to Savona. In 1811, separated from all his advisers, he assented to a new mode of the institution of bishops by the metropolitans without cognizance of the Pope, which had been propounded by the Council of Paris convoked by Napoleon in the same year. In 1812 he was brought to Fontainebleau, where, after a long illness and under pressure, he made far-reaching concessions to the Emperor, published by the latter in 1813 as the 'Concordat of Fontainebleau' and revoked by the Pope two months later. After the fall of Napoleon, Pius VII returned to Rome in 1814 and, in the same year, re-established the *Jesuits. The Congress of Vienna (1815) restored the States of the Church, which were reorganized by Consalvi. New concordats were concluded with Bavaria and Sardinia in 1817, with Naples and Russia in 1818, and with Prussia in 1821. In 1821 the Pope also published a bull against the *Carbonari, who were responsible for the revolution in Naples. Despite his political preoccupations, Pius VII favoured art and science; he made valuable additions to the *Vatican Library and established new chairs in the Roman College. His reign marks a transition between the troubles of the French Revolution and the quiet pontificates that were to follow.

Bullarii Romani Continuatio, coll. A. A. Barbèri, 11–15 (Rome, 1846–53). [A. F.] Artaud [de Montor], Histoire du Pape Pie VII (2 vols., 1836). M. H. Allies, The Life of Pope Pius VII ('Quarterly Series', 17; 1875). J. Leflon, Pie VII: Des abbayes bénédictines à la papauté [1958]. [J. O. B. de C.] d'Haussonville, L'Église romaine et le premier empire, 1800 1814 (5 vols., 1868–9). A. Latreille, L'Église catholique et la Révolution française, 2, L'Ère napoléonienne et la crise européenne, 1800–1815 (1950). E. E. Y. Hales, Revolution and Papacy 1769 1846 (1960), pp. 130–312, passim; id., Napoleon and the Pope: The Story of Napoleon and Pius VII (1962). L. Pasztor, 'Per la storia del "Concordato" di Fontainebleau', in R. Aubert and others (eds.), Chiesa e Stato nell'ottocento: Miscellanea in onore di Pietro Pirri, 2 (Padua, 1962), pp. 597–603. M. Chappin, SJ, Pie VII et les Pays-Bas: Tensions religieuses et tolérance civile 1814–1817 (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 49; Rome, 1984). Fliche and Martin, 20 (1949), pp. 161–376, with bibl. pp. 9 f. G. Bourgin in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1670–83, s.v. 'Pie VII', with bibl.; J. Leflon in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 400–4.

Pius IX (1792–1878), Pope from 1846. Giovanni Maria Mastai-Ferretti was ordained priest in 1819, took part in a Papal mission to Chile in 1823–5, was appointed Abp. of Spoleto in 1827, Bp. of Imola in 1832, and created cardinal in 1840. On the death of *Gregory XVI (1846), who had estranged the Italian people by his oppressive measures, he was elected Pope because of his reputation as a partisan of liberal ideas. He inaugurated his reign with a general amnesty of political prisoners and exiles and showed himself favourable to the movement of national unity; but his concessions came too late, and when, in 1848, he refused to make war on Austria, he lost popular favour and, in November of the same year, was besieged by the revolutionaries in the Quirinal. He escaped to Gaeta, whence he addressed an appeal to the Catholic European powers for the restoration of the Papal State; this was effected after the occupation of Rome by the French army in 1849. From his return to Rome in 1850, Pius abandoned his liberal attitude in politics. He saw his temporal power gradually decrease, as the Romagna was lost in 1859 and Umbria and the Marches in 1860, until, after the seizure of Rome by Victor Emmanuel on 20 Sept. 1870, he was virtually deprived of all temporal sovereignty by the Law of *Guarantees of 13 May 1871, against which the Pope solemnly protested.

Though an apparent failure from a political point of view, the pontificate of Pius IX was marked by its spiritual and ecclesiastical achievements. The erection of many new dioceses and missionary centres, as well as the restoration of the hierarchy in England (1850) and the Netherlands (1853) and the conclusion of *concordats with many European and American governments, testified to a vigorous life within the Church. His definition of the Immaculate Conception of the BVM in 1854 provided a stimulus to Catholic devotion, while the issue of the Syllabus Errorum and the encyclical Quanta Cura* in 1864 supported the traditional beliefs of Catholicism by condemning contemporary rationalism, pantheism, religious liberalism, and other forms of modern philosophy. His reign was marked by a tendency to centralize doctrinal and ecclesiastical authority in the Papacy. The most important event was the definition of Papal infallibility by the First *Vatican Council of 1869–70; though this gave rise to the *Old Catholic schism and the *Kulturkampf in Germany, it may be argued that the increased authority it added to the Papacy on the spiritual plane in the end more than compensated for the loss in temporal dominion that marked Pius IX's pontificate. He was the first Pope whose reign exceeded the 25 years traditionally ascribed to the rule of St Peter.

His Acta were pub., 7 vols., Rome [*c.*1854–78]; the official docs. for the latter part of his pontificate are also in ASS. G. Maioli (ed.), Pio IX: Da vescovo a pontefice. Lettere al Card. Luigi Amat, agosto 1839–luglio 1848 (Collezione storica del Risorgimento, 2nd ser. 38; 1949). The numerous Lives incl. those by A. de Saint-Albin (Paris, 1860; 2nd edn., 1870; new edn., with continuation, 3 vols., 1878), J. M. Stepischnegg (2 vols., Vienna, 1879), F. Hayward (Paris, 1948), E. E. Y. Hales (London, 1954), A. Serafini (vol. 1 [covering 1792–1846] only pub., Vatican, 1958; based on unpub. sources), P. Fernessole (2 vols., Paris, 1960–3), G. Martina, SJ (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 38, 51, and 58; Rome, 1974–90), and A. Polverari (Studi Piani, 4–6; Vatican, 1986–88; see other vols. in this series connected with the cause for his beatification). R. Aubert, Le Pontificat de Pie IX, 1846–1878 (Fliche and Martin, 21; 1952), C. Falconi, Il Giovane Mastai: Il Futuro Pio IX dall'Infanzia a Senigallia alla Roma della Restaurazione 1792–1827 (Milan, 1981). A. M. Ghisalberti, Nuove ricerche sugli inizi del pontificato di Pio IX e sulla consulta di stato (Regio Istituto per la Storia del Risorgimento italiano, Biblioteca Scientifica, 2nd ser. 30; 1939). P. Pirri, SJ, Pio IX e Vittorio Emanuele II dal loro carteggio privato (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 8, 16, 17, 24, 25; 1944–61). D. Demarco, Pio IX e la rivoluzione romana del 1848 (Collezione storica del Risorgimento italiano, 2nd ser. 36; 1947). A. B. Hasler, Pius IX. (1846–1878), Päpstliche Unfehlbarkeit und 1. Vatikanisches Konzil (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1977); id., Wie der Papst unfehlbar wurde (Munich, 1979; Eng. tr., Garden City, NY, 1981). G. Mollat in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1686–716, s.v. 'Pie IX'; R. Aubert in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 405–8, s.v.

Pius X, St (1835–1914), Pope from 1903. Giuseppe Melchior Sarto, born of a poor family at Riese in Upper Venetia, entered the seminary at Padua in 1850, was ordained priest in 1858, became chaplain at Tombolo in the same year, and, in 1867, archpriest of Salzano. In 1875 he was made canon of Treviso, where he was also chancellor to the bishop and spiritual director of the episcopal seminary, and, in 1884, he was appointed Bp. of Mantua. In 1893 *Leo XIII created him cardinal and Patr. of *Venice. Elected Pope in 1903, he chose as his guiding principle 'instaurare omnia in Christo' (Eph. 1: 10, quoted in his encyclical of 4 Oct. 1903), with the implication that, in contrast to his predecessor Leo XIII, he intended to be a religious rather than a political Pope. Events, however, frequently forced him into political action. When, in 1905, the French government effected the separation of Church and State and proposed the formation of the 'associations cultuelles', which were to take possession of the remaining Church property and to be responsible to the civil authorities, Pius X condemned them in two encyclicals (1906), a brave step which, at the price of material ruin, secured the independence of the Church in France from State interference. In 1911 *Portugal followed the example of the French government.

In the field of social policy, Pius X laid down the principles of '*Catholic Action' in his encyclical 'Il fermo proposito' (1905). Social action and the solution of the labour problem were only parts, though important parts, of the whole of Catholic Action, while its chief aim was to restore Christ to His rightful place within the home, the schools, and society in general. In 1910 he condemned the 'Sillon', a French social movement which seemed to be attempting to spread and adapt the ideas of the French Revolution. He saw another grave danger, threatening the purity of Catholic doctrine itself, in the spread of *Modernism, which he condemned in the decree '*Lamentabili' and the encyclical 'Pascendi' of 1907, and again by a motu proprio ('Sacrorum antistitum') three years later which introduced the anti-Modernist oath, and as an antidote to the new errors particularly recommended the study of *Thomism.

In addition to these protective measures, Pius X undertook a series of difficult reforms. Among them were the codification of the new *canon law (promulgated under *Benedict XV in 1917), which occupied almost the whole of his reign, and administrative changes which involved esp. the *Roman Congregations. His interest in liturgical matters showed itself in the Breviary Reform and in his decrees on sacred music, notably the motu proprio of 1903 restoring the Gregorian chant to its traditional place in the Liturgy. Pius X became particularly popular as the 'Pope of frequent Communion', and by recommending daily Communion in the decree of 1905 and children's Communion a year later, he gave a lasting stimulus to the spiritual life of the faithful and laid the foundations of the modern *Liturgical Movement. He was venerated as a saint even during his lifetime, and many miracles have been attributed to his intercession. He was beatified in 1951 and canonized in 1954. Feast day, 21 Aug.

Acta pub. Rome, 5 vols., 1905–14. Letters, collected by N. Vian (Rome [1955]). Lives by F. A. Forbes (London, 1918), R. Bazin (Paris [1928]; Eng. tr., 1928), K. Burton (Dublin, 1951), C. Ledré (Paris, 1952), P. Fernessole (2 vols., ibid. [1952–3]), and C. Maurras (ibid. [1953]). An Eng. tr. of Card. R. *Merry del Val's Memories of Pope Pius X was pub. London, 1939. P. Zovatto, Ricerche su S. Pio X (Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Magistero dell'Università di Trieste, 3rd ser. 20; 1988). É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 1716–40, s.v. 'Pie X', with refs.; C. Ledré in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 408–11, s.v.; A. Niero in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1429–32, s.v. 'Pie X'.

Pius XI (1857–1939), Pope from 1922. Achille Ambrogio Damiano Ratti was ordained priest in 1879, taught dogmatics at the Grand Seminary at Milan from 1883 to 1888, and in 1888 was elected to the College of Doctors at the *Ambrosian Library, of which he became prefect in 1907. While he was at Milan he applied himself to editing the *Ambrosian Missal and other texts. In 1912 he was made vice-prefect of the *Vatican Library. At the end of the war of 1914–18 he became Apostolic Visitor to Poland, in 1919 Nuncio and Titular Abp. of Lepanto, in 1921 Cardinal and Abp. of Milan, and in 1922 he was elected Pope. He made 'the restoration of all things in Christ', symbolized in the institution of the Feast of *Christ the King (1925), the chief object of his pontificate. His great encyclicals were directed to the same end: 'Divini illius magistri' (1929) deals with education; 'Casti connubii' (1930), which condemned *contraception, sought to restore a proper respect for married life; while the best known, '*Quadragesimo Anno' (1931), is concerned with social problems. The most important political event of his reign was the *Lateran Treaty (1929; q.v.). The spiritual life of the Church was fostered by the celebration of the Jubilee in 1925 which became the occasion of many canonizations (incl. that of St *Teresa of Lisieux and St Peter *Canisius), by his support of the apostolate of the laity in the *Catholic Action movement, and by several encyclicals recommending increased religious devotion. The last years of the Pope were overshadowed by the development of events in Europe, esp. the persecution of the Church in Germany (encyclical: '*Mit brennender Sorge') and the spread of atheism and neo-paganism.

His official acts are pr. in the AAS for the years of his pontificate. Eng. tr. of selected encyclicals to date, with introd., by J. H. Ryan (St Louis and London, 1927). A collection of his Scritti storici was pub., Florence [*c.*1932], with introd. by P. Bellezza, 'L'opera scientifica e letteraria di Achille Ratti', pp. vii–xlii; six of these essays were tr. into Eng. by E. Bulloch as Essays in History written between the Years 1896 1912 (London [1934]). Discorsi, ed. D. Bertetto (3 vols., 1960–1). P. Hughes, Pope Pius the Eleventh (1937). C. Colombo and others (eds.), Pio XI nel trentesimo della morte (1939–1969) (Milan, 1969), incl. bibl. by A. Rimoldi, pp. 3–19. A. P. Frutaz in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1531–43, s.v. 'Pio XI'; G. Schwaiger in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 411–14, s.v. See also works cited under LATERAN TREATY.

Pius XII (1876–1958), Pope from 1939. Educated at the *Gregorian University and the Roman Seminary, Eugenio Pacelli was ordained priest in 1899 and entered the Papal Secretariat of State under *Leo XIII in 1901. In 1914 he was appointed Secretary of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs and, three years later, titular Abp. of Sardes and Apostolic *Nuncio to Bavaria. In this last capacity he took an active part in the peace efforts of *Benedict XV. In 1920 he became Nuncio to the German Republic at Berlin, where, as doyen of the Diplomatic Corps, he exercised considerable influence. In 1924 he concluded a favourable concordat with Bavaria, in 1929 a less satisfactory one with Prussia. In 1930 *Pius XI created him cardinal and appointed him Papal Secretary of State. In 1933 he promoted a concordat with the National Socialist German government, though its constant violations by Hitler and the deteriorating position of the Church in Germany soon created grave difficulties. Between 1934 and 1938 he undertook many journeys as Cardinal Legate to *Eucharistic Congresses in Europe and America, and on other missions.

On 2 Mar. 1939 Pacelli was elected Pope and took the name of Pius XII. His elevation, contrary to the tradition against electing the Papal Secretary of State, reflected the need for an experienced politician and diplomat to guide the Church through the grave dangers that threatened. His first encyclical, '*Summi Pontificatus' (20 Oct. 1939), appealed to mankind to restore to God His due place in the life of the world and to unite in the defence of Natural Law, while his 'Christmas Allocution' (1939) laid down the principles of a lasting peace in 'Five Peace Points': (1) recognition of the right of every nation to life and independence; (2) true disarmament both material and spiritual; (3) institution of an international court to guarantee the peace; (4) recognition of the rights of minorities; and (5) the acquisition of a true Christian spirit among the nations. His alleged 'silence' in the face of Nazi atrocities has been the subject of criticism. The documents suggest that his experience of dealing with the German Government over Poland had convinced him that a public stand would only provoke worse persecution. Throughout the Second World War, and afterwards, he laboured to relieve distress, esp. among prisoners. In 1943 he issued the encyclical 'Mystici Corporis Christi' (29 June), emphasizing the unity of the Church as the Mystical Body of Christ. In the same year 'Divino Afflante Spiritu' (30 Sept.) stressed the need to follow the literal meaning of Scripture whenever possible, but, by also admitting the legitimacy of the study of literary forms, the encyclical opened the way for a more liberal approach to biblical criticism by Catholic scholars. The encyclical 'Mediator Dei' (20 Nov. 1947) expressed sympathy with the desire for the use of the vernacular in liturgy and gave conditional support to the *Liturgical Movement. In 1951 he restored the *Paschal Vigil Service and in the following years gradually reformed the entire liturgy for *Holy Week. His apostolic constitution 'Christus Dominus' (16 Jan. 1953) standardized the relaxations in the *Eucharistic fast which had been introduced during the War; together with the further relaxations permitted by his motu proprio 'Sacram Communionem' (19 Mar. 1957), this made possible the widespread introduction of *Evening Masses. Other important acts of his pontificate included the creation of an unprecedentedly large number of cardinals (32 in 1946 and 24 in 1953), drawn from a wide variety of countries, 33 canonizations, the initiation of the excavations under *St Peter's, Rome, the publication of the encyclical '*Humani Generis' (12 Aug. 1950) directed against certain modern tendencies in RC theology, and the definition of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM in the apostolic constitution '*Munificentissimus Deus' (1 Nov. 1950). An instruction of the *Holy Office, 'Ecclesia Catholica', on 20 Sept. 1949 recognized that the desire for unity of those engaged in the *Ecumenical Movement was due to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit and under strict conditions allowed RC experts to join with other Christians in discussions on faith and morals. Pius also attempted to foster relations with the Eastern *Orthodox and *Uniat Churches in the encyclicals 'Orientalis Ecclesiae Decus' (9 Apr. 1944) and 'Orientales Omnes Ecclesiae' (23 Dec. 1945).

Official docs. are pr. in the AAS for the years of his pontificate. Actes et documents du Saint Siège relatifs à la Seconde Guerre Mond- iale, ed. P. Blet and others (11 vols., Rome, 1965–81; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 1968). G. R. Pilote, Guide de consultation des discours du Pape Pie XII (Ottawa, 1963). Studies incl. those of O. Halecki (London, 1954), R. Galeazzi-Lisi (Paris, 1960), P. Rassinier (ibid., 1965), and M. O'Carroll (Dublin, 1980). S. Friedländer, Pie XII et le III^e Reich: Documents (1964; Eng. tr., 1966); C. Falconi, Il silenzio di Pio XII (Milan, 1965; Eng. tr., 1970); V. Conzemius, 'Églises chrétiennes et totalitarisme national-socialiste', RHE 63 (1968), pp. 437–503, esp. pp. 459–503; I. Garzia, Pio XII e l'Italia nella seconda guerra mondiale (Biblioteca di Storia Contemporanea; Brescia, 1988). J. Chelini and J.-B. d'Onorio (eds.), Pie XII et la Cité: . . . Actes du Colloque d'Aix-en-Provence . . . (Aix and Marseilles [1988]), with preface by O. Rossi, 'Pie XII dans l'Église', pp. 11–31. R. Leiber, SJ, in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 414–18, s.v.

Placebo (Lat., 'I will please'). A traditional title for the *Vespers of the Dead, derived from the *antiphon (Ps. 116 [114]: 9; Vulg. Placebo Domino in regione vivorum) with which the office used to open. See also DIRGE.

Placet. See EXEQUATUR.

Placidia, Galla. See GALLA PLACIDIA.

plainsong. The traditional music of the Latin rite is generally known as Gregorian chant, after St *Gregory the Great, although in its surviving form it has little, if anything, to do with him. It was paralleled in the early Middle Ages by a number of other rites and their music, including the *Ambrosian (or Milanese), the ancient *Gallican, the *Mozarabic, and the *Old Roman, to which may be added that from Benevento in S. Italy, and perhaps others. Of these the Gallican has virtually disappeared, and the Mozarabic is mostly indecipherable; but substantial fragments of the Beneventan (suppressed in favour of the Gregorian in the 11th cent.) have been uncovered, while the Ambrosian and the Old Roman survive complete in fully legible form.

The origins of Gregorian chant and its relation to the Old Roman are disputed. Acc. to one view, it developed in the time of Pope *Vitalian (657–72) as a complement to a newly established Papal 'court' liturgy, leaving the Old Roman as the chant of the basilicas and titular churches; according to another, it emerged in Gaul as an unintended consequence of the imposition of the Roman rite there, and was subsequently exported back to Rome in that form. The former theory accords better with the liturgical and historical evidence, though it may be that the Roman chant of the 7th cent. was a much simpler affair from which the Old Roman and the Gregorian developed independently.

Plainsong as generally understood is entirely monophonic and was probably always sung in unmeasured time values, though this has been disputed. Its tonal organization is based on a system of modes, or scales corresponding to the white notes of the piano and centred for the most part on the notes D, E, F, or G. A form of staff-notation emerged in the 11th cent., from which period melodies are fully decipherable; those of the Gregorian chant can be shown to go back to *c.*900 in the form of neumes, which show the melodic contour but not the exact pitches. Before that, except for isolated examples, the oral tradition had sufficed.

The repertory of plainsong grew enormously in the later Middle Ages, but many additional melodies, particularly *tropes and *sequences, were eliminated in the *Tridentine reform. The traditional plainsong was deliberately altered to make it conform to humanist ideals, for example by redistributing the notes so that lengthy melismas fell on accentuated syllables. In the 19th cent. a restoration of the medieval tradition was pursued, largely through the efforts of the monks of *Solesmes under the leadership of Dom Joseph Pothier (1835–1923) and his successors. The modern study of plainsong has resulted in numerous editions, both scholarly and practical, and a huge literature; but since the Second *Vatican Council plainsong has ceased to be the normal accompaniment of the Roman liturgy except in the few communities (such as *Beuron in Germany and Solesmes in France) where it is especially cultivated. However, the singing of plainsong to translated texts, already widely used in the Anglican Communion from the time of the *Tractarian movement, has in recent years also gained acceptance in the RC Church.

The corpus of plainsong is contained chiefly in two books, the *Gradual for the Mass and the *Antiphonal for the Choir Office; other chants are found in the *Manuale, the *Pontifical, and the *Processional.

Facsimiles of the principal musical MSS of the Gregorian, Ambrosian, Mozarabic, and Gallican chants are being pub. by the Benedictines of Solesmes in the series Paléographie musicale (Solesmes etc., 1889 ff.; since 1969 at Berne); the most reliable of the numerous modern practical edns. are the Antiphonale monasticum (Tournai etc., 1934) and the Graduale Triplex (Solesmes, 1979), both ed. by the monks of Solesmes. P. [J.] Wagner, Einführung in die gregorianischen Melodien (Freiburg, 1895; Eng. tr. of pt. 1 (from 2nd edn.) [1907]; expanded edn., 3 vols., Leipzig, 1911–21). W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958]; D. Hiley, Western Plainchant: A Handbook (Oxford, 1993). S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, 'The Urban and Papal Rites in Seventh and Eighth-Century Rome', Sacris Erudiri, 12 (1961), pp. 411–87. P. Combe, OSB, Histoire de la restauration du chant grégorien d'après des documents inédits (Solesmes, 1969). H. Hucke, 'Toward a New Historical View of Gregorian Chant', Journal of the American Musicological Society, 33 (1980), pp. 437–67; D. G. Hughes, 'Evidence for the Traditional View of the Transmission of Gregorian Chant', ibid. 40 (1987), pp. 377–404. G. Reese, Music in the Middle Ages (New York, 1940; London, 1941), pp. 57–197. D. Hiley in D. Arnold (ed.), The New Oxford Companion to Music (1983), pp. 1447–56, s.v. 'Plainchant'.

planeta. An alternative name, found already in the Fourth Council of *Toledo (633; can. 28), for the *chasuble. The Lat. word perhaps comes from the Gk. πλανήτης, 'wanderer', signifying a garment originally worn when travelling.

Plantin Bibles. See following entry.

Plantin, Christopher (*c.*1520–89), printer. Born of humble parents, prob. in Touraine, Plantin was brought up in Lyons, became a bookbinder in Caen, and learned to print while living in Paris. Increasing pressure against printers suspected of heresy may account for his leaving France; in 1548 he settled in the wealthy commercial port of Antwerp. There, despite much competition and early difficulties arising from his connection with the *Familists, within a few years he built up the largest printing and publishing business in Europe. He established his commanding position through utilizing the best in all branches of publishing. The soundest texts, edited by some of the leading scholars of the age, printed with types and ornaments designed and cast by the most skilful craftsmen, and often illustrated by Flemish engravers, earned him fame. His most celebrated production was his Antwerp *Polyglot Bible in 8 folio volumes, 1569–72. He and his successors printed a great number of editions of the *Missal, *Breviary, and other liturgical books, in virtue of a monopoly granted to him within the dominions of the King of Spain. After his death the business descended by marriage to the Moretus family, which continued to operate it until 1876. Since then the establishment, with all its original contents—furniture, pictures, library, archives, and fully equipped printing works—has been preserved by the city of Antwerp as a museum.

C. Clair, Christopher Plantin (London, 1960). L. [B.] Voet, The Golden Compasses: A History and Evaluation of the Printing and Publishing Activities of the Officina Plantiniana at Antwerp (2 vols., Antwerp, etc. [1969–72]). B. Rekers, Benito Arias Montano 1527 1598 (Amsterdam diss.; Groningen [1961]; Eng. tr., Studies of the Warburg Institute, 33; 1972), esp. chs. 3–4.

Platina, Bartolomeo (1421–81), Italian humanist. Born at Piadena (hence 'Platina', his family name was Sacchi), near Mantua, he went to Florence in 1457 to study Greek under Argyropolis. Proceeding to Rome in 1462, he was patronized by *Pius II, but when Paul II succeeded in 1464, he lost favour and was imprisoned. He again came into favour under *Sixtus IV, who made him librarian of the *Vatican (1475), and it was while holding this office that he compiled his Lives of the Popes (Liber de vita Christi ac de vitis summorum pontificum omnium, Venice, 1479). The work is written in a flowing, readable style, but is uncritical. A mention in its pages of the prayers and curses of *Callistus III in 1456 against the Turks, followed by a reference in the same context to the appearance of Halley's comet, gave rise to the fable, frequently repeated in the 19th cent., that the Pope had excommunicated the comet.

The original MS of his Lives of the Popes, which has often been ed., is preserved in the Vatican (Cod. 2044). Eng. tr. with continuation to date by P. *Rycaut (London, fol., 1685); more modern tr. by W. Benham (ibid., 2 vols. [1888]). G. J. Schorn, 'Die Quellen zu den Vitae Pontificum Romanorum des Bartolomeo Platina', RQ 27 (1913), pp. 3*–19* and 57*–84*. A. J. Dunston, 'Pope Pius II and the Humanists', Journal of Religious History, 7 (1973), pp. 287–306.

Plato (427–347 BC), Greek philosopher. He was a native of Athens, of a noble family, and destined for a political career. In his early years he was introduced to the doctrines of Heraclitus and in 407 (if not earlier) became a pupil of Socrates. Affection for his master and the love for philosophy turned him away from public life after Socrates' execution (399). He withdrew from Athens, taking refuge for a time with Eucleides at Megara. In the years 390–388 he travelled widely, perhaps to Egypt and Cyrene, certainly to Sicily and S. Italy, where he made the acquaintance of Pythagorean philosophers. Returning to Athens at a time which cannot certainly be fixed, he established a school on the outskirts of the city near the grove sacred to Academus; his school thus came to be known as the Academy, a tradition persisting until its dissolution by *Justinian in AD 529. At the age of 60 (367) Plato was unexpectedly invited to take a part in politics. Dion, a leader at the court of the youthful Dionysius II (367–345), tyrant of Syracuse, was anxious to set up a liberal state on the model of the Republic and invited Plato to instruct Dionysius about the 'philosopher-king'. The enterprise met with small success and in 366 both Dion and Plato were forced to leave Syracuse. In 361 he paid a fruitless visit to Sicily to try to reconcile Dionysius with Dion. Apart from this Sicilian venture Plato seems to have spent the last 40 years of his life at the Academy.

With the exception of a small collection of Epistles, Plato's writings are in the form of Dialogues, often with Socrates as the principal speaker and various critics or pupils, after whom the Dialogues are usually named, taking part in the discussion. It is often uncertain how far the speeches represent the real or supposed teaching of the interlocutors, and how far they voice Plato's own beliefs. Their literary artistry (directness, dramatic tensions, irony), intellectual breadth, and moral seriousness are supreme. There is no contemporary record of their chronological arrangement, which must be determined mainly by internal criteria. Evidence is sometimes afforded by the historic setting of the Dialogues, though here again it is often uncertain how far Plato meant the history to be taken literally. More reliable criteria are the intrinsic probabilities of Plato's philosophic development, general considerations of subject-matter (e.g. the Dialogues in which Socrates is central are presumably to be put first), Plato's references back to earlier Dialogues (e.g. of the Timaeus to the Republic), and the growth of Plato's dramatic power. These evidences converge on conclusions about which there is a fair measure of agreement among scholars; these conclusions are confirmed by philological ('stylometric') considerations (W. Lutoslawski) and by an avoidance of stylistic hiatus in the later Dialogues, which probably shows Isocrates' influence.

The principal Dialogues, in their approximate order of composition, are:

(1) The Socratic Dialogues, a large group, including the Gorgias, Meno, Euthyphro, Apology, and Crito. Their common subject is the nature of virtue and whether or not it can be taught. The three last-mentioned are linked with the trial and death of Socrates. The Euthyphro deals with correct behaviour towards the gods (ὁσιότης), the Apology with Socrates' own life-style and activity as a teacher, and the Crito with the duty of loyalty to the State.

In the next four dialogues (2–5), Plato's philosophical and dramatic power is at its highest:

(2) Phaedo, on immortality. The divine and enduring soul which shares in the eternal Forms is here contrasted with the mutable human body.

(3) Symposium, on the nature of eros, true beauty, and the life of contemplation. The love of earthly beauty can lead the soul onwards to the love of wisdom and of the Form of beauty itself.

(4) Protagoras, on the nature of the good, whether virtue is one or many, and on the identity of knowledge and goodness.

(5) Republic, generally considered the supreme creation of Plato. Its twofold theme is the nature of right conduct and the ideal political state. Consideration of man's threefold psychological constitution leads to the famous description of the ideal city-state (the philosopher-king, the guardians, community of goods, etc.). The object of the moral quest is no longer a particular ethical Form but the Form of the Good (ἰδέα τἀγαθοῦ) as such, held to underlie all the changing and particular facts in the world. Book 7 contains the well-known analogy of human life in which men who live in a cave see only the shadows of real objects (i.e. the Forms) cast on the opposite wall.

(6) Phaedrus, on persuasion and eros and their part in our perception of the Forms.

(7) Theaetetus, on the nature of knowledge (ἐπιστήμη), which is held to be judgement, i.e. the union of true opinion (δόξα) with reason (λόγος).

(8) Parmenides, on the relation of likeness and unlikeness, of the one and the many, expounded by the Eleatic philosophers. The first part reveals some of Plato's misgivings about the theory of Forms; the latter part seems to be a reductio ad absurdum designed to expose the failings of ill-defined arguments about unity and being.

(9) The pair Sophistes and Politicus (or Statesman). Their respective subjects (metaphysics; politics) differ widely, but the two Dialogues are closely connected and of the same date. The Sophistes examines the relation of being and becoming, posed by difficulties in the Eleatic teaching. It is argued that 'not being', no less than 'being', exists. The Politicus reiterates and develops the teaching of the Republic that good government should be left to experts.

(10) Philebus, on the nature of pleasure in its relation to the good life. The goodness of a thing lies in the unity of beauty, symmetry, and truth.

(11) Timaeus, on cosmology and natural science. Here, as in the Laws, the dialogue form has virtually been abandoned in favour of didactic exposition. The universe is described as a single living sphere, composed of soul and body. Besides the world and the model after which it was built there is a third entity, the receptacle (χώρα), in which the world becomes. The world itself is composed of the traditional four elements. Plato also gives an elaborate account of man and his various affections. Through a Latin translation by Chalcidius, known to the earlier Middle Ages, the Timaeus was for several centuries the best known of Plato's writings.

(12) Laws, on politics. This, the longest of the Dialogues, is in the form of a speech put into the mouth of an Athenian Stranger. The treatise, which was apparently left unfinished, reasserts the communistic teaching of the Republic, but with differences of detail. The constitution of the state must avoid the extremes of despotism and freedom. 'Examiners' and a 'Nocturnal Council' are to be in charge of the laws, which here occupy a more prominent place in the constitution than in the Republic and the Politicus. Great stress is laid on the importance of religious belief. Everyone is to be taught astronomy, since God's existence can be deduced from the study of the stars, while atheists who persist in their heresy are to be put to death. The perhaps inauthentic Epinomis develops the teaching of Laws 10; in this work astronomical interests are prominent.

In the earlier Dialogues the main emphasis is ethical. They insist inter alia that the cultivation of mind and will, 'goodness of soul', is the chief business of life; that this is attained by a rational insight into the nature of goodness, truth, and beauty; that morality and the claims of the enlightened conscience are to be respected in political life; and that the rational moral personality is created by the 'recollection' (ἀνάμνησις) of what the soul knows of these values. Since the soul naturally aims at what it believes to be good, wrongdoing is the pursuit of a falsely conceived good.

These doctrines are all based on a metaphysic, developed esp. in the later Dialogues, which contrasts the world of sense and everyday experience with a true and higher world of 'Ideas' (or better 'Forms'). These 'Forms' are 'present to' individual entities, and by grasping the eternal Forms and participating in them the soul attains its true well-being and is lifted above the flux of 'becoming'. But the highest value, the 'Form of the Good', remains mysterious.

Plato's two principal discussions of theology in the narrower sense are in the Timaeus and book 10 of the Laws. The Timaeus describes how the divine Demiurge (δημιουργός, 'artisan' or 'craftsman') brings the world into being, how He makes it as an image (εἰκών) of an eternal archetype, and how He enables it to share in His perfection by putting into it mind (νοῦς) or soul (ψυχή). Time is described as a 'moving image of eternity'. *Aristotle criticized the Dialogue as teaching that the world had a beginning, whereas other members of the Academy held that Plato really agreed with Aristotle in making it eternal.

The Laws 10 embodies the earliest known exposition of natural theology, namely a form of the *cosmological argument based on the belief that all motions ultimately require at their head a 'perfectly good soul' (ἀρίστη ψυχή). The existence of a second maleficent world-soul, identified with necessity (ἀνάγκη), is also defended. (1) Atheism, (2) the view that the gods are indifferent to human conduct, and (3) the notion that the gods can be deterred from the execution of justice by human offerings, are all rejected as morally pernicious. The evil consequences of wrong belief make it the duty of the State to impose orthodoxy, where necessary by force.

It remains obscure how Plato related the highest of the Forms to God as the Supreme Soul. In the Timaeus the Forms are the thoughts of God (νοήματα Θεοῦ), but on the other hand, since God also created the universe after the pattern of the Forms, He would seem to be in some sense subordinate to them. On this matter Plato betrays no great concern for consistency; indeed θεός is sometimes better translated as 'the God' or as 'divinity'. It was only among the more theologically interested Platonists of later times that the problem became a matter of debate.

TEXT. Editio princeps: Aldine, Venice, 1513. H. *Stephanus (3 vols., 1578; still used for refs. to Plato); the effective ed. was Serranus, who also made the Lat. version. Other edns. by C. F. Herrmann and M. Wohlrab (6 vols., Teub., 1890–96), J. Burnet (Oxford Classical Texts, 5 vols. [1900–7]) and M. Croiset and others (14 vols. in 27 parts, Collection des Universités de France publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, Paris, 1920–64, incl. as vol. 14 a lexicon of Plato's philosophical and religious language by É. des Places, SJ, and Fr. tr.). Separate edns. incl. those of Euthyphro, Apology, and Crito by J. Burnet (Oxford, 1924), Gorgias by E. R. Dodds (ibid., 1959), Meno by R. S. Bluck (Cambridge, 1961), Phaedo by R. D. Archer-Hind (London, 1883; 2nd edn., 1894), J. Burnet (Oxford, 1911) and C. J. Rowe (Cambridge, 1993), Republic by J. Adam (2 vols., Cambridge, 1902; 2nd edn., with introd. by D. A. Rees, 1963), Theaetetus by L. Campbell (Oxford, 1861; 2nd edn., 1883), Sophistes and Politicus by id. (ibid., 1867), Philebus by R. G. Bury (Cambridge, 1897), and Laws by E. B. England (2 vols., Manchester and London, 1921).

TRANSLATIONS. Complete Eng. version by B. *Jowett (4 vols., 1871; 2nd edn., 5 vols., 1875; 4th edn., rev., 4 vols., 1953). Other Eng. trs., with comm., of Euthyphro by R. E. Allen (London and New York, 1970), of Phaedo by R. Hackforth (Cambridge, 1955), of Republic by F. M. Cornford (Oxford, 1941), of Timaeus by id., Plato's Cosmology (1937), of Theaetetus and Sophist by id., Plato's Theory of Knowledge (1935), of Parmenides by A. E. *Taylor (Oxford, 1934) and F. M. Cornford, Plato and Parmenides (1939), of Politicus by J. B. Skemp, Plato's Statesman (1952), of Philebus by R. Hackforth, Plato's Examination of Pleasure (Cambridge, 1945), and of Phaedrus by R. Hackforth (ibid., 1952). There are also versions by A. E. Taylor of the Timaeus and Critias (London, 1929), Laws (ibid., 1934), and Philebus and Epinomis (ibid., 1956, posthumously pub. with introd. by R. Klibansky and A. C. Lloyd) and of Epistles by J. Harward (Cambridge, 1932). See also G. R. Morrow, cited below.

LIFE. U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Platon (2 vols., Berlin, 1917–18; 5th edn., 1959); J. Stenzel, Platon der Erzieher (1928); P. Friedländer, Platon (2 vols., Berlin, 1928–30; 2nd edn., 3 vols., 1954–60; Eng. tr., 1958–69, with extensive refs.); G. C. Field, Plato and his Contemporaries (1930); G. R. Morrow, Studies in the Platonic Epistles (Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, 18, nos. 3–4; 1935; 2nd edn., New York, 1962, incl. Eng. tr. of text); H. Cherniss, The Riddle of the Early Academy (Berkeley, Calif., and Los Angeles, 1945); G. Ryle, Plato's Progress (Cambridge, 1966); L. Edelstein, Plato's Seventh Letter (Leiden, 1966); K. von Fritz, Platon in Sizilien und das Problem der Philosophenherrschaft (1968).

INTRODUCTIONS. These are numerous and incl. G. M. A. Grube, Plato's Thought (1935; repr. with introd. and new bibl. by D. J. Zeyl, 1980); G. C. Field, The Philosophy of Plato (1949; 2nd edn., 1969); J. E. Raven, Plato's Thought in the Making: A Study of the Development of his Metaphysics (Cambridge, 1965); P. Huby, Plato and Modern Morality (1972); R. M. Hare, Plato (Past Masters, Oxford, 1982).

INTERPRETATION AND CRITICISM. W. Lutoslawski, The Origin and Growth of Plato's Logic (1897); C. Ritter, Platon (2 vols., Munich, 1910–23); A. E. Taylor, Plato: The Man and his Work (1926; 4th edn., 1937); L. Robin, Platon (1935; rev. edn., 1968); J. Moreau, La Construction de l'idéalisme platonicien (1939); R. Robinson, Plato's Earlier Dialectic (Ithaca, NY, 1941; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1953); W. Jaeger, Paideia: Die Formung des griechischen Menschen, 2–3 (1944–7; Eng. tr., 1944–5); D. Ross, Plato's Theory of Ideas (Oxford, 1951); H. J. Krämer, Arete bei Plato und Aristoteles (Abhandlungen der Heidelberger Akademie der Wissenschaften, Philologisch-historische Klasse, Jahrgang 1959, 6. Abh.; 1959); W. Burkert, Weisheit und Wissenschaft: Studien zu Pythagoras, Philolaos und Platon (1962); I. M. Crombie, An Examination of Plato's Doctrines (2 vols., 1962–3); R. E. Allen (ed.), Studies in Plato's Metaphysics (1965); J. N. Findlay, Plato: The Written and Unwritten Doctrines (International Library of Philosophy and Scientific Method, 1974); G. Vlastos, Plato's Universe (Oxford, 1975); T. Irwin, Plato's Moral Theory: The Early and Middle Dialogues (ibid., 1977); I. Murdoch, The Fire and the Sun: Why Plato Banished the Artists (ibid., 1977); R. Kraut (ed.), The Cambridge Companion to Plato (Cambridge, 1992). On individual works, R. C. Cross and A. D. Woozley, Plato's Republic: A Philosophical Commentary (1964); J. Annas, An Introduction to Plato's Republic (Oxford, 1981); J. Pieper, Begeisterung und göttlicher Wahnsinn: Über den platonischen Dialog 'Phaidros' (Munich [1962]; Eng. tr., Love and Inspiration, 1965); A. D. Woozley, Law and Obedience: The Arguments of Plato's Crito (1979); D. Bostock, Plato's Phaedo (Oxford, 1986).

PLATO'S RELIGION. F. Solmsen, Plato's Theology (New York, 1942); O. Reverdin, La Religion de la cité platonicienne (1945); V. Goldschmidt, La Religion de Platon (1949); H. J. Krämer, Ursprung der Geistmetaphysik: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte des Platonismus zwischen Platon und Plotin (Amsterdam, 1964).

DICTIONARIES. A. E. Taylor in EB (14th edn.), 18 (1929), pp. 48–64; H. Leisegang in PW 40 (1950), cols. 2342–537; G. Ryle in Encyclopedia of Philosophy, ed. P. Edwards, 6 [1967], cols. 314–33, all s.v. See also works cited under PLATONISM and NEOPLATONISM.

Platonism. After the death of *Plato (q.v.), his nephew, Speusippus, succeeded him as head of the Academy at Athens (347–339) which with varying fortunes persisted until its closure by *Justinian in AD 529. But in the Hellenistic age Plato's doctrines had a wide following which extended far beyond the direct influence of any institution. Their impact on later Judaism is to be seen in the Book of *Wisdom and the system of *Philo. In the 3rd cent. AD a thorough recasting of Plato's system ('*Neoplatonism') was elaborated by *Plotinus (205–70), whose disciple, *Porphyry (*c.*232–*c.*305), developed it in conscious opposition to Christianity. *Proclus, the last considerable head of the Academy and a celebrated commentator on Plato's writings, died in 485.

The beginnings of an interweaving of Platonism with Christian thought go back to *Clement of Alexandria and *Origen. Of perhaps even greater moment for the history of Christian theology was the fact that the thought of St *Augustine was radically influenced, largely through *Victorinus Afer, by Platonic doctrines. The authority accorded to his teaching throughout the Middle Ages did much to secure for many Platonic notions a permanent place in Latin Christianity. Henceforward the Platonic Forms were regularly reinterpreted as the creative thoughts of God, as they had been by pagan Platonists from shortly before the beginning of the Christian era. The relevance of Platonism for Christian mysticism was appreciated by *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite and other spiritual writers, Eastern (St *John Climacus) and Western (St *Bernard of Clairvaux, the *Victorines). Other media through which Platonic doctrines reached the medieval Church were *Boethius, who translated Porphyry into Latin, John Scottus *Erigena (q.v.), and a Latin version by Chalcidius of Plato's Timaeus. Even the supposed eclipse of Plato by *Aristotle as 'the Philosopher' par excellence in the 13th cent. was only apparent, for, as A. E. *Taylor and others have pointed out, St *Thomas Aquinas's teaching remained fundamentally Platonist.

The Renaissance led to a revival of interest in Plato himself in such scholars as Marsilio *Ficino. In the 16th cent. there was a steady stream of Platonist influence on religion in England (J. *Colet, St John *Fisher, St Thomas *More, R. *Hooker). In the 17th cent. the *Cambridge Platonists urged the return of Christian theology to 'its old loving nurse, the Platonic philosophy' and found in its doctrine of the inwardness of morality and religion the best antidote to the controversial aridities of contemporary *Calvinism and the secularism of T. *Hobbes. Strong Platonist influences were also present in many English theologians of the 19th cent. (B. *Jowett, F. D. *Maurice, C. *Kingsley, the Lux Mundi School). Among recent philosophers A. N. Whitehead has defended a Platonist cosmology. On the other hand, Protestant orthodoxy on the Continent, with its distrust of natural reason, has commonly been hostile to Platonism and in the 20th cent. there has been much theological criticism of Greek metaphysics.

A. E. Taylor, Platonism and its Influence (1925); C. *Bigg, The Christian Platonists of Alexandria (Oxford, 1886; repr. with additions and corrections, 1913); R. Klibansky, The Continuity of the Platonic Tradition during the Middle Ages (1939); A. Fox, Plato and the Christians (1957; selected passages). E. Cassirer, Die platonische Renaissance in England und die Schule von Cambridge (1932; Eng. tr., 1953). E. Hoffmann, Platonismus und christliche Philosophie (Zurich, 1960). H. I. Marrou, 'Synesius of Cyrene and Alexandrian Neoplatonism', in A. Momigliano (ed.), The Conflict between Paganism and Christianity in the Fourth Century (Oxford, 1963), pp. 126–50; P. Courcelle, 'Anti-Christian Arguments and Christian Platonism: From Arnebius to St Ambrose', ibid., pp. 151–92. E. von Ivánka, Plato Christianus: Übernahme und Umgestaltung des Platonismus durch die Väter (Einsiedeln [1964]). A. H. Armstrong (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (1967), with extensive bibl. Le Néoplatonisme: Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique. Sciences humaines (1971). J. Dillon, The Middle Platonists: A Study of Platonism 80 B.C. to A.D. 220 (1977). R. Arnou in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2258–392, s.v. 'Platonisme des Pères'.

Plays, Passion. See MYSTERY PLAYS; also OBERAMMERGAU.

plenary indulgence. In modern RC theology an *indulgence which is held to remit the whole of the temporal punishment due to an individual's sins. The petitioner may apply it either to himself or to the profit of a soul, or souls, in purgatory. As it is held that its efficacy depends on the perfection of the soul's disposition (of which no one can ever be certain), there is always an element of doubt as to whether a soul has profited to the full by a particular plenary indulgence.

The earliest known example of the issue of a plenary indulgence was the promise of *Urban II at the Council of *Clermont (1095) that all penance incurred by Crusaders who confessed their sins should be remitted. As the issue of plenary indulgences became more common in the 12th and 13th cents. it was much debated (St *Albert the Great, St *Thomas Aquinas, Pope *Hadrian VI) whether or not plenary indulgences covered penances which ought to have been enjoined as well as those that had actually been imposed. It was the former view which gradually became accepted. Acc. to current RC regulations a plenary indulgence cannot be gained more than once on the same day except by someone on the point of death (in articulo mortis). It is normally granted for the recitation of certain prayers or other devotional exercises under prescribed conditions, namely the use of the Sacrament of *Penance, reception of Holy Communion, prayer for the Pope's intention, and the exclusion of all attachment to sin, incl. *venial sin. See also INDULGENCES.

Plethon, Georgius Gemistus. See GEMISTUS PLETHON, GEORGIUS.

Pliny. Gaius Plinius Caecilius Secundus (*c.*61–*c.*112), Roman senator and man of letters. His extant letters include those which, as governor of Bithynia and Pontus, he exchanged with the Emp. Trajan (Ep. 10. 96–7). In Pontus, he reported, Christianity had spread so widely in all social ranks, both in town and country, that the pagan cults were falling into neglect. The situation was new to him and he sought for guidance. Of those accused before him of Christianity, he had executed those who confessed and refused to sacrifice to the gods or emperor. But some who admitted to having been Christians in the past had proved their apostasy by taking this test. He did not know whether the offence consisted in the name alone or in criminal acts (flagitia) supposedly inherent in the Christian cult. His own investigations had produced no evidence of flagitia; his report throws valuable light on contemporary Christian practices, perhaps including the *agape. He suggests that apostates should not be punished. Trajan agreed; if they would sacrifice to the gods, they should be pardoned. He also prescribed that Christians were not to be 'sought out', implying that he too did not regard Christians as such as guilty of flagitia; they could still be accused of being Christians, though anonymous information was to be disregarded. See also PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Crit. edn. of Pliny's Letters by R. A. B. Mynors (Oxford, 1963); Eng. tr. by B. Radice (Penguin Classics, 1963). Eng. tr. of the letter to Trajan and the latter's reply also in J. Stevenson (ed.), A New Eusebius (1957), pp. 13–16. A. N. Sherwin-White, The Letters of Pliny: A Historical and Social Commentary (Oxford, 1966), esp. pp. 691–712 and 772–87.

Plotinus (*c.*205–70), *Neoplatonist philosopher and mystic. He was a native of Lycopolis, and acc. to his friend and pupil, *Porphyry, became interested in philosophy at the age of 28 and was for 11 years a disciple of *Ammonius Saccas. He later accompanied the Emp. Gordian (d. 243) on an expedition to Persia to make himself acquainted with E. thought. After his return he established his own school in Rome in 244. At the age of 51 he began to write, and after his death Porphyry published his 54 treatises, arranging them in six Enneads (Gk. ἐννεάδες, 'groups of nine').

Owing to the difficulty of his style and subject-matter Plotinus has been variously interpreted, and it is disputed whether his thought is fundamentally pantheistic or tending towards Theism. He rejects the *Gnostic dualism as vigorously as the Christian conception of a historic Redemption, opposing to either his system of an intellectualist *mysticism. Its main concern on the speculative side is with the relations between unity and multiplicity. At the summit of the hierarchy of beings there is the One (τὸ Ἕν) or the Good, the first principle, absolutely simple and self-sufficient, who transcends all thought and speech. Beneath it is the divine mind which is the world of ideas (Νοῦς). Next comes Soul (Ψυχή), the third member of the Plotinian Triad. This last is the intermediary between the intelligible and the material world, which, since matter holds the lowest place in the Plotinian system, is the furthest removed from the One. The World Soul is a particular soul, part of the hypostasis Soul on the same level as individual souls. It creates and orders the universe which other souls share in animating. All souls share in the unity of Soul and its capacity for contemplation.

Contemplation, which occupies a central position in Plotinus' system, is the most perfect activity, for by it souls can attain union with God. In order to reach this last end the soul must purify itself morally and intellectually, attaining to virtue and wisdom. Then it must pass not only beyond attachment to sensible things and discursive reasoning but beyond the highest intellectual contemplation to attain a vision of or union with the One which cannot be described but is likened to becoming the light one sees or to the union of lovers. The chief difference between this so-called 'natural mysticism' and that of the orthodox Christian mystics is that, in Plotinus' system, union is reached by the natural power of reason which the soul receives in its creation, whereas in Catholic teaching it is the work of Divine grace. Despite this fundamental difference Plotinus seems to have exercised indirectly much influence on Christian thought, esp. on St *Augustine and *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, and, through them, on the theologians and mystics of the Middle Ages.

Editio princeps of Gk. text of Enneads, Basle, 1580, with M. *Ficino's Lat. tr. Crit. text ed. P. Henry, SJ, and H.-R. Schwyzer (Museum Lessianum, Series Philosophica, 33–5; 1951–73; also 3 vols., Oxford, 1964–82); largely repr., with Eng. tr., by A. H. Armstrong (7 vols., Loeb, 1966–88). Eng. tr. of Enneads, with Porphyry's Life, by S. Mackenna (5 vols., London, 1917–30; 4th edn., rev. by B. S. Page, 1969). W. R. *Inge, The Philosophy of Plotinus (Gifford Lectures, 1918; subjective); R. Arnou, Le Désir de Dieu dans la philosophie de Plotin (1921; 2nd edn., 1967); E. Bréhier, La Philosophie de Plotin (1928; 3rd edn., 1961); J. Guitton, Le Temps et l'éternité chez Plotin et saint Augustin (1933; 3rd edn., 1959); P. Henry, SJ, Plotin et l'Occident (SSL 15; 1934); id., Études plotiniennes (2 vols., Museum Lessianum, Section philosophique, 20–1; 1938–41); A. H. Armstrong, The Architecture of the Intelligible Universe in the Philosophy of Plotinus: An Analytical and Historical Study (Cambridge, 1940); J. Trouillard, La Purification Plotinienne (Paris thesis, 1955); id., La Procession Plotinienne (Paris thesis, 1955); A. Dahl, Augustin und Plotin: Philosophische Untersuchungen zum Trinitätsproblem und zur Nuslehre (Lund, 1945); E. R. Dodds and others, Les Sources de Plotin (Entretiens sur l'Antiquité Classique, 5; Geneva, 1960); P. Hadot, Plotin ou la simplicité du regard (1963; 2nd edn., Études Augustiniennes, 1973); R. Ferwerda, La Signification des images et des métaphores dans la pensée de Plotin (Groningen, 1965); A. H. Armstrong in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of Later Greek and Early Medieval Philosophy (Cambridge, 1967), pp. 195–268; J. N. Deck, Nature, Contemplation and the One: A Study in the Philosophy of Plotinus (Toronto, 1967); J. M. Rist, Plotinus: The Road to Reality (Cambridge, 1969); J.-M. Charrue, Plotin, lecteur de Platon (1978; 2nd edn., 1987); D. J. O'Meara, Plotinus: An Introduction to the Enneads (Oxford, 1993). D. O'Brien, Théodicée Plotinienne, Théodicée Gnostique (Philosophia Antiqua, 57; Leiden, 1993). A. H. Armstrong, Plotinian and Christian Studies (1979). P. E. More, Hellenistic Philosophies (The Greek Tradition, 2; Princeton, NJ, 1923), pp. 172–259. H.-R. Schwyzer in PW 41 (1951), cols. 471–591, and Supplementband, 15 (1978), cols. 310–28, both with bibl. See also bibl. to NEOPLATONISM.

Plumstead Peculiars. See PECULIAR PEOPLE.

Plunkett (or Plunket), St Oliver (1625–81), RC Abp. of *Armagh. Of noble family, he was born at Loughcrew, nr. Oldcastle, Co. Meath, and studied and later taught at Rome. In 1654 he was ordained priest, for some years acted as the representative of the Irish Bishops at Rome, and in 1669 was appointed Abp. of Armagh. Consecrated at Ghent, he returned to Ireland, where he administered his diocese energetically, raising the standards of education and morality in the face of constant hardship. During the persecutions which began in 1673 he remained in Ireland and in the fury engendered by the Titus *Oates Plot he was arrested (1679), tried in London, and executed for treason at Tyburn on 11 July (1 July, OS), 1681. His head, taken to Rome in 1684, has since 1722 been at Drogheda; most of his body is at *Downside. He was canonized in 1975. Feast day, 11 July.

Letters, ed. J. Hanly (Dublin, 1979). Report of his last speech and confession pub. London, 1681; repr., with other papers, by E. Horne, OSB, in Downside Review, 39 (1921), pp. 99–105. The Trial and Condemnation of Edw. Fitz-Harris ... as also ... of Dr Oliver Plunket ... (London, 1681), pp. 61–103. Another contemporary account of his martyrdom ('Vita et Mors Gloriosa Illustrissimi D. Oliverii Plunketti'), ed. by P. F. Moran in his Spicilegium Ossoriense, 3 (Dublin, 1884), pp. 102–8. Memoirs compiled from orig. sources, also by P. F. Moran (ibid., 1861). Other modern Lives by H. [Mrs T.] Concannon (London, 1935), E. Curtis, OCSO (Dublin and London, 1963), and T. Ó Fiaich (Dublin, 1975). A. Curtayne, The Trial of Oliver Plunkett (1953). R. Bagwell in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 442–5.

Pluralism. (1) The view that the world contains or consists of a plurality of things or states ultimately distinct, and hence the contradiction of '*Monism' (q.v.).

(2) For religious pluralism, see THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

W. James, A Pluralistic Universe (1909); J. Ward, The Realm of Ends, or Pluralism and Theism (1911).

Pluralities Act 1838. An Act forbidding any clergyman in the C of E simultaneously to hold more than one ecclesiastical benefice with cure of souls except, by dispensation of the Abp. of *Canterbury, in the case of two livings with a population of under 3,000 where the travelling distance between the churches was less than ten miles and the joint annual income under £1,000. The Act also provided more stringent regulations for residence. It was modified by the Pluralities Act 1850, acc. to which the churches of benefices held in conjunction were to be under three miles apart and the annual value of one under £100; the Pluralities Acts Amendment Act 1885, which allowed the distance between the churches to be four miles and provided that the annual income of one should not exceed £200; and the Pluralities Measure 1930, which raised the annual income permissible in cases of plurality to £400. The Benefices Act 1898 and the Union of Benefices Measure 1923 were concerned with the administration of the Act. The terms of the Act are virtually abrogated by the Pastoral Reorganisation Measure 1949, and now benefices can be held in plurality only as part of a pastoral scheme made under the Pastoral Measure 1983. See also PARISH.

R. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England, 2 (2nd edn., 1895), pp. 898–906; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn. by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 299–302.

pluvial (Lat. pluviale). An alternative name for the *cope, probably from its having been originally a rain-cloak. In its English form the word is now almost obsolete.

Plymouth Brethren. A Christian religious body, so named because its first centre in England was established by J. N. *Darby (1800–82), a former Anglican priest, at Plymouth in 1830. They had been founded two or three years earlier in *Ireland, where they were known as the 'Brethren', a title still widely used. Among their early converts was S. P. *Tregelles, the biblical scholar. Their teaching combines elements from *Calvinism and *Pietism and emphasis has often been laid on an expected *Millennium. Their moral outlook is *Puritanical and they renounce many secular occupations, allowing only those compatible with NT standards (e.g. medicine, handicrafts). They have no organized ministry, though great stress is laid on the Breaking of the Bread each Sunday, partly as a symbol of Christian union and partly as the appointed means of showing forth Christ's death. Their outlook on the Bible is conservative. They also stress the complete autonomy of the local church.

In spite of their emphasis on Christian unity as a principle, the Plymouth Brethren tended from the first to split into separate groups. Controversies on the human nature of Christ and subsequently on Church government led to the fundamental division in 1849 between the 'Open Brethren' and the 'Exclusive Brethren'; and within these groups there are several subdivisions. The second half of the 20th cent. has seen a sharp decline in the numbers of the Plymouth Brethren. Though numerically few, they are widely distributed, esp. in Great Britain and Ireland, on the Continent of Europe (esp. Switzerland, France, and Italy), and in the USA, and are very active in missionary work, esp. in India, E. Asia, Central Africa, and S. America.

W. B. Neatby, A History of the Plymouth Brethren (1901). D. J. Beattie, Brethren: The Story of a Great Recovery (Kilmarnock [1940]); H. H. Rowdon, The Origins of the Brethren, 1825–1850 (1967); F. R. Coad, A History of the Brethren Movement: Its Origins, its Worldwide Development and its Significance for the Present Day ([Exeter] 1968); N. de L. Smith, Roots, Renewal and the Brethren (Pasadena, Calif., and Exeter [1986]). J. McCulloch in HERE 2 (1909), pp. 843–8, s.v. 'Brethren (Plymouth)'. See also works in bibl. to DARBY, J. N.

Pneumatomachi (Gk. πνευματομάχοι), 4th-cent. heretics who denied the full Godhead of the Holy Spirit. They are perhaps the 'Tropici' of St *Athanasius in his Epp. to *Serapion of Thmuis (between 355 and 361), but came to the fore only in 373, when *Eustathius of Sebaste became their head after breaking with his former friend St *Basil the Great. They were condemned by Pope *Damasus in 374, and their teaching was repeatedly attacked by the three great *Cappadocian Fathers and St *Didymus. The sect had reached its full development *c.*380, containing a more conservative section which, while rejecting the Divinity of the Holy Spirit, accepted the consubstantiality of the Son, and a radical party, which denied also the latter. At the Council of *Constantinople (381; can. 1) they were anathematized. The historians *Socrates and *Sozomen, as well as the Latin Fathers St *Jerome, *Rufinus, and others, regard *Macedonius (q.v.) as their founder, but as he disappeared from the forefront of theological controversy after his deposition in 360 and as his name does not occur in contemporary anti-Pneumatomachian writings, this statement seems to be unfounded. It is possible that after Macedonius's death his followers amalgamated with the Pneumatomachi, and that the identification is to be so explained. The sect disappeared after 383, when its adherents became victims of the Theodosian anti-heretical laws.

H. Dörries, De Spiritu Sancto: Der Beitrag des Basilius zum Abschluss des trinitarischen Dogmas (Abh. (Gött.), Dritte Folge, 39; 1956), esp. pp. 94–120. W.-D. Hauschild, Die Pneumatomachen (Hamburg diss., 1967). F. *Loofs in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 225–30, s.v. 'Macedonianism'; P. Meinhold in PW 21 (pt. 1; 1951), cols. 1066–1101, s.v.

Pococke, Edward (1604–91), orientalist. Educated at Magdalen Hall and Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he became a Fellow of the latter society in 1628 and was English chaplain at Aleppo from 1630 to 1635. Here he perfected his knowledge of Arabic, collected a large number of valuable MSS, and on his return was appointed by W. *Laud first professor of Arabic at Oxford. In 1648 he succeeded to the chair of Hebrew, but his royalist views led to his temporary suspension. His erudition was immense. He took an active part in the preparation of B. *Walton's '*Polyglot Bible' (1657), and in 1660, at the expense of R. *Boyle, published an Arabic edition of H. *Grotius's De veritate christianae religionis for the furtherance of Christianity among Muslims. In 1663 he issued the Arabic text (with a Latin translation) of the Historia Compendiosa Dynastiarum of *Bar Hebraeus (Abû-l-Farağ). He also published large parts of the BCP in Arabic.

L. Twells (ed.), The Theological Works of the Learned Dr. Pocock (2 vols., 1740), with full biog. and correspondence. P. M. Holt, Studies in the History of the Near East (1973), pp. 3–49. S. Lane-Poole in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 7–12.

Poimandres (Gk. ποιμάνδρης, apparently 'the Shepherd of Men'). The first treatise in the corpus of *Hermetic writings (q.v.), though in its text the name of Hermes does not occur. It describes a vision seen under the guidance of Poimandres, a semi-divine being who is termed 'the Mind of the Sovereignty' (ὁ τῆς αὐθεντίας νοῦς), and treats of the creation of the universe and man, the union of spirit with matter following the Fall, and the method of redemption by knowledge (γνῶσις). The writer's nearest associations are with *Gnosticism; but there are parallels with the NT, e.g. the description of the Divine as 'light' and 'life' and the doctrine that the Divine *Logos was active in creation (cf. Jn. 1: 2–4). At times the language closely approximates to that of the *Septuagint, which was certainly known to the author. The work was written in Egypt early in the Christian era, perhaps (C. H. *Dodd) not long after AD 100. A Latin translation by Marsilio *Ficino (finished in 1463/4), was the first printed text (Treviso, 1471).

Greek text in Hermetis Trismegisti Poemander, ed. G. Parthey, Berlin, 1854; and (with much highly conjectural emendation) in W. Scott, Hermetica, 1 (1924); also ed. A. D. Nock, with Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière, Corpus Hermeticum, 1 (Collection des Universités de France, 1945), pp. 6–28. C. H. Dodd, The Bible and the Greeks (1935), pp. 99–248. R. *Reitzenstein, Poimandres: Studien zur griechisch-ägyptischen und frühchristlichen Literatur (1904). E. Haenchen, 'Aufbau und Theologie des "Poimandres" ', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 53 (1956), pp. 149–91.

points, Hebrew. See VOWEL POINTS.

Poiret, Pierre (1646–1719), French Protestant spiritual writer. After being preacher at Heidelberg (1668) and Anweiler (1672), he resigned his office in 1676 and became the companion of the visionary, A. *Bourignon, whose ideas he subsequently interpreted in L'Économie divine (7 vols., 1687). After her death in 1680, he lived at Amsterdam and from 1688 at Rijnsburg. He was a keen student of mysticism, esp. as found in his contemporaries, J. *Boehme and Mme *Guyon (whose works he began editing in 1704), and, of earlier writers, of *Thomas à Kempis and J. *Tauler. Though he was critical of the Cartesian philosophy, he stressed its relevance to the study of mysticism. His most important work, Bibliotheca mysticorum (1708), contains much valuable out-of-the-way information on minor writers on mystic subjects. After his death Poiret's influence was chiefly exercised through his disciple G. *Tersteegen, and, less directly, on the whole *Pietistic Movement.

M. Wieser, Peter Poiret: Der Vater der romanischen Mystik in Deutschland (1932); G. A. Krieg, Der mystische Kreis: Wesen und Werden der Theologie Pierre Poirets (Arbeiten zur Geschichte des Pietismus, 17; 1979). M. Chevallier, Pierre Poiret (Bibliotheca Dissentium. Répertoire des non-conformistes religieuse des seizième et dix-septième siècles, 5; Baden-Baden, 1985). Id. in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1831–6, s.v.

Poissy, Colloquy of (Disputatio Pussicena). A Conference held in 1561 at Poissy (on the Seine, not far from Paris) between the French bishops under Cardinal F. de Tournon and the Protestant ministers led by T. *Beza, to consider the religious situation created by the progress of the Reformed doctrines. It had been summoned by *Catherine de' Medici. Among the Catholic spokesmen was J. *Laínez, the General of the *Jesuits, and among the Protestants *Peter Martyr. Though it failed to secure dogmatic agreement between the two parties on the Eucharist, it prepared the way for the edict of Jan. 1562, which gave official recognition and a measure of freedom to French Protestants.

J. Roserot de Melin, 'Rome et Poissy (1560–61)', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 39 (1921–2), pp. 47–151. H. O. Evennett, The Cardinal of Lorraine and the Council of Trent (Cambridge, 1930), esp. pp. 283–391. D. [G.] Nugent, Ecumenism in the Age of The Reformation: The Colloquy of Poissy (Cambridge, Mass., 1974). A. Dufour, 'Das Religionsgespräch von Poissy. Hoffnungen der Reformierten und der Moyenneurs', in G. Müller (ed.), Die Religionsgespräche der Reformationszeit (Gütersloh, 1980), pp. 117–26. M. Turchetti, Concordia o tolleranza? François Bauduin (1520–1573) e i 'Moyenneurs' (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 200; Geneva, 1984), passim (see index). E. Lachenmann in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 497–504.

Poland, Christianity in. Poland received Christianity in the latter half of the 10th cent., probably from Moravia. In 966 the Prince Mieczysław I was baptized, and in 1000 Gniezno became a metropolitan see. (The alleged earlier dependence of the Church on the see of Magdeburg seems to have been disproved by modern research.) There were strong anti-Christian outbreaks between 1034 and 1040 and many martyrdoms. Throughout the 11th and 12th cents. the country was devastated by civil wars and disorders, and the Synod of Łęczyca (1180) had to take special measures against robbers of churches. The fact that the *Hildebrandine reforms (11th cent.) had been carried out by royal power in the teeth of the opposition of bishops and clergy had brought the Church strongly under State control, but early in the 13th cent. this control was shaken off and the Church was reorganized in conformity with current canon law. In the same century the Tartar invasions stirred up a revival of Christianity; this later manifested itself in missions to Lithuania, which was Christianized on its union with Poland in 1387.

In the early 15th cent. some of the nobility supported the *Hussites and the *Inquisition was introduced. In the 16th cent. the *Reformation also made headway, esp. among the nobility, who had long chafed at the dual control of the King and Church. *Calvinism was the strongest influence, though *Lutheran communities developed in German areas, and the country also became a haven for exiled *Bohemian Brethren and *Socinians. Religious tension grew, while internal reform of the Church was effectively prevented by the Papal legate, J. F. Commendone; but by the Confederation of Warsaw in 1573 mutual toleration was secured. After the Confederation the RCs, led by S. *Hosius, increased their influence by judicious reforms, while dissensions diminished the strength of their opponents. In 1595 the Ruthenian Church (see UKRAINIAN CHURCHES) renounced communion with *Constantinople and submitted to Rome, and shortly afterwards the *Armenians in Poland accepted *Uniat status.

In the 17th cent. the RC majority succeeded in making toleration almost a dead letter and in associating the revived and expanded Church with national values (esp. through the 'Black' Madonna of Częstochowa). The Protestants, though not often formally persecuted, remained under restrictions until the Confederation of Radom (1767) sought to reassert complete religious freedom. The continual wars hindered ecclesiastical organization, while the parlous state of the country opened the way for the growth of *Freemasonry, which fomented anti-Church feeling. The partition of Poland between Russia, Austria, and Prussia, begun in 1772 and completed in 1795, had serious consequences for the RC Church. Even though it gave little support to movements for national liberation, the Russians put endless restrictions upon RCs and in 1831 compelled the Uniat Easterns to give up their communion with Rome; Prussia also interfered with the freedom of its RC subjects; but Austria, while it placed the RCs under strict State supervision, and prevented control from Rome, often favoured their interests. With the independence of Poland in 1919 the influence of the RC Church revived, though the Orthodox retained their hold on many of the eastern parts.

Both Orthodox and RC Churches suffered severely under German and Russian occupation in 1939–45, and the setting up of a Communist-controlled government in 1945 led to the continuance of severe difficulties, esp. for the RCs who now, with the cession of eastern territories to the Soviet Union and the expulsion of most Germans, formed an overwhelming majority of the population. In the period since the Second World War relations between the Polish government and the RC Church have often been strained, but esp. after the election of a Pole as Pope *John Paul II in 1978, the RC Church enjoyed greater freedom in Poland than it did in other E. European countries, with active parochial life, flourishing monastic communities, and an autonomous university at Lublin. RC opposition, expressing itself esp. through the Solidarity movement, was a major factor in the collapse of the Communist regime in 1989, which allowed the Church to resume a central political role in Poland; but the strength of conservative attitudes in its ranks, allied to suspicion of the country's new liberal-capitalist arrangements, have made for a slow and painful process of accommodation. See also OLD CATHOLICS and MARIAVITES.

K. Völker, Kirchengeschichte Polens (1930), with bibl. W. F. Reddaway and others (eds.), The Cambridge History of Poland (2 vols., 1941–50), esp. vol. 1, chs. 2, 4, 16 and 19. J. Braun (ed.), Poland in Christian Civilization (London [1985]). B. Kumor and

Z. Obertyński (eds.), Historia Kościoła w Polsce (2 parts in 4 vols, Poznań and Warsaw, 1974–9 [up to 1914]). J. Kłoczowski (ed.), Kościół w Polsce (2 vols. + maps, Cracow [1968–70]). J. Dowiat, Historia Kościoła katolickiego w Polsce do połowy XV wieku (Warsaw, 1968). F. Siegmund-Schultze (ed.), Ekklesia, 5. 2 (Lfg. 21, Die evangelischen Kirchen in Polen; 1938), with bibl.; A. Rhode, Geschichte der evangelischen Kirche in Posener Lande (Marburger Ostforschungen, 4; Würzburg, 1956). V. Krasinski, Historical Sketch of the Rise, Progress and Decline of the Reformation in Poland (2 vols., 1838–40); T. Wotschke, Geschichte der Reformation in Polen (Studien zur Kultur und Geschichte der Reformation herausgegeben vom Verein für Reformationsgeschichte, fasc. 1; 1911); B. Stasiewski, Reformation und Gegen-Reformation in Polen: Neue Forschungsergebnisse (Katholisches Leben und Kämpfen im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 18; Münster i.W., 1960), and other works of this author; G. Schramm, Der polnische Adel und die Reformation 1548–1607 (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Europäische Geschichte Mainz, 36; Wiesbaden, 1965); A. Jobert, De Luther à Mohila: La Pologne dans la crise de la Chrétienté 1517–1648 (Collection historique de l'Institut d'études slaves, 21; Paris, 1974). J. Tazbir, A State without Stakes: Polish Religious Toleration in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (New York and Warsaw [1973]; Eng. tr. of Polish work pub. in Warsaw, 1967). M. Rechowicz (ed.), Dzieje teologii katolickiej w Polsce (3 vols. in 5 parts, Lublin, 1974–7). T. Andrews, The Polish National Church in America and Poland (1953), passim. P. Walters (ed.), World Christianity: Eastern Europe (Keston Book, 29; Eastbourne, 1988), pp. 107–39. Much material is to be found in the periodicals Nasza Przeszłość (Warsaw, 1946 ff.; RC) and Odrodzenie i Reformacja w Polsce (ibid., 1956 ff.; Protestant). B. Stasiewski in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 471–86, s.v., K. Górski and others in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1864–901, s.v. 'Pologne', both with bibl. See also UKRAINIAN CHURCHES.

Pole, Reginald (1500–58), Abp. of *Canterbury. Of the blood royal by his mother, Margaret, Countess of Salisbury and niece of Edward IV, he was educated at the Sheen Charterhouse and Magdalen College, Oxford, and given ecclesiastical preferment by *Henry VIII while still in his teens and a layman. In 1519 he went to Padua, and for several years was in close contact with the later Italian Renaissance, corresponding with T. *More and *Erasmus, and visiting Rome and Paris. In 1530 Henry, anxious for help over his divorce, offered him the see of *York or *Winchester, but Pole declined both, and in 1534–6 wrote Pro Ecclesiasticae Unitatis Defensione, censuring the King's conduct. *Paul III summoned him in 1536 to confer about a general council, put him on a commission for the reform of discipline, and (after his ordination as deacon) created him a cardinal. In 1538 indignation at Rome over the destruction of *Becket's shrine caused Pole to be sent as legate on a fruitless mission to persuade Spain and France to break with England, and in 1539 an Act of Attainder was passed against him and his family. In 1541 G. *Contarini took counsel with Pole, before the Conference of *Ratisbon, with a view to conciliating the Protestants, whose views on justification were not unlike Pole's own; and in the following year he was one of the three legates appointed to preside at the Council of *Trent, which did not meet, however, until 1545. In 1547 he urged *Somerset to treat with the Holy See, and on Paul III's death (1549) was nearly elected Pope. On *Edward VI's death in 1553 *Julius III appointed him legate in England, and after the removal of his attainder he reached Dover in Nov. 1554, formally absolved Parliament from schism, and presided over a synod of both *Convocations. On 20 Mar. 1556 he was ordained priest at the Greyfriars, Greenwich, and consecrated Abp. of Canterbury two days later. With the outbreak of war between *Paul IV (Carafa) and *Philip II of Spain, the Queen became the Pope's enemy, and the Pope cancelled Pole's legation, accusing him also of doctrinal unsoundness. He died only 12 hours after the Queen. Pole was a man of pure morals, sincere piety, and ascetic habits, and animated by a remarkable singleness of purpose.

Standard edn. of his Epistolae, incl. some other writings, ed. Card. A. M. Quirini (Brescia, 5 vols., 1744–57). Friedenslegation des Reginald Pole zu Kaiser Karl V. und König Heinrich II. (1553–1556), ed. H. Lutz (Nuntiaturberichte aus Deutschland, Abt. 1, Bd. 15; 1981). Lives by L. Beccadelli (Lat., Venice, 1563; Eng. tr., 1766), T. Phillips (Oxford, 1764), and W. Schenk (London, 1950). [F. A.] *Gasquet, Cardinal Pole and his Early Friends (1927). D. Fenlon, Heresy and Obedience in Tridentine Italy: Cardinal Pole and the Counter Reformation (Cambridge, 1972). P. Simoncelli, Il Caso Reginald Pole: Eresia e Santità nelle Polemiche religiose del Cinquecento (Uomini e Dottrine, 23; 1977). J. I. Tellechea Idígoras, Fray Bartolomé Carranza y el Cardenal Pole: Un navarro en la restauración católica de Inglaterra (1554–1558) (Pamplona, 1977). R. H. Pogson, 'Revival and reform in Mary Tudor's Church: a question of money', JEH 25 (1974), pp. 249–65, repr. in C. Haigh (ed.), The English Reformation Revised (1987), pp. 139–56; R. H. Pogson, 'Reginald Pole and the Priorities of Government in Mary Tudor's Church', Historical Journal, 18 (1975), pp. 3–20. T. F. Mayer, 'A Diet for Henry VIII: The Failure of Reginald Pole's 1537 Legation', Journal of British Studies, 26 (1987), pp. 305–31; id., 'A Fate Worse than Death: Reginald Pole and the Parisian Theologians', EHR 103 (1988), pp. 870–91. A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation between 1558 and 1640, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 124–6 (nos. 911–24). BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 453–5. J. *Gairdner in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 35–46. See also bibl. to HENRY VIII.

Polish National Church. See OLD CATHOLICS (3).

politarchs (Gk. πολιτάρχης). A comparatively rare title for magistrates in the Graeco-Roman world, used in the NT only of the city magistrates of Thessalonica (Acts 17: 6, 8; AV, 'the rulers of the city'). The accuracy of St *Luke's usage is proved by the occurrence of the word on several inscriptions which come from Thessalonica.

E. de W. Burton, 'The Politarchs', American Journal of Theology, 2 (1898), pp. 598–632. G. H. R. Horsley in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 384–9, s.v.

Politiques. French political party which advocated religious toleration esp. after the Massacre of St *Bartholomew's Day (q.v.). They made an alliance with the *Huguenots and subsequently many of them supported *Henry IV.

Polycarp, St (traditionally *c.*69–*c.*155), Bp. of Smyrna. He seems to have been the leading Christian figure in Roman Asia in the middle of the 2nd cent., and his long life (about which unfortunately little is known) is thus an important link between the *Apostolic Age and the great Christian writers (e.g. St *Irenaeus) who flourished at the end of the 2nd cent. A staunch defender of orthodoxy, he devoted much of his energy to combating such heretics as the *Marcionites and *Valentinians. A letter addressed to him by St *Ignatius has survived, as well as his own 'Ep.

to Philippians' (perhaps a combination of two epistles of different dates; so P. N. Harrison). The latter is full of echoes of the NT writings, esp. the *Pastoral Epistles. At the end of his life, when Polycarp paid a visit to Rome to see the bishop, Anicetus, and to discuss, among other things, the date of keeping the *Easter festival, it was agreed that each Church should maintain its own custom and that Asia should continue the *Quartodeciman practice. Soon after his return to Smyrna, Polycarp was arrested during a public (pagan) festival and, proclaiming that he had served Christ for 86 years, he refused to recant his faith and was burnt to death. The traditionally accepted date of his death is 23 Feb. 155 or 156, but as *Eusebius places it in the reign of *Marcus Aurelius (161–80), some scholars have argued for a later period and have put the date of his birth correspondingly later. The 'Martyrium Polycarpi', written from Smyrna by request of the Church at Philomelium, gives an account of his trial and martyrdom. St Irenaeus says that Polycarp 'had intercourse with John [the Apostle or Elder?] and with the rest of those who had seen the Lord'. Feast day, 23 Feb. (in W., formerly 26 Jan.).

Texts, incl. 'Martyrium Polycarpi', will be found in edns. of the Apostolic Fathers; with esp. valuable comm. and notes in ed. J. B. *Lightfoot (pt. 2, 3 vols., 1885); also conveniently ed., with Fr. tr., by P. T. Camelot, OP, in his edn. of the Letters of Ignatius (SC 10; 2nd edn., 1951), pp. 242–75; 4th edn. (1969), pp. 197–239. P. N. Harrison, Polycarp's Two Epistles to the Philippians (1936). On the date of the martyrdom, see C. H. *Turner in Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 2 (1890), pp. 105–55 [defends 23 Feb. 155]; also H. Grégoire and P. Orgels, 'La Véritable Date du martyre de Polycarpe (23 févr. 177) et le Corpus Polycarpianum', Anal. Boll. 69 (1951), pp. 1–38 [much contested]; H. I. Marrou, 'La Date du martyre de S. Polycarpe', ibid. 71 (1953), pp. 5–20; T. D. Barnes, 'A Note on Polycarp', JTS NS 18 (1967), pp. 433–7; P. Brind'Amour, 'La date du martyre de saint Polycarpe (le 23 février 167)', Anal. Boll. 98 (1980), pp. 456–62. H. von Campenhausen, Polykarp von Smyrna und die Pastoralbriefe (Sb. (Heid.), 1951, Abhandlung 2; 1951); id., Bearbeitungen und Interpolationen des Polykarpmartyriums (ibid., 1957, Abhandlung 3; 1957); H. Conzelmann, Bemerkungen zum Martyrium Polykarps (Nachr. (Gött.), 1978, Heft 2); B. Dehandschutter, Martyrium Polycarpi: Een literair-kritische studie (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 52 [1979]). G. Buschmann, Martyrium Polycarpi—Eine formkritische Studie: Ein Beitrag zur Frage nach der Entstehung der Gattung Märtyrerakte (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 70; 1994). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 50–2 and 552. G. *Salmon in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 423–31, s.v.; G. Fritz in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2515–20, s.v. 'Polycarpe'; P. Meinhold in PW 21 (pt. 2; 1952), cols. 1662–93; D. Van Damme in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1902–8, s.v. See also PIONIUS, ST and bibl.

Polychronius (d. *c.*430), Bp. of Apamaea in Syria. He was the brother of *Theodore, Bp. of Mopsuestia. A biblical exegete of the *Antiochene school, he wrote commentaries on Job, Daniel, and Ezekiel, of which considerable fragments survive, chiefly in *catenae. It is probable that the fragments on other Books (Prov., Eccles., Song of Songs, etc.) come from another writer of the same name. He expressly condemned the *Alexandrian method of allegorical exegesis.

Frags. on Job ed. P. *Young in Catena Graecorum Patrum in Jobum (London, 1637); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 93. 13–468. Other frags. ed. A. *Mai, whence repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 162 (very rare). O. *Bardenhewer, Polychronius von Apamea (1879). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 361 f. (nos. 3878–82). Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 322–4.

Polycrates (2nd cent.), Bp. of *Ephesus. He was the leading *Quartodeciman of Asia who, after convening a synod *c.*190, sturdily opposed Pope *Victor in his attempts to secure that the feast of *Easter should be uniformly celebrated on a Sunday. In consequence, Victor withdrew from communion with Polycrates. The incident, which is all that is known of Polycrates, is an important illustration of the early claims of the Roman see.

Extracts from Polycrates' letter are preserved in *Eusebius, HE 5. 24. 2–8 and 3. 31. 3. E. Peterson in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1672 f.

Polyglot Bibles. A 'Polyglot Bible' is a single Bible containing the text in a number of languages. Such Bibles were issued esp. in the 16th and 17th cents. The most celebrated is the '*Complutensian Polyglot', in 6 vols. (1522), produced under the patronage of Cardinal *Ximénez, containing the OT in Hebrew, Latin, and Greek, and the NT in Greek and Latin. Other Polyglot Bibles are those of Antwerp (1569–72) in 8 vols., adding the Syriac NT, with a Latin translation; of Paris (1629–45) in 10 vols., adding the Syriac OT, Arabic, with a Latin translation, and the *Samaritan Pentateuch; and of London (1653–7), by B. *Walton, in six vols., containing the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Persian, all with Latin translations, as well as the Samaritan Pentateuch, various *Targums, and selected readings of the *Codex Alexandrinus. Diglot biblical manuscripts (Graeco-Latin and Graeco-Coptic) are known from the 5th, and triglot from the 9th, cent. onwards. A few MSS with four or five languages, written in Egypt, come from the 14th cent.

B. Hall, The Great Polyglot Bibles (Book Club of California, 124; San Francisco, 1966). S. Brock, 'A Fourteenth-Century Polyglot Psalter', in G. E. Kadish and G. E. Freeman (eds.), Studies in Philology in Honour of Ronald Jasper Williams (Toronto, 1982), pp. 1–15. Darlow and Moule, 2 (1911), pp. 1–36.

Pomponazzi, Pietro (1462–1525). The most outstanding philosopher of the Italian Renaissance. He taught successively at Padua, Ferrara, and *Bologna. Under the influence esp. of the Aristotelian commentator, Alexander of Aphrodisias (c. AD 200; whence Pomponazzi's disciples were termed 'Alexandrists'), he expounded *Aristotle in a way at variance with that of the regnant *Scholasticism, maintaining, e.g., in his De Immortalitate Animae (1516) that it was possible to demonstrate by the natural reason the mortality of the human soul. He argued that the only sense in which one could speak legitimately of the immateriality and immortality of the soul was in reference to its capacity for reflective knowledge and conceiving universal concepts, a capacity which accorded it a status between the brutes on the one hand and the angelic beings on the other. Pomponazzi maintained, however, that these doctrines need cause no offence to the Christian, since they were merely the deductions of human reason and were transcended by the supernatural revelation made to the Church. Two later treatises, De Incantationibus and De Fato, were published posthumously at Basle.

Collections of a number of his works as Tractatus Acutissimi (Venice, 1525) and Opera (Basle, 1567). Modern edns. of De Immortalitate Animae, with Ital. tr., by G. Morra (Bologna, 1954) and of De Fato, by R. Lemay (Lugano, 1957). Corsi inediti dell'Insegnamento Padovano, 1. 'Super Libello de Substantia Orbis Expositio et Quaestiones Quattuor' (1507), ed. A. Poppi (Saggi e Testi, 6; Padua, 1966); 2. 'Quaestiones Physicae et Animasticae Decem' (1499–1500; 1503–4), ed. id. (ibid. 9; 1970). B. Nardi, 'Le opere inedite del Pomponazzi', Giornale critico della filosofia italiana, 29 (1950), pp. 427–42; 30 (1951), pp. 103–18, 363–81; 32 (1953), pp. 45–70, 175–91; 33 (1954), pp. 341–55; 34 (1955), pp. 186–98 and 385–403. P. O. Kristeller, 'A New Manuscript Source for Pomponazzi's Theory of the Soul from his Paduan Period', Revue Internationale de Philosophie, 5 (1951), pp. 145–57; id., 'Two Unpublished Questions on the Soul of Pietro Pomponazzi', Medievalia et Humanistica, 9 (1955), pp. 76–101, incl. text. Eng. tr. of De Immortalitate Animae, with introd., in E. Cassirer and others (eds.), The Renaissance Philosophy of Man (Chicago, 1948), pp. 257–381, with bibl. p. 400. F. Fiorentino, Pietro Pomponazzi: Studi storici sulla scuola bolognese-padovana del sec. XVI (Florence, 1868; still important); id., Studi e ritratti della rinascenza (Bari, 1911), pp. 1–79. A. H. Douglas, The Philosophy and Psychology of P. Pomponazzi (ed. C. Douglas and R. P. Hardie, 1910); B. Nardi, Studi su Petro Pomponazzi (Florence, 1965). A. Poppi, Saggi sul Pensiero inedito di Pietro Pomponazzi (Saggi e Testi, 8; Padua, 1970); P. O. Kristeller, Aristotelismo e Sincretismo nel Pensiero di Pietro Pomponazzi (ibid. 19; 1983). L. Ferri, La psicologia di P. Pomponazzi, secondo un MS. della Bibl. Angelica di Roma (1877). B. Nardi in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1731–4, s.v.

Pomponia Graecina (1st cent.), wife of Aulus Plautius, the conqueror of Britain, and thought by some scholars to have been an early convert to Christianity. Acc. to *Tacitus (Annales, 13. 32), she was accused by her husband of foreign superstition (superstitio externa), but acquitted. A Greek inscription to 'Pomponios Grecinos', perhaps a descendant, has been found in the catacomb of St *Callistus. She has been identified (not very convincingly) by G. B. *de Rossi and others with the Roman matron *Lucina (q.v.) of the 'Crypt of Lucina'.

G. B. de Rossi, La Roma sotterranea cristiana, 1 (1864), pp. 319 f., and 2 (1867), pp. 362–5. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2847 f., s.v. 'Aristocratiques (Classes), II', with bibl.

Pontifex Maximus (Lat., 'Supreme Pontiff'). Originally a pagan title of the chief priest at Rome, *Tertullian used it satirically in one of his *Montanist writings (De pudicitia, 1) of either the Pope or the Bp. of Carthage. In the 15th cent. it became a regular title of honour for Popes. Cf. the Italian 'Sommo Pontefice' and the French 'Souverain Pontife'.

R. Schieffer, 'Der Päpst als Pontifex Maximus. Bemerkungen zur Geschichte eines päpstlichen Ehrentitels' Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 57 (1971), pp. 300–9. I. Kajanto, 'Pontifex maximus as the title of the Pope', Arctos, NS 15 (1981), pp. 37–52.

Pontifical, the liturgical book of the W. Church containing the prayers and ceremonies for rites used by a bishop, e.g. *Confirmation and Ordinations, the consecration of churches, etc. It does not, however, contain the Pontifical Mass. Pontificals developed from a combination of the directions in the Ordines with the relevant formulae from *Sacramentaries. The earliest attempts to combine these elements were made in the 9th cent. A very important stage was reached soon after the middle of the 10th cent., when a large collection of texts was put together, prob. at St Alban's, Mainz; this has been named by its discoverer, M. Andrieu, the Romano-Germanic Pontifical. This book rapidly gained acceptance all over Europe and was received at Rome, where it came to be regarded as the Ordo Romanus. During the course of the 12th cent. it was adapted and brought up to date for use in the churches of Rome. Under *Innocent III a new recension was made, which was further developed under *Innocent IV. These books are known as the Pontificals of the Roman Curia. They gave way in the 14th cent. to a private compilation made *c.*1293–5 by the canonist, William *Durandus, Bp. of Mende. This was a marked improvement on them by reason of its clear organization. It was divided into three books: the first relates to persons: Confirmation, Ordination, Consecration of bishops, etc.; the second relates to things: consecration of churches, altars, etc.; and the third deals with rites for special functions, such as the consecration of holy oils, visitation, excommunication, etc. This compilation was the basis of the first printed Pontifical (Rome, 1485) and with minor modifications of the authoritative edition issued in 1596 by *Clement VIII, who forbade the use of any other Pontifical. A revision of part of the Pontifical was undertaken by a commission appointed by Pope *Pius XII; the revision of the remainder was ordained at the Second *Vatican Council. The new Pontifical (not as complete in its coverage) appeared in 1978. Some additional texts for the revised rites have been issued since.

The substance of the Roman Pontificals is largely taken from the Ordines Romani (q.v., incl. bibl.). C. Vogel and R. Elze (eds.), Le Pontifical romano-germanique du dixième siècle (ST 226–7; 1963); M. Andrieu (ed.), Le Pontifical romain au Moyen Age (ibid. 86–8, 99; 1938–41); M. Dykmans, SJ, Le Pontifical Romain révisé au XV^e siècle (ibid. 311; 1985). W. H. *Frere, F. C. Eeles, and A. Riley, Pontifical Services . . . with descriptive Notes and a Liturgical Introduction (*Alcuin Club Collections, 3, 4, 8, 12; 1901–8). P. de Puniet, OSB, Le Pontifical romain (2 vols., 1930–1; Eng. tr., 1932). Vogel, Sources, pp. 225–71. L. Brinkhoff, OFM, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2225–9, s.v., with extensive list of pr. Pontificals.

pontificals (Lat. pontificalia). The insignia of the episcopal order worn by a prelate when celebrating Pontifical Mass. Those common to all prelates, as enumerated by *Pius VII in Decet Romanos (1823), are the buskins (silk leg-coverings), *sandals, *gloves, *dalmatic, *tunicle, *ring, *pectoral cross, and mitre. The 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici (can. 337, §2), however, referred to the *pastoral staff and the mitre as the characteristic insignia pontificalia. Their use (and in some cases their suppression) is regulated by the motu proprio of *Paul VI and the Instruction of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, both of 1968. They are not specified in the 1983 Codex. The word is also applied to episcopal functions at which these insignia are worn.

T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte (Lecture; 1948). P. Salmon, OSB, Étude sur les insignes du pontife dans le rit romain (Rome, 1955). M. Noirot in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 34–42, s.v. 'Pontificalia'.

Pontius, St (d. *c.*260), biographer of St *Cyprian. He was Cyprian's deacon at Carthage and followed him into exile at Curubis. His Vita et Passio Cypriani, more an edifying panegyric than a work of history, is the earliest Christian biography. Feast day, 8 Mar. (He is to be distinguished from the Roman martyr St Pontius [3rd cent.]; feast day, 14 May.)

Crit. text of Vita Cypriani ed. W. Hartel in CSEL 3 (1) (1868), pp. xc–cx; also ed. with full introd. by M. Pellegrino (Verba Seniorum, 3 [Alba, 1955]), and by A. A. R. Bastiaensen (Vite dei Santi, 3; Milan, 1975, pp. 1–49, with notes and bibl., pp. 249–79), both with Ital. tr. Eng. tr. in ANCL 8 (Writings of Cyprian, vol. 1), pp. xiii–xxxi. M. Pellegrino in EC 9 (1952), cols. 175 f., s.v. 'Ponzio'.

Pontius Pilate. See PILATE, PONTIUS.

Poor Clares (Fr., Clarisses), the 'Second Order' of St *Francis, founded by him and St *Clare between 1212 and 1214. It received its first rule in 1219 from Cardinal Ugolino (later *Gregory IX), and spread rapidly through Italy, and later all over Europe. In 1247 *Innocent IV sanctioned a second rule containing several modifications, esp. regarding poverty, and six years later a third and much stricter one, based on that of St Francis, which included the privilegium paupertatis, the right to practise corporate as well as personal poverty. This rule was not accepted by all convents, and in 1263 Urban IV sanctioned a milder one which was observed by the majority, those nuns who follow it being hence called 'Urbanists'. The order was thoroughly reformed in the 15th cent. by St Colette, who restored the principle of strict poverty in her houses. The *Capuchin Reform in the 16th cent. added the Capuchinesses to the family of Poor Clares. The Urbanists, *Colettines, and Capuchinesses are the chief branches of the order. The majority of Poor Clare convents are strictly contemplative, devoted to prayer, penance, and manual work. They have the strictest enclosure, practise severe fasts and other austerities, rise for the Night Office, and are regarded as the most austere women's order of the RC Church. Their habit, which, like that of the Franciscan Friars, has no *scapular, is of dark frieze with a cord girdle, and they wear a black veil and cloth sandals on bare feet.

Histoire abrégée de l'ordre de Sainte Clare d'Assise: Édition des Monastères des Clarisses Colettines à Lyon et à Tournai (1906). G. Daval, OFM, Les Clarisses (Les Grands Ordres religieux, 1924); J. Ancelot-Hustache, Les Clarisses (Les Grands Ordres monastiques, 1929). Santa Chiara d'Assisi: Studi e cronaca del VII centenario 1253–1953 (Assisi [1954]), esp. pp. 311–516, with bibl. I. Omaechevarría, OFM, Las Clarisas a través de los Siglos [1972]. J. [R. H.] Moorman, A History of the Franciscan Order from its Origins to the Year 1517 (Oxford, 1968), pp. 32–9, 205–15, 406–16, 548 f., with bibl. pp. 610 f. L. Oliger, OFM, 'De Origine Regularum Ordinis S. Clarae', AFH 5 (1912), pp. 181–209 and 413–47; I. Omaechevarría, OFM, 'La "Regla" y las Reglas de la Orden de Santa Clara', Collectanea Franciscana, 46 (1976), pp. 93–119. A. F. C. Bourdillon, The Order of Minoresses in England (Manchester University thesis; British Society of Franciscan Studies, 12; 1926); H. Concannon, The Poor Clares in Ireland, A.D. 1629–A.D. 1929 (Dublin, 1929). F. Casolini in Dict. Sp. 5 (1964), cols. 1409–22, s.v. 'Frères Mineurs, vi. Sainte Claire et les Clarisses, 2. Les Clarisses'; I. Omaechevarría, OFM, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1116–32, s.v. 'Clarisse'. See also bibl. to CLARE, ST.

Poor Men of Lyons. The name under which Pope Lucius III condemned the *Waldenses (q.v.) in 1184.

Poore, Richard (d. 1237), Bp. of *Salisbury. His name also occurs in the forms Poor, Poure, and Le Poer. He came from a distinguished administrative family. He studied at the University of Paris under Stephen *Langton. Elected Dean of *Sarum, where his brother Herbert was bishop, in 1197/8, he was twice unsuccessful as a candidate for the sees of *Winchester (1204) and *Durham (1213), but became Bp. of *Chichester in 1215 and was translated to Salisbury two years later. In 1219 he removed his see from Old Sarum to its present site, and in the next year began the erection of the present cathedral, where he consecrated three altars at the E. End in 1225. About the same time he drew up the Salisbury Customary and probably gave the 'Use of Sarum' (q.v.) its final form. The diocesan statutes which he drew up as Bp. of Salisbury were the most widely influential of the English diocesan statutes of the 13th cent. In 1228 he was translated to the see of Durham. He was formerly, but quite erroneously, believed to be the author of the '*Ancren(e) Riwle'.

Crit. edn. of the statutes which he drew up for the diocese of Salisbury, and reissued at Durham, in F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney (eds.), Councils & Synods with other documents relating to the English Church, 2, pt. 1: 1205–1265 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 57–96. See also W. H. Rich Jones (ed.), The Register of S. Osmund (2 vols., RS, 1883–4), 1, pp. 284–379, and 2, pp. 4–100 passim, and introd., 2, pp. xcviii–cxxxi passim. C. R. Cheney, English Synodalia of the Thirteenth Century (1941), pp. 51–89. H. E. D. Blakiston in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 106–9; BRUO 3 (1959), p. 2189.

Pope (Gk. πάπ(π)ας, Lat. papa, 'father'). The title, though now in W. usage restricted to the Bp. of Rome in respect of his capacity as supreme head on earth of the universal Church, was from the early 3rd cent. used as an honorific designation of any bishop. In the E. it was apparently confined to the Bp. of *Alexandria, who is still regularly styled πάπας; however, from the 6th cent. the chancery at *Constantinople normally reserved it for the Bp. of Rome. In modern popular usage the term παπᾶς is applied in the *Orthodox Church to parish priests (cf. the use of 'Father', q.v., in the W.). As is illustrated by the writings of Magnus Felix Ennodius and by the Liber Pontificalis, in the W. the word papa began from the early 6th cent. to be used esp. of the Bp. of Rome, first as a personal and soon as an official title; since the 8th cent. it was seldom used of any other Church dignitary. From the 11th cent. it was applied exclusively to the Bp. of Rome; thesis 11 of the Dictatus papae of Pope *Gregory VII (1075) is widely understood to be a statement of this by then established convention. See also PAPACY.

B. Labanca, 'Del nome Papa nelle chiese cristiane di Oriente ed Occidente', in Actes du Douzième Congrès International des Orientalistes, Rome, 1899, 3. 2 (Florence, 1902), pp. 47–101, with bibl. P. de Labriolle, 'Papa', Bulletin Du Cange, 4 (1928), pp. 65–75. J. Moorhead, 'Papa as "bishop of Rome"', JEH 36 (1985), pp. 337–50.

Pope Joan. See JOAN, POPE.

Pope, William Burt (1822–1903), *Wesleyan theologian. He was born at Horton in Nova Scotia, and after studying privately entered the Methodist Theological Institution at Hoxton in 1840. From 1842 he was a minister in several large towns, including Dover, London, Manchester, and Leeds. In 1860 he became editor of the London Quarterly Review and in 1867 was appointed tutor of systematic theology at Didsbury. In 1876 he went to America as delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Baltimore, and in 1877 he presided over the Wesleyan Conference at Bristol. He resigned his tutorship at Didsbury College in 1886. He enjoyed a high reputation as a theologian in the Methodist Church. His principal work, the Compendium of Christian Theology (3 vols., 1875), contains an elaborate and sympathetic defence of the Methodist doctrine of Christian perfection. He also published several volumes of sermons and translations from the German.

Life by R. W. Moss (London, c.1909). C. H. Irwin in DNB, 1901–1911, 3, p. 127.

Popery. This hostile designation for the specific doctrines and practices of the RC Church is already found in 1534 in W. *Tyndale and has been in common use since.

Popery, the Declaration against. The declaration imposed by the Parliament Act 1678 at the time of the *Popish Plot requiring all Members of Parliament except the Duke of York to denounce Transubstantiation, the Mass, and Invocation of Saints as idolatrous. It was abolished in 1778, when another and less exacting oath was substituted for it, allowing military recruits simply to take an oath of fidelity to the Crown.

Popish Plot. The supposed plot to murder *Charles II which T. *Oates (q.v.) claimed that he had discovered in 1678. Despite the great sensation it created, it seems to have been a pure invention of Oates.

[F.] J. Pollock, The Popish Plot (1903; 2nd edn., 1944). J. Kenyon, The Popish Plot (1972). R. L. Greaves, Secrets of the Kingdom: British Radicals from the Popish Plot to the Revolution of 1688–89 (Stanford, Calif., 1992), pp. 5–32.

poppy heads. In ecclesiology, the ornamented finials at the tops of bench-ends, in form somewhat resembling a fleur de lys. They became common in the 15th cent., esp. in E. Anglia, where many fine examples can still be seen, and were widely copied. It is uncertain whether the name has any connection with the poppy flower. Possibly it derives from the Fr. poupée, a 'figure-head' or 'puppet'.

J. C. Cox, Bench Ends in English Churches (1916), esp. pp. 12–16. F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, 2 (1910), esp. pp. 6 f.

Porette, Margaret (d. 1310), also spelt 'Porete', author of The Mirror of Simple Souls. Prob. a native of Hainaut, she was burnt at the stake in Paris on 1 June 1310 for continuing to circulate copies of a book already condemned as heretical. Her name and details of her trial and death had been known since the events from contemporary documents, but it was only when Romana Guarnieri discovered that items from her teaching, quoted in the records, occur in their contexts in a French manuscript of The Mirror of Simple Souls (Le Miroeur des simples âmes) that her authorship of this treatise was recognized. The work, which has long been known anonymously, circulated, often in Latin, English, and Italian translation, as if it were harmlessly pious. It is one of few such writings which escaped destruction, and thus an important witness to the beliefs of the many in late medieval Europe who professed 'Liberty of the Spirit', freedom, that is, from the restrictive teaching and practices of the Catholic Church. Today many exaggerated claims are made for the Mirror's theological insights. Examination of her 'lyrics', such as 'Friend, what do you want from me?' shows that they are no more than dense series of scriptural allusions; and it seems that much of the 'preaching' in conventicles of the *Brethren of the Free Spirit was little else than devout repetition of Bible-excerpts. Externally, their evangelization may not have differed greatly from that of the early *Franciscans, but they were always accused of 'hypocritical' dissembling. Margaret's position is not entirely clear.

R. Guarnieri, 'Il Movimento del Libero Spirito', Archivio Italiano per la Storia della Pietà, 4 (1965), pp. 351–708, incl. Fr. text of the Mirror, pp. 513–635. Middle Eng. tr. ed. M. Doiron, ibid. 5 (1968), pp. 241–355. Fr. text ed. by R. Guarnieri, together with Lat. version, prob. made during Margaret's lifetime, ed. P. Verdeyen, SJ (CCCM 69; 1986). Modernized Eng. version by C. Kirchberger, The Mirror of Simple Souls ('Orchard Books', 1927; pub. before the authorship was known; it is repr., still without attribution, by C. Crawford, Dublin, 1981). E. Colledge, OSA, and J. C. Marler, '"Poverty of the Will": Ruusbroec, Eckhart and The Mirror of Simple Souls' in P. Mommaers and N. de Paepe (eds.), Jan van Ruusbroec: The Sources, Content and Sequels of his Mysticism (Mediaevalia Lovaniensia, 1st ser., Studia, 12; 1984), pp. 14–47. P. Dronke, Women Writers of the Middle Ages (1984), pp. 217–28.

Porphyry (c.232–c.303), *Neoplatonist philosopher. Of pagan family, possibly orig. called 'Malchus', he was brought up at Tyre, and in his youth visited Syria, Palestine, and Alexandria. It is possible that he was at one time a Christian (so *Socrates and Aristocritus [5th cent.], followed by A. *Harnack; denied by J. Bidez), but he clearly did not hold the faith by the time of the persecution of the Emp. *Decius in 250. He studied philosophy at *Athens and was finally convinced of Neoplatonist principles by *Plotinus, whom he met at *Rome in 262. Just before the death of the latter (270) he went to Sicily, where he published many of his philosophical works, but towards the end of his life he returned to Rome and taught with considerable success, numbering *Iamblichus among his pupils.

After investigating with sympathetic interest the religious systems current in Asia, Porphyry adopted an attitude of scepticism towards all popular religion, marked by esp. bitterness against the Christians. In his Πρὸς Ἀνεβώ he pointed out the contradictions in popular superstition. Of more lasting significance was his treatise in 15 books against the Christians (Κατὰ Χριστιανῶν); it was condemned to be burnt in 448 and survives only in fragments in works written mainly to refute it. Porphyry seems to have observed a certain restraint in his remarks about Christ Himself, whom he admired as a teacher; but he considered the apparent failure of His life proof that He was not divine, and he launched his most bitter invective against the Apostles and leaders of the Church, which he finally condemned for its lack of patriotism in resisting the religious revival fostered by the Emps. Decius and Aurelian. His exposure of the alleged inconsistencies of the Gospels and his attack on the OT (e.g. the date of the Book of *Daniel) was sufficiently forceful to draw detailed refutations from St *Methodius of Olympus, *Eusebius of Caesarea, *Apollinarius of Laodicea, and others.

His numerous philosophical works, primarily intended to draw the soul from contact with the sensible world and turn it to the contemplation of intelligible reality, are important not so much for their originality as for their clear exposition, development and preservation of much that was obscurely put in Plotinus and others. They include popular expositions of his teaching, such as the Letter to Marcella, his wife, a treatise on abstinence from animal flesh, and a life of Pythagoras, besides various commentaries on the Categories of *Aristotle, Περὶ τῆς ἐκ λογίων φιλοσοφίας, Περὶ ἀγαλμάτων, Φιλόσοφος ἱστορία and Ἀφορμαὶ πρὸς τὰ νοητά. He also wrote a Life of Plotinus and edited his works (after 300), and composed various treatises on astronomy, mathematics, grammar, and rhetoric, a philological dissertation on Homer, a commentary on Ptolemy's Harmonica, and on various other technical subjects. His 'Introduction to the Categories of Aristotle' (Εἰσαγωγή) became a standard work in the medieval schools.

No collected edn. of Porphyry's works exists, the different items being pr. in a variety of places; careful list in J. Bidez, op. cit. infra, pp. 63*–73*. Opuscula Selecta ed. A. Nauck (Teub., 1886). Modern edns. of individual works incl. that of his 'Letter to Anebo' (reconstructed from Iamblichus' de Mysteriis) by A. R. Sodano (Naples, 1958); of 'Homeric Questions', bk. 1, by id. (ibid., 1970); of 'Ἀφορμαὶ πρὸς τὰ νοητά by E. Lamberz (Teub., 1975); of his 'Life of Pythagoras' and 'Letter to Marcella', with Fr. tr., by É. des Places, SJ (Collection des Universités de France, 1982); and 'Of Abstinence', with Fr. tr. by J. Bouffartigue and M. Patillon (2 vols., 1977–9). Eng. tr. of 'Isagoge' by E. W. Warren (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Toronto, Mediaeval Sources in Translation, 16; 1975). For Porphyry's life the chief sources are his own 'Life of Plotinus' (crit. edn. in Plotini Opera, ed. P. Henry, SJ, and H. R. Schwyzer, Paris, 1 (1951), pp. 1–41) and the entry in *Suidas' Lexicon, s.v.; on the former see L. Brisson and others, Porphyre, La Vie de Plotin (Histoire des doctrines de l'antiquité classique, 6 and 16; 1982–92). The material is fully surveyed in J. Bidez, Vie de Porphyre avec les fragments des traités Περὶ Ἀγαλμάτων et De Regressu Animae (Université de Gand. Recueil de Travaux publiés par la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres, 43; 1913). A. *Harnack, Porphyrius 'Gegen die Christen', 15 Bücher: Zeugnisse, Fragmente und Referate (Abh. (Berl.), 1916, Heft 1; acc. to Harnack and others, Porphyry was the pagan philosopher extensively cited in *Macarius Magnes' Apocriticus, but cf. T. D. Barnes in JTS NS 24 (1973), pp. 424–42). A. Smith, Porphyry's Place in the Neoplatonic Tradition (The Hague, 1974). F. Romano, Porfirio di Tiro (Università di Catania, Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, 33; 1979). W. Theiler, Porphyrios und Augustin (Halle, 1933); repr. in Forschungen zum Neuplatonismus (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 10; 1966), pp. 160–251. J. J. O'Meara, Porphyry's Philosophy from Oracles in Augustine (Paris, 1959). H. Dörrie and others, Porphyre (Fondation Hardt, Entrétiens sur l'antiquité classiques, 12; 1966). P. Hadot, Porphyre et Victorinus (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1968), incl. text, with Fr. tr., of frags. of a comm. on Parmenides, attributed by Hadot to Porphyry, in vol. 2, pp. 59–113. A. Benoit, 'Le "Contra Christianos" de Porphyre: où en est la collecte des Fragments?', in Mélanges offerts à Marcel Simon: Paganisme, Judaïsme, Christianisme (1978), pp. 261–75. P. de Labriolle, La Réaction païenne (1934), pp. 223–96. L. Vaganay in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2555–90, s.v. 'Porphyre', with bibl.; R. Beutler in PW 22 (pt. 1; 1953), cols. 275–313, s.v. 'Porphyrios'.

Porrectio Instrumentorum. See INSTRUMENTS, TRADITION OF THE.

Porta Santa. See HOLY DOOR.

Portas. See PORTIFORIUM.

porter. See DOORKEEPER.

Porteus, Beilby (1731–1808), Bp. of London. Of American descent, he was educated at Christ's College, Cambridge. In the 1760s he benefited from the patronage of T. *Secker, whose biography he wrote (1770). After holding various parochial appointments, he became Bp. of *Chester in 1776 and of London in 1787. He identified himself with the practical ideals of the rising *Evangelical school, energetically furthering many of their reforms, e.g. promoting mission work among negro slaves in America and securing the due observance of the Christian Holy Days. He was also an eager supporter of the *CMS and of the *British and Foreign Bible Society. A keen *Sabbatarian, he actively opposed the practice of Sunday concerts by professional performers in private houses, as well as Sunday debating societies. In 1767 he preached a sermon at Cambridge, some extracts from which, falling into the hands of John Norris (1734–77), moved him to found the Norrisian chair in divinity. Theologically he was out of sympathy with the *Calvinism currently upheld by the Evangelicals and to this extent did not fully accept all their teaching.

Collected edn. of his Works (35 Sermons, 24 Lectures and various Tracts) in 6 vols., London, 1811, with Life by R. Hodgson as vol. 1. J. H. Overton in DNB 45 (1896), pp. 195–7, with further refs.

Portiforium. A name used in England in the Middle Ages for the *Breviary. Other forms of the word are 'Portas', 'Portuary', and 'Portuis'.

Portiuncula. A small chapel, also known as Santa Maria degli Angeli, in the plain below *Assisi. Dating from *c.*11th cent., it was the favourite church of St *Francis and during his lifetime the headquarters of his order. In it he received his vocation and clothed St *Clare. The chapel and the cell in which he died are now enclosed by an imposing 16th-cent. church, largely rebuilt after an earthquake in 1832. The chapel gives its name to the 'Portiuncula *Indulgence', which can now be gained by visiting any parish or other designated church on 2 August or some other day fixed by the *Ordinary. The indulgence is said to have been granted by Pope *Honorius III in 1216 when he heard of a private revelation to St Francis. The documents connecting St Francis with the indulgence have been the subject of much controversy, but the practice of seeking the indulgence at the Portiuncula chapel (to which it was originally confined) is well attested before the end of the 13th cent.

L. Canonici, OFM, La Porziuncola e gli inizi dell'Ordine Francescano (Assisi, 1963). R. M. Huber, OFM, The Portiuncula Indulgence from Honorius III to Pius XI (New York, 1938). On the indulgence, also O. Englebert, Saint Francis of Assisi, Eng. tr., 2nd edn. rev. by I. Brady, OFM, and R. Brown (Chicago [1965]), pp. 203–11 and 475 f. R. Brown in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 601 f., with further refs.

Port-Royal, Convent of, *Jansenist centre. A convent of *Cistercian nuns was originally founded at Port-Royal, a marshy site some 18 miles SW of *Paris (hence 'Port-Royal-des-Champs'), in 1204. The appointment in 1602 of (Jacqueline Marie) Angélique *Arnauld as abbess at the age of 10 was the prelude to its emergence as a house of major importance. Converted (by a *Capuchin friar) to a new view of her responsibilities in 1608, she undertook far-reaching reforms and began to attract numerous novices (including several members of her own huge family). Owing to the unhealthy conditions, in 1625 the community reluctantly moved into Paris to a new house in the Faubourg St Jacques ('Port-Royal-de-Paris'). Under the direction of Sébastien Zamet, Bp. of Langres (Bp. 1615–55), in 1627 the community was removed from the jurisdiction of Cîteaux and formed an autonomous Ordre du St Sacrement, adding a large red cross to their white habit to signify their independence. The initial spirituality of Port-Royal was largely *Oratorian, but in 1635 Zamet handed over direction to *Saint-Cyran, Jansen's associate; his influence then became decisive, and was zealously maintained after his death in 1643 by Antoine *Arnauld, who became spokesman for what came to be called Jansenism. After 1637 some of Saint-Cyran's converts came to live near the convent (at first in Paris, then in the derelict Port-Royal-des-Champs) as 'Solitaires', without taking vows, but devoting themselves to the interests of the nuns, the education of a few boys (including Racine), and literary pursuits. By 1648 their labours had rendered Port-Royal-des-Champs habitable enough to receive some of the nuns, and henceforward the two houses existed with a single conventual organization, increasingly openly and militantly associated with the Jansenist cause. Blaise *Pascal, though never a 'Solitaire', was closely linked with Port-Royal, and his sister, Jacqueline, was professed there as a nun. Among the most famous 'Solitaires' were Antoine Singlin, Claude Lancelot, and Le Maître de Sacy.

When in 1661 the nuns of Port-Royal refused to subscribe the condemnation of Jansenism, certain measures affecting the prosperity of the convent were taken by the civil power and in 1664 a real persecution began; but very few of the nuns were persuaded to sign the 'formulary' until after the *Peace of the Church (1668). In 1669 the two houses were legally separated, Port-Royal-de-Paris being given over to the nuns who had submitted before 1668, while the Jansenist majority were established in Port-Royal-des-Champs. A period of prosperity followed, cut short in 1679, after the recrudescence of the Jansenist controversy, when the convent was forbidden to take boarders or receive any more novices. Subsequently further measures were taken to the prejudice of its temporalities. In 1705 *Clement XI published a bull condemning those who, in signing the anti-Jansenist formulary of *Alexander VII, used mental reservations: the nuns of Port-Royal refused to accept this new definition, and, after a short persecution, were finally dispersed in 1709. The buildings were subsequently destroyed, and the site desecrated (1710–13).

A. de Dion (ed.), Cartulaire de l'abbaye de Porrois au diocèse de Paris plus connue sous son nom mystique Port-Royal, 1: 1204–80 [all pub.] (1903). The fundamental modern crit. work is that of C. A. Sainte-Beuve, Port-Royal (5 vols., 1840–59, and index, 1861; modern edn. by M. Leroy, Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 93, 99, 107; 1953–5). The more important earlier works incl. [C. Clémencet, OSB] Histoire générale de Port-Royal (10 vols., Amsterdam, 1755–7); id., Histoire littéraire de Port-Royal, ed. [R. F. W.] Guettée (Paris, 1868); J. Racine (the poet), Abrégé de l'histoire de Port-Royal (1742–54; ed. A. Gazier, 1908); and C. *Beard, Port-Royal (2 vols., 1861). C. Gazier, Histoire du monastère de Port-Royal (1929); id., Les Belles Amies de Port-Royal (1930); id., Ces Messieurs de Port-Royal: Documents inédits (1932), and other works of this author. J. Laporte, La Doctrine de Port-Royal (1923; 2nd edn., enlarged, 2 vols., Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1951–2). L. Cognet, La Mère Angélique et son temps, 1: La Réforme de Port-Royal 1591–1618 (1950). F. E. Weaver, The Evolution of the Reform of Port-Royal: From the Rule of Cîteaux to Jansenism [1978]. F. Delforge, Les petites écoles de Port-Royal 1637–1660 (1985). A. Maulvault, Répertoire alphabétique des personnes et des choses de Port-Royal (1902). L. Rea, The Enthusiasts of Port-Royal (1912). Bremond, esp. vol. 4. E. Préclin in Fliche and Martin, 19 (pt. 1; 1955), pp. 193–219. L. Cognet in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 597–99, s.v.; E. E. Weaver in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1931–52, s.v. See also bibl. to JANSENISM.

Portuary. See PORTIFORIUM.

Portugal, Christianity in. The independent history of Portugal began in the 12th cent., when the new country became free from Castile–León and a self-governing vassal of the Papacy. The presence of the *Cistercian Order in Portugal dates from 1140, and its influence was considerable in the early Middle Ages. Its great monastery at Alcobaça was one of the most important in the country. Under Sancho I (reigned 1185–1211) a strong nationalist and anti-Papal movement began which even *Innocent III could not crush. The submission of Sancho in 1210 produced only a temporary settlement and the disputes arising from the movement lasted through much of the 13th cent. The *Mendicant Orders which entered the country at that period proved valuable allies to the Popes in the quarrel. In the *Great Schism, anti-Castilian feeling kept the Portuguese bishops on the side of *Urban VI and his successors.

Early in the 15th cent. the Portuguese voyages of discovery began, and by the middle of the next cent. there had come into existence a great empire in Africa, America, and the East. Esp. after the mid-16th cent., missionaries were active throughout the new dominions, and partly by their preaching, and partly through the assistance of the secular power, they secured mass conversions. However, little trace of their activity now remains in the areas which were formerly under Portuguese influence, except in *Brazil.

In Portugal itself the reform of the bishops and clergy at the end of the 15th cent. had anticipated the *Reformation, which had no influence in the country. Persecution of Jews began later than in *Spain, and it was not until 1536 that, under the influence of the civil power, the *Inquisition was set up. Jews were expelled or converted by force, and for several generations there was discrimination against the so-called 'New Christians'.

Between 1580 and 1640 Portugal was annexed by Spain. From 1640 to 1668 a war of independence was waged in which the Papacy was openly allied with Spain, but in 1669 Portuguese independence was recognized by the Pope. The situation of the Church improved under the pious King João V (1706–50), but later in the 18th cent. the policies of the Marquis of Pombal resulted in the secularization of higher education and the expulsion of the *Jesuits (1759).

After the triumph of the liberals in the civil war of 1832–4, Portugal began to be further secularized. The property of the religious orders was confiscated, no novices were allowed, and the State took over many of the educational and charitable functions formerly exercised by the Church. By the concordat of 1886 the Church regained some of its influence, but the republican government which assumed power in 1910 was profoundly *anticlerical, and much of what had been regained was lost again. The RC Church was disestablished in Portugal in 1911, and in 1913 in the Portuguese colonies.

Under the rule of the dictator A. de O. Salazar (1928–68) and his successor, M. Caetano (1968–74), the relationship between the State and Church changed. In 1933 the religious orders were allowed to return (though the religious habit is rarely worn in public) and in 1940 a new concordat between the Portuguese government and the *Vatican was signed. The importance of the Church in national life continues to be considerable, even after the left-wing revolution of 1974, although there is disparity in religious practice between different parts of the country. The conference of bishops is a powerful political pressure group. The Church is exempted from certain taxes, and has great influence on religious education in schools. The Catholic University of Lisbon has expanded its activities in many Portuguese cities and the Church has its own radio station and television channel. A considerable and continuing impulse to religion was given by the occurrences in *Fátima in 1917.

The Lusitanian Church of Portugal is a small episcopal Church dating from *c.*1867. In full communion with the C or E since 1963, it was integrated into the Anglican Communion on 5 July 1980.

F. de Almeida, História da Igreja em Portugal (4 vols., 1910–22; rev. edn. by D. Peres, 1967–71); M. de Oliveira, História Eclesiástica de Portugal (1940; 4th edn., 1968). A. A. B. de Andrade and others (eds.), Dicionário de História da Igreja em Portugal (1980 ff.). J. Mattoso, Religião e Cultura na Idade Média Portuguesa [1982]. M. Gonçalves da Costa, História do Bispado e Cidade de Lamego (2 vols., Lamego, 1977–9). A. Herculano, História da Origem e Estabelecimento da Inquisição em Portugal (3 vols., 1852; with introd. by J. Borges de Macedo, 1975–6; Eng. tr., Stanford University Publications, University Series, vol. 1, no. 2; 1926). A. Brásio, C.S.Sp. (ed.), Monumenta Missionária Africana: África Ocidental (20 vols., Lisbon, 1952–88); A. da Silva Rego (ed.), Documentação para a História das Missões do Padroado Português do Oriente (18 vols., 1947–88). A. Brasio, C.S.Sp., A Acção Missionária no Período Henriquino (1958); A. da Silva Rego, Les Missions Portugaises (Aperçu général) (Lisbon, 1958); id., O Padroado Português no Oriente e a sua Historiografia 1838–1950 (1978). C. R. Boxer, The Church Militant and Iberian Expansion, 1440–1770 (Johns Hopkins Symposia in Comparative History, 10; Baltimore, 1978). L. de França, Comportamento religioso da População Portuguesa (Estudos para o Desenvolvimento, 4; 1981). There is also much information in the periodical Lusitania Sacra (10 vols., Lisbon, 1956–78; NS, 1989 ff.). J. Mattoso in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 607–14, s.v.; id. and others in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 1952–85, s.v., both with bibl.

Portuis. See PORTIFORIUM.

Positive Theology. The branch of theology which treats of matters of historic and particular fact, custom, or enactment, as opposed to '*Natural Theology' (or 'natural religion'), which deals with religious principles and laws of universal validity. In RC theology, also historical as contrasted with speculative theology.

Positivism. In its orig. and narrower sense, the system of the French thinker Auguste *Comte (q.v.), which confined intellectual inquiry to observable ('positive') facts and their relations, and eschewed all consideration of ultimate issues, incl. those of philosophy and theology. Its most prominent English exponent was Frederic Harrison (1831–1923); but similar doctrines were taught by H. *Spencer and other defenders of *agnosticism. The term has now come to be used in a wider sense for any form of philosophical outlook which rejects metaphysics, esp. when the physical sciences are regarded as offering the norm of knowledge. Such an outlook was developed by the 'Vienna Circle' including R. Carnap and others, formed in 1922, which gave the name 'Logical Positivism' to its doctrines. They were influenced by L. *Wittgenstein, who published his Tractatus Logico-Philosophicus in German in 1921 (Eng. tr., 1922), but spent most of his working life in England. It was, however, chiefly through the work of A. J. Ayer (1910–89) and esp. his Language, Truth and Logic (1936) that Logical Positivism became known in Britain. In its original and radical form its influence was most widespread in the late 1930s, but it had a lasting effect on 20th-cent. philosophy and indirectly on theology by its demand for verifiability as a criterion of any statement being meaningful; all theologians thus had to meet the possible criticism of their statements not as false or unknowable but as unverifiable and therefore meaningless. Attention was devoted by a number of writers to the analysis of language and the meaningfulness or otherwise of religious forms of words (sometimes referred to as 'God-talk').

Possidius, St (*c.*370–*c.*440), biographer of St *Augustine. A converted pagan, he lived in the monastery at Hippo until he became Bp. of Calama in Numidia at some date between 397 and 403 (prob. closer to the latter). He helped Augustine in his struggle against *Donatism and *Pelagianism, was with him when he died, and left, besides a list of his works, a short but valuable sketch of his life.

His 'Vita Augustini', commonly pr. in the earlier edns. of St Augustine, is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 32. 31–66. Crit. edns. by H. T. Weiskotten, Princeton, NJ, 1919, with Eng. tr.; A. Vega, Escurial, 1943; and M. Pellegrino, 'Verba Seniorum', Turin [*c.*1954]. Another Eng. tr. in The Western Fathers, ed. and tr. F. R. Hoare (1954), pp. 189–244. Study and Ger. tr. by A. *Harnack in Abh. (Berl.), 1930, Heft 1. Possidius' 'Operum S. Augustini Elenchus', ed. A. *Wilmart, OSB, in Miscellanea Agostiniana, 2 (1931), pp. 149–233. H. J. Diesner, 'Possidius und Augustinus', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 6 (TU 81; 1962), pp. 350–65. Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 428, 441, 443, 445; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 419 and 637. M.-F. Berrouard, OP, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 1; 1986), cols. 1997–2008, s.v.

postcommunion. In the Roman *Mass the prayer, similar in structure to the *collect, which follows after the communion. In early times it was the last item in the Mass. In the past, when more than one collect was recited, there was a corresponding increase in the number of the postcommunions. The name postcommunion is first found in the *Gelasian Sacramentary.

Jungmann (1952 edn.), 2, pp. 520–7; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 419–25.

postil, also apostil. This word (Lat. postilla), which in the Middle Ages was used of a gloss on a scriptural text, came to be applied esp. to a homily on the Gospel or Epistle for the day or to a book of homilies. It is perhaps derived from post illa, meaning 'After those [words of scripture]'.

Postlapsarianism. See SUBLAPSARIANISM.

post-Sanctus. The prayer in the Eucharistic Liturgy which in the *Gallican rite followed the *Sanctus and varied according to the feast commemorated. It survives in the *Mozarabic rite.

postulant. One who is undergoing a preliminary stage of testing as a candidate for a religious order before admission to the *novitiate. The period of postulancy varies in length acc. to the religious order and the circumstances of the candidate, but it commonly extends over several months, which are spent at the religious house where the candidate expects later to be professed.

Potamius (d. after 359), the earliest known Bp. of Lisbon and a leading Churchman of the W. in the mid-4th cent. He originally professed and defended the orthodox *Nicene position, but at least for a period he aligned himself with the *Arianizing policy of the Emp. Constantius II, accepted the Second Creed of *Sirmium (357) with its repudiation of both ὁμοούσιος and ὁμοιούσιος and joined in putting pressure on Pope *Liberius to submit to the Emperor's demands. Four of his writings survive, all apparently orthodox, though a fragment of a letter written during his heretical period is preserved by *Phoebadius.

'De Lazaro', 'Epistula ad Athanasium' and 'De Martyrio Isaiae prophetae' are pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 8. 1411–18; 'Epistula de substantia Patris et Filii et Spiritus sancti' in A. Hamman, OFM (ed.), Patrologiae cursus completus, Series latina, Supplementum, 1 (1958), cols. 202–16. The last two also ed. A. C. Vega, Scriptores Ecclesiastici hispanolatini veteris et medii aevi, 2 (Madrid, 1934), pp. 25–54. A. M. Moreira, OFM, Potamius de Lisbonne et la controverse arienne (Louvain, 1969), with bibl. M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 80–3.

Potentiana, St. See PUDENTIANA, ST.

Pothinus, St (c.87–177), first Bp. of Lyons. He was probably a native of Asia Minor and a disciple of St *Polycarp, and if so would have brought Asian influences to early Christianity in the south of Gaul. The circumstances of his death are described in the 'Ep. of the Churches of Vienne and Lyons' (ap. *Eusebius, HE 5. 1). Feast day (with his companions in martyrdom), 2 June.

The text of the 'Epistle of the Churches' is conveniently pr., with Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo (ed.), The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1972), pp. 62–85, the passage mentioning Pothinus, pp. 70–3, with introd. pp. xx–xxiii. T. Richoud, Le Premier Évêque de Lugdunum (Lyons, 1900). On the persecution of 177, see also H. Quentin, OSB, 'La Liste des martyrs de Lyon de l'an 177', Anal. Boll. 39 (1921), pp. 113–38, and various essays in Les Martyrs de Lyon (177): Lyon, 20 23 septembre 1977 (Colloques Internationaux du Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, 575; 1978). See also works cited under QUARTODECIMANISM.

Potter, John (c.1674–1747), Abp. of *Canterbury. Educated at Wakefield and University College, Oxford, Potter became successively Fellow of Lincoln (1694), Regius professor of divinity at Oxford (1707), and Bp. of Oxford (1715). He ordained J. *Wesley, with whom he remained on good terms. In 1737 he unexpectedly succeeded W. *Wake as Abp. of Canterbury (E. *Gibson's appointment being thought probable). A Whig, Potter was nevertheless a *High Churchman, as his Discourse of Church Government (1707) shows. His works include a long-used Archaeologia Graeca (2 vols., 1697–9), a fine edition of *Clement of Alexandria (1715), and writings against the views of B. *Hoadly.

Collected edn. of his Theological Works pub. in 3 vols., Oxford, 1753–4. Life by R. Anderson, MD (1750–1830), prefixed to the edn. of Potter's Archaeologia Graeca pub. London, 1818 (vol. 1, pp. i–xi), and subsequent edns. Short modern study by L. W. Barnard (Ilfracombe, Devon, 1989). J. H. Lupton in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 216 f.

Powers. Acc. to medieval angelology, the sixth order of angels in the celestial hierarchy. The word is also used more generally of any celestial being who exercises control or influence over other parts of creation (cf. the English version of the *Te Deum, 'To Thee all angels cry aloud: the heavens and all the powers therein').

Praedestinatus. A treatise, composed probably at Rome during the Papacy of Sixtus III (432–40), and directed against the more extreme forms of the doctrine of *predestination then being taught under the influence of certain passages in the writings of St *Augustine. Its standpoint, if not actually *Pelagian, is at least *Semipelagian. Of its three books, the first is mainly a plagiarized reproduction of St Augustine's 'De haeresibus'; the second purports to be the work of an upholder of St Augustine's predestination doctrines, though it is almost certainly a composition of the writer of the whole treatise; and the third is a refutation of the second book. It has been attributed to various authors: *Arnobius Junior, *Julian of Eclanum, or, with more probability, someone belonging to his circle. It was first edited in 1643 by J. *Sirmond, SJ.

J. Sirmond based his edn. on the MS Reims 40, once in the possession of *Hincmar. Rev. text by J. de La Baune, SJ, in his edn. of Sirmond's works (1696); repr. (via A. *Gallandi) in J. P. Migne, PL 53. 579–692. The work was much discussed in the *Jansenist controversies. H. von Schubert, Der sogenannte Praedestinatus: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Pelagianismus (TU 24. 4; 1903); G. Morin, OSB, Études, Textes, Découvertes (Anecdota Maredsolana, 2nd ser. 1; 1913), pp. 315–24 ('Que le Praedestinatus est du même Arnobe qui a écrit le Conflictus et le Commentaire sur les Psaumes'); G. Bardy, 'Le Souvenir d'Arius dans le Praedestinatus', R. Bén. 40 (1928), pp. 256–61; M. Abel, 'Le Praedestinatus et le pélagianisme', RTAM 35 (1968), pp. 5–25. É. Amann in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2775–80, s.v.

Praemunire. The title of statutes (first passed in 1353, 1365, and 1393) which were designed to protect rights claimed by the English Crown against encroachment by the Papacy. The name can denote the statutes, the offence, the writ, and the punishment. The statute of 1353 forbade the withdrawal from England of cases which should be decided in the king's courts, and the penalties prescribed were in 1393 stiffened and extended to any who should promote any Papal bull translating to other sees bishops on whom the king depended as ministers of state and any Papal excommunication of bishops who enforced decisions of the king's courts regarding *advowsons. Appeals to Rome subsequently dwindled for a time. In 1529 *Henry VIII claimed that T. *Wolsey's activities as Papal legate infringed this statute, and in 1531 extracted a fine from the whole clergy on the ground that the jurisdiction of the Church courts contravened the Act. *Elizabeth I used Praemunire penalties to deal with purely civil offences and with RC recusants; and *James I's judges used Praemunire to assist the encroachments of temporal upon ecclesiastical courts. By the Criminal Law Act 1967 the statutes were repealed in entirety.

Eng. tr. of First Statute of Praemunire (1353) pr. Gee and Hardy, pp. 103 f. (no. 35); that of 1393, ibid., pp. 122–5 (no. 40). The latter is repr. in Bettenson, pp. 239–42. W. T. Waugh, 'The Great Statute of Praemunire', EHR 37 (1922), pp. 173–205. E. B. Graves, 'The Legal Significance of the Statute of Praemunire of 1353' in Anniversary Essays in Mediaeval History by Students of Charles Homer Haskins (Boston and New York, 1929), pp. 57–80. G. R. Elton, The Tudor Constitution: Documents and Commentary (2nd edn., Cambridge, 1982), pp. 24 f. and 339 f. G. Crosse in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), pp. 487 f., s.v.

Praepositinus (*c.*1140–*c.*1210), theologian and liturgist. Prob. a native of Cremona, he studied Arts and Theology in Paris at a time when *Peter Lombard's 'Sentences' were beginning to be established as a central theological text in the Parisian schools. Praepositinus' main theological work, his 'Summa Theologica', follows the pattern of Lombard's Sentences, being arranged in four books dealing respectively with God, the Creation and Fall, the Incarnation and Christian virtues, and the Sacraments. He expresses a distinctly personal view on several contested issues, and his work, though not very original, has an engaging spontaneity and clarity. It marks a stage in the development of logical and grammatical refinements and elaborations which later became the hallmark of scholastic theologians, and it had a wide circulation in the 13th cent.

At some stage he spent time trying to convert the *Cathars of S. France, apparently with little success. He was teaching Theology in Paris in 1194, when he accepted an invitation from Conrad of Wittelsbach, Abp. of Mainz, to take charge of the cathedral school of Mainz, and he held this post until Conrad's death in 1203. In a dispute between the cathedral chapter and *Innocent III over the appointment of Conrad's successor, Praepositinus took the side of the chapter, and he received a severe letter of personal rebuke from the Pope theatening him with dismissal, whereupon he gave up his position and returned to Paris. In 1206 he became head of the Parisian schools as chancellor of the cathedral, and he held this position until 1209. He died shortly afterwards, perhaps after entering a religious community.

In addition to his 'Summa Theologica', Praepositinus also (prob. while in Paris) wrote a 'Summa super Psalterium' and (prob. while in Mainz) a work on the liturgical year ('Tractatus de officiis'). The latter was largely borrowed from *Rupert of Deutz, and in its turn it was the main source of the standard work of William *Durandus. A 'Summa contra haereticos', ascribed to him in one MS, is prob. not by him.

Praepositinus was one of the ablest of the Parisian theologians of the second half of the 12th cent. Although he was not responsible for any major innovation, his work exemplifies the comprehensive aims of the generation of scholars who prepared the way for the more intensely intellectual theologians of the 13th cent.

Part of bk. 1 of the 'Summa Theologica', ed. G. Angelini, L'Ortodossia e la grammatica: Analisi di struttura e deduzione storica della Teologia Trinitaria di Prepositino (Analecta Gregoriana, 183; 1972), pp. 199–303; bk. 4, ed. D. E. Pilarczyk (Collectio Urbaniana, 3rd ser. 7; Rome, 1964). 'Tractatus de officiis' ed. J. A. Corbett (University of Notre Dame Publications in Mediaeval Studies, 31; 1969). The 'Summa contra haereticos' ascribed to Praepositinus, ed. J. N. Garvin and J. A. Corbett (ibid. 15; 1958). G. Lacombe, La Vie et les œuvres de Prévostin (Bibliothèque thomiste, 11; Kain, 1927; designed as Opera Omnia, 1, but all pub.). Id. in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 162–9; J. Longère in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2185–93, both s.v. 'Prévostin de Crémone'.

pragmatic sanction (Lat. pragmatica sanctio). A term orig. employed in later Roman law for an arrangement defining the limits of the sovereign power of a prince, esp. in the matter of royal succession. A pragmatic sanction, published by Philip V, introduced Salic Law into Spain, and another, issued later by Ferdinand VII, revoked it.

The Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges, issued by the French clergy on 7 July 1438 while the Council of *Basle (q.v.) was still in session, was a statement of *Gallicanist principles. It upheld the right of the French Church to administer its temporal property independently of the Papacy and disallowed Papal nominations to vacant benefices. In 1516 it was superseded by the Concordat of *Bologna (q.v.).

Text of the Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges in Ordonnances des rois de France de la troisième race, 13 (ed. M. de Vilevault, 1782), pp. 267–91; summary in Mirbt, no. 398, pp. 232 f.; Eng. tr. in S. Z. Ehler and J. B. Morrall (eds.), Church and State Through the Centuries (1954), pp. 112–21. N. Valois, Histoire de la pragmatique sanction de Bourges sous Charles VII (Archives de l'Histoire de la France; 1906). Hefele and Leclercq, 7 (pt. 2; 1916), pp. 1053–61. V. Martin, Les Origines du gallicanisme, 2 (1939), pp. 293–324. R. Hedde in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2781–6, s.v. 'Pragmatique Sanction, II'.

Pragmatism (Gk. πράγματα, 'ordinary things', 'affairs'). A system of belief devised by C. S. Peirce, H. *Bergson, F. C. S. Schiller, W. *James, J. Dewey, and others, on the principle that every truth has practical consequences, and that these are a test of its truthfulness. Truth is therefore relative, and the proof of a fact is not an act of the pure reason, but rather an account of how the fact has come to be accepted as justifying itself by practical results. The real is not to be investigated by metaphysical speculation, but rather acc. to the values developed through its being known. Pragmatism justifies and explains religions acc. as they satisfy psychological criteria and generate suitable values. In the RC Church the *Modernist Movement was much influenced by Pragmatist ideals, notably in the persons of L. *Laberthonnière and G. *Tyrrell, as well as F. *von Hügel in his earlier life. Pragmatist ideas also exercised a widely diffused influence on religious thought generally, esp. in the period 1901–30.

Personal Idealism (ed. H. Sturt, 1902); J. Dewey, Studies in Logical Theory (1903); F. C. S. Schiller, Humanism (1903); id., Studies in Humanism (1907); W. James, Pragmatism (1907); id., The Meaning of Truth (1909); H. Vaihinger, Die Philosophie des Als Ob (1911). A. J. Ayer, The Origins of Pragmatism (1968); F. C. S. Schiller in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 147–50, s.v., with bibl.

Prassede, St. See PRAXEDES, ST.

Praxeas (*fl. c.*200), heretic. The substance of his history and teaching is known only from the treatise 'Adversus Praxean' (*c.*213?) of his vigorous opponent *Tertullian and may thus be somewhat misrepresented. He is said to have arrived in Rome towards the end of the 2nd cent. from Asia, where he had suffered imprisonment for his faith, and to have succeeded in turning the Pope (*Victor or *Zephyrinus) against the *Montanists. He proclaimed himself a leader of the '*Patripassian Monarchians', i.e. of those who were concerned to maintain the unity of the Godhead even at the cost of declaring that God suffered. As Tertullian put it, he 'crucified the Father' (Patrem crucifixit) since he conceived of the Godhead as emptied into the person of Christ in order to assume the temporary role of Redeemer. Before the end of his life he recanted his heretical doctrines.

'Praxeas' is prob. a real name and not, as G. B. *de Rossi suggested, a pseudonym ('busybody') for *Noetus or Epigonus. Tertullian's Adversus Praxean is ed., with introd., Eng. tr. and comm., by E. Evans (London, 1948). P. Meinhold in PW 22 (pt. 2; 1954), cols. 1744–7, s.v. See also bibl. to MONARCHIANISM.

Praxedes, St (1st–2nd cent.), also 'Prassede', early martyr at Rome. Acc. to her (spurious) acta, she was a Roman virgin who sheltered Christians during the persecution under *Marcus Aurelius. She was buried in the Catacomb of *Priscilla next to the grave of St *Pudentiana and hence (on wholly insufficient grounds) was supposed to have been her sister. The well-known church of Santa Prassede on the Esquiline at Rome (which inspired R. Browning's 'Tomb at St Praxed's') was built by Paschal I (817–24) close to the site of an earlier structure supposed to have stood on the site of her house. Feast day, 21 July.

St Praxedes and St Pudentiana are first mentioned in 7th-cent. Roman Itineraries to the Catacombs; they occur only in interpolated texts of the *Hieronymian Martyrology. Later legends make them both daughters of St *Pudens (q.v.). AASS, Mai. 4 (1685), pp. 296–301. A. de Waal, 'Der Titulus Praxedis', RQ 19 (1905), pp. 169–80. J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (1918), pp. 149–51. R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in idd. and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 3 (Rome, 1967), pp. 232–59, with bibl. [in English].

prayer. 'Prayer, properly speaking, is a petition which we make to God for the things which pertain to our salvation; but it is also taken in another, broader sense to mean any raising of the heart to God' (*Luis of Granada). In its original sense of 'petition', prayer is a universal phenomenon, wherever people believe that they are in some way dependent on some higher power not subject to their control. 'Everyone has need of the gods' (Homer, Od. 3. 48). It is prayer in this strict sense whose scope and propriety is debated by the ancient philosophers, and in the Bible and in Christian literature until well into the Middle Ages no other meaning is normally envisaged, though a prayer, considered as a rhetorical construct, may include other elements such as thanksgiving and confession (cf. *Origen, Orat. 33). The extended use of the word, taking in all kinds of 'raising of the heart to God', begins to appear in the W. in the late Middle Ages and in some 16th-cent. writers it is the primary sense. A consequent tendency to devalue petitionary prayer, if not to eliminate it entirely, is apparent in some circles, though both the Reformers and the *Roman Catechism of 1566 treat prayer as meaning essentially petition, and some modern theologians, such as K. *Rahner, insist on the primacy of petition. In the E., *Isaac of Nineveh notes an extension of 'prayer' to include 'all spiritual working', but, precisely because prayer is 'a beseeching for something', he prefers to say that prayer ceases once contemplation begins (Discourse 22, ed. Wensinck).

In antiquity prayer usually involved spoken words and gestures. The early Church took over from Judaism the posture of standing with hands upraised (1 Tim. 2: 8). Other gestures include kneeling (Lk. 22: 41) and prostration (Mt. 26: 39). The Church soon recognized that prayer need not be spoken aloud, but in the early cents. spoken prayer remained normative. The medieval monastic tradition increasingly stressed silent prayer and this became the common practice of the laity also.

Prayer may be offered privately by an individual (Mt. 6: 6) or publicly in a formal act of worship (Acts 3: 1) or by a community faced with some crisis (Acts 12: 5). There is early evidence for Christians assembling for public prayer on *Sundays and for saying regular prayers at set times each day; from this practice the Divine *Office (q.v.) developed.

Christ taught His disciples to call God 'Father', and some scholars connect this form of address with the special way in which He Himself addressed God; it is because Christians share in His Spirit that they cry out 'Abba, Father' (Rom. 8: 15, Gal. 4: 6). He also taught His disciples what to pray (Mt. 6: 9–13), though Christian tradition is unanimous in not confining prayer to the words of the *Lord's Prayer. Christians also believe that, in so much as they still do not know what they ought to pray, the Spirit helps them, praying within them with 'unutterable groanings' (Rom. 8: 26). Christ Himself intercedes for them (Heb. 7: 25) and it is in His name and through Him that Christians pray. Acc. to Origen (Orat. 16. 1) prayer should be made only to the Father through Christ, but in fact prayer to Christ has been common since early times and subsequently prayer to the Holy Spirit was introduced.

Because God is regarded as totally competent in all matters and because man is always dependent on Him, Christians are told to pray always (Phil. 4: 6, 1 Thess. 5: 17). If God does not immediately answer prayer, perseverance is recommended (Lk. 18: 1–8). God particularly hears the prayer of the righteous (Prov. 15: 29, James 5: 16), but He also hears the prayer of the repentant sinner (Lk. 18: 13 f.).

Ancient philosophers debated what could properly be prayed for. The *Stoics maintained that only spiritual benefits should be sought in prayer, and this view was accepted by Origen (Orat. 13. 4). The Middle Platonists denied that man can pray for virtue, since it is his responsibility to become virtuous, and they regarded prayer generally as of doubtful value; Maximus of Tyre suggested that it was significant only as 'converse with the gods' (ὁμιλία πρὸς τοὺς θεούς, 5. 8), a phrase adapted by *Clement of Alexandria (Strom. 7. 39. 6), who shares the Platonist embarrassment. Later Platonists, from *Porphyry onwards, ascribe a higher value and more universal scope to prayer. St *Augustine maintains that it is proper to pray for anything that can be lawfully desired (Ep. 130. 9–13) and he complains about the *Pelagian elimination of prayer for virtue (Spir. et Litt. 13. 22). In general, the degree of emphasis placed on petition is proportionate to different thinkers' views of *grace and man's dependence on God.

There are conceptual difficulties about prayer, already noticed by Origen (Orat. 5): God knows what man needs better than man does, and from the beginning of time He has determined what He will do. The classic answer to this problem is given by St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol. 2. 2. q. 83): in prayer man is not trying to force God's will; he is submitting his desires to Him (this is inherent in the very idea of petition); and he does not pray in the hope of changing God's mind, but in order to co-operate with Him in bringing about certain effects which He has foreordained; prayer is a secondary cause, itself caused by God. Some modern writers evade the difficulty either by denying that God's will is determined from the beginning or by reducing prayer to being only the expression of resignation to His will.

The early monastic tradition stressed the need for purity of prayer: in prayer the mind must be fixed on God without distraction. *Evagrius Ponticus extended this to mean that a person praying must dispel all thoughts from his mind, since God cannot be identified with anything that is thought. To facilitate this concentration short, intense prayer was recommended. Some E. writers recommend that a single formula of prayer, preferably containing the name of Jesus, should be adopted and used the whole time. This practice developed into the Byzantine 'prayer of the heart' (see HESYCHASM), in which a formula such as 'Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me' (the '*Jesus Prayer') is recited continually; this practice, combined with the monastic discipline of guarding the heart against distracting thoughts, is believed to lead to the 'discovery of the Spirit' dwelling in the heart, so that human prayer becomes one with the prayer of the Spirit. In the W. the tradition of short, intense prayer persisted until near the end of the Middle Ages, but from the 15th cent. some people began to insist on longer, regular periods of private prayer.

In the course of the Middle Ages there was a tendency to reduce prayer to a seeking of God's gift of Himself, and so to a desire for God. Since a similar development was taking place with regard to *meditation and *contemplation, the words began to merge, so that from the 12th cent. some writers use the words more or less interchangeably and from the 14th cent. meditation and contemplation are sometimes treated as parts or forms of prayer. Thereafter various kinds of prayer came to be identified, such as 'discursive prayer', 'affective prayer', and 'contemplative prayer', and these are sometimes systematized as successive stages of prayer, which some writers connect with the *purgative, illuminative, and unitive ways. Praise, thanksgiving, and confession also came to be regularly seen as parts of prayer. The growing complexity of prayer led to the formulation of several 'methods' of prayer, such as those associated with St *Ignatius Loyola, St *Francis de Sales, and J.-J. *Olier (the 'Sulpician method'); other writers oppose the idea of any such methods.

In the 20th cent. petition has continued to engage the attention of philosophers and theologians, and it is still the popular understanding of what prayer means. There has also been a lively interest in prayer in the enlarged sense, ranging from more or less technical methods of prayer, incl. the Jesus Prayer and practices adapted from E. non-Christian religions, to more simple notions of just 'being with God'.

Prayer to the BVM and to other *saints, and to angels, is attested from an early period; it is theologically distinct from prayer to God, being properly a request for the prayers of the saints and angels (cf. Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. 2. 2. qu. 83 a 4). The legitimacy of prayer to the saints and angels has traditionally been denied by Protestants.

There is an immense lit. on prayer; only a sample can be indicated here. In addition to works on Spirituality, cited s.v., there is a general survey by F. *Heiler, Das Gebet (1918; abbreviated Eng. tr., 1932). On the biblical texts, J. Herrmann and H. Greeven in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 774–808, s.v. εὔχομαι (Eng. tr., 2 (1964), pp. 775–808); J. Jeremias, The Prayers of Jesus (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 6; 1967 [Eng. tr. of papers from Abba, 1966, and elsewhere]); also on the NT and early patristic period, A. [G.] Hamman, OFM, La Prière (2 vols. to date. Bibliothèque de Théologie [1959–63]; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, Chicago, 1971). The main patristic texts include Origen, De Oratione; *Cyprian, De Oratione Dominica; Evagrius Ponticus, De Oratione; and Augustine, Ep. ad Probam (Ep. 130). From the medieval period: *Hugh of St-Victor, De Virtute Orandi; John of Portes (d. *c.*1163), De Modo Orandi (ed., with Fr. tr., in Lettres des Premiers Chartreux, 2 (SC 274; 1980), pp. 150–71); Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theol. 2. 2. q. 83; Ludovic Barbo, OSB, Bp. of Treviso (d. 1443), Forma Orationis et Meditationis (ed. I. Tassi, OSB, Ludovico Barbo (Uomini e Dottrine, 1; 1952), pp. 143–52); G. *Savonarola, Orazione Mentale. 16th-cent. treatments of prayer in the strict sense incl. the 'Roman Catechism', pt. 4; J. *Calvin, Institutio Christianae Religionis, bk. 3, ch. 20; T. *Becon, Catechism, part 4; Homilies*, Book 2, homm. 7–8; of prayer in the wider sense, F. de Osuna, OFM, Tercer Abecedario (Toledo, 1527; modern edn., Madrid, 1972; Eng. tr., Classics of Western Spirituality, 1981); *Teresa of Ávila, Castillo Interior o Moradas; and Luis of Granada, Libro de la Oración y Consideración. Modern discussions of prayer are included in books on the spiritual life cited under SPIRITUALITY. On 'stages of prayer', J. G. Arintero, OP, Grados de Oración (1918; Eng. tr., 1957). On 'methods of prayer', G. Lercaro, Metodi di Orazione Mentale (Genoa, 1948; Eng. tr., 1957). On 'phenomena' of prayer, A. Poulain, SJ, Des Grâces d'Oraison (1901; Eng. tr., 1910). On petition, K. Rahner, SJ, 'Sendung zum Gebet', Stimmen der Zeit, 152 (1953), pp. 161–70, repr. in Schriften zur Theologie, 3 (1956), pp. 249–61 (Eng. tr., Theological Investigations, 3 (1967), pp. 209–19). Convenient anthology of Orthodox texts compiled by Igumen Chariton of Valamo, pub. Valamo, Finland, 1936; Eng. tr. by E. Kadloubovsky and E. M. Palmer, with introd. by T. [R.] Ware, The Art of Prayer (1966). On Orthodox traditions of prayer, see works cited under HESYCHASM and JESUS PRAYER. Philosophical discussions of prayer incl. D. Z. Phillips, The Concept of Prayer (1965); P. R. Baelz, Prayer and Providence (Hulsean Lectures for 1966; 1968); C. Fabro, La Preghiera nel Pensiero Moderno (1979); B. [E. A.] Davies [OP], Thinking about God (1985), pp. 307–34. Modern works, representing a variety of approaches, incl. H. E. *Fosdick, The Meaning of Prayer (1915); H. [W.] Northcott, CR, The Venture of Prayer (1950); H. U. von *Balthasar, SJ, Das betrachtende Gebet (1957; Eng. tr. 1961); M. Nédoncelle, Prière humaine et prière divine: Notes phénoménolo- giques (1962; Eng. tr., 1964); C. S. *Lewis, Letters to Malcolm: Chiefly on Prayer (1964); A. Bloom, Living Prayer (1966), and other works of this author; 'Abhishiktananda' [H. Le Saux, OSB], Prayer (Delhi, 1967); B. [A. F.] Basset, SJ, Let's Start Praying Again (1972); G. Lefebvre [OSB], Simplicité de la Prière (1973; Eng. tr., 1975); S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Prayer (2 vols., Dublin, 1974). M. Dupuy, PSS, in Dict. Sp. 11 (1982), cols. 831–46, s.v. 'Oraison'.

Prayer Book, the. A common designation of the Book of *Common Prayer (q.v.).

Prayer of Manasses. See MANASSES, PRAYER OF.

prayers for the dead. See DEAD, PRAYERS FOR THE.

Preachers, Order of. See DOMINICAN ORDER.

preaching. Preaching has always been regarded as an essential part of Christian ministry. The emphasis placed upon it has varied at different times and in different denominations because of the various views of the nature of the ministry that have been held, but it has always been looked upon as important. In the Anglican view of ministry it has taken equal part with the administration of the *sacraments. A visible sign of this is the prominent place that has been given to *pulpits in Anglican churches. In the *Calvinist tradition preaching has been accepted as the principal work of a minister, and correspondingly, in a Calvinist church the pulpit has been given pride of place in the centre of the building. The RC Church has at times subordinated preaching to the administration of the sacraments, but since the Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) greater emphasis has been given to the work of preaching. That Council declared that the homily (or sermon) was an integral part not only of the Eucharist but also of the other sacraments, and that preaching was central to the ministry of both bishops and priests.

The vehicle of preaching is human speech, and it is this fact which has given it its high place in ministry. For speech is that form of communication which is limited to human beings and therefore expresses human personality. It creates a relationship between persons. But preaching is not any speech; it is speech under the authority of God, and the communication of that authority is as important to preaching as speech itself. The sense of that authority carries with it the conviction, both for the preacher and the hearer, that the things of God are communicated through preaching.

The origins of preaching lie in the words of the *prophets of the OT. They saw themselves as God's spokesmen, directly commissioned by Him to declare His will to His people Israel, both in their corporate and individual lives; to influence the direction of life by encouragement, warning, and condemnation. Through this work of the prophets the idea of God relating to His people through His word became an important part of the OT tradition. In the NT St *John's Gospel used that tradition when the birth of Jesus Christ was there described as 'the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us' (Jn. 1: 14). There the claim is made that the incarnate life of Jesus is the fullest personal means of communication between God and humankind under the conditions of this world.

The ministry of Jesus Christ provides the ideal and pattern for Christian ministry; He is the model preacher. He is described in the gospels as a prophet who spoke with authority: one who fulfilled the work of the OT prophets. After His death and resurrection the *Apostles are shown exercising a similar but dependent ministry: dependent in the sense that the content of their preaching is witness to Jesus. So in Acts we are shown St *Peter and St *Paul in particular, winning converts to the new faith by their preaching. In this way the NT has set the standard for all subsequent ministry. Without preaching the ministry must be defective.

Since the 1st cent. the work of preaching has been principally, though not exclusively, directed to the Church. Its purpose has been to teach, strengthen, and enthuse congregations that they may become more effective witnesses to Christian truth and the Christian way of life. Where preaching has been directed to non-Christians its purpose has been so to move those who listen that they become a congregation of believers. All preaching is thus related to Christian community, and its content is always witness in some way to Jesus as the Son of God. Holy Scripture for the Christian has the same purpose, and so preaching and Scripture have always been closely related, as in the common practice of a sermon being seen as an exposition of a text taken from Scripture. Sermons extend the witness of Scripture by explaining its meaning and creating enthusiasm for its message.

Preaching has had a great influence on the character of ministry in that its effective performance has usually been seen as demanding an educated ministry. At times when there has been slackness in insisting on education as a requisite for ministry, the first casualty has been preaching, and at such times the work and witness of the Church has suffered. Revival in Church life has frequently been led by a revival in preaching and an insistence on the better education of the clergy. One example of this is the religious movement started by St *Francis of Assisi in the 12th cent. which led to a revival in preaching and the creation of two orders of preaching friars, the *Franciscans and the *Dominicans. Indeed the official title of the Dominicans is 'Ordo Praedicatorum', the 'Order of Preachers'. Later the Council of *Trent (1545–63) ordered the establishment of *seminaries for the education of the clergy in every RC diocese. Similar movements can be seen at various times in the history of the Church and all denominations.

In 17th-cent. *France J.-B. *Bossuet exercised great influence over the French court and the educated classes in general by the power of his preaching. In 18th-cent. England the preaching of John *Wesley led ultimately to the foundation of the *Methodist Church. In the *United States of America at much the same time there was a great revival of evangelical religious life inspired by the preaching of an Englishman, George *Whitefield. It became known as the *Great Awakening. Its most notable American leader was Jonathan *Edwards and it led to the development of what came to be dubbed 'New England Theology'. In the 19th cent. in the new territories opening up in the W. much preaching took place in tents; it was known as 'tent evangelism' and from it come the *Revival Movements of our own time led by such preachers as Billy *Graham. These are notable examples of the kind of influence that preaching has had on the life of the Church in most times and places.

Preaching has also influenced the study of theology. In the Graeco-Roman world much attention was paid to the study of rhetoric by lawyers, statesmen, and all who were concerned with public speaking. Christian preachers were influenced by this study. St *Augustine of Hippo is but one example. In time specifically Christian developments were added to this study such as *hermeneutics (the study of the proper interpretation of Scripture) and *apologetics (the study of the most effective way of commending the Gospel to those who do not know or accept it). In addition many preachers have in their sermons extended theological learning. Examples of such preachers are St Augustine of Hippo in the 5th cent., J. *Butler, Bp. of Durham, in the 18th cent., and F. D. *Maurice in the 19th. Other preachers have had considerable influence on the literary life of their times, such as John *Donne and Lancelot *Andrewes in 17th-cent. England and J. H. *Newman in 19th-cent. Oxford.

Preaching begins as speech by an authorized minister to a believing community or congregation but its influence has extended far beyond this to every aspect of Christian life.

See also ARS PRAEDICANDI; HOMILIES, THE BOOKS OF.

R. E. C. Browne, The Ministry of the Word (Studies in Ministry and Worship [3]; 1958). D. W. Cleverley Ford, The Ministry of the Word (1979). Y. T. Brilioth, Predikans historia (Lund [1946]); id., Landmarks in the History of Preaching (Donellan Lectures, 1949; 1950). C. H. *Dodd, The Apostolic Preaching and its Developments (1936). A. Olivar, La Predicación Cristiana Antiqua (Barcelona, 1991). C. [H.] Smyth, The Art of Preaching: A Practical Survey of Preaching in the Church of England 747–1939 (1940). R. F. Bennett, The Early Dominicans: Studies in Thirteenth Century Dominican History (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 1937), esp. pp. 75–127. G. R. Owst, Preaching in Medieval England: An Introduction to Sermon Manuscripts of the Period c.1350–1450 (ibid., 1926); H. L. Spencer, English Preaching in the Late Middle Ages (Oxford, 1993); J. W. Blench, Preaching in England in the late Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries (ibid., 1964). English Wycliffite Sermons, ed. A. Hudson and P. Gradon (5 vols., ibid., 1983–96). The English Sermon: An Anthology (3 vols., Cheadle, 1976: vol. 1, ed. M. Seymour-Smith, 1550–1650; vol. 2, ed. C. H. Sisson, 1650–1750; vol. 3, ed. R. Nye, 1750–1850). P. [J.] Bayley, French Pulpit Oratory 1598–1650: A Study in Themes and Styles, with a Descriptive Catalogue of Printed Texts (Cambridge, 1980); id. (ed.), Selected Sermons of the French Baroque (1600–1650) (New York and London, 1983). L. [J.] Taylor, Soldiers of Christ: Preaching in Late Medieval and Reformation France (New York and Oxford, 1992). P. T. *Forsyth, Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind (1907). W. E. Sangster, The Craft of Sermon Construction (1949); W. J. Burghardt, SJ, Preaching: The Art and the Craft (Mahwah, NJ, 1987).

Preaching of Peter. See PETER, PREACHING OF ST.

prebend and prebendary. A *cathedral benefice and its holder. Though in the early Middle Ages reformers constantly aimed at maintaining the common life under rule for the *canons of cathedral and collegiate foundations, in the majority of such foundations this ideal was frankly abandoned and the endowment divided up into separate portions, each designed for the support of one member of the chapter. These acquired the name of 'prebends' from the fact that they supplied or furnished (praebere) a living to their holders, who in turn came to be known as 'prebendaries'. The prebend normally consisted of the revenue from one manor of the cathedral estates, a fact which accounts for the territorial names still attached to the prebendal stalls in many English cathedrals. In English cathedrals of the 'Old Foundation' the ancient prebends have been kept in name, though the transference of their attached incomes to the *Ecclesiastical Commission by the 19th-cent. legislation has made them in nearly all cases honorary offices only. In the former monastic cathedrals, reorganized by *Henry VIII at the *Dissolution and known as cathedrals of the 'New Foundation', prebends in the proper sense do not exist, though 'prebendary' became the normal appellation of the members of the chapters of these churches until the 19th cent., when the title of 'canon' replaced it in general usage.

precentor. In *cathedrals, the cleric responsible for the direction of the choral services. In those of the 'Old Foundation' he is a member of the chapter who ranks next to the Dean, and commonly delegates his duties to a deputy known as the *succentor. In most cathedrals of the 'New Foundation', however, his status is the lower one of *minor canon or chaplain.

precept (Lat. praeceptum). In moral theology, a matter of obligation, as contrasted with a 'counsel', which is only a matter of persuasion. For Precepts of the Church, see COMMANDMENTS OF THE CHURCH.

preceptory. Among the Knights *Templar a community established on one of their provincial estates. The corresponding institution among the *Hospitallers was a '*commandery'.

preces feriales (Lat., 'ferial prayers'). In W. service books, a short series of prayers which used to be said esp. on ferial (non-festal) days, consisting of *Kyrie Eleison, the *Lord's Prayer, and versicles and responses. In the 1568 *Breviary they stood immediately before the collect; from 1955 their use was confined to *Lauds and *Vespers on the Wednesdays and Fridays of Lent and Advent and Ember Days. In the 1971 Breviary they have been replaced by a series of intercessions said every day at Lauds and Vespers. In the BCP the preces feriales are represented by the prayers at *Mattins and *Evensong between the Creed and the collects, and are said or sung throughout the year.

Preces Privatae. The Latin book of devotion issued by *Elizabeth I in 1564 with the title Preces Privatae in Studiosorum Gratiam Collectae et Regia Autoritate Approbatae. It was a manual of prayers largely based on the BCP, and thus carried on the tradition of the medieval English *Primers, which were compilations for private use based on the liturgical services. A later edition of 1573 contained additional devotions compiled by St John *Fisher. Apart from its title it has no connection with the celebrated 'Preces Privatae' of L. *Andrewes (q.v.).

It is pr. in Private Prayers of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (Parker Society, 1851), pp. 209–428.

Precious Blood, devotion to the. The Blood of Christ, shed during the Passion, has been honoured and regarded as of redeeming virtue since the Apostolic Age, esp. in connection with the Eucharist. Beirut, Bruges, Saintes, the English monasteries of Ashridge and Hailes, and various other churches have claimed to possess particles of it. Such relics have been greatly venerated, although St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol. 3a., q. 54, a. 3) maintained that all the particles of the Blood of Christ shed during the Passion were reassumed by Him at His Resurrection, and that such relics must have flowed from an image of Christ. *Benedict XIV, admitting that some particles might not have been assumed, maintained that, not being united to the Godhead, they were to be venerated rather than adored. The *Dominicans held that the Precious Blood was an essential part of the Sacred Humanity; the *Franciscans that it was concomitant only. Since the Council of *Trent the former view has tended to prevail among RC theologians. Feasts in honour of the Precious Blood were celebrated by various orders in the 19th cent. In 1849 *Pius IX, while at Gaeta, extended the Feast to the whole Church, assigning to it the first Sunday in July, altered by *Pius X in 1914 to 1 July. It was raised to the rank of double of the first class in 1934, but suppressed altogether in 1969. *John XXIII inserted a clause about the Precious Blood in the *Divine Praises. The whole month of July is traditionally connected with the devotion. A number of religious orders are dedicated to the Precious Blood, and the dedication of the (RC) Cathedral Church of the Archdiocese of *Westminster is to the Most Precious Blood.

F. W. *Faber, The Precious Blood, or the Price of our Salvation (1860; devotional). G. Lefebvre, OSB, La Rédemption par le sang de Jésus (Bruges, 1942; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., 1960). M.-D. Chenu, OP, in DTC 14 (pt. 1; 1939), cols. 1094–7, s.v. 'Sang du Christ'; R. Grégoire, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 14 (1990), cols. 319–33, s.v. 'Sang'.

Precisian. A name widely used of the *Puritans in the 16th and 17th cents. on account of their punctiliousness in observing external religious rules and forms.

predella. (1) The platform (foot-pace) on the uppermost of the steps to an altar, on which the priest formerly stood when celebrating Mass; it is now obsolete. (2) The lowest piece of a *reredos, immediately above the altar. The word is the Ital. predella, 'foot-stool', 'kneeling-stool'.

predestinarianism. The doctrine according to which human free will and co-operation are totally eliminated from the process of salvation by a thorough-going application of the principle of *predestination. It has always been regarded as heretical by the RC Church.

predestination (from Lat. 'praedestinare', Vulg. tr. of Gk. προορίζειν, 'foreordain'). The Divine decree acc. to which certain persons are infallibly guided to eternal salvation. The doctrine is not explicitly taught in the OT, but adumbrations of it may be found in the conception of the 'Book of Life' (Ps. 69: 29, Exod. 32: 32, Dan. 12: 1). Predestination is presupposed in the Gospels, e.g. Mt. 20: 23, where the Lord tells the Apostles that the sitting on His right or left is reserved 'for them for whom it hath been prepared of my Father', and in Jn. 10: 29, where He tells the Jews that no one can snatch from Him the sheep given Him by the Father. The most explicit teaching in the NT is in St *Paul, esp. in the crucial text Rom. 8: 28–30, where he traces the process of the salvation of those 'that are called according to His purpose' from foreknowledge and predestination to vocation, justification, and glorification. The theme is resumed in Eph. 1: 3–14, where is added the factor of *election (q.v.), inserted between foreknowledge and predestination. In the same text great stress is laid on the gratuity of it, 'according to the good pleasure of His will'. This is still more emphasized in 2 Tim. 1: 9, where it is affirmed that God has called us 'not according to our works, but according to His own purpose and grace'.

In the W. the *Pelagian controversy caused a thorough investigation of the doctrine, which St *Augustine developed on the basis of St Paul's teaching. For him the mystery of predestination consists in the inaccessibility to the human mind of the reasons for the Divine choice, which, nevertheless, is made in perfect justice. In his view it is the vocation not only to grace but also to glory. It contains the gift of final perseverance (donum perseverantiae) and depends not on human acceptance but on the eternal decree of God and is therefore infallible, without, however, acc. to Augustine, violating free will. Evil enters into the plan of predestination in so far as it is permitted by God in view of a greater good.

In S. Gaul Augustine's teaching was questioned by John *Cassian and other so-called 'Semipelagians'. Though stoutly defended by St *Prosper of Aquitaine, it was attacked by *Faustus of Riez (d. *c.*490). In the early 520s, however, Faustus' views were condemned both at *Constantinople and at *Rome, and at the Council of *Orange (529) St *Caesarius of Arles secured the acceptance of the Augustinian position in France. In the 9th cent. the discussion was revived by *Gottschalk (q.v.); basing himself on Augustine, he took an extreme position, teaching a double predestination of some to eternal blessedness and others to eternal fire. This doctrine was condemned by the Synod of *Quiercy in 849.

The medieval teaching was based on Augustine, but took into account also the Greek doctrine, esp. as represented by St *John of Damascus, who followed *Origen and stressed the universal saving will of God. Acc. to him God 'antecedently' wills the universal salvation of all men, but, in consequence of their sins, He wills eternal punishment for some. The reconciliation of this view with the Divine omnipotence and the efficacy of grace, stressed by Augustine, was undertaken by the *Schoolmen. *Peter Lombard emphasized the absence, in God, of all passivity or dependence on the decisions of creatures, and St *Bonaventure asserted the principle of the Divine predilection, which is the cause, not the effect, of the greater or lesser goodness of creatures. St *Thomas Aquinas based the reconciliation of the universal saving will of God with the mystery of predestination on the same principle, namely that the love of God is the cause of the goodness of things (Amor Dei est causa bonitatis rerum).

Predestination emerged again as a significant issue at the *Reformation. M. *Luther revived the full Augustinian doctrine which he combined with a new stress on the total depravity of man. In his controversy with *Erasmus in 1525 he maintained that in an act of Divine sovereignty both the elect and the reprobate are predestined without reference to their merits or demerits. The *Gnesio-Lutheran party, centred around M. *Flacius, upheld this position, whereas the more moderate *Philippists, centered around Philip *Melanchthon, rejected it; they accepted the total depravity of man after the *Fall and *justification by faith alone, but denied that double predestination followed from either. This latter position was accepted in the Formula of *Concord (1577) and has remained Lutheran doctrine. J. *Calvin gave new vitality to the doctrine of double predestination, but it was his successors, prob. esp. T. *Beza, who made it a cornerstone of the Calvinist system. Going further than Calvin himself, they rejected belief in the universal saving will of God and held that Christ's atoning death was offered for the elect alone. Later Calvinists were divided into Ante- or *Supralapsarians and *Sublapsarians (qq.v.). The Calvinist doctrine of double predestination, which was not accepted by the *Arminians (q.v.) was imposed by the Synod of *Dort (1618–9) and by the *Westminster Assembly (1647), which declared that at least after the Fall God does not will the salvation of all men and that Christ died only for the elect.

The post-Tridentine RC theologians formulated their doctrine of predestination with particular emphasis on the freedom of the human will. Among the systems devised to reconcile the latter with the dogma of predestination was that of the Spaniard, L. de *Molina, who abandoned the principle of Divine predilection and taught predestination post praevisa merita. On the other side, F. *Suárez, R. *Bellarmine, and most *Jesuit theologians except the strict Molinists recognize the gratuity of predestination and its priority to the prevision of merits, though they seek to preserve the element of human consent and the reality of the Divine will that 'all men should be saved'.

In the 20th cent. K. *Barth sought to provide a Christological presentation of the doctrine of predestination within his treatment of God. In his view Christ is both the God who predestines man, and the man predestined; in communion with Him humans can discover their election. In so far as all men might be thought to be elected in Christ, some critics have seen Barth's position as involving *universalism rather than predestination in the more classical sense.

The number of the predestined has been a matter of speculation from early times. Acc. to the teaching of the majority of the Fathers and theologians, who based their belief on passages such as Mt. 22: 14, it was smaller than that of the reprobate.

See also ELECTION.

On the biblical teaching on predestination, see esp. comm. on the OT Prophets and Rom. and works on the theology of St Paul. The more important post-biblical discussions incl. Origen, De Principiis, 2 and 3; St Augustine, De Praedestinatione Sanctorum; and Calvin, Institutes, 3; K. Barth, Die Kirchliche Dogmatik, 2. 2 (1942), pp. 1–563; Eng. tr., 2. 2 (1957) pp. 1–506. Modern discussions will be found in treatises on dogmatic theology. J. B. *Mozley, A Treatise on the Augustinian Doctrine of Predestination (1855); W. A. Copinger, A Treatise on Predestination, Election and Grace (1889), with bibl. R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, La Prédestination des saints et la grâce (1936). H. H. Rowley, The Biblical Doctrine of Election (1950). P. Maury, La Prédestination (1957; Eng. tr., 1960). J. *Moltmann, Prädestination und Perseveranz: Geschichte und Bedeutung der reformierten Lehre 'de perseverantia sanctorum' (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 12; Neukirchen, 1961). V. Boublík, La predestinazione: S. Paolo e S. Agostino (1961). G. G. Most, Novum tentamen ad solutionem de Gratia et Praedestinatione (Rome, 1963). M. J. Farrelly, OSB, Predestination, Grace and Free Will [1964]. A. Bsteh, Zur Frage nach der Universalität der Erlösung unter besonderer Berücksichtigung ihres Verständnisses bei den Vätern des zweiten Jahrhunderts (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, 14; 1966). J. S. Bray, Theodore Beza's Doctrine of Predestination (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 12; Nieuwkoop, 1975). W. L. Craig, The Problem of Divine Foreknowledge and Future Contingents from Aristotle to Suarez (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 7; Leiden etc., 1988 [treats of *Aristotle, Augustine, *Boethius, Thomas Aquinas, *Duns Scotus, *William of Ockham, L. Molina, and F. Suárez]). M. Löhrer in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 4 (pt. 2; Einsiedeln [1973]), pp. 773–830. G. Hoennicke in PRE (3rd edn.), 15 (1904), pp. 581–6, s.v. 'Prädestination I. Schriftlehre'; E. F. K. Müller, ibid., pp. 586–602, s.v. 'Prädestination II. Kirchenlehre'; J. Pohle in CE 12 (1911), pp. 376–84, s.vv. 'Predestinarianism' and 'Predestination'; A. S. Martin in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 225–35, s.v.; A. Lemonnyer, OP, H. D. Simonin, OP, R. Garrigou-Lagrange, OP, and B. Lavaud, OP, in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2809–3022, s.v. 'Prédestination'; H. Rondet, SJ, and K. *Rahner, SJ, in Sacramentum Mundi, 5 (1970), pp. 88–91.

Predestinatus. See PRAEDESTINATUS.

Pre-established Harmony. In the system of G. W. *Leibniz, the predetermined harmony between all the 'simple substances' (monads) in the universe. Leibniz believed that God had established such a harmony before creation, which explained the apparent interaction between mind and body in the world of experience. See also OCCASIONALISM.

Preface. In the Eucharist of the W. Church, the words which introduce the central part of the service. It begins with the '*Sursum Corda' and ends with the '*Sanctus'. The main part of it is an ascription of praise and thanksgiving to the Creator in union with the worship of the whole angelic company. It varies with the feast observed. There are 'proper' Prefaces for all the great seasons and feasts, ending with varying phrases leading into the Sanctus. The oldest surviving Roman *Sacramentary, the *Leonine, had a separate Preface for every Mass, the *Gelasian had 54, but in the *Gregorian their number had fallen to 10. The 1661 BCP provides 'Proper Prefaces' for *Christmas, *Easter, *Ascensiontide, *Whitsuntide, and on *Trinity Sunday; the ASB and other modern Anglican liturgies include considerably more, but nowhere near as many as the RC rite. There are no comparable variations in the rites of the E. Church. The Preface is the first part of the *Eucharistic Prayer, even though in the current Roman Missal (because of the number of proper Prefaces) it is printed in such a way that it appears to be a separate item, and in the BCP (and in a few modern Anglican liturgies) it is divided from the consecratory prayer by the 'Prayer of *Humble Access'.

E. Moeller, OSB (ed.), Corpus Praefationum (CCLS 161–161 D; 1980–1), with valuable introd. and bibl. in first vol. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, esp. pp. 145–61 (Eng. tr., pp. 115–28). C. Mohrmann, 'Sur l'histoire de Praefari-Praefatio', VC 7 (1953), pp. 1–15. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 1; 1948), cols. 1704–16, s.v., with refs.

prelate. A term originally of wide connotation, it gradually acquired a purely ecclesiastical reference and still later came to be restricted to Church officials of high rank. In the C of E the title is restricted nowadays to bishops. In the RC Church it was long used of important ecclesiastics having an independent jurisdiction, but it is now also applied to a variety of officers attached to the Roman curia who may have only an honorary dignity. The term 'prelacy', which denotes the system of ecclesiastical government by bishops, is commonly used only in a hostile sense. See also PERSONAL PRELATURE.

Premonstratensian Canons, also 'Norbertines' and, in England, 'White Canons' from the colour of their habit, an order founded by St *Norbert (q.v.) at Prémontré, near Laon, in 1120. The basis of the rule was the so-called Rule of St *Augustine, with additional austerities, e.g. entire abstinence from meat. In its details, the Premonstratensian life also came under *Cistercian influences through Norbert's friendship with St *Bernard of Clairvaux. In 1126 the order received Papal approbation and quickly spread over W. Europe, their earliest English house being at Newhouse in Lincoln (*c.*1143). They became powerful in Hungary and also took an active part in evangelizing the lands between the Elbe and the Oder. Relaxation in the severity of the original rule led to several reforms and the creation of more or less independent congregations, notably in Spain, where a virtually self-contained body was established *c.*1573. The order suffered severely from the French Revolution and had become nearly extinct in the early 19th cent. More recently it has re-established its influence and is esp. strong in Belgium.

Numerous studies of primary importance in Analectes de l'ordre de Prémontré, ed. M. van Waefelghem (12 vols., Brussels, 1905–14); cont. as Analecta Praemonstratensia (1925 ff.; at Tongerloo and later at Averbode), and in the Bibliotheca Analectorum Praemonstratensium (1957 ff; some vols. at Louvain, some at Averbode). C. L. Hugo, Sacri et Canonici Ordinis Praemonstratensis Annales (2 vols., Nancy, 1734–5). F. Petit, O. Praem., L'Ordre de Prémontré ('Les Ordres religieux'; 1927); id., Norbert et l'origine des Prémontrés (1981), pp. 77–208. N. Backmund, O. Praem., Monasticon Praemonstratense, id est Historia circariarum atque canoniarum candidi et canonici ordinis Praemonstratensis (3 vols., Straubing, 1949–56; 2nd edn., Berlin, 1983 ff.). L. Milis and others, Gedenkboek Orde van Prémontré 1121 1971 (Averbode, 1971). F. Petit, O. Praem., La Spiritualité des Prémontrés aux XIIe et XIIIe siècles (Études de Théologie et d'Histoire de Spiritualité, 10; 1947). B. Ardura, O. Praem., Prémontrés: Histoire et Spiritualité (Saint Etienne, 1995). J. Le Paige, Bibliotheca Praemonstratensis Ordinis (Paris, 1633). L. Goovaerts, Écrivains, artistes et savants de l'ordre de Prémontré: Dictionnaire bio-bibliographique (4 vols., bound in 3, 1899–1917). F. A. *Gasquet (ed.), Collectanea Anglo-Premonstratensia: Documents drawn from the Original Register of the Order, now in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Transcript of another Register in the British Museum (Camden Society 3rd ser. 12; 1906). H. M. Colvin, The White Canons in England (1951), with bibl. R. van Waefelghem, Répertoire des sources imprimées et manuscrites relatives à l'histoire et à la liturgie des monastères de l'ordre de Prémontré (1930). R. J. Cornell, O. Praem., in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 737–9, s.v.; J.-B. Valvekens, O. Praem., and others in DIP 7 (1983), cols. 720–46, s.v. 'Premonstratensi', with bibl.

Preparation, the. In the W. Church the opening prayers at *Mass, formerly recited alternately by the priest and ministers (or *server) at the foot of the *altar. It usually consisted of Ps. 43 (Vulg. 42), a confession of sin, and two prayers preceded by four *versicles and responses. In the Roman Rite a shorter form dates from the 11th cent.; in substantially its traditional form it is found from *c.*1300. In the current RC rite the Mass opens with the Rite of Entry, consisting of greeting, address, act of penitence and absolution.

Jungmann (1952 edn.), 1, pp. 377–409; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 290–311.

Preparation, Day of (Gk. παρασκευή). A name given by the Jews to Fridays, i.e. the day preceding, and thus employed in 'preparation' for, the *Sabbath (hence also προσάββατον). The title was perhaps used occasionally also of the day before certain other of the greater feasts, e.g. the *Passover. In all four Gospels, the Crucifixion is recorded to have taken place on the Preparation (Mt. 27: 62, Mk. 15: 42, Lk. 23: 54, Jn. 19: 14, 31, 42).

Presanctified, Mass of the (Gk. λειτουργία τῶν προηγιασμένων). A shortened form of the Eucharistic Liturgy without consecration, a *Host consecrated at a previous Mass being used for Communion. It is attested as an approved custom for the E. by can. 52 of the *Quinisextum (692), and in the Byzantine Rite it was formerly celebrated on most weekdays in *Lent, though now it takes place ordinarily only on the *Wednesdays and *Fridays, and on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in *Holy Week. The Byzantine Liturgy of the Presanctified (attributed to St Gregory 'the Dialogist', i.e. St *Gregory the Great) is a complex service combined with *Vespers and using a previously *intincted Host. The readings (which do not normally include a Gospel) are followed by litanies. Then, at the *Great Entrance, the consecrated elements are carried in procession and placed upon the altar. After the Lord's Prayer, there is Communion, first of the priests, then of the people. In the Latin Church, the Mass of the Presanctified is restricted to *Good Friday. It first appears in Gaul. It is described in the *Gelasian Sacramentary and was in general use in Rome by the 9th cent. According to the current Roman Missal, after the *Veneration of the Cross, the ciborium, containing Hosts consecrated on *Maundy Thursday, is brought from the Altar of *Repose to the High Altar. The priest says the Lord's Prayer, in which the people join, the *Embolism, a pre-Communion prayer, and the invitation to Communion (Ecce Agnus Dei); he then communicates himself and the people. The dismissal follows after a single collect. Before the reform of the Holy Week liturgy in 1955 the rite was very much more elaborate, and only the celebrant communicated; in that year General Communion, which was the custom in the early Middle Ages, was restored. At the same time the term 'presanctified' was dropped from the official documents.

The text of the various rites will be found in the standard edns. of the Liturgies. L. *Allatius, De Missa Praesanctificatorum (1648). G. *Dix, OSB, 'The Christian Passover', Laudate, 13 (1935), pp. 2–18; repr. sep. as The Mass of the Presanctified. D. N. Moraites, Ἡ Λειτουργιά τῶν Προηγιασμένων (Thessalonica, 1955, with summary in Fr.). H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta (2 vols. in 3, Rome etc., 1956–7), esp. 1, pp. 108–16, 2, pp. 797–806. M. Arranz, SJ, 'La Liturgie des Présanctifiés de l'ancien Euchologe byzantin', OCP 47 (1981), pp. 332–88, with refs. to earlier literature I. Ziadé in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 77–111; H. Schmidt, SJ, in LW 1 (1962), cols. 892–5, s.v. 'Goede Vrijdag, VII', with bibl.

presbyter. The earliest organization of the Christian Churches in Palestine resembled that of the Jewish synagogues, each of which was administered by a board of 'elders' (πρεσβύτεροι, i.e. 'presbyters'). Acts 11: 30 and 15: 22 witness to this collegiate system of Church government at *Jerusalem, and Acts 14: 23 has St Paul appointing presbyters in the Churches he founded. At first the presbyters seem to have been identical with the 'overseers' (ἐπίσκοποι, i.e. 'bishops'), and such passages as Acts 20: 17 f. and Tit. 1: 5, 7 reveal the terms as interchangeable. But from the 2nd cent. the title of bishop is normally confined to the presidents of these councils of presbyters, and such 'bishops' came to be distinguished, both in honour and prerogative, from the presbyters, who were held to derive their authority by delegation from the bishops. The presbyterate, in its developed form, possesses both authority in administration and teaching and the sacerdotal functions foreshadowed by the Jewish priesthood. The English word 'priest' derives ultimately from this root. See also BISHOP, PRIEST, and ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

For discussion of the office of presbyter and its relation to that of the bishop in NT times see works on the early history of Orders; some listed in bibl. to BISHOP. G. Bornkamm in TWNT 6 (1959; Eng. tr., 1968), pp. 651–83, s.v. Πρέσβυς, etc.

Presbyterianism. Presbyterianism is a form of ecclesiastical polity in which the Church is governed by presbyters (Gk. πρεσβύτερος, 'elder'). Its proponents in the 16th and 17th cents. did not regard it as an innovation but as a rediscovery of the apostolic model found in the NT. Many of them held it to be the only permissible form of government and thus permanently binding upon the Church. However, the model has been adapted to suit a wide variety of regional variations. The pattern for the city-state of *Geneva required considerable emendation before it could be applied to the parochial system covering the whole of *Scotland. Today most Presbyterians recognize that the Church in NT times had episcopal and congregational as well as presbyterian elements and that Presbyterianism has no jure divino claim to be the only permissible or valid Church polity.

The normal pattern of government of Presbyterian Churches is a hierarchy of four interrelated bodies: the Session (Kirk session, consistory) of a local Church, consisting of the minister(s) and *elders who are the congregation's elected representatives; the Presbytery (colloquy, classis), consisting of ministers and representative elders from within a prescribed area, which oversees Sessions, congregations, and ministers in its area; Synods, which are geographically defined to include Presbyteries in a larger area and have important functions in the judicial process as a court of appeal; and the General Assembly, the Church's highest court of appeal, consisting of ministers and elders, usually in equal numbers, elected by the Presbyteries. It is responsible for the Church's mission, but has no legislative power over the lower bodies; it normally meets annually. Within all these bodies ministers and elders have an equal vote and decisions are made by majority voting. The powers of each body are limited by the Church's constitution.

Presbyterian concepts of the elder (q.v.) are based on J. *Calvin's recognition of the office as one of the four ministries of the Church, along with pastors, teachers, and *deacons (Institutes, bk. 4, ch. 3, sections 4–9). Elders may participate in preaching, teaching, and administering the Sacraments. Calvin based his understanding of lay persons elected to share in the government of the Church on biblical passages such as Rom. 12: 8, 1 Cor. 12: 28, and 1 Tim. 5: 17. Ministers, who share in the government of the Church, have historically been seen as ordained as Ministers of the Word and Sacrament. Some Presbyterians regard *apostolic succession through presbyters as enhancing their position in this regard; others view the idea of lineal succession with indifference or even disfavour. Ministers are elected by the people, but their ordination is an act of the Presbytery. Presbyterians have traditionally stressed the need for an educated clergy, requiring college or university degrees, and additional seminary training, but Presbyteries may modify specific requirements. Most Presbyterian Churches ordain both men and women as ministers and elders. As in 16th-cent. Geneva, Church discipline as an aspect of Church government includes elements of guidance, education, and reconciliation within the Christian community, as well as censures such as rebuke and excommunication, but these no longer have power beyond the willingness of members to be bound by them.

The only Presbyterian State Church is the Church of Scotland, but it claims and exercises the spiritual independence which is a fundamental principle of all Presbyterians. As members of the Reformed theological tradition, all Presbyterians acknowledge the Bible as the supreme standard of faith and practice. The many Confessions of Faith produced by Reformed bodies at various times hold important but secondary positions as subordinate standards for the Church's doctrine and ministry. While many Presbyterian Churches retain the *Westminster Confession with the two *Westminster Catechisms of 1647 as their chief doctrinal standards, the United Presbyterian Church in the *United States of America, the largest Presbyterian body in the country, in 1967 adopted a Book of Confessions as its doctrinal base and this was accepted by the Presbyterian Church (USA) when that came into being in 1983. It contains the *Nicene and *Apostles' Creeds, the *Scottish Confession, the *Heidelberg Catechism, the Second *Helvetic Confession, the Westminster Confession and the two Westminster Catechisms, the *Barmen Declaration, and a new formula of confession drawn up in 1967. A 'Brief Statement of Faith' was added in 1991. Presbyterians interpret confessional standards within their Churches with varying decrees of latitude; the discretion permitted is illustrated by the terms of the *Declaratory Acts in Scotland.

Presbyterian worship is simple and dignified, with an emphasis on hearing and preaching the Word of God. There is a wide variety of liturgical practice, as well as differing degrees of formality. An increased appreciation of the place of the Sacraments has become apparent in the latter part of the 20th cent.; the Lord's Supper, formerly administered only quarterly in many churches, is now celebrated more frequently, often seven to 12 times a year.

Presbyterian Churches are found throughout the world. There are strong concentrations of Presbyterians in the United States of America, Scotland, *Hungary, the *Netherlands, Northern *Ireland, Switzerland, *France, the Cameroon, and *Korea; the largest single Presbyterian congregation is in Seoul. Some Presbyterian Churches have direct roots in the Reformed Churches of Europe. Others, esp. in the British Commonwealth and the USA, originated through emigration from countries such as Scotland, Ireland, and the Netherlands. Still others are the result of missionary efforts, particularly in *India, *Africa, and S. America.

Presbyterian Churches have been linked through the World Presbyterian Alliance (founded in 1875), which in 1970 merged with the International *Congregational Council (founded in 1891) to form the *World Alliance of Reformed Churches (q.v.). In America there have been notable unions of Presbyterian Churches in modern times. In 1958 the Presbyterian Church in the USA merged with the United Presbyterian Church of North America to form the United Presbyterian Church in the USA. This body in 1983 joined with the Presbyterian Church in the United States to form the Presbyterian Church (USA), thus uniting two streams of Presbyterianism divided since the Civil War. Some Presbyterian Churches have been involved in regional unions with other Churches. These have led, e.g., to the formation of the United Church of *Canada, the United Church of Christ in the *Philippines, the United Church of *Zambia, the Uniting Church in *Australia, and the Churches of *South India, *North India, and *Pakistan. In 1972 the Presbyterian Church of England united with the *Congregational Church of England and Wales to form the *United Reformed Church.

See also SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN; and, for the Presbyterian Church of *Wales, CALVINISTIC METHODISM.

J. N. Ogilvie, The Presbyterian Churches: Their Place and Power in Modern Christendom (1896; enlarged edn., 1925); W. M. Macphail, The Presbyterian Church: A Brief Account of its Doctrine, Worship, and Polity (1908); J. *Moffatt, The Presbyterian Church (1928); L. A. Loetscher, A Brief History of the Presbyterians (Philadelphia [1938]; 4th edn., 1983); J. M. Barkley, Presbyterianism (Belfast, 1951); G. D. Henderson, Presbyterianism (Chalmers Lectures, Aberdeen, 1954). E. W. Smith, The Creed of the Presbyterians (Toronto, 1901); H. J. Wotherspoon and J. M. Kirkpatrick, A Manual of Church Doctrine [1919], rev. T. F. Torrance and R. S. Wright (1960); J. Kennedy, Presbyterian Authority and Discipline (Chalmers Lectures; Edinburgh, 1960). E. A. Dowey, A Commentary on the Confession of 1967 and an Introduction to The Book of Confessions (Philadelphia [1968]); J. B. Rogers, Presbyterian Creeds: A Guide to the Book of Confessions (ibid. [1985]); W. C. Placher and D. Willis-Watkins, Belonging to God: A Commentary on A Brief Statement of Faith (Louisville, Ky. [1992]). E. A. McKee, Elders and the Plural Ministry: The Role of Exegetical History in Illuminating John Calvin's Theology (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 223; Geneva, 1988). See also works cited under CALVINISM.

A. H. Drysdale, History of the Presbyterians in England: Their Rise, Decline and Revival (1889). O. M. Griffiths, Religion and Learning: A Study in English Presbyterian Thought from the Bartholomew Ejections [1662] to the Foundation of the Unitarian Movement (1935); C. G. Bolam and others, The English Presbyterians from Elizabethan Puritanism to Modern Unitarianism (1968). R. F. G. Holmes, Our Irish Presbyterian Heritage (Belfast, 1985). M. W. Armstrong, L. A. Loetscher, and C. A. Anderson (eds.), The Presbyterian Enterprise: Sources of American Presbyterian History (Philadelphia, 1956). C. A. *Briggs, American Presbyterianism: Its Growth and Early History (New York, 1885); R. E. Thompson, A History of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (American Church History Series, 6; New York, 1895). L. J. Trinterud, The Formation of an American Tradition: A re-examination of colonial Presbyterianism (Philadelphia [1949]). E. A. Smith, The Presbyterian Ministry in American Culture: A Study in Changing Concepts, 1700–1900 (ibid. [1962]). L. A. Loetscher, The Broadening Church: A Study of Theological Issues in the Presbyterian Church since 1869 (ibid., 1954). B. J. Longfield, The Presbyterian Controversy: Fundamentalists, Modernists, and Moderates (New York and Oxford, 1991). E. T. Thompson, Presbyterians in the South (3 vols., Richmond, Va., 1963–73). W. N. Jamison, The United Presbyterian Story: A Centennial Study 1858–1958 (Philadelphia [1958]). J. S. Moir, Enduring Witness: A History of the Presbyterian Church in Canada [Toronto, 1974]. R. Macpherson, The Presbyterian Church in Kenya (Nairobi, 1970). M. Twagirayesu and J. van Butselaar (eds.), Ce don que nous avons reçu: Histoire de l'Église presbytérienne au Rwanda (1907–1982) (Kigali, 1982). J. Dall in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 244–70, s.v., with bibl. by J. Herkless, pp. 270 f. See also works cited under SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN, and WORLD ALLIANCE OF REFORMED CHURCHES.

Presbytery. (1) The sanctuary or E. part of the chancel of a church beyond the choir. (2) The residence of (esp.) RC priests. (3) Acc. to current Presbyterian usage, the Church court having oversight and jurisdiction over a certain area, the extent of which is decided by the *General Assembly, and consisting of the ministers and representative elders of the congregations within the bounds. A Presbyterian minister is ordained by it (the ministerial members only joining in the imposition of hands) and is subject to it, and not to his or her session. It belongs to the Presbytery, not to the court of a particular congregation (*Kirk session), to see that public worship is in accordance with the law and usage of the Church.

Presentation of Christ in the Temple. In the BCP an alternative name for the feast of the *Purification of the BVM or *Candlemas (q.v.), kept on 2 Feb. It is the sole title of the feast in the ASB and some other modern Anglican Prayer Books. In 1969 the RC Church adopted the title of 'the Presentation of the Lord' for this feast.

Presentation of the BVM (not to be confused with the preceding). A feast kept on 21 Nov. to commemorate the presentation of the Virgin in the Temple when 3 years old, as related in the apocryphal 'Book of *James'. The feast was first observed in the E. c. the 8th cent., and in the W. gradually established itself in the later Middle Ages. One of those who campaigned most vigorously in the 14th cent. for its observance in the W. was Philip de Mézières, a French knight who had lived in the E., and its observance was permitted in 1372. *Sixtus IV received it into the Roman *Breviary, St *Pius V removed it, and *Sixtus V made its observance universal in the RC Church in 1585. In the E. it is one of the *Twelve Great Feasts (q.v.).

Sr. Mary Jerome Kishpaugh, OP, The Feast of the Presentation of the Virgin Mary in the Temple (Catholic University of America, Diss., Washington, DC, 1941). R. W. Pfaff, New Liturgical Feasts in Later Medieval England (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1970), pp. 103–15. W. E. Coleman (ed.), Philippe de Mézières' Campaign for the Feast of Mary's Presentation (Toronto Medieval Latin Texts, 11; 1981 [docs. with introd.]). G. Löw, CSSR, in EC 9 (1952), cols. 1966–8.

Presentation of the Lord. The title given in the RC Church since 1969 to the feast of *Candlemas.

Prester John (i.e. 'Presbyter' John), legendary medieval Christian king of Asia. The story of an E. *Nestorian priest-king who had defeated the Muslims and would bring help to the Holy Land spread through Europe from the middle of the 12th cent. He is first mentioned in *Otto of Freising's Chronicle and soon afterwards in a letter full of fables, addressed by 'Prester John' to the German Emp. *Frederick I and to the E. Emp. Manuel and several other princes. In 1177 Pope *Alexander III wrote a letter, headed 'Indorum Regi, Sacerdotum Sanctissimo' ('to the King of the Indies, the most holy priest'), which was supposed to be addressed to Prester John. It has been argued, however, that it was meant for a real historical personage, namely the King of *Ethiopia, which country was commonly confused with India during the Middle Ages; and this contention gains weight from the fact that in the later Middle Ages Prester John was actually located in Ethiopia. Another theory, based on an account of the 13th-cent. *Franciscan missionary, William of Rubruck, identifies him with a Chinese prince, Gor Khan, who defeated the Sultan of Persia in 1141 and founded an empire in which lived a number of Nestorian Christians. The designation 'priest' is held to be due to a confusion of khan, 'king', with kam, 'priest'. The whole story seems to be a legend of Nestorian origin, but it probably contains a nucleus of historical fact.

Otto of Freising, Chronicon, 7. 33. F. Zarncke, 'Der Priester Johannes', Abh. (Sächs.), 7 (1879), pp. 827–1030 (with Lat. text of the letter sent to the Emp., pp. 909–24); 8 (1883), pp. 1–186. F. Fleuret, 'La Lettre de Prêtre Jean, pseudo-roi d'Abyssinie', Mercure de France, 268 (1936), pp. 294–318, with Fr. tr. of the letter, pp. 298–309. E. D. Ross, 'Prester John and the Empire of Ethiopia', in A. P. Newton (ed.), Travel and Travellers in the Middle Ages (1926), pp. 174–94, with Eng. tr. of extract of the letter, pp. 174–8. G. Oppert, Der Presbyter Johann in Sage und Geschichte (1864). C. E. Nowell, 'The Historical Prester John', Speculum, 28 (1953), pp. 435–55. L. N. Gumilev, Searches for an Imaginary Kingdom: The Legend of the Kingdom of Prester John (Eng. tr. of work orig. pub. in Russ., 1970; Cambridge, 1987). U. Knefelkamp, Die Suche nach dem Reich des Priesterkönigs Johannes (Gelsenkirchen, 1986), with bibl. and discussion of lit., pp. 13–18.

prevenient grace. The species of actual *grace which, as an illumination or inspiration of the Holy Spirit, precedes the free determination of the will. It is held to mark the beginning of all activity leading to *justification, which cannot be achieved without it, but its acceptance or rejection depends on man's free choice. Belief in the existence of prevenient grace claims scriptural support in such texts as Ps. 59: 10 (Vulg.), Rom. 8: 30, and 2 Tim. 1: 9. It was defended by St *Augustine (who often uses the technical term, 'gratia praeveniens') against the *Pelagians, taught by St *Thomas Aquinas, formally defined by the Council of *Trent, and asserted in Article 10 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles.

Price, Richard (1723–91), Nonconformist minister, moral and political philosopher. In 1758 he published A Review of the Principal Questions in Morals (3rd edn., 1787), in which he defended a view of ethical action which had many affinities with the teaching later expounded by I. *Kant. He held that the rightness and wrongness of an action belonged to it intrinsically and criticized the 'moral sense' view of ethics which had secured popularity through such writers as Lord Shaftesbury (d. 1713) and F. Hutcheson (d. 1746). In the fields of politics and economics he advocated the reduction of the National Debt, and strongly supported the cause of American Independence. Though holding opposite views on morals and metaphysics, he became an intimate friend of J. *Priestley. By 1778 both were '*Unitarians', and in 1791 Price became an original member of the Unitarian Society.

Modern edn. of Price's Review of the Principal Questions in Morals by D. D. Raphael (Oxford, 1948 [based on 3rd edn. of 1787, but repr. preface from first edn.]). Correspondence, ed. W. B. Peach and D. O. Thomas (3 vols., Durham, NC, and Cardiff, 1983–94); Political Writings, ed. D. O. Thomas (Cambridge, 1991). The principal authority is the Memoir by his nephew, W. Morgan (London, 1815). Modern Life by R. Thomas (ibid., 1924); D. O. Thomas, The Honest Mind: The Thought and Work of Richard Price (Oxford, 1977), with bibl. C. B. Cone, The Torchbearer of Freedom: The Influence of Richard Price on Eighteenth Century Thought (Lexington, Ky., 1952). W. D. Hudson, Reason and Right: A Critical Examination of Richard Price's Moral Philosophy (1970). H. Laboucheix, Richard Price: Théoricien de la révolution américaine; le philosophe et le sociologe; le pamphlétaire et l'orateur (1970; partial Eng. tr., Oxford, 1982). D. O. Thomas and others, A Bibliography of the Works of Richard Price (Aldershot [1993]). T. Fowler in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 334–7. See also bibl. to UNITARIANISM.

pricket. A stand containing one or more upright spikes on which to fix votive candles.

pride. The first of the *seven deadly sins, being the inordinate love of one's own excellence. It is traditionally believed to have been the sin of the angels and the first man, and is denounced as a vice particularly repugnant to God throughout the OT and NT (e.g. Prov. 16: 18; 1 Pet. 5: 5).

Prideaux, Humphrey (1648–1724), Dean of *Norwich from 1702. He was educated at Westminster and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he came under the influence of J. *Fell, and from 1677 onwards held a succession of benefices. As a Low Churchman he welcomed the Revolution of 1688, and supported the proposed changes in the BCP with a view to the inclusion of dissenters. His fame rested on two treatises, his Life of Mahomet (1697), really a polemical tract against the *Deists, and The Old and New Testaments connected in the History of the Jews (2 vols., 1716–18), an account of the history of the Jewish people in the last centuries before the Christian era. He also issued The Validity of the Orders of the C of E (1688) and several other pamphlets.

Anon. Life (London, 1748, prob. by T. Birch), from information supplied by his son. Bibliotheca Cornubiensis, 2 (1878), pp. 527–33. His letters to John Ellis, Under-Secretary of State, 1674–1722, ed. E. M. Thompson (Camden Society, NS 15; 1875). P. M. Holt, 'The Treatment of Arab History by Prideaux, Ockley and Sale', in B. Lewis and P. Holt (eds.), Historians of the Middle East (1962), pp. 290–302, esp. pp. 290–4, repr. in Holt's Studies in the History of the Near East (1973), esp. pp. 51–4. A. Gordon in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 354–6.

prie-dieu (Fr., 'pray God'). A small prayer-desk for private use, usually constructed with a sloping ledge and sometimes also a shelf for books. The name appears to date from the early 17th cent.

Prierias, Sylvester (1456–1527), Sylvester Mazzolini, one of the earliest opponents of M. *Luther. A native of Priero in Piedmont, he entered the *Dominican Order at Savona in 1471. From 1492 to 1502 he served as Regent Master at *Bologna. In 1502 he was instituted Regent Master in *Venice and appointed professor of Thomistic metaphysics in the university of Padua. He subsequently served as Prior in Milan, Verona, and Genoa, and Vicar General of the Congregation of Lombardy (1508–10). He was appointed *Inquisitor in Brescia in 1508 and in Milan in 1512; here he was instrumental in the collapse of the anti-Papal council convoked at Pisa by Louis XII of France in 1511. He was also Regent Master and Prior of Bologna (1510–12) and between 1512 and 1515 was Prior in Cremona and Venice. In 1512 *Leo X appointed him 'Master of the Sacred Palace', Inquisitor and censor of books for Rome, and professor of Thomistic theology at the Sapienza. He was involved in the juridical process against J. *Reuchlin and Luther and in the cases of P. *Pomponazzi and *Erasmus. He wrote numerous works on logic, theology, homiletics, spirituality and hagiography. His collection of sermons, Rosa Aurea (1503), his digest of moral theology, Summa Silvestrina (1514), and his manual on witchcraft, De Strigimagarum, Daemonumque Mirandis (1521), went into many editions. He left incomplete an anthology and commentary on the Summa Theologiae of St *Thomas Aquinas, Conflatum ex S. Thomae (Part 1, 1519). The procrastination of the Roman Curia mitigated against the impact of his polemical works against Luther: Dialogus de Potestate Papae (1518), Replica ad Fratrum Martinum Luther (1518), Epitoma Responsionis ad Lutherum (1519), and Errata et Argumenta Martini Luteris [sic] (1520). He died during the sack of Rome.

Modern edn. of his Dialogus, Replica, Epitoma and Errata, with introd. by P. Fabisch and E. Iserloh, Dokumente zur Causa Lutheri (1517–1521), 1 (Corpus Catholicorum, 41; Münster, 1988), pp. 33–201. The brief study of his life and works by F. Michalski (Münster i.W., 1892; in Lat.) is unreliable. F. Lauchert, Die italienischen literarischen Gegner Luthers (Erläuterungen und Ergänzungen zu Janssens Geschichte des deutschen Volkes, ed. L. von *Pastor, 8; 1912), pp. 7–30. C. Lindberg, 'Prierias and his Significance for Luther's Development', Sixteenth Century Journal, 3, no. 2 (1972), pp. 45–64. U. Horst, OP, Zwischen Konziliarismus und Reformation: Studien zur Ekklesiologie im Dominikanerorderen (Institutum Historicum FF. Praedicatorum Romae ad S. Sabinae, Dissertationes Historicae, 22; 1985), pp. 127–62. P. Fabisch, 'Silvester Prierias' in E. Iserloh (ed.), Katholisches Theologen der Reformationszeit, 1 (Katholisches Leben und Kirchenreform im Zeitalter der Glaubensspaltung, 44; 1984), pp. 26–36. J. Wicks, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2347–9, with bibl.; D. R. Janz in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 (Toronto, etc., 1987), pp. 120 f., both s.v.

priest. The term 'priest' is etymologically a contraction of '*presbyter' (Gk. πρεσβύτερος, 'elder'), but while the AV and RV of the NT regularly render πρεσβύτερος by 'elder', they keep 'priest' and 'priesthood' for the purely sacerdotal terms ἱερεύς and ἱεράτευμα (Lat. sacerdos and sacerdotium). The latter words are never used in the NT specifically of Christian ministers, though they are applied to the Christian body as a whole (1 Pet. 2: 5 and 9; Rev. 5: 10). By the close of the Old English period the English term 'priest' had become the current word alike for 'presbyter' and 'sacerdos' and so an ambiguous term. The idea and institution of priesthood is found in almost all the great religions, usually connected with the conception of *sacrifice. In some cases the duties attach to the father of the family or the ruler of the tribe or nation, but in most religions a separate order developed.

Acc. to the OT the priesthood before the age of *Moses was patriarchal. The father sacrificed for the family (*Noah, Gen. 8: 20; *Abraham, Gen. 22: 13), the sheik for his tribe (Jethro, Exod. 2: 16), and the prince for his people (*Melchizedek, Gen. 14: 18). Acc. to an early tradition, Moses himself was a priest. At the same time it appears that there was a separate class of priests (Exod. 19: 22), but it was not they whom Moses employed to offer sacrifice, but 'young men' and himself (cf. Exod. 24: 4–8). Later a more formal priesthood seems to have been established. On Mt. Sinai Moses was ordered to consecrate *Aaron and his three sons 'to minister in the priest's office' (Exod. 28: 1). In Exod. 32: 26–9 the tribe of Levi was chosen to be consecrated to the Lord; eventually the *Levites were given charge of the services of the Tabernacle, and only the sons of Aaron were to exercise the functions of the priesthood (Num. passim). All subsequent priests were held to be descendants of Aaron. It is likely, however, that the historical reality was very different: Zadok, the chief priest in *David's time (2 Sam. 8: 17 etc.), may represent the indigenous Jebusite priesthood. As the holiness of Israel centred on the Sanctuary, the importance of the priesthood, and esp. of the *High Priest (q.v.), increased with the enhanced place of the Temple in later Judaism. His position, exemplified in the Priestly Code of the Pentateuch, as mediator between God and man, came to be the predominant idea of the Jewish priesthood in the time of Christ.

In the NT the idea of Christ as High Priest finds clear expression in Heb. (2: 17; 3: 1; 4: 14 f., etc.). The Jewish priesthood is seen as the type of His priesthood, as the Jewish sacrifice was of His Sacrifice. By His Sacrifice as Priest he reconciles men and women to God, fulfilling what had been foreshadowed by the Jewish sacrifices. But though he was in the Sacrifice the Priest, He was also the Victim (Heb. 9: 12 ff.; 10: 5 ff.; cf. 'the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world', Rev. 13: 8); consequently, while He remains 'our Great High Priest', yet for the offering of the Sacrifice, a Christian priesthood was established in the Church.

The idea of priesthood as belonging to the Christian ministry was a gradual development arising from a sacrificial understanding of the Eucharist and based on OT ideas of priesthood; the term 'priest' does not appear to have been applied to Christian ministers until the end of the 2nd cent. The 'presbyters' of the NT were not commonly called 'sacerdotes' until the time of St *Cyprian (Ep. 61). At first the use of the term was commonly confined to bishops. It appears in St Cyprian that, while priests shared in the episcopal sacerdotium, could offer the Sacrifice of the Eucharist, and by the imposition of hands receive a penitent lapsus*, these functions were to be exercised only in the absence of the bishop and seem to have been regarded as delegated by him. With the spread of Christianity in the country and the establishment of parish churches, the presbyters adopted more fully the priestly functions of the bishop. A letter of *Innocent I to Decentius (AD 416) explains that in towns the Eucharist is to be consecrated by the bishop only and sent to parish priests, but in the outlying churches the priests are to consecrate themselves. When the priest thus independently obtained power to consecrate in the Eucharist and administer most other Sacraments, the way was opened for the fullest medieval doctrine of the priesthood. This was most fully developed in connection with the power conferred in *Ordination, esp. when, in the 11th cent., the custom spread of ordaining priests who had no benefice. As the parish priest came to be the normal celebrant of the Eucharist and customarily to exercise the power of absolution, esp. with the development of eucharistic theology and the obligation of confession (1215), increasingly he came to be regarded as the representative of God to the people rather than the converse. His supernatural powers and functions were emphasized, so that during the Middle Ages, vis-à-vis the laity, a priest acquired a position outside that of the feudal hierarchy. He remained, however, entirely subordinate to his bishop, who retained his superiority in such matters as Ordination and *Confirmation and his canonical jurisdiction, though there remained some doubt whether his office was of a different order from that of the priesthood. The *validity of the position of a priest always depended upon his Ordination.

The tendency of medieval theology to see the priesthood of the clergy almost exclusively in relation to the Mass led to its rejection by the Reformers. The term 'priest' was retained in the BCP apparently in order to make it clear that deacons were not to celebrate the Holy Communion. In general parlance, except in the N. of England, the term 'clergyman' was more frequently used in the C of E to avoid the implications of that of priest. With the revival of Catholic views, however, the term 'priest' has again come into common use. This revival of the term outside the RC Church prob. also reflects a more comprehensive view of the priesthood, which is seen in relation to the whole Church and to that extent ministerial rather than dominating, and a fresh recognition of its relation to the priesthood of Christ. See also ORDERS AND ORDINATION.

E. O. James, The Nature and Function of Priesthood: A Comparative and Anthropological Study (1955). E. Landtman, The Origin of Priesthood (University of Finland thesis; Ekenaes, 1905). On priesthood in the OT and Judaism, A. C. Welch, Prophet and Priest in the Old Israel (Oxford, 1953); A. Cody, OSB, A History of Old Testament Priesthood (Analecta Biblica, 35; 1969); R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960; 4th edn., 1982), pp. 195–277; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 345–405; E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 227–313; M. Haran and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), pp. 1070–91, s.v. 'Priests and Priesthood'.

For the origins of the Christian Priesthood, see bibl. to ORDERS AND ORDINATION. Cf. also H. S. Box (ed.), Priesthood (1937); J. Lécuyer, C.S.Sp., Le Sacerdoce dans le mystère du Christ (1957); D. N. Power, OMI, Ministers of Christ and His Church: The Theology of the Priesthood (1969); N. Lash and J. Rhymer (eds.), The Christian Priesthood (9th Downside Symposium, 1970). B. Kleinheyer, Die Priesterweihe im römischen Ritus: Eine liturgiehistorische Studie (Trier theologische Studien, 12; 1962).

A. Michel in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 138–61, s.v. 'Prêtre'; G. Schrenk in TWB 3 (1938), pp. 257–84 (Eng. tr., 3, 1966, pp. 257–83), s.v. ἱερεύς, and G. Bornkamm, ibid. 6 (1959), pp. 651–83 (Eng. tr., 6, 1968, pp. 651–83), s.v. πρέσβυς; J. Haekel and others in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 735–48, s.v. 'Priester'.

Priest, High. See HIGH PRIEST.

Priest in Absolution, The (1866; 1870). A privately printed manual for the use of Anglican confessors, compiled by the Revd J. C. *Chambers at the request of the *Society of the Holy Cross. The second part, dealing with certain sins which necessarily called for treatment in a technical manual, was sold only to bona fide confessors. On Chambers's death (1874), to prevent misuse of the work, the remaining stock and copyright were bought by the Society. The work created a storm of protest against the *High Church Movement when, on 14 June 1877, Lord Redesdale, into whose possession by some inadvertence a copy had come, drew attention to its contents in the House of Lords. The attack, in which A. C. *Tait, Abp. of Canterbury, took part, caused for a short time much annoyance to High Churchmen, but it passed without leaving any permanent mark and with Chambers's high character unstained.

R. T. *Davidson and W. Benham, Life of Archibald Campbell Tait (1891), 2, pp. 171–84. W. Walsh, The Secret History of the Oxford Movement (1897), pp. 93–146 (hostile); J. Embry, The Catholic Movement and the Society of the Holy Cross (1931), pp. 97–127.

Priestley, Joseph (1733–1804), *Presbyterian minister and scientist. A native of W. Yorkshire, he entered Daventry Academy to train for the Presbyterian ministry in 1751. In 1755 he became minister at Needham Market, Suffolk, and in 1758 at Nantwich, where he opened a school. His religious beliefs became increasingly unorthodox. He came to hold *Arian views on the Person of Christ, and rejected the doctrine of the *Atonement and the Inspiration of the Bible. In 1761 he became tutor of languages at the newly founded Academy at Warrington, and in 1767 was appointed minister of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, where he embraced *Socinianism. Here he brought out the Theological Repository, a critical periodical that appeared irregularly and aroused much hostility, favoured the autonomy of the individual congregation and an increase in the number of sects, and complete toleration for RCs; and he attacked the idea of a national Church. In 1772 the offer of a post as librarian to Lord Shelburne gave him sufficient leisure to pursue his scientific studies, which had already gained him a reputation. During this period he published his Institutes of Natural and Revealed Religion (3 vols., 1772–4), Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit (1777), and A Harmony of the Evangelists (also 1777). In 1780 he gave up his post with Lord Shelburne and settled at Birmingham, where he became junior minister of the New Meeting Society. In 1782 he published his widely read History of the Corruptions of Christianity. He denied the impeccability and infallibility of the Lord, views which he finally elaborated in his History of Early Opinions concerning Jesus Christ (1786). The book provoked a violent controversy, his chief orthodox critic being S. *Horsley. In 1791 he became one of the founders of the *Unitarian Society, and in the same year defended the French Revolution in his Letters to Burke. The hostility aroused was such that he had to escape to London, where he became morning preacher at Gravel Pit Chapel, Hackney. In 1794 he went to America, spending the remaining years of his life at Northumberland, Pennsylvania. During this period he adopted the doctrine of universal restitution and of moral progress in life after death. Despite his unorthodoxy on other points he was a firm believer in the mission of Moses and the Messiahship of the Lord. In the realm of science he is known chiefly for his 'discovery' of oxygen in 1774 and for his great work on Experiments and Observations on Different Kinds of Air (1774–86).

Theological and Miscellaneous Works, ed. J. T. Rutt (25 vols., London [1817–31]). Selections from his Writings ed. I. V. Brown (University Park, Pa., 1962). Memoirs of Dr. Joseph Priestley, to the Year 1795, written by himself, with a Continuation . . . by his son, J. Priestley (London, 1806); repr., with introd. by J. Lindsay (Bath, 1970). Modern Lives by A. Holt (London, 1931) and F. W. Gibbs (ibid. [1965]). L. Kieft and B. R. Willeford (eds.), Joseph Priestley: Scientist, Theologian, and Metaphysician. A Symposium Celebrating the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Discovery of Oxygen by Joseph Priestley in 1774 (Lewisburg and London [1980]). R. E. Crook, A Bibliography of Joseph Priestley 1733 1804 (1966). Further bibl. by J. Stephens in preparation. A. Gordon and P. J. Hartog in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 357–76; R. E. Schofield in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 11 (1970), pp. 139–47.

Primasius (6th cent.), Bp. of Hadrumetum in N. Africa. His commentary on Rev., which drew extensively on *Tyconius and *Augustine, is of great value for the light it throws on the history of the *Old Latin Version of the NT. A commentary on St *Paul's Epp. is also attributed to him, but this really belongs to the school of *Cassiodorus. In the *Three Chapters Controversy he was a strong supporter of Pope *Vigilius.

Comm. on Rev. ed. Cologne, 1535; Paris, 1544; Basle, 1544 (all purporting to be editiones principes). Works in J. P. Migne, PL 68. 407–936. Crit. edn. by A. W. Adams (CCSL 92; 1985). J. Haussleiter, Leben und Werke des Bischofs Primasius von Hadrumetum (1887); id., Die lateinische Apokalypse der alten afrikanischen Kirche (in T. *Zahn, Forschungen zur Gesch. des NT Kanons, 4, 1891, pp. 1–224); H. J. Vogels, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der lateinischen Apokalypse-Übersetzung (1920), pp. 19–36 and 153–64. M. Dulaey in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2351–3, s.v.

Primate. The title of the bishop of the 'first see' (prima sedes), used originally of the *metropolitan of a province, then for a time equated with the *patriarch, and later applied to the chief bishop of a single state or people. The Abp. of *Canterbury is 'Primate of All England', the Abp. of *York 'Primate of England'.

Prime. The *Office traditionally appointed for the first hour, i.e. 6 a.m. It has usually been held that it was introduced by *Cassian in his monastery at *Bethelehem *c.*395, as altera matutina ('Second Mattins'), but the meaning of this phrase has been disputed. Under the name of Prima it appears as first of the Little Hours (see TERCE, SEXT, NONE) in the Regula Magistri* and in the Rule of St *Benedict. At first recited in the dormitory, it was later transferred to the choir and thence passed into the Office of the secular clergy. In 1964 the recitation of Prime became voluntary for the secular clergy, and the Office has no place in the 1971 Breviary.

Prime consisted of two parts. The first, after the usual opening and the hymn 'Iam lucis orto sidere', contained three Psalms with antiphon to which a fourth was added on certain days; and on *Trinity and some other Sundays the 'Quicunque Vult' (see ATHANASIAN CREED) was recited as well. The Psalms were followed by a (little) *chapter with 'responsorium breve', the Sunday or ferial prayers, and a concluding prayer. The second part was the originally independent Chapter Office. It began with the reading of the *martyrology (if recited in choir), followed by several prayers, versicles, and the variable 'lectio brevis', and ended with a benediction.

J. Pargoire, 'Prime et complies', Revue d'Histoire et de Littérature religieuses, 3 (1898), pp. 281–8 and 456–67. J. Froger, OSB, Les Origines de prime (Bibliotheca 'Ephemerides Liturgicae', 19; 1946); crit. reviews by L. Brou in JTS 48 (1947), pp. 240 f., and by E. Cattaneo in EL 61 (1947), pp. 366–9; J. Froger, 'Note pour rectifier l'interprétation de Cassien, Inst. 3, 4: 6, proposée dans Les Origines de prime', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 2 (1952), pp. 96–102. J. M. Hanssens, SJ, Aux origines de la prière liturgique: Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, 57; 1952), passim. See also works cited under OFFICE, DIVINE.

Primer or Prymer (Lat. Primarium). A devotional book popular among the educated laity from at least the early 14th cent. The etymology of the word is not entirely clear. It was often used as a synonym for 'Book of Hours' (Horae). The Primer contained the *Little Office of the BVM, followed by the *seven penitential Psalms, the 15 *Gradual Psalms, the *Litany of the Saints and the Office for the Dead. Until the beginning of the 16th cent. the prohibition against unauthorized English translations of any portion of the Bible (decreed because of the rise of *Lollardy) precluded an English version of the Primer. In the third decade of the 16th cent., however, some of the Reformers began to print abroad texts of the Primer in English adapted to their own doctrinal positions. Official attempts to prevent these books being smuggled into England were largely ineffective. From 1534 onwards various editions of the Primer were published in England with official sanction. In 1545 the first authorized Primer of *Henry VIII was issued, first in English and the following year in Latin; it was accompanied by the injunction that it was to be used by every schoolmaster next after the ABC in teaching children to read and know their Paternoster etc. The Primer came to be linked to elements in the BCP and continued for some years into the reign of *Elizabeth I in association with the *Catechism. In 1599 Richard Verstegan published an English translation of the post-Tridentine Officium Beatae Mariae Virginis; this Primer became one of the most popular works of devotion among RCs during the next two centuries, during which it was frequently revised, with new material and new translations being incorporated. The word Primer eventually lost its religious significance and came to be used also of any short introductory textbook, regardless of the subject.

E. Burton (ed.), Three Primers put forth in the Reign of Henry VIII (Oxford, 1834); W. Maskell, Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae, 3 (2nd edn., ibid., 1882), pp. i–lxvii and 1–260. Facsimile repr. of Verstegan's Primer (English Recusant Literature, 1558–1650, 262; Menston, Yorks, 1975). H. C. White, The Tudor Books of Private Devotion (Madison, Wis., 1951), pp. 53–133; C. C. Butterworth, The English Primers (1529 1545): Their Publication and Connection with the English Bible and the Reformation in England (Philadelphia, 1953); E. Duffy, The Stripping of the Altars (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1992), pp. 209–98. J. M. Blom, The Post-Tridentine English Primer (Catholic Record Society Publications, Monograph Series, 3; 1982). See also works cited under LITTLE OFFICE OF OUR LADY.

primicerius. The word, derived from 'primus in cera', i.e. 'the first on the waxed table' of names, was applied to the senior in rank of several classes of officials, both ecclesiastical and secular. In the Rule of St *Chrodegang he was the cleric next below the archdeacon and arch-presbyter and charged with the liturgical functions and music of the monastery.

Primitive Methodist Church. One of the three *Methodist Churches which united in 1932. It came into being in 1811 in connexion with, but for the most part outside, the Wesleyan Methodist Church.

The new community developed out of some earlier unofficial Methodist movements. Hugh Bourne, a Methodist, had begun *c.*1800 an important evangelistic movement near Mow Cop, Staffs, but outside the official structure of Methodism. Another contributory element was the work of Lorenzo Dow, an American Methodist, who in 1807 introduced the *Camp Meeting into English Methodism at Mow Cop. This form of meeting, held for a whole day in the open and designed for those not attracted by the ordinary work of the Church, was pronounced by the Wesleyan Conference to be 'highly improper and likely to be of considerable mischief'. When these Camp Meetings were continued, Hugh Bourne, who was now mainly responsible for them, was expelled and in 1810 there came into being as a distinct community the 'Camp Meeting Methodists'. In the same year William Clowes, who had joined in evangelistic work at Tunstall and later at Hull, was also expelled from the Methodist Church. In 1811 the two bodies united under the name of the Primitive Methodists.

At first the policy of the new society was to cease mission work and consolidate itself; but soon they gave themselves to systematic and widespread evangelism. For several years they met with great success, in spite of persecution, but rapid growth and lack of discipline brought a serious decline in 1825–8. Bourne was able, however, to replace the original organization, whereby administration was carried out chiefly by District Meetings and each district was to a great extent autonomous, by a centralization of authority. In 1843 the Primitive Methodists founded missions in *Australia and *New Zealand; and in 1889 work was begun in Africa also. Their most notable member in later years was A. S. *Peake.

Notable features of the Church were its connexion with the Society of *Friends; its use of women as preachers, esp. in its earlier years; and its close relations with trades unions and the Labour Movement, esp. among miners and agricultural workers. In 1932 the Primitive Methodist Church united with the Wesleyan and *United Methodists to form the present Methodist Church.

H. B. Kendall, The Origin and History of the Primitive Methodist Church (2 vols. [1905]). J. Petty, The History of the Primitive Methodist Connexion from its Origin to the Conference of 1859 (1860). J. S. Werner, The Primitive Methodist Connexion: Its Background and Early History (Madison, Wis., 1984). H. Bourne, History of the Primitive Methodists, Giving an Account of their Rise and Progress to the Year 1823 (1823); J. Walford, ed. W. Antliff, Memoirs of the Life and Labours of the late Venerable Hugh Bourne (2 vols., 1855–6); J. T. Wilkinson, Hugh Bourne 1772–1850 (1952). W. Clowes, Journals (1844); J. Davison [son-in-law], The Life of the Venerable William Clowes (1854); J. T. Wilkinson, William Clowes 1780–1851 (1951). H. B. Kendall, 'The Primitive Methodist Church and the Independent Methodist Churches, 1796–1908', in W. J. Townsend, H. B. Workman, and G. Eayrs (eds.), A New History of Methodism, 1 (1909), pp. 555–98; R. [E.] Davies, A. R. George, and [E.] G. Rupp, A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, 2 (1978), pp. 304–13. R. Currie, Methodism Divided: A Study in the Sociology of Ecumenicalism (1968), passim. R. [S.] Moore, Pit-men, Preachers & Politics: The Effects of Methodism in a Durham Mining Community (Cambridge, 1974). The Christian Ambassador (20 vols., 1854–78); cont. as Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review (31 vols., 1879–1909); cont. as Holborn Review (23 vols., 1910–32); in 1932 Holborn Review was amalgamated with London Quarterly to form London Quarterly and Holborn Review (37 vols., 1932–68). Primitive Methodist Year Book (ceased 1932).

Primus. In the Scottish Episcopal Church, the title of the presiding bishop. The first mention of the office is in 1731 in the 'Articles of Agreement amongst the Bishops of the Church of Scotland'. The principal function of the Primus, who has no metropolitical power, is to convene and preside at meetings of the Episcopal Synod. He is elected by the College of Bishops and the office is attached to no fixed see and not necessarily given by seniority. His title is 'The Most Revd the Lord Bishop of X, Primus of the Scottish Church'.

prior. The holder of an office found in certain male religious orders. In an abbey, the *abbot's deputy is usually designated prior; in a priory, the prior is the superior. Among the *mendicant friars (except the *Franciscans) and in a few of the monastic orders (esp. the *Carthusians), it is the general term by which all superiors are designated. See also PRIORY.

prioress. The holder of an office found in certain Religious *Institutes of women. In general the prioress fulfils the same functions as the *prior in the corresponding male order. While the office of *abbess in current RC usage is restricted to the superiors of certain houses of *nuns, the title of prioress is also used in certain Religious Institutes of women who are not nuns in the strict sense. See also ABBESS; PRIOR; and PRIORY.

priory. A religious house presided over by a *prior or a *prioress. It is the normal unit among most of the *mendicant friars; among orders following the Rule of St *Benedict a distinction is made between a conventual priory, which is autonomous, and a dependent priory, which depends on some other monastery. The multiplication of priories in the Middle Ages stemmed largely from the need to supervise properties owned by the monasteries, by installing a small community; these houses later became known as priories. In medieval England the cathedral monasteries, of which the bishop was the titular head but which were in practice ruled by the prior as his deputy, were also known as priories.

J.-L. Lemaître (ed.), Prieurs et Prieurés dans l'Occident Médiéval: Actes du colloque organisé à Paris le 12 novembre 1984 (École Pratique des Hautes Études, IVe Section: Sciences historiques et philologiques, 5: Hautes Études medievales et modernes, 6; 1987). J. Dubois, OSB, and others in DIP 7 (1983), cols. 828–61, s.v. 'Priorato'.

Prisca. The name given to an early Latin version of the canons of certain Greek Councils, namely those of *Nicaea, *Sardica, *Ancyra, *Neocaesarea, *Gangra, *Antioch, *Chalcedon, and *Constantinople. The translation was made in Italy, almost certainly in the late 5th cent. The two chief MSS are the 'Chieti MS' (Vat. Reg. Lat. 1997; 9th cent.; this also includes some African canons) and the 'Justel MS' (Bod. e Mus. 100–2; 6th–7th cent.). The title 'Prisca', given it by Christopher Justel, its first editor, is taken from a (perhaps misunderstood) reference in *Dionysius Exiguus (confusione priscae translationis offensus). W. M. Peitz has argued that the translation is the work of Dionysius himself.

Text in G. Voellus and H. and C. Justel (eds.), Bibliotheca Iuris Canonici Veteris, 1 (Paris, 1661), pp. 275–304; repr. from the *Ballerini edn. of the works of St *Leo, in J. P. Migne, PL 56. 747–816. F. *Maassen, Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande, 1 (1870), pp. 87–100. C. H. *Turner, 'Chapters in the History of Latin MSS of Canons, 5 and 6', JTS 30 (1928–9), pp. 337–46, and 31 (1929–30), pp. 9–20. E. *Schwartz, 'Die Kanonessammlungen der alten Reichskirche', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Kirchengeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 25 (1936), pp. 1–114, esp. pp. 95–108. W. M. Peitz, SJ, Dionysius Exiguus-Studien, ed. H. Foerster (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 33; 1960), passim.

Prisca, St. See PRISCILLA, ST.

Priscilla, St (1st cent.), also 'Prisca', an early Christian convert. She is mentioned six times in the NT (Acts 18: verses 2, 18, and 26; Rom. 16: 3; 1 Cor. 16: 19; 2 Tim. 4: 19); in the Pauline Epp. the best attested form in all cases is 'Prisca'. She was the wife of Aquila, a Jew of Pontus and (like St *Paul) a tentmaker. They are mentioned in the NT at *Rome, *Ephesus, and *Corinth, and were clearly prominent members in the primitive Church. They were compelled to leave Rome by the Emp. Claudius' decree (Acts 18: 2), but, unless Rom. 16 is a fragment of an epistle sent by St Paul to Ephesus, returned later (Rom. 16: 3). The suggestion of A. *Harnack that she and her husband were the authors of the Ep. to the Hebrews has met with little favour. Feast day in E., 13 Feb.; in W., 8 July.

In later Roman tradition, a saint with one or other of her names is prominent in two connections:

(1) Since the 4th cent. a church has existed on the Aventine Hill known as the titulus S. Priscae. Acc. to the (late) Acta S. Priscae, this church enshrined the remains of the martyr St Prisca, whose relics had been translated hither from the *Ostian Way. This St Prisca, who was well known to the medieval hagiographers, is sometimes represented in art between two lions, who are reputed to have refused to attack her. Feast day, 18 Jan.

(2) The 'Coemeterium Priscillae' on the Via Salaria was one of the oldest of the *catacombs. It prob. takes its name from a Priscilla quite unconnected with the saint of the titulus S. Priscae and perh. a member of the senatorial family of the 'Acilii Glabriones'. It was in this catacomb that J. Wilpert discovered the well-known painting, 'Fractio Panis'. On the site Pope *Sylvester built a basilica in which he was himself buried.

There are no sufficient reasons for identifying either of these with the Priscilla of the NT.

A. Harnack, 'Ueber die beiden Recenzionen der Geschichte der Prisca und des Aquila in Act. Apost. 18, 1–27', Sb. (Berl.), 1900, pp. 2–13.

On (1), J. P. Kirsch, Die römischen Titelkirchen im Altertum (Studien zur Geschichte und Kultur des Altertums, 9. 1–2; 1918), pp. 101–4, 162 f. F. Lanzoni, 'I titoli presbiterali di Roma antica nella storia e nella legenda', Riv. A.C. 2 (1925), pp. 195–257, esp. pp. 247–50; A. Amore, OFM, 'Note agiografiche sul calendario perpetuo della Chiesa Universale', Antonianum, 39 (1964), pp. 18–53, esp. pp. 27–29. R. Krautheimer and others in idd., Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 3 (Rome, 1967), pp. 260–76 (in English).

On (2), see works cited s.v. CATACOMBS. J. Wilpert, Fractio Panis: Die älteste Darstellung des eucharistischen Opfers in der 'Cappella Greca' (1895). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1799–874, s.v. 'Priscille (Cimetière de)', with bibl.; E. Josi in EC 10 (1953), cols. 36–40, s.v. 'Priscilla, Cimitero di', with full bibl.

Priscillianism. The origins of this 4th–5th-cent. heresy are obscure; evidence for the sequence of events is mainly dependent on the somewhat biased testimony of *Sulpicius Severus. In the 370s, Priscillian, a devout Spanish layman of high (prob. senatorial) rank, called on his fellow Christians to take their vow of baptismal renunciation seriously and commit themselves to a strongly ascetical form of Christianity. As a person of education famous for his austerity, he soon found adherents, among them two bishops, *Instantius and Salvianus, and a large number of women. In 380 the doctrines attributed to him (though Priscillian was not mentioned by name) were condemned at Saragossa. The canons of this synod forbade mixed gatherings for the reading and interpretation of Scriptures, fasting on Sundays, absence from church during *Lent and the three weeks preceding *Epiphany, and similar unusual practices. Despite this condemnation Priscillian became Bp. of Ávila soon afterwards. In 381 his opponents obtained a decree of exile against him and his followers, who were now described as '*Manichaeans'. The exiles went to the S. of France and thence to Rome, where they sought Pope *Damasus' support but failed to obtain a hearing. At Milan they met with a similar rebuff from St *Ambrose. They succeeded, however, in getting the decree of exile annulled by the secular authorities and returned to Spain, where they won a large following.

Not long after this, the new Emperor, Maximus, seeking the support of the Catholic bishops, had Priscillian tried at an episcopal synod at Bordeaux. Priscillian, however, refused to recognize its authority and appealed to the Emperor. In 386 he was tried at Maximus' court at Trier on a charge of sorcery—a capital offence. Despite the pleadings of St *Martin of Tours, he was convicted and executed, together with several of his adherents. Although these executions were inflicted by a secular and not an ecclesiastical court, the religious motivation was obvious and in Spain the dead Priscillianists were venerated as martyrs. The fall of Maximus in 388 produced another change in imperial policy and Priscillianism flourished, esp. in the province of Galicia; it is possible that the shrine at *Compostela is on the site of Priscillian's burial-place. In 400 a Council at *Toledo decreed the deposition of those Priscillianist bishops who would not abandon the heresy and the confirmation in office of those who submitted. The movement, however, continued, being denounced by Pope *Leo I in 447, and it did not disappear until the end of the 6th cent.

Our knowledge of Priscillianist doctrine is derived principally from a collection of anonymous writings contained in a 5th/6th-cent. MS at Würzburg, attributed to Priscillian by G. Schepss, its first editor, in 1889; the ascription has been widely accepted, despite the doubts of some scholars, who regard the treatises as the work of Instantius or another of Priscillian's disciples. From these documents, it appears that Priscillianism was a movement of spiritual renewal. Priscillian, holding a sombre view of the earthbound condition of fallen humanity, set great store by asceticism and thought that spiritual aspirations released by it would be rewarded by the gift of prophecy and a deeper insight into Christian doctrine. Although he was accused of Manichaeism, there seems to be no reason to doubt his vehement rejection of this charge. None the less, several features of his teaching made him vulnerable to such an accusation: notably his deep interest in the cosmic dimensions of the ascetic struggle, his demand for celibacy, coupled with tolerance of the lower virtue of married Christians, his enthusiasm for the *Apocryphal NT, esp. the Apocryphal Acts, his taste for the occult, and his conviction that divine truth was not confined to the official Scriptures or to the Church. His trinitarian theology had marked signs of modalist *Monarchianism, but his real interest lay in Christian doctrine that bore on the ascetic struggle.

The Würzburg treatises ed. G. Schepss, Priscilliani Quae Supersunt (CSEL 18; 1889). Their ascription has been challenged by A. *Hilgenfeld, 'Priscillianus und seine neuentdeckten Schriften', Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, 35 (1892), pp. 1–85; G. *Morin, OSB, 'Pro Instantio, contre l'attribution à Priscillien des opuscules du manuscrit de Würzburg', R. Bén. 30 (1913), pp. 153–173; and M. Hartberger, 'Instantius oder Priscillian', Th. Q. 95 (1913), pp. 401–40; it has been defended by J. Martin, 'Priscillianus oder Instantius', Hist. J. 47 (1927), pp. 237–51, and H. Chadwick, op. cit. (below). D. de Bruyne, OSB, 'Fragments retrouvés d'apocryphes priscillianistes', R. Bén. 24 (1907), pp. 318–35, with text; G. Morin, OSB, 'Un Traité priscillianiste inédit sur la Trinité', ibid. 26 (1909), pp. 255–80, repr., with text, in his Études, Textes, Découvertes, 1 (Anecdota Maredsolana, 2nd ser., 1913), pp. 151–205. D. de Bruyne, OSB, 'La Regula Consensoria, une règle des moines priscillianistes', R. Bén. 25 (1908), pp. 83–8. J. *Chapman, OSB, Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), pp. 238–70, ch. 13, 'Priscillian the Author of the Prologues'. E. C. Babut, Priscillien et le priscillianisme (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études. Sciences Historiques et Philologiques, 169; 1909). A. Puech, 'Les Origines du priscillianisme et l'orthodoxie de Priscillien', Bulletin d'ancienne Littérature et d'Archéologie chrétiennes, 2 (1912), pp. 81–95 and 161–213. J. A. Davids, De Orosio et Sancto Augustino Priscillianistarum Adversariis: Commentatio Historica et Philologica (Diss., The Hague, 1930). A. d'Alès, SJ, Priscillien et l'Espagne chrétienne à la fin du IV^e siècle (1936). J. M. Ramos y Loscertales, Prisciliano: Gesta rerum (Acta Salmanticensia, Filosofía y Letras, 5, no. 5; 1952). B. Vollmann, Studien zum Priszillianismus: Die Forschung, die Quellen, der fünfzehnte Brief Papst Leos des Grossen (Kirchengeschichtliche Quellen und Studien, 7; 1965). R. López Caneda, Prisciliano: Su pensamiento y su problema histórico (Compostela, 1966), with bibl. H. Chadwick, Priscillian of Avila: The Occult and the Charismatic in the Early Church (Oxford, 1976). R. Van Dam, Leadership and Community in Late Antique Gaul (The Transformation of the Classical Heritage, 8; Berkeley, Calif., etc. [1985]), pp. 88–114 ('The Heresy of Priscillianism'). V. Burrus, The Making of a Heretic: Gender, Authority, and the Priscillianist Controversy (ibid. 24 [1995]). CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 266–9 (nos. 178–97), and 609 (no. 1872). M. Simonetti in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 138–43, with bibl. J. N. Hillgarth in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 790 f.; B. Vollmann in PW, Suppl. 14 (1974), cols. 485–559; H. Chadwick in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2353–69, all s.v. See also works cited under TOLEDO, COUNCILS OF.

Private Chapels Act 1871. This Act, which regulated the status of C of E chapels in schools, hospitals, and similar institutions, permitted the bishop of the diocese in which the chapel was situated to license a cleric to serve such chapels, with the right of administering the Lord's Supper. Such a cleric was not subject to interference from the incumbent of the parish, provided that the entire cure of souls, except of those within the institution, was safeguarded to the incumbent. All alms collected in such a chapel could be disposed of as the minister determined, subject to the *Ordinary's direction. The Act has now been superseded by the Extra-Parochial Ministry Measure 1967 which is in broadly the same terms, and Canon B 41 of the 1969 Canons lays down certain regulations for the conduct of divine service in private chapels.

privileged altar. An altar at which formerly, according to RC canon law, a *plenary indulgence could be secured for a soul in purgatory by the application of a Mass celebrated on it. All such privileges were abrogated by Pope *Paul VI's Constitution 'Indulgentiarum doctrina' (1 Jan. 1967).

Privileged Presses. The Oxford and Cambridge University Presses, so called in respect of their right, shared only with the King's (Queen's) Printer, of printing the Book of Common Prayer and, in England, the Authorized Version of the Bible, which are perpetual Crown copyright. The King's Printer holds this right by his Letters Patent of appointment, while the University Presses derive it from their respective Charters. That granted to Cambridge in 1534 conferred the right to print 'all manner of books' (omnimodos libros), and this was held to be unimpaired by the monopoly otherwise granted to the Stationers' Company in 1587, and was confirmed in 1628. A similar Charter was granted to Oxford in 1634. As a result, the Authorized Version, printed at first only by the then King's Printer, Robert Barker, was printed, with considerably improved accuracy, at Cambridge in 1629. At Oxford the same rights of printing Bibles and certain other books were claimed, but, by a 'covenant of forbearance' made with the members of the Stationers' Company (including the King's Printer), remained unexercised until 1675. Before 1839 the King's Printer for Scotland held similar exclusive rights in his territory; but an Order in Council of that year empowered the Lord Advocate to license any printer to produce an edition of the Authorized Version upon certain conditions.

J. Johnson and S. Gibson, Print and Privilege at Oxford to the Year 1700 (1946).

Privy Council, Judicial Committee of the. See JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Probabiliorism. The system of *moral theology based on the principle that, if the licitness or illicitness of an action is in doubt, it is lawful to follow the opinion favouring liberty only when it is more probable than the opinion favouring the law. The system was developed by opponents of *Probabilism (q.v.), adopted by the *Dominican Order in 1656, and favoured by several Popes, esp. *Innocent XI. Though paramount in the first half of the 18th cent., it is today abandoned by most moral theologians. Chief among the objections to it is that the decision on the relative degrees of probability demanded by it requires more time and skill than are normally available in actual situations.

Probabilism. The system of *moral theology based on the principle that, if the licitness or illicitness of an action is in doubt, it is lawful to follow a solidly probable opinion favouring liberty, even though the opposing opinion, favouring the law, be more probable.

From the beginning of the 14th cent. the rights of the probable opinion began to be discussed, but Probabilist principles were first fostered esp. in the school of Salamanca in the 16th cent., where the *Dominican, B. *Medina, in his 'Commentary on the Summa of St *Thomas Aquinas' (1572), gave this teaching its classical form: 'Si est opinio probabilis, licitum est eam sequi, licet opposita probabilior sit.' From Medina down to 1656 the doctrine reigned almost without opposition, being accepted by both Dominicans (*John of St Thomas) and *Jesuits (G. *Vázquez, F. *Suárez) alike. The latter developed the 'principle of possession', acc. to which in case of doubt one is not obliged to change the present state of things, i.e. if a law is doubtful, human freedom remains 'in possession'. The system, however, was recognized to be open to the charge of *Laxism, since, under the pretext of making salvation easy, it would seem to allow men to act acc. to freedom even on a very slight chance of probability; and already in 1604 abuse of the principle was deplored by the Jesuit General, C. *Aquaviva.

It was not, however, till 1656 that a sharp conflict among moralists broke out. The Dominican general chapter in Rome required members of the order to follow more closely St Thomas and to adopt a system that came to be known as *Probabiliorism (q.v.). In the same year B. *Pascal began to publish his Lettres provinciales with their violent denunciations, inspired by *Jansenism, of the morality of the Jesuits, with whom, since then, Probabilism has increasingly been identified. Several Probabilist propositions savouring of Laxism were condemned by *Alexander VII in 1665 and 1666, and Laxism as a whole by *Innocent XI in 1679. In the following year the Pope ordered the Jesuit General, G. P. Oliva, to permit the teaching of Probabiliorism and to allow criticism of Probabilism in the Society, and in 1687 T. González (1624–1705), who favoured Probabiliorism, was elected General. His Fundamentum Theologiae Moralis (pub. 1694) further impaired the position of Probabilism in the order. On the other hand, '*Tutiorism', a more rigorist system, which had been taught by the Jansenists and J. Sinnich (1603–68) at Louvain, was condemned by *Alexander VIII in 1690. In 1700 the French clergy, under the leadership of J.-B. *Bossuet, censured Probabilism and adopted Probabiliorism, which, under Jansenist influence, held sway during the first part of the 18th cent. The vigorous advocacy of Probabiliorism by the Dominican, D. Concina (1687–1756), who attacked the rival teaching in his Storia del probabilismo (1743), provoked a long-drawn-out controversy between Dominicans and Jesuits.

The subsequent rehabilitation of Probabilism is due esp. to the authority of St *Alphonsus Liguori. After a short period of Probabiliorism, which he abandoned as too rigid, he became a Probabilist; and, though in 1762 he again modified his position and expounded his own theory of '*Equiprobabilism' (q.v.), this system rests at bottom on a Probabilist foundation. His great prestige as a moralist, esp. after he was canonized (1839) and declared a *Doctor of the Church (1871), reflected on the whole Probabilist position, which was further strengthened by the restoration of the Society of Jesus in 1814. Surrounded with safeguards to prevent it from degenerating into Laxism, Probabilism became the official teaching of the Society, and together with Equiprobabilism was the most generally accepted moral system of RC Church until the Second *Vatican Council. It is less in evidence in the work of moral theologians writing after the Council.

M. A. Potton, OP, De Theoria Probabilitatis (Paris, 1874); F. ter Haar, CSSR, De Systemate Morali Antiquorum Probabilistarum (Paderborn, 1894). Id., Das Decret des Papstes Innocenz' XI über den Probabilismus (1904). A. Schmitt, SJ, Zur Geschichte des Probabilismus: Historisch-kritische Untersuchung über die ersten 50 Jahre desselben (1904). T. Richard, OP, Le Probabilisme moral et philosophique (1922). T. Deman, OP, in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 417–619, s.v.; Sisinio da Romallo, OFM, in EC 10 (1953), cols. 57–61, s.v., for further bibl. See also bibl. to MORAL THEOLOGY.

probationer. In the Presbyterian Churches, the status of one who, after examination and approval by his presbytery, receives a licence to preach. He is also known as a licentiate. The licence empowers him to act as an assistant to a minister, but he may not administer the Sacraments until he is ordained to a charge of his own. In Scotland a probationer who failed to be elected to a church used commonly to be called a 'stickit minister'. The title is also used in a similar sense in the Methodist Churches.

Probst, Ferdinand (1816–99), liturgical scholar. A pupil of K. J. *Hefele at Tübingen, he was ordained priest in 1840 and became Pastor at Pfärrich near Wangen in 1843, Professor of Pastoral Theology at Breslau in 1864, and Dean of Breslau Cathedral in 1896. Among Probst's long series of writings were Die Liturgie der drei ersten christlichen Jahrhunderte (1870), Sakramente und Sakramentalien (1872), Die ältesten römischen Sakramentarien und Ordines (1892), Die Liturgie des vierten Jahrhunderts (1893) and Die abendländische Messe vom 5. bis 8. Jahrhundert (1896). He was a scholar of great erudition and industry, but his conclusions were marked by an excessive conservatism, and his methods of argumentation were apt to be over-speculative.

W. Dürig, 'Ferdinand Probst (1816–1899)', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 3 (Munich [1975]), pp. 87–105. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1731 f., s.v. 'Liturgistes, iv', and in 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1887–9, s.v.

Process Theology. A contemporary theological movement which emphasizes the processive or evolutionary nature of man and the world, and holds that God Himself is in process of development through His intercourse with the changing world. The name is derived from A. N. Whitehead's 1928–9 *Gifford Lectures, Process and Reality (1929), which gave considerable impetus to the movement. As a distinctive theological movement, it originated in the USA, especially in the University of Chicago during the 1920s and 1930s, but it soon spread elsewhere and is now represented in most W. denominations of Christianity. Its more important exponents include C. Hartshorne, S. M. Ogden, J. B. Cobb, P. N. Hamilton, and W. N. Pittenger.

Unlike other radical movements, process theology is theistic, but its concept of God emphasizes His relationships with creation, His capacity to 'surpass' Himself (but in respect of other entities to remain 'unsurpassable'), His 'bi-polar' nature, and His root attribute as love rather than uncreatedness. All process, natural, human, or divine, is regarded as social in nature, entailing inter-relationship, mutuality, and participation. Notions of 'substance' are rejected as outmoded relics of a static metaphysic; their place is taken by the concept of 'event'. Each event, including God, 'prehends' (grasps or actively receives) from all other events; it is a 'concrescence' of the past, which it inherits and remembers, its present relations, and its 'subjective aim' or future goal for self-fulfilment. Further, each event is given by God (in His 'primordial' aspect) its initial aim, which by free decision it seeks to satisfy, hence actualizing its possiblity. God is the ultimate recipient of all such realizations, which He harmonizes in accordance with His nature of love and then uses for further 'creative advance' in the cosmos. This affective nature of God is His 'consequent aspect'. Hence the bipolarity of God, who is thus seen, as Whitehead said, not as the 'exception to' but as the 'chief exemplification of' the metaphysical principles required to describe all elements in 'reality in process'.

Following this basic concept, process theologians see the Incarnation of Christ in a classical sense, and not as an anomaly in the world. In Him there is 'the disclosure in act' of what had elsewhere been 'divined in theory', namely that love and persuasion are more significant and effective than power or coercion. Sin is interpreted as deviation from creative advance, through the free decision of the creature to choose his own narrow self-realization instead of the wider shared good. Redemption is acceptance by God of the creature's achievement and the opening of future possibilities of true fulfilment in community with others. Heaven and hell are respectively the positive or negative acceptance by God of the creation's achievement, since God receives all accomplished good and rejects all that is not consonant with His nature as love-in-action.

Process theologians claim to take seriously the biblical portrayal of God as participating in and working through creation, but they hold that it is necessary to '*demythologize' the images in which this scriptural affirmation is made, and reject what they call 'classical theism' because of its supposedly static quality.

Other works expounding process theology include A. N. Whitehead, Religion in the Making (Cambridge, 1926); id., Adventures of Ideas (ibid., 1933); C. Hartshorne, Man's Vision of God and the Logic of Theism (New York [1941]); id., The Divine Relativity (New Haven, Conn., 1948); id., A Natural Theology for our Time (La Salle, Ill. [1967]); J. B. Cobb, Jun., A Christian Natural Theology: Based on the thought of Alfred North Whitehead (1966); S. M. Ogden, The Reality of God and Other Essays (1967); P. [N.] Hamilton, The Living God and the Modern World (1967); [W.] N. Pittenger, God in Process (1967); id., Process-Thought and Christian Faith (1968); id., Christology Reconsidered (1970); D. D. Williams, The Spirit and the Forms of Love (1968); and D. A. Pailin, God and the Processes of Reality (1989). A critical approach is taken by I. Trethowan, OSB, Process Theology and the Christian Tradition (Studies in Historical Theology, 5; Still River, Mass. [1985]).

procession (liturgical). Processions are of two different kinds, festal and penitential. Acc. to strict W. use, there is a procession on all Sundays and principal festivals before the principal celebration of the *Eucharist, but in practice this takes place generally only on festivals. The ancient English use was for processions to be held after *Evensong on feasts and on all Saturdays from *Easter to *Advent. The order of procession, acc. to *Sarum Use, is thurifer, cross-bearer, candle-bearers, subdeacon, deacon, celebrant, choir, clergy, bishop (if present); but acc. to modern Roman use the choir walks before the celebrant. Processions are frequently held in the open air as acts of witness, e.g. on *Good Friday or before a parochial mission. Other traditional processions include those of *Palm Sunday, the *Rogation Days (often through the fields to pray for God's blessing on the fruits of the earth) and *Corpus Christi. Banners are often carried in procession both to excite devotion and to typify the Church's vocation to conquer like an army the powers of evil. In the Byzantine rite a procession, called the Lity (Gk., λιτή; Slavonic, litia) is prescribed for Vespers on the eves of Sundays and great feasts. In parish churches it goes only to the *narthex, but in monasteries it may well go round the outside of the church. There are also processions with the *epitaphion on Good Friday and *Holy Saturday, and a procession at the beginning of Mattins in the Midnight Easter Vigil. Open air processions with icons and relics are also common. See also PROCESSIONAL and STATION DAYS; for processions within the Eucharistic liturgy, see GOSPEL, OFFERTORY (1), and GREAT and LITTLE ENTRANCE.

N. Serrarius, Sacri Peripatetici, sive de Sacris Ecclesiae Catholicae Processionibus libri duo (Cologne, 1607). C. Dunlop, Processions: A Dissertation together with Practical Suggestions (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 20; 1932). T. Bailey, The Processions of Sarum and the Western Church (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 21; Toronto, 1971). La Maison-Dieu, no. 43 (1955), special number on processions, with arts. by F. Louvel, OP, P. Doncœur, SJ, I. H. Dalmais, OP, A. G. Martimort, and J. Gelineau, SJ. J. Évenou in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en prière (édition nouvelle), 3 [1984], pp. 259–69; Eng. tr. (1988), pp. 241–50, with bibl. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 12 (1911), pp. 446–8.

Procession (theological) (Gk. ἐκπόρευσις, Lat. processio). In Trinitarian doctrine, the attribute which distinguishes the Holy Spirit from the two Persons of the Father and the Son. This attribute of the Holy Spirit implied in the NT (cf. e.g. Jn. 15: 26) is asserted in the *Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, and is first developed at length by the *Cappadocian Fathers. See also DOUBLE PROCESSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT and FILIOQUE.

Processional. The book containing the text of the litanies, hymns, and prayers formally prescribed for use in processions. In the W. Church, the bulk of it was merely an extract from the '*Rituale', with some supplementary matter derived from the *Missal and the *Pontifical. In the later Middle Ages, 'Processionals' were often adapted to the requirements of local churches and uses, e.g. the widely used 'Sarum Processional'.

Proclus (410 or 412–85), *Neoplatonist philosopher. He was born in Lydia of wealthy parents. As a young man he went to *Athens, where, apart from a brief exile occasioned by his fervent paganism, he spent the rest of his life, at first as a pupil of Syrianus and later as head of the Academy (hence his title 'Diadochus'). His Life, written by one of his pupils, Marinus, portrays him as a pious, ascetic, and intellectual pagan. Although much of his vast literary output is lost, more of his writings survive than of any other late Neoplatonist; he is thus the principal source of our knowledge of late Athenian Neoplatonism. His philosophy is a systematization of the thought of *Plotinus, combined with an appreciation of the effectiveness of the pagan religious cult as a way of establishing contact with the Divine; this last he owed to *Iamblichus and ultimately to the Chaldean Oracles. His main contribution to Neoplatonism, apart from incorporating theurgy, lay in his detailed investigation of the system of causality implicit in Neoplatonic metaphysics; in this he developed the thought of Iamblichus and Syrianus. His influence on medieval and Renaissance thought was considerable, the earliest Christian thinker indebted to him being *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite.

His principal extant works include the Elements of Theology, a concise summary of Neoplatonic metaphysics, his more elaborate Platonic Theology, commentaries on several of *Plato's dialogues, some scientific works, and a number of hymns, which, like those of *Synesius, are in the Doric dialect.

No collected edn. of his works exists; there is a useful (though dated) list in L. J. Rosán, op. cit. below, pp. 36–57. Opera inedita, ed. V. Cousin (2nd edn., Paris, 1864; repr. Hildesheim, 1961). Important edn. of the Elements of Theology, with introd., Eng. tr., and comm., by E. R. Dodds (Oxford, 1933; 2nd edn., 1963). Platonic Theology, ed. A. Portus (Hamburg, 1618); also, with Fr. tr., by H. D. Saffrey, OP, and L. G. Westerink (Collection des Universités de France, 1968 ff.). There are edns. of Proclus' commentaries on the following of Plato's works: Parmenides ed. V. Cousin, Procli . . . Opera Inedita (2nd edn., Paris, 1864; repr., Hildesheim, 1961), cols. 603–1244; Lat. tr. by *William of Moerbeke, in which alone the final section survives, ed. by C. Steel (Ancient and Medieval Philosophy, de Wulf-Mansion Centre, 1st ser. 3–4; Louvain, 1982–5); final section also ed., with Eng. tr., by R. Klibansky and others, Plato Latinus, 3 (London, 1953), pp. 23–81; Eng. tr. by G. R. Morrow and J. M. Dillon (Princeton, NJ, 1987); on Republic, ed. W. Kroll (2 vols., Teub., 1899–1901; repr., 1965); Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière (3 vols., Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1970); on Timaeus, ed. E. Diehl (3 vols., Teub., 1903–6; repr., 1965); Fr. tr. by A. J. Festugière (5 vols., Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1966–8); on Cratylus, ed. G. Pasquali (Teub., 1908); on 1 Alcibiades by L. G. Westerink (Amsterdam, 1954) and, with Fr. tr., by by A. P. Segonds (2 vols., Collection des Universités de France, 1985–6); Eng. tr. and notes by W. O'Neill (The Hague, 1965). Tria Opuscula (de decem dubitationibus, de providentia, de malorum subsistentia), ed. H. Boese (Quellen und Studien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 1; Berlin, 1960); also, with Fr. tr., by D. Isaac (3 vols., Collection des Universités de France, 1977–82). 'On the Hieratic Art', ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Bidez, Catalogue des manuscrits alchimiques grecs, 6 (Union Académique Internationale; Brussels, 1928), pp. 148–51. Eclogae de philosophia chaldaica, ed., with Fr. tr., by É. des Places, SJ, Oracles Chaldaïques (Collection des Universités de France, 1971), pp. 202–12. Hymni, ed. E. Vogt (Klassisch-Philosophische Studien, 18; Wiesbaden, 1957). Marinus' Life of Proclus, ed., with Lat. tr., by J. F. Boissonade (Leipzig, 1814), repr. in V. Cousin, op. cit., cols. 1–66; Eng. tr. in L. J. Rosán, op. cit. below, pp. 13–35. A. Severyns, Recherches sur la Chrestomathie de Proclus (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liége, 78 f., 132, and 170; 1938–63). L. J. Rosán, The Philosophy of Proclus (New York, 1949). W. Beierwaltes, Proklos: Grundzüge seiner Metaphysik (Philosophische Abhandlungen, 24; Frankfurt am Main, 1965). J. Trouillard, L'Un et l'âme selon Proclos (Collection d'études anciennes, 1972); id., La Mystagogie de Proclos (ibid., 1982). J. Pépin and H. D. Saffrey (eds.), Proclus: Lecteur et Interprète des Anciens. Actes du colloque international du CNRS Paris (2–4 octobre 1985) (1987); E. P. Bos and P. A. Meier (eds.), On Proclus and his Influence in Medieval Philosophy (Philosophia Antiqua, 53; Leiden, etc., 1992). A. E. *Taylor, Philosophical Studies (1934), pp. 151–91. R. Beutler in PW 23 (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 186–247, s.v. 'Proklos (4)'.

Proclus, St (d. 446 or 447), Patr. of *Constantinople. On the death of the Patr. Atticus (425), whose secretary he had been, he was an unsuccessful candidate for the patriarchate, but in 426 he was consecrated Abp. of Cyzicus. Unable to take possession of his see through ecclesiastical differences, he remained in Constantinople as a much-applauded preacher, and here delivered in 428 or 429 a famous sermon on the *Theotokos in the presence of *Nestorius, though Proclus did not take an active part in the subsequent controversy. When he became patriarch in 434, his moderation in the cause of orthodoxy gained him much sympathy and his popularity was enhanced by the solemn translation of the body of St *Chrysostom which he effected in 438. Among his writings, which consist for the most part of homilies and epistles, is the so-called 'Tome of St Proclus' (Ep. 2), an exposition of the doctrine of the one Christ in two natures, addressed to the *Armenians, and directed against *Theodore of Mopsuestia (but without naming him). Traditionally the formula 'One of the Trinity was crucified acc. to the flesh', destined to play an important part in the *Theopaschite Controversy (6th cent.), has been ascribed to him (but mistakenly). The introduction of the *Trisagion into the Liturgy has also been attributed to him. Feast day in E., 20 Nov.; in W., 24 Oct.

His writings, first ed. by V. Riccardus (1630), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 65. 651–88. Crit. text of his Sermon on the Theotokos in ACO 1. 1. 1 (1927), pp. 103–7; of his Tomus ad Armenios, ibid. 4. 2 (1914), pp. 65–8, 187–205. E. *Schwartz, Konzilstudien (Schriften der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft in Strassburg, Heft 20; 1914), 2. Über echte und unechte Schriften des Bischofs Proklos von Konstantinopel, pp. 18–53. B. Marx, Procliana: Untersuchungen über den homiletischen Nachlass des Patriarchen Proklos von Konstantinopel (1940) (Marx ascribes, often on precarious grounds, more than 80 of the sermons preserved in the spuria of Chrysostom to Proclus). M. Richard, 'Proclus de Constantinople et le théopaschisme', RHE 38 (1942), pp. 303–31; repr. in id., Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 52. F. J. Leroy, SJ, L'Homilétique de Proclus de Constantinople: Tradition manuscrite, inédits, études connexes (ST 247; 1967). M. Aubineau, 'Bilan d'une enquête sur les homélies de Proclus de Constantinople', Revue des Études grecs, 85 (1972), pp. 572–96. V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 61–74 (nos. 76–93a). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 133–50 (nos. 5800–5915). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 338 f. and 619.

Procopius of Caesarea (mid-6th cent.), Byzantine historian. A native of *Caesarea in Palestine, in 527 he was appointed secretary to Belisarius, whom he accompanied in his campaigns against the Persians, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths. At least from 542 he lived in *Constantinople.

His writings consist of his 'History of the Wars' (i.e. those which he had himself witnessed), his 'De aedificiis' (an account of the buildings of the Emp. *Justinian), and the so-called 'Anecdota' (or 'Secret History'), issued only after his death. The work of a careful and on the whole impartial author, they are of great historical value and stand in marked contrast to most of the poor compositions of his age. The 'De aedificiis', however, suffers from its excessive flattery of Justinian. On the other hand, the 'Anecdota', which were not intended for publication, are a bitter invective against Justinian and *Theodora.

Crit. edn. of his works by J. Haury (Teub., 3 vols., 1905–13; repr., with additions, 4 vols., 1962–4); also ed., with Eng. tr., by H. B. Dewing (Loeb, 7 vols., 1914–40). Other Eng. trs. of his 'Anecdota' by R. Attwater (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1961) and G. A. Williamson (Penguin Classics, 1966). F. Dahn, Prokopius von Cäsarea (1865). J. A. S. Evans, Procopius (New York, 1972); A. [M.] Cameron, Procopius and the Sixth Century (1985). Krumbacher, pp. 230–6. B. Rubin in PW 23. 1 (1957), cols. 273–599, s.v. 'Prokopius von Kaisareia'.

Procopius of Gaza (*c.*475–*c.*538), rhetorician and biblical exegete. He was perhaps the foremost figure of the 'School of Gaza', a group of Christian rhetoricians of the 5th–6th cent. His biblical works consist mainly of extensive extracts from older exegetes (*Philo, *Origen, *Basil, *Theodoret, *Cyril of Alexandria). Of his two Commentaries on the *Octateuch the shorter, which is preserved in Cod. Monac. gr. 358, has been published in toto in a Lat. translation and, in fragments, also in the Gk. He also commented on 1 and 2 Sam., 1 and 2 Kgs., and 1 and 2 Chron.; on Is.; and on Cant. His Epp., of which 166 survive, are in an affected and precious style (which, however, made them popular) and without theological interest, but remain, with the funeral oration of his pupil Choricius, the chief source for his life. Despite the doubts of some scholars, some fragments of a work against the Neoplatonist *Proclus are prob. to be assigned to Procopius of Gaza. He also wrote an account of a sequence of pagan pictures at Gaza.

Works first collected in J. P. Migne, PG 87. 1–2838 (pts. 1–3); new edns. of his Epistolae et Declamationes by A. Garzya and R. J. Loenertz, OP (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 9; 1963); of Catena in Ecclesiasten by S. Leanza (CCSG 4, 1978, pp. 1–50, and suppl., 1983), and of his panegyric of the Emp. Anastasius I, with Fr. tr., by A. Chauvot (Antiquitas, Reihe 1, Band 35; Bonn, 1986). His Descriptio imaginis, ed. P. Friedländer (ST 89; 1939). The chief source for his life, apart from his Epp., is a funeral oration of Choricius of Gaza (Opera, ed. R. Foerster and E. Richtsteig, Teub., 1929, pp. 109–28). L. Eisenhofer, Procopius von Gaza: Eine literarhistorische Studie (1897). L. W. Westerink, 'Proclus, Procopius, Psellus', Mnemosyne, 3rd ser. 10 (1942), pp. 275–80. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 388–91 (nos. 7430–48). Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 86–91, with bibl.; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), p. 516, with bibl. J. van den Gheyn, SJ, in Dict. Bibl. 5 (1912), cols. 686–9, s.v.; W. Aly in PW 23 (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 259–73, s.v. 'Prokopius von Gaza'. See also bibl. to CATENA.

Proctors of the Clergy. In the C of E, the elected representatives of the clergy who, together with the ex officio members, constitute the Lower Houses of the *Convocations of *Canterbury and *York. Voting is carried out by electoral areas, each consisting of a diocese or part of a diocese, or a university or group of universities. The electors are assistant bishops; beneficed, cathedral and licensed clergy (excluding *suffragan bishops, deans, provosts and archdeacons); and, in the case of universities, qualifying clergy. The elections are governed by canon H 2, added to the 1969 canons in 1975. See also CONVOCATIONS OF CANTERBURY AND YORK.

profession, religious. The making of a public *vow promising, either explicitly or implicitly, to follow the three evangelical *counsels of poverty, chastity, and obedience necessary to the embracing of the 'religious life'. Profession follows upon the novitiate or training period. Acc. to RC canon law (CIC (1983), can. 657) there must first be a temporary profession of at least three years. At the end of this period the 'professed' may be allowed to renew his temporary profession for a set time. If he is not, he must either leave the Order or Congregation (technically known as the Religious *Institute), or make perpetual, that is lifelong, profession.

R. Yeo [OSB], The Structure and Content of Monastic Profession: A Juridical Study, with particular regard to the practice of the English Benedictine Congregation since the French Revolution (Studia Anselmiana, 83; Rome, 1982), with extensive bibl.

prohibited degrees. The relationships by blood or marriage which render it unlawful for two persons to marry. Certain relationships, e.g. mother and son, and a man and his wife's mother, prevent marriage in almost every state of society, however primitive. The reasons which underlie these prohibitions are partly biological, but mainly social, e.g. the maintenance of peace and purity in the home. Blood relationships are called '*consanguinity'; relationships by marriage '*affinity'.

In canon law such relationships are measured in degrees (cf. Lat. gradus, 'step'). Those of the 'direct line' are simply the number of steps between the persons related. Thus father to son is one step or the 'first degree', son to grandfather the second, and so on. For computing the 'collateral line', that is the relationship between the descendants of a common ancestor, two systems have been used, the Roman and the Germanic. The Roman system calculates on the basis of the number of generations between the relations, counting up to (but not including) the common ancestor, i.e. in the case of first cousins there are two generations on each side up to the ancestor; these are added together, making four generations or degrees. The Germanic system is based on the unity of the sibling group, the members of which are related in the first degree. This method counts only the generations from the common ancestor, so that, e.g., first cousins are related in the second degree. In both systems the degrees of affinity are calculated in the same way as those of consanguinity, the husband and wife being regarded as identical for this purpose, i.e. a man's wife's first cousin is regarded as related to him in the same degree as his own first cousin.

At first the Church followed the Roman system, and this has always been retained in the E. Orthodox Church. In the W., however, the Germanic system was generally adopted in the Middle Ages, though there were variations and much discussion; in 1983 the RC Church reverted to the Roman system. Though based on the prohibitions in Lev. 18, ecclesiastical legislation has at times extended the prohibitions to the seventh degree (on the Roman reckoning). Important legislative measures were taken at the Fourth Lateran Council (1215) and in the 1917 Codex Iuris Canonici. Acc. to the 1983 Code (can. 1091) marriage is invalid between those related by consanguinity in all degrees of the direct line, whilst in the collateral line it is unlawful up to the fourth degree (first cousins). The impediment of consanguinity cannot be dispensed in any degree of the direct line or in the second degree of the collateral line. Affinity in any degree of the direct line invalidates a marriage (can. 1092). In the C of E the prohibited degrees are those listed in the Table of *Kindred and Affinity in the 1969 *Canons, can. B 31.

F. X. Wahl, The Matrimonial Impediments of Consanguinity and Affinity (Washington, DC, 1934), with bibl. J. Dauvillier and C. De Clercq, Le Mariage en Droit Canonique Oriental (1936), pp. 123–46. J. Goody, The Development of the Family and Marriage in Europe (Cambridge, 1983), esp. pp. 48–59. J. A. Brundage, Law, Sex, and Christian Society in Medieval Europe (Chicago and London, 1987), esp. pp. 140 f., 191–5, 355 f., and 373 f. F. Cimetier in DTC 11 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 1995–2003, s.v. 'Parenté (Empêchements de)'. See also bibl. to AFFINITY, CONSANGUINITY, and MATRIMONY.

prokimenon (Gk. προκείμενον, 'placed before'). Verses from the Psalter, sung at the beginning of any series of readings from Scripture in the Byzantine rite. At *Vespers it is always sung after the *Phos Hilaron, even when no readings follow.

prolocutor. The title of the president and chairman of each of the Lower Houses of the *Convocations of *Canterbury and *York. He also acts as the representative of his House to the corresponding Upper House (of bishops). He is elected to his office by the House to which he belongs.

Promised Land, the. The land of *Canaan, promised to *Abraham and his descendants. Cf. Gen. 12: 7, 13: 15, etc.; and J. *Milton, Paradise Lost: 'Over the Promis'd Land to God so dear' (3. 531).

Promotor Fidei (Lat., 'promoter of the faith'), the foremost theologian of the Congregation for the *Causes of Saints in Rome. He was formerly responsible for critically examining the alleged virtues and miracles of a candidate for *beatification or *canonization, with a view to preventing any rash decision. Hence, he was popularly known as 'the Devil's Advocate' (advocatus diaboli). The first formal mention of the office seems to be in connection with the canonization of St Lawrence Justinian (d. 1456) by *Leo X. By the Apostolic Constitution 'Divinus Perfectionis Magister' (1983; see CANONIZATION), his functions have changed. He now presides over the meetings of the theological consultors who make the final assessment of a case and prepares their report for the session of Cardinals and Bishops who advise the Pope. The Cardinal Prefect of the Congregation for the Causes of Saints may appoint a special Promotor Fidei for a particular case.

Promotor Justitiae (Lat., 'promoter of justice'). The priest responsible for testing critically in the diocese in which he or she died the evidence adduced on behalf of a candidate for *beatification or *canonization in the RC Church. The creation of the office is due to the recent changes in the procedure for canonization under which the Promotor Justitiae discharges tasks formerly assigned to the Promotor Fidei*.

Prone. The name was given in medieval N. Europe, including Britain, to the vernacular office inserted into High Mass after the *Offertory on Sundays and other feast days. Its form was at the discretion of the preacher, but it ordinarily consisted of such items as the '*bidding of the bedes' (q.v.) and expositions of the Lord's Prayer and the Creed, as well as notifications of ensuing feasts and fasts and of banns of marriage and ordination. The name has also been used for sermons, esp. of an expository kind. The word is derived from the Fr. prône, orig. a grille which separated the chancel or place where notices were given out from the rest of the church.

Pronouncement Stories. The name proposed by V. Taylor for those passages in the Gospels which M. *Dibelius terms *Paradigms (q.v.) and R. *Bultmann *Apophthegms.

Propaganda Fide, Congregation of. The *Roman Congregation which is concerned with missionary activity throughout the world and with the administration of territories where there is no properly established hierarchy. It originated in the latter half of the 16th cent. to meet the spiritual needs of the newly discovered heathen populations, as one of the fruits of the general stimulus given to Church organization by the *Counter-Reformation. At first it took the form of a cardinalitial commission 'De propaganda fide', and it was not until 1622 that Gregory XV created the Congregation of Propaganda by the bull 'Inscrutabili Divinae Providentiae'. The Congregation was originally composed of 13 cardinals, 2 prelates, a secretary, and a consultor. *Urban VIII further gave the Congregation a prefect-general and a central missionary training seminary, the 'Collegium Urbanum', founded in 1627. Owing to the extensive range of its work the Congregation makes use of various pontifical organizations; the scope of its jurisdiction is regulated by the Apostolic Constitution 'Pastor Bonus' of 28 June 1988, arts. 85–92, which renamed it 'Congregatio pro Gentium Evangelizatione' (Congregation for the Evangelization of the Nations).

Bullarium Pontificium Sacrae Congregationis de Propaganda Fide (5 vols. bound in 3, Rome, 1839–41; appendix, 2 vols., ibid., no date); Collectanea S. Congregationis de Propaganda Fide, seu Decreta, Instructiones, Rescripta pro Apostolicis Missionibus, Ann. 1622–1906 (2 vols., ibid., 1907). The relevant sections of 'Pastor Bonus' are pr. in AAS 80 (1988), pp. 881–3. R. H. Song, The Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, 420; 1961). Catalogus Editionum quae prodierunt ex Typographia Polyglotta Sacrae Congregationis de Propaganda Fide (Rome, 1890). R. Hoffman in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 840–4, s.v. 'Propagation of the Faith, Congregation for the', with bibl. See also works cited under ROMAN CONGREGATIONS.

Proper. The part of the *Eucharist and *Offices which changes acc. to the festival or ecclesiastical season. It is thus contrasted with the rest of the service, the invariable '*Ordinary (or Order) of the Mass'. The 'Proper of Saints' ('Proprium Sanctorum' or, in the 1970 Missal, 'Proprium de Sanctis') is the Proper for festivals of a fixed date; the 'Proper of Time' ('Proprium Temporum', or, in the 1970 Missal, 'Proprium de Tempore') that for *Sundays, *ferias, and festivals which have no fixed date. Many saints' days share the same Proper with others, and where this is so their Proper is printed once for all in a separate part of the *Missal and *Breviary, under the title '*Common of Saints' ('Commune Sanctorum'). In the BCP the Proper consists of (1) the *Collect, *Epistle, and *Gospel (with the *Easter Anthems for use at *Mattins on Easter Day), which are arranged together in the order of the ecclesiastical year, the Proper of Time coming first, and then that of Saints (there being no Common), and (2) the *Prefaces, which are set out in the body of the Communion Service, as in the Roman Missal. The ASB also provides Proper Introductory and Postcommunion Sentences for Sundays, Festivals, and Holy Days and an OT reading in addition to the Epistle and Gospel.

prophecy. From the earliest times Christians have believed that already before the Incarnation God the Holy Spirit, as affirmed in the *Nicene Creed, 'spoke by the prophets'. Such prophetic inspiration was found esp. in the supernatural knowledge by which holy men were enabled to foresee and foretell, in part, the revelation which was to be given in Christ. It was extended to *Abraham (Jn. 8: 56) and *David (Mk. 12: 35 ff.), but it was pre-eminently the privilege of the prophets. It has also been generally recognized that the prophets were the inspired deliverers of God's message not only about the future, but to their contemporaries, to whom they declared His will, and whom they recalled to His righteousness.

At least since NT times the Jews have applied the term 'Prophets' to a large section of the OT Canon intermediate in authority between the ancient 'Law' and the more recent 'Writings' (*Hagiographa). In this connection it is customary to distinguish (1) the 'Former Prophets', namely Jos., Jgs., 1 and 2 Sam., 1 and 2 Kgs., and (2) the 'Latter Prophets', namely Is., Jer., Ezek. and the 12 (*Minor) Prophets. But the name of prophet could be applied personally in a wider sense, e.g. to *Moses and the future 'prophet like Moses' who was expected to appear (Deut. 18: 15 ff.), and to David (Acts 2: 29 f.). Christ Himself was considered by some as a prophet (Mk. 8: 28; Jn. 4: 19).

The beginnings of Hebrew prophecy can be traced to the early days of the monarchy. 1 Sam. 9 f. already attests the existence of two types of prophets, the Seer (Heb. ro'eh), possessed of clairvoyance, like Samuel who was able to show Saul the whereabouts of his lost asses, and the ecstatic (Heb. nabi'), associated with the local shrine, who under the stimulus of music and dancing fell into a frenzy and uttered words not his own, held to be Yahweh's (1 Sam. 10: 10 f., 19: 23 f.). In this ecstatic condition, the prophet gave the impression of madness (cf. 2 Kgs. 9: 11, Jer. 29: 26).

Gradually, however, the ecstatic features became of less importance and the conscious delivery of a Divine message or 'word' became the dominating feature of prophecy. Side by side with this was the use of symbolic action. Thus Zedekiah foretold the overthrow of the Syrians by equipping himself with horns of iron (1 Kgs. 22: 11); and, in the early period at least, such action was believed not merely to foretell but to influence the future (cf. 2 Kgs. 13: 14–19), being in its beginnings not far from sympathetic magic. Moreover, even among the later prophets words were reinforced by actions. *Isaiah went about naked 'for a sign' (Is. 20), *Jeremiah wore a 'yoke' (or fetters) on his shoulders (Jer. 27), and *Ezekiel performed various symbolic actions (e.g. Ezek. 12). A development can be traced in the message which prophets communicated through words and actions. *Amos proclaimed unrelieved divine judgement on Israel, but later prophets saw hope beyond judgement, and by the post-exilic age the prophetic message had turned to one of blessing and encouragement.

The prophetic Books of the OT Canon fall into four groups: (1) the 8th-cent. prophets, Amos, *Hosea, *Micah, and Isaiah; (2) the immediately pre-exilic prophets (late 7th–early 6th cent.), *Nahum, *Zephaniah, *Habakkuk, and Jeremiah; (3) the exilic prophets, Ezekiel and *Deutero-Isaiah; (4) the post-exilic prophets, *Haggai, *Zechariah, and *Malachi, together with (prob.) *Obadiah, *Joel, and *Jonah, which are less easy to date precisely.

Since it is in the prophets of the OT that most (though not all) of the passages concerning the *Messiah appear, Jews who looked for His coming had an especial interest in the prophets, who, with other inspired writers, had looked for the Messiah 'since the world began' (Lk. 1: 70; cf. Lk. 1: 55, 2 Pet. 1: 21). This interest can be clearly seen in the writings of the *Qumran community as well as in the NT. Christ Himself saw the fulfilment of OT prophecy in His own Ministry, saying, e.g., that 'many prophets and righteous men' had desired to see what the disciples were then seeing (Mt. 13: 17) and declaring that with His Coming the words of Is. 61: 1 were fulfilled (Lk. 4: 21). Similarly, the Evangelists point to the fulfilment of a number of OT prophecies in the events they describe, e.g. Christ's birth from a virgin (Mt. 1: 22; cf. Is. 7: 14) and its occurrence at *Bethlehem (Mt. 2: 6; cf. Mic. 5: 2), the ministry of *John the Baptist (Mk. 1: 2–3; cf. Mal. 3: 1 and Is. 40: 3), the Lord's entry into Jerusalem riding upon an ass (Jn. 12: 12–15; cf. Zech. 9: 9), and the piercing of His side at the Crucifixion (Jn. 19: 36 f.; cf. Zech. 12: 10).

Acc. to Acts, the Apostles began, immediately after *Pentecost, to see the fulfilment of OT passages in Christ's Resurrection and Ascension and the Coming of the Holy Spirit (Acts 2: 14–36, quoting Joel 2: 28–30, Ps. 16: 8–11 and Ps. 110: 1), and the appeal to OT prophecy was a constant feature of early Christian preaching (Acts 8: 26–35). St *Paul in writing to his converts not only reminds them of the universal Christian belief that 'Christ died for our sins acc. to the Scriptures' (1 Cor. 15: 3), but also uses many OT texts in a more individual manner, sometimes drawing on methods of interpretation known also from later rabbinic texts; thus he interprets the Rock which supplied the Israelites with water in the wilderness (Exod. 17: 6) as a type of Christ (1 Cor. 10: 4). The Ep. to the Hebrews is almost a continuous appeal to OT texts (predominantly in the Law and the Pss. rather than the Prophets) in support of teaching about Christ.

In Christian writers from the *Apostolic Fathers onwards the appeal to the OT is continued on the same general lines as in the NT. It is elaborated esp. in the Ep. of *Barnabas, for the author of which all the ceremonial enactments of the OT referred in a hidden manner to the Christian revelation and had been misinterpreted by the Jews. Among the *Apologists it is found esp. in *Justin Martyr, whose 'Dialogue with Trypho, the Jew' is naturally much concerned with rival interpretations of the OT. Throughout the patristic and medieval periods all who sought to expound Christian doctrine (apart from dualist heretics such as *Marcion) assumed that the inspiration of Scripture guaranteed the prophetic foreknowledge of the Christian revelation, even in its details, so that OT texts might validly be used as arguments, e.g., for specific Christological teaching.

Wide application was given to the allegorical interpretation of OT texts, esp. by the *Alexandrian theologians. By the mystical interpretation of Scripture some Latin and medieval writers were able to find an appropriate relevance in one OT text or another to almost any conceivable subject. At the Reformation the traditionally accepted uses of OT texts in a Christian sense continued unchallenged; an example is afforded by the original chapter-summaries and page-headings of the *Authorized Version for such passages as Is. 40–66 and Ps. 110. It was only with the *Enlightenment and the rise of a critical approach to history that doubt was cast on the existence of any real anticipation of NT events in such texts as Is. 7: 14. Hence modern expositors of the OT tend to stress that the prophets were originally and primarily 'forth-tellers' of God's will to their contemporaries rather than 'foretellers' of the future.

Among the more important of the older discussions are J. Davison, Discourses on Prophecy (1824); H. G. A. *Ewald, Die Propheten des Alten Bundes (2 vols., 1840–1; Eng. tr. of 2nd edn., 5 vols., 1875–81); B. *Duhm, Die Theologie der Propheten (1875). In British theology, the modern critical view of the development of Hebrew Prophecy was popularized by W. R. *Smith, The Prophets of Israel and their Place in History to the Close of the Eighth Century B.C. (1882; 2nd edn., with notes by T. K. *Cheyne, 1895). B. Duhm, Israels Propheten (1916). More recent works incl. J. Lindblom, Prophecy in Ancient Israel (Oxford, 1962); P. D. Hanson, The Dawn of Apocalyptic (Philadelphia [1975]); K. Koch, Die Profeten (2 vols., Stuttgart, 1978–80; Eng. tr., 1982–3); R. [J.] Coggins and others (eds.), Israel's Prophetic Tradition: Essays in Honour of Peter R. Ackroyd (Cambridge, 1982); J. Blenkinsopp, A History of Prophecy in Israel from the Settlement in the Land to the Hellenistic Period (1984); J. Barton, Oracles of God: Perceptions of Ancient Prophecy in Israel after the Exile (1986).

On the Christian interpretation of prophecy, C. H. *Dodd, According to the Scriptures (1952); G. F. A. Knight, A Christian Theology of the Old Testament (1959); B. Lindars, SSF, New Testament Apologetic: The Doctrinal Significance of the Old Testament Quotations (1961); B. W. Anderson (ed.), The Old Testament and Christian Faith (New York, 1963; London, 1964); A. T. Hanson, The New Testament Interpretation of Scripture (1980); D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World (Michigan [1983]). See also works cited under ALLEGORY.

prophets (early Christian). While prophecy as a phenomenon is well attested is the early Church (esp. 1 Cor. 12–14), the precise position of the prophets mentioned in the NT is unclear. Sometimes they appear as a distinct order of ministers (1 Cor. 12: 28 and Eph. 4: 11); other references suggest something less definite (e.g. Acts 11: 27), while women as well as men could prophesy (Acts 21: 9). The apocalyptic expectation that prophecy would be restored at the end of time seems to lie in the background. Several early Christian writers assume the authority of prophets (e.g. St *Ignatius and *Hermas), but prophecy seems to have died out, the Didache perhaps witnessing to the period of transition. 'Prophets' once again found prominence in *Montanism, but they were unable to establish their authority against the developed episcopal authority of the Church.

Classic discussion of the position of prophets in the early Church by A. *Harnack, Die Lehre der zwölf Apostel (TU 2, Hefte 1–2; 1884), pp. 119–31. Wider treatments of prophecy include G. Dautzenberg, Urchristliche Prophetie (Beiträge zum Wissenschaften vom alten und neuen Testament, 6. Folge, Heft 4; 1975); D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity and the Ancient Mediterranean World (Michigan [1983]). P. Veilhauer and E. Fascher in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 633–5; J. Schmid in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 798–800, both s.v.

propitiation. The general meaning of the word is the appeasing of the wrath of the Deity by prayer or sacrifice when a sin or offence has been committed against Him. The word occurs three times in the AV, in connection with the death of Christ (Rom. 3: 25, 1 Jn. 2: 2, and 4: 10; to which RV adds Heb. 2: 17). Such a translation accurately represents the meaning in classical Greek of the words used (ἱλαστήριον, ἱλασμός). However, the Hebrew equivalent is never used with God as the object; this fact suggests that the primary biblical meaning is to expiate or remove an obstacle on man's part to his relationship with God. To say that the death of Christ is 'propitiatory' is, then, to say that it is effective in restoring the relationship between God and man, damaged by sin. Acc. to the Council of *Trent (Sess. 22, can. 3), the Sacrifice offered in the Eucharist is propitiatory (propitiatorium). See also ATONEMENT; MERCY SEAT.

proprietary chapel. In the C of E a chapel built by subscription and maintained by private individuals, without constitutional existence or parochial rights. Such chapels were seldom episcopally consecrated, though their ministers were normally granted episcopal licences (revocable absolutely at the bishop's will) which could only be issued with the consent of the incumbent of the parish. They were established esp. in fashionable areas (London, watering-places); were commonly supported by pew rents, which were often high; and were sometimes centres of extreme Evangelicalism or (less frequently) High Church doctrine. Many such chapels existed in the 18th and early 19th cents.; but they are now almost, if not quite, extinct.

R. J. *Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (2nd edn. by W. G. F. Phillimore, 1895), 1, pp. 250–2, 436, and 2, pp. 1459 and 1759; H. W. Cripps, A Practical Treatise on the Law relating to the Church and Clergy (8th edn., by K. M. Macmorran, 1937), pp. 104 f., esp. note m, 209, and 533.

Prose (Lat. prosa). An alternative name, once common in England, for the *Sequence (q.v.). The word has occasionally been applied to other anthems of similar form which have no place in the Liturgy.

proselyte (Gk. προσήλυτος). The word means literally 'stranger' or 'foreign sojourner', and, by an extension, a convert to Judaism. The NT mentions both 'proselytes' and 'God-fearers' (cf., e.g., Acts. 2: 10, 13: 43, 10: 2), the distinction being probably that the former underwent circumcision and were therefore reckoned full members of the Jewish Church, whereas the 'God-fearers' were more loosely attached to the Jewish communities. In a wider sense the word has come to be used of a convert to any faith or sect.

Proskomide (Gk. προσκομιδή). In the E. Church, the preparation of the bread and wine for the Eucharist which takes place before the beginning of the service at the table known as the *prothesis. The priest cuts the bread into pieces with the *lance, and then arranges it on the *discus in a fashion prescribed by the rubrics; then the deacon pours wine and water into the chalice; and the whole is afterwards veiled. At the end of the ceremony the bread and wine are censed and a prayer is said over them. In origin the Proskomide is the second part of the *Offertory, moved back to the beginning of the service. There are considerable variations in terminology among liturgical writers, the Proskomide being sometimes known as the Prothesis.

Prosper of Aquitaine, St (*c.*390–*c.*463), theologian. Prosper Tiro of Aquitania was living at Marseilles at the outbreak of the *Semipelagian controversy (426), probably as a lay monk. In 427/8 he wrote to St *Augustine, whose theology of grace and predestination he warmly accepted, informing him of the opposition which his teaching was encountering among the disciples of *Cassian. About the same time he wrote a letter to a certain Rufinus and the 'Carmen de ingratis', a poem of over 1,000 hexameters, both on the subject of grace. In 431, after St Augustine's death, he went to Rome to secure Pope *Celestine I's support for Augustinian doctrines and between 431 and 434 published a number of works in their defence, one of them directed perhaps against St *Vincent of Lérins and another against Cassian. After the latter's death (*c.*435), he became more conciliatory, as is borne out by his 'Expositio super Psalmos', and (if, as is now widely held, it be Prosper's) the 'Capitula Coelestini', written as an appendix to the Pope's letter to the bishops of Gaul, probably between 435 and 442, from Rome. In his last period, when he was closely associated with *Leo I, he collaborated with the Pope in some of his doctrinal statements and devoted himself to compilations and a 'Chronicle', which until 378 follows *Eusebius and St *Jerome, but is of value for his own time (425–455). It would seem that Prosper's theological opinions developed from the rigid Augustinianism of his earlier controversial writings to a milder view which rejected predestination to damnation and affirmed the will of God to save all men, though believing in fact in the reprobation of a great number. The canons of the Council of *Orange of 529 are partly based on his extracts from St Augustine, and later he exercised a considerable influence on the Carolingian theologians. Feast day, 7 July.

Works ed. J. B. Le Brun des Marettes, OSB, and D. Mangeant, OSB, Paris, 1711; repr. with addendum in J. P. Migne, PL 51 1–868. Crit. text of 'Chronicle' ed. T. *Mommsen in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 9 (1892), pp. 341–499, and of 'Expositio super Psalmos' by P. Callens and of 'Liber Sententiarum' by M. Gastaldo (CCSL 68 A; 1972). The 'De Providentia Dei' attributed to Prosper, ed., with Eng. tr. and comm., by M. Marcovich (Suppls. to VC, 10; Leiden, 1989). Eng. trs. by P. De Letter, SJ, of Prosper's De Vocatione Omnium Gentium (ACW 14; 1952) and of various works in defence of St Augustine (ibid. 32; 1963). M. Cappuyns, OSB, 'Le premier représentant de l'augustinisme médiéval, Prosper d'Aquitaine', RTAM 1 (1929), pp. 309–37; G. de Plinval, 'Prosper d'Aquitaine, interprète de saint Augustin', Recherches Augustiniennes, 1 (1958), pp. 339–55; R. Lorenz, 'Der Augustinismus Prospers von Aquitanien', ZKG 73 (1962), pp. 217–52, with bibl.; R. A. Markus, 'Chronicle and Theology: Prosper of Aquitaine', in C. Holdsworth and T. P. Wiseman (eds.), The Inheritance of Historiography 350–900 (Exeter Studies in History, 12; 1986), pp. 31–43. A. Hamman in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 551–8. H. W. Phillott in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 492–7; R. Helm in PW 23 (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 880–97, s.v. 'Prosper (1)'; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2446–56, s.v.

prosphora (Gk. προσφορά). In the E. Church, the altar bread. It takes the form of round leavened cakes about 3 inches in diameter and 2 inches thick, of which five are required for the service. They are solemnly cut up at the *Proskomide. From the first, which is divided by a cross into four quarters containing respectively the Greek letters IC ('Jesus'), XC ('Christ'), NI, KA (νικᾷ, 'conquers'), the principal particle (the 'seal', or the 'lamb') is cut out. From the second a particle is removed in honour of the BVM, from the third nine particles in honour of St John the Baptist, the Prophets, the Apostles and other Saints, from the fourth particles for the living to be prayed for, and from the fifth particles for the departed commemorated. Further particles are taken from the prosphoras offered by the people with names of living and departed to be prayed for. Only the 'lamb' is consecrated, the other particles are placed in the chalice after the distribution of communion, and the portions left over are distributed later among the congregation as the *antidoron. In the Greek Church today, outside monasteries, one large loaf stamped with five 'seals' is used, instead of five smaller loaves; but the Russian Church retains the older practice of the five loaves.

Protasius, St. See GERVASIUS AND PROTASIUS, STS.

Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America. See EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Protestantism. The original 'Protestatio', from which the term derives, was a statement issued by five reforming princes and 14 cities of the Holy Roman Empire at the Diet of *Speyer in 1529. Divided among themselves and outnumbered by the Catholic powers, it seemed vital to produce a united declaration of faith. Their opponents wished to halt the reforming movement within the various territories of the empire, particularly the introduction of religious 'innovations' and the secularization of land which had belonged to the medieval Church. The signatories believed that to keep silent would touch 'God's honour and salvation and the eternal life of our souls'. The Protestation was, therefore, a stage in the development of a Lutheran system of faith and practice (the terms 'Protestant', for Lutheran, and '*Reformed', for Calvinist, were often contrasted with each other in the 16th cent.). Protestantism, therefore, originally had a much more positive sense than its modern anti-Roman flavour would suggest. This shift in meaning has led to the repudiation of the term by those non-Roman Christians who wish to emphasize their adherence to traditional 'Catholic' beliefs.

*Lutheranism, *Zwinglianism, and *Calvinism would now all be regarded as Protestant and there are, in fact, a large number of denominations, with a considerable variety of beliefs, which are in a general sense Protestant. Whether the C of E is Protestant is disputed. Strong Calvinist tendencies were intermingled with older traditions preserved after the Reformation but the term Protestant is not used in any edition of the BCP. In the 17th cent. it was used, e.g. by *Charles I in affirming his adherence to the Protestant religion, as a term opposed to both Roman Catholicism and Puritanism. After the Restoration its use was generally extended to include Nonconformists. There have always been some Anglicans anxious to insist that the C of E is not Protestant. The *Oxford Movement, which inherited much of the traditional orthodoxy of 18th cent. *High Churchmen, left its mark upon Anglicanism as a whole, not merely in the prevalence of more 'Catholic' forms of worship and practice, but in the existence of a strong movement within the communion which is concerned to preserve the traditional teaching of historical Christianity.

Because Protestantism has become such an inclusive term it is difficult to provide a precise definition in terms of beliefs; but the acceptance of the Bible as the sole source of revealed truth, the doctrine of *justification by faith alone, and the universal priesthood of all believers are characteristic. This last principle has led Protestants to reject any kind of two-tier spirituality (clerical/monastic and lay) and a lay spirituality based upon Bible-reading and a high standard of personal morality has been the norm. How the basic principles are worked out in terms of worship and devotion have varied considerably. Some have retained a liturgical form of worship while others (particularly the *Quakers) abandoned any formal structure. Lutherans and *Methodists have been characterized by the singing of hymns (and have written some great hymns), while Calvinists were, until quite late in the 19th cent., vigorously opposed to the singing of anything other than Psalms or metrical versions of them. In general Protestant worship has been marked by the participation of the whole congregation, by the public reading of the Bible in the vernacular, and by an emphasis on preaching. Celebration of the Eucharist has been infrequent in many Protestant churches, probably because the reformers were unwilling to encourage non-communicating attendance and the medieval habit of infrequent communion was impossible to break. On the other hand, in the 20th cent., the influence of the *Liturgical Movement has led to more frequent celebration of the Eucharist and to a renewal of liturgical forms of worship. One of the effects of both the emphasis on Bible-reading in personal devotional life and the importance of preaching in worship, has been the development of the principle of private judgement in interpreting the Bible which, in turn, has often encouraged an intense individualism. Charismatic, *Pentecostal Christianity has been an important element in modern Protestantism.

In the 18th cent. the influence of the *Enlightenment and a new sense of history (and particularly of the thought of G. E. *Lessing and I. *Kant) began to dissolve some of the earlier Protestant certainties, raising questions about the literal understanding of Scripture, emphasizing reason above revealed religion, and stressing the importance of an interior and subjective religion of the spirit. In the 19th cent. academic Protestantism was dominated by F. D. E. *Schleiermacher who contrived a systematic presentation of Christianity based upon feeling of absolute dependence (God-consciousness). Although Schleiermacher and G. W. F. *Hegel were each sharply opposed to the other's ideas, later theologians tended to combine Schleiermacher's subjectivism and Hegel's philosophical idealism to produce an unexciting, supposedly entirely rational religion which tended to be supportive of both State and society. This was, in turn, vigorously criticized by S. A. *Kierkegaard in *Denmark, though his ideas were not widely felt in Protestant theology until the beginning of the 20th cent. From 1870 to *c.*1920 the tone of Liberal Protestantism was set by the thought of A. *Ritschl, who reacted against Schleiermacher's emphasis on feeling, revived Kant's moralism and metaphysical scepticism, and strongly encouraged historical research. Among his followers was A. *Harnack, probably the most influential Protestant theologian at the turn of the century, whose influence was not confined to his religious ideas (that the earliest, 'simplest' Christianity preached the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of humanity) and whose scholarly historical labours on early Christianity called in question many of the confident assumptions then made about the development of orthodox doctrine. Some scholars, like E. *Troeltsch, came to believe that the particularity of Christianity posed fundamental problems about its claim to be, alone amongst the religions of the world, the final and absolute truth. Others came to feel that the whole post-Enlightenment assumption that religious truth, like other truth, could be reached by the enquiring, questioning processes of human reason, was unsound. If God was to be known at all, it must be because He chose to reveal Himself.

The so-called theology of crisis, of which K. *Barth's Römerbrief (1919) was the beginning, was a marked reaction against the Liberal Protestantism of the 19th cent. Barth's own development led him to attempt a comprehensive restatement of classical dogmatic Protestantism founded upon his conviction that a belief in the Trinity necessarily followed from an acceptance of the premise that God reveals Himself. Others, notably R. *Bultmann, combined Reformation theology with the historical scepticism of the '*Religionsgeschichtliche Schule' and promoted Old and New Testament theologies more critical than the '*Biblical Theology' inspired by Barth. In Germany this hermeneutical interest was eclipsed by a revived concern with politics and society, while in America various secular theologies became briefly fashionable in the 1960s, including the '*Death of God' movement. After the *Holocaust in Nazi Germany Christian thinkers have been forced to face uncomfortable questions about incipient anti-Semitism within traditional teaching and about the action of a loving God in a world in which there is such cruelty and suffering. Among the most prominent Protestant theologians of the late 20th cent. are W. *Pannenberg, E. Jüngel (b. 1934), and J. *Moltmann (who has popularized an ecumenical and 'ecological' theology and is sensitive to the demand for *Feminist Theology).

In America Protestantism developed in a somewhat different way from that of Europe. It grew out of the 17th-cent. *Puritanism of New England, the 18th-cent. *Great Awakening, and the *revivalism which inspired the Second Great Awakening in the early 19th cent. These elements fashioned a peculiar mixture of Calvinism and *Arminianism. In this form Protestantism has exerted a considerable impact on American culture. Thus Protestants were strongly motivated to reform society; this aspect was demonstrated in the anti-*slavery, *temperance, *Social Gospel, and Civil Rights movements. They concentrated just as intently on the moral and psychological improvement of individuals. American Protestantism also advanced the notion of rugged pioneer individualism and laissez-faire capitalism, promoted the 19th-cent. belief in American 'manifest destiny' to subdue and civilize the N. American continent, and in the later 20th cent. was active in championing human rights abroad and individual rights at home. American Protestantism's religious tolerance has bequeathed a proliferation of denominations, fostering a reductionist approach to the W. Church's historic liturgy and body of doctrine. Not all Protestants were in accord with these developments. Over against the prevailing Reformed religious ethos, some immigrant groups from Europe, e.g. certain Lutherans, have struggled to employ traditional forms of worship, piety, and theology, which were long held suspect by the Protestant mainstream as too Catholic and European.

The writings of many of the early leaders are pr. in the Corpus Reformatorum, ed. C. G. Bretschneider, H. E. Bindseil, and others (Halle, etc., 1834 ff.). Collection of the Protestant confessions tr. into Eng. in P. *Schaff, The History of the Creeds, 3 (1878), with discussion in vol. 1 (1878), pp. 203–930. R. W. *Dale, Protestantism: Its Ultimate Principle (1874). O. Ritschl, Dogmengeschichte des Protestantismus: Grundlagen und Grundzüge der theologischen Gedanken- und Lehrbildung in den protestantischen Kirchen (4 vols., 1908–27). E. Troeltsch, Die Bedeutung des Protestantismus für die Entstehung der modernen Welt (1906; 2nd edn., Beiheft 2 der Historische Zeitschrift, 1924; Eng. tr., Protestantism and Progress, 1912); id., Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1912), pp. 427–986; Eng. tr., vol. 2 (1931). K. *Heim, Das Wesen des evangelischen Christentums (1925; Eng. tr., 1935). R. H. Tawney, Religion and the Rise of Capitalism: A Historical Study (Holland Memorial Lectures for 1922; 1926). K. Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert: Ihre Vorgeschichte und ihre Geschichte (Zurich, 1947; Eng. tr., 1972). P. *Tillich, The Protestant Era (Chicago, Ill., 1948; London, 1951). E. Hirsch, Geschichte der neuern evangelischen Theologie (5 vols., Gütersloh, 1949–54). J. Dillenberger and C. Welch, Protestant Christianity interpreted through its Development (New York, 1954). C. W. Kegley, Protestantism in Transition (New York, 1965). E. G. Léonard, Histoire générale du protestantisme (3 vols., 1961–4; 2nd edn., 1980 ff.; Eng. tr., 1965 ff.). M. E. Marty, Protestantism [1972]. C. Welch, Protestant Thought in the Nineteenth Century (2 vols., New Haven, Conn., and London, 1972-[85]). W. R. Ward, The Protestant Evangelical Awakening (Cambridge, 1992). F. *Kattenbusch in PRE (3rd edn.), 16 (1905), pp. 135–82; E. Wolf and others in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 648–66, both s.v. 'Protestantismus'.

Protevangelium. A modern title of the apocryphal Infancy Narrative, also known as the Book of *James (q.v.). It was so described by G. Postel (d. 1581), whose Lat. of it was published by T. *Bibliander as Protoevangelion Jacobi, fratris Domini, de natalibus Jesu Christi, et Virginis Mariae; cum Evangelio vitaque S. Marci Evangelistae (Basle, 1552).

I. Backus, 'Guillaume Postel, Théodore Bibliander et le "Protévangile de Jacques" ', Apocrypha, 6 (1995), pp. 7–65.

prothesis (Gk. πρόθεσις). In the E. Church the word is used (1) for the table on which the solemn preparation (*Proskomide) of the Eucharistic gifts takes place; (2) for the chamber to the left of the apse of the church, on the opposite side to the *diaconicon, in which the table just mentioned stands; and (3) for the Proskomide (q.v.) itself.

Proto-Luke. The name given by B. H. *Streeter to an early draft which he supposed St *Luke had composed from '*Q' and materials not found elsewhere ('L') before adding an infancy narrative and material drawn from Mk. Despite some initial following in England, this theory is now generally abandoned.

B. H. Streeter, 'Fresh Light on the Synoptic Problem', Hibbert Journal, 20 (1921–2), pp. 103–12; id., The Four Gospels (1924), ch. 8.

Protomartyr (i.e. First Martyr). A title commonly given to St *Stephen (Acts 7: 60), and also occasionally to the first martyrs of different countries, e.g. to St *Alban, the 'Protomartyr of England'.

protonotary apostolic. A member of the college of notaries attached to the Papal court. The office, which dates back to very early times, has undergone frequent changes. Until recently there were four grades, the highest being limited to seven members. In 1968, by the motu proprio 'Pontificalis Domus', the grades were reduced to two, de numero and supra numerum. The latter is purely honorary.

Proverbs, Book of. A poetical Book of the OT, part of the '*Hagiographa', and usually placed second after the *Psalms. The Book is divided into eight clearly marked sections: (1) chs. 1–9, headed 'The Proverbs of Solomon', comprising a series of counsels given by Divine Wisdom, and ending in a description of two feasts, of wisdom which leads to understanding (9: 1–6), and of folly which leads to '*Sheol' (9: 13–16); (2) 10: 1–22: 16, also headed 'The Proverbs of Solomon', consisting of simple unconnected distichs enunciating particular rules of conduct; (3) 22: 17–24: 22, entitled 'The Words of the Wise', consisting of small groups of practical counsels, more developed than the preceding ones; (4) 24: 23–34, 'The Sayings of the Wise', containing maxims of behaviour to one's neighbour; (5) chs. 25–9, 'Proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out', also chiefly distichs but more popular in style than the two former Solomonic sections; (6) ch. 30, 'The Words of Agar'; (7) 31: 1–9, 'The Words of King Lemuel'; and (8) 31: 10–31, an acrostic poem in praise of the virtuous woman.

As it stands, the Book represents a compilation of various collections of proverbs, stemming from widely different periods and places, while the separate collections contain individual sayings of even more diverse origin. Section (3), for example, appears to be a variant version of the Egyptian Teaching of Amen-em-ope (which dates from *c.*1000 BC), though the precise relationship between the two is difficult to determine. It is possible that one or other of the sayings in the Book, or even of the small collections presupposed in the larger collections, may go back to *Solomon, but the tradition that he was the compiler of the Book is prob. best explained by the fact that he was known himself to have uttered proverbs and to have made his court a centre of Eastern wisdom (1 Kgs. 4: 29–34; 10: 23–4).

In the NT Proverbs is quoted as Scripture in Rom. 3: 15 and Jas. 4: 6. It was also a favourite source of quotations among the Fathers, and the passage in ch. 8, in which *Wisdom seems to be *hypostasized, was one of the key texts in the *Arian controversy. The Book as a whole, however, was little commented on either in antiquity or in the Middle Ages, but it was the subject of commentaries by P. *Melanchthon (1526), Card. T. *Cajetan (1542), and J.-B. *Bossuet (1693). Passages from the Book (esp. from the poem about the virtuous woman, 31: 10–31) are regularly used in the Roman liturgy. It is read daily at Vespers in Lent in the Byzantine rite.

Comm. by W. O. E. Oesterley (West. Comm., 1929), B. Gemser (HAT, Reihe 1, Abt. 16; 1937; 2nd edn., 1963), A. Barucq, SDB (Sources bibliques, 1964), R. B. Y. Scott (Anchor Bible, on Prov. and Eccles., 1965, pp. 3–187), W. McKane (London, 1970), R. N. Whybray (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), and O. Plöger (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 17; Neukirchen, 1984). G. Boström, Proverbiastudien: Die Weisheit und das Fremde Weib in Spr. 1–9 (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, NF, Avd. 1, Bd. 30, Nr. 3; 1935); R. N. Whybray, Wisdom in Proverbs: The Concept of Wisdom in Proverbs 1–9 (Studies in Biblical Theology, 45; 1965); C. Kayatz, Studien zu Proverbien 1–9 (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 22; 1966). Soggin, pp. 445–8, with bibl. See also works cited s.v. WISDOM.

Providentissimus Deus (1893). The encyclical on the study of the Holy Scriptures issued by Pope *Leo XIII on 18 Nov. 1893. Its purpose was to give official guidance, esp. to the clergy, in the new situation in biblical studies brought about by recent discoveries in archaeology and literary criticism. While stressing the importance of the study of the new evidence, it condemned the use made of it in some quarters (with a clear ref. to such scholars as A. F. *Loisy and M. *d'Hulst, though they were not mentioned by name). It expressly reaffirmed the pronouncements of the *Tridentine and First *Vatican Councils on biblical inspiration and on the scriptural text and asserted that the whole of Scripture was written 'at the dictation of the Holy Spirit' (Spiritu Sancto dictante). Both conservatives and liberals appealed to the document; but in the next decade, owing to the spread of *Modernism (q.v.), the encyclical was increasingly interpreted in official quarters in a conservative sense. See also BIBLICAL COMMISSION.

Text pr. in ASS 26 (1893–4), pp. 269–92. Extracts in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 884–91 (nos. 3280–94). A. M. Ambrozic in NCE 11 (1967), pp. 922 f., s.v.

province. A group of *dioceses, territorially contiguous, forming an ecclesiastical unit, so called because such groups were originally coincident with the provinces of the Roman Empire. See also ARCHBISHOP; METROPOLITAN; PRIMATE.

provincial. An official of a religious order subject to the superior-general. He exercises authority over all houses of the order within a given area, though a house may sometimes be geographically in one province, but subject to the provincial of another. The office of provincial, unknown to the old monastic orders, came into being with the more centralized *Mendicant orders, and from them was taken over by the majority of modern orders and congregations. The provincial is normally either elected by the provincial chapter, subject to the approval of the superior-general, or is appointed by the superior-general. He holds office for a term of years, usually three to six, never for life. His chief duty is to make regular visitations of the houses of his jurisdiction and to supervise the life of the religious and the administration of their property.

Provisors, Statutes of. Four laws passed in England in the 14th cent. to check the practice of Papal 'provision', or nomination to vacant benefices over the head of the ordinary patron.

The first, the Provisors Act 1351, provided that 'the King and other lords shall present unto Benefices of their own, and not the Bishop of Rome'. The second, passed in 1353, imposed the penalties of '*Praemunire for suing in a foreign realm, or impeaching of Judgment given [sc. in the English courts]'. The third, passed in 1365, confirmed the law of 1351. The fourth, passed in 1389, enacted that benefices accepted contrary to the earlier Statutes of Provisors should be forfeited, and that proceedings should be taken against anyone attempting to enforce a provision by summons or excommunication, and against any prelate enforcing such a provision.

Despite these Statutes, the practice of provision continued down to the *Reformation, and was revived during the reign of *Mary.

See also PRAEMUNIRE.

Text, with Eng. tr., in A. J. Stephens, The Statutes Relating to the Ecclesiastical and Eleemosynary Institutions of England, Wales, Ireland, India, and the Colonies (1845), pp. 58–66, 67–70, and 84–7. Eng. tr. of the last, reciting in full the Statute of 1351, also in Gee and Hardy, pp. 112–21 (no. 39), mainly repr. in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 233–9. For general background see G. Barraclough, Papal Provisions (1935). F. Cheyette, 'Kings, Courts, Cures, and Sinecures: The Statute of Provisors and the Common Law', Traditio, 19 (1963), pp. 295–349, with further refs. G. Crosse in DECH, pp. 476 f.

provost (Lat. praepositus, Ger. Probst). In early Christian usage the official next in dignity to the abbot of a monastery, but now esp. the head of an ecclesiastical chapter. In England the title is used in the newer dioceses (e.g. Bradford, Derby, Portsmouth) of the head of the cathedral chapter where the cathedral is also a parish church and the provost is thus also an incumbent with cure of souls. The title is used in a non-ecclesiastical sense for the heads of certain colleges, e.g. of Oriel, Queen's, and Worcester Colleges at Oxford, King's College at Cambridge, and Eton College.

Prudentius, the common title of Aurelius Prudentius Clemens (348–*c.*410), Latin poet and hymn-writer. A Spaniard by birth, he practised at the bar and had a successful career in civil administration. The retirement of his later life was occupied in devout exercises and Christian writings. His didactic poems, 'Apotheosis' (on the theology of the Incarnation), 'Hamartigenia' (against *Marcion), and 'Contra Symmachum' (on the occasion of a temporary recrudescence of paganism), exhibit his distinction in abstract thought as well as in the imitation of classical models. The 'Psychomachia', an allegorical description of the struggle of the Christian soul and of the Christian Church, exercised a profound influence on later writers. These poems are written mainly in hexameters. His lyrical poems or 'hymns', rarely less than 100 lines long, are likewise composed in classical metres; extracts from them are found in most W. breviaries. One collection, the Cathemerinon (καθημερινῶν), consists of hymns designed for daily use; another, the Peristephanon (περὶ στεφάνων), sings the praises of a number of Spanish and Italian martyrs.

Of the older edns., the best is that of F. Arévalo (2 vols., Rome, 1788–9), with extended comm.; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 59 and 60. Crit. edns. by J. Bergman (CSEL 61; 1926) and M. P. Cunningham (CCSL 126; 1966). Text with Fr. tr., also ed. M. Lavarenne in 'Collection des Universités de France' (4 vols., 1943–51); text with Eng. tr. by H. J. Thomson (2 vols., Loeb, 1949–53). Further Eng. tr. by M. C. Eagan, CCVI (Fathers of the Church, 43 and 52; 1962–5). R. J. Deferrari and J. Marshall Campbell, A Concordance of Prudentius (Cambridge, Mass., 1932). A. S. Walpole, Early Latin Hymns (1922), pp. 115–48. A. Puech, Prudence (1888); M. Lavarenne, Étude sur la langue du poète Prudence (1933), with bibl. I. Lana, Due capitoli prudenziani: La biografia, la cronologia delle opere, la poetica (Verba Seniorum, NS 2; 1962). L. Padovese, La cristologia di Aurelio Clemente Prudenzio (Analecta Gregoriana, 219; Rome, 1980). J. Fontaine, Naissance de la poésie dans l'Occident chrétien (Paris, 1981), pp. 143–60, 177–227, with bibl., pp. 297–301. A.-M. Palmer, Prudentius on the Martyrs (Oxford, 1989). A. di Berardino in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 281–96. A. Kurfess in PW 23 (pt. 1; 1957), cols. 1039–71, s.v. 'Prudentius (2)'; C. Codoñer in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2484–91, s.v. 'Prudence (1)'.

Prudentius, Galindo (d. 861), Bp. of Troyes. He was a native of Spain, became a chaplain at the court of *Louis the Pious, and, *c.*843, Bp. of Troyes. He played an important part in the controversy on *predestination between *Hincmar of Reims and the monk, *Gottschalk, defending the *Augustinianism of the latter, and denying the general saving will of God. In his 'Epistola ad Hincmarum' he taught the 'Augustinian' doctrine of the double predestination and, in 852, wrote a treatise 'De Praedestinatione contra Joannem Scotum', i.e. against John Scottus *Erigena, whom Hincmar had called to his aid. Acc. to Hincmar, he signed the four anti-Augustinian propositions of the Synod of *Quiercy (853). In 856, however, he wrote his 'Epistola Tractoria', addressed to Abp. Venilo of Sens, in which he opposed to the decisions of Quiercy four counter-propositions, teaching Augustinian doctrine of the strictest type. Prudentius also wrote a continuation of the 'Annales Bertiniani' for the years 835–61, valuable for the history of the Frankish Empire.

His writings on the predestination controversy were first pub. by G. Mauguin at Paris in 1650. Crit. edns. of his continuation of the 'Annales Bertiniani' by G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 1 (1826), pp. 429–54, and by F. Grat, J. Vielliard, and S. Clémencet, Annales de Saint-Bertin (Société de l'histoire de France, 1964), pp. 17–84. Collected edn. in J. P. Migne, PL 115. 965–1458. J. Girgensohn, Prudentius und die bertinianischen Annalen (Riga, 1875). Manitius, 1, esp. pp. 344–8. H. Peltier in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1079–84, s.v. 'Prudence de Troyes'. See also works cited s.v. HINCMAR, esp. those of J. Devisse.

Prymer. See PRIMER.

Prynne, William (*c.*1602–69), *Puritan controversialist. Educated at Bath Grammar School and Oriel College, Oxford, he was admitted at Lincoln's Inn in 1621 and later became a barrister. As a strong and unbending Puritan, he was soon in conflict with the *High Church party. In 1626 he published his first book, The Perpetuity of a Regenerate Man's Estate. A violent attack on the stage in Histriomastix ('1633' [1632]), thought to contain veiled attacks on both *Charles I and *Henrietta Maria, led to his sentence by the Star Chamber on 17 February 1634 to imprisonment for life, a fine of £5,000, expulsion from Lincoln's Inn, the loss of his university degree, and the pillory, where he was to lose both his ears. The whole sentence, except the permanence of the imprisonment and the fine, was carried out. His attacks on the 'Declaration of *Sports' led in 1637 to a fresh sentence by the Star Chamber and he was imprisoned first at Caernarvon and then in Mont Orgueil Castle in Jersey; but the unpopularity of ship-money and the metropolitical visitation had changed public opinion and Prynne now met with wide sympathy. When the Long Parliament met in 1640 he was liberated and defended the right of taking up arms against the King, notably in his The Sovereign Power of Parliaments and Kingdoms (1643). He also carried on a literary warfare with W. *Laud. On the other hand, his ideal of the supremacy of State over Church put him out of sympathy with the *Independents, whom he attacked in Twelve Considerable Serious Questions touching Church Government (1644); and he hated the notion of toleration. In 1648 he issued The Levellers Levelled, a defence of the House of Lords. Eventually on 7 Nov. 1648 he obtained a seat (Newport, Cornwall) in the Commons and unexpectedly argued for conciliation with the King and opposed his execution. In consequence he was included in 'Pride's Purge' (6 Dec.) and imprisoned. On 1 Jan. 1649 he published A Brief Memento to the Present Unparliamentary Junto. Later in the year he attacked the new tax imposed by the Commonwealth in A Legal Vindication of the Liberties of England and embarked on a large-scale work against the new Parliament; and in 1650 he was again imprisoned, without a trial. After his release (1653) he ceased from further attacks on O. *Cromwell's régime and wrote against the Papists and *Quakers. To his annoyance he was excluded from the Rump Parliament (1659) and fearlessly criticized it in a long series of controversial writings. He eventually resumed his seat in Parliament on 21 February 1660 and three days later brought in the bill for the dissolution preparatory to *Charles II's restoration. Shortly after his return, Charles appointed him Keeper of the Tower Records. His strong *Presbyterianism, however, soon brought him into conflict with the reviving *Anglicanism, which he attacked in a long series of publications, among them A Short, Sober, Pacific Examination of Exuberances in the Common Prayer (1661) and A Moderate, Seasonable Apology for Tender Consciences touching Not Bowing at the Name of Jesus (1662). But he continued to take a prominent part in Parliamentary affairs until his death. He also wrote extensively in his last years, defending on historical grounds the subjection of the clergy to the Crown.

S. R. Gardiner (ed.), Documents Relating to the Proceedings against William Prynne in 1634 and 1637 (Camden Society, NS 18; 1877), with the beginning of a Life by J. Bruce (d. 1869) [up to 1624], pp. i–xxxv, and list of Prynne's works by Bruce, pp. 101–18. Modern studies by E. W. Kirby (Cambridge, Mass., 1931), with list of Prynne's works, pp. 194–207, and other bibl., pp. 207–19; and W. M. Lamont (London, 1963), also with bibl. M. W.

Helms and I. Cassidy in B. H. Henning (ed.), The History of Parliament: The House of Commons 1660–1690, 3 (1983), pp. 295–8; R. Spalding, Contemporaries of Bulstrode Whitelocke 1605–1675 (British Academy Records of Social and Economic History, NS 14; Oxford [1990]), pp. 276–8. C. H. Firth in DNB 46 (1896), pp. 432–7.

Psalms, Book of (Gk. ψαλμοί, 'songs, accompanied by string music'), in the Hebrew Bible the first of the '*Hagiographa'. The Book contains 150 Psalms, variously enumerated. By combining Pss. 9 and 10 of the Hebrew *Massoretic text (followed by the BCP version, AV, and other non-Catholic English Bibles), the Gk. and Lat. (Vulg.) versions, up to Psalm 114, remain one number behind the Hebrew counting (e.g. Ps. 90 AV is Ps. 89 Vulg.); Pss. 114 and 115 (Heb.) are again conflated in Gk. and Lat., but as the following Ps. 116 is divided in two, the Gk. and Lat. numeration is again one behind that of the Heb. up to Ps. 147, which is divided in two in Gk. and Lat. Hence only the first eight and the last three Psalms agree in both enumerations.

The Psalms are traditionally divided into five Books, probably after the model of the Books of the *Pentateuch, namely 1–41, 42–72, 73–89, 90–106, 107–50, each except the last ending with a doxology. There are clear indications of earlier groupings which point back to independently existing collections, e.g. the concluding notice after 72 ('The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended'). Similarly Pss. 3–41 are all (except 10, a continuation of 9, and 33) headed 'Of David'; 42–9 (except 43, a continuation of 42) 'Of the Sons of Korah'; and 73–83 (also 50) 'Of Asaph'. Evidence from the *Dead Sea Scrolls shows that the order of the Psalms was not firmly fixed until the Christian era.

The rubrics in the Massoretic text and in the Septuagint make it clear that in its present form the Psalter is essentially a liturgical book; it has often been described as the 'hymn-book of the Second *Temple' (a phrase coined by J. *Wellhausen). Being entirely composed of poems, the Book provides many excellent examples of the Hebrew device of *parallelism. Many attempts have been made to discover a definite metre in the Psalms, but with little success. Poetical conceits, such as refrains and acrostics, are frequent. Of 'Alphabetical Psalms', Ps. 119 is the most elaborate; it has 22 sections, one for each letter of the alphabet, and each of the eight lines in one of these sections begins with that letter.

The popular belief that *David was the author of the whole Psalter can no longer be sustained. It was held by many of the Latin Fathers, e.g. St *Ambrose and St *Augustine, and not seriously questioned during the Middle Ages or by the Reformers, except J. *Calvin; but it had been strongly opposed by St *Jerome. Most modern scholars believe that the Psalms come from a variety of authors and are of widely differing dates. The 20th cent. has, however, seen a reaction against the view, prevalent in the later 19th cent., that few, if any, of the Psalms are pre-exilic, and no serious scholar today would accept the thesis of B. *Duhm that the bulk of the Psalter belongs to the *Maccabean period. Many of the Psalms prob. come from the early years of the Monarchy and in their original form they may have been used in the worship of the First Temple. Uncertainty also prevails as to the date at which the various collections were made, but they are probably all post-exilic.

Traditionally the Psalms were held to be religious lyrics covering the whole range of the relations between God and man. The eternal, immutable, and omnipotent God is the Creator of the universe which He upholds and governs by His Divine Providence. Himself all-holy, He demands from His creatures holiness and penitence (see SEVEN PENITENTIAL PSALMS), but His supreme justice is tempered by His mercy. The Psalmists' zeal for the right often finds expression in a passionate desire to see God's vengeance on the wicked (see IMPRECATORY PSALMS). The conception of individual life after death is mainly confined to the shadowy realm of *Sheol, though a brighter hope at times emerges (Pss. 16: 9–11; 49: 15; 73: 23 f.). The nation's hope for the future is centred on a scion of the Davidic line, described as the great Priest-King (Ps. 110) and God's son (Ps. 2), who will cast down his enemies (Ps. 89) and unite the whole world in his worship (Ps. 22).

During the past 100 years this traditional exegesis has been challenged at several points. R. Smend and others maintained that the 'I' of the Psalms commonly refers not to an individual but to Israel as a nation, while for S. *Mowinckel the evil men about whom the Psalmists complain were frequently sorcerers and many of the Psalms themselves a kind of counter-charm. Such attempts to locate the Psalms in the corporate life of the nation rather than in the private spirituality of the individual have been influenced by comparative evidence from other ancient Near Eastern cultures, and by the methods of *Form Criticism pioneered by H. *Gunkel. Mowinckel's attention to both led him to argue that the so-called 'Accession Psalms', in which Yahweh is described as a king, find their origin in an otherwise unknown feast of the Enthronement of Yahweh, held to have been celebrated in Israel as a 'New Year Festival'; the grounds for the existence of such a festival are based on supposed parallels in Babylonian literature. Mowinckel's thesis has been severely criticized from many points of view, but continues to dominate scholarly discussion of the Psalms.

In the Christian Church the Psalter has been used both in public worship and private prayer from very early times. The Gospels record that Christ applied to Himself the metaphor of the 'stone which the builders rejected' (118: 22) and that on the Cross He voiced both His desolation and His supreme act of surrender in the words of Pss. 22: 1 and 31: 5 [BCP 31: 6]. Both St *Paul and the author of Heb. constantly see the Psalmists' aspirations fulfilled in Christ.

The patristic tradition follows the same lines as the NT. Jerome, Ambrose, and many others recommend the regular use of the Psalms, and Augustine, in his long commentary, finds Christ or His Church prefigured in almost every Psalm. As a book of devotion it has retained its position through the centuries. In the Divine Office of the RC Church, until the recent reordering of the Divine *Office, the whole Psalter was recited every week; in the C of E it has traditionally been said each month; while in the E. Church it is recited every week (twice a week in Lent). Both Continental Protestant and English Nonconformist piety have been nourished on it. The Psalms were an integral part of the spiritual life of men as widely apart as *Benedictines and *Puritans, M. *Luther and St *Francis Xavier, Charles *Wesley and J. H. *Newman. See also PSALTER.

Comms. by B. Duhm (KHAT 14, 1899; 2nd edn., 1922); H. Gunkel (HKAT 2. Abt., Bd. 2, 4th edn., 1925–6); A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 14–15; 5th edn., 1959; Eng. tr., 1962); H. J. Kraus (2 vols., Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 15; Neukirchen, 1960; 5th edn., 1978; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1988–9); M. Dahood, SJ (Anchor Bible, 3 vols., 1966–70); A. A. Anderson (New Cent. Bib., 2 vols. [1972]); J. W. Rogerson and J. W. McKay (Camb. Bib., NEB, 2 vols., 1977); and, on Pss. 1–50, P. C. Craigie (Word Biblical Comm. 19; Waco, Tex. [1983]), on Pss. 50–100 by M. E. Tate (ibid., 20; Dallas [1990]), and on Pss. 101–50, L. C. Allen (ibid. 21; Waco [1983]).

J. A. Sanders, The Psalms Scroll of Qumrân Cave 11 (11QPs^a) (Discoveries in the Judaean Desert, 4; Oxford, 1965), S. Mowinckel, Psalmenstudien (6 parts, Kristiania, 1921–4); id., Offersang og Sangoffer (1951; rev. Eng. tr., 2 vols., Oxford, 1962); A. R. Johnson, Sacral Kingship in Ancient Israel (Cardiff, 1955); C. Westermann, Die Loben Gottes in den Psalmen (Göttingen, 1961; Eng. tr., 1965), H.-J. Kraus, Gottesdienst in Israel (2nd edn., Munich, 1962; Eng. tr., Worship in Israel, Oxford, 1966), passim; J. H. Eaton, Kingship and the Psalms (1976; 2nd edn., Sheffield, 1986); id., 'The Psalms and Israelite Worship', in G. W. Anderson (ed.), Tradition and Interpretation (Oxford, 1979), pp. 238–73; A. Aejmelaeus, The Traditional Prayer in the Psalms (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 167; 1986, pp. 1–119). S. E. Gillingham, The Poems and Psalms of the Hebrew Bible (Oxford Bible Series, 1994), esp. pp. 173–275. J. Day, Psalms (Old Testament Guides; Sheffield [1990]).

Psalms, imprecatory. See IMPRECATORY PSALMS.

Psalms, metrical. See METRICAL PSALTERS.

Psalms of Solomon. See SOLOMON, PSALMS OF.

Psalter. The term denotes: (1) the biblical Book of *Psalms as used, in appropriate translations, in the worship of the Church, and (2) the actual book containing the Psalms for such use.

(1*a*) In the Western Church. The earliest Latin Psalters were translated from the *Septuagint. The most ancient complete text of the *Old Latin Psalter is preserved in the Verona Psalter; the manuscript (Verona Capitular Library 1 (i)) dates from the 6th–7th cent., but the text was clearly used by St *Augustine in his Commentary on the Psalms. St *Jerome, in his Preface to the *Gallican Psalter, states that he had earlier worked on a translation of the Psalms from the Septuagint and this work has been traditionally equated with the *Roman Psalter (q.v.); but the identification has been largely abandoned. About 392 Jerome made a fresh translation of the Psalms from the *Hexaplaric text of the Septuagint (the Gallican Psalter, q.v.) and *c.*400 he made a further one from the Hebrew (the 'Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos' or 'Hebrew Psalter'). Conservatism in the practice of worship prevented this last Psalter from ever replacing the older version in public use; indeed, even in the *Vulgate the Gallican Psalter was ultimately preferred, although in many medieval manuscripts all three Psalters, Roman, Gallican, and Hebrew, are set out in parallel columns. In the *Breviary the Gallican Psalter was replaced in 1945 by a new Latin translation of the Psalms made direct from the Hebrew. The text in the 1971 Breviary, however, is an eclectic one which seeks to combine fidelity to the Hebrew with some of the felicities of style of the Vulgate. The vernacular versions of the Psalter used in modern RC liturgy are normally based on the Hebrew text, as the Second *Vatican Council recommended that they should be.

The version of the Psalms in the BCP, which is almost identical with that of the '*Great Bible' (1539), was based on M. *Coverdale's translation from the Vulgate, i.e. from the Gallican Psalter; it thus embodies many Septuagintal readings not found in the Hebrew. The authors of the 'Revised Psalter' (1964) attempted to preserve the literary character of Coverdale's work while basing their translation on the Hebrew text. The version in the ASB is a fresh translation from the Hebrew into modern English, commissioned by the Liturgical Commission of the General *Synod in 1972 and published in 1977. Other modern Anglican liturgies contain new translations from the Hebrew.

(1*b*) In the Eastern Church. Greek-speaking Christians use the version of the Psalms in the Septuagint, and this formed the basis of the translation of the Psalter used in the Slavonic Churches (though there is evidence to suggest the influence of the Latin Psalter on the earliest Slavonic translations). The Syrian Churches used, and in some areas still use, the version of the Psalms from the *Peshitta, which is a translation from the Hebrew (though its numeration of the Psalms follows the Hebrew only up to Ps. 113, adopting the divisions of the LXX from Ps. 116). In most modern Orthodox Churches, where the Psalter is used in the vernacular, there is a preference for a translation made from the Septuagint.

(2) The book containing the Psalms for use in worship, in some instances elaborately illuminated. In the W., the Psalms were commonly arranged according to the requirements of the Divine *Office. Psalters thus often also contained the corresponding *antiphons, the *canticles recited in the Office, and other matter such as hymns, litanies, and prayers. When their contents were later incorporated into the Breviary, separate Psalters generally fell into disuse. In the E separate Psalters are still common. Here the Psalms are divided into 20 sections (see KATHISMA (1)); the book also contains the nine canticles (q.v.) or 'odes' (appended to Pss. in the LXX), a range of hymns (see KATHISMA (2)), and prayers associated with the recitation of the Psalms in the Office and in private devotion. See also METRICAL PSALTERS.

P. [later B.] *Capelle, Le Texte du psautier latin en Afrique (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 4; 1913). R. Weber, OSB (ed.), Le Psautier romain et les autres anciens psautiers latins (ibid. 10; 1953); H. de Sainte-Marie, OSB (ed.), Sancti Hieronymi Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos (ibid. 11; 1954); C. Estin, Les Psautiers de Jérôme à la lumière des traductions juives antérieures (ibid. 15; 1984). A. Allgeier, Die altlateinischen Psalterien: Prolegomena zu einer Textgeschichte der hieronymianischen Psalmenübersetzungen (Freiburg, 1928). See also works cited s.v. ROMAN PSALTER.

J. Mateos, SJ, 'La Psalmodie dans le rite byzantin', Proche-Orient chrétien, 15 (1965), pp. 107–26. K. Onasch, 'Der Psalter in der byzantinisch-slavischen Orthodoxie', in Gottes ist der Orient: Festschrift für Prof. D. Dr. Otto Eissfeldt [1959], pp. 106–28; J. Lépissier, 'La traduction vieux-slave du Psautier', Revue des études slaves, 43 (1964), pp. 59–72. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1950–67, s.v. 'Psautier'.

Psalter Collects. Prayers composed with reference to each of the 150 Psalms (and sometimes to each section of Ps. 119 as well). There are indications that in the late antique period some such collects were actually recited after their respective Psalms, e.g. references in *Egeria's account of the Sunday vigils at Jerusalem (24. 9), in *Cassian's description of monastic practice in Egypt (Inst. 2. 7), and in the Regula Magistri (33 and 55 f.). But the earliest MS evidence for any of the three series of collects published by L. Brou in 1949 goes back only to *c.*795, and there is no reason to think that such whole series were ever used liturgically (except perhaps in *Spain, where a profusion of these prayers has been traced). The nomenclature of 'African', 'Spanish', and 'Roman' series, adopted by Brou, derives from literary analysis of their putative origins, and bears little relation to the MSS in which they appear. Psalter collects continue to be found occasionally, mostly in luxury Psalters, throughout the Middle Ages, and are used in a limited way in some contemporary, esp. RC, liturgies.

The Psalter Collects . . . (Three Series), ed. L. Brou, OSB (using materials collected by A. *Wilmart, OSB) (HBS 83; 1949). Text also pr. by P. Verbraken, OSB, Oraisons sur les cent cinquante psaumes (Lex Orandi, 42; 1967), with Fr. tr. and full bibl. R. W. Pfaff, 'Psalter Collects as an Aid to the Classification of Psalters', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 18. 2 (Louvain, 1989), pp. 397–402.

psaltery (Lat. psalterium). (1) An ancient and medieval stringed instrument played by plucking the strings with the fingers or a plectrum. (2) An obsolete term for Psalter (2), sometimes used by Victorian liturgiologists.

Psellus, Michael (*c.*1019–*c.*1078), Byzantine philosopher, historian, theologian, and statesman. He was Imperial secretary to Michael V (1041–2), and secretary of state to his successor, Constantine IX (1042–54). A keen enthusiast for the revival of classical learning and esp. *Platonic philosophy, in 1045 he was appointed the first professor of philosophy at the newly founded University of *Constantinople. Having incurred the displeasure of the Emperor, he entered a monastery in 1054, but soon on Constantine's death returned to the court, where he took part in many intrigues until, in 1072, he fell from favour once more and spent the rest of his life in obscurity.

Psellus wrote a large number of treatises on a wide range of subjects as well as many speeches, letters, and poems. His Χρονογραφία remains an important source for the history of the years 976–1077 and was utilized by later historians such as *Anna Comnena and *Zonaras. His chief theological writings are expositions of various biblical books including an exegesis of 72 psalms in verse, a short treatise against the Latin theologians, and a dialogue Περὶ ἐνεργείας δαιμόνων against the *Messalians. His philosophical works include commentaries on the 'Timaeus' of *Plato and on the Περὶ ἑρμηνείας and other writings of *Aristotle.

There is no complete edn. of Psellus' works; many of them (mainly theological and philosophical) repr. from various sources in J. P. Migne, PG 122. 477–1358. His Χρονογραφία ('History') and various shorter works and epp., ed. C. N. Sathas, Bibliotheca Graeca Medii Aevi, 4–5 (Paris, 1874–6; repr. Athens, 1972). Scripta Minora [largely unpub.], ed. E. Kurtz and F. Drexl (Orbis Romanus, 5 and 12; Milan, 1936–41). Crit. edns. of De Omnifaria Doctrina by L. G. Westerink (Nijmegen, 1948), of various Oratoria Minora by A. R. Littlewood (Teub., 1985), of Orationes hagiographae by E. A. Fisher (ibid., 1994), of Orationes panegyricae by G. T. Dennis (ibid., 1994); Philosophica minora, ed. J. M. Duffy and D. J. O'Meara (2 vols., ibid., 1989–92); Poemata, ed. L. G. Westerink (ibid., 1992); and Theologica, ed. P. Gautier (ibid., 1989 ff.). Psellus' comm. on the Chaldean Oracles, and other related material, ed., with Fr. tr. and valuable introd., by É. des Places, SJ, Oracles Chaldaïques (Collection des Universités de France, 1971), pp. 153–201 and 218–26. Χρονογραφία also ed., with Ital. tr., by S. Impellizzeri and others (Scrittori Greci e Latini, 2 vols., 1984); Eng. tr. by E. R. A. Sewter (London, 1953). Historia Syntomos first ed., with Eng. tr., by W. J. Aerts (Corpus Fontium Historiae Byzantinae, 30; 1990). P.-P. Joannou, Démonologie populaire démonologie critique au XIe siècle: La vie inédite de S. Auxence par M. Psellos (Schriften zur Geistesgeschichte des östlichen Europa, 5; Wiesbaden, 1971), pp. 41–150. C. Zervos, Un Philosophe néoplatonicien du XI' siècle (1919); P. [P.] Joannou, Christliche Metaphysik in Byzanz, 1: Die Illuminationslehre des Michael Psellos und Joannes Italos (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 3; Ettal, 1956); G. Weiss, Oströmische Beamte im Spiegel der Schriften des Michel Psellos (Miscellanea Byzantina Monacensia, 16; 1973). N. G. Wilson, Scholars of Byzantium (1983), pp. 156–79. Krumbacher, pp. 433–44. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1149–58, s.v. 'Psellos (Michel)'.

Pseudepigrapha. Writings ascribed to some other than their real author, generally with a view to giving them an enhanced authority. The term is used esp. of the pseudonymous Jewish works, dating from the centuries immediately before and after the beginning of the Christian era, which were not included in the Gk. *Canon of the OT. Among these writings are the 'Book of *Enoch', the 'Assumption of *Moses', the later 'Books of *Baruch', and the 'Psalms of *Solomon'. On the other hand, pseudonymous books which occur in the OT or *Apocrypha, e.g. 'the Rest of the Book of *Esther' and the '*Wisdom of Solomon', are by convention not ordinarily reckoned among the Pseudepigrapha.

Collections of these writings, in Eng. tr., with discussions of authorship, date, etc., ed. R. H. *Charles, The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2: Pseudepigrapha (Oxford, 1913); J. H. Charlesworth, The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha (2 vols., 1983–5); H. F. D. Sparks, The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984). Eissfeldt, pp. 603–37, with bibl. For further bibl. see also under separate treatises.

Pseudo-Clementines. See CLEMENTINE LITERATURE.

Pseudo-Isidorian Decretals. See FALSE DECRETALS.

psilanthropism (Gk. ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος, 'a mere man'). The heretical doctrine that Christ was just a man and not God and man in one Person. In the '*Little Labyrinth', quoted by *Eusebius (HE 5. 28. 6), *Theodotus the Cobbler is said to have taught that He was a 'mere man' (ψιλὸς ἄνθρωπος). The single word, ψιλάνθρωπος, seems to occur for the first time in *Anastasius of Sinai (Hodegos, 13; J. P. Migne, PL 83. 216 C), while the noun 'psilanthropism' is apparently a 19th-cent. coinage.

psychology of religion. A field of study, dating from the late 19th cent., in which the concepts and methods of psychology are applied to religious experience and behaviour.

One of the first to investigate such possible applications of psychology was W. *James, whose work has since in some ways served as a model. The topics he chose for study included the experience of well-being or of conflict in human response to God, and the experiences of religious conversion and of saintliness and mysticism. His method was to collect written, and more rarely controlled, observations; his primary aim was a philosophical understanding of what he observed.

Many of the writings of S. Freud (1856–1939) on psychoanalysis significantly contributed to the psychological study of religion, though the critical and reductionist views of religion which he repeatedly expressed no longer command assent either among psychologists or among theologians. Similarly, the views of C. G. Jung (1875–1961), though by contrast tending to assign an almost indiscriminate validity to religious phenomena in human experience, have in turn led to critical restatements of permanent value for the psychology of religion.

Since the early 1960s there has been a considerable growth of interest in the subject, and much more sophisticated methods of analysis have been developed. These more precise methods have been applied not only to the topics studied by James, but more widely. With the help of tests, measurements, a few specifically devised questionnaires, and projective methods, religious behaviour and experience have been studied in relation to age, to cognitive style and other personal characteristics, and also with reference to pathological and drug-induced conditions. There is a growing interest in the contributions both of social psychology and of cognitive psychology in the exploration of religious phenomena. It is, however, now generally agreed in principle that merely psychological methods cannot fully answer questions about the validity of religious behaviour and experience, even if they can account for some aspects of both of these in non-religious terms.

W. James, The Varieties of Religious Experience (Gifford Lectures for 1901–2, 1902); S. Freud, Totem und Tabu (Vienna, 1913; Eng. tr., New York, 1918; London, 1919); id., Die Zukunft einer Illusion (Leipzig, 1927; Eng. tr., The Future of an Illusion, 1928); id., Das Unbehagen in der Kultur (Vienna, 1929; Eng. tr., Civilization and its Discontents, 1930); id., Moses and Monotheism (Eng. tr. of work previously partly unpub., 1939); R. H. Thouless, An Introduction to the Psychology of Religion (Cambridge, 1923; 3rd edn., 1971); C. G. Jung, Psychology and Religion (1938); G. W. Allport, The Individual and his Religion: A Psychological Interpretation (New York, 1950; London, 1951); V. White, OP, God and the Unconscious (1952); [J.] M. Argyle, Religious Behaviour (1958; rev., with B. Beit-Hallahmi as The Social Psychology of Religion, 1975); H. Faber, Cirkelen om een geheim (Meppel, 1972; Eng. tr., Psychology of Religion, 1976); W. E. Oates, The Psychology of Religion (Waco, Tex. [1973]); H. N. Malony (ed.), Current Perspectives in the Psychology of Religion (Grand Rapids [1977]); A. [C.] Hardy, The Spiritual Nature of Man: A Study of Contemporary Religious Experience (Oxford, 1979); J. R. Tisdale (ed.), Growing Edges in the Psychology of Religion (Chicago [1980]); J. W. Fowler, Stages of Faith: The Psychology of Human Development and the Quest for Meaning (San Francisco, etc. [1981]); D. Hay, Exploring Inner Space: Scientists and Religious Experience (Harmondsworth, 1982); C. D. Batson and W. L. Ventnis, The Religious Experience: A Social-Psychological Perspective (New York and Oxford, 1982); J. F. Byrnes, The Psychology of Religion (New York and London [1984]); M. J. Meadow and R. D. Kahoe, Psychology of Religion: Religion in Individual Lives (New York and London [1984]); B. Spilka and others, The Psychology of Religion: An Empirical Approach (Englewood Cliffs, NJ [1985]); D. S. Browning, Religious Thought and the Modern Psychologies (Philadelphia [1987]); F. Watts and M. Williams, The Psychology of Religious Knowing (Cambridge, 1988); L. B. Brown, The Psychology of Religion: An Introduction (1988).

Ptolemaic system. The body of astronomical doctrines elaborated by Ptolemy (2nd cent. AD) in his Μαθηματικὴ σύνταξις, which explained the apparent motions of the sun, moon and planets on the assumption that the earth was stationary. It was commonly accepted throughout the Middle Ages and later until it was replaced by the *Copernican theory.

Public Worship Regulation Act 1874. An Act intended to suppress the growth of ritualism in the C of E. The Bill, drafted by Abp. A. C. *Tait, was drastically amended in Parliament in a more Protestant and *Erastian direction by Lord *Shaftesbury. It provided for the appointment, by the two Archbishops conjointly, of a barrister or ex-judge as Judge of the provincial courts of *Canterbury and *York to try ritual cases, with an appeal to the Privy Council. Tait secured (against Shaftesbury's wishes) provision for the bishop's veto of proceedings under the Act. The first judge was James Plaisted Baron Penzance, ex-judge of divorce. The imprisonment between 1877 and 1882 of four priests (Arthur Tooth, 1877; Thomas Pelham Dale, 1880; Richard William Enraght, 1880–1; Sidney Faithorn Green, 1881–2) for contumacy greatly discredited the Act and henceforward it was virtually obsolete. It was repealed by the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963.

J. Bentley, Ritualism and Politics in Victorian Britain: The Attempt to Legislate for Belief (Oxford, 1978), incl. text, pp. 129–42. P. T. Marsh, The Victorian Church in Decline: Archbishop Tait and the Church of England 1868–1882 (1969), pp. 158–92. On the trial of A. Tooth and subsequent events, J. Coombs, Judgement on Hatcham: The History of a Religious Struggle 1877–1886 (1969).

publican. The word used in the traditional English versions of the Bible to translate the Greek term τελώνης (Lat. publicanus), a member of one of the financial organizations which farmed the taxes in the service of the Roman government. In view of the abuses and corruptions to which the system led, the publicans were the objects of widespread hatred. In the Gospels they are commonly coupled with the 'sinners'. St *Matthew ('Levi'), one of their number, received the call to be an Apostle from his place of toll (τελώνιον) at *Capernaum (Mt. 9: 9 etc.). *Zacchaeus at *Jericho is described as a 'chief publican' (ἀρχιτελώνης) (Lk. 19: 2).

E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 374–6, with refs. E. Badian, Publicans and Sinners: Private Enterprise in the Service of the Roman Empire (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1972). F. Herrenbrück, Jesus und die Zöllner (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 2. Reihe, 41; Tübingen [1990]), with refs. to earlier discussion. L. Fillion in Dict. Bibl. 5 (1912), cols. 858–61, s.v. 'Publicains'; O. Michel in TWNT 8 (1969), pp. 88–106; Eng. tr., 8 (1972), pp. 88–105, s.v. τελώνης, esp. part B.

Pudens, St (Gk. Πούδης). A Christian of *Rome who is mentioned in 2 Tim. 4: 21 as sending greetings along with Eubulus, *Linus, and Claudia to *Timothy. Tradition makes him St *Peter's host at Rome. There are no grounds for identifying the Pudens of the NT with the Pudens (prob. 3rd cent.) who gave his house on the Vicus Patricius (titulus Pudentis or ecclesia Pudentiana) to the Roman Church. See also following entry. Feast day in E., 14 Apr.; in W., 19 May.

On the proposed identifications of the NT Pudens, see W. Lock in HDB 4 (1902), p. 173. A. Petrignani, La basilica di S. Pudenziana in Roma (Monumenti di antichità cristiana pubblicati dal Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, 2nd ser. 1; 1934); B. Vanmaele, O. Praem., L'Église pudentienne de Rome (Santa Pudenziana) (Bibliotheca Analecta Praemonstratensium, 6; 1965). R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in idd. and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 3 (Rome, 1967), pp. 277–302, with bibl. [in Eng.]. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome ... (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 468–70.

Pudentiana, St (also Potentiana). Acc. to the *Roman Martyrology, she was a Roman virgin of the early Church, the daughter of St *Pudens and the sister of St *Praxedes. Probably the cultus rests on a mistaken popular notion which supposed that the 'ecclesia Pudentiana' in Rome, really the church of St Pudens, presupposed a 'St Pudentiana'. The Acta of Sts Pudentiana and Praxedes, printed by the *Bollandists, are not earlier than the 8th cent. Feast day in W., 19 May.

AASS, Mai. 4 (1685), pp. 296–301. See also bibl. to preceding entry.

Pufendorf, Samuel (1632–94). The first German professor of natural and international law. The son of a *Lutheran pastor, he became professor successively at Heidelberg (1661) and Lund (1670), historiographer to the court of Sweden (1677), and privy councillor to the Elector of Brandenburg (1688). Developing the system of H. *Grotius, he divided law into natural, civil, and moral, and maintained that while moral law was based on revelation and civil law on the positive enactments of the State, natural law had its basis in the instinct of society, and therefore ultimately in human reason. These ideas were developed in his chief book, De Iure Naturae et Gentium (1672), of which an Eng. tr. was published in 1710 (under the title, Of the Law of Nature and Nations) and also in De Officio Hominis et Civis juxta legem naturalem (1673) and in his Dissertationes Academicae Selectores (1675). In his De Habitu Religionis Christianae ad Vitam Civilem (1687), he expounded the theory of Church government known as '*Collegialism'. Pufendorf was also the author of many historical writings, among them Einleitung zu der Historie der vornehmsten Reiche und Staaten ... in Europa (Frankfurt a.M., 1682), Commentariorum de Rebus Suecicis Libri XXVI (Utrecht, 1686; Eng. tr., with continuation, London, 1702), De Rebus Gestis Friderici Wilhelmi Magni, Electoris Brandenburgici (Berlin, 1695), and De Rebus Gestis Friderici III Electoris Brandenburgici (ibid., 1784).

Photographic reproductions of Pufendorf's De Officio Hominis [1682 edn.] with introd. by W. Schücking and Eng. tr. of text by F. G. Moore (The Classics of International Law, 10; 2 vols., New York, London, etc., 1927); of his Elementorum Jurisprudentiae Universalis Libri Duo [1672 edn.] with introd. by H. Wehberg and Eng. tr. of text by W. A. Oldfather (ibid. 15; 2 vols., Oxford and London, 1931); and of his De Jure Naturae et Gentium [1688 edn.] with introd. by W. Simons and Eng. tr. of text by C. H. and W. A. Oldfather (ibid. 17; ibid., 1934). The text of his 'De Statu Hominum Naturali' (originally part of his Dissertationes Academicae Selectores (Lund, 1675), pp. 582–632) was repr. from the 1678 edn., with Eng. tr. and introd. by M. Seidler (Studies in the History of Philosophy, 13; Lewiston, Queenston, and Lampeter [1990]). Correspondence with Christian Thomasius, 1687–93, ed. E. Gigas (Munich and Leipzig, 1897). F. Palladini, Discussioni seicentesche su Samuel Pufendorf. Scritti latini: 1663–1700 (Pubblicazioni del Centro di Studio per la Storia della Storiografia Filosofica, 6 [1978]). Eng. tr. of the 1673 text of his De Officio Hominis by M. Silverthorne, with introd. and useful bibl. by J. Tully (Cambridge Texts in the History of Political Thought, 1991). L. Krieger, The Politics of Discretion: Pufendorf and the Acceptance of Natural Law (Chicago and London, 1965). P. Laurent, Pufendorf et la loi naturelle (1982). D. Döring, Pufendorf-Studien: Beiträge zur Biographie Samuel von Pufendorfs und zu seiner Entwicklung als Historiker und theologischer Schriftsteller (Historische Forschungen, 49; 1992). E. Wolf in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 7 (1967), pp. 27–9, s.v.

Pugin, Augustus Welby Northmore (1812–52), architect and *ecclesiologist. He was the chief inspirer of the Gothic Revival. The son of Augustus Charles Pugin, a French émigré, he joined the RC Church in 1835, initially prompted by his ecclesiological studies. Among his numerous works are St Chad's (RC) Cathedral, Birmingham (1839–41); St Giles, Cheadle (1840–6); Killarney Cathedral (begun 1842); St Augustine's, Ramsgate (1845–51); and the chapel of St Edmund's College, Ware (1845–53). He also collaborated with C. Barry in his designs for the Houses of Parliament. His plans often had to be modified in execution through lack of money as the RCs by whom he was chiefly employed were a relatively poor body. Hence his designs and polemical writings provide a more adequate expression of his ideas than the buildings themselves. He also met with difficulties from RCs who rejected his identification of Gothic as the purest form of Christian architecture and preferred Italian prototypes. His most important writings are Contrasts: or, A Parallel Between the Noble Edifices of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries, and Similar Buildings of the Present Day (1836), The True Principles of Pointed or Christian Architecture (1841), An Apology for The Revival of Christian Architecture in England (1843), and The Present State of Ecclesiastical Architecture in England (1843). His sons Edward Welby Pugin (1834–75) and Peter Paul Pugin (1851–1904) were also church architects.

B. Ferrey, Recollections of A. N. Welby Pugin, and his Father, Augustus Pugin (1861; repr., with introd. by C. Wainwright, 1978). Modern studies by M. Trappes-Lomax (London, 1932) and P. Stanton (ibid., 1971). D. [R.] Gwynn, Lord Shrewsbury, Pugin and the Gothic Revival (1946). H.-R. Hitchcock, Early Victorian Architecture in Britain (2 vols., 1954), esp. 1, pp. 56–96, with illustrations in vol. 2, section 3. A. Wedgwood, Catalogue of the Drawings Collection of the Royal Institute of British Architects: The Pugin Family (Farnborough, 1977), pp. 38–112; id., Catalogues of Architectural Drawings in the Victoria and Albert Museum: The Pugin Family (1985), pp. 24–300; P. Atterbury and C. Wainwright (eds.), Pugin: A Gothic Passion (New Haven and London, 1994). D. Meara, A. W. N. Pugin and the Revival of Memorial Brasses (1991). M. Belcher, A. W. N. Pugin: An Annotated Critical Bibliography (1987). P. Waterhouse in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 6–10.

Pulcheria, St (399–453), E. Empress from 450. She was the daughter of the Emp. Arcadius (395–408) and elder sister of *Theodosius II (408–50), and a woman of uncommon ability and deep piety. From 414 to 416 she was entrusted by the Senate, despite her youth, with the guardianship of her weak-minded brother, Theodosius; and for several years she ran the Imperial palace at *Constantinople on strict and ascetic Christian principles. After Theodosius' marriage (421), she found life at court increasingly difficult, partly because of theological intrigues. A stalwart supporter of orthodoxy, she induced Theodosius to condemn *Nestorius. In 438 she put an end to the schism at Constantinople by bringing thither the bones of St *Chrysostom. In the *Monophysite controversy she was again on the orthodox side, and after the momentary triumph of Monophysitism at the *Latrocinium (449), she sought the support of Pope *Leo I. After the sudden death of Theodosius in 450 she became Empress, taking the aged general and senator, Marcian, as her consort. In the interests of orthodoxy, she forthwith arranged for a General Council to meet at *Chalcedon in 451, and herself attended the sixth session in person. Since the Middle Ages she has been commemorated as a saint. Feast day, 10 Sept.

The primary sources are cited in J. R. Martindale (ed.), Prosopography of the Later Roman Empire (Cambridge, 1980), pp. 929 f. AASS, Sept. 3 (1750), pp. 503–40. A. B. Teetgen, Life and Times of the Empress Pulcheria (popular; 1907). E. *Schwartz, 'Die Kaiserin Pulcheria auf der Synode von Chalkedon', in Festgabe für Adolf Jülicher zum 70. Geburtstag 26. Januar 1927 (Tübingen, 1927), pp. 203–12; P. Goubert, SJ, 'Le Rôle de Sainte Pulchérie et de l'eunuque Chrysaphios', in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalkedon, 1 (1951), pp. 303–21. J. P. Kirsch in CE 12 (1911), pp. 561 f., s.v.; W. Ensslin in PW 23 (pt. 2; 1959), cols. 1954–63, s.v. 'Pulcheria (2)'.

Pullen, Robert (d. 1146), theologian. He is one of the earliest known masters in the schools of *Oxford, where he began to teach the Scriptures in 1133. By 1139 he had moved to *Paris, where he taught logic and theology, counted *John of Salisbury among his pupils, and was highly esteemed by St *Bernard on account of his sound doctrine. He combined his teaching with holding the archdeaconry of *Rochester, despite the protests of the bishop. Called to Rome by Innocent II, he was created cardinal probably by Celestine II in 1143–4; *c.*1144 Lucius II appointed him Papal chancellor of the Holy Roman Church, an office he held also under St Bernard's disciple, *Eugenius III, who became Pope shortly afterwards. He left a collection of sermons, but his main surviving work is his 'Sentences', a compilation treating a wide range of theological subjects, soon to be superseded by the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard.

His Sententiae, repr. from the edn. of H. Mathoud, OSB (Paris, 1655), in J. P. Migne, PL 186. 625–1152. F. Courtney, SJ, Cardinal Robert Pullen (Analecta Gregoriana, 64; 1954). R. W. Southern in T. H. Aston (ed.), The History of the University of Oxford, 1 (Oxford, 1984), pp. 6–8. BRUO 3 (1959), p. 1525, s.v.; H. *Rashdall in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 19 f., s.v.

pulpit (Lat. pulpitum, 'platform'). An elevated stand of stone or wood for the preacher or reader. Pulpits first became general in the later Middle Ages. In early Christian times the bishop preached from his *cathedra. Later the *ambo was used for the sermon and in still later times the rood-loft. Except in cathedrals the N. side of the *nave is considered the proper place for the pulpit. Sometimes the workmanship of the pulpit is very elaborate, famous examples being the marble structures at Pisa and Siena and the wooden *baroque pulpits of the Netherlands. Pulpits are also generally found in monastic refectories, and sometimes outside but close to the wall of a church, e.g. at Magdalen College, Oxford. It is now customary to use the Latin word pulpitum, not for the preaching-stand, but for the stone choir-screen which sometimes separates the choir from the nave in cathedral and monastic churches.

F. T. Dollman, Examples of Ancient Pulpits Existing in England (1849); J. C. Cox, Pulpits, Lecterns and Organs in English Churches (1915), pp. 1–147. R. Grand, 'Les Chaires à prêcher au dehors des églises', Bulletin Monumental, 83 (1924), pp. 305–25.

Purcell, Henry (1659–95), English composer. He was born in London and, becoming a choirboy at the *Chapel Royal, began to study music at an early age. From 1674 he tuned the organ, and in 1679 was made organist, at *Westminster Abbey, to which in 1682 the office of one of the organists at the Chapel Royal was added. During the next few years he devoted himself chiefly to sacred music, though for the last six years or so of his life music for the theatre dominated his output. One of his most famous ecclesiastical works is the Te Deum and Jubilate in D (1694), written for St *Cecilia's day, which was regularly performed at *St Paul's Cathedral for over half a century. He also composed a complete setting for the Morning and Evening Service in B flat, and an Evening Service in G minor. His burial service for Queen Mary (d. 1694) contained the well-known anthem 'Thou knowest, Lord'. Although he wrote a number of 'full' *anthems in the older polyphonic style, including the highly expressive 'Hear my prayer', Purcell's outstanding contribution is to the development of the verse anthem, often with string accompaniments. In the spirit of the Restoration much of the music is elaborate and highly dramatic; the words are nearly always from the OT. They include 'In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust', 'Rejoice in the Lord alway' (the 'Bell' anthem), 'O sing unto the Lord', 'My beloved spake', and the Coronation anthem, 'My heart is inditing of a good matter'. Finest among many non-liturgical pieces is perhaps his setting of William Fuller's 'Evening Hymn' ('Now that the sun hath veiled his light'). Even apart from his more extensive work in the sphere of secular composition, the technical skill, powers of expression, and the beauty of the melodies of his sacred music have deservedly maintained Purcell's reputation among the first rank of English composers.

Collected edn. of his works pub. by the Purcell Society (London, 1878 ff., 32 vols. to 1965; rev. edn., 1964 ff.). F. B. Zimmerman, Henry Purcell 1659–1695: An Analytical Catalogue of his Music (1963). J. A. Westrup, Purcell (Master Musicians Series, 1937; rev. N. Fortune, 1980); F. B. Zimmermann, Henry Purcell, 1659–1695: His Life and Times (1967; rev. edn., Philadelphia [1983]); P. Holman, Henry Purcell (Oxford Studies of Composers, 1994). M. Burden (ed.), The Purcell Companion (1995). F. B. Zimmermann, The Anthems of Henry Purcell (Special issue of the American Choral Review, 13, nos. 3–4; New York, 1971). Id., Henry Purcell: A Guide to Research (New York and London, 1989). J. [A.] Westrup in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 15 (1980), pp. 457–76, s.v.

Purchas Judgement. The judgement by the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1871 that Eucharistic *Vestments, the *Eastward Position, the *Mixed Chalice, and Wafer *Bread were illegal. This decision, which was given when the Revd John Purchas (1823–72), vicar of St

James's, Brighton, had been charged with these and other ritualistic practices, reversed the previous judgement in Purchas's favour by the *Dean of the Arches. The verdict marks a turning-point in the ceremonial revival in the C of E in the 19th cent., because hitherto such practices had been regarded on nearly all sides as conforming with the letter of the law, whereas from now onwards ritualists were held to be law-breakers. The judgement was widely disobeyed, however, as without spiritual authority, and the Eastward Position was continued, e.g. in *St Paul's Cathedral.

The Law Report is to be found under Hebbert v. Purchas (1871), LR 3 PC 605.

purgative, illuminative, and unitive ways. The analysis of Christian development into these three 'ways' or phases derives from *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite, who ascribed a rhythm of purification, illumination, and union (or perfection) both to the hierarchies of angels and to the Church on earth; in the latter case, the three phases are connected with the Sacraments, and a threefold hierarchy can also be identified of those being purged (*catechumens, penitents, etc.), 'contemplatives' (the baptized), and those leading the unitive life (monks). Medieval W. interpreters of Dionysius connected this scheme with the more traditional one (beginners, proficients, perfects) and turned it into an account of spiritual progress in terms of the three 'ways', beginning with the eradication of bad habits and the cultivation of the virtues, moving on to the illumination of the mind by meditation and contemplation, culminating in unitive love. Prob. through the influence of the late-13th-cent. *Carthusian, Hugh of Balma, these three 'ways' were adopted by later writers such as St *John of the Cross, and so became classic in systematic theories of Christian spirituality. St John of the Cross connected the illuminative way with contemplation in his strict sense of 'infused contemplation' (Noche oscura, 2. 14. 1), but some later writers maintained that it was possible to attain even to the unitive way without this. Other writers have questioned the usefulness of any rigid attempt to systematize spiritual progress.

purgatory. A term used only in W. Catholic theology for the state (or place) of punishment and purification where the souls of those who have died in a state of grace undergo such punishment as is still due to forgiven sins and, perhaps, expiate their unforgiven *venial sins, before being admitted to the *Beatific Vision.

In that explicit form the doctrine is not found before the 12th cent., but elements of it are much more ancient, esp. the notions that not all souls are condemned to Hell or are worthy of Heaven at the moment of death, and that prayer for the *dead (q.v.) is valuable. The former of these notions developed only gradually, partly because so long as the Church looked for an imminent end of the world there was little interest in an interim state: such souls were asleep or waiting (cf. 1 Thess. 4: 13), and partly because of a reluctance to encourage laxity by blurring the clear-cut alternative fates of Heaven and Hell. The E. Church came to admit of an intermediate state, but refrained from defining it so as not to blur this distinction; it combined with this doctrine a firm belief in the efficacy of prayer for the dead, which was a constant feature of both E. and W. liturgies. Such prayer is held to be unintelligible without belief in some interim state in which the dead might benefit.

In the W. there was much more curiosity about the intermediate state. The visions of Dinocrates in the 'Passion of Sts *Perpetua and Felicity' (AD 203) give expression to the belief that sins can be purged by suffering in an afterlife, and that the process can be accelerated by prayer. St *Augustine's occasional remarks on a purifying fire after death (De Civ. Dei, 21. 26; Enchiridion, 68 f., etc.) and on the value of the Church's prayers for those who die in the communion of the Church (De Civ. Dei, 21. 24 etc.), combined with his implication that the ultimate fate of individual souls is decided at the moment of death (Enchiridion, 110), provides much fuel for later theology. Support for the notion of a purifying fire is sought in 1 Cor. 3: 11–15, and the idea that such fire is more painful than anything experienced in this life (En. in Ps. 37. 3) meets the suspicion of laxity. St *Gregory the Great in his Dialogues taught that 'light sins' will be purged in purgatorial fire (4. 41 [39]) and that it is proper to offer the Eucharist for the deliverance of the soul of a person who has died (4. 57 [55]). Scriptural texts cited or alluded to in support of this teaching include Mt. 12: 32 and Jn. 14: 2, as well as 1 Cor. 3: 11–15. Gregory's doctrine was expressed in visions and anecdotes in the Dialogues and such popular theology continued to elaborate on notions of punishment in the world to come. The establishment of the Commemoration of all the Faithful Departed (*All Souls' Day, 2 Nov.) through the influence of *Odilo of Cluny at the end of the 10th cent. and its adoption throughout the W. Church helped to concentrate imagination on the fate of departed souls and fostered a sense of solidarity between the living and the dead. In the 12th cent. the elaboration of theology in all spheres, and esp. of the theology of *penance, by the masters of *Paris and elsewhere, helped to fashion a notion of purgatory as a place where penances unfinished in this life could be completed. The classic formulation of the doctrine is found in St *Thomas Aquinas. He taught that in purgatory any unforgiven guilt (culpa) of venial sins is expiated and any punishment (poena) for sins, both mortal and venial, still remaining at the moment of death, is borne. Acc. to St Thomas and other scholastic theologians, the smallest pain in purgatory is greater than the greatest on earth, but is relieved by the certitude of salvation which establishes the holy souls, despite their sufferings, in deep peace. Moreover they may be helped by the prayers of the faithful, and esp. by the offering of the Eucharist on their behalf, a belief which St Thomas based on the doctrine of the *Communion of Saints, from which only the inhabitants of Hell and Limbo are excluded. The teaching of the W. Church on purgatory was defined at the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439) with a view to reconciling the Greeks, who objected esp. to the conception of material fire and to the legalism of the W. approach (manifest, e.g., in the distinction between guilt and punishment), as well as suspecting the whole doctrine of *Origenism. But no lasting agreement was reached.

Supreme imaginative expression of the doctrine of purgatory is found in the second book of Dante's Divina Commedia. Purgatory becomes a powerful symbol of all that the holiness of God requires of man and also of His mercy and His love for men; these find warm expression in St *Catherine of Genoa's Treatise on Purgatory. The doctrine also provided a context for the development of *indulgences, popularized by the *plenary indulgence granted by *Boniface VIII to all pilgrims to Rome in *Holy Year of 1300. In these ways belief in purgatory became a central part of late medieval religion.

In the W. the existence of purgatory had been denied in the Middle Ages by some heretical sects such as the *Cathars and the *Waldensians. Its rejection by the *Reformers is usually couched in terms of allusions to its weak support in Scripture and rejection of the mercenary aspects of late medieval religion in which purgatory was implicated, together with the way the doctrine seemed to extend Papal power into the afterlife. M. *Luther, for instance, in his 95 theses, allowed the existence of purgatory, but denied that it could be deduced from the Bible; he later denied it in the *Schmalkaldic Articles, but subsequent Lutheran Confessions do not expressly reject all ideas of purification after death, however much they object to *Requiem Masses and Papal claims to power to remit sins. An early reply to the Reformers' teaching was made by St John *Fisher, who in his Assertionis Lutheranae Confutatio (1523) based his defence of purgatory esp. on the Fathers and on the practice of prayer for the dead from the earliest times. The Council of *Trent defined RC doctrine by reaffirming the teaching propounded at Lyons and Florence, but confined itself to asserting the principles of purification after death and the value of prayers for the faithful departed. In the C of E Art. 22 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles condemns the 'Romish' doctrine of purgatory without further specification. In the second part of his Considerationes Modestae, Bp. W. *Forbes (d. 1634) rejected the doctrine of 'purgatory', but strongly affirmed the existence of an intermediate state in which purification takes place through the soul's fervent longing for God, and the value of prayer for the dead (deploring its absence at that time from official Anglican liturgies). In this he was followed by the *Tractarians and their successors, and in recent times by some Protestant theologians. Recent RC discussions of purgatory (Y. *Congar, K. *Rahner, H. U. von *Balthasar) respect the reserve of the Council of Trent, reinterpret some traditional aspects of the doctrine (e.g. fire as metaphorical, time as intensity) and leave many questions open, such as whether the guilt of unforgiven venial sins is forgiven in purgatory, or whether souls in purgatory can pray for the living. (The custom of seeking such prayers is a comparatively recent development, advocated in the W. by St Robert *Bellarmine and St *Alphonsus Liguori, among others.)

The doctrine of purgatory is one way of bridging the gap between the death of the individual and the general *resurrection of the dead. It may also be seen as bridging the gap between the individual and the Church, for while the Church may be presented to Christ at the end of time 'without spot or wrinkle', the individual Christian is likely to face his own death in a more ambiguous state. So purgatory represents the gap in which the individual as he was at the moment of death, faithful but imperfect, is rendered a worthy member of the Church as she will be at the Last Judgement. Whether the gap between death and resurrection is temporal for the individual is not clear, though it can hardly be imagined in any other way; and the gap between the individual and the Church can be filled both by the individual's suffering and waiting (cf. Heb. 11: 40, though this more immediately envisages a limbus patrum) and by the corporate concern of the Church for its individual members expressed in prayer and esp. in the liturgy. In the traditional W. doctrine of purgatory, individuals are envisaged as attaining the Beatific Vision one by one in accordance with their deserts. In the teaching of the E. Church (which in this matter Forbes follows), the perfection of the whole Church awaits the individual, and so even the saints may be prayed for, as the fullness of beatitude will not be experienced by any until it is attained by all.

Besides the account in Aquinas (Comm. in Lib. IV. Sent., dist. 21, qu. 1) there are classic treatises by R. Bellarmine, SJ, Disputationes de Controversiis Fidei, 3 (Ingoldstadt [1588]), pt. 2 (Primi Tomi Sexta Controversia: 'De Ecclesia, quae est in Purgatorio'), and F. *Suárez, SJ, Commentarii ac Disputationes in Tertiam Partem Divi Thomae, 4 (Lyons, 1603), pp. 618–55 ('De Purgatorio'). The Tridentine 'Decretum De Purgatorio' is repr., with Eng. tr., in Tanner, Decrees, 2 (1990), p. 774. De Purgatorio disputationes in concilio Florentino habitae, ed. L. Petit, AA, and G. Hofmann, SJ (Concilium Florentinum: Documenta et Scriptores, 8, fasc. 2; Rome, 1969). The subject is necessarily treated in all works on eschatology, q.v. There is an excellent art. by A. Michel and M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 1163–357, s.v. 'Purgatoire'. Other general modern works incl.: A. J. Mason [Anglican], Purgatory [and other Lectures] (1901), esp. pp. 1–57; H. Rondet, SJ, Le Purgatoire (1948); Y. Congar, OP, 'Le Purgatoire', in Le Mystère de la Mort et sa célébration (Lex Orandi, 12; 1951), pp. 279–336; A. Piolanti, 'Il dogma del purgatorio', Euntes docete, 6 (1953), pp. 287–311; E. Fleischhack, Fegfeuer (Tübingen, 1969); R. Ombres, OP, Theology of Purgatory (Cork, 1979); J. Le Goff, La Naissance du Purgatoire (1981; Eng. tr., 1984). On the archaeological data, A. Stuiber, Refrigerium Interim: Die Vorstellungen vom Zwischenzustand und die frühchristliche Grabeskunst (Theophaneia, 11; Bonn, 1957); L. de Bruyne, 'Refrigerium Interim', Riv. A.C. 34 (1958), pp. 87–118. J. Gnilka, Ist 1 Kor. 3, 10–15 ein Schriftzeugnis für das Fegfeuer? Eine exegetisch-historische Untersuchung (Würzburg Inaugural diss., Düsseldorf, 1955). J. Ntedika, L'Évolution de la Doctrine du Purgatoire chez saint Augustin (Études Augustiniennes, 1966); id., L'Évocation de l'au-delà dans la Prière pour les Morts: Étude de patristique et de liturgie latines (IV^e–VIII^e S.) (Recherches Africaines de Théologie. Travaux de la Faculté de Théologie de l'Université Lovanianum de Kinshasa, 2; Louvain and Paris, 1971). R. R. Atwell, 'From Augustine to Gregory the Great: an Evaluation of the Emergence of the Doctrine of Purgatory', JEH 38 (1987), pp. 173–86. R. Ombres, OP, 'The Doctrine of Purgatory according to St Thomas Aquinas', Downside Review, 99 (1981), pp. 279–87; id., 'Latins and Greeks in Debate over Purgatory, 1230–439', JEH 35 (1984), pp. 1–14; J. Gill, SJ, The Council of Florence (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 117–25, 285; C. Burgess, '"A fond thing vainly invented": An Essay on Purgatory and Pious Motive in Later Medieval England' in S. J. Wright (ed.), Parish, Church and People: Local studies in lay religion 1350–1750 (1988), pp. 56–84. P. Althaus, 'Luthers Gedanken über die letzten Dinge', Luther-Jahrbuch, 33 (1941), pp. 9–34, esp. pp. 22–8. E. Klinger in Sacramentum Mundi, 5 (1970), pp. 166–8, s.v.; P. Miquel, OSB, and C. de Seyssel in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2652–76, s.v., both with further bibl.

Purgatory, St Patrick's. See ST PATRICK'S PURGATORY.

Purification of the BVM. The feast kept on 2 Feb. in commemoration of the BVM's purification in the Temple, recorded in Lk. 2: 21–39. The feast is also known as *Candlemas (q.v.). In the RC Church since 1969 it has been called the 'Presentation of the Lord'.

purificator. A small piece of white linen used at celebrations of the Eucharist to cleanse the chalice after communion. Occasional references to purificators are found in the Middle Ages (e.g. in a Roman inventory of 1295), but they did not come into general use until the 16th cent.

Purim. A Jewish festival, celebrated in the spring (14 and 15 Adar), which commemorates the deliverance of the Jews from massacre under the Persian Empire (473 BC), as related in the Book of Esther (9: 26 ff.). The observance included the public reading of the Book, as regulated in the Tractate 'Megillah' of the *Talmud. The name was long thought to be of Persian or even Indian origin, but it has now been shown to be connected with the Assyrian puru, 'lot' (cf. Est. 3: 7). It used to be thought that the 'feast of the Jews' mentioned in Jn. 5: 1 was the Feast of Purim, but this identification is now rejected.

N. S. Doniach, Purim or The Feast of Esther: An Historical Study (Philadelphia, 1933). R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 425–9, with bibl. p. 460; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 514–17, with bibl. p. 552. H.-J. Kraus, Gottesdienst in Israel (2nd edn., 1962), pp. 111 f.; Eng. tr. (Oxford, 1966), pp. 91 f. L. Jacobs in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1390–6, s.v. See also comms. on Esther.

Puritans, the more extreme English Protestants who, dissatisfied with the Elizabethan Settlement, sought a further purification of the Church from supposedly unscriptural and corrupt forms along the *Genevan model. Although never in the majority, they were powerful and influential, producing many able controversial writers and enjoying support from some royal councillors of *Elizabeth I, from some of the nobility and gentry, and among the mercantile classes. They demanded express scriptural warrant for all the details of public worship, believing that all other forms were Popish, superstitious, idolatrous, and anti-Christian. At first they attacked church ornaments, *vestments, *surplices, *rochets, *organs, the *sign of the Cross, and ecclesiastical courts, and put corresponding emphasis on preaching, Sunday observance, and the 'tablewise' position of the altar. From the early 1570s more extreme Puritans, such as T. *Cartwright, J. *Field, and W. *Travers, began to attack the institution of episcopacy itself, and to advocate a *Presbyterian polity. Elizabeth I bitterly opposed all Puritan attempts further to change the C of E. Abp. E. *Grindal was sympathetic to some Puritan grievances, but his successor, J. *Whitgift, enthusiastically aided the Queen in her resistance. His Articles of 1583 and the Act of 1593 against 'seditious sectaries' were aimed at the Puritans, who consequently formed extravagant hopes of her successor. On *James I's accession the Puritan *Millenary Petition led to the unsuccessful *Hampton Court Conference (1604). After the relative inactivity of Abp. G. *Abbot, the Puritans were among the chief targets of W. *Laud's ecclesiastical and political policy, which, for example, sought to thwart the Puritans' attempts to propagate their views by means of *Lecturers. By 1600 some Puritans, such as H. *Barrow and for a time R. *Browne, had come to advocate *Congregationalism. The Great Rebellion (sometimes called the 'Puritan Revolution') in and after 1642 led not only to the temporary hollow triumph of Presbyterianism, but also to a rapid proliferation of sects. The term 'Puritan' never had a single precise meaning, and in the senses of the post-1559 period it ceased to be applicable after the Restoration in 1660.

W. *Perkins was a representative moderate Puritan of Elizabeth I's day; other more extreme later Puritans were W. *Prynne and J. *Milton. See also ADMONITION TO PARLIAMENT; PARKER, M.; MARPRELATE TRACTS; BANCROFT, R.; and 'ROOT AND BRANCH'.

Collections of Puritan docs. ed. H. C. Porter, Puritanism in Tudor England (1970), and L. J. Tinterud, Elizabethan Puritanism (New York, 1971). D. *Neal, History of the Puritans from 1517 to 1688 (new edn. by J. Toulmin, 5 vols., 1793–7). C. E. Whiting, Studies in English Puritanism, 1660–1688 (1931); W. Haller, The Rise of Puritanism (New York, 1938); M. M. Knappen, Tudor Puritanism (Chicago, 1939); [D.] H. [M.] Davies, The Worship of the English Puritans (1948); A. Simpson, Puritanism in Old and New England (Charles R. Walgreen Foundation Lectures; Chicago, 1955); G. S. Wakefield, Puritan Devotion: Its Place in the Development of Christian Piety (1957); G. R. Cragg, Puritanism in the Period of the Great Persecution 1660–1688 (Cambridge, 1957); P. Collinson, The Elizabethan Puritan Movement (1967); id., Godly People: Essays on English Protestantism and Puritanism [Collected papers repr. from various sources] [1983]; id., English Puritanism (Historical Association pamphlet, General Series, 106 [1983]); P. McGrath, Papists and Puritans under Elizabeth I (1967); W. M. Lamont, Godly Rule: Politics and Religion 1603–1660 (1969); O. C. Watkins, The Puritan Experience (1972). J. S. Coolidge, The Pauline Renaissance in England: Puritanism and the Bible (Oxford, 1970); P. [G.] Lake, Moderate Puritans and the Elizabethan Church (Cambridge, 1982); id., Anglicans and Puritans? Presbyterianism and English Conformist Thought from Whitgift to Hooker (1988); J. Morgan, Godly Learning: Puritan Attitudes towards Reason, Learning, and Education, 1560–1640 (Cambridge, 1986).

Purvey, John (*c.*1353–*c.*1428), *Wycliffite preacher. He was closely associated with John Wycliffe (d. 1384) in the last years of his life at Lutterworth in Leics. On account of his *Lollard activities, Purvey was brought to trial in 1401. After recanting under pressure, he was inducted to the vicarage of West Hythe, Kent; but he resigned in 1403 and, so far as records reveal, he reverted to Lollardy, and continued to disseminate Lollard doctrine. Various Lollard writings have been attributed to him, but the evidence for the ascriptions is inadequate. His name has traditionally been associated with the revision of the Wycliffite English translation of the Bible from its early, extremely literal version to the later idiomatic version; this association is not found until 1729, and is therefore dubious. See also BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

H. Hargreaves, 'The Latin Text of Purvey's Psalter', Medium Ævum, 24 (1955), pp. 73–90; id. in The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2, ed. G. W. H. Lampe (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 408–11. M. Deanesly, The Lollard Bible and Other Medieval Biblical Versions (ibid., 1920), esp. pp. 266–85, 334–47, 437–67; id., The Significance of the Lollard Bible (Ethel M. Wood Lecture, 1951). A. Hudson, 'John Purvey: a Reconsideration of the Evidence for his Life and Writings', Viator, 12 (1981), pp. 355–80, repr. in id., Lollards and their Books (1985), pp. 85–110. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1526–7, with further refs. See also works on the Wycliffite Bible cited under BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS).

Pusey, Edward Bouverie (1800–82), *Tractarian leader. He was educated at Eton and at *Christ Church, Oxford, and elected a Fellow of Oriel College in 1823. Not long afterwards he went to Göttingen and Berlin (1825), where he got to know many leading German biblical critics. During the next years he devoted himself to the study of Hebrew, Arabic, and other Semitic languages both at Oxford and in Germany. In 1828 he published An Historical Enquiry into the Probable Causes of the Rationalist Character lately predominant in the Theology of Germany (followed by Part 2 in 1830), in which he traced German rationalism to the dead orthodoxy of a Protestantism lacking in spiritual vitality; but the book was misunderstood to be a defence of his German masters and later he withdrew it. In 1828 he was ordained deacon and priest and also appointed Regius professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church. He held this office for the rest of his life. At the end of 1833 he became formally attached to the *Oxford Movement by contributing a Tract (No. 18) on Thoughts on the Benefits of the System of Fasting, Enjoined by our Church (pub. 1834), his prestige and erudition proving of great benefit to the cause. In 1836 he published three further Tracts on Scriptural Views of Holy Baptism (Nos. 67–9), which taught a very rigorous doctrine on the forgiveness of post-baptismal sin, and which, in their form, were significant as altering the scope of the Tracts from pamphlets to learned treatises. He also gave wholehearted support to the Library of the Fathers*, supplying its first volume (St *Augustine's Confessions, 1838) with a notable preface on the significance of *patristic study. His most influential activity, however, was his preaching which drew on the Greek Fathers and the Christian mystical tradition. His sermons, while stressing the heinousness of sin and nothingness of the world, rise to contemplative rapture in their emphasis on the indwelling of Christ, salvation as participation in God, and the blessedness of heaven. The death of his wife, in 1839, left an indelible mark on his life; from that time he practised many austerities. His foundation of St Saviour's, Leeds, in memory of his wife and daughter, created a model Tractarian slum parish. When, in 1841, J. H. *Newman, whom he had vigorously defended, withdrew from the movement, the leadership devolved largely on Pusey. His sermon on The Holy Eucharist, a Comfort to the Penitent, preached before the university in 1843, was condemned by the vice-chancellor and six doctors of divinity as teaching error, and Pusey was suspended from the university pulpit for two years. The condemnation, however, secured for it wide publicity in its printed form and drew attention to the doctrine of the *Real Presence, of which Pusey remained a devoted defender. In 1845 he assisted in the establishment of the first Anglican sisterhood, and throughout his life he continued to encourage efforts in this direction, giving generously from his own quite substantial private income. In 1846 he preached another sermon before the university on The Entire Absolution of the Penitent, in which he claimed for the C of E the power of the keys and the reality of priestly absolution. This sermon was important in encouraging the revival of the practice of private confession in the modern Anglican Church. As the principal champion of the High Church Movement he had frequently to defend its doctrines, e.g. in the *Gorham Case (q.v.), which issued in a number of conversions to the RC Church, though Pusey then and later spared no effort to dissuade his followers from joining it. He took a leading part in the controversy on the reform of the university, defending the old tutorial system. In 1862 he accused B. Jowett of teaching unsound doctrine, but the court of the chancellor of the university declined to hear the case. After the judgement of the Privy Council in favour of the authors of Essays and Reviews (1860), he wrote his famous letter to J. *Keble on The Church of England a Portion of Christ's One Holy Catholic Church, and a Means of Restoring Visible Unity: An Eirenicon (1865). In it he expressed his belief that union with Rome was prevented not so much by the official teaching of the RC Church as by unofficial devotions, e.g. to the BVM, and by the popular conceptions of *purgatory and *indulgences. This letter was answered by Newman in 1866. From 1867 he took an active part in the Ritualist controversy. In his sermon Will Ye also Go Away? (1867) he again defended the doctrine of the Real Presence and the corresponding ceremonial. In 1869 he published his second Eirenicon in answer to Newman, which dealt chiefly with the *Immaculate Conception, and in 1870 he issued the third, entitled Is Healthful Reunion Impossible?, principally on the doctrine of purgatory, the deutero-canonical books, and the Roman supremacy. This he sent to many RC bishops who attended the First *Vatican Council, but his hopes were disappointed by the definition of Papal infallibility. From 1870 to 1873 he fought vigorously for the retention of the *Athanasian Creed, threatened by the Fourth Report of the Ritual Commission, which advocated its abandonment. In 1880 in What is of Faith as to Everlasting Punishment? he defended against F. W. *Farrar the eternity of hell, basing himself on scriptural and patristic teaching. He died at Ascot Priory, Berks, on 16 Sept. 1882 and is buried in the nave of Christ Church cathedral, Oxford. After his death his library was bought by his friends, who endowed for it the institution in Oxford known as Pusey House. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 18 Sept.

Spiritual Letters, ed. J. O. Johnston and W. C. E. Newbolt (1898). Monumental Life by H. P. *Liddon (4 vols., London, 1893–7), with list of Pusey's writings, compiled by F. Madan, 4, pp. 395–446. Shorter Lives by M. Trench (anon.; ibid., 1900), G. W. E. Russell (ibid., 1907), and G. L. Prestige (ibid., 1933). P. Butler (ed.), Pusey Rediscovered (1983). D. [W. F.] Forrester, Young Doctor Pusey: A Study in Development (1989). H. C. G. Matthew, 'Edward Bouverie Pusey: From Scholar to Tractarian', JTS NS 32 (1981), pp. 101–24; A. Geck, 'The Concept of History in E. B. Pusey's First Enquiry into German Theology and its German Background', ibid. 38 (1987), pp. 387–408. [D.] G. Rowell, The Vision Glorious: Themes and Personalities of the Catholic Revival in Anglicanism (1983), pp. 71–97. J. O. Johnston in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 53–61. G. W. E. Russell in DECH, pp. 482–6. See also bibl. to OXFORD MOVEMENT.

Pusey, Philip Edward (1830–80), *patristic scholar. The only son of E. B. *Pusey, whom he assiduously assisted in his patristic and Semitic studies, he was an indefatigable student who, though deaf and a cripple, travelled all over Europe, working at MSS. He edited many of the writings of St *Cyril of Alexandria and laid the foundations for a critical edition of the four Gospels in the *Peshitta (pub., after further editing, by G. H. Gwilliam, 1901).

H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, 4 (1897), pp. 346–9.

Puseyism. A contemporary title for the *Tractarian Movement, generally used in an opprobrious sense, from its leader, E. B. *Pusey. Pusey was prob. singled out as he was the first contributor to the Tracts for the Times to append his initials (to No. 18, 21 Dec. 1833), the earlier Tracts being anonymous.

OED 12 (2nd edn., 1989), p. 892, s.v.

Pye. See PIE.

Pyrrhonism. Properly, the system of sceptical philosophy expounded *c.*300 BC by the Greek thinker, Pyrrho of Elis. Its characteristic doctrine was the denial of all possibility of attaining to certain knowledge. Conceived in an ethical interest, it maintained that when a man had understood the futility of intellectual inquiry, he would not be perturbed or lose his happiness by disquietude at his inability to arrive at any certain truth. In a wider sense, the term has come to be applied to any sceptical system of thought.

Pyrrho himself left no writings; the propagation of his doctrines was due to his disciple, Timon of Phlius (*c.*320–230 BC), of whose satirical poems (Σίλλοι) a few fragments survive. Pirrone Testimonianze, ed. F. Decleva Caizzi (Elenchos 5 [1981]). L. Robin, Pyrrhon et le scepticisme grec (1944). G. Striker in OCD (3rd edn., 1996), p. 1283, s.v. 'Pyrrhon'.

pyx (Gk. πυξίς, 'box-wood vessel'). The word denoted formerly any receptacle destined to contain the reserved *Host, and is still so used officially in the CIC (1983), can. 939. Acc. to ordinary present terminology it is used esp. of a small, mostly flat, gold or silver-gilt box which is used for carrying the Blessed Sacrament to the sick. For this purpose it is wrapped in a small *corporal and placed in a pyx-bag hung round the priest's neck. The term is also used for the vessel in which the large Host for exposition is kept in the *Tabernacle.

Braun, AG, pp. 280–347 and 456 f. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 1983–96, s.v. 'Pyxide'.

Q

'Q'. The symbol (usually held to come from the Ger. Quelle, 'source'), used by biblical critics in a strict sense for the hypothetical source of those passages in the Synoptic Gospels where Matthew and Luke show a close similarity to each other but not to any parallel passage in Mark. (See SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.) The passages consist largely of sayings of Jesus and some other material, e.g. on St *John the Baptist (Lk. 3: 17 f., cf. Mt. 3: 12; Lk. 7: 18–23, cf. Mt. 11: 2–6) and the account of the *Temptation of Christ (Lk. 4: 2–13, cf. Mt. 4: 2–11). The theory, elaborated on the basis of studies by Sir John Hawkins and A. *Harnack, was put into a widely accepted form by B. H. *Streeter, who held that (1) 'Q' was a document (not merely a group of oral traditions) written in Greek; (2) almost the whole of its content was used by either Matthew or Luke or both; and (3) that the order of the contents in Lk. is nearer to the original than in Mt. Attempts to reconstruct 'Q' have been made by A. Harnack and others, but certainty about its extent, order, and wording is not attainable. The existence of such a document has often been challenged, but the hypothesis (known as the 'two-document' hypothesis) that Mt. and Lk. are based on Mk. and 'Q', has retained wide support. In recent times some scholars have employed the symbol 'Q' or 'q' in a broader sense to denote not a common source of Mt. and Lk., but for their common material; and some have postulated a plurality of shorter sources, written or oral, all of which are collectively designated 'Q' or 'q'. More recently strenuous attempts have been made to determine stages in the composition of 'Q' and to characterize its theology and purpose.

J. C. Hawkins, Horae Synopticae (Oxford, 1899); A. Harnack, Sprüche und Reden Jesu (1907; Eng. tr., 1908); B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), chs. 7–11. T. W. Manson in H. D. A. Major, T. W. Manson, and C. J. Wright, The Mission and Message of Jesus (1937), pp. 331–440; repr. as The Sayings of Jesus (1949), pp. 39–148. V. Taylor, 'The Order of Q', JTS NS 4 (1953), pp. 27–31; id., 'The Original Order of Q', in A. J. B. Higgins (ed.), New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of Thomas Walter Manson (Manchester [1959]), pp. 246–69; both repr. in Taylor, New Testament Essays (1970), pp. 90–118. H. E. Tödt, Der Menschensohn in der synoptischen Überlieferung [1959], pp. 206–57; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 224–83. F. G. Downing, 'Towards the Rehabilitation of Q', New Testament Studies, 11 (1964–5), pp. 169–81. G. N. Stanton, 'On the Christology of Q', in B. Lindars, SSF, and S. S. Smalley (eds.), Christ and the Spirit in the New Testament: In Honour of Charles Francis Digby Moule (Cambridge, 1973), pp. 27–42. R. A. Edwards, The Theology of Q: Eschatology, Prophecy, and Wisdom (Philadelphia [1976]). J. S. Kloppenborg, The Formation of Q (Studies in Antiquity and Christianity, ibid. [1987]). R. A. Piper, Wisdom in the Q-Tradition (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 61; Cambridge, 1989). D. R. Catchpole, The Quest for Q (Edinburgh, 1993). See also works cited under SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

QAB. See QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY.

Qaraites. See KARAITES.

Qoheleth. See ECCLESIASTES.

Qorban. See CORBAN.

Quadragesima. Another name for the 40 days of *Lent and, occasionally, for the First Sunday in Lent (six weeks before *Easter). The word 'Quadragesimale' has been sometimes used of a set of sermons delivered in Lent.

Quadragesimo Anno. The encyclical letter of Pius XI, dated 15 May 1931, confirming and elaborating the theses of Rerum Novarum (q.v.). Points esp. stressed are: the evil results of free competition and administrative centralization; the incompatibility of strict Socialism with Catholicism; and the need for a reorganization of society on the model of the 'guild' system.

Text in AAS 23 (1931), pp. 177–228. An Eng. tr. was pub. by the *Catholic Truth Society under the title The Social Order [1931]; also in D. J. O'Brien and T. A. Shannon (eds.), Catholic Social Thought (Maryknoll, NY [1992]), pp. 42–79, with introd. pp. 40 f.

Quadratus, St (2nd cent.), the earliest Christian '*Apologist'. About 124 he wrote in Asia Minor an apology for the Christian faith addressed to the Emp. Hadrian, of which a single fragment survives in *Eusebius (HE 4. 3. 2.). He is prob. to be identified with the evangelist and prophet of the same name mentioned by Eusebius (ibid. 3. 37. 1; 5. 17. 3); there is also perhaps no compelling reason for rejecting his identification with the Bp. of *Athens (mentioned by Eusebius, ibid. 4. 23. 3), first made by *Jerome (De vir. ill. 19; ep. 70). Feast day, 26 May.

G. Bardy, 'Sur l'apologiste Quadratus', in Mélanges Henri Grégoire (Annuaire de l'Institut de Philologie et d'Histoire orientales et slaves, 9; Brussels, 1949), pp. 75–86. R. M. Grant, 'Quadratus, the first Christian Apologist', in R. H. Fischer (ed.), A Tribute to Arthur Vööbus (Chicago [1977]), pp. 177–83. CPG 1 (1983), p. 25 (no. 1060). Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 183–7; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 61 f. É. Amann in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1429–31; V. Zangara in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2957 f., s.v. 'Quadrato'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 2 (Cambridge, 1992), p. 727.

Quadrilateral, Lambeth. See LAMBETH QUADRILATERAL.

quadrivium. The medieval name for the group of four sciences consisting of music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy, which together with the *trivium (q.v.) of the inferior sciences constituted the *seven liberal arts.

Quaker. A nickname first given by Justice Bennet in 1650 to George *Fox because he bade the Justice tremble at the Word of the Lord. The word had been used, however, at least as early as 1647 of a foreign religious sect. Early Quakers also explained it by the spiritual trembling sometimes experienced at their religious meetings. See FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF.

See OED, s.v.

Quam Singulari. The decree issued, on 8 Aug. 1910, by the Sacred Congregation of the Sacraments, recommending that children be admitted to receive Holy Communion as soon as they have reached the 'age of discretion' (aetas discretionis), i.e., by the tests there given, at the age of about 7 years.

Text in AAS 2 (1910), pp. 577–83.

Quanta Cura. The encyclical, issued by Pope *Pius IX on 8 Dec. 1864, to which the famous *Syllabus Errorum (q.v.) condemning the doctrines of *liberalism was attached.

Text in the ASS 3 (1867), pp. 160–7; excerpts repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 795–7 (nos. 2890–6).

Quarant' Ore. See FORTY HOURS' DEVOTION.

Quare Impedit. In the C of E a form of legal action in the temporal court by which a right of presentation to an ecclesiastical benefice is tried. It may be brought by a patron against the bishop on his refusal to institute his presentee to a living. Since the passing of the Benefices Act 1898 its use has been restricted to cases where the objection to presentation is on the grounds of doctrine or ritual. The name is from the opening words of the writ formerly issued to start proceedings; now an ordinary writ of summons is used. See also DUPLEX QUERELA.

Quarles, Francis (1592–1644), religious poet. He was born at Romford, Greater London, and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge (1606–9). In 1613 he went to Heidelberg in the retinue of the Princess Palatine, returning to England by 1615. He now began to publish many biblical paraphrases, among them Job Militant (1624) and Sions Elegies wept by Jeremy (1624). About 1626 he went to *Dublin, where he became private secretary to J. *Ussher, Abp. of Armagh. In 1630 a collection of his biblical paraphrases was published with the title Divine Poems, and in 1632 there appeared his Divine Fancies, a small volume of epigrams and meditations in verse. They were followed by his popular Emblems (1635), perhaps the most original of emblem-books, though it was partly derived from two Jesuit manuals, Pia Desideria (1624) and Typus Mundi (1627). In 1638 Quarles published another emblem-book, Hieroglyphikes of the Life of Man. In 1640 he was made chronologer to the city of London. In his later years he wrote chiefly devotional prose. His Enchiridion (1640), a collection of thoughts on religion and morals, achieved great popularity, and he also wrote The Loyall Convert (1644), a pamphlet defending the Royalist cause, of which he was an ardent partisan. His reputation increased after his death through the publication of his posthumous works, among them The Shepherd's Oracles (1646), a satire in verse on the contemporary religious disputes. Though often overladen with conceits and epithets in the style of his time, Quarles's poetry betrays deep religious feeling, coloured by a keen sense of sin and of the transitoriness of life.

Complete Works ed. A. B. Grosart (Chertsey Worthies' Library, 3 vols., privately pr., 1880–1), with biog. introd., 1, pp. ix–lxvi. The primary authority is the brief Life by U. Quarles, widow, prefixed to Quarles's posthumously pub. Solomon's Recantation, entitled Ecclesiastes Paraphrased (1645) [no pagination]. K. J. Höltgen, Francis Quarles (Buchreihe der Anglia, Zeitschrift für Englische Philologie, 19; 1978), with summary in Eng. J. Horden, Francis Quarles (1592–1644): A Bibliography of his Works to the Year 1800 (Oxford Bibliographical Society Publications, NS 2; 1953), with introd., pp. 1–16. Further bibl. in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1199–201. S. Lee in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 92–6.

Quarr Abbey, near Ryde, Isle of Wight. In 1131 or 1132 Baldwin de Redvers founded a monastery on the site, which was originally colonized from *Savigny. With other houses dependent on Savigny, it was affiliated to the *Cistercians in 1147. It became the most considerable religious foundation on the island and survived until the *Dissolution in 1537. Soon afterwards the buildings were destroyed, and only a small part of the medieval structure remains. In 1908 the site was acquired by the *Benedictine monks exiled from *Solesmes (q.v.), who had previously (1901) settled at Appuldurcombe House, near Wroxall, in the centre of the island. A fine abbey in red brick in a Flemish style was erected (consecrated 1912). After the First World War many of the monks returned to Solesmes. The Abbey is now an independent house of the Solesmes Congregation. It was for some time an important centre of liturgical and historical studies.

S. F. Hockey, OSB, Quarr Abbey and its Lands 1132–1631 (Leicester, 1970). S. C. Kaines-Smith in VCH, Hampshire, 5 (1912), pp. 152–4, with map and illustration of the medieval abbey.

Quartodecimanism. The early custom in some places of following Jewish practice in always observing *Easter, i.e. the Christian *Passover, on the 14th day of the month *Nisan, whatever the day of the week, and not (as elsewhere) on the following Sunday. The tradition was esp. rooted in Asia Minor, where it was believed to derive from St *John the Apostle, and upheld by *Melito of Sardis and *Apollinarius of Hierapolis. On a visit to Rome *c.*155 St *Polycarp, Bp. of Smyrna, sought to persuade Anicetus to conform to Quartodeciman usage. Though the Pope refused, he had no scruples about Polycarp's continuing his own custom. Thirty or forty years later a more rigid line was taken up by Pope *Victor, who tried to suppress Quartodecimanism; and when *Polycrates, Bp. of Ephesus, refused to comply, Victor forthwith excommunicated him. Despite this stern measure, which was met with a sharp rebuke from St *Irenaeus (ap. Eusebius, HE 5. 23–5), the Asiatic Churches retained their practice for the time being. At a later date the Quartodecimans organized themselves as a separate Church. They survived as a sect down to the 5th cent. See also PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

F. E. *Brightman, 'The Quartodeciman Question', JTS 25 (1923–4), pp. 254–70. B. Lohse, Das Passafest der Quartadecimaner (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, 54; Gütersloh, 1953). C. W. Dugmore, 'A Note on the Quartodecimans', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 4 (TU 79; 1961), pp. 411–21. C. Mohrmann, 'Le Conflit pascal au II^{e} siècle', VC 16 (1962), pp. 154–71, with further refs. W. Huber, Passa und Ostern: Untersuchungen zur Osterfeier der alten Kirche (Beiheft zur ZNTW 35; 1969), esp. pp. 1–88. R. Cantalamessa, La Pasqua della nostra Salvezza [Turin, 1971], esp. pp. 116–32 and 147–56. C. C.

Richardson, 'A New Solution to the Quartodeciman Riddle', JTS NS 24 (1973), pp. 74–84. T. J. Talley, The Origins of the Liturgical Year (New York [1986]), pp. 5–33. See also bibl. to EASTER and PASCHAL CONTROVERSIES.

Quasimodo Sunday. A title in the W. Church for *Low Sunday, derived from the opening words of the *Introit at Mass on that day (Quasi modo geniti, 'As new-born babes', 1 Pet. 2: 2).

Quattro Coronati (i.e. 'the Four Crowned Ones'). A group of four saints, commemorated in the W. Church on 8 Nov., to whom a famous ancient basilica on the Celian Hill at *Rome is dedicated. Considerable doubt reigns as to which particular saints are intended. The *Roman Martyrology for 8 Nov. supposes the conflation of two groups of five and four martyrs respectively whose names it gives. It appears from other sources that the one group were five sculptors of Pannonia who were martyred for refusing to make a statue of Aesculapius for a heathen temple, and the other group four martyrs who were buried not at Rome but at Albano in the Alban Hills. They are the patrons of stonemasons.

AASS, Nov. 2 (2) (1931), pp. 590 f., and 3 (1910), pp. 748–84. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), 1, pp. 493–8. On the church, R. Krautheimer and S. Corbett in R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 4 (Rome, 1970), pp. 1–39 [in Eng.], with full bibl. A. Amore, OFM, and P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 10 (Rome, 1968), cols. 1276–304, s.v., with bibl.

Queen Anne's Bounty (QAB). A fund incorporated by Queen *Anne in 1704 by letters patent pursuant to Queen Anne's Bounty Act 1703, to receive the first fruits (*annates) and tenths which the Appointment of Bishops Act 1533 had diverted from Rome to the Crown under *Henry VIII. On surrendering them for the benefit of the Church, she directed their use for the augmentation of the livings of the poorer Anglican clergy. Grants of capital (not income) were made to poorly endowed benefices; and later the fund was empowered to make loans (from 1777) and disbursements (from 1803) for the building and repair of parsonage houses, etc. Between 1809 and 1820 it received grants of over £1,000,000 from Parliament and at various times large private benefactions. By the Tithe Act 1925, QAB was charged with the collection of ecclesiastical tithe rentcharge and its distribution to benefices and ecclesiastical corporations. Annates and tenths, whose value had dwindled to almost nothing, were finally extinguished by the First Fruits and Tenths Measure 1926. When the Tithe Act 1936 extinguished tithe rentcharge, QAB received Government redemption stock as compensation, the amount being assessed by the Tithe Redemption Commission which was dissolved on 1 April 1960. On 1 April 1948, by the Church Commissioners Measure 1947, QAB and the *Ecclesiastical Commissioners were united in a new body, the *Church Commissioners for England (q.v.).

A. Savidge, The Foundation and Early Years of Queen Anne's Bounty (CHS, 1955); G. F. A. Best, Temporal Pillars: Queen Anne's Bounty, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the Church of England (Cambridge, 1964).

Quentin, Henri (1872–1935), *Benedictine scholar. Professed at *Maredsous in 1895, he was transferred to *Solesmes in 1897 and ordained priest in 1902. Five years later *Pius X called him to Rome as a member of the commission on the revision of the *Vulgate, in which capacity he superintended the photographing of most of the important Vulgate MSS at Paris, Rome, London, and elsewhere, including the entire *Codex Amiatinus at Florence; and he was the principal editor of the text of the *Pentateuch (1926–36). His own writings include J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900) and Les Martyrologes historiques du moyen âge (1908), the latter containing discussions of the text of the *martyrologies of *Bede and other early medieval compilers. He also issued several writings in defence of his much-contested principles for establishing the Vulgate text. The new Office of the Feast of the *Sacred Heart (1928) was, for the most part, his work.

C. Mohlberg, OSB, 'Commemorazione dell'abbate Dom Enrico Quentin', Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Serie 3, Rendiconti, 11 (for 1935; 1936), pp. 13–39, with list of his works, pp. 34–9.

Quesnel, Pasquier (1634–1719), French *Jansenist. Educated by the *Jesuits, he studied philosophy and theology at the *Sorbonne and entered the Congregation of the *Oratory in 1657, where he was soon entrusted with the direction of students and became the author of a number of spiritual books. In 1672 he published Abrégé de la morale de l'Évangile, with a commendatory preface by the Bp. of Châlons-sur-Marne; its subsequent editions, expanded and revised, became famous under the title of Le Nouveau Testament en français, avec des réflexions morales sur chaque verset, usually called Réflexions morales. As against the formalized methods of spirituality in the manuals, the work emphasized the value of the close study of the Scriptures in increasing true devotion. In 1675 he published a scholarly edition of the works of Pope *Leo I which, however, was placed on the *Index owing to the *Gallican theories developed in the notes. In 1681 he was removed to Orléans on the charge of upholding Jansenist views. Three years later he refused to subscribe to an anti-Jansenist formula imposed by his superiors and went to Brussels, where he lived together with A. *Arnauld. In 1703 he was imprisoned by the Abp. of Malines at the instigation of Philip V, but escaped and fled to the Netherlands the following year. His subsequent life was filled with defences of himself and his Réflexions, which, commended by the Abp. of *Paris, Cardinal L. A. *de Noailles, went through many editions, but was condemned by a brief of *Clement XI in 1708 and, five years later, by the bull '*Unigenitus'. Among his doctrines condemned by the bull are the theses that no grace is given outside the Church, that grace is irresistible, that without grace man is incapable of any good, and that all acts of a sinner, even prayer and attendance at Mass, are sins. Quesnel never accepted the condemnation, and though he asked for and received the Last Sacraments, he appealed to a future General Council for his vindication.

L. Batterel, Mémoires domestiques pour servir à l'histoire de l'Oratoire (ed. A. M. P. Ingold, 5 vols., 1902–11), with list of Quesnel's writings, 4, pp. 424–93. Correspondance de Pasquier Quesnel, ed. A. Le Roy (2 vols., 1900). Causa Quesnelliana (Brussels, 1704; docs. ed. by order of the Abp. of Malines). A. Le Roy, Un Janséniste en exil (1900; with selection of Quesnel's Letters). J. A. G. Tans, Pasquier Quesnel et les Pays-Bas: Correspondance, publiée avec introduction et annotations (Publications de l'Institut Français d'Amsterdam, Maison Descartes, 6; 1960); id. and H. Schmitz du Moulin, Pasquier Quesnel devant la Congrégation de l'Index: Correspondance avec Francesco Barberini et mémoires sur la mise à l'Index de son édition des œuvres de saint Léon publiés avec introduction et annotations (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 71; 1974). L. Ceyssens, 'Les Papiers de Quesnel saisis à Bruxelles et transportés à Paris en 1703 et 1704', RHE 44 (1949), pp. 508–51. J. A. G. Tans, 'Port-Royal entre le réveil spirituel et le drame gallican: le rôle de Pasquier Quesnel', Lias, 4 (1977) pp. 99–114. Id. and L. Ceyssens, 'Pasquier Quesnel (1634–1719). Autour de l'Unigenitus', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 59 (1983), pp. 201–66, repr. in idd., Autour de l'Unigenitus (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 56; 1987), pp. 583–648. J. Carreyre in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1460–535, s.v. 'Quesnel et le Quesnellisme'; J. A. G. Tans in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2732–46, s.v.

Quest of the Historical Jesus. See HISTORICAL JESUS, QUEST OF THE.

Quicunque Vult (Lat., 'Whosoever wishes' [salvus esse, 'to be saved']). An alternative name for the '*Athanasian Creed' (q.v.) from its opening words.

Quien, Michel Le. See LE QUIEN, MICHEL.

Quiercy, Synods of. Of the several synods held in the 9th cent. at Quiercy (palatium Carisiacum), near Laon, the two most notable are:

(1) Synod of 849, under *Hincmar of Reims. It condemned the strict Augustinianism of *Gottschalk, who was sentenced to degradation and imprisonment at Hautvillers.

(2) Synod of 853, also under Hincmar. It repeated its condemnation of Gottschalk's doctrines, publishing four chapters ('capitula'), namely (a) that God has predestined to life only; (b) that human free will, lost by Adam, was restored to us by Christ; (c) that God would have all men to be saved; and (d) that Jesus Christ suffered for all. These articles were rejected by the Church of Lyons and formally repudiated in 855 by the Council of *Valence (q.v.).

(1) Hardouin, 5, cols. 17–20; Mansi, 14 (1769), cols. 919–22; W. Hartmann (ed.), Die Konzilien der Karolingischen Teilreiche 843–859 (MGH, Concilia, 3; 1984), pp. 194–99. Hefele and Leclercq, 4 (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 150–6, and 4 (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1308–10.

(2) Hardouin, 5, cols. 57 f.; Mansi, 14 (1769), cols. 995–8; W. Hartmann, op. cit, pp. 294–7. Hefele and Leclercq, 4 (pt. 1; 1911), pp. 197–9, and 4 (pt. 2; 1911), pp. 1324, 1390–8. B. Lavaud, OP, in DTC 12 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2920–2, s.v. 'Prédestination', with Lat. text and Fr. tr. of the capitula.

Quietism. The term 'Quietism', which is often used loosely of any system of spirituality minimizing human activity and responsibility, is usually restricted to the teaching of certain 17th-cent. writers, esp. that of M. de *Molinos, and, to a lesser degree, Mme *Guyon and Abp. *Fénelon.

The fundamental principle of Quietism is its condemnation of all human effort. Its exponents seem to have exaggerated earlier teaching, such as that of St *Teresa of Ávila, on the 'prayer of quiet'. In their view, man, in order to be perfect, must attain complete passivity and annihilation of will, abandoning himself to God to such an extent that he cares neither for Heaven nor Hell, nor for his own salvation. This state is reached by a certain form of mental prayer in which the soul consciously refuses not only all discursive meditation but any distinct act such as desire for virtue, love of Christ, or adoration of the Divine Persons, and simply rests in the presence of God in pure faith. As this passive prayer expresses the height of perfection, it makes any outward acts of mortification, almsgiving, going to confession, etc., superfluous. Once a man has attained to it, sin is impossible, for then all he does or thinks is the work of God. The devil may, indeed, tempt him and even compel him to commit actions that would be sinful in others, but when his will has become completely annihilated they cease to be sins in him; on the contrary, the man who has reached this state must carefully guard against being disquieted by such distractions, lest he should be disturbed in his state of mystic death.

Quietism was condemned in the person of M. de Molinos by *Innocent XI in his bull 'Coelestis Pastor' of 19 Nov. 1687. Sixty-eight propositions from Molinos' writings were condemned. Other notable exponents of Quietist teaching were P. M. Petrucci (1636–1701) and the *Barnabite, F. Lacombe, the director of Mme Guyon.

H. Heppe, Geschichte der quietistischen Mystik in der katholischen Kirche (1875). J.-R. Armogathe, Le quiétisme (Que sais-je?, 1545; 1973). M. Petrocchi, Il quietismo italiano del seicento (Storia e Letteratura, 20; 1948). J. Orcibal, La Rencontre du Carmel thérésien avec les mystiques du nord (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Section des Sciences Religieuses, 70; 1959), and other works. R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), esp. pp. 231–87. Pourrat, 4 (2nd edn., 1928), pp. 128–295. E. Pacho, OCD, and J. Le Brun in Dict. Sp. 12 (pt. 2; 1986), cols. 2756–842, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under FÉNELON, MOLINOS, and GUYON.

Quinisext Synod. See TRULLAN SYNOD.

Quiñones, Francisco de (d. 1540), reforming cardinal. ('Quignon', the French form of his name, is also used.) Born at León of a noble Spanish family, he entered the *Franciscan Order in 1498. In 1517 he became Definitor General and in 1523 and 1526 he was elected Minister *General of the *Observants, in which office he worked for a strengthening of discipline, promoted missions and studies, and induced many Conventuals to join the Observants. In 1526, and esp. in 1527 after the Sack of Rome and the imprisonment of *Clement VII, he mediated successfully between *Charles V and the Pope, who made him cardinal in the same year or early in 1528. From 1529 he took an active part in the question of the divorce of *Henry VIII, defending the interests of Queen Catherine.

It was then that Quiñones, by order of the Pope, devoted himself to the compilation of a new *Breviary, which *Paul III published in 1535, often called the 'Breviary of the Holy Cross' after the cardinal's titular church. It abolished almost entirely the difference of rank in the Feasts as well as *antiphons, *versicles, and *Little Office of Our Lady, and reduced to a minimum the readings from the Lives of the Saints. On the other hand, the whole *Psalter was recited during the week and nearly the whole of the Bible read during the year. The several Hours were almost equal in length, each containing only three Psalms, and Mattins on all days only three lessons. A second recension of it appeared in 1536. Although special permission was necessary for the recitation of Quiñones' Breviary, which was originally intended only for private use, it soon began to penetrate even into the public offices of the religious orders and more than 100 editions appeared between 1536 and 1566. In other quarters it was attacked for its disregard of tradition and it was eventually proscribed by *Paul IV in 1558.

Quiñones' Breviary considerably influenced T. *Cranmer, whose early drafts of a reformed Service Book and Calendar follow it closely; and with its uniformity, its continuous reading of Scripture, the recitation of the whole Psalter during a given period, and the general simplification by cutting out antiphons, responses, and the like, the BCP of 1549 and, through it, the final shape of the BCP, owe a good deal to the 'Breviary of the Holy Cross'.

Quiñones' Breviary of 1535 was repr. by J. Wickham Legg (Cambridge, 1888); the 2nd recension, of 1536, ed. id. (HBS 35 (text) and 42 (liturgical introd., Life of Quiñones, notes and indices); 1908–12). [Fernando] Marquis d'Alcedo, Le Cardinal Quiñones et la Sainte Ligue (Bayonne, 1910). J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Warum ist das Reformbrevier des Kardinals Quiñonez gescheitert?', ZKT 78 (1956), pp. 98–107; H. Boone Porter, 'Hispanic Influences on Worship in the English Tongue', in J. N. Alexander (ed.), Time and Community: In Honor of Thomas Julian Talley (Washington, DC [1990]), pp. 171–84, esp. pp. 171–4. See also works cited under BREVIARY and COMMON PRAYER, BOOK OF.

Quinquagesima. Properly the period of 50 days preceding *Easter which begins on the Sunday before *Ash Wednesday; but the word came to be generally applied only to the Sunday mentioned. In earlier times a new stage in the pre-Lenten discipline, e.g. abstinence from fleshmeat, began on this day. It ceased to have any liturgical significance and was suppressed in the RC Church in 1969. It has also been dropped in some modern Anglican liturgies. The word is occasionally used also of the 50 days which extend from Easter to *Pentecost.

A. Chavasse, 'Temps de préparation à la Pâque d'après quelques livres liturgiques romains', Rech. S.R. 37 (1950), pp. 125–45, esp. III, 'La "Cinquantaine" préparatoire au jour de Pâques ou Quinquagésime', p. 130. P. Siffrin, OSB, in EC 10 (1953), col. 421, s.v. See also bibl. to SEPTUAGESIMA and SEXAGESIMA.

Quinque Viae. The five 'ways' or arguments by which St *Thomas Aquinas (Summa Theol., 1, q. 2, art. 3) sought to prove the existence of God a posteriori, i.e. from effects of His which are known to us. Aquinas's arguments conclude that (1) change (motus) implies a first unchanging changer; (2) that a sequence of efficient causes, and their effects, such as we find in the world, implies an uncaused first cause; (3) that the existence of things able to be generated and to perish implies the existence of what is not generable and perishable (i.e. 'necessary') and that the existence of what is necessary ultimately implies the existence of something the existence of which derives from nothing apart from itself; (4) that the comparisons we make (more or less 'true', 'good', 'noble', etc.) imply a standard of comparison which is itself perfect in all these qualities; (5) that the fulfilment by inanimate or unintelligent objects of an end to which they invariably tend implies the existence of a purpose or intelligence operative in nature.

A. [J. P.] Kenny, The Five Ways: St Thomas Aquinas' Proofs of God's Existence (Studies in Ethics and the Philosophy of Religion, 1969); F. Van Steenberghen, Le Problème de l'Existence de Dieu dans les Écrits de S. Thomas d'Aquin (Philosophes médiévaux, 23; 1980). See also works on the theology of Thomas Aquinas, cited s.v.

quire. The older spelling, still retained in the BCP, of the word now usually spelt choir.

Quirinus. The signature over which the series of 69 brilliantly written letters on the First *Vatican Council was published in the Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung in 1869–70. The writer is now known to have been J. J. I. von *Döllinger, who relied on material supplied by informants residing in Rome, among them Lord *Acton and J. *Friedrich. The letters, which were directed against the dominant party at the Council which was pressing for the definition of the Pope's Infallibility, maintained that the anti-infallibilist cause suffered from the many non-theological factors working in favour of an early definition, e.g. the Pope's personal influence and the disproportionate representation of Italians at the Council. Admittedly the work of a strong partisan, they remain one of the primary sources for the history of the Council. See also JANUS.

An Eng. tr. was pub. in 1870. See also [E.] C. Butler, OSB, The Vatican Council (1930), 1, ch. 14, and V. Conzemius, 'Die Verfasser der "Römischen Briefe von Konzil" des "Quirinus"', Freiburger Geschichtsblätter, 52 (1963–64), pp. 229–56.

Qumran. The site of some ruins at the NW end of the *Dead Sea, *c.*8 miles S. of *Jericho. It was near here that the first of the so-called *Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in 1947, to be followed by further finds in later years. Excavations carried out between 1951 and 1956 show that the site was occupied principally between *c.*130 BC and AD 68/9, probably with a break caused either by military aggression (*c.*40 BC) or an earthquake (31 or 24 BC) and lasting to the end of the reign of *Herod the Great. Subsequently the site was used as a Roman military outpost until the fall of Masada (AD 74); coin evidence also suggests that it was occupied by Jewish insurgents during the revolt of *Bar Cochba (AD 132–5).

R. de Vaux, OP, L'archéologie et les manuscrits de la Mer Morte (Schweich Lectures for 1959; London, 1961; rev. Eng. tr., 1973). J. T. Milik, Dix ans de découvertes dans le Désert de Juda (1957; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 26; 1959); E.-M. Laperrousaz, Qoumrân: L'établissement essénien des bords de la mer Morte (1976); P. R. Davies, Qumran (Cities of the Biblical World; Guildford, 1982); P. R. Callaway, The History of the Qumran Community (Journal for the Study of the Pseudepigrapha, Supplement Series, 3; Sheffield [1988]), pp. 29–51. E.-M. Laperrousaz and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 9 (1979), cols. 737–805, s.v.

Qumran Scrolls. See DEAD SEA SCROLLS.

quoad omnia. The name given to parishes in *Scotland which were a unit of administration in respect of all things civil and ecclesiastical. If, however, through changed circumstances, e.g. owing to the growth of population, the parochial church was found insufficient and a portion of the original parish was erected by the Church of Scotland into a parish with a church of its own, the new parish was designated quoad sacra, i.e. as provided in respect of ecclesiastical matters alone. Historically, the stipend payable to the minister of a quoad omnia parish formed a burden on the *teinds related to the parish. Where a quoad sacra parish was erected, however, the stipend of the minister was secured by endowments acquired by the Church at the time and by the liberality of the members. With the standardization of stipend consequent upon the enactment of the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowments) Act 1925 and the later discontinuance of the parish as a unit of Local Government administration, all parishes of the Church of Scotland are now in effect quoad sacra ones.

quoad sacra. See QUOAD OMNIA.

quodlibet. The name of an academic exercise in medieval universities, chiefly Paris. Twice a year, before Christmas and Easter, a disputation was held in which the master undertook to deal with any questions (disputatio de quolibet) raised by any of the participants (a quolibet). The subjects ranged from abstruse questions of theology to the smallest details of daily life. The answers of the masters were afterwards drawn up in writing and published. Thus, for example, we possess eleven quodlibets of St *Thomas Aquinas and part of a twelfth. The exercise was not compulsory. The practice seems to have begun in the time of *Alexander of Hales and Guerric of St Quentin and was at its height in the later 13th and early 14th cents. In the course of the 14th cent. its character changed, and it came to be part of the exercise required for a bachelor seeking the licentiate. One of the most famous encounters was between St Thomas Aquinas and John *Pecham on the doctrine of the soul.

P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique (Bibliothèque thomiste, 5 and 21; 1925–35); id., 'Où en est la question du Quodlibet?', Revue du moyen âge latin, 2 (1946), pp. 405–14. J. F. Wippel, 'The Quodlibetal Question as a Distinctive Genre', in Les Genres Littéraires dans les Sources Théologiques et Philosophiques Médiévales: Actes du Colloque international de Louvain-la-Neuve 25 27 mai 1981 (Université Catholique de Louvain, Publications de l'Institut d'Études médiévales, 2nd ser. 5; 1982), pp. 67–84.

Quo Vadis? Acc. to a legend, first found in the 'Acts of St *Peter', the words 'Domine quo vadis?' (Lat., 'Lord, whither goest Thou?') were spoken by St *Peter when, fleeing from Rome, he met Christ on the *Appian Way. The Lord answered: 'I am coming to be crucified again', words which Peter took to mean that He was to suffer again in His disciple; so he turned back to Rome, where he was martyred. The legend is mentioned by St *Ambrose, though his text originally had 'Domine quo venis?', changed in later MSS. The small church of S. Maria delle Piante on the Appian Way, commonly called Domine Quo Vadis, which was rebuilt early in the 17th cent., commemorates the incident.

The development of the legend can be studied in 'Acts of St Peter', 35; *Origen, Comm. in Joan. 20. 12 (PG 14, 600B); Ambrose, Ep. 75a.13 (ed. M. Zelzer; CSEL 82 (pt. 3; 1982), p. 90; formerly pr. between epp. 21 and 22, PL 16. 1011).

R

Rabanus Maurus (*c.*780–856), poet, teacher, and ecclesiastical administrator. Entering the abbey of *Fulda as a child *oblate, he was sent *c.*800 for further study to *Alcuin at Tours. He returned to Fulda as master of the cloister school (818) and abbot (824–42). His pupils (818–42) included *Walafrid Strabo, *Lupus of Ferrières, and the pioneer vernacular scholar, *Otfrid of Weissenburg. As abbot Rabanus supervised extensive building work at Fulda and its dependencies and governed a total confraternity of over 600 monks. His active role in Carolingian politics was interrupted in 841 by the dynastic struggle which followed the death of *Louis I. Rabanus returned to public life as Abp. of Mainz (847–56), holding important synods in 847, 848, and 852. He was venerated as a saint in Fulda and Mainz, but never formally canonized. Feast day, 4 Feb.

As a schoolmaster Rabanus wrote textbooks on grammar and the reckoning of time. He wrote commentaries (many still unprinted) on nearly every Book of the Bible, and he enriched the Fulda liturgy with new hymns and a revised martyrology. As abbot he wrote several treatises on ecclesiastical law and practice, the best known being the De institutione clericorum, a vade-mecum for the clergy; as archbishop he addressed specific issues of discipline (e.g. *chorepiscopi) and theology (notably in his De praedestinatione against *Gottschalk). Over 50 of Rabanus' letters survive, a comprehensive series of sermons for Sundays and feast-days throughout the year, and about 100 poems. His earliest work, the De laudibus sancti crucis, in alternating prose and acrostic verse with superimposed drawings, had a wide and sustained success. The De rerum naturis (also called De universo and De originibus rerum), written in his enforced leisure *c.*842, is an encyclopaedic view of Christian belief and practice and of man in society and in the natural world.

Works ed. J. Pamelius and G. Colvenerius (6 vols., bound in 3, Cologne, 1626–7); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 107–12. Modern edns. by E. Dümmler of his letters in MGH, Epistolae, 5 (1898), pp. 379–516, with appendix of frags. pp. 517–33, and of his poems, MGH, Poetae, 2 (1884), pp. 154–244, with 'Appendix Hymnorum Incertae Originis', pp. 244–58; by A. Koepler of his De institutione clericorum (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, no. 5; 1901); by J. McCulloh of his Martyrologium (CCCM 44, 1979, pp. 1–161), and by W. M. Stevens of his De computo (ibid., pp. 163–331). Facsimile edn. from MS Vienna, Nat. Bibl., lat. 652, of his Liber de laudibus sanctae crucis, with introd. by K. Holter (Codices Selecti, 33 and 33*; Graz, 1972–3). The only contemporary source for Rabanus' life is Rudolf of Fulda, Miracula Sanctorum in Fuldenses Ecclesias translatorum, ed. G. Waitz in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 328–41, concluding (pp. 340 f.) with a detailed list of Rabanus' writings. G. M. Dreves, Hymnologische Studien zu Venantius Fortunatus und Rabanus Maurus (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, III. Reihe, no. 3; 1908), pp. 55–136. P. Lehmann, 'Zu Hrabans geistiger Bedeutung', in Sankt Bonifatius: Gedenkgabe zum zwölfhundertsten Todestag (Fulda, 1954), pp. 473–87; repr. in his Erforschung des Mittelalters, 3 (Stuttgart, 1960), pp. 198–212. W. Böhne (ed.), Hrabanus Maurus und seine Schule: Festschrift der Rabanus-Maurus-Schule 1980 (Fulda, 1980), with full bibl. by H. Spelsberg, pp. 210–28. R. Kottje and H. Zimmermann (eds.), Hrabanus Maurus: Lehrer, Abt und Bischof (Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur, Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftliche Klasse, Einzelveröffentlichungen, 4; Mainz [1982]). M. Reuter, Text und Bild im Codex 132 der Bibliothek von Montecassino 'Liber Rabani de originibus rerum' (Münchener Beiträge zur Mediävistik und Renaissance-Forschung, 34; 1984). Raby, pp. 179–81, with bibl. p. 474; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 1 (1964), pp. 220–7. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 314–22. H. Peltier in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1601–20, s.v.; R. Kottje in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 4 (1983), cols. 166–96, s.v. 'Hrabanus Maurus'; id. in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 1–10, s.v.

Rabbi (Heb., 'my master'). A Jewish title of respect given to honoured teachers by disciples and others (Mt. 23: 7). Christ is so addressed in the Gospels (Jn. 1: 38, etc.). Shortly after NT times it became added as a recognized title to the name of Jewish religious teachers, e.g. 'Rabbi Johanan'. The Romans invested the rabbis with delegated judicial powers which lasted in Europe until political emancipation in modern times. Today in the W. rabbis are little more than ministers of religion, but in Israel they are state functionaries.

Rabbula (d. 435), Bp. of *Edessa from 412. The leading figure in the Syrian Church in his day, he strongly opposed *Nestorianism, and attacked in particular the writings of *Theodore of Mopsuestia (d. 428). He translated into Syriac St *Cyril of Alexandria's 'De Recta Fide', and was also the author of some letters and hymns, a sermon against Nestorius, and a number of canons regulating the life of monks and clergy. It was once thought that he was responsible for producing the *Peshitta NT. His successor in the see was *Ibas.

Rabbula of Edessa is not to be confused with the scribe Rabbula, after whom the illuminated 'Rabbula Gospels' MS of 586 in Florence (Laur., Plut. I. 56) is named.

J. J. Overbeck (ed.), S. Ephraemi Syri, Rabulae Episcopi Edesseni, Balaei aliorumque Opera Selecta (Oxford, 1865), containing text of Vita (pp. 159–209), prose works (pp. 210–44), and some poetical and other texts (pp. 245–8, 362–78). Rabbula's canons ed., with introd. and Eng. tr., in A. Vööbus, Syriac and Arabic Documents regarding Legislation relative to Syrian Asceticism (Papers of the Estonian Theological Society in Exile, 11; Stockholm, 1960), pp. 24–50. P. Peeters, SJ, 'La Vie de Rabboula, évêque d'Édesse', Rech. S.R. 18 (1928), pp. 170–204 [very sceptical about the value of Vita]. G. G. Blum, Rabbula von Edessa: Der Christ, der Bischof, der Theologe (CSCO 300; 1969), with bibl. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 249 f. (nos. 6491–7). I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 96–9. E. Venables in DCB 4 (1887), pp. 532–4, s.v. 'Rabbûlas'; I. Ziadé in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1620–6, s.v. 'Rabboula'. See also bibl. to PESHITTA.

Raccolta (Ital., 'collection'). An officially approved RC prayer book containing all the devotions to which Papal *indulgences were attached. The first Raccolta was published in 1807 at Rome by Telesforo Galli. The Raccolta has now been supplanted by the much briefer 'Enchiridion Indulgentiarum' of 1968, revised in 1986.

Racovian Catechism. The first statement of Socinian principles. Drawn up by Valentin Schmalz and Johannes Völkel on the basis of drafts by F. P. *Socinus, it was published in Polish in 1605 at Raków, an early stronghold of Socinianism in S. Poland. Versions in German (1608) and Latin (1609) followed. It was professedly not a formal confessional creed, designed to be dogmatically imposed on the Socinians, but a body of opinions which would point believers towards eternal life. In eight sections it dealt with (1) the Scriptures (the only source of truth), (2) the way of salvation (knowledge and a holy life), (3) the knowledge of God ('the Supreme Lord of all things', with rejection of the Trinity), (4) the Person of Christ (a man by his marvellous life and resurrection raised to divine power), (5) the Prophetic Office of Christ, (6) the Kingship of Christ, (7) the Priesthood of Christ, and (8) the Church (the body of Christians who uphold and profess the saving doctrines). A copy of the Latin version, sent to England with a dedication to *James I, was publicly burnt in 1614.

An Eng. version by J. *Biddle was pub. at Amsterdam in 1652; it was formally burnt in 1654 by order of O. *Cromwell. New Eng. edn. by Thomas Rees with Historical Introduction, London, 1818.

Rad, Gerhard von (1901–71), OT scholar. He was born at Nürnberg and educated at the Universities of Erlangen and Tübingen. After serving as Privatdozent at Leipzig (1930–4), he held chairs at Jena (1934–45), Göttingen (1945–9), and Heidelberg (1949–66). His most important writings are concerned with three main fields of study: Deuteronomy; the literary analysis, *form criticism, *traditio-historical criticism, and theological interpretation of the *Hexateuch; and the theology of the OT. On Deuteronomy he wrote his first substantial work, Das Gottesvolk im Deuteronomium (1929), Deuteronomium-Studien (1947; Eng. tr., 1953) and a commentary in Das Alte Testament Deutsch entitled Das fünfte Buch Mose (1964; Eng. tr., 1966). He attributed Deuteronomy to the preaching activity of priestly and Levitical circles who sought to restore the ancient traditions of the Israelite amphictyony, emphasized the influence of covenant formulas on its structure, and claimed that the idea of the 'Holy War' is an important element in its teaching. This last idea he also propounded in Der Heilige Krieg im alten Israel (1951). His principal writings on the Hexateuch were Die Priesterschrift im Hexateuch (1934), Das formgeschichtliche Problem des Hexateuchs (1938, repr. in his collected works), and his commentary on Genesis in Das Alte Testament Deutsch entitled Das erste Buch Mose (3 vols., 1949–53; Eng. tr., 1961). He applied form-critical methods to the entire structure of the Hexateuch and claimed that the short historical credo or cultic confession in Deut. 26: 5 f. was a miniature of the Hexateuch. He further maintained that the Exodus-Conquest traditions (the festival legend of the Feast of *Weeks at Gilgal) and the Sinai traditions (the festival legend of the renewal of the covenant at Shechem) were originally separate, and he emphasized the creative unifying work of the compiler. His Theologie des Alten Testament (2 vols., 1957–60; Eng. tr., 1962–5) was also based on form-critical study and reflects important aspects of current contemporary German theological debate. He did not attempt to construct a unified system of OT theology, but expounded, first, Israel's confession of the Heilsgeschichte as proclaimed in the cult and transmitted in the historical traditions, second, the searching criticism of the older traditions by the prophets and their proclamation that new Divine acts were about to take place, and third, the relationship between the OT and the NT in terms of a modified typological interpretation. His Weisheit in Israel (1970; Eng. tr., 1972) is also important.

Collection of his more important essays in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (1958); Eng. tr., with additional essay, The Problem of the Hexateuch and other Essays (1966). Festschriften for his 60th birthday, ed. R. Rendtorff and K. Koch, Studien zur Theologie der alttestamentlichen Überlieferungen (Neukirchen, 1961), with list of his works, pp. 162–74; and for his 70th birthday, ed. H. G. Wolff, Probleme biblischer Theologie (Munich, 1971), incl. list of recent works, pp. 665–8. M. E. Andrew, 'Gerhard von Rad—A Personal Memoir', Expository Times, 83 (1971–2), pp. 296–30. J. L. Crenshaw, Gerhard von Rad (Waco, Tex. [1978]). R. Smend, Deutsche Alttestamentler in drei Jahrhunderten (Göttingen, 1989), pp. 226–54.

Radbertus, Paschasius. See PASCHASIUS RADBERTUS.

Radegunde, St (*c.*518–87), the Queen of Clothar I. The daughter of a prince of Thuringia, she fell into the hands of the Franks after a successful invasion of her country. She was a woman of great piety who did not wish to marry, but as an act of charity consented to become the wife of Clothar, a man of debased tastes and evil character (c. 540). His murder of her brother gave her an excuse to flee from court (*c.*550) and to persuade Médard, Bp. of Noyon, to ordain her a deaconess. Not long afterwards she founded a monastery of nuns outside Poitiers, where the rule of *Caesarius of Arles was adopted. Here she spent the remaining 30 years of her life in prayer, study, and good works. In 569 she obtained for her convent, from the Emp. Justin II, a large fragment of the true cross, which inspired *Venantius Fortunatus to write his famous '*Vexilla regis'. Feast day, 13 Aug.

Contemporary Lives by Venantius Fortunatus and the nun, Baudonivia, pr. in AASS, Aug. 3 (1737), pp. 67–83; crit. edn. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 2 (1888), pp. 358–95; Eng. tr. in Sainted Women of the Dark Ages, ed. and tr. J. A. McNamara and others (Durham, NC, and London, 1992), pp. 70–105; the former Life also ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Aigrain (Paris, 1910). On these Lives see C. Leonardi, 'Fortunato e Baudonivia', in H. Mordek (ed.), Aus Kirche und Reich: ... Festschrift für Friedrich Kempf (Sigmaringen, 1983), pp. 23–32. Life by *Hildebert of Lavardin in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 83–92, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 171. 967–88. Anon. Life attributed to Henry Bradshaw, OSB (d. 1513), pr. c. 1508–27, ed. F. Brittain (Cambridge, 1926). Modern Lives by E. Briand (Poitiers, 1898) and R. Aigrain ('Les Saints', 1918; 2nd edn., Poitiers, 1952). F. Brittain, St Radegund: Patroness of Jesus College, Cambridge (1925). L. Schmidt, St Radegundis in Gross-Höflein: Zur frühmittelalterlichen Verehrung der heiligen Frankenkönigin im Burgenland und in Ostniederösterreich (Burgenländische Forschungen, 32; 1956). G. Scheibelreiter, 'Königstöchter im Kloster. Radegund (†587) und der Nonnenaufstand von Poitiers (589)', Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 87 (1979), pp. 1–37. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2044–55, s.v.

Radewijns, Florentius. See FLORENTIUS RADEWIJNS.

Rahner, Karl (1904–84), RC theologian. Of Swabian extraction, Karl Rahner followed his elder brother into the *Jesuit Order in 1922. He was ordained in 1932. He continued his studies at Freiburg and Innsbruck, and was appointed to the theological faculty of the latter university in 1936. After the Second World War he returned to Innsbruck in 1948 and in the following year became Professor of Dogmatic Theology. He was Professor at Munich (1964–7) and then at Münster (1967–71). He was a peritus at the Second *Vatican Council.

Rahner was the author of a very large number of books and articles. The ultimate source of his thought is to be found in Joseph Maréchal's vast work Le Point de départ de la métaphysique (1923–49), which attempted to construct a revised system of Thomist metaphysics which would take account of and be immune to the criticism of I. *Kant. His literary and philosophical idiom was, however, largely that of the *existentialist philosopher Martin *Heidegger, under whom he studied in Freiburg; this renders his writing difficult to master. His basic position was expounded in detail in his major work, Geist in Welt (1939; 2nd edn., 1957; Eng. tr. as Spirit in the World, 1968) which, interpreting in existential terms St *Thomas Aquinas's doctrine of perception as the grasping of intelligible being through the medium of the sensible species, sees the human subjectivity as functioning within a horizon of being whose ultimate determinant is God. In a smaller work, Hörer des Wortes (1941), Rahner extended his argument to the realm of Christian revelation. In his later years he presented his approach to Christian doctrine in Grundkurs des Glaubens (1976; Eng. tr., Foundations of Christian Faith, 1978). From 1958 he also edited, with H. Schlier, the series Quaestiones Disputatae (Eng. tr. of 16 of the earlier volumes, 1961–7), and he was one of the editors of the second edition of the Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche (10 vols., 1957–65 + supplements on the Second Vatican Council) and of the six-volume encyclopaedia Sacramentum Mundi (1968–70), which was strongly influenced by his outlook.

In contrast to his technical writings Rahner's addresses to student and mixed audiences were direct and forceful, showing deep insight into the problems of the contemporary world and of the Church's pastoral and evangelistic task. He was one of the most influential RC theologians of the 20th cent., esp. in German-speaking countries.

Much of Rahner's vast output was in the form of articles; a collection of his most important theological essays was pub. under the title Schriften zur Theologie (16 vols., 1954–84; Eng. tr., Theological Investigations, 23 vols., 1961–92), and of his pastoral works as Sendung und Gnade (1959; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1963–6). J. B. Betz and others (eds.), Gott in Welt: Festgabe für Karl Rahner (2 vols., Freiburg, etc., 1964), with list of his writings, 2, pp. 900–36; this was expanded and separately pub. as R. Bleistein and E. Klinger, Bibliographie Karl Rahner 1924 1969 (Freiburg, 1969), with suppl. covering 1969–74 (ibid. [1974]); 1974–9 covered in H. Vorgrimler (ed.), Wagnis Theologie: Erfahrungen mit der Theologie Karl Rahners (ibid., 1979), pp. 579–97; E. Klinger and K. Wittstadt (eds.), Glaube in Prozess: Christsein nach dem II. Vatikanum. Für Karl Rahner (ibid., 1984), with bibl. 1979–84, pp. 854–71. C. J. Pedley, SJ, 'An English Bibliographical Aid to Karl Rahner', Heythrop Journal, 25 (1984), pp. 319–65, with additional note, ibid. 26 (1985), p. 310. K.-H. Weger, Karl Rahner: Eine Einführung in sein theologisches Denken (Freiburg, 1978; Eng. tr., 1980); H. Vorgrimler, Karl Rahner verstehen: Eine Einführung in sein Leben und Denken (ibid., 1985; Eng. tr., 1986); T. Sheehan, Karl Rahner: The Philosophical Foundations (Athens, Oh. [1987]); U. Möbs, Das kirchliche Amt bei Karl Rahner: Eine Untersuchung der Amtsstufen und ihrer Ausgestaltung (Beiträge zur ökumenischen Theologie; Munich, 1992). Introd. by W. V. Dych, SJ, Karl Rahner (Outstanding Christian Thinkers Series, 1992). Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 8–38. K. H. Neufeld in Dict. Sp. 23 (1988), cols. 45–8, s.v.

Raikes, Robert (1736–1811), founder of *Sunday Schools. A native of *Gloucester, he was educated at the College (i.e. Cathedral) School. He became an advocate of many philanthropic causes which he supported in the Gloucester Journal (est. 1732), which he inherited from his father in 1757. Stimulated by the neglected condition of the local children and their behaviour on Sundays, he was led to assist in the establishment of a Sunday School in a neighbouring parish; and in 1780 he started a school in his own parish, open on weekdays and Sundays, for the teaching of Scripture, reading, and other elementary subjects. Although he had to face opposition at first from conservatives who felt that popular education spelled revolution, as well as from strict *Sabbatarians, his enthusiasm and use of new methods (phonetics, employment of monitors, etc.) triumphed. In 1783 he felt his school sufficiently established to draw attention to his achievement in his paper. His methods were soon followed by Hannah *More (q.v.) and others. Though Raikes was not the 'inventor' of Sunday Schools, his example and publicity stimulated their rapid expansion from the 1780s and by the time of his death they had become a major feature of Church life.

The basic Lives are those by A. Gregory (London, 1877) and that ed. J. H. Harris, with introd. by F. W. *Farrar (Bristol and London, 1899). Modern study by F. Booth, Robert Raikes of Gloucester (1980). Id. and S. Elliott in J. Ferguson (ed.), Christianity, Society and Education (1981), pp. 25–49. L. Stephen in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 168–70.

Rainolds, John (1549–1607), also 'Reynolds', Anglican divine. A native of Pinhoe, Devon, he was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he was elected a Fellow in 1568. As reader in Greek in his college (1573–8), he became well known through his successful lectures on *Aristotle's Rhetoric. Resigning his Fellowship in 1586, probably through difficulties with William Coke, the president, he taught for a time at Queen's College. In 1593 he became Dean of *Lincoln and in 1598, by an arrangement welcome to Corpus, where Coke's rule was much disliked, exchanged this office with the president. By this time Rainolds had won a reputation as a skilled champion of *Calvinism, and at the *Hampton Court Conference (1604) he was the chief representative of the Puritan cause. Among the things in the BCP to which he objected were the *sign of the Cross in Baptism, the *ring in Marriage, the use of the *Apocrypha, and the *Churching of Women. Though the Puritan objections were overruled at the Conference, Rainolds did not fall from favour, and even escaped subscription to canon 36 of 1604. He was given a prominent part in preparing the *Authorized Version of the Bible, sitting in the company which translated the Prophets. His high character and wide learning won him respect even from his theological adversaries.

Rainolds's Orationes Duodecim were posthumously ed. by his friend and pupil, H. Jackson (London, 1614). The fifth of them, Oratio in Laudem Artis Poeticae, was repr. from a later edn., with introd. (pp. 1–23) and comm. by W. Ringler and Eng. tr. by W. Allen (Princeton Studies in English, 20; Princeton, NJ, 1940). His Oxford lectures on Aristotle's Rhetoric, ed., with Eng. tr. and comm., by L. D. Green (Newark, Del., and London [1986]). On them, see J. McConica, 'Humanism and Aristotle in Tudor Oxford', EHR 94 (1979), pp. 291–317, esp. pp. 302–9. C. M. Dent, Protestant Reformers in Elizabethan Oxford (Oxford, 1983), esp. pp. 227–31. T. Fowler in DNB 47 (1896), pp. 180–2.

Rainy, Robert (1826–1906), scholar and ecclesiastical politician. He was ordained to the ministry of the *Free Church of Scotland in 1851 and appointed professor of Church history at New College, Edinburgh, in 1862. From 1874, when he became principal of New College and leader of the General Assembly, he dominated the counsels of the Free Church, and later the *United Free Church; he was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1887, 1900, and 1905. Though essentially *Calvinist, he nevertheless exercised a liberalizing influence in theology, cautiously defending evolutionary biology and biblical criticism and promoting the Assembly's *Declaratory Act (1892) which helped to modify the Church's understanding of the *Westminster Confession and her relationship to it. Frequently involved in controversy, he joined forces with John Cairns of the *United Presbyterian Church to campaign for disestablishment of the Church of Scotland (*c.*1875–*c.*1895), played a major part in W. R. *Smith's removal from his chair in 1891, and defended A. B. *Bruce, Marcus Dods, and H. *Drummond from heresy proceedings in the 1890s. His last great achievement was the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches in 1900. When a tiny minority within the Free Church refused to enter the new United Free Church of Scotland and after a celebrated legal case retained all Free Church properties, Rainy played a leading role in the complicated negotiations which eventually resulted in the Church of Scotland Act 1905, which secured a more obviously equitable settlement. His writings include Three Lectures on the Church of Scotland (1872), controverting views expressed by A. P. *Stanley.

P. C. Simpson, The Life of Principal Rainy (2 vols., 1909).

Rambam. See MAIMONIDES, MOSES.

Rambler*. A monthly RC periodical, founded by J. M. Capes in 1848, which became an organ of liberal English Catholicism. In 1859 (Lord) *Acton, then one of its proprietors, secured J. H. *Newman as editor. After four months, however, an article by Newman on the place of the laity in the Church was delated to Rome and he was compelled to retire. Acton himself nominally succeeded to the editorship, though in fact Richard Simpson, an earlier editor, did most of the work. The Rambler attacked the *Ultramontanism of W. G. *Ward and H. E. *Manning, and in 1862 the latter suppressed it. It was nominally merged in a quarterly, the Home and Foreign Review (itself suppressed for similar reasons in 1864).

J. L. Altholz, The Liberal Catholic Movement in England: The 'Rambler' and its Contributors 1848–1864 (1962).

Ramon Llull. See LLULL, RAMON.

Ramsay, William Mitchell (1851–1939), NT scholar. Educated at Aberdeen, Oxford, and Göttingen, he became Fellow successively of Exeter (1882) and Lincoln (1885) Colleges, Oxford. From 1886 to 1911 he was Professor of Humanity at Aberdeen. He travelled extensively in Asia Minor, and became an eminent authority on its geography and history. He was also a keen student of the NT, making extensive use of his archaeological and other learning in defence of a moderate conservatism. His books include The Historical Geography of Asia Minor (1890), The Church in the Roman Empire (1893), The Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia (2 vols., 1895, 1897), St Paul, the Traveller and the Roman Citizen (1895) and Was Christ born at Bethlehem? (1898).

Anatolian Studies presented to Sir William Mitchell Ramsay, ed. W. H. Buckler and W. M. Calder (Manchester, 1923). J. G. C. Anderson in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 727 f.

Ramsey, Arthur Michael (1904–88), theologian and Abp. of *Canterbury. He came from a *Congregational background, but after education at Repton, Magdalene College, Cambridge, and Cuddesdon Theological College, he was ordained in the C of E in 1928. He spent only a short time in the parochial ministry before becoming sub-warden of the theological college at *Lincoln in 1930. He was successively canon-professor at *Durham (1940–50), Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge (1950–52), Bp. of Durham (1952–6), Abp. of *York (1956–61), and Abp. of Canterbury (1961–74). While at Canterbury, he travelled widely to visit various branches of the Anglican Communion and also to promote relations with other Churches, esp. the Orthodox and RC. He formed personal links with *Athenagoras, Patr. of *Constantinople, and with Pope *Paul VI, whom he visited officially in 1966. At home he presided over the introduction of *synodical government in the C of E, gaining for the Church substantial control over its liturgy in the *Worship and Doctrine Measure of 1974, and he gave a strong lead in the abortive movement for the unification of the C of E and the *Methodist Church (see ANGLICAN–METHODIST CONVERSATIONS). He also took a prominent part in many of the public debates of the period, e.g. on *homosexuality, *abortion, *capital punishment, and race relations. As a theologian he was a representative of the *Biblical Theology movement, but is chiefly remembered for his writing on spirituality. He taught that *contemplative prayer was something to which all Christians could aspire, and he revived concern for the spiritual life, esp. among the clergy. His writings include The Gospel and the Catholic Church (1936), The Glory of God and the Transfiguration of Christ (1949), Sacred and Secular (1965), God, Christ and the World (1969), The Christian Priest Today (1972), and Be Still and Know: A Study in the Life of Prayer (1982).

Official Life by [W.] O. Chadwick (Oxford, 1990). J. B. Simpson, The Hundredth Archbishop of Canterbury (New York [1962]); M. De-la-Noy, Michael Ramsey: A Portrait (1990). [W.] O. Chadwick in DNB, 1986–1990, pp. 367 f.

Ramus, Petrus (Pierre de la Ramée) (1515–72), French humanist. A native of Picardy, he studied at the College of Navarre in Paris. Though doubt has been cast on the story that in his exercise for his Master of Arts at Paris in 1536 he defended the thesis that all *Aristotle's doctrines were false, it is clear that in his two works, Aristotelicae Animadversiones and Dialecticae Institutiones, which were published in 1543, he violently attacked Aristotle and the university curriculum, and a storm followed. In 1544 Francis I forbade him to teach, but through the influence of his patrons, the Cardinals de Bourbon and de Lorraine, he was appointed president of the College of Presles in 1545 and professor of rhetoric and philosophy at the Collège Royal in 1551. After becoming a *Calvinist in 1562 he went to Germany. He returned to Paris in 1571 and was killed in the Massacre of St *Bartholomew's Day in 1572. To Aristotle's system, which he accused of falsifying the innate logic of the human mind, he opposed his own, a development of Ciceronian topics which he presented in typographically schematic form (the so-called 'dichotomies'). His influence in philosophical teaching was strongest after his death, mainly in German-speaking parts of Europe, in which a struggle ensued between Ramists and supporters of P. *Melanchthon which lasted until the outbreak of the *Thirty Years War.

Facsimile of the 1543 edn. of his Dialecticae Institutiones and Aristotelicae Animadversiones with introd. by W. Risse (Stuttgart, 1964). Modern edn. of the Fr. version, Dialectique, orig. pub. in 1555, by M. Dassonville (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 67; Geneva, 1964). Studies by C. Waddington-Kastus (Paris, 1848, in Lat.; ibid., 1855, in Fr.), W. J. Ong, SJ (Cambridge, Mass., 1958), with bibl., and R. Hooykaas (Leiden, 1958, in Fr., with Eng. summary). P. Lobstein, Petrus Ramus als Theologe (Strasbourg, 1878). N. Bruyère, Méthode et dialectique dans l'œuvre de La Ramée (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 45; 1984). W. J. Ong in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 77 f., s.v.

Rancé, Armand-Jean le Bouthillier de (1626–1700), reformer of *la Trappe. The son of a secretary of Marie de' Medici, and godson of A. J. P. du *Richelieu, by 1636 he held five benefices *in commendam, including the *Cistercian abbey of la Trappe. A distinguished classical scholar, he went on to become a doctor of the *Sorbonne, and was ordained priest in 1651 by his uncle, the Abp. of Tours, whose successor he was expected to become. He led a worldly life, frequenting Parisian salons while pursuing a successful ecclesiastical career, until the sudden death of Mme de Monbazon in 1657 caused a dramatic conversion. Speculation as to the nature of their relationship continues; all that is certain is that he had known this much older woman since childhood, that her lovers were numerous, and that his emotional reaction to her loss was extreme. He immediately withdrew from Paris to his country house, put himself under the direction of *Oratorian priests, and followed a reading-programme prescribed by Arnauld d'Andilly, whom he visited at *Port-Royal, and through whom he seems to have been introduced to the Desert Fathers. Divesting himself of all his benefices except la Trappe, where he invited monks of the Strict Observance to take over in 1662, he only then found his vocation. After a year's novitiate at Perseigne, he was blessed as regular abbot of la Trappe in 1664. His fellow abbots of the Strict Observance almost at once delegated him to go to Rome to plead their cause against the Abbot of *Cîteaux. Returning unsuccessful in 1666, he began to build up his own community, and after 1675 only went beyond the *enclosure on four canonical visitations of an abbey of Cistercian nuns. To the existing rules of the Strict Observance he added more stringent regulations, based, he always insisted, on the original uses of Cîteaux, and he always remained within the obedience of the Cistercian Order and Strict Observance (e.g. by accepting canonical visitations). It was only the unique survival of la Trappe through the Revolutionary era which led to the widespread adoption of his reform in the Order. Accused of poaching religious from other Orders, Rancé soon became involved in ceaseless polemic, esp. after the publication of his book De la sainteté et des devoirs de la vie monastique (1683). Rejecting study as a substitute for manual labour for 'true monks', Rancé provoked a lengthy and harmful dispute with the *Maurists, whose champion, J. *Mabillon, and he were eventually reconciled through royal intervention. Lectio divina was in fact compulsory at la Trappe, and Rancé's objection was to erudition for its own sake. For him penitence, rather than physical austerity as such, was the basis of monastic, and indeed Christian, life. Morally he was a rigorist, but despite many friends, and some monks at la Trappe with *Jansenist sympathies, he was theologically orthodox and explicitly disowned partisan sympathies. J.-B. *Bossuet enlisted his support in the *Quietist dispute in 1697. Among his other correspondents were Cardinal de *Retz and *James II.

A very inaccurate edn. of 220 of his letters appeared in 2 vols. (Paris, 1701–2); 220 more were ed. (reliably) by B. Gonod (ibid., 1846). Complete edn. of 2,000 letters by A. J. Krailsheimer (4 vols., ibid., 1993). They had previously been calendared (with 365 tr. in full) in Eng. by id. (Cistercian Studies Series, 80–1; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1984). Primary Lives by P. de Maupeou (2 vols., Paris, '1602' [1702]), J. Marsollier (ibid., 1703), and (far superior) by P. Le Nain (Prior of the Abbey, 2 vols., no place, 1715; 2nd dn., Paris, 1719). Other Lives incl. those by F. R. de *Chateaubriand (ibid., 1844; undertaken in fulfilment of a penance), L. Dubois (2 vols., ibid., 1866), H. *Bremond, L'Abbé Tempête (Paris, 1929; Eng. tr., 1930; unsympathetic), and A. J. Krailsheimer, Armand-Jean de Rancé, abbot of La Trappe: His Influence in the Cloister and the World (Oxford, 1974); id., Rancé and the Trappist Legacy (Cistercian Studies Series, 86; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1985 [1986]). Collectanea Ordinis Cisterciensium Reformatorum, 25 (1963), pp. 189–254, a special issue to mark the third centenary of his conversion; A. Mensáros, O. Cist., 'L'Abbé de Rancé et la règle bénédictine', Analecta Cisterciensia, 22 (1966), pp. 161–217. A. J. Krailsheimer in Dict. Sp. 13 (1986), cols. 81–90, s.v., with bibl.

Ranke, Leopold von (1795–1886), German historian. From 1825 till his death he was professor of history at Berlin. Ranke's work is characterized by emphasis on the primary importance of the study of original sources, by psychological penetration and by a fundamentally objective attitude to history, as well as by understanding of national tendencies in their relation to the history of their age. The most famous of his works was his History of the Popes in the 16th and 17th cents., Die römischen Päpste, ihre Kirche und ihr Staat (3 vols., 1834–6), which from the 6th edition (1874) was carried down to 1870. It was based on extensive researches in the libraries of Italy where he collected material for three years (1828–31). In this work he removed the history of the Papacy from denominational polemics and showed the development of the Papal power and its effects on the history of Europe, stressing, however, its political rather than its religious significance. This work was followed by a large-scale history of the Reformation, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (6 vols., 1839–47), which it studied in the setting of contemporary European history and with full appreciation of its religious values from the *Lutheran point of view.

Sämmtliche Werke (54 vols., Leipzig, 1867–90). Das Briefwerk, ed. W. P. Fuchs (Hamburg, 1949), with useful introd.; Neue Briefe, ed. B. Hoeft and H. Herzfeld (ibid., 1949); Tagebücher, ed. W. P. Fuchs (Aus Werk und Nachlass, 1; Munich, 1964). His principal works have been tr. into Eng. H. F. Helmolt, Leopold von Rankes Leben und Wirken (1921). T. H. Von Laue, Leopold Ranke: The Formative Years (Princeton, NJ, 1950), with bibl. C. Hinrichs, Ranke und die Geschichtstheologie der Goethezeit (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 19; 1954); R. Vierhaus, Ranke und die soziale Welt (Neue Münsterische Beiträge zur Geschichtsforschung, 1; 1957); G. Berg, Leopold von Ranke als akademischer Lehrer (Schriftenreihe der historischen Kommission bei der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, 9; 1968). L. Krieger, Ranke: The Meaning of History (Chicago and London [1977]). G. G. Iggers and J. M. Powell, (eds.), Leopold von Ranke and the Shaping of the Historical Discipline (Syracuse, NY, 1990).

Ranters. A grouping of people with *antinomian and *pantheistic tendencies in mid-17th-cent. England. There is controversy about whether they formed a coherent movement, but the likelihood is that a fairly disparate collection of individuals on the fringes of radical religious sects attracted popular suspicion and anxiety because of their wild behaviour and pronouncements, and were collectively labelled as Ranters. Commonly they are said to have relied on an inward experience of Christ and to have denied the authority of Scripture, Creeds, and the Ministry; hence the early *Quakers were often associated with them and suffered from the resulting confusion. They were fiercely attacked by R. *Baxter. In the 19th cent. the word was applied colloquially to Nonconformist (esp. *Primitive Methodist) preachers.

N. Smith (ed.), A Collection of Ranter Writings from the 17th Century [1983]. A. L. Morton, The World of the Ranters: Religious Radicalism in the English Revolution (1970), pp. 70–114. J. F. McGregor, 'Seekers and Ranters', in id. and B. Reay (eds.), Radical Religion in the English Revolution (Oxford, 1984), pp. 121–39, esp. pp. 121 f. and 129–39. J. C. Davis, Fear, Myth and History: The Ranters and the Historians (Cambridge, 1986), with appendix of docs., pp. 138–203; cf. G. E. Aylmer in Past and Present, 117 (1987), pp. 208–19, and [J. E.] C. Hill in History Workshop, 24 (1987), pp. 134–40; also 'Fear, Myth and Furore: Reappraising the "Ranters"': comments by J. F. McGregor, B. Capp, N. Smith, and B. J. Gibbons, with a reply by J. C. Davis, Past and Present, 140 (1993), pp. 155–210. J. Friedman, Blasphemy, Immortality, and Anarchy: The Ranters and the English Revolution (Athens, Oh., and London [1987]).

Raphael, St, *archangel. In the Books of *Tobit and 1 *Enoch, Raphael figures as one of the seven archangels who stand in the presence of God. In Tobit (12: 12, 15) he hears the prayers of holy men and brings them before God. The name in Hebrew means 'God has healed', and in 1 Enoch (10: 7) he is said to have 'healed' the earth when it was defiled by the sins of the fallen angels. From these Jewish speculations the figure of Raphael passed into Christian tradition. Feast day, previously 24 Oct.; in 1969 combined with St Michael on 29 Sept.

In the C of E the Guild of St Raphael was founded in 1915 with the aim of restoring the Ministry of Healing as part of the normal function of the Church.

The principal lit. is to be found in comm. on 1 Enoch and Tobit, cited s.vv. On the Christian feast, L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), p. 602. J. T. Marshall in HDB 4 (1902), p. 201, s.v.; A. Penna, CRL, G Löw, CSSR, and M. Donati in EC 10 (1952), cols. 469–73, s.v. 'Raffaele'. See also works cited under ANGEL.

Raphael (1483–1520) (Raffaello Sanzio), the most famous of the Renaissance painters. From 1499 to 1504 he worked under *Perugino at Perugia, and painted the Crucifixion (1502; National Gallery, London) and the Espousals of the Virgin (1504; Brera, Milan). In 1504 he migrated to Florence, where he was brought into contact with the greatest artists of the time, among them *Michelangelo, *Leonardo da Vinci, and the Dominican Fra *Bartolommeo. Here he painted the Madonna del Granduca (Pitti, Florence) and the Ansidei Madonna (National Gallery, London). In 1508 he was summoned to Rome by *Julius II to decorate the Vatican 'Stanze'. The series of famous paintings for their walls included the Disputa and St Peter released from Prison, while many biblical scenes depicted on the ceilings were very frequently reproduced in illustrations of the Bible. He also executed at Rome the celebrated Sistine Madonna* (*c.*1512; Dresden) and the Madonna della Sedia (*c.*1513–14; Pitti, Florence). In 1514 *Leo X appointed him chief architect of *St Peter's in succession to Bramante. His last work, The Transfiguration (Vatican), was left unfinished and completed by his pupils.

V. Golzio, Raffaello nei documenti nelle testimonianze dei contemporanei e nella letteratura del suo secolo (Pontificia Insigne Accademia Artistica dei Virtuosi al Pantheon; Rome, 1936; repub., with 3 pages of corrections and additions, Farnborough, 1971). M. Salmi (ed.), Raffaello: L'Opera, Le Fonti, La Fortuna (2 vols., Novara, 1968; partial Eng. tr. as The Complete Works of Raphael, New York [1969]). Other modern general studies incl. those by O. Fischel (tr. into Eng. and posthumously pub., 2 vols., London, 1948, incl. one vol. of plates), J. Pope-Hennessy (Wrightsman Lectures; London [1970]), R. Jones and N. Penny (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1983), and L. D. and H. S. Ettlinger (Oxford, 1987). O. Fischel, Raphaels Zeichnungen (8 parts, Rome, 1913–41; pt. 9 by K. Oberhuber, Berlin, 1972); E. Knab and others, Raphael: Die Zeichnungen (Stuttgart, 1983). L. L. Dussler, Raffael: Kritisches Verzeichnis der Gemälde, Wandbilder und Bildteppiche (Munich, 1966; Eng. tr., 1971).

Rapp, Johann Georg (1757–1847), founder of the *Harmony Society (q.v.).

Ras Shamra Tablets. A collection of *cuneiform tablets with mythological poems and ritual prescriptions excavated by C. F. A. Schaeffer at Ras Shamra (anciently Ugarit) in N. Syria from 1929 onwards. The tablets, prob. dating from the 14th cent. BC or earlier, are in a hitherto unknown alphabetical script and in a Semitic language closely akin to Hebrew. They bear on the development of the alphabet and the language, literature, and religion of Canaan before the Israelite settlement. Their contents show some remarkable correspondences with the OT literature, throwing light on obscure Hebrew words and phrases, on OT religious practices and beliefs, and on the forms of Hebrew poems and their liturgical use. The key to the decipherment of the texts was discovered almost simultaneously by three scholars, H. Bauer, E. Dhorme, OP, and C. Virolleaud.

There are two standard edns. of the texts: A. Herdner, Corpus des tablettes en cunéiformes alphabétiques découvertes à Ras Shamra-Ugarit de 1929 à 1939 (Mission de Ras Shamra, 10; 2 vols., 1963), and M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, and J. Sanmartin, Die keilalphabetischen Texte aus Ugarit (Alter Orient und Altes Testament, 24; 1976). Convenient collections by C. H. Gordon, Urgaritic Textbook (Analecta Orientalia, 38; 1965), J. C. L. Gibson, Canaanite Myths and Legends (2nd edn., Edinburgh, 1978, of work orig. by G. R. *Driver), and G. del Olmo Lete, Mitos y Leyendas de Canaan segun la Tradicion de Ugarit (Fuentes de la Ciencia Biblica, 1; 1981). On connections with the OT, J. Gray, The Legacy of Canaan (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 5; 1957; 2nd edn., 1965); L. Fisher and others (eds.), Ras Shamra Parallels: The Texts from Ugarit and the Hebrew Bible (Analecta Orientalia, 49–51; 1972–81); P. C. Craigie, Ugarit and the Old Testament (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1983]). J. Aisleiter, Wörterbuch der ugaritischen Sprache, ed. O. Eissfeldt (Ber. (Sächs.), 106, Heft 3; 1963; 3rd edn., Berlin, 1967). M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, P.-R. Berger, and J. Sanmartín, Ugarit-Bibliographie 1928 1966 (Alter Orient und Altes Testament, 20/1–4; 1973); M. Dietrich, O. Loretz, and W. C. Delsman, Ugarit-Bibliographie 1967–71 (ibid. 20/5; 1986). G. Saadé, Ougarit: Métropole Cananéenne (Beirut, 1979); G. D. Young (ed.), Ugarit in Retrospect: Proceedings of the Symposium . . . held . . . at Madison, February 26, 1979 (Winona Lake, Ind. [1981]). J. C. de Moor in Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Supplement (1976), pp. 928–31, s.v. 'Ugarit'; J.-C. Courtois and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 9 (1979), cols. 1124–466, s.v.

Rashdall, Hastings (1858–1924), moral philosopher and theologian. Educated at Harrow and New College, Oxford, Rashdall taught philosophy at Oxford from 1888 to 1917, first at Hertford College and later (after 1895) at New College. From 1909 to 1917 he also held a canonry at *Hereford. From 1917 till his death he was Dean of *Carlisle. He won fame first as a historian by his Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages (3 vols., 1895; new edn. by F. M. Powicke and A. B. Emden, 1936). In 1907 he published an important treatise on moral philosophy, The Theory of Good and Evil (2 vols.), in which he expounded an ethical doctrine which he described as 'Ideal *Utilitarianism'. In his *Bampton Lectures for 1915, The Idea of Atonement in Christian Theology (1919), he upheld with much vigour the *Abelardian or '*exemplarist' theory of the Atonement. Rashdall possessed supreme confidence in the capacity of human reason, rightly employed, to arrive at the final truths of religion. He was in consequence an untiring controversialist, and a strong critic of all forms of *pragmatism, *modernism, sentimentalism, and *mysticism.

Three vols. of (largely unpub.) papers and sermons by Rashdall, ed. H. D. A. Major and F. L. Cross under the titles Principles and Precepts (Oxford, 1927), Ideas and Ideals (ibid., 1928), and God and Man (ibid., 1930). Life by P. E. Matheson (London, 1928). C. C. J. *Webb in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 706–9.

Rashi (1040–1105), Jewish biblical scholar, so called from the initials of his name Rabbi Solomon ben Isaac. After studying at Mainz and Worms he was appointed rabbi in his native city of Troyes. Among the Jews he is still one of the most highly reputed exegetes of the Hebrew Scriptures and the *Talmud. Although his work incorporated much traditional material, his scientific outlook and his evaluation of the literal sense marked the beginning of a new era in OT interpretation. His commentaries were influential from an early date; they were used by *Andrew of St-Victor as well as by *Nicholas of Lyre, through whom they are commonly supposed to have influenced M. *Luther. His works were translated into Latin in the 17th and 18th cents., the most complete edition being that of F. Breithaupt (1710, 1713, 1714).

His Comm. on the Pentateuch is ed. with Eng. tr. and notes by M. Rosenbaum and A. M. Silbermann (5 vols., London, 1929–34). L. Zunz, 'Solomon ben Isaac genannt Raschi', Zeitschrift für die Wissenschaft des Judentums, 1 (1822), pp. 277–384. Vols. commemorating the 900th anniversary of his birth ed. H. L. Ginsberg (American Academy for Jewish Research, Texts and Studies, 1; New York, 1941) and commemorating the 850th anniversary of his death, ed. S. Federbush (New York, 1958). H. Hailperin, Rashi and the Christian Scholars (Pittsburgh, 1963). E. Shereshevsky, Rashi, the Man and his World (New York, 1982); cf. A. van der Heide, 'Rashi's Biblical Exegesis. Recent Research and Developments', Bibliotheca Orientalis, 41 (1984), pp. 292–318, with bibl. M. Banitt, Rashi, Interpreter of the Biblical Letter (Tel Aviv, 1985) [specialized]. E. I. J. Rosenthal, 'Rashi and the English Bible', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 24 (1940), pp. 138–67. Useful introd. by C. Pearl, Rashi (London, 1988).

Raskolniki (Russ., 'schismatics'). A comprehensive name for the section of the Russian Church that refused to accept the reforms of the patriarch *Nikon (d. 1681). They are also known as the '*Old Believers' (q.v.).

Ratherius (*c.*887–974), Bp. of *Verona. A man of a very refractory and ambitious character, he took a prominent part in the ecclesiastical life of the 10th cent. Born in the neighbourhood of Liège, he at first became a monk at the abbey of Lobbes in the Hennegau. In 926 he accompanied his abbot, Hilduin, to Italy, where Hugo of Provence, Hilduin's cousin, was King. In 931 Ratherius received the see of Verona from Hugo, but he soon fell out with the King and was removed from his see. After many changes of fortune, he was made Bp. of Liège in 953, but forced to resign in 955. From 962 to 968 he was again in possession of the bishopric of Verona. His many writings, mostly of an occasional kind and often full of invective, throw important light on his age.

Works ed. J. and P. *Ballerini (Verona, 1765), with Life pp. xxvi–clxxiv; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 136. 9–768. Letters ed. F. Weigle (MGH, Briefe der deutschen Kaiserzeit, 1; 1949); Opera Minora ed. P. L. D. Reid (CCCM 46; 1976); further works, incl. Ratherius' annotations on Martianus Capella and various canonical texts, ed. id. and others (ibid. 46A; 1984); Eng. tr. of Complete Works by P. L. D. Reid (Medieval & Renaissance Texts and Studies, 76; Binghamton, NY, 1991). Docs. relating to his episcopate at Verona ed. F. Weigle in Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 29 (1938–9), pp. 1–40. A. Vogel, Ratherius von Verona und das zehnte Jahrhundert (2 vols., Jena, 1854; repr., Leipzig, 1977). G. Monticelli, Raterio, vescovo di Verona, 890–974 (1938); V. Cavallari, Raterio e Verona (Biblioteca di Studi Storici Veronesi, 6; 1967); P. L. D. Reid, Tenth-Century Latinity: Rather of Verona (Humana Civilitas, 6; Malibu, Calif., 1981). F. Dolbeau, 'Ratheriana I. Nouvelles recherches sur les manuscrits et l'œuvre de Rathier', Sacris Erudiri, 27 (1984), pp. 373–431; 'Ratheriana II. Enquête sur les sources des Praeloquia', ibid. 28 (1985), pp. 511–56; 'Ratheriana III. Notes sur la culture patristique de Rathier', ibid. 29 (1986), pp. 151–221. C. Leonardi, 'Von Pacificus zu Rather. Zur Veroneser Kulturgeschichte im 9. und 10. Jahrhundert', Deutsches Archiv, 41 (1985), pp. 390–417. F. Dolbeau in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 135–44, s.v. 'Rathier de Vérone'.

Ratio Studiorum (Lat., 'the method of the studies'). The abbreviated name for the 'Ratio atque Institutio Studiorum Societatis Jesu', the *Jesuit scheme of studies issued in 1599. After earlier drafts in 1586 and 1591, the original editions legislated for studies in the three divisions of letters (Latin and Greek), philosophy, and theology, but were chiefly concerned with the study of literature and philosophy. The success of Jesuit secondary education from the 16th to the 18th cent. was largely due to it. The Ratio is based on the best pedagogical theory and practice of the period. In the restored Society a revised edition was issued in 1832, but was never finally approved. It was no longer practical to regulate the Society's schools through such a document, and the term 'Ratio Studiorum' came to be used, until 1975, to denote the legislation regarding the philosophy and theology studied by Jesuit seminarians.

G. M. Pachtler, SJ (ed.), Ratio Studiorum et institutiones scholasticae Societatis Jesu per Germaniam olim vigentes collectae (Monumenta Germaniae paedagogica, 2, 5, 9, 16; Berlin, 1887–94). L. Lukács, SJ (ed.), Monumenta Paedagogica Societatis Iesu (Monumenta Historica Societatis Iesu, 92, 107, 108, 124, 129, 140, 141, etc.; Rome, 1965 ff.). E. A. Fitzpatrick, SJ, (ed.), St Ignatius and the Ratio Studiorum (New York, 1933), incl. Eng. tr. of the 1599 text, pp. 119–254. A. P. Farrell, SJ, The Jesuit Code of Liberal Education (Milwaukee, 1938). J. W. Donohue, SJ, Jesuit Education: An Essay on the Foundations of its Idea (New York, 1963).

rationale. The word has several ecclesiastical senses:

(1) Formerly, the breastplate worn by the Jewish high priest.

(2) A liturgical vestment of stuff which was sometimes worn by bishops over the shoulders. It seems to have been looked upon as a kind of substitute for the archiepiscopal *pallium, and to have been in use esp. in Germany. Its use is now confined to the bishops of Eichstätt, Paderborn, Toul, and Cracow.

(3) An ornament worked in gold sometimes worn by bishops on the breast over the *chasuble when celebrating Mass. Its adoption was never widespread, though its use survived at *Reims till the beginning of the 16th cent.

(4) It is also used in ecclesiastical contexts in the general sense of a reasoned exposition of principles, e.g. in the titles of W. *Durandus, Rationale Divinorum Officiorum (written 1286–91) and A. *Sparrow, Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer (1657).

Ratisbon, Conference of (1541). A reunion conference of three Catholic and three Protestant theologians convened at Ratisbon (Regensburg) from 27 Apr. to 22 May by the Emp. *Charles V. The three Catholics were J. *Eck, J. von *Pflug, and J. *Gropper; the three Protestants P. *Melanchthon, M. *Bucer, and Pistorius (1503–83). G. *Contarini was present in Ratisbon while the Conference took place and as Papal legate he directed the work of the Catholic participants. The discussions followed the order of the 'Regensburg Book', a preliminary document produced in secret negotiations between Catholic and Protestant theologians. Though doctrinal agreement was reached at the Conference on some of the controverted subjects, including a basis of agreement on *justification, major issues on the Church and Sacraments remained unresolved. The subsequent hostility of M. *Luther, as well as political rivalries, prevented any reunion being effected.

The Acta were pub. by M. Bucer at Strasbourg in 1541 (Eng. tr. by M. *Coverdale [Geneva?], 1542). Kidd, pp. 340–6 [incl. docs. nos. 136–40]. C. Augustijn, De Godsdienstgesprekken tussen Rooms-Katholieken en Protestanten van 1538 tot 1541 (Haarlem, 1967), pp. 73–131, with bibl., pp. 142–6. R. Stupperich, 'Der Ursprung des "Regensburger Buches" von 1541 und seine Rechtfertigungslehre', Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 36 (1939), pp. 88–116. P. Fraenkel, 'Les Protestants et le problème de la transsubstantiation au Colloque de Ratisbonne', Oecumenica: Jahrbuch für ökumenische Forschung, 1968, pp. 70–116, with texts and Eng. summary. K.-H. zur Mühlen, 'Die Einigung über die Rechtfertigungsartikel auf dem Regensburger Religionsgespräch von 1541—eine verpasste Chance?', ZKT 76 (1979), pp. 331–59. P. Matheson, Cardinal Contarini at Regensburg (Oxford, 1972). T. Kolde in PRE (3rd edn.), 16 (1905), pp. 542–52, s.v. 'Regensburger Religionsgespräch und Regensburger Buch, 1541'. See also bibl. to WORMS, CONFERENCE OF.

Ratramnus (9th cent.), *Carolingian theologian. He entered the monastery of *Corbie *c.*825 as a contemporary of *Paschasius Radbertus. His first and most influential work, the 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' (843) was a reaction to the realism of Paschasius' earlier treatise on the Eucharist. Ratramnus himself wrote at the request of Charles the Bald, King of the Franks, for whom he also composed the 'De Praedestinatione' (849–50), a contribution to the debate with *Gottschalk of Orbais. In this work he clarified the patristic basis for Gottschalk's belief in double predestination, to good or to evil. He went on to write two small works 'De Anima' and 'De Nativitate Christi' (853), and the longer 'De Anima ad Odonem', which was commissioned *c.*863 by Odo, Bp. of Beauvais, to refute an anonymous Irish monk who was affirming the existence of a single soul in all mankind. His last treatise, 'Contra Graecorum Opposita' (*c.*867) is a reply to a schedule of *Photius' criticisms of the W. Church that had been sent by Pope *Nicholas I to *Hincmar, Abp. of Reims. Ratramnus defends the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father and the Son (see FILIOQUE) (books 1–3) and various differences in practice and jurisdiction (book 4).

Radical though his opinions were, Ratramnus attracted no formal condemnation in his own time. By the mid-11th cent. his Eucharistic treatise (wrongly attributed to *Erigena) was seen as incompatible with a change in the substance of the consecrated Bread and Wine, and it was condemned by Pope *Leo IX at the Synod of Vercelli on 1 Sept. 1050. But it was not until the *Reformation that Ratramnus' 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' was seriously read and quoted. First printed in 1531, it was a major source for N. *Ridley's formulations of Eucharistic doctrine. In 1559 it was put on the *Index, but removed in 1900.

Editiones principes of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini', Cologne, 1531; of his 'De Praedestinatione' in G. Mauguin (ed.), Veterum Auctorum qui IX. saeculo de Praedestinatione et Gratia scripserunt Opera et Fragmenta (Paris, 1650), pp. 29–102. Collected edn. of his works repr. from various sources in J. P. Migne, PL 121. 11–346 and 1153–6. Crit. edns. of 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by J. N. Bakhuizen van den Brink (Verhandelingen der koninklijke Nederlandse Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, Nieuwe Reeks, 61, no. 1; 1954; 2nd edn., ibid. 87; 1974) and of his 'De Nativitate Christi' by J. M. Canal, La Virginidad de María segun Ratramne y Radberto (Rome, 1968; orig. pub. in Marianum, 16), pp. 32–60. The 'De Anima' was first pub. by A. *Wilmart, OSB, in R. Bén. 43 (1931), pp. 207–23; the 'De Anima ad Odonem' by C. Lambot, OSB (Analecta Mediaevalia Namurcensia, 2; Namur and Paris [1952]). Modern Eng. trs. of his 'De Corpore et Sanguine Domini' by 'H. W.' and 'W. C. C.' (London, 1838) and W. F. Taylor (ibid., 1880). J.-P. Bouhot, Ratramne de Corbie: Histoire littéraire et controverses doctrinales (Études Augustiniennes, 1976). D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 1 (1909), pp. 226–33; J. Geiselmann, Die Eucharistielehre der Vorscholastik (Forschungen zur Christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, 15, Hefte 1–3; 1926), esp. pp. 176–84; G. Macy, The Theologies of the Eucharist in the Early Scholastic Period (Oxford, 1984), esp. pp. 21 f. and 28–31. J. N. Bakhuizen van den Brink, 'Ratramn's Eucharistic Doctrine and its Influence in Sixteenth-Century England', Studies in Church History, 2 (1965), pp. 54–77. H. Peltier in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1780–7, s.v. 'Ratramne'. See also works cited under PASCHASIUS RADBERTUS, ST.

Rauschenbusch, Walter (1861–1918), exponent of the *Social Gospel in N. America. Born in Rochester, NY, and educated in Germany and the USA, Rauschenbusch graduated from the University of Rochester and Rochester Theological Seminary in 1886. For 11 years he served as pastor of the Second German *Baptist Church of New York, situated on the edge of a slum area known as Hell's Kitchen; here he encountered the human cost of escalating social evils. Finding few resources in his *Pietistic background for dealing with social questions, he probed biblical, historical, and theological materials seeking for answers, and in the Kingdom of God theology taught by A. *Ritschl and others he found a way to bring his inherited evangelical and his new social convictions together, and engaged in reform both actively and in his writings. Returning to Rochester in 1897 to teach Church history at the seminary, he wrote Christianity and the Social Crisis (1907). An eloquent, prophetic plea for the joining of Christian faith with social passion, it became one of the most influential religious books of the century and thrust its author into prominence as an internationally known leader of the burgeoning Social Gospel movement. His many other writings include Prayers of the Social Awakening (1910), Christianizing the Social Order (1912), The Social Principles of Jesus (1916), and A Theology for the Social Gospel (1917).

Selected Writings, ed. W. S. Hudson (Sources of American Spirituality; New York, 1984), with excellent introd., pp. 3–41.

Ravenna. Acc. to tradition the first Bp. of Ravenna was St *Apollinaris (q.v.). In the face of the Visigothic threat, in 402 the imperial court of the W. Empire moved from Milan to Ravenna, in order to take advantage of its secure position behind marshes. In 493 it fell to *Theodoric the Ostrogoth (d. 526), who also used it as his capital and who patronized the *Arian Church in the city. In 540 Ravenna was captured by the Byzantines. After 568, with the loss of much of Italy to the Lombards, its position declined, but it continued to serve as the capital of the beleaguered Byzantine province until it fell to the Lombards in 751. Following this capture, it lost all claims to be a secular capital, and sank to the status of an unhealthy and isolated provincial town.

Ravenna's importance in the later Roman and Byzantine periods elevated the status of its bishops who were placed over a newly created metropolitan province in the early 5th cent., and granted the title of 'archbishop' in the mid-6th cent. The claims of the Ravennate Church outlasted the decline of the city as a secular centre. In the early 9th cent. A. *Agnellus wrote his history of the Ravennate Church, in part as a defence of its privileges against Papal attacks. The Emp. Otto III made Abp. Gerbert Pope as *Sylvester II, and *Henry IV set up Abp. Wibert as (the antipope) Clement III against *Gregory VII.

In the 5th and 6th cents., on account of the wealth and importance of the city, a large number of splendid churches were built and decorated with mosaics. Because of the ravages of *Iconoclasm in the E., these mosaics are now the largest and finest collection surviving from this period. The principal monuments, all with mosaics, are: the Mausoleum of *Galla Placidia, the Orthodox Baptistery (*c.*458), the Arian Baptistery (prob. late 5th cent.), the archiepiscopal chapel (494/519), Theodoric's church of S. Apollinare Nuovo (493/526), and two remarkable churches paid for by a rich Ravennate banker, Julianus, S. Vitale (dedicated 547) and S. Apollinare in Classe (dedicated 549, some 3 miles from the city). Iconographically the most complex and interesting mosaics are the scenes from the life of Christ in the Arian church of S. Apollinare Nuovo.

The principal source for the history and buildings up to the 9th cent. is the Liber Pontificalis Ecclesiae Ravennatis of Agnellus (q.v.). The most comprehensive discussion of the history, buildings, and mosaics (with full illustrations in black and white) is F. W. Deichmann, Frühchristliche Bauten und Mosaiken von Ravenna (Baden-Baden, 1958) and id., Ravenna, Hauptstadt des spätantiken Abendlandes (2 vols. in 3 parts + plans, Wiesbaden, 1969–76). T. S. Brown, 'The Church of Ravenna and the imperial administration in the seventh century', EHR 94 (1979), pp. 1–28, is more wide-ranging than its title implies. G. Bovini, Ravenna Mosaics (Greenwich, Conn. [1956], London, 1957; repr. Oxford, 1978) is a useful introd. in Eng. L. von Matt and G. Bovini, Ravenna (Cologne [1971]) has superb plates of the mosaics in colour. G. Bovini (ed.), 'Corpus' della scultura paleocristiana bizantina ed altomedioevale di Ravenna (3 vols., 1968–9). E. Dinkler, Das Apsismosaik von S. Apollinare in Classe (Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen der Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 29; 1964), with bibl. on Church history of Ravenna, p. 11. G. Bovini, Saggio di bibliografia su Ravenna antica (Bologna [1968]). Recent discoveries and research reported in the journals Felix Ravenna (Ravenna, 1911 ff.) and Corsi di Cultura sull'Arte Ravennate e Bizantina (ibid., 1955 ff.). See also following entry.

Ravenna Rotulus, the. An inscribed strip of material, prob. of Ravennate origin and now in the *Bodmer Stiftung at Geneva, containing a series of early Latin prayers. It is nearly four yards long and was made up by sewing together seven separate pieces of vellum. As it is mutilated at both ends, its original length is unknown. The writing (in large uncials) prob. dates from the second half of the 8th cent.; it is closest to that of a MS Life of St *Apollinaris now in St Petersburg. In its present mutilated form the MS contains 40 collects for the Advent season, together with a fragment of another collect and a further item which is prob. a 'Preface' for Christmas. The 27th item is found among the Christmas formularies in the '*Leonine', '*Gelasian' and '*Gregorian' Sacramentaries; but the rest are unique. The prayers may have been intended for use in the Office, not in the Mass.

On the back of the rotulus there are eight documents in a 10th-cent. minuscule hand. Prob. all these come from the metropolitan archives of Ravenna. The prayers have sometimes been attributed to St Peter *Chrysologus (d. 450), e.g. by F. *Cabrol; but on no sufficient evidence. They have also been ascribed (also improbably) to Marinianus, Bp. of Ravenna 595–?606.

Editio princeps by A. Ceriani and G. Porro, Il rotolo opistografo del Principe Antonio Pio de Savoia (Milan, 1883); conveniently in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 3028–33, s.v. 'Rome (liturgie)'. Text also ed. L. C. Mohlberg, OSB, Sacramentarium Veronense (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 1; 1955), pp. 173–8. F. Cabrol, OSB, 'Autour de la liturgie de Ravenne. Saint Pierre Chrysologue et le Rotulus', R. Bén. 23 (1906), pp. 489–500. S. Benz, OSB, Der Rotulus von Ravenna (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 45; 1967), also incl. text. E. A. Lowe, Codices Latini Antiquiores, 3 (Oxford, 1938), p. 30 (no. 371); cf. 11 (ibid., 1966), p. 8 (no. 1608).

Raymond Lull. See LLULL, RAMON.

Raymond Nonnatus, St (*c.*1204–40), *Mercedarian missioner. The accounts of his life rest on wholly unreliable sources written in the Mercedarian interest centuries later. Acc. to these he came into the world after his mother had died in labour (hence 'non natus', not born) at Portello in Catalonia. After a most pious childhood, he was given leave by his father to join the Mercedarians, to whom he was admitted at Barcelona by St *Peter Nolasco. Sent to N. Africa, he redeemed many slaves at Algiers and, when his funds were exhausted, gave himself up in ransom and for some years lived among the Muslims, converting many to the Christian faith. His trials are said to have culminated in an eight months' imprisonment, from which he was ransomed by members of his order. On his return to Spain in 1239, *Gregory IX nominated him cardinal, but in the next year on his way to Rome he died at Cardona, near Barcelona. Feast day, 31 Aug. He is the patron saint of midwives.

There is very little trustworthy information about the Saint. A 16th-cent. Life is pr. in AASS, Aug. 6 (1743), pp. 737–41, with introd., pp. 729–37, and account of the miracles attributed to him, pp. 741–76. See also histories of the MERCEDARIANS, cited s.v.

Raymond of Peñafort, St (*c.*1180–1275), Spanish canonist. He studied, and later taught, rhetoric and logic at Barcelona, but resigned his chair in 1210 in order to study law at *Bologna. Here he was made doctor in 1218 and lectured until 1220. He was persuaded by the Bp. of Barcelona to return and teach there, and was made canon and later provost of the cathedral. In 1222 he entered the *Dominican convent of Barcelona. Here he wrote his Summa de casibus poenitentiae, which exercised a profound influence on the development of the penitential system. In 1229 he was called away to accompany the Papal legate to Spain, and returned with him to Rome. In 1230 *Gregory IX appointed him chaplain and penitentiary, and charged him with the collection and arrangement of Papal decretals subsequent to *Gratian; this work was finished in 1234 and promulgated on 5 Sept. by the bull 'Rex Pacificus'. In 1236 Raymond went back to Spain for reasons of health, but two years later, much against his will, he was elected Master General of his order. In this capacity he rearranged the Dominican Constitutions into the form which they essentially retained until 1924. After having resigned his generalship in 1240, he devoted himself esp. to the conversion of Jews and Moors, and for this purpose he founded schools of Hebrew and Arabic. Besides the Summa already mentioned, which he revised after 1234, Raymond wrote other works on canon law. He was held in high esteem by his contemporaries. James I of Aragon was among his penitents, and St *Thomas Aquinas wrote his Summa contra Gentiles possibly at his suggestion. He was canonized by *Clement VIII in 1601. Feast day, 7 (formerly 23) Jan.

Summa de casibus poenitentiae pr. at Rome 1603, and later edns.; modern edn. by X. Ochoa and A. Diez (Universa Bibliotheca Iuris, 1. B; Rome, 1976). Summa de Matrimonio, ed. idd. (ibid. 1. C; 1978). Summa de Iure Canonico, ed. J. Rius Serra (Opera Omnia, 1; Barcelona, 1945) and by X. Ochoa and A. Diez (Universa Bibliotheca Iuris, 1. A; 1975). Raymond's revision of the Dominican Constitutions ed. R. Creytens, OP, in Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 18 (1948), pp. 5–68, with introd. AASS, Jan. 1 (1643), pp. 404–29, incl. material from the process of canonization. F. Balme, OP, C. Paban, OP, and J. Collomb, OP (eds.), Raymundiana; seu Documenta quae pertinent ad S. Raymundi de Pennaforti Vitam et Scripta (Monumenta Ordinis Fratrum Praedicatorum Historica, '4' [6], fascs. 1 and 2; 1898–1901); J. Rius Serra (ed.), San Raimundo de Penyafort. Diplomatario: documentos, vida antigua, crónicas, procesos antiguos (Opera Omnia, 3; Barcelona, 1954); A. Collell, OP, 'Raymundiana', Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, 30 (1957), pp. 63–95; 31 (1958), pp. 341–66. Modern Life by F. Valls-Taberner (Colección pro Ecclesia et Patria, Barcelona, 1936; 2nd edn. in his Obras Selectas, 1. 2; 1953). Brief sketch in Eng. by T. M. Schwertner (Milwaukee [1935]). A special number of the periodical Escritos del Vedat, 7 (1977) was devoted to Raymond of Peñafort, incl. unpub. docs. P. Ribes Montané, Relaciones entre la Potestad Eclesiástica y el Poder Secular, según san Ramón de Penyafort (Publicaciones del Instituto Español de Historia Ecclesiástica, Monografías, 26; Rome, 1979). [D. A.] Mortier, OP, Histoire des maîtres généraux de l'ordre des Frères Prêcheurs, 1 (1903), pp. 255–85. S. Kuttner, Repertorium der Kanonistik (1140 1234), 1 (ST 71; 1937), pp. 438–52. Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), pp. 283–7; 4 (1993), p. 248. A. Teetaert, OFM Cap., in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 1806–23; A. Robles Sierra, OP, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 190–4, both s.v. 'Raymond de Penyafort'.

Raymond of Sebonde (d. 1436), Spanish philosopher. The date and place of his birth are unknown, but most modern scholars regard him as a Catalan. He became a professor at the University of Toulouse, where he taught theology, philosophy, and medicine. His book, 'Liber Naturae sive Creaturarum', in later printed editions Theologia Naturalis, written originally in Spanish, was first published in 1484, and achieved great fame in the 16th cent. through M. de *Montaigne, who translated and defended it (1569). Its Prologue gave offence because it over-emphasized the authority of the 'Book or Law of Nature' at the expense of Scripture and tradition, maintaining that it is possible for human reason to discover the contents of the Christian revelation in nature alone; and it was put on the *Index in 1559. The book itself, however, was highly esteemed, not only by his contemporaries but also by later authorities such as Cardinal Bona and St Peter *Canisius, for its able defence of the truth and reasonableness of Catholic doctrine on grounds appealing to those who do not accept revelation.

Raymond's Theologia Naturalis was often repr. in the 15th–17th cents. Best edn. (but without the preface) by J. Sighart, Sulzbach, 1852 (repr., with introd. by F. Stegmüller, Stuttgart, 1966). J. H.

Probst, Le Lullisme de Raymond de Sebonde (Ramon de Sibiude) (Toulouse, 1912); C. de Poer, Montaigne als 'Apologeet' van Raymond Sebond (Mededeelingen der Nederlandsche Akademie van Wetenschappen, Afd. Letterkunde, NR, dl. 3, no. 12; Amsterdam, 1940). T. and C. Carreras y Artau, Historia de la Filosofía Española: Filosofía Cristiana de los Siglos XIII al XV, 2 (1943), pp. 101–75. I. S. Révah, Une Source de la spiritualité Péninsulaire au XVIème siècle: La 'Théologie naturelle' de Raymond de Sebond (Lisbon, 1953). J. M. De Bujanda, 'L'Influence de Sebond en Espagne au XVIe siècle', Renaissance and Reformation, 10 (1974), pp. 78–84. C. C. J. *Webb, Studies in the History of Natural Theology (1915), pp. 292–312. A. Guy in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 194–201, s.v. 'Raymond Sibiuda'.

reader. In the Anglican Communion, a lay person licensed to conduct religious services. The history of the office in its present form in the C of E dates from 1866, when the Bp. of *Gloucester and Bristol admitted the first reader. The number of readers gradually increased, and in 1905 the bishops issued rules governing their status, duties, forms of admission, etc. (The rules were revised in 1921 and 1940.) Since 1969 these matters have been regulated by *Canons E 4–6, revised in 1979, and, less directly, by Canons B 11 and 12. The duties which may be assigned to readers include the reading of *Morning and *Evening Prayer (except the Absolution) and of the *Litany, the publication of *Banns of Marriage, distributing the Bread and Wine at the Eucharist, officiating at the *Burial of the Dead, preaching; and generally giving an incumbent such assistance in his pastoral work as the bishop may direct. Readers are formally admitted to their office by a bishop, from whom they may also receive a licence either for a particular parish or for the diocese generally. Since 1969 women have been eligible for the office.

In the Episcopal Church of *Scotland the Canons of 1863 provided for lay readers and in the subsequent period many provinces of the Anglican Communion have established readers with duties similar to those exercised in the C of E. In a few places the office is sometimes stipendiary, as was formerly occasionally the case in England. See also LECTORS.

R. [A. S.] Martineau, The Office and Work of a Reader (1970; rev. edn., 1980). T. G. King, Readers: A Pioneer Ministry (1973).

Real Presence, the. In (esp. *Anglican) Eucharistic theology an expression used to cover several doctrines emphasizing the actual Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament, as contrasted with others that maintain that the Body and Blood are present only figuratively or symbolically. The 16th-cent. English Reformers were so concerned to reject the doctrine of *transubstantiation that they were wary of speaking of real presence; when they used the phrase, it was usually in conjunction with expressions that would later be labelled *receptionist. Thus H. *Latimer in 1554 said that 'the same presence may be called a real presence, because to the faithful believer there is a real, or spiritual body of Christ'. T. *Cranmer in his earlier writings spoke of a 'real' or 'corporeal' presence, but later tended rather to refer to a 'true' or 'spiritual' presence. Subsequent Anglican writers, less close to the Reformation controversies, were more ready to use the phrase. It figures in the works of the *Caroline Divines (esp. W. *Laud and J. *Cosin), forms part of the title of Jeremy *Taylor's book, The Real Presence and Spirituall of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament proved against the Doctrine of Transubstantiation (1654), and comes in the hymns of Charles *Wesley.

H. Latimer, Sermons and Remains, ed. G. E. Corrie (*Parker Society, 1845), pp. 250–78 ('The Disputation had at Oxford, the 18th day of April, 1554, between Mr Hugh Latimer... and Mr Smith and others'). T. Cranmer, Writings and Disputations ... relative to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, ed. J. E. Cox (ibid., 1844). P. [N.] Brooks, Thomas Cranmer's Doctrine of the Eucharist (1965; 2nd edn., 1992).

Realism. (1) Any form of belief which is chary of speculation and rooted in sober fact. In this sense, Christianity claims to be realistic as based not on abstract theorizing or symbolic myths, but on historical events known to have happened at a certain time and concerned with the concrete facts of human experience. Thus L. *Laberthonnière contrasted 'Christian Realism' with 'Greek Idealism'.

(2) The philosophical doctrine of the reality of the external world as against the idealistic view that it is constituted by consciousness. In reaction from the classical formulation of Idealism by I. *Kant and his successors (J. G. *Fichte, F. W. J. *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel), which exercised such a deep influence on speculative theology throughout the 19th cent., in the 20th cent. there has set in a strong reaction towards Realism. In philosophy the turning-point was G. E. Moore's 'Refutation of Idealism' in Mind, NS 12 (1903), pp. 433–53.

(3) In a more technical sense the doctrine that abstract concepts ('universals') have a real existence apart from the individuals ('particulars') in which they are embodied. The doctrine was developed in the Middle Ages on the basis of *Plato's metaphysic, largely out of a constantly discussed passage in *Porphyry's 'Isagoge' on the existence of genera and species. It was professed by *Erigena and *Remigius of Auxerre and, in a modified form, by St *Anselm in opposition to the *Nominalism (q.v.) of *Roscelin. It was carried further in the 12th cent. by *William of Champeaux, who recognized in the several individuals of the same species an identical reality (eandem rem), modified by *Abelard and, under the influence of *Aristotle, reconstructed by St *Thomas Aquinas, who, rejecting the view that universals exist apart from the individuals (universalia ante res), upheld a 'moderate realism' (universalia in rebus).

recapitulation (Lat. recapitulatio; Gk. ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, a 'summing-up', 'summary'). The term is used in its verbal form in Eph. 1: 10, where God is said to sum up all things in Christ, and from this passage was taken over by the Fathers. The conception of recapitulation was elaborated esp. by St *Irenaeus, who interpreted it both as the restoration of fallen humanity to communion with God through the obedience of Christ and as the summing-up of the previous revelations of God in past ages in the Incarnation. Besides these two meanings, which are common in patristic literature, there is a third found in St *Chrysostom, who applies the word to the reunion of both angels and men under Christ as their common head.

Recared (d. 601), King of the Visigoths. Having been associated with his father, the *Arian Leovigild, in the government of the country (most of Spain) from 573, he succeeded him on the throne in 586. In the next year, probably owing to the influence of St *Leander, Bp. of Seville, he and his family became Catholics. The step, though followed by several quickly suppressed insurrections on the part of the Arian bishops, helped considerably to pacify the country, in which the Catholic clergy and nobles were more powerful than the Arian Visigoths. The king's action was ratified in 589 by the Third Council of *Toledo, which regulated the religious situation in a number of canons. The remaining years of the king seem to have been peaceful; he is praised by St *Isidore of Seville for founding many churches and monasteries.

The main sources for his life are St Isidore's Historia Gothorum and the Chronicle of John of Biclara, both ed. T. *Mommsen in MGH, Chronica Minora, 2 (1894), pp. 217–20 and 288–90. E. A. Thompson, 'The Conversion of the Visigoths to Catholicism', Nottingham Mediaeval Studies, 4 (1960), pp. 4–35, esp. pp. 13–35. K. Schäferdiek, Die Kirche in den Reichen der Westgoten und Suewen bis zur Errichtung der westgotischen katholischen Staatskirche (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 39; 1967), pp. 137–242, esp. pp. 192–233. T. González García in R. García Villoslada (ed.), Historia de la Iglesia en España, 1 (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1979), pp. 401–21, with full bibl.

reception. The informal process by which the whole Church gives subsequent assent to a conciliar or Papal decision in the light of its conformity with Scripture and tradition. Decisions of the early *Oecumenical Councils were accepted partly because they corresponded to the sensus fidelium. While the development of Papal *authority (esp. the definition of Papal *infallibility) has led reception to be comparatively neglected in the RC Church, Anglicans and Orthodox have emphasized it in modern times. Recently the idea has been used within the Anglican Communion to support experimentation, e.g. with the ordination of *women to the priesthood in some provinces, in the expectation that such innovations might come to be 'received'.

receptionism. A form of Eucharistic teaching acc. to which, while the bread and wine continue to exist unchanged after consecration, the faithful communicant receives together with them the true Body and Blood of Christ. Such a doctrine was common among Anglican divines in the 16th and 17th cent. Those who lean to such teaching have generally shrunk from giving it precise definition. The word itself is apparently not found before 1867.

Rechabites. A religious group in Israel, founded by Jehonadab, the son of Rechab, who persuaded Jehu to abolish Tyrian Baal worship (2 Kings 10). The Rechabites represented a protest against Canaanite luxury and ways of living and a return to the simplicity and even asceticism of the more nomadic life. Like the *Nazirites, they made it a rule to abstain from wine, and they were also opposed to agriculture and the cultivation of vineyards. The title has been adopted in modern times by a society of total abstainers.

S. Abramsky in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 13 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1609–12, s.v.

recluse. A person who lives apart from the world, esp. for the purpose of religious meditation. In a stricter use, the word is applied to those who have made definite vows to live in this way.

M.-C. Chartier in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 217–28, s.v., with bibl.

Recognitions, Clementine. See CLEMENTINE LITERATURE.

recollection. A term used by modern spiritual writers to denote an attitude of attentiveness to God and to oneself. The idea that the soul becomes dissipated through its concern for worldly things and should 'collect itself' into itself to concentrate on its spiritual purpose is at least as old as *Plato (cf. Phaedo, 67 c), and it recurs in various forms in the Fathers and in medieval writers. The term 'recollection' itself first appears in Spanish in the mid-15th cent., meaning local 'withdrawal, seclusion'. In 16th-cent. writers it is common in the interiorized sense of 'living within oneself' (*John of Ávila, Epistolario, 109). The practice is recommended esp. by such writers as Francisco de Osuna (*c.*1492–*c.*1541) as a whole way of life. Other writers, such as *Teresa of Ávila, treat recollection as a kind or stage of prayer. Subsequently the term was extended to almost any kind of spiritual exercise, and 'recollected' came to be used independently of any technical definition.

M. Andrés Martín, Los Recogidos: Nueva visión de la mística española (1500–1700) (Publicaciones de la Fundacion Universitaria Española, Monografias, 13; 1975 [1976]). H.-J. Sieben and S. López Santidrian in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 247–67, s.v. 'Recueillement'.

Recollects. The title of two separate religious orders:

(1) The Franciscan Recollects. A reformed branch of the Franciscan *Observants, started in France at the end of the 16th cent., which spread to Belgium, Germany, the Netherlands, Ireland, and the exiled English Friars on the Continent in the course of the 17th cent. In 1897 they were incorporated with the other Observants by *Leo XIII.

(2) The Augustinian Recollects. A strict branch of the *Augustinian Hermits, started in Spain. Their first house was founded at Talavera in 1589, and other monasteries were soon established in many parts of the country. They were erected into a separate province by a brief of *Clement VIII in 1602, and in 1621 formed a separate congregation. The congregation became successful as missionaries, esp. in Peru and the Philippines. In 1912 they were constituted into an independent order ('Ordo Eremitarum Recollectorum S. Augustini') with a prior-general at its head.

(1) P. Péano, OFM, in DIP 7 (1983), cols. 1307–22, s.v. 'Recolletti', with bibl. See also works cited under FRANCISCAN ORDER.

(2) Bullarium Ordinis Recollectorum S. Augustini et Diplomatica Officialis [to 1788], ed. I. Fernandez a S. Corde Iesu, ORSA (4 vols., Rome (1–3) and Salamanca (4), 1954–73). Andrés de San-Nicolas, Historia general de los religios descalzos del orden de los Hermitanos del . . . Padre . . . San Agustín (Madrid, 1644; cont. by other members of the Order, making 12 vols. to 1974, pub. Madrid and Barcelona). M. T. Disdier, AA, in DHGE 5 (1931), cols. 581–95, s.v. 'Augustin (I^er^ Ordre dit de saint-) (Ermites récollets)', with detailed bibl.; G. La Mountain in NCE 1 (1967), pp. 1061 f., s.v. 'Augustinian Recollects'. See also works cited under AUGUSTINIAN HERMITS.

Record, The. The first Anglican weekly newspaper, begun on 1 Jan. 1828. It was from the first strongly *Evangelical, among those concerned in its foundation being J. H. *Newman (then an Evangelical). During its early years it was controlled by Alexander Haldane (1800–82), who ensured that it remained Protestant in doctrine and Conservative in politics. On 1 Jan. 1949 it was amalgamated with the Church of England Newspaper (founded as the Church Family Newspaper, 1894).

rector. In the C of E the rector (Lat. 'ruler') was the person or *parson entitled to the whole *tithes of the parish. At first the rector was the incumbent, and it is when the two positions are still combined that the term is most familiar. Where, however, the tithes were *appropriated to a monastery or other spiritual body, the clergyman in the parish was merely the rector's *vicar (substitute) or *curate. The freehold of the church and churchyard is normally vested in the rector, whether or not he is the incumbent, but this does not allow him any special rights of access.

When tithes were *impropriated by laymen at the *Dissolution, they and their successors were known as *lay rectors (q.v.). Sinecure rectors are incumbent clergymen entitled to have a vicar in their own parish, thereby relieving them of the spiritual duties; most sinecure rectories have now been suppressed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners Act 1840 and the Pastoral Measure 1983 s. 34.

A vicarage may be reunited with the rector's rights and converted into a rectory. Some parishes created by statute in the 19th cent. were also termed rectories, although there was no settled practice. A new benefice will be a rectory if it is formed by union with a rectory; a new benefice may also be a rectory if it replaces a rectory that is dissolved, but only if the pastoral scheme so provides.

In the Scottish universities the Rectors or Lord Rectors are elected officers. In English universities the title is used only of the heads of Exeter and Lincoln Colleges, Oxford. On the Continent the title is customary for the heads of universities or for the presidents of their administrative bodies. The heads of RC *seminaries and *Jesuit houses are also commonly styled rectors. Otherwise, RC rectors are normally priests with the care of churches which are not parochial, capitular, or attached to a religious community or society: CIC (1983), cans. 556–563.

See also TEAM MINISTRY.

recusancy. Refusal to submit to authority, and esp. refusal to attend the services of the established C of E. Though used particularly of RC recusants (esp. but not exclusively of the 16th and 17th cents.), it was also applied to Protestant *Separatists ('sectary recusants'). Until the Pope excommunicated *Elizabeth I in the bull '*Regnans in excelsis' (1570), recusancy had been rare, since conservative religious elements in the nation had received no clear guidance regarding their attitude to the Establishment. It received a powerful impetus with the arrival of *Jesuits and other priests from the Continent, esp. during the years around 1580. By Elizabethan and Jacobean statesmen it was considered a dangerous problem, since it had tenacious roots throughout the social structure in certain regions of England, notably in the N., where it was long thought likely to express itself in the form of armed rebellion. Lancashire and Durham, followed by certain regions of Yorkshire and Wales, took the lead in recusancy during the 16th and 17th cents. Derbyshire, Warwickshire, Staffordshire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, and even Hampshire and Sussex, also showed strong recusant parties among the landed gentry. That everywhere, except in Lancashire, actual recusants became a small percentage of the total populations was due partly to the eroding influence of the penal laws, and partly to the long-term success of Protestant evangelization, which could not be matched by the efforts of the hard-pressed RC clergy trained overseas. Nevertheless, the recusant minority preserved the continuity of RC practice in England, in contrast to its almost total disappearance in other northern European regions such as the Scottish Lowlands and Scandinavia. See also ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ENGLAND AND WALES AFTER THE REFORMATION.

Much primary material is pub. by the *Catholic Record Society. The subject is also covered by Recusant History (Bognor Regis, 1951–64; London, 1965 ff.) and by A Newsletter for Students of Recusant History, ed. T. A. [C.] Birrell (9 vols., Nijmegen, 1958–70; from 1972 incorporated in Recusant History). The writings of recusants of the period 1558 to 1640 are being repr. in a facsimile series entitled English Recusant Literature, ed. D. M. Rogers (Leeds, 1969 ff.). A. O. Meyer, England und die katholische Kirche unter Elisabeth (Bibliothek des kgl. Preussischen Historischen Instituts in Rom, 6, pt. 1; 1911; Eng. tr., 1916). E. Rose, Cases of Conscience: Alternatives open to Recusants and Puritans under Elizabeth I and James I (Cambridge, 1975). There are also a number of journals devoted to regional research on recusancy. M. J. Havran in J. W. O'Malley, SJ (ed.), Catholicism in Early Modern History: A Guide to Research (Reformation Guides to Research, 2; St Louis [1988]), pp. 69–82. See also bibl. to ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN ENGLAND AND WALES AFTER THE REFORMATION.

Redaction Criticism (Ger. Redaktionsgeschichte). The name given by W. Marxsen and others to the investigation of the editorial work done by biblical authors on earlier material, e.g. the use made of the Marcan material by Matthew and Luke. It led to a more holistic interest in the Gospels as theological compositions and later pointed towards more literary approaches.

J. Rohde, Die redaktionsgeschichtliche Methode (1966; Eng. tr., Rediscovering the Teaching of the Evangelists, 1968). N. Perrin, What is Redaction Criticism? (1970). C. [M.] Tuckett, Reading the New Testament: Methods of Interpretation (1987), pp. 116–35.

Red Hat. The flat-crowned broad-brimmed hat, with two clusters of 15 tassels, traditionally distinctive of a *cardinal. Until recently the Pope invested the cardinal with the red hat at the first public *consistory after his appointment, and it was not worn again. After the cardinal's death, it was suspended over his tomb. Although cardinals are now invested with a red biretta, the expression 'red hat' is still often used for the cardinal's office.

red letter day. An important feast or saint's day, printed in ecclesiastical calendars in red ink. In the C of E the term is applied to those feasts for which the BCP provides a proper Collect, Epistle, and Gospel, as formerly these feasts were distinguished in the calendar in this way.

Red Mass. Acc. to W. usage, a *Votive Mass of the Holy Spirit, so named from the red vestments in which it is celebrated. Such Masses are customarily celebrated with some solemnity at the opening of councils, synods, etc., to invoke the aid and illumination of the Holy Spirit in the deliberations to follow. In England a Red Mass is celebrated at *Westminster Cathedral at the opening of the law term and attended by RC judges.

Red Sea. In the OT the Hebrew phrase rendered 'Red Sea' is usually taken to mean 'Reed' or 'Marsh Sea'; the change in terminology may be traced back to the LXX and Vulgate and no satisfactory explanation has been offered. In some cases the phrase seems to refer to the Gulf of Suez (e.g. Exod. 10: 19) and in others to the Gulf of Aqaba (e.g. 1 Kgs. 9: 26). However, its use to denote the site of the crossing of waters by the Israelites recorded in Exod. 14 and 15 has occasioned much debate. Some older scholars held that either the Gulf of Suez or the Gulf of Aqaba was intended here; more recently many critics have tended to favour a northern route for the Exodus, suggesting that the crossing took place in the eastern region of the Nile delta, perhaps on a southern extension of the present Lake Menzaleh, a lagoon adjacent to the Mediterranean Sea. The crossing of the Red Sea marked the end of the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt and was subsequently regarded as a turning-point in their destinies (e.g. Pss. 66: 6; 78: 53; 114: 3). In the NT (1 Cor. 10: 2) it is regarded as a type of Christian Baptism. See also EXODUS.

N. H. Snaith, 'יַם־סוּף: The Sea of Reeds: the Red Sea', Vetus Testamentum, 15 (1965), pp. 395–8. G. I. Davies, The Way of the Wilderness: A Geographical Study of the Wilderness Itineraries in the Old Testament (Society for Old Testament Study, Monograph Series, 5; Cambridge, 1979). J. R. Huddlestun in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 633–42, s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to EXODUS.

redemption. The idea of redemption is common to many religions, being based on the desire of man to be delivered from sin, suffering, and death. Christianity claims that it has become a fact through the Incarnation and the Death of Christ. It is viewed by theologians under the double aspect of deliverance from sin and restoration of man and the world to communion with God. Both these aspects are developed in the NT, esp. in the Pauline Epistles, where the 'redemption (ἀπολύτρωσις) through His blood, the forgiveness of our trespasses' (Eph. 1: 7), and 'the dispensation of the fullness of the times, to sum up (ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι) all things in Christ' (Eph. 1: 10) are set forth as the interrelated effects of the work of the Redeemer. In patristic thought both sides were somewhat differently emphasized, the Greeks stressing more the restoration of man to the Divine life (see DEIFICATION), whereas the Latin Fathers gave primary importance to the expiation of our sins through the sacrificial death of Christ. In St *Augustine, and later in *Scholastic theology, Redemption was brought into more direct connection with *Original Sin, which it was held to remove by restoring man to his state of *Original Righteousness, lost by the *Fall of *Adam. From St *Anselm's Cur Deus Homo onwards, the question of the necessity of the Redemption was widely discussed. Anselm held that, given the Divine plan and the infinite damage incurred in its violation by sin, the justice of God which required adequate satisfaction made redemption by the death of the God-man a necessity. This view was abandoned by the Schoolmen, notably St *Thomas Aquinas, who taught that, though God might have redeemed the world in many other ways, the manner in which He did so was highly 'congruous', because it showed forth His omnipotence, goodness, and wisdom, and the admirable harmony in His Being between Justice and Mercy. Consequently Redemption is the free gift of God to man, who could not have redeemed himself, because of the supernatural character of the gifts lost by Original Sin. He maintained that, though it was impossible that sin should be abolished as a physical reality, it could be repaired morally by the objective merits of the Redeemer which, applied to the repentant sinner, enabled him to co-operate with grace towards justification and sanctification.

The theologians of the Reformation claimed to return to the teaching of St Paul. They denied the idea of Redemption as a restoration to Original Righteousness and, consequently, the possibility of human co-operation with grace other than by faith alone, and placed the exclusive emphasis on the forgiveness of sin and justification by imputation of the righteousness of Christ. Through the teaching of J. *Calvin and, later, of C. O. *Jansen, the view that Redemption extends only to the predestined was advocated by a number of Protestant and Catholic theologians in the 16th and 17th cents. It was pronounced heretical by *Innocent X in the constitution '*Cum Occasione' (1653). Later, the proposition that Christ died for all the faithful, but for the faithful alone (pro omnibus et solis fidelibus), was also condemned by *Alexander VIII (1690). The universality of Redemption, taught already in the NT (e.g. 1 Jn. 2: 2), was thus safeguarded, without, on the other hand, prejudicing the fact that its actual application does not extend to the damned nor, as *Origen believed, to the fallen angels. See also ATONEMENT.

Redemptorists. The common name for the members of the 'Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer', founded by St *Alphonsus Maria di Liguori at Scala, Italy, in 1732. The Congregation was instituted for mission work among the poor both in Europe and among the heathen, and it has steadily refused to engage in purely educational activities. The order received the sanction of *Benedict XIV in 1749, and a community of Redemptorist nuns received similar approval in 1750. Despite frequent persecution at the hands of secular governments, it has continued to flourish to the present time. It was introduced into England in 1843. The Congregation is governed by a 'Rector Major', who holds office for life and resides in Rome.

G. Stebbing, CSSR, The Redemptorists (1924); E. Hosp, CSSR, Die Kongregation des allerheiligsten Erlösers: Ihr Werden und Wollen (1924); and later works of this author; G. Brandhuber, CSSR, Die Redemptoristen, 1732 1932 (1932). M. de Meulemeester, CSSR, Histoire sommaire de la congrégation du T.S. Rédempteur (Louvain, 1950; Eng. tr., ibid., 1956); id., Origines de la Congrégation du Très Saint-Redémpteur: Études et Documents (2 vols., ibid., 1953–7). F. Chiovaro, CSSR, Storia della Congregazione del Santissimo Redentore, 1: Le Origini (1732 1793) (Rome, 1993). J. B. Byrne, CSSR, The Redemptorist Centenaries: 1732, Founding of the Congregation of the Most Holy Redeemer 1832, Establishment in United States (1932). M. de Meulemeester, CSSR, E. Colet, CSSR, and C. Henze, CSSR, Bibliographie générale des écrivains rédemptoristes (3 vols., 1933–9). M. J. Curley, CSSR, in NCE 12

(1967), pp. 161–4, s.v.; T. Rey-Mermet, CSSR, in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 268–81, s.v. 'Rédemptoristes'; F. Ferrero, CSSR, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 808–19, s.v. 'Santissimo Redentore'.

Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum (Lat., 'the Reform of the Ecclesiastical Laws'), the book which was designed to provide a system of order and discipline for the C of E in place of the medieval *canon law. Previous initiatives for reform by T. *Cromwell and T. *Cranmer had come to nothing, but the Canon Law Act 1549 empowered the king to appoint thirty-two persons to compile a corpus of ecclesiastical laws for the English spiritual courts. The work was actually begun in 1550 by a body of eight persons, and Cranmer presented the Book to Parliament in Mar. 1553. It was opposed by the Duke of Northumberland and, with Edward VI's death in the summer, it ceased to be possible to proceed with it. The Book was printed with a preface by J. *Foxe in 1571, but the Elizabethan government could not be persuaded to put it into use. Its provisions owed much to *Reformed ideas. It is of importance for its connections both in context and in language with the *Thirty-Nine Articles.

Modern edn. by E. *Cardwell (Oxford, 1850). Eng. tr. of an incomplete draft (British Library MS Harley 426), by J. C. Spalding, The Reformation of the Ecclesiastical Laws of England, 1552 (Sixteenth Century Essays & Studies, 19; Kirksville, Mo., 1992), with introd.

Reformation, the. This loose term is sometimes used to describe an involved series of changes in W. Christendom between the 14th and 17th cents., but it is more commonly restricted to the early 16th cent. It is said to have begun with the attacks of the *Lollards and the *Hussites upon the hierarchical structure of the Church; at the same time Papal authority and finances were particularly criticized. The English statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire and the French *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438) represented efforts of monarchies to expand their own influence over their national Churches. After the disruptions of the 'Babylonish Captivity' at *Avignon and the *Great Schism the Popes recovered sufficient authority to ride out the storms of the *Conciliar Movement, though the final collapse of the Council of *Basle in 1449 left critics dissatisfied with some aspects of the Papal monarchy in the Church. Until the early 16th cent. divergence from Catholic doctrine was uncommon, but there were more frequent attacks upon the financial exactions of the Papacy and Curia and upon their worldliness and involvement in the dynastic politics of Italy.

When M. *Luther protested against the corruption of Rome and the great abuses attending the sale of *indulgences, he was breaking no new controversial ground. Indeed most of the Reformation movements demanded not innovation, but a return to a primitive excellence. Luther's study of St *Augustine had led him to question devotional practices and the emphasis of late medieval theology on 'good works'; later his historical reading, based on the work of L. *Valla, raised doubts regarding the validity of Papal claims to supremacy. From these traditionalist origins were derived fundamental attacks upon *transubstantiation, clerical *celibacy and the religious orders, as well as his demands for the abolition of Papal power in Germany. Luther's views were vigorously expressed and widely circulated in his celebrated treatises of 1520; his writings began to influence the literate laity of the German towns, as did the preaching of his colleagues and students from *Wittenberg. His advocacy of princely authoritarianism during the *Peasants' War helped to ensure the support of his cause by the German princes. The rulers of Saxony, Hesse, Brandenburg, and Brunswick, besides the kings of *Denmark and *Sweden, were won to the reformed beliefs before or shortly after their classic enunciation in the 'Confession of *Augsburg' (1530). These rulers reorganized and regulated the Churches within their territories, and the progress of the Lutheran Reformation lay in the hands of the 'godly prince', to whom the plenitude of power was explicitly confided, and in its adoption by a number of the imperial cities of Germany.

Meanwhile in 1523–5 the Swiss divine U. *Zwingli, motivated at first by studies and beliefs analogous to those of Luther, had captured the support of the civic authorities of Zurich and carried through anti-Papal, anti-hierarchic, and anti-monastic reforms in that city. Zwingli's theology, more radical and less scholastic in its Eucharistic and social doctrines than Luther's, rapidly affected many of the Swiss cantons and some cities in SW Germany, though the efforts of M. *Bucer at Strasbourg, J. *Oecolampadius at Basle, and G. *Farel at Neuchâtel and *Geneva were also significant. The influence of Zurich was restricted after its military defeat by the Catholic cantons and the death of Zwingli in 1531, and thereafter leadership of the Swiss Reformation passed to Geneva.

There, from 1541, J. *Calvin established an elaborately organized theocracy. In his hands reforming opinion was more systematically defined and organized. Emphasis upon *predestination, it is true, may be traced in the thought of J. Wycliffe, while Luther himself denied man freedom or responsibility, as traditionally understood. Yet a coherent theological system based upon the doctrines of particular election and redemption first appeared in Calvin's Institutio Christianae Religionis (1536). This system, with its appeal to rising elements in European society, henceforth proved for several generations the driving force of the Reformation, esp. in W. Germany, *France, the *Netherlands, England, and *Scotland. Like that of Lutheranism, but upon a wider stage, the progress of the Calvinist Reformation became inextricably involved with a series of political struggles, notably the Wars of Religion in France, which temporarily secured the position of the *Huguenots, and the national revolt which freed the northern Netherlands from *Spain. In Scotland, too, the Calvinist cause, led by J. *Knox and the Lords of the Congregation, triumphed upon a wave of nationalist reaction against French control. Such Calvinist success, often against resistance by political authorities, owed much to the Genevan organizational pattern which made it an effective opposition movement.

Meanwhile, however, the English Reformation had remained an insular process responsive to peculiar political and social forces. *Henry VIII, a convinced traditionalist in both doctrine and Church government, accomplished the overthrow of Papal Supremacy and the *Dissolution of the Monasteries largely in pursuit of short-term political ends and the extension of royal controls. Despite his opposition, reforming Continental doctrines and native heresy became more widespread, and in the universities humanistic biblical studies undermined scholastic theology. During the reign of *Edward VI, political calculation and the influence of T. *Cranmer, J. *Hooper, and N. *Ridley led to a more wide-ranging alteration of doctrine and liturgy, culminating in the Prayer Book of 1552 and the *Forty-Two Articles of 1553. After *Mary's attempt to reverse a generation of ecclesiastical change, the accession of *Elizabeth I was followed in 1559–63 by the reimposition of the earlier Protestant formularies, somewhat tempered by the need for compromise. Although Calvinist doctrinal views came to be widely held among bishops, university theologians, parish clergy and the godly laity, demands for institutional reform were resisted by the Crown and its advisers. The English Reformation thus grafted elements of Reformed theology and worship upon a traditional Church structure, but the continuities ensured peaceful change and, ultimately, widespread public acceptance. In England, as on the Continent, the Reformation secured legal endorsement more easily than individual conversions: its spiritual impact was most obvious among those attracted by the new emphasis upon Bible-reading, while the illiterate majority conformed with less enthusiasm.

Useful primary material collected and tr. into Eng. in B. J. Kidd (ed.), Documents Illustrative of the Continental Reformation (1911); H. J. Hillerbrand (ed.), The Reformation in its own words (1964); id. (ed.), The Protestant Reformation (1968). Classic interpretations include: L. von *Ranke, Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (6 vols., 1839–47; Eng. tr. of vols. 1–3, 1845–7); J. Janssen, Geschichte des deutschen Volkes seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (8 vols., 1878–94; Eng. tr., 16 vols., 1896–1910, + index, 1925); P. [G. J. M.] Imbart de La Tour, Les Origines de la réforme (4 vols., 1905–1935; new edn. of vol. 2, with rev. bibl., by Y. Lanhers, 1946); J. P. Whitney, The Reformation: Being an Outline of the History of the Church from A.D. 1503 to A.D. 1648 (1907; new edn. entitled 'The History of the Reformation', CHS, 1940); H. Hermelink, Reformation und Gegenreformation (Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte für Studierende, 3; 1911); P. Smith, The Age of the Reformation [1921]; N. Sykes, The Crisis of the Reformation (1938); J. Mackinnon, The Origins of the Reformation (1939); J. Lortz, Die Reformation in Deutschland (2 vols., 1939–40; Eng. tr., with new bibl., 1968). Modern scholarly studies incl.: R. H. Bainton, The Reformation of the Sixteenth Century (Kansas, 1952; London, 1953); H. J. Grimm, The Reformation Era, 1500–1650 (New York, 1954; 2nd edn., 1973); G. R. Elton (ed.), The Reformation 1520–1559 (New Cambridge Modern History, 2; 1958; 2nd edn., 1990); H. Holborn, A History of Modern Germany [1]: The Reformation (New York, 1959); H. Bornkamm, Das Jahrhundert der Reformation: Gestalten und Kräfte (Göttingen, 1961); E. G. Léonard, Histoire générale du protestantisme, 1: La Réformation (1961; Eng. tr., with additional bibl., 1965); J. Delumeau, Naissance et affirmation de la Réforme (Nouvelle Clio, 30; 1965; 2nd edn., 1968); A. G. Dickens, Reformation and Society in Sixteenth-Century Europe (1966); F. Lau and E. Bizer, A History of the Reformation in Germany to 1555 (Eng. tr. of 2 separate works, 1969); E. Iserloh, J. Glazik, and H. Jedin, Reformation, Katholische Reform und Gegenreformation (Handbuch der Kirchengeschichte, ed. H. Jedin, 4, 1967), pp. 3–446 (Eng. tr., History of the Church, ed. H. Jedin and J. Dolan, 5; 1980, pp. 3–429); H. J. Hillerbrand, Christendom Divided: The Protestant Reformation (1971); S. E. Ozment, The Reformation in the Cities: The Appeal of Protestantism to Sixteenth-Century Germany and Switzerland (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1975); K. A. Oberman, Werden und Wertung der Reformation (Tübingen, 1977; abridged Eng. tr., 1981).

A. G. Dickens and D. Carr (eds.), The Reformation in England to the Accession of Elizabeth I (Documents of Modern History, 1967). P. Hughes, The Reformation in England (3 vols., 1950–4). T. M. Parker, The English Reformation to 1558 (1950; 2nd edn., 1966). G. H. and K. George, The Protestant Mind of the English Reformation 1570–1640 (Princeton, NJ, 1961). W. A. Clebsch, England's Earliest Protestants 1520–1535 (1964). A. G. Dickens, The English Reformation (1964). P. Collinson, The Religion of Protestants: The Church in English Society 1559–1625 (Ford Lectures for 1979; Oxford, 1982). C. Haigh (ed.), The English Reformation Revised (Cambridge, 1987). E. Duffy, The Stripping of the Altars: Traditional Religion in England c.1400–c.1580 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1992), pp. 377–593. C. Haigh, English Reformations: Religion, Politics, and Society under the Tudors (Oxford, 1993).

Extensive bibl. of works pub. since 1940 in Bibliographie de la Réforme, 1450–1648, pub. by the Commission Internationale d'Histoire Ecclésiastique Comparée au sein du Comité International des Sciences Historiques (Leiden, 1958 ff.). See also bibl. to CALVINISM and LUTHERANISM.

Reformed Churches. The term is sometimes taken to include all the Protestant Churches which have accepted the principles of the *Reformation, but in a narrower and more accurate sense it is used specifically of those Churches influenced by the theology of J. *Calvin, J. *Knox, and U. *Zwingli, among others (popularly called *Calvinist), as contrasted esp. with the *Lutherans. This restriction is almost universal, with the corresponding expressions in French (Églises réformées) and German (reformierte Kirchen). The designation of such Churches as 'ecclesiae reformatae' was already general before the end of the 16th century.

Reformed Presbyterian Church. The small body of Scottish Presbyterians, popularly known as *Cameronians, who declined to accept the settlement of 1690 which established the Church of Scotland. The Reformed Presbytery was formed in 1743. The majority joined the *Free Church of Scotland in 1876, but a remnant has continued to exist as a separate body. They are represented in N. Ireland, Canada, and the USA. J. G. *Paton, the missionary to Vanuatu (formerly the New Hebrides), was a member of this Church.

M. Hutchison, The Reformed Presbyterian Church in Scotland: Its Origin and History 1680–1876 (Paisley, 1893). W. J. Couper, The Reformed Presbyterian Church in Scotland: Its Congregations, Ministers and Students (Edinburgh, 1925).

Refreshment Sunday. A name for the Fourth Sunday in Lent. The epithet has been explained as referring either to the miracle of the feeding of the five thousand which was until 1969 in the RC Church, and in the BCP is, the Gospel for the day (Jn. 6: 1–14) or to the relaxation of Lenten discipline allowed on this day (e.g. the consumption of simnel-cakes). It is also known as *Laetare Sunday and *Mothering Sunday.

Refuge, Cities of. See CITIES OF REFUGE.

Regale (Lat. regale, neut. of regalis, 'pertaining to the king'). In legal language esp., the right to the revenues of vacant bishoprics and abbeys and to presentation to their dependent benefices claimed by the kings of Europe during the Middle Ages. It was usually held to derive from their position as feudal lords, and taken as analogous to that enjoyed during the minority of a lay tenant. The claim, consistently denied by the Popes, became closely connected with the *Investiture Controversy. The earliest known trace of it is met with in *France towards the end of the Carolingian period (10th cent.). In England it was successfully asserted by King William II (1087–1100) on the death of *Lanfranc (1089), and later became one of the causes of rejection of the Constitutions of *Clarendon by *Alexander III. In 1176 King Henry II (1154–89) promised to limit the exercise of the right to one year, but it continued, with few exemptions, until the *Reformation. It is still enjoyed by the Crown over the temporalities of vacant sees (though the revenues are now restored untouched when the newly elected bishop does homage). In Germany the right was claimed and exercised by Henry V (1106–25) and his immediate successors, but practically ceased after the death of *Frederick II (1250). In France, where it was claimed not only by the king but also by certain of the more important territorial lords, it was a continual source of friction between the Papacy and the temporal power from the time of St *Bernard to the end of the 19th cent.

The term 'Regale' has also, since the 18th cent., been more properly used of the privileges and prerogatives of the Sovereign in general.

M. Howell, Regalian Right in Medieval England (1962), with refs. G. J. Campbell, SJ, 'Temporal and Spiritual Regalia during the Reigns of St. Louis and Philip III', Traditio, 20 (1964), pp. 351–83. J. Gaudemet in DDC 7 (1965), cols. 493–532, s.v., with full bibl. to date.

Regeneration. The spiritual rebirth (Gk. παλιγγενεσία), which, acc. to traditional theology, is effected in the soul by Christian Baptism (cf. Tit. 3: 5). See BAPTISM.

Regensburg, Conference of. See RATISBON, CONFERENCE OF.

Regimini militantis Ecclesiae. The bull issued by *Paul III on 27 Sept. 1540, instituting the Society of Jesus (*Jesuits) and authorizing St *Ignatius Loyola and the nine priests who had gathered round him to accept further recruits. The bull consists largely of the second version of a document drawn up by the early Jesuits themselves (the so-called 'Formula of the Institute'), summarizing the kind of religious life they hoped to lead. In 1550, *Julius III issued a further bull, 'Exposcit debitum', including a third version of the Formula, which had been subjected to additional revision in the light of the Society's accumulating experience. It is this version which is still in force.

Text, with draft material, in Monumenta Ignatiana, 3rd ser., vol. 1 (Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, 63; Rome, 1934), pp. 24–32; of 'Exposcit debitum', ibid., pp. 372–83; and of the first version of the Formula, ibid., pp. 14–21. Bull also in Mirbt and Aland (1967), pp. 539–42 (no. 817). Parallel Fr. tr. of all three versions of the Formula in Ignatius' Écrits, ed. M. Giuliani, SJ, and others [1991], pp. 293–309. Eng. trs. of 'Exposcit debitum' in The Constitutions of the Society of Jesus, ed. and tr. G. E. Ganss, SJ (St Louis, 1970), pp. 63–73; of the first version of the Formula in G. Schurhammer, SJ, Francis Xavier, 1 (Rome, 1973), pp. 462–5. Comm. on the Formula by A. M. de Aldama, SJ (in Spanish, Rome, 1981; Eng. tr., Anand, India, and St Louis, 1990).

Regina Coeli (Lat., 'Queen of Heaven'). The Eastertide anthem to the Blessed Virgin, so named from its opening words. In the Roman *Breviary its recitation after *Compline is prescribed from *Easter Day to *Whitsunday. It also takes the place of the *Angelus in Eastertide. Its authorship is unknown, but it probably dates from the 12th cent.

H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Regina Cœli', The Month, 121 (1913), pp. 384–8, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), pp. 146–51, with refs.

Reginald of Piperno (*c.*1230–1285/95), *Dominican friar. He was known as the 'lifelong' companion of St *Thomas Aquinas. He collected all Thomas's writings and took down several of his lectures, among them the Commentary on Jn. and part of that on the Pauline Epistles. It was prob. under his editorship that the Supplement to the Third Part of the 'Summa Theologiae' was compiled after Thomas's death.

A. Dondaine, Secrétaires de saint Thomas (Rome, 1956), esp. pp. 198–202. Id., 'Sermons de Réginald de Piperno (Un manuscrit de la Bibliothèque de Boniface VIII)', in Mélanges Eugène Tisserant, 6 (ST 236; 1964), pp. 357–94. Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), p. 291, s.v. 'Rainaldus de Piperno'.

regionarius. A name in use at Rome in the earlier Middle Ages for members of the clergy who filled offices dependent on the arrangement of the city into seven ecclesiastical 'regions' (regiones), and who were thus distinguished both from the 'Papal' and the 'titular' clergy. See TITLE.

Registers, Episcopal. Many English Episcopal Registers have been printed in the publications of the *Canterbury and York Society (q.v.) and elsewhere.

D. M. Smith, Guide to Bishops' Registers of England and Wales: A Survey from the Middle Ages to the Abolition of Episcopacy in 1646 (Royal Historical Society Guides and Handbooks, 11; 1981). See also under separate dioceses and individual bishops.

Regium Donum (Lat., 'Royal Gift'). The grant from public funds formerly made to the ministers of certain English *Nonconforming bodies. It originated out of sums which *Charles II ordered to be paid to *Presbyterian ministers after the *Declaration of Indulgence of 1672; but the practice did not become established in England till 1723, when George I ordered that £500 (soon increased to £1,000) be paid annually out of the Treasury for the relief of Dissenting ministers and their widows. By 1727 all the '*Three Denominations' (Presbyterians, *Baptists, *Congregationalists) were enjoying it, and it continued until 1851. In *Ireland a regium donum to Presbyterian ministers was paid almost continuously from 1690 until the disestablishment of the Church of Ireland in 1869.

R. W. *Dale, History of English Congregationalism (ed. A. W. W. Dale, 1907), pp. 524–7; B. L. Manning, The Protestant Dissenting Deputies, ed. O. Greenwood (Cambridge, 1952), pp. 22 f., 387 f., 444, and 447.

Regium Placet. See EXEQUATUR.

Regnans in Excelsis. The *bull of excommunication published by *Pius V on 25 Feb. 1570, against Queen *Elizabeth I. It was issued after a formal trial of the Queen at Rome, whither a number of English exiles had been summoned to testify to her heretical proceedings. The bull declares Elizabeth a usurper as well as a heretic, absolves her subjects of their allegiance, and orders them to disobey her laws. It thus placed the unfortunate English RCs between conflicting loyalties and evoked as a counterblast the Elizabethan penal laws.

Text in Bullarum, Diplomatum et Privilegiorum Sanctorum Romanorum Pontificum Taurinensis Editio, 7 (Naples, 1882), pp. 810 f.; operative clauses repr. in Mirbt, pp. 348 f. (no. 491), with refs. J. H. Pollen, SJ, The English Catholics in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (1920), pp. 142–59. See also bibl. s.v. ELIZABETH I.

Regula Fidei. See RULE OF FAITH.

Regula Magistri. An anonymous monastic Rule written by 'the Master' in Italy SE of Rome *c.*500–25. It appears *c.*817 in the Codex Regularum of St *Benedict of Aniane. Being in part verbally identical with the prologue and chapters 1–7 of the Rule of St *Benedict, it was thought to be later than this until A. Génestout, OSB, in 1940 declared St Benedict to be the borrower. This assertion opened a lively and widespread debate which continued for 20 years; now practically all scholars give priority to the Regula Magistri. While textual and palaeographical evidence is inconclusive, liturgy and observance suggests the priority of the Regula Magistri, while vocabulary and grammar seem decisive in favour of separate authorship (i.e. the Regula Magistri is not a first recension of the Rule of St Benedict), though possibly the Regula Magistri may stand between two redactions of the Rule of St Benedict. The monastery of the Master, though similar to that of St Benedict, is smaller and simpler, with many homely details. The Regula Magistri is diffuse and disorderly; but if the prologue and chapters on the abbot, etc., were borrowed by St Benedict from the Master, the latter was a man of deep spiritual wisdom.

Diplomatic edn. by H. Vanderhoven, F. Masai, and P. B. Corbett (Publications de Scriptorium, 3; Brussels and Paris, 1953); text also ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by A. de Vogüé, OSB, and others (SC 105–7; 1964–5). M. J. Cappuyns, OSB, Lexique de la Regula Magistri (Instrumenta Patristica, 6; 1964). A. Génestout, OSB, 'La Règle du Maître et la Règle de S. Benoît', Revue d'Ascétique et de Mystique, 21 (1940), pp. 51–122. The lit. of the subsequent controversy is considerable, mainly scattered in periodicals. B. Steidle, OSB (ed.), Regula Magistri, Regula S. Benedicti: Studia Monastica (Studia Anselmiana, 44; 1959), with extensive bibl. M. D. *Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises [1963], pp. 135–95. See also works cited s.v. BENEDICT, RULE OF ST, esp. introd. to edns. of R. Hanslik and of J. Neufville, OSB, and A. de Vogüé, OSB.

regular (from Lat. regula, rule). A general term for those members of the RC clergy who are bound by *vows of religion and live in community, following a rule. They are to be distinguished from the seculars, i.e. priests living in the world. In a narrower sense the expression was restricted to religious who had taken vows in an Order; the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici does not use it. See *INSTITUTES OF CONSECRATED LIFE.

regular canons. See CANONS REGULAR.

regular clerks. See CLERKS REGULAR.

Regularis Concordia. The code of monastic observance in England, drawn up and approved by the Synod of *Winchester, which met some time between 970 and 973. Acc. to *Aelfric, it would appear that the compilation was the work of St *Ethelwold, though it was very prob. inspired by St *Dunstan, to whom it was long attributed. Its provisions follow the *Benedictine tradition of *Benedict of Aniane, greatly influenced by the customaries of *Fleury, Ghent, and elsewhere. Details are given of the liturgical functions of the day and year and the duties attached to various monastic offices. The important position accorded to the sovereigns as patrons of the monastic life, e.g. the intercession for the King and Queen after all parts of the Office, except *Prime, is peculiar to England. Other English traditions were the allowance of a fire in winter and processions through the streets; notable also is the encouragement given to daily Communion.

Text repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 137. 475–502. Crit. edns. by T. Symons, OSB ('Medieval Classics', 1953) and by K. Hallinger, OSB, Consuetudinum saeculi X/XI/XII Monumenta Non-Cluniacensia (Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 7, pt. 3; Siegburg, 1984), pp. 61–147. The 'Proem' is also pr., with introd., in D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods . . ., I: A.D. 871–1204, 1 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 133–41. T. Symons, OSB, 'Regularis Concordia. History and Derivation', in D. Parsons (ed.), Tenth-Century Studies (1975), pp. 37–59, 214–7.

Reichenau (Lat. Augia dives). A small island in the W. arm of Lake Constance famous in the earlier Middle Ages for its Benedictine monastery, founded by St *Pirminius in 724. It was an important centre of culture when the neighbouring St *Gall was still insignificant; in the 9th cent. it numbered among its members *Walafrid Strabo and Hatto, Abp. of Mainz. Its collection of MSS (many of which have been at Karlsruhe since 1805) was already well established by the early part of the 9th cent. The churches still survive and contain interesting remains.

Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte der Abtei Reichenau herausg. von der Badischen historischen Kommission (2 vols., Heidelberg, 1890–3). J. Autenrieth and others (eds.), Das Verbrüderungsbuch der Abtei Reichenau (MGH, Libri memoriales et necrologia, 1; 1979). K. Beyerle (ed.), Die Kultur der Abtei Reichenau: Erinnerungsschrift zur zwölfhundertsten Wiederkehr des Gründungsjahres des Inselklosters, 724–1924 (2 vols., 1925; repr. 1970). H. Maurer (ed.), Die Abtei Reichenau: Neue Beiträge zur Geschichte und Kultur des Inselklosters (Bodensee-Bibliothek, 20; Sigmaringen, 1974). A. Borst (ed.), Mönchtum, Episkopat und Adel zur Gründungszeit des Klosters Reichenau (Vorträge und Forschungen, 20; Sigmaringen, 1974). P. Classen (ed.), Die Gründungsurkunden der Reichenau (ibid. 24; 1977). A. Holder, Die Reichenauer Handschriften beschrieben und erlaeutert (Die Handschriften der Grossherzoglich Badischen Hof- und Landesbibliothek in Karlsruhe, 5–7; 1906–18); H. Hoffmann, Buchkunst und Königtum im ottonischen und frühsalischen Reich (Schriften der MGH, 30/1; 1986), pp. 303–55. U. Begrich in Helvetia Sacra, Abteilung 3, Band 1, Teil 2 (Berne, 1986), pp. 1059–100, with extensive bibl. E. Josi in EC 10 (1953), cols. 665–8, s.v.

Reichsbischof. The title adopted in May 1933 at the suggestion of a Committee of the German Evangelical Church Federation for the office of head of a united German Evangelical Church, incorporating all the provincial Churches. Its first holder was Friedrich von Bodelschwingh. When the state appointed a Commissar for Prussia, who dismissed many pastors, Bodelschwingh resigned and was succeeded by the *German-Christian, Ludwig *Müller.

Reimarus, Hermann Samuel (1694–1768), *Deist and biblical critic. A native of Hamburg, he joined the class of J. A. *Fabricius, whose son-in-law he was to become, and later studied theology, classical philology, and philosophy at Jena. For a time he was Privatdozent at *Wittenberg and rector of the Hochschule at Wismar; and from 1727 until his death Professor of Hebrew and Oriental languages at Hamburg. His light duties enabled him to pursue independent studies in many fields, and between 1744 and 1767 he composed the treatise from which G. E. *Lessing published the notorious *Wolfenbüttel Fragments (q.v.) in 1774–8. The complete work (which Reimarus kept back from publication during his lifetime) bore in the MS the title Apologie oder Schutzschrift für die vernünftigen Verehrer Gottes. It unreservedly rejected miracles and revelation and sought to convict the biblical writers of conscious fraud, innumerable contradictions, and fanaticism. The appearance of the fragments produced a sensation in Germany. Further portions were issued by C. A. E. Schmidt (a pseudonym) in 1787 and W. Klose in 1850–2, while D. F. *Strauss in his book on Reimarus gave an analysis of the complete work. It was published in full in 1972. Reimarus himself published a number of works on other subjects, including Abhandlungen von den vornehmsten Wahrheiten der natürlichen Religion (1754; Eng. tr., 1766), a defence of *Natural Theology on the principles of C. *Wolff, which became very popular, and a good edition of Dio Cassius (2 vols., 1750–2).

His Apologie was ed. by G. Alexander (2 vols., Frankfurt am Main, 1972). Eng. tr. of two extracts from his work, 'On the Resurrection' and 'On the Intention of Jesus', and of part of Strauss's work, ed., with introd., by C. H. Talbert, Reimarus: Fragments (1971). D. F. Strauss, Hermann Samuel Reimarus und seine Schutzschrift für die vernünftigen Verehrer Gottes (1862). A. C. Lundsteen, Hermann Samuel Reimarus und die Anfänge der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (Copenhagen, 1939), with bibl. A. *Schweitzer, Geschichte der Leben-Jesu-Forschung (2nd edn., 1913), pp. 13–26 (Eng. tr. of 1st edn., 1910, pp. 13–26). R. [C.] Morgan in R. J. Coggins and J. L. Houlden (eds.), A Dictionary of Biblical Interpretation (1990), pp. 585 f., s.v., with bibl.

Reims. Acc. to tradition, the episcopal see in the old capital of the Remi in Gaul was founded in the second half of the 3rd cent. by St Sixtus, who was succeeded by St Sinicius. The first bishop for whom there is historical evidence was Imbetausius (or Bethausius), who took part in the Council of *Arles in 314. The power of the see increased greatly under St *Remigius (d. *c.*533; q.v.), who baptized *Clovis and evangelized the surrounding districts, and under the famous *Hincmar (d. 882). Between 922 and 946 it was subject to the counts of Vermandois. From the middle of the 10th cent., the Abps. of Reims successfully claimed the right to crown the French kings; this claim was endorsed by Pope *Sylvester II in 999 and confirmed as their exclusive privilege by *Alexander III in 1179. One of the most famous consecrations was that of Charles VII in the presence of St *Joan of Arc in 1429. By the *Concordat of 1801 the archbishopric of Reims was abolished and its territories divided between the dioceses of Meaux and of Metz, but it was restored in 1821.

The cathedral, one of the finest examples of French Gothic, was begun in 1211 and completed in the 14th cent. In 1481 a fire destroyed the roof and spires, and during the First World War (1914–18) the famous western façade with its three portals richly decorated with statues suffered severely. Among the badly damaged parts were the beautiful rose window above the central portal, the statue of Christ (the 'beau Dieu'), and that of the smiling angel. The cathedral was restored after the war and reopened in 1927. It suffered further damage in the Second World War. Its rich treasury contains many famous relics, e.g. the chalice of St Remigius and the remains of the Sainte Ampoule (see AMPULLA). The tomb of St Remigius in the former Benedictine abbey of St-Rémi is a popular place of pilgrimage.

Flodoard (canon of Reims; d. 966), Historia Remensis Ecclesiae (ed. G. Colvener, Douai, 1617; ed. and cont. by G. Marlot, OSB, 2 vols., Lille and Reims, 1666–79). G. Marlot, OSB (d. 1667), Histoire de la ville, cité et université de Reims (ed. J. Lacourt, 4 vols., Reims, 1843–6). G. Boussinesq and G. Laurent, Histoire de Reims depuis les origines jusqu'à nos jours (2 vols. in 3 parts, 1933). Gallia Christiana*, 9 (Paris, 1751 edn.), pp. 1–322. L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, 3 (1915), pp. 76–88. J. Leflon, Histoire de l'Élise de Reims du Ier au Vme siècle (Reims, 1942). R. McKitterick, 'The Carolingian Kings and the See of Rheims, 882–987', in Ideal and Reality in Frankish and Anglo-Saxon Society: Studies Presented to J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, ed. P. Wormald and others (Oxford, 1983), pp. 228–49. F. Poirier-Coutansais, Les Abbayes bénédictines du diocèse de Reims (Gallia Monastica, 1; 1974). The many architectural studies of the cathedral incl. those of C. Cerf (2 vols., Reims, 1861), P. Vitry (9 fascs., Paris, 1915–20; mainly plates), L. Bréhier (Paris, 1916), and H. Reinhardt (ibid., 1963), with bibl. M. Hollande, Trésors de Reims (Reims [1961]). G. Goyau in CE 12 (1911), pp. 725–30, s.v.

Reims New Testament. See DOUAI-REIMS BIBLE.

reincarnation. See METEMPSYCHOSIS.

Reinkens, Joseph Hubert (1821–96), *Old Catholic bishop. In 1850 he became professor of Church history at Breslau, where he published some monographs on *patristics. At the First *Vatican Council he was opposed to the definition of Papal infallibility, and in 1871 joined J. J. I. von *Döllinger in the *Nuremberg Declaration. After excommunication from the RC Church, Reinkens was elected the first bishop of the German Old Catholics at Cologne in 1873, and consecrated by Bp. Hermann Heykamp of Deventer. For the rest of his life he devoted himself to the Old Catholic cause by learned writing and in other ways. In 1874 and 1875 he took a prominent part in the *Bonn Reunion Conferences and in 1876 consecrated Edward Herzog the first Swiss Old Catholic bishop.

Letters which he wrote to his brother Wilhelm, 1840–73, ed. H. J. Sieben (Bonner Beiträge zur Kirchengeschichte, 10; 3 vols., 1979). His Life was written by his nephew, J. M. Reinkens (Gotha, 1906).

Reitzenstein, Richard (1861–1931), classical philologist and historian of religions. From 1889 onward he held professorships at several German universities, his final appointment being to Göttingen in 1914. His earlier work was chiefly philological, but later he applied the results of his philological studies to the religious and philosophical movements of the early cents. AD and their influence on the development of Christianity. In Poimandres (1904) he tried to prove that NT phraseology and ideas are largely derived from *Hermetic sources and that the Christian Churches were modelled on Hermetic communities, while in Die hellenistischen Mysterien-religionen (1910; 3rd edn., 1927; Eng. tr., 1978) and other later writings he sought to establish the direct dependence of early Christianity on Hellenistic, *Mandaean, and Iranian ideas. Similar methods were applied to the study of Christian monasticism in Historia Monachorum und Historia Lausiaca (1916). Though his brilliant and ingenious theories did not win much acceptance, they brought together much new material for the study of Christianity in relation to its primitive environment.

E. Fraenkel, H. Fränkel, M. Pohlenz, E. Reitzenstein, R. Reitzenstein, E. *Schwartz, and J. Stroux, Festschrift Richard Reitzenstein zum 2. April 1931 dargebracht (1931), with list of his works by R. Reitzenstein, pp. 160–8.

relics. In Christian usage the word is applied most commonly to the material remains of a saint after his death, as well as to sacred objects which have been in contact with his body; the most important relic, however, has been that of the True Cross (or fragments of it), according to tradition discovered by St *Helena during her pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 326. The veneration of relics is found in many religions, e.g. popular Buddhism, and is based on the natural instinct of men to treat with reverence what is left of the dead they loved. Traces of it may be found in the OT miracles worked through the mantle of *Elijah (2 Kgs. 2: 14) and the bones of *Elisha (2 Kgs. 13: 21), and, in the NT, in the healing power of handkerchiefs that had been in touch with St *Paul's body (Acts 19: 12). In post-NT times the martyrs' bodies were venerated from an early date, the first certain evidence occurring in the 'Martyrium Polycarpi' (*c.*156–7), where the relics of St *Polycarp are described as 'more valuable than precious stones and finer than refined gold' (ch. 18), to be carefully collected and honoured by a memorial service for the saint at the place where they were laid.

The cult of relics spread quickly both in the E. and in the W. In Rome it was bound up with the *catacombs, where prayer services were held and, from the 4th cent., the Eucharist celebrated over the tombs of the martyrs. The danger of exaggerated worship, caused by the great influx of pagans into the Church after the age of persecution, led *Vigilantius to oppose the cult. Against him St *Jerome enunciated the principle, already foreshadowed in the 'Martyrium Polycarpi', that the relics of the martyrs are honoured for the sake of Him whose martyrs they are. St *Augustine added the reason that the bodies served the saints while they lived as organs of the Holy Spirit, and that also the objects they used should be dear to Christians from motives of filial piety. *Gennadius held that they should be honoured as the members of Christ. At the same time the increasing demand for relics led, in the E., to the translating and even dismembering of the bodies, a practice strictly forbidden by the Roman civil law and not introduced into the W. till the 7th and 8th cents. In opposition to the *Iconoclasts, who rejected the veneration of relics as well as of *icons, the Second Council of *Nicaea (787) anathematized those who despised holy relics and laid down that no church should be consecrated without them. The veneration of relics was confirmed for the E. Church by the Council of *Constantinople in 1084. In the W. the cult increased enormously, esp. during the *Crusades, when quantities of relics, often spurious, were brought to Europe from the Holy Land. They were kept in magnificent *reliquaries, carried in procession, and often gave rise to superstitious practices. After the end of the persecutions relics were placed under altars and the kissing of the mensa at the beginning of Mass came to be interpreted as a salutation of the relics. For current practice regarding the use of relics in the dedication of altars, see ALTAR.

The theological foundation of the cult of relics was worked out by the Schoolmen, esp. St *Thomas Aquinas, on the principles laid down by Jerome and Augustine. Stress was laid on the special dignity of the bodies of the saints as temples of the Holy Spirit destined to a glorious resurrection, and the sanction given by the Godhead in making them the occasion of many miracles. In the 16th cent. the doctrine was confirmed by the Council of *Trent against the Reformers. Post-Tridentine theologians have differed as to whether they are to be honoured with the same cult of '*dulia' as the saints or with an inferior one. Acc. to RC canon law, the sale of relics is strictly forbidden, and those which are significant or greatly revered cannot be validly alienated or permanently transferred without the permission of the *Holy See (CIC (1983), can. 1190). Among the most famous relics are those of Santiago de *Compostela, the Holy House of *Loreto, and the *Holy Coat of Trier. A feast of Holy Relics used to be observed in many English RC dioceses on 5 Nov.

See also MARTYRIUM.

S. Beissel, SJ, Die Verehrung der Heiligen und ihre Reliquien in Deutschland (Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, Ergänzungshefte, 47 and 54; 1890–2). H. Siebert, Beiträge zur vorreformatorischen Heiligen- und Reliquienverehrung (1907). U. Mioni, Il culto delle reliquie nella chiesa cattolica (1908). F. Pfister, Der Reliquienkult im Altertum (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, 5; 2 vols., 1909–12). B. Lefeuvre, Courte histoire des reliques (1932). H. Fichtenau, 'Zum Reliquienwesen im früheren Mittelalter', Mitteilungen des Instituts für österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 60 (1952), pp. 60–89. B. Kötting, Der frühchristliche Reliquienkult und die Bestattung im Kirchengebäude (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, Geisteswissenschaften, 123; 1965), with summary in Eng., pp. 38 f. N. Hermann-Mascard, Les reliques des saints: Formation coutumière d'un droit (Societé d'histoire du droit. Collection d'histoire institutionnelle et sociale, 6; 1975). P. J. Geary, Furta Sacra: Thefts of Relics in the Central Middle Ages (Princeton, NJ, 1978). Popular treatment by J. Bentley, Restless Bones: The Story of Relics (1985). H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 12 (1911), pp. 734–8, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2294–359, s.v. 'Reliques et reliquaires'; E. Josi, F. Antonelli, OFM, and P. Palazzini in EC 10 (1953), cols. 749–60, s.v. 'Reliquie'; F. Chiovaro in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 234–40, s.v. See also works cited under RELIQUARY.

Relief Acts. See CATHOLIC RELIEF ACTS.

Religionsgeschichtliche Schule. The 'History of Religion School', an influential group of German biblical scholars between 1880 and 1920 who advocated extensive use of data from the comparative study of religions in the interpretation of Christianity. In contrast to A. *Ritschl, who interpreted the NT in the light of modern doctrinal convictions and largely ignored its historical antecedents, this School reduced dogmatic considerations to a minimum. Further, religious documents must be understood not as isolated expressions of their authors' thoughts and aspirations, but as products of a long and often complex development of the tribe or community. In its philosophy the School was influenced by G. W. F. *Hegel and the concept of evolution, in its historical methods also by L. von *Ranke and T. *Mommsen. E. *Troeltsch regarded himself as the systematic theologian of the School.

At first the School confined itself to tracing historical developments inside Judaism and Christianity, but it soon came to search for parallels in Egyptian, Babylonian, and various Hellenistic religious systems. Thus H. *Gunkel, H. Gressmann (1877–1927), and W. *Bousset claimed that many biblical passages were based on the ancient myths not only of the Hebrews but also of, e.g., Babylon and Egypt. Bousset and J. *Weiss maintained that the eschatological ideas underlying the terms '*Messiah' and '*Kingdom of God' were largely of non-Jewish origin, while Bousset also claimed to have found extrabiblical antecedents for the term 'Lord'. R. *Reitzenstein, whose imagination admittedly far outran his critical sense, advanced similar claims for such terms as 'Man from Heaven', 'Holy Spirit', and 'Saviour', and he, A. Eichhorn (1856–1926), and W. Heitmüller (1869–1925) upheld the relevance of Gentile 'parallels' for the *Eucharist and *Baptism. Another prominent member of the school was H. *Windisch.

G. Lüdemann, 'Die Religionsgeschichtliche Schule', in B. Moeller (ed.), Theologie in Göttingen (Göttingen [1987]), pp. 325–61. J. Hempel in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 991–4; K. Rudolph in M. Eliade (ed.), Encyclopedia of Religion, 12 (1987), pp. 293–6, both s.v.

religious. The technical name for a member of a Religious *Institute of Consecrated Life (q.v.), some Institutes being Orders and some Congregations. In RC Canon law (CIC (1983), can. 607), religious are members of an Institute who bind themselves by public *vow to observe, in addition to the precepts, the evangelical *counsels of obedience, chastity, and poverty. They live a common life.

religous drama. See DRAMA, CHRISTIAN.

Religious Institutes. See INSTITUTES OF CONSECRATED LIFE.

religious orders in Anglicanism. The revival of religious orders in the Anglican Communion was one of the results of the *Oxford Movement. In 1839 E. B. *Pusey wrote to J. *Keble that he and J. H. *Newman had independently been led to recognize the desirability of some 'Sœurs de Charité' in the Anglican Church and on Trinity Sunday 1841 he received the vows of Marian Rebecca Hughes, who in 1849 became the first Superior of the Convent of the Holy and Undivided Trinity at Oxford. In 1845 he founded the first community at Park Village, Regent's Park, which was later merged in the Society of the Holy Trinity, founded at Devonport by Priscilla Lydia *Sellon in 1848 and now at Ascot. After this, communities followed in rapid succession. Among the most famous are the Community of St Mary the Virgin, founded in 1848 with the help of W. J. *Butler, vicar of Wantage; the Community of St John the Baptist, founded in 1852 at Clewer by T. T. *Carter, with Harriet Monsell as first superior; the Community of All Saints, founded in 1851 by W. Upton Richards, vicar of All Saints, Margaret Street, London; and the Community of St Margaret, founded in 1855 at East Grinstead by J. M. *Neale. All these were 'active' or 'mixed' communities, combining the monastic life (with its centre in the daily recitation of the Breviary Offices) with a life of service, and they were among the pioneers in the care for the poor in the slums of great cities which was one of the fruits of the Oxford Movement. The Deaconess Community of St Andrew, founded by Elizabeth Ferard in 1861, was unique in combining community life with admission to the order of *deaconess. It was not until 1907 that, with the foundation of the first enclosed community, the 'Sisters of the Love of God', at Fairacres, Oxford, the 'contemplative' life was revived. In the previous year, however, the Sisters of the Community of the Holy Comforter, founded at Edmonton, London, in 1891, decided to give up active work and adopt the rule of St *Benedict. After 10 years at Baltonsborough, Somerset, they moved to Malling Abbey, Kent, which had been vested in the English Abbey Restoration Fund before the secession to Rome of its donor.

Communities for men developed more slowly. J. H. Newman, after he had moved to Littlemore in 1842, lived a community life with some companions and on occasion referred to his establishment as a μονή, but there were no vows. Some of the ritualist slum priests, e.g. C. F. *Lowder, stressed the importance for mission of groups of celibate clergy living under rule, but the first religious order of men was the *Society of St John the Evangelist, founded in 1865 at Cowley by R. M. *Benson. The *Community of the Resurrection, founded in 1892 by C. *Gore, has been, since 1898, established at Mirfield, and the Society of the Sacred Mission, founded by H. H. Kelly in 1893 (a missionary brotherhood had existed since 1891), was at Kelham from 1903 to 1974; it is now based at Willen Priory, near Milton Keynes. One of the chief works of these two orders has been the training of ordinands. The Benedictine life for men was first revived by Joseph Leycester Lyne, Father *Ignatius, in 1869. The oldest surviving community, now at Elmore, near Newbury (from 1926 to 1987 at Nashdom), sprang from the Benedictine community at *Caldey. In 1981 the Benedictine Rule was formally adopted by the community at Alton Abbey (founded in 1884 in Rangoon as the Order of St Paul; the house at Alton dates from 1895. This had originally been a double order, but the women's side died out in 1952). The period immediately after the First World War saw the establishment of an Anglican *Franciscan Order (q.v.). In 1938 R. C. S. Gofton-Salmond retired to a woodland property near Crawley, Sussex, where the Community of the Servants of the Will of God now follow a contemplative vocation of a semi-eremitical type.

In recent years a decline in vocations both among men and women has led to the closure of some orders and to other communities moving out of over-large Victorian conventual and monastic buildings. At the same time there have been new ventures in community living (including attempts to turn small women's communities into double orders), as well as an increased interest in the eremitic life.

From England this revived religious life spread over much of the Anglican Communion. Many of the English orders have branch houses in other countries and new communities have grown up in America, Africa, India, and Australasia.

The early communities, though for the most part established in dioceses where the bishop was sympathetic, had no recognized place in the life of the Church and had to face much suspicion and at times active hostility. Since 1861, when the movement was first discussed in *Canterbury Convocation, their contribution to the life of the Church has been increasingly recognized. Following the recommendation made in a report to the *Lambeth Conference of 1930, an 'Advisory Council on the Relation of the Bishops and Religious Communities' was established for Canterbury and York, and it is now possible for communities to receive formal recognition. Can. H 2 of the 1969 *Canons (promulgated 7 Oct. 1969) provides for the clerical members of religious orders to have a representative in each of the Lower Houses of the *Convocations of Canterbury and York, and from the inception of *Synodical Government in 1970 the religious orders have been represented in both the House of Clergy and the House of Laity of the General Synod. In 1975 the Communities Consultative Council was established.

A Directory of the Religious Life (1943) and Guide to the Religious Communities of the Anglican Communion (1951), both issued by the Advisory Council on Religious Communities under the Chairmanship of the Bp. of Oxford [K. E. *Kirk]. A. T. Cameron (ed.), Directory of Religious Communities of Men and Women and of Deaconess Communities and Institutions in the Anglican Communion (1920; 2nd edn., enlarged, 1922). P. F. Anson, The Call of the Cloister (1955; rev. by A. W. Campbell, 1964). A. M. Allchin, The Silent Rebellion: Anglican Religious Communities 1845–1900 (1958). M. Hill, The Religious Order: A Study of Virtuoso Religion and its Legitimation in the Nineteenth-Century Church of England (1973). S. L. Ollard in DECH (3rd edn., 1948), s.v. 'Religious Orders. II: Modern'.

Religious Tract Society (RTS). The Society was founded in 1799 (incorporated, 1899), with a committee of an equal number of Anglicans and Nonconformists, for the publication and dissemination of tracts and other Christian evangelical literature. It published in 200 languages for missionary purposes and established daughter societies in *India and *China. During the war of 1914–18 it gratuitously distributed many millions of books and magazines among soldiers, sailors, and prisoners of war. On 14 May 1935 it was absorbed in the *United Society for Christian Literature (q.v.).

W. Jones, The Jubilee Volume of the Religious Tract Society: Containing a Record of its Origin, Proceedings, and Results. A.D. 1799–1849 (1850); S. G. Green, The Story of the Religious Tract Society for One Hundred Years (1899); G. Hewitt, Let the People Read: A Short History of the United Society for Christian Literature, 1799; Christian Literature Society for India and Africa, 1858; Christian Literature Society for China (British Support), 1887 (1949). Annual Reports of the Religious Tract Society (London, 1799–[1936] for 1935).

reliquary. A receptacle for *relics. The oldest reliquaries took the form of caskets, capsules, *ampullas, also of crosses, esp. for relics of the True Cross, of rings and of purses, and from early times they have frequently been of precious material and richly decorated. For the reception of the whole remains of a saint the gabled shrine was a favourite form in the Middle Ages, among famous examples being the silver shrine of the Three Kings at *Cologne (*c.*1190–1225) and H. *Memling's reliquary of St *Ursula at Bruges. At the same period smaller relics were kept in reliquaries of the shape of arms, legs, and esp. heads and busts, while in the later Middle Ages the *monstrance form, which facilitated exposition, became frequent. Besides the varied formalized shapes, caskets and boxes of all sizes and materials have always served as receptacles for relics. See also MARTYRIUM.

J. Braun, SJ, Die Reliquiare des christlichen Kultes und ihre Entwicklung (1940). M. Andrieu, 'Aux origines du culte du Saint-Sacrement. Reliquaires et monstrances eucharistiques', Anal. Boll. 68 (1950), pp. 397–418. M.-M. [S.] Gauthier, Les Routes de la Foi: Reliques et reliquaires de Jérusalem à Compostelle [1983]. A series of arts. in Ornamenta Ecclesiae: Kunst und Künstler der Romanik. Katalog zur Ausstellung des Schnütgen-Museums in der Josef-Haubrich-Kunsthalle, ed. A. Legner, 3 (Cologne, 1985), pp. 19–184. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 12 (1911), pp. 762 f., s.v.

Rembrandt (1606–69) (Rembrandt Harmensz or Harmenszoon van Rijn), Dutch painter. The son of a wealthy miller of *Leiden, he showed an early inclination for his art and, at the age of 25, was one of the most famous portrait painters of his country. In 1631 he moved to Amsterdam, where he lived till his death. In 1634 he married the beautiful Saskia, who during the rest of her life was the inspiration of his art. His pictures on scriptural subjects in these years, which treat mostly of vivid scenes such as the story of *Samson, are full of vigour and imagination though they have not reached the spirituality of his later period. With the death of Saskia, in 1642, sorrow entered his life, and his troubles were increased by financial difficulties ending in bankruptcy and, in 1654, the scandal of having a child by his servant, Hendrickje, which brought him into conflict with the Reformed Church at Amsterdam. These sufferings, which threw him more and more into solitude, helped further to deepen and spiritualize his art and to give him an understanding of the Passion—a theme treated in about 90 paintings and etchings—such as few artists have possessed. Characteristic was his treatment of light and shade out of which his human figures appear to grow, thereby producing the impression of a happening beyond space and time. The supernatural atmosphere of the Last Supper and the Disciples at Emmaus, and the union of Divine majesty and redeeming love in the face of his Christ blessing the children or healing the sick, are unsurpassed in Christian art. Among his last great works is his famous Return of the Prodigal Son (Leningrad, *c.*1668), a painted confession of faith in the goodness of God expressed in the face and hands of the father, who receives the kneeling beggar with infinite love. Rembrandt has rightly been termed the painter of the soul.

Reproductions of his Paintings incl. edn. by A. Bredius (Utrecht, 1935; Eng. edn., 1937, rev. by H. Gerson, 1969); of his Drawings, ed. O. Benesch (6 vols., London, 1954–7; rev. by E. Benesch, 1973); of his Etchings, ed. L. Münz (2 vols., London, 1952), and K. G. Boon (ibid., 1963). The very extensive lit. incl. general studies by A. M. Hind (Charles Eliot Norton Lectures, 1930–1; London, 1932), J. Rosenberg (2 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1948; rev. edn., London, 1964), B. Haak (Amsterdam, 1968; Eng.

tr., 1969), C. [J.] White (London, 1984), and S. Partsch (ibid., 1991). K. Clark, Rembrandt and the Italian Renaissance (Wrightsman Lectures, 1966), and other works by this author. C. [J.] White, Rembrandt as Etcher (2 vols., 1969). Id. and K. G. Boon, Rembrandt's Etchings: An Illustrated Critical Catalogue (2 vols., Amsterdam and New York [1970]). A. Bruyn and others, A Corpus of Rembrandt's Paintings (The Hague, Boston, and London, 1982 ff. [challenging the attribution of many paintings traditionally ascribed to Rembrandt]); cf. S. Alpers, Rembrandt's Enterprise: The Studio and the Market (1988).

Remigius, St (d. *c.*533), also 'Remi', 'Apostle of the Franks'. Born of a noble Gallo-Roman family in the region of Laon, he is reputed to have been elected bishop of the metropolitan see of *Reims at the age of 22, prob. *c.*458. His Baptism of *Clovis, with 3,000 of his subjects, greatly enhanced the position of the Frankish ruler and marked the beginning of a close co-operation between the Church and the ruler, the terms of which are set out in a famous letter of Remigius. He directed missions to the Morini and the *Arians of Burgundy and is associated with the foundation of bishoprics at Laon, Tournai, Térouanne, and Cambrai-Arras (where he appointed St *Vedast as bishop to promote the Christian mission in N. Gaul). Acc. to a legend, first mentioned by *Hincmar of Reims, the *ampulla of chrism traditionally used in the coronation of French kings was brought by a dove in answer to the prayers of Remigius at the Baptism of Clovis. He is said to have conferred upon Clovis the power of touching for the *King's evil. Feast day, 1 Oct., the anniversary of the translation of his relics to the abbey of St-Rémi by Pope *Leo IX in 1049, has now been dropped from the Universal Calendar of the RC Church. At Reims his death is commemorated on 13 Jan.

Letters, together with the Testament attributed to Remigius, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 65. 963–76; crit. edn. of the letters by W. Gundlach in MGH, Epistolae, 3 (1892), pp. 112–16, and of the Testament by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 336–47 (both repr. in CCSL 117 (1957), pp. 407–13, 473–87). Crit. edn. of early Life of Remigius, traditionally but wrongly ascribed to *Venantius Fortunatus, by B. Krusch in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 4 (pt. 2; 1885), pp. 64–7, and of Life by Hincmar of Reims by id. in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 239–336. Important study of the latter by J. Devisse, Hincmar, archevêque de Reims, 845–882, 2 (Geneva, 1976), pp. 1004–54. The traditional account of the Baptism of Clovis is also found in *Gregory of Tours, Historia Francorum, 2. 31; the same author recounts the miracles of Remigius in his In Gloria Confessorum, 78 [79]. A. H. M. Jones, P. Grierson, and J. A. Crook, 'The authenticity of the "Testamentum S. Remigii" ', Revue Belge de Philologie et d'Histoire, 35 (1957), pp. 356–73. Popular Life by R. Barroux ('Grandeurs et gloires de l'ancienne France', 1947). R. Kaiser, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Civitas und Diözese Soissons im römischer und merowingischer Zeit (Rheinisches Archiv, 89; Bonn, 1973), pp. 217–19. K. Schäferdiek, 'Remigius von Reims, Kirchenmann einer Umbruchszeit', ZKG 94 (1983), pp. 256–78. M. Heinzelmann, 'Gallische Prosopographie 160–527', Francia, 10 (1982), pp. 531–717, at p. 679, s.v. 'Remigius 2'. G. Bardy in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2379–81, s.v. 'Remi de Reims (Saint)'. See also bibl. to REIMS and CLOVIS.

Remigius of Auxerre (*c.*841–*c.*908), monk of St Germanus, Auxerre, scholar and teacher. The youngest member of the influential 'school of Auxerre', following Haimo and *Heiric, Remigius taught in Auxerre until 893, when Abp. Fulc summoned him to restore the schools of *Reims. On Fulc's death (900) Remigius apparently moved to *Paris, where he taught *Odo, the future Abbot of *Cluny.

Remigius had the advantages of the libraries of St Germanus and Auxerre cathedral, and of the scholarly work of his predecessors. On that basis he taught a comprehensive programme of literary and moral texts. He commented on the grammarians Donatus, Priscian, Eutyches, and Phocas; on Terence (lost), *Virgil, Juvenal, and Persius; on the Christian poets *Sedulius and *Prudentius; on the Dialectica of St *Augustine, the De Nuptiis of Martianus Capella and both the Opuscula Sacra and the De Consolatione Philosophiae of *Boethius; on the schoolboy's ethical text, the Distichs of Cato, and on the De Arte Metrica of *Bede. Remigius' biblical exposition has been little studied. It prob. consisted of commentaries on Genesis and Psalms and twelve sermons on St Matthew's Gospel. Finally Remigius is credited with a brief exposition of the Mass. Although neither an original thinker in the mould of John Scottus *Erigena, nor achieving worldly promotion, Remigius did more than anyone else we know to make sound learning widely available to his contemporaries and successors. He 'lived in his pupils'.

Much the best account of Remigius' life and writings is Manitius, 1 (1911), pp. 504–19, with addenda in 2 (1923), p. 808, and 3 (1931), p. 1063. The texts of his comm. are scattered and in most cases not yet pr. in full. That on Donatus, Ars minor, ed. W. Fox, SJ (Teub., 1902); cf. L. Holtz, Donat et la tradition de l'enseignement grammatical (1981), pp. 440–1, with refs. Comm. on Martianus Capella, De Nuptiis, ed. C. E. Lutz (2 vols., Leiden, 1962–5), with introd. and edns. to date; q.v. for comm. on Virgil, Persius, Sedulius, and Prudentius. For comm. on other grammarians, see C. Jeudy, 'La tradition manuscrite des Partitiones de Priscien et la version longue du commentaire de Rémi d'Auxerre', Revue d'histoire des textes, 1 (1971), pp. 123–43; id., 'L'Institutio de Nomine, Pronomine et Verbo de Priscien. Manuscrits et commentaires médiévaux', ibid. 2 (1972), pp. 73–144; id., 'L'Ars de Nomine et Verbo de Phocas: manuscrits et commentaires médiévaux', Viator, 5 (1974), pp. 61–156; id., 'Les Manuscrits de l'Ars de verbo d'Eutychès et le commentaire de Rémi d'Auxerre' in Études de Civilisation Médiévale (IXᵉ XIIᵉ siècles): Mélanges offerts à Edmond-René Labande (Poitiers [1974]), pp. 421–36. For comm. on Juvenal, see E. M. Sandford in P. O. Kristeller (ed.), Catalogus Translationum et Commentariorum, 1 (Washington, DC, 1960), pp. 176 f. His comm. on Augustine's Dialectica is mentioned by John of Cluny, Vita S. Odonis, 1. 19 (PL 133. 52A); cf. however, J. Marenbon, From the Circle of Alcuin to the School of Auxerre (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 15; 1981), pp. 173–9. For comm. on Boethius, see M. Cappuyns, 'Le plus ancien commentaire des "Opuscula Sacra" et son origine', RTAM 3 (1931), pp. 237–72, and P. Courcelle, La Consolation de Philosophie dans la tradition littéraire (Études Augustiniennes, 1967), pp. 241–99. For comm. on Disticha Catonis, see A. Mancini, 'Un commento ignoto di Remy d'Auxerre ai Disticha Catonis', Rendiconti della Reale Accademia dei Lincei, Classe di Scienze Morali, Storiche e Filologiche, 5th ser. 11 (1902), pp. 175–98, with further note, pp. 369–82. Comm. on Bede, De Arte Metrica and De Schematibus et Tropis pr. in full by M. H. King in Bede's Opera, Pars 6: Opera didascalica, 1 (CCSL 123A; 1975), pp. 77–171. Comm. on Gen. in J. P. Migne, PL 131. 51–134; cf. F. Stegmüller, Repertorium Biblicum Medii Aevi, 5 (Madrid, 1955), pp. 65 f. (no. 7194). For his comm. on Pss. (unpr.), see A. Vaccari, SJ, 'Il genuino commento ai Salmi di Remigio di Auxerre', Biblica, 26 (1945), pp. 52–99, repr., with additional material, in his collected Scritti di Erudizione e di Filologia, 1 (1955), pp. 283–329. (The comm. pr. under his name in J. P. Migne, PL 131.

133–844 is not genuine.) Sermons on Mt. in J. P. Migne, PL 131. 865–932; cf. F. Stegmüller, op. cit., pp. 75 f. (no. 7226). J.-P. Bouhot, 'Les sources de l'Expositio missae de Remi d'Auxerre', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 26 (1980), pp. 118–69, incl. complete text. C. Jeudy and others in D. Iogna-Prat and others (eds.), L'École Carolingienne d'Auxerre de Murethach à Remi 830–908: Entretiens d'Auxerre 1989 [1991], pp. 371–500. L. Scheffczyk in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), cols. 1223–5, s.v.

Remonstrance, the. The statement of *Arminian teaching drawn up in Jan. 1610 by J. Arminius' close friend, Johannes Uitenbogaert, very shortly after the former's death and signed by 44 of his followers. In a somewhat different version this declaration was presented a few months later to the States of Holland in a plea for greater theological toleration. It contains the celebrated five articles which, borrowed verbatim from Arminius' Declaratio Sententiae of 1608, briefly summarized the Remonstrants' doctrine and set the agenda for the ensuing controversies. Among the more extreme *Calvinist doctrines repudiated were both *Supralapsarian and *Sublapsarian forms of predestination, the doctrine that Christ died only for the elect, and the notion that, for the latter, grace was both irresistible and indefectible. The subsequent conflict was very bitter, for the Remonstrants were suspected of favouring the pro-Spanish party in politics, and the eventual alliance of the *Contra-Remonstrants with Prince Maurice of Orange led to the condemnation of the Remonstrants at the Synod of *Dort (1618–19). See also ARMINIANISM.

G. J. Hoenderdaal, 'Remonstrantie en Contraremonstrantie', Nederlands Archief voor Kerkgeschiedenis, NS 51 (1970–71), pp. 49–92 (incl. text, pp. 64–79). Text also, with Lat. and Eng. trs., in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 545–9. J. den Tex, Oldenbarnevelt, 3 (Haarlem, 1966), pp. 123–56; abridged Eng. tr., 2 (Cambridge, 1973), pp. 423–66.

Renan, Joseph Ernest (1823–92), French philosopher, theologian, and orientalist. A native of Tréguier in Brittany, he was invited in 1838 by F. A. P. *Dupanloup (whose attention had been drawn to Renan's brilliance through his sister, Henriette) to join his celebrated seminary of St-Nicolas-du-Chardonnet at Paris. His study of German theology and Semitic languages led him to have doubts of the truth of Christianity, and in Oct. 1845 he left the seminary of *St-Sulpice, where he then was. After a somewhat precarious and varied life for several years, he published in 1852 his Averroès et l'averroïsme, which at once established his reputation as a scholar. In 1860 he was sent by the Emperor on an archaeological mission to Phoenicia and Syria, and it was while in Palestine that he wrote his celebrated Vie de Jésus. In this book, written in an attractive and vivid style, but in a tone that hardly rang sincere, he repudiated the supernatural element in Christ's life, ignored its moral aspect, and portrayed Him as a charming and amiable Galilean preacher. Its publication in 1863 created an immediate sensation throughout Europe. In Jan. 1862 he had been appointed professor of Hebrew at the Collège de France, but the storm created by his Vie de Jésus led to his removal in 1864. For the rest of his life he held no further appointment. In 1866 he published a pioneer study on *Joachim of Fiore in the Revue des Deux Mondes (repr. in 1884 in Nouvelles études d'histoire religieuse). This essay reveals another side to Renan: the combination of serious scholarship with a romantic vision of a new 'religion of humanity', prob. inspired by George Sand's Joachimist novel Spiridion (1839). His other writings include Les Apôtres (1866), St Paul (1869), Les Évangiles (1877), Histoire du peuple d'Israël (5 vols., 1887–93), and his widely popular Souvenirs d'enfance et de jeunesse (1883).

Collected edn. of his works by H. Psichari (10 vols., Paris, 1947–61). Many of his works were tr. into Eng., incl. his Life of Jesus (London, 1864, and many later edns.). Studies in Fr. incl. J. Pommier, Ernest Renan d'après des documents inédits (1923); id., La Pensée religieuse de Renan (1925), and id., La Jeunesse cléricale d'Ernest Renan: Saint-Sulpice (thesis, Strasbourg, 1933), with bibl.; R. Dussaud, L'Œuvre scientifique d'Ernest Renan (1951); J. Chaix-Ruy, Ernest Renan (Paris, 1956); and L. Retat, Religion et Imagination religieuse: Leur formes et leur rapports dans l'œuvre d'Ernest Renan (Paris thesis, 1979). M. J. *Lagrange, OP, La Vie de Jésus d'après Renan (1921; Eng. tr., 1928). P. Alfaric, Les Manuscrits de la 'Vie de Jésus' d'Ernest Renan (Publications de la Faculté des Lettres de l'Université de Strasbourg, 90; 1939), with introd., notes, and concordance. G. Pholien, Les Deux 'Vie de Jésus' de Renan (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 239; 1983). H. Girard and H. Moncel, Bibliographie des œuvres d'Ernest Renan (Publication de la Société Ernest Renan. Histoire religieuse, 1; 1923). Studies in Eng. by H. W. Wardman (London, 1964) and R. M. Chadbourne (New York, 1968). H. W. Wardman in EB (1977 edn.), Macropaedia, 15, pp. 671–3, s.v.; Y. Marchason in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 10 (1985), cols. 277–344, s.v.

Renaudot, Eusèbe (1646–1720), orientalist and liturgist. He was a native of *Paris. After a short stay with the *Oratorians he devoted himself entirely to oriental studies and became a member of the Académie Française in 1689. A valued friend and adviser of the leading men of his time, among them J.-B. *Bossuet, he accompanied the Cardinal *de Noailles to the conclave of 1700. He never received more than minor orders.

Renaudot's two chief theological writings are his erudite Historia Patriarcharum Alexandrinorum Jacobitarum (1713) and his Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio (2 vols., 1716). The latter contains the texts of a great number of E. liturgies with copious notes and commentaries, and is still indispensable for liturgical studies. Renaudot, who was a friend of several *Jansenists, was also the author of the fourth and fifth volumes of the famous Perpétuité de la foi, published under the direction of P. *Nicole and A. *Arnauld, in which, by rich documentation, he upheld the antiquity of the Eucharistic faith of the E. Churches against the *Calvinistic doctrine.

A corrected edn. of Renaudot's Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio was pub., 2 vols., Frankfurt am Main, 1847. A photographic reprint of this was issued at Farnborough, 1970; of the Historia Patriarcharum at Brussels, 1969. Selections from his correspondence ed. F. Duffo (Paris, 1927 and 1931). H. Omont, 'Inventaire sommaire des manuscrits de la collection Renaudot, conservée à la Bibliothèque Nationale', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 51 (1890), pp. 270–97. A. Villien, L'Abbé Eusèbe Renaudot: Essai sur sa vie et sur son œuvre liturgique (1904). J. Carreyre in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2381–3, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 14 (pt. 2; 1948), cols. 2369–72, s.v.

renegade. One who forsakes his religion for another faith. The term was formerly in current use esp. of Christians who apostatized to *Islam.

Renunciation of the Devil. The renunciation of Satan at *Baptism is attested in St *Hippolytus' Apostolic Tradition, St *Cyril of Jerusalem, and St *Ambrose's De Mysteriis, and has been a regular part of almost all Baptismal rites, E. and W. It was presumably designed originally to confirm the candidate in his intention to forsake all heathen worship and ways of life.

reordination. The repetition of an ordination to the priesthood which had been conferred either extra ecclesiam, i.e. by an heretical or schismatic bishop, or intra ecclesiam but not canonically, e.g. by a deposed or simoniacal bishop. Reordination was frequently practised in the Church down to the 12th cent., when the doctrine of the sacraments began to receive more precise formulation. The question of reordination first became a practical issue through the rise of schisms and heresies. Implicitly different answers were already given in the 3rd cent. by St *Cyprian of Carthage and St *Stephen of Rome, in that the one rejected and the other accepted the *validity of heretical Baptism.

In the following cents. the practice of the Church varied. Acc. to the Council of *Nicaea (325; can. 19) ordinations in the different sects were treated differently, whereas the *Apostolic Constitutions and the *Apostolic Canons are hostile to the sacraments of all non-Catholic bodies. In view of the new schisms of the 4th and 5th cents. the practice of reordination was attenuated and often replaced by a ceremony called χειροθεσία, which was mentioned in the Canons of Nicaea, and is apparently a supplementary rite distinct from ordination (χειροτονία). The Greek Church, though it repudiated reordination at the *Trullan Council (692; can. 95), has continued to waver in its practice. In the W. St *Augustine's doctrine of the validity of the sacraments administered by sinful, excommunicated, schismatic, or heretical priests, formed in the course of the *Donatist controversy, slowly gained ground against opposition. Though St *Gregory the Great expressed himself clearly against reordination, heretical sacraments were viewed with hostility by many subsequent theologians, and reordination was practised, e.g., by the Greek Abp. *Theodore of Canterbury, who, in 669, reordained Ceadda, who had been ordained by supposed *Quartodecimans. It was also practised in the case of priests ordained by the irregularly elected Pope Constantine II (767–9), by Pope *Formosus (891–6), and by the 9th-cent. *chorepiscopi, as well as on the simoniacal clergy of the 11th cent., many of whom were reordained by the Pope himself, St *Leo IX. From the period of *Gregory VII, however, when *Anselm of Lucca defended the validity of heretical sacraments, the Augustinian view became more and more general and was finally formulated by St *Thomas Aquinas, who rejected the practice of reordination because of the indelible *character bestowed by the sacrament of Holy Orders on its recipient. This doctrine was formally sanctioned by the Council of *Trent, provided that the sacrament was conferred in the prescribed form and with the right intention.

L. Saltet, Les Réordinations (1907); C. H. *Turner, 'Apostolic Succession', in H. B. *Swete (ed.), Essays on the Early History of the Church and the Ministry (1918), esp. pp. 161–79.

reparation. The making amends for damage done to another. In moral theology it is generally used in a sense similar to *restitution (q.v.) in cases of personal injury such as homicide, detraction, adultery, etc. For wrongs of this kind reparation cannot be made exactly corresponding to the loss, but takes the form of compensation, already prescribed in the Mosaic Law (Exod. 21: 22 ff.).

In modern devotional language the term is frequently used for the amends made to God for offences against Him by means of prayer and penance. Reparation plays a central part in the *Sacred Heart devotion, esp. with ref. to outrages committed against the Blessed Sacrament, and confraternities and congregations have been established with this and similar ends in view.

repentance. The acknowledgement and condemnation of one's own sins, coupled with a turning to God. True repentance or *contrition (as contrasted with mere *attrition) springs from love of God whom human sin rejects or offends. It includes sorrow for sin committed, confession of guilt, and the purpose of amendment. The Greek word μετάνοια, translated 'repentance' in the English NT, emphasizes the last aspect, while the Latin word penitentia (whence 'penance' and 'penitence') refers in origin to the first two aspects, esp. as expressed in the payment of a penalty. In accord with this distinction in language, Latin teaching has laid special emphasis in *Penance on acts of *reparation and *satisfaction for sin.

Repington, Philip (d. 1424), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was educated at *Oxford and became an *Augustinian canon of St Mary-de-Pré, Leicester. In early life he was a supporter of the doctrines of J. *Wycliffe, whose sacramental teaching he defended in several sermons. At the Council of Blackfriars (1382) he was suspended and a few weeks later excommunicated at *Canterbury, but he recanted his heresies and was restored to communion in the same year. In 1394 he became abbot of St Mary-de-Pré and three years later chancellor of the University of Oxford, an office he held again in 1400 and the two following years. Shortly after his accession in 1399 Henry IV made him his chaplain and confessor, and in 1404 he was appointed Bp. of Lincoln. Four years later Gregory XII created him cardinal, a dignity rendered doubtful by the deposition of Gregory by the Council of *Pisa in 1409 until it was revalidated in 1415 by the Council of *Constance. He resigned his bishopric in 1419, probably because Henry V had opposed the raising of Henry *Beaufort to the cardinalate.

Episcopal Register ed. M. Archer (Lincoln Record Society, 57, 58, 74; 1963–82). The primary source for his life is the Fasciculi Zizaniorum, ed. W. W. Shirley (Rolls Series, 1858), pp. 289 f., 296–329 passim. 'Cardinal Repyngdon and the Followers of Wycliffe', CQR 19 (1884), pp. 59–82. K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1953), pp. 102 f., 108–15, and 120. C. L. Kingsford in DNB 48 (1896), pp. 26–8; BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1565–7, s.v. 'Repyngdon'.

Repose, Altar of. An altar to which (acc. to W. use) the Blessed Sacrament is taken in procession after the evening Mass of *Maundy Thursday and reserved for communion on *Good Friday. Until 1955 it was customary to make the Altar of Repose as splendid as possible with lights and flowers and in many places the faithful kept watch before it in turns throughout the day and night. *Pius XII's Holy Week rite recommended a certain austerity and decreed that the watch need last only until midnight; in 1970 the length of the watch was left to the discretion of the parish priest. The Altar of Repose is first mentioned in the 15th century.

Reproaches, the (Lat. Improperia). The set of reproofs addressed by the Crucified Saviour to His ungrateful people, which form part of the *Good Friday Liturgy of the Latin Church. They are chanted by two choirs during the *Veneration of the Cross and consist of twelve verses, which set in parallel the Divine compassion for Israel and the outrages inflicted on Christ in His Passion. Each of the first three verses is followed by the *Trisagion sung alternately in Latin (or the vernacular) and Greek, and each of the other nine by the refrain 'Popule meus, quid feci tibi', etc. The Improperia are built up on OT passages, but their early history is obscure. The first three verses are found in documents of the late 9th and early 10th cents., the last nine are not found in their entirety before the 11th cent. There are, however, traces of the component parts in the 7th cent., and the use of the reproach as a homiletic device may go back to St *Cyril of Jerusalem.

H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta, 2 (pt. 2; Rome, 1957), pp. 794 f. E. Werner, 'Zur Textgeschichte der Improperia', in M. Ruhnke (ed.), Festschrift Bruno Stäblein zum 70. Geburtstag (1967), pp. 274–86.

reprobation. The act by which God condemns sinners to eternal punishment, and the state of this punishment. In his struggle against *Pelagianism and *Semipelagianism, St *Augustine sometimes used expressions which might be understood as teaching that there is predestination, on the part of God, to everlasting death, as there is to eternal life. In the 9th cent. the question was agitated in the Frankish Church on account of the bold teaching of the monk *Gottschalk, who was accused of maintaining that God positively and irresistibly predestined certain men to sin and damnation. His doctrine, vigorously opposed by *Hincmar of Reims, was condemned by the Council of Mainz in 848 and by the first (849) and second (853) Councils of *Quiercy, which rejected all predestination to perdition. The Council of *Valence (855), though using the expression 'predestination to death', was none the less careful to point out that 'the evil deserts precede the just judgement of God'. The doctrine of predestination to eternal punishment was revived by many of the 16th cent. Reformers, esp. J. *Calvin, who taught positive and gratuitous reprobation. Acc. to Calvin God, by an inscrutable decree, Himself incites to sin those whom He has predestined to hell. This teaching was condemned by the Council of *Trent (Sess. VI, can. 6). Somewhat similar doctrines were taught later by M. *Baius and the *Jansenists.

Requiem. A Mass offered for the dead, so named from the first word of the *Introit which, until recently, was the common opening of all such Masses in the Roman rite ('Requiem aeternam dona eis, Domine'). The 1970 Roman Missal, which embodies a complete revision of these Masses, provides three formulas for *All Souls' Day (2 Nov.), which may be employed even on a Sunday; three formulas for use at funerals and three for anniversaries (in each case one for use in Eastertide and two for the rest of the year); and five for other occasions. There are also prayers for different categories of people, five *Prefaces, and a variety of Scriptural readings. Many of the characteristics previously distinctive of requiems have disappeared: vestments, which used to be black, may now be any colour determined by national conferences of bishops, and unbleached candles are no longer required. The *Paschal Candle is now usually placed at the head of the coffin. On the occasion of a burial, the Mass is followed immediately by a final commendation. In general, except on the most important feast days and a few other occasions, requiems are offered throughout the year, as occasion arises, e.g. on the day of burial of a member of the congregation (usually praesente cadavere) or of a public figure or by special request. In November, regarded acc. to modern RC custom as the month of Holy Souls, Masses for the dead used to be said with particular frequency. See also DIES IRAE.

J. Merk, Die messliturgische Totenehrung in der römischen Kirche (1926); E. Freistedt, Altchristliche Totengedächtnistage und ihre Beziehung zum Jenseitsglauben und Totenkultus der Antike (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, 24; 1928). Jungmann, 1, pp. 275–7; Eng. tr., pp. 217–19. R. Rutherford, The Death of a Christian: The Rite of Funerals (Studies in the Reformed Rites of the Catholic Church, 7; New York, 1980), pp. 56–9; 2nd edn. by Rutherford and T. Barr (Collegeville, Minn., 1990), pp. 58–61 and 274–81. A. Hollaardt, OP, in LW 2 (1968), cols. 2382–9, s.v., with extensive bibl. on historical aspects.

reredos. Properly any decoration put up above and behind an altar. The earliest type of such decoration was the painting of scenes or symbols on the walls against which altars backed; but during the Middle Ages a reredos might consist of a rich silken hanging or a piece of jewelled metalwork, as, e.g., at St Mark's, *Venice. More commonly, painted wooden panels, either fixed or in the form of a triptych, made up the reredos, while another way of providing a reredos that represented biblical incidents or figures of the saints was to have it carved in stone or alabaster. Where there happened to be no east window behind the altar, a reredos might cover the whole wall, as at All Souls College, Oxford, or—a most elaborate example—at Burgos in Spain.

Braun, CA 2 (1924), pp. 277–544, with plates 192–336. F. Bond, The Chancel of English Churches (1916), pp. 51–100. H. Schindler, Der Schnitzalter: Meisterwerke und Meister in Süddeutschland, Österreich und Südtirol (Regensburg, 1978).

Rerum Novarum. The encyclical issued by *Leo XIII on 15 May 1891 De Conditione Opificum. Its purpose was to apply to the new conditions created by the Industrial Revolution the traditional Catholic teaching on the relationship of a man to his work, profit, masters, and servants. On the ground that society originated in the family, it proclaimed private property a natural right and condemned 'socialism' as infringing it. It upheld wage-settlements by free agreement, the rightfulness of combinations of workers or employers, and above all the ideal of a just wage, defined as 'enough to support the wage-earner in reasonable and frugal comfort' with a family. It maintained that the natural place of women was in the home. It also emphasized the duty of the State to preserve justice and the responsibility of the Church in the moral aspects of employment.

This new concern of the Church for the condition of the workers was heralded as revolutionary and subversive of the established order; but the encyclical has since been widely acclaimed as among the most important modern pronouncements on social justice and has exercised wide influence. On 15 May 1931 Quadragesimo Anno* (q.v.) was issued by *Pius XI to mark its fortieth anniversary, and on 1 May 1991 *John Paul II marked its hundredth anniversary with Centesimus Annus, which attacked the evils of both capitalism and Marxism.

Text in Acta Leonis XIII, 4 (1894), pp. 177–209. L'Enciclica Rerum Novarum: Testo autentico e redazioni preparatorie dai documenti originali, ed. G. Antonazzi (1957). Eng. tr. of text, with notes by J. Kirwan, pub. by the *Catholic Truth Society (1983). Eng. tr. also conveniently pr. in D. J. O'Brien and T. A. Shannon (eds.), Catholic Social Thought (Maryknoll, NY, 1992), pp. 14–39. Text of 'Centesimus Annus' in AAS 83 (1991), pp. 793–867; Eng. tr. in D. J. O'Brien and T. A. Shannon, op. cit., pp. 439–88. A. Luciani (ed.), La 'Rerum Novarum' e il Problemi Sociali Oggi (Milan, 1991).

Rescissory Act 1661. The Act passed by the Three Estates (the Parliament of Scotland) on 28 Mar. 1661 rendering null and void all actions in Church and State since 1633, when the Estates met under *Charles I. Since then the *National Covenant had been signed in 1638, the Church had been established as *Presbyterian, and Scotland had been governed under O. *Cromwell. The passing of the Act opened the way for *Charles II to decree the re-establishment of episcopacy. The 1690 Parliament did not rescind the Rescissory Act, but passed legislation which ratified the *Westminster Confession and again established the Church of Scotland as Presbyterian.

Text of Act pr. in The Acts of the Parliaments of Scotland [1124–1707], ed. T. Thomson and C. Innes for the Record Commission, 7 (1820), pp. 86 f.

Reservation. The practice of keeping the Bread (and occasionally also the Wine) consecrated at the Eucharist, primarily for the purpose of Holy Communion. The earliest mention of Reservation occurs in the First Apology of St *Justin Martyr (cap. 65). It is frequently referred to in the 2nd–4th cents., e.g. in *Tertullian, St *Cyprian and St *Basil. When Communion was frequent but Masses comparatively rare, the faithful kept the Bl Sacrament in their homes or carried It on their persons, as being the safest places, and this practice long survived; and among the hermits, who often lived at a great distance from a church, the custom survived until the 13th and 14th cents. But from the Constantinian era (4th cent.) the churches were increasingly the ordinary places for reservation. Here the Sacrament was kept either in the sacristy, as is attested for the 6th cent. in Gaul, and still in the 16th cent. for parts of N. Italy, or in the church itself, either in an *aumbry (q.v.) in the wall, or in a *pyx (q.v.) hanging over the altar, or in a *tabernacle (q.v.) on the altar, the last being until recently the normal modern RC practice as it still is in the E. Church. Current RC legislation favours reservation in a separate chapel apart from the centre of the church, but allows considerable latitude. A lamp is kept burning nearby as a sign of honour. From the beginning reservation under the Species of Bread only seems to have been the most common practice in both E. and W. But by the 11th cent. the modern E. custom had developed, acc. to which the Host is marked with consecrated Wine from the communion spoon (λαβίς); it may then be artificially dried. The reserved Sacrament is used in the E. for the Communion of the sick as well as for the Liturgies of the *Presanctified in the season of *Lent, the Sacrament for the sick being reserved on *Maundy Thursday, that for the Liturgy of the Presanctified on the preceding Sunday.

In the 16th cent. the First BCP of 1549 provided for the Communion of the sick by reservation of the Sacrament at the open Communion and the carrying of It to the sick person as soon as convenient, though it also allowed the priest to celebrate in the sick person's house. In the Second BCP of 1552 the provision for reservation ceased, and it was not replaced in Elizabeth's English Book of 1559. In the Latin Prayer Book of Elizabeth (1560), however, the two provisions for sick Communions in the 1549 BCP came back. The (present) BCP of 1662 retained the regulations of 1559; but, apparently to prevent the use for profane purposes of any of the consecrated Sacrament left over, it ordered the reverent consumption of what remained immediately after the blessing. Anglican divines opposed to the practice have argued that this rubric, in conjunction with the statement in the *Thirty-Nine Articles that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not commanded by Christ's ordinance to be kept, is prohibitive of reservation in the C of E. Those who defend it commonly maintain that in view of the circumstances mentioned the rubric is irrelevant to the issue. As a matter of history, the practice had died out in the C of E, except in very rare instances, before the beginning of the 19th cent., but it has now been widely restored. In the Scottish Episcopal Church it has remained customary and a note in the Scottish Liturgy of 1637 declares it to be lawful. The rubrics which would have permitted the practice in the proposed English Prayer Books of 1927 and 1928 largely contributed to the defeat of the Prayer Book Measure in Parliament. In a number of modern Anglican liturgies, however, the practice is implicitly recognized in rubrics permitting a deacon to administer Communion from the reserved Sacrament (e.g. in the *Welsh BCP of 1984) and in provisions for Communion from the reserved Sacrament in ministering to the sick and in the liturgy of *Good Friday (in the American BCP (1979) and authorized in the C of E in 1980 and 1986 respectively).

D. *Stone, The Reserved Sacrament (1917); W. H. Freestone, The Sacrament Reserved (Alcuin Club Collections, 21; 1917); Reservation: Report of a Conference held at Farnham Castle on 24–27 Oct. 1925 (SPCK, 1926); G. *Dix, A Detection of Aumbries (1942); E. Maffei, La Réservation eucharistique jusqu'à la Renaissance (Brussels, 1942); S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, and J. H. Walker, The Myth of the Aumbry: Notes on Medieval Reservation Practice and Eucharistic Devotion with Special Reference to the Findings of Dom Gregory Dix (1957); A. A. King, Eucharistic Reservation in the Western Church (1965); O. Nussbaum, Die Aufbewahrung der Eucharistie (Theophaneia, 29; 1979).

reservation, mental. See MENTAL RESERVATION.

reserved penalties. See RESERVED SINS.

reserved sins. In conformity with the early practice, which restricted the administration of penance to a bishop, bishops in the RC Church have retained the right to 'reserve' certain sins to their own jurisdiction. The reservation may be either as to the sin or as to the censure—excommunication etc.—imposed on the sin, a distinction corresponding to that between the internal and external forum. In the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici there are no longer any sins reserved by law. A penalty, however, can still be reserved, so that its remission can be obtained only through specified ecclesiastical authorities, such as diocesan bishops. A few very grave matters are reserved to the Pope, such as the throwing away of a consecrated *Host or the direct violation of the *seal of confession. A priest can absolve from any censures a penitent who is in danger of death, and any confessor can remit certain automatic censures under specific circumstances; in both these cases there may have to be recourse to a higher authority afterwards (cf. CIC (1983), cans. 976 and 1357). In the C of E the practice of such reservation of sins does not obtain.

residence. All clergy are under a grave obligation to reside personally in the place in which they are authorized to minister. From very early times, owing to the frequent abuse of non-residence, this injunction figures in the canons. Combined with the holding of livings in plurality, which non-residence makes possible, the abuse was at its worst during the Middle Ages. The Council of *Trent took reforming action (Sessions IV and XXIII). In RC *canon law, the place and time of residence for all grades of clergy are precisely laid down (CIC (1983), cans. 283, 356, 395, and 533). In the C of E residence is required by the English *Canons of 1969, cans. C 18, 20, 21 and 25.

responses. See VERSICLES.

responsory (Lat. responsorium), a liturgical chant traditionally consisting of a series of *versicles and responses, the text usually taken from Scripture. The arrangement was designed for the alternate singing of sentences or lines by different people. The 'cantus responsorius', which is already mentioned by *Tertullian, goes back to the worship of the Synagogue. Responsories were long found in the Mass at the *Gradual (this is now replaced by a Responsorial psalm sung by the cantor or choir and the people), and formerly also at the *Offertory. In the Divine *Office, responsories were already prescribed in the Rule of St *Benedict (*c.*540). They used to follow the Lessons at *Mattins and now follow them in the *Office of Readings. A shorter form, called the 'responsorium breve', follows the Little *Chapter at *Lauds, *Vespers, the Little Hours and *Compline in the Monastic Office; in the Roman *Breviary it used to follow only at Prime, the Little Hours and Compline, but in 1971 it was adopted at Lauds and Vespers. The 'responsorium breve' varies according to the Office and season.

restitution. In W. moral theology, the act of 'commutative justice' by which an injury done to the goods or person of another is repaired.

Restoration, the. A term used by English historians from the 18th cent. onwards to describe the restoration of the monarchy under *Charles II in 1660; by extension it is also applied to the period immediately following this event. For the C of E it was a turning-point leading to its political re-establishment and to its definition along strictly episcopalian lines during the primacies of G. *Sheldon and W. *Sancroft.

I. M. Green, The Re-establishment of the Church of England, 1660–1663 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1978); J. Spurr, The Restoration Church of England, 1646–1689 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1991).

Resurrection, Community of the. See COMMUNITY OF THE RESURRECTION.

Resurrection of Christ. The conviction that God not only sent His Son into the world but also vindicated Him after His death upon a cross, is fundamental to the NT witness and the corner-stone of Christian faith and theology. This certainty that God had reversed human judgement and established freedom from death in an event which inaugurated 'the age to come' found expression in the OT language of exaltation (Is. 52: 13) and heavenly session (Ps. 110: 1; see ASCENSION OF CHRIST), as well as in the Jewish eschatological vocabulary of a *resurrection of the dead (Dan. 12: 2). This last term linked what happened to Jesus Christ to what was expected to happen to Christians, a conjunction visible in St *Paul's claim that Christ is the first-fruits of them that slept (1 Cor. 15: 20) and the first-begotten from the dead (Col. 1: 18). The Christian hope is thus rooted in this event (1 Pet. 1: 3) and looks forward to the time when death shall be finally overcome (1 Cor. 15: 26).

One of the earliest Christian creeds, quoted by Paul at 1 Cor. 15: 3–5 (perhaps 15: 3–7) speaks of Christ being raised (i.e. by God) 'on the third day, according to the Scriptures' and appearing (ὤφθη) to Cephas (i.e. St *Peter) and to the twelve. The list continues with appearances to more than 500 brethren, to St *James, to all the *apostles, and, Paul adds, finally to himself. His instance (v. 11) that this belief was shared on all sides in the early Church is confirmed by the NT as a whole.

The Gospels report the discovery of Christ's empty tomb by St *Mary Magdalene either alone (Jn. 20: 1–9) or with one or more other women: with 'the other Mary' (Mt. 28: 1); with Mary the mother of James, and Salome (Mk. 16: 1); or with Joanna, Mary the mother of James, and the other women (Lk. 24: 10). The Gospels disagree over other details: whether it was one or two angels or young men who told of Christ's resurrection, whether Christ Himself then appeared (Mt., Jn.), whether He (Mt.) or the young man (Mk.) directed the disciples to *Galilee, and whether the women obeyed. Appearances follow, in *Jerusalem (Jn. 20) and nearby *Emmaus (Lk. 24), and/or Galilee (Mt. 28, Jn. 21). Attempts to harmonize these traditions have failed to persuade critics, but the testimony of the biblical witnesses to the Divine event itself is unanimous. There is also broad agreement among the Gospels about how, after some initial doubts, the disciples became convinced of what had happened. However, because Paul (writing earlier than the Evangelists) makes no mention of the empty tomb, some modern critics have disputed its historicity. Others have argued that his reference to Christ's burial implies that he assumed the tomb to be empty after the resurrection. While evidence of the empty tomb apart from the Christian tradition is not to be expected, there is equally no record of His body being produced, and the story about the bribing of the guards (Mt. 28: 11–15) might suggest that no such claim was ever made. It was mainly this story, designed to answer accusations that the disciples had stolen the body of Jesus, which led H. S. *Reimarus to revive the theory that the apostles had perpetrated a fraud, but subsequent historical investigations have discounted such speculations.

The nature of Christ's risen or 'spiritual body' (1 Cor. 15) has from the earliest days been a matter of debate, partly because the Church has always taught that God's saving action in Christ involves the material world, and also because the identity of the Risen Lord with the man from Nazareth is fundamental to orthodox Christianity. Believers have rightly resisted accounts which could undermine the reality of the event by dissolving it without remainder into the disciples' experience. One such early insistence on the objective reality of the event may be found at Lk. 24: 36–43. On the other hand the Gospels generally avoid implying that Jesus was restored to His previous earthly life; He is said to have passed through closed doors (Jn. 20: 19), a feat which suggests that these appearances were not material in the normal sense. But the reality of the conviction they engendered is confirmed by the way some of the fearful disciples (cf. Mk. 14: 50) became the bold leaders and missionaries depicted in Acts. Powerful transforming consequences ascribed to the Holy Spirit were from the beginning associated with the Resurrection (cf. Jn. 20: 22), but the event itself, like the *Incarnation, remains a mystery that cannot be analysed.

The subject is treated by St *Thomas Aquinas, Summa Theologiae, 3, qq. 54 ('De Qualitate Christi Resurgentis'), 55 ('De Manifestatione Resurrectionis'), and 56 ('De Resurrectionis Christi Causalitate'); also by the commentators on these questions, notably F. *Suárez, SJ. Modern works incl. B. F. *Westcott, The Gospel of the Resurrection (1866); W. Künneth, Theologie der Auferstehung (1933; 4th edn., 1951; Eng. tr., 1965); A. M. *Ramsey, The Resurrection of Christ (1945); F. X. Durrwell, La Résurrection de Jésus, mystère de salut (1950; 2nd edn., 1954; Eng. tr., 1960); M. C. Perry, The Easter Enigma: An Essay on the Resurrection with special reference to the data of Psychical Research (1959); S. H. Hooke, The Resurrection of Christ as History and Experience (1967); W. Marxsen, Die Auferstehung Jesu von Nazareth (Gütersloh, 1968; Eng. tr., 1970); C. F. Evans, Resurrection and the New Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 12; 1970); R. H. Fuller, The Formation of the Resurrection Narratives (New York, 1971; London, 1972; 2nd edn., 1980); J. E. Alsup, The Post-Resurrection Appearance Stories of the Gospel Tradition (1975); P. Perkins, Resurrection: New Testament Witness and Contemporary Reflection (New York, 1984; London, 1985); P. Carnley, The Structure of Resurrection Belief (Oxford, 1987); J. I. H. McDonald, The Resurrection: Narrative and Belief (1989); G. Lüdemann, Die Auferstehung Jesu (1994; Eng. tr., 1994). P. Hoffmann and R. Staats in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 478–529, s.v. 'Auferstehung II. Auferstehung Jesu Christi'; J. Schmitt in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 10 (1985), cols. 487–582, s.v. 'Résurrection de Jésus'.

resurrection of the dead. The belief that at the *Parousia or 'Second Coming' of Christ departed souls will be restored to a bodily life and the saved will enter in this renewed form upon the life of heaven is a fundamental element in the Christian doctrine of man's final destiny. The doctrine of resurrection appears in a few late passages in the OT; it was held by many Jews at the time of Christ's ministry; and it was clinched for Christian believers by the *Resurrection of Christ Himself. It can be combined with the Greek doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, but the two doctrines are independent and different, since resurrection implies (1) that the full redeemed life of heaven must include a restoration of the whole psychophysical organism, because man was created by God to be and to remain an embodied spirit; and (2) that the life after death is wholly the gift of God, and not due to the inherently immortal nature of man's soul. It has at times been the prevailing view that the resurrection will involve a collection and revivifying of the material particles of the dead body. Many theologians, however, following the principles of St *Paul, hold that the resurrection body will be new and 'spiritual' (1 Cor. 15: 35–54), i.e. a body of a new order, the perfect instrument of the spirit, raised above the limitations of the earthly body, with which it will be identical only in the sense that it will be the recognizable organism of the same personality. Commonly it is held that all the dead, whether saved or not, will rise to pass under judgement; but with some support in the NT it may be held that resurrection in any full sense will be confined to those destined to eternal life.

R. H. *Charles, A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in Israel, in Judaism and in Christianity (Jowett Lectures for 1898–9; 1899). H. Cornélius, OP, and others, La Résurrection de la chair (1962); J. Hick, Death and Eternal Life (1976); P. Badham, Christian Beliefs about Life after Death (1976); H. *Küng, Ewiges Leben? (Munich, 1982; Eng. tr., 1984); P. Perkins, Resurrection: New Testament Witness and Contemporary Reflection (1984); S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Human Immortality and the Redemption of Death (1990). A. Michel in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2502–71, s.v. 'Résurrection des morts'; H. Wissmann and others in TRE 4 (1979), pp. 441–77 and 529–75, s.v. 'Auferstehung', I, III and IV. See also bibl. to previous entry and to IMMORTALITY.

retable. A structure placed at the back of an altar in the form either of a ledge on which ornaments may be set or of a frame for decorated panels. The ledge form is also known as a *gradine, the form for panels also as a *reredos.

retreat. A period of days spent in silence, and occupied with meditation and other religious exercises. In essence the practice is older than Christianity, but the 40 days Christ spent in the wilderness have been considered to give the ultimate authority for its Christian use. As a formal devotion, retreats were introduced in the *Counter-Reformation period. The *Jesuits, who were the first religious order to include them in their rule, also counselled them to those outside their body. A little later St *Francis de Sales and St *Vincent de Paul became strong advocates of the practice. In the 17th cent. retreat houses were instituted, where those who wished to make a retreat might stay for short periods under the guidance of 'conductors'. In the RC Church the practice of annual retreat became widespread early in the 19th cent., at first for the clergy, both *regular and *secular, but soon also for many of the laity. In the C of E the practice of retreat was adopted under the influence of the *Oxford Movement, the first formal retreat being held in 1856 in Christ Church, Oxford.

R. Schofield (ed.), Retreats: Their Value, Organisation and Growth (1915); id., new work with same title but different contributors (1927). Vision (1920 ff., now issued annually by the National Retreat Association) includes current information about retreat houses in England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, and the Channel Isles, and about organized retreats planned in them. P. Debuchy in CE 12 (1911), pp. 795–7, s.v.; D. *Stone in HERE 10 (1918), pp. 743 f., s.v., with bibl.

Retz, Cardinal de (Jean-François-Paul de Gondi) (1613–79), Abp. of *Paris. Of Italian stock, he was born and brought up in the château of Montmirail (Champagne) while St *Vincent de Paul was a member of the household. He was educated at the Collège de *Clermont and at the *Sorbonne. His family, in whose hands the see of Paris had been since 1570, forced him into an ecclesiastical career for which he had no inclination; he apparently approached his ordination with cynicism and continued to lead a life of immorality and intrigue. As a young man he wrote the Conjuration de Fiesque (pub. 1665), a thinly disguised attack on A. J. du P. *Richelieu. In 1643 he was appointed Coadjutor-Archbishop of Paris to his uncle, Jean-François de Gondi. He played an important, but unscrupulous role during the first and second Frondes (1648–9 and 1651–2), opposing J. *Mazarin but readily changing his allegiances. As a result of various intrigues in Rome and Paris, he was created a cardinal in 1652. Soon afterwards, however, at Mazarin's insistence, he was imprisoned in Vincennes. On the death of his uncle in 1654 he succeeded him; the cathedral chapter took possession of the see in his name. The King insisted on his signing a resignation of the archbishopric, but the Pope refused to accept it. Retz was transferred to Nantes and escaped from prison. He went to Rome and took part in the election of *Alexander VII in 1655. For the next few years he led a nomadic existence in various countries. At the request of the exiled *Charles II he tried, unsuccessfully, to win Papal support for the Stuart cause. In 1661, after Mazarin's death, he returned to Paris and resigned his see in exchange for the rich abbey of *St-Denis, held *in commendam. He took part in the conclaves which elected Clement IX, Clement X, and *Innocent XI, safeguarding French interests. Living on his estate at Commercy, he began to compose his Mémoires (prob. addressed to Mme de Sévigné and her daughter). A personal, if biased historical document on the period of the Frondes, written in a lively style, with interesting portraits of his contemporaries, it ranks as a considerable work of literature.

Œuvres, ed. A. Feillet, J. Gourdault, [F.] R. Chantelauze, and C. Cochin (11 vols., Paris, 1870–1920); also by M.-T. Hipp and M. Pernot (ibid. [1984]). Mémoires, first pub., 3 vols., Nancy, 1717; first ed. from autograph MSS by [A.] Champollion-Figeac and A. Champollion (Paris, 1837); modern edn. (with La Conjuration de Fiesque) by S. Bertière (2 vols., ibid. [1987]). La Conjuration de Fiesque also ed. D. A. Watts (Oxford, 1967). Eng. tr. of the Mémoires by P. Davall (4 vols., 1723; modernized by D. Ogg, Everyman Library, 735–6 [1917]). [F.] R. Chantelauze, Le Cardinal de Retz et l'affaire du chapeau (2 vols., 1878); id., Le Cardinal de Retz et ses missions diplomatiques à Rome (1879). D. Ogg, Cardinal de Retz 1613–1679 (London, 1912); L. Batiffol, Le Cardinal de Retz (Paris [1927]); id., Biographie du Cardinal de Retz (1929); J. H. M. Salmon, Cardinal de Retz: The Anatomy of a Conspirator (1969); D. A. Watts, Cardinal de Retz: The Ambiguities of a Seventeenth-Century Mind (Oxford, 1980); S. Bertière, La Vie du Cardinal de Retz (1990), with bibl. Other studies by P.-G. Lorris (Paris [1956]), J. T. Letts (ibid., 1966), and J. Matrat (ibid., [1969]). F. J. Routledge, 'The Negotiations between Charles II and the Cardinal de Retz, 1658–59', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 6 (1955), pp. 49–68; A. J. Krailsheimer, Studies in Self-Interest from Descartes to La Bruyère (Oxford, 1962), pp. 61–80; H. Carrier, 'Sincérité et création littéraire dans les Mémoires du cardinal de Retz', Dix-septième Siècle, 94–5 (1972), pp. 39–74. Six arts. based on a conference in Paris on 19 Feb. 1988 are pr. in the Revue d'histoire littéraire de la France, 89 (1989), pp. 4–70.

Reuchlin, Johannes (1454/5–1522), German humanist. He matriculated at Freiburg im Breisgau in 1470 and studied at *Paris in 1473 as tutor to a son of Charles I, Margrave of Baden. From 1474 to 1478 he studied at Basle, where he became Master of Arts in 1477. In 1478 he published a Latin lexicon, Vocabularius, which became very popular. He also began his study of Greek, which he continued briefly at Paris in 1478. He studied law at Orléans from 1479 and later at Poitiers, where he got his licentiate in law in 1481. The same year he took up a position as professor at *Tübingen. In 1482 he accompanied Count Eberhard of Württemburg to Rome first as his interpreter, later becoming his adviser and ambassador. Back in Tübingen in 1483 he taught Greek and there obtained his doctorate of laws in 1484/5. About 1485 he began to study Hebrew with the help of learned Jews and became interested in *Kabbalistic doctrines, expounding the latter in De Verbo Mirifico (1494) and later in De Arte Cabbalistica (1517), both full of abstruse speculations on sacred letters. Owing to the hostility of Eberhard's successor he fled to Heidelberg in 1496; here he wrote his spirited Latin comedies Sergius and Henno in imitation of Terence, and perfected his knowledge of Hebrew. After the deposition of Eberhard's son in 1498, he returned to Württemberg, where he became one of the three justices in the Swabian League in 1502. In 1506 he published his most important work, De Rudimentis Hebraicis. Consisting of a Hebrew grammar and lexicon, it placed on an entirely new basis the scientific study of the Hebrew language, which had hitherto been almost entirely neglected among Christians, and became a powerful incentive to the study of the OT in the original. It was supplemented by an edition of the *seven penitential Psalms in Hebrew, with a Latin translation (1512), and a treatise on Hebrew accents, De Accentibus et Orthographia Linguae Hebraicae (1518). The latter years of his life were troubled by controversy. Johann Pfefferkorn, a convert from Judaism, supported by the *Dominican friars of Cologne and in particular Jakob von Hochstraten (d. 1527), advocated the destruction of Jewish religious books. Among others Reuchlin was consulted by the Emp. Maximilian I, and he alone advised against such measures. This recommendation, combined with his interest in Kabbala, led to Reuchlin's being involved in a trial for heresy, initiated in 1513 by von Hochstraten. After repeated appeals by both sides, a final verdict was given in 1520 when *Leo X awarded costs against Reuchlin and banned his satirical Augenspiegel (1511). In the course of the controversy polemical pamphlets were produced on both sides. A famous contribution was the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum* (1515–17) written in defence of Reuchlin by Crotus Rubinanus and Ulrich von *Hutten. Though many of the Reformers took part in the controversy on the side of Reuchlin, he himself remained a loyal Catholic and endeavoured hard to detach his grandnephew, P. *Melanchthon, from his friendship with M. *Luther.

De Arte Cabbalistica is repr. photographically, with Eng. tr. by M. and S. Goodman (New York, 1983). The standard Life is that of L. Geiger (Leipzig, 1871). Correspondence ed. id. (Bibliothek des literarischen Vereins in Stuttgart, 126; 1875; repr. Hildesheim, 1962). A. Horawitz, 'Zur Biographie und Correspondenz Johannes Reuchlins', Sb. (Wien), 85 (1877), pp. 117–90. K. Christ, Die Bibliothek Reuchlins in Pforzheim (Beiheft zum Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, 52; 1924). Festschrift der Stadt Pforzheim zur Erinnerung an dem 400. Todestag Reuchlins (Pforzheim [1922]); M. M. Krebs (ed.), Johannes Reuchlin 1455–1522: Festgabe seiner Vaterstadt zur 500. Wiederkehr seines Geburtstages (ibid. [1955]). M. Brod, Johannes Reuchlin und sein Kampf: Eine historische Monographie (1966). J. H. Overfield, 'A New Look at the Reuchlin Affair', Studies in Medieval and Renaissance History, 8 (1971), pp. 165–207. C. Zika, 'Reuchlin's De Verbo Mirifico and the Magic Debate of the Late Fifteenth Century', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 39 (1976), pp. 104–38; H. Greive, 'Die hebräische Grammatik Johannes Reuchlins', ZATW 90 (1978), pp. 394–409. J. Benzing, Bibliographie der Schriften Johannes Reuchlin im 15. und 16. Jahrhundert (Bibliotheca Bibliographica, 18; Bad Bocklet, etc., 1955). H. Scheible in B. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 3 [1987], pp. 145–50.

reunion. Desire for the visible unity of Christ's Church has increased in the 20th cent., as growing doctrinal agreement between the major Christian bodies has been reinforced by liturgical reforms derived from a wider knowledge of early Christian worship and a higher view of the status and functions of the laity. The problems involved in reunion vary according to the different groups between whom it is envisaged.

Reunion between the C of E and the RC Church has often been considered since the 17th cent., notably in the time of the *Oxford and post-*Tractarian movements and at the time of the *Malines Conversations (1921–5). Since the end of the Second World War (1945) there has been an increased openness in the attitude of the RC Church towards other communions. In 1960 Abp. G. F. *Fisher visited Pope *John XXIII, the first Abp. of *Canterbury since the Reformation to be received in Rome. In the same year non-RC Churches were invited to send observers to the Second *Vatican Council, and the Pope established a 'Secretariat [now Pontifical Council] for Promoting Christian Unity'. The Second Vatican Council's Decree on Ecumenism described members of other communions as being 'separated brethren' rather than outside the Church. A succession of documents (e.g. the 'Directory for the Application of Principles and Norms on Ecumenism', 1993) has encouraged, while defining current limits to, RC participation in ecumenical activities. The *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission (q.v.), set up in 1968, is now complemented by RC bilateral dialogues with many other Churches, e.g. the *Methodists and *Baptists.

Reunion with the *Orthodox Church has long been attempted by both Roman and non-Roman Churches. After the short-lived union effected by the Council of *Florence (1439), there were other less important rapprochements. Friendly relations with the C of E obtained until in 1725 Abp. W. *Wake disillusioned the Patr. of *Jerusalem about the status of the *Nonjurors, who had been in contact with the Orthodox since 1716. Several attempts in the 19th cent. came to nothing, including the Conferences at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875. In 1864 the 'Eastern Church Association' was founded, becoming in 1906 the '*Anglican and Eastern Churches Association'. The *Lambeth Conference of 1908 appointed a Committee to confer with the E. Patriarchs, and that of 1930 discussed the question of unity with Orthodox delegates. The first pan-Orthodox Conference at Rhodes in 1961 decided to open discussions with the RC Church and the C of E. Considerable progress has been made in many areas between Orthodox and Anglicans, though the ordination of *women to the priesthood and episcopate in some parts of the Anglican Communion has impeded the dialogue. Some Orthodox Churches sent observers to the Second Vatican Council, and in 1965 the mutual anathemas of 1054 between the E. and W. Churches were lifted. Much progress has been made in theological discussion between the Orthodox and RC Churches, though since *c.*1990 relations have been complicated by the question of the *Uniat Churches in E. Europe. Orthodox Churches are also involved in bilateral discussions with several other Churches, including the *Old Catholic and *Reformed.

Schemes for reunion between the C of E and foreign Protestant bodies were discussed in the 16th and 17th cents. In 1708 Frederick I of Prussia sought unsuccessfully to unite the *Lutheran and Reformed Churches in his kingdom and to introduce episcopacy by entering into union with the C of E. Negotiations continued until his death in 1713, and a fresh, but again unsuccessful attempt to introduce episcopacy was made in 1841 by the creation of the *Jerusalem Bishopric (q.v.). Further steps towards closer relationship between Anglican and Lutheran Churches include agreements to establish mutual Eucharistic hospitality between the C of E and the Churches of *Sweden (1922, but not ratified until 1954), *Finland (1934), Estonia and Latvia (1938), *Denmark, *Norway, and *Iceland (1951). In 1920 an Anglican bishop took part in the consecration of two Swedish bishops and from 1927 Swedish bishops have from time to time taken part in the consecration of bishops in the C of E. Similar arrangements for mutual participation in episcopal consecrations were included in the agreements with the Churches of Finland, Estonia and Latvia, who all expressed their understanding of episcopacy as within the framework of the historic succession. The Meissen Agreement (1988) between the C of E and the *Evangelical Church in Germany committed them to work towards full visible unity. The Porvoo Agreement, reached near Porvoo in Finland in 1992, went further. It envisaged a relationship of communion between the Anglican Churches in Britain and Ireland and the Nordic and Baltic Lutheran Churches, with a common membership and an interchangeable ministry. It was ratified by most of the Churches concerned, apart from Denmark. The 1990 Concordat between the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the *Episcopal Church in the United States of America, if approved by their respective Churches, would bring them into a relationship described as 'full communion', with interchangeable ministries. Among the many other dialogues pursued by Protestant Churches, special significance attaches to the negotiations between the Reformed and Lutheran Churches in Europe which culminated in the *Leuenberg Concord of 1973. This emphasised the need for a 'reconciliation of memories' (a process of the Churches mutually facing, and moving beyond, the causes and painful results of their historic divisions). More than 80 Churches, including some in Latin America, have signed this text and declared themselves to be in full communion.

There have been several efforts to unite English dissenting bodies with the Established Church. At the *Restoration an attempt was made to 'comprehend' *Presbyterians and *Independents, but the *Savoy Conference (1661) failed, as did more private attempts in 1688 and in the mid-18th cent. In the 19th cent. reunion between the C of E and the Free Churches had several advocates, including W. T. Mowbray, founder of the Home Reunion Society (1873). The Lambeth Conference of 1888 laid down four conditions for such union (the '*Lambeth Quadrilateral', q.v.). An 'Appeal to all Christian People' by the Lambeth Conference of 1920 led to conversations with the Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches (1920–5). These were resumed after the Lambeth Conference of 1930. The main difficulties related to the question of the ministry. In 1946 G. F. Fisher, Abp. of Canterbury, suggested that the Free Churches might, without surrendering their identity, 'take episcopacy into their system' and thus prepare the way for intercommunion. Methodist response to the text 'Church Relations in England' (1946) led to the *Anglican–Methodist Conversations (q.v.). The 1964 '*Faith and Order' Conference at Nottingham resolved that the *British Council of Churches should work and pray together for unity by 1980. The English Churches Unity Commission, set up in 1974 in response to an invitation from the recently formed *United Reformed Church, in 1976 issued Visible Unity: Ten Propositions. This proposed a Covenant under which membership, ministers, and sacraments should be mutually recognized. The Churches' Council for Covenanting was set up in 1978 by five Churches; after being accepted by the Methodist and United Reformed Churches, the proposals were rejected by the C of E in 1982.

Despite numerous negotiations which have proved abortive, an impressive series of Church unions have taken place since the early 19th cent. The Lutheran and Reformed Churches which Frederick I of Prussia tried to unite in 1708 were finally brought together by King Frederick William III in 1817 in the United Evangelical Church of Prussia, or Old Prussian Union, reconstituted in the 1950s as the Evangelical Church of the Union. Similar arrangements were made elsewhere in Germany and in the Austro-Hungarian Empire later in the 19th cent. In 1918 the Evangelical Church of Czech Brethren united Czech Churches of the *Augsburg and *Helvetic Confessions, on the basis of their shared roots in the *Hussite Reformation. In subsequent stages of the movement towards union, Churches formed (or expanded) by interdenominational unions include the United Church of *Canada (1925); the Church of Christ in *China (1927); the Church of *Scotland (1929); the Church of Christ in Thailand (1934); the Reformed Church of *France (1938); the United Church of Christ in *Japan (a union originally imposed by the government in 1941); the Churches of *South India (1947), *North India (1970), *Pakistan (1970), and Bangladesh (1971); the United Church of Christ in the *Philippines (1948); the *United Church of Christ (1957); the United Church of *Zambia (1965); the United Congregational Church of Southern Africa (1967; expanded 1972); the United Church of Jamaica and the Cayman Islands (1965; expanded 1993); the United Church in Papua New Guinea and the Solomon Islands (1968); the Church of Jesus Christ in Madagascar (1968); the United *Methodist Church (1968); the Church of Christ in *Zaire (1970); the *United Reformed Church in the United Kingdom (1972; expanded 1981); the Uniting Church in *Australia (1977), and the United Protestant Church of *Belgium (1979).

In these unions (which often include bodies formed by previous unions) Churches of the Presbyterian and *Congregationalist traditions are most often involved, followed by Methodists, *Disciples of Christ, and Brethren (see TUNKERS). Anglicans have entered only the United Churches of the Indian subcontinent. Probably the most comprehensive union has been that of North India, involving Anglican, Baptist, Congregational, Disciples, Methodist, Brethren, and Presbyterian Churches. Numerous unions have occurred among Churches within the same confessional family, such as those forming the Methodist Church of Great Britain (1932) and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (1988).

The unions in India and Pakistan, in including both episcopally and non-episcopally ordered Churches, have been most important ecclesiologically. Significantly bishops from 'all United Churches with which the Churches of the Anglican communion are in full communion' were invited to 'full membership' of the *Lambeth Conference of 1988. Unions have generally formed 'local' (i.e. national) Churches, and these were probably the inspiration behind the vision of the Fifth Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Nairobi in 1975 of a 'conciliar fellowship of local churches truly united'. In Africa and Asia they have played an important part in indigenizing the Church as, through union, several missionary-founded Churches, supported financially from overseas, have been succeeded by a single locally led and locally funded Church. Unions in which theological differences are minimal may still offer an important witness to the healing power of the Gospel, as when the Presbyterian Church (USA) was formed in 1983 by the reunion of two Churches which had been bitterly divided by the American Civil War. The failure of the union scheme in Ghana in 1983 emphasized the need for agreement on questions of theology and Church practice to be complemented by education to prepare local congregations for union.

Continuing interdenominational discussions include the Negotiating Churches Unity Council in *New Zealand; the Commission of the Covenanted Churches in *Wales; the Joint Council of the Church of South India, Church of North India and Mar Thoma Church. The *Consultation on Church Union (COCU), formed in 1962, includes nine major US denominations committed to 'becoming one in faith, sacraments, ministry, and mission' without, however, seeking 'consolidation of forms and structures'. Union discussions between Churches in the same confessional tradition are in progress, e.g. among several Methodist denominations in Ghana. In 1970 two world confessional organizations joined to form the *World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and this body has actively encouraged its member Churches to enter into unions (as also has the Disciples of Christ). The United Churches have not formed a world confessional body, but maintain contact through the Faith and Order Commission of the *World Council of Churches.

In recent years some have sensed a loss of momentum in the search for unity. The situation in the formerly Communist countries of E. Europe has fostered renewed rivalries as Churches and Christian groups centred in W. Europe and N. America have conducted missionary work in territory historically dominated by the Orthodox Church; the attitude of Pope *John Paul II is generally seen as more conservative than that of his immediate predecessors; and in some Churches a decline in membership and financial support has left fewer resources available for ecumenical work. Nevertheless most Churches remain committed to the search for visible unity and continue to address both the theological issues and the historical and social factors which divide them. See also ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT.

G. K. A. *Bell (ed.), Documents on Christian Unity 1920–4 (1924); id., 2nd ser. [1920–30] (1930); id., 3rd ser. 1930–48 (1948); id., 4th ser. 1948–57 (1958); H. P. Douglass, A Decade of Objective Progress in Church Unity 1927–1936 (1937); S. [C.] Neill, Towards Church Union 1937–1952 (1952). A 'Survey of Church Union Negotiations' has been published in the Ecumenical Review at about 2-year intervals since 1954. On the Consultations of United and Uniting Churches, see Mid-Stream, 6 (1967), 9 (1970), and 14 (1975); Growing Towards Consensus and Commitment: Report of the Fourth International Consultation of United and Uniting Churches, Colombo, Sri Lanka (Faith and Order Paper, 110; Geneva, 1981); T. F. Best (ed.) Living Today Towards Visible Unity: The Fifth International Consultation of United and Uniting Churches (Faith and Order Paper, 142; ibid. [1988]). J. F. Puglisi and S. J. Voicu, A Bibliography of Interchurch and Interconfessional Theological Dialogues (Rome, 1984), with supplements in the bi-annual Bulletin of the Centro Pro Unione, 28, etc. (Rome, 1985 ff.).

Studies include A. C. *Headlam, The Doctrine of the Church and Christian Reunion (1920); J. T. McNeill, Unitive Protestantism (New York [1930]); [Y.] M.-J. *Congar, OP, Chrétiens désunis (Unam Sanctam, 1; 1937; Eng. tr., 1939); N. Sykes, The Church of England and Non-Episcopal Churches in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (Theology Occasional Papers, NS 11; 1948); B. [G. M.] Sundkler, Church of South India: The Movement Towards Union 1900–1947 (1954); A. Bea, L'unione dei cristiani ([1962]; Eng. tr., 1963); P. Bolink, Towards Church Union in Zambia (Franeker [1967]); P. A. Crow and W. J. Boney (eds.), Church Union at Mid-Point (New York [1972]); F. Engel, Australian Christians in Conflict and Unity (Melbourne, 1984); J. A. Burgess (ed.), In Search of Christian Unity: Basic Consensus/Basic Differences (Minneapolis [1991]); M. Cressey, 'Where and Whither? An Interpretive Survey of United and Uniting Churches', Minutes of the Meeting of the Faith and Order Standing Committee, Rome, Italy, 1991 (Faith and Order Paper, 157; Geneva, 1992), pp. 57–64; also R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement, 1517–1948 (1954; 2nd edn. with rev. bibl., 1967; vol. 2: The Ecumenical Advance, 1948–1968, ed. H. E. Fey, 1970; both vols. repr., Geneva [1986], with bibl. covering the period 1968–85 in vol. 2, pp. 509–53), and other works cited under ECUMENICAL MOVEMENT.

Reusch, Franz Heinrich (1825–1900), *Old Catholic theologian. He taught at Bonn from 1854, holding a full professorship in OT exegesis from 1861 onwards. Throughout his life he was closely associated with his former teacher J. J. I. von *Döllinger, and shared his intellectual ideals as well as his liberal views of Church history. In 1870 he strongly opposed the infallibility decrees of the First *Vatican Council and in 1872 was excommunicated on his refusal to subscribe. Thereafter he took a leading part in organizing in its earlier years the Old Catholic Church and in arranging the Reunion Conferences which were held at *Bonn in 1874 and 1875. When, however, the Old Catholics abolished clerical celibacy in 1878, Reusch objected and retired into lay communion. An untiring student, Reusch wrote many books, his earlier ones dealing with OT subjects and his later ones mainly with modern ecclesiastical history. Much of his best work was done in conjunction with Döllinger, notably a history of post-Tridentine moral theology (Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten in der römisch-katholischen Kirche seit dem XVI. Jahrhundert, 2 vols., 1889). His other writings include Luis de Leon und die spanische Inquisition (1873); Der Prozess Galileis und die Jesuiten (1879); and Index der verbotenen Bücher (2 vols., 1883–5).

Life by L. K. Götz, incl. list of Reusch's works (Gotha, 1901). [Dr] Menn, 'Fritz Heinrich Reusch als Schriftsteller', Revue internationale de Théologie, 14 (1906), pp. 38–72, 462–8, 729–44; 15 (1907), pp. 75–93, 462–80. In Eng. there is a brief sketch by J. E. B. Mayor (Cambridge, 1901). L. K. Goetz in PRE (3rd edn.), 16 (1905), pp. 689–91.

revelation. In Christian theology the word is used both of the corpus of truth about Himself which God discloses to us and of the process by which His communication of it takes place. Traditional theology has tended to conceive of revelation in the latter sense as taking place through propositions; but there has been an increasing tendency among many modern theologians to insist that Divine revelation reaches us largely, and even primarily, through God's activity (His 'mighty acts', magnalia Dei; cf. Acts 2: 11), rather than in propositional statements. Since it is commonly held that there are certain truths about God which can be learnt through man's natural endowments (e.g. His existence, which such philosophers as *Aristotle who were outside the Christian covenant believed that they could establish), while others, e.g. the Doctrine of the Holy *Trinity, are not knowable except by faith, Christian philosophers have often held that a sharp distinction must be drawn between 'truths of reason' and 'truths of revelation'. This distinction received its classic elaboration from St *Thomas Aquinas. It has its counterpart in the antithesis between 'natural theology' and 'revealed theology'. Over against this, there has been another school of theologians who have held that truths of revelation and truths of reason differ only in degree. When revelation has once been formulated, it is known as '*dogma' (q.v.). Christians of the Protestant tradition hold that all revelation is sufficiently contained in Scripture; Catholics on the other hand commonly maintain that part of it is also to be found in the unwritten traditions of the Church, but in recent years RC theologians have drawn a less sharp distinction between tradition and Scripture and have rather emphasized their ultimate unity. See also TRADITION.

Modern discussions incl. A. B. *Bruce, The Chief End of Revelation (1881); J. R. *Illingworth, Reason and Revelation: An Essay in Christian Apology (1902); J. *Baillie and H. Martin (eds.), Revelation (1927); R. *Bultmann, Der Begriff der Offenbarung im Neuen Testament (Sammlung gemeinverständlicher Vorträge und Schriften aus dem Gebiet der Theologie und Religionsgeschichte, 135; 1929); K. *Barth, Die kirchliche Dogmatik, 1, Heft 1 (1932), pp. 311–514; 1, Heft 2 (1938); and 2, Heft 1 (1940), pp. 1–287; Eng. tr., 1, pt. 1 (1975), pp. 295–489; 1, pt. 2 (1956); and 2, pt.

1 (1957), pp. 1–254; P. *Tillich, Systematic Theology, 1 (New York, 1951; London, 1953), pp. 79–177; J. Baillie, The Idea of Revelation in the Light of Recent Discussion (1956); W. *Pannenberg (ed.), Offenbarung als Geschichte (Göttingen, 1961; Eng. tr., New York and London, 1968); H. D. McDonald, Theories of Revelation: An Historical Study 1860–1960 (1963); R. Latourelle, SJ, Théologie de la Révélation (Studia, 15; 1963; 2nd edn., 1966; Eng. tr., Statten Island, NY, 1966); K. *Rahner and J. Ratzinger, Offenbarung und Überlieferung (Quaestiones Disputatae, 17; 1965; Eng. tr., 1967); G. Moran, FSC, Theology of Revelation (New York, 1966; London, 1967), incl. Eng. tr. of the Dogmatic Constitution on Revelation at the Second Vatican Council, pp. 201–14. M. Seybold and others, Die Offenbarung von der Schrift bis zum Ausgang der Scholastik (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 1, fasc. 1a; 1971); H. Waldenfels and others, Die Offenbarung von der Reformation bis zur Gegenwart (ibid. 1, fasc. 1b; 1978). A. [E. M.] Shorter, Revelation and its Interpretation (Introducing Catholic Theology, 1; 1983); A. Dulles, SJ, Models of Revelation (Garden City, NY, 1983; reissued, Maryknoll, NY, and Dublin, 1992). N. Iung in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2580–618, s.v. 'Révélation', with bibl. See also bibl. to TRADITION.

Revelation, Book of. The last Book of the NT and the only one which is an Apocalypse (see APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE). Its author, identified as 'John' in the title and 1: 9, and called 'the theologian' ('the divine') in later MSS of the title, was traditionally held to be St *John the Apostle.

At the time of writing, the author was in the island of *Patmos 'for the Word of God and the testimony of Jesus' (1: 9). He prefaces his Book with letters to the 'Seven Churches of Asia' (*Ephesus, *Smyrna, *Pergamum, *Thyatira, *Sardis, *Philadelphia, and *Laodicea). The remainder of the Book consists of a series of visions. In the first the author sees the glory of God (ch. 4) and the book sealed with seven seals which only Christ can open (5); as the first six seals are opened, four horsemen appear, presaging the approach of the end (6); the 144,000 faithful of Israel are sealed on the forehead and an innumerable multitude of the redeemed is seen in Heaven (7); the opening of the seventh seal begins a series of seven trumpet calls, heralding various disasters (8 f.); after the 'seven thunders', which the seer is bidden not to record, the angel's book is given him to eat (10: 1–11: 14); and the seventh trumpet call is followed by the proclamation of the kingdom of God and of Christ (11: 15–19). Then follow two general eschatological visions: the woman who is persecuted by a dragon, and war in heaven between *Michael and his angels and Satan (12); and then a pair of visions of a beast from the sea who blasphemes against God and a beast from the earth who compels all men to worship the first beast (13). The execution of judgement on 'Babylon the Great' is followed by world judgement, described under various images (14–16). The destruction of Babylon, now described as a harlot, is vividly portrayed (17 f.). Then comes the 'marriage supper of the Lamb'; the beast and the 'false prophet' are destroyed in a great battle and Satan is 'bound' for a thousand years (see MILLENARIANISM) and finally cast into the lake of brimstone for ever (19 f.). The Book ends with the general resurrection and judgement of souls, the 'New Heaven and the New Earth' and the 'New Jerusalem' (21: 1–22: 5), and an epilogue (22: 6–21).

The Book, which was prob. known to *Papias, is already ascribed by St *Justin to the Apostle John. This attribution was accepted in the *Muratorian Canon, and by *Tertullian and St *Hippolytus and (except by *Gaius, who assigned it to *Cerinthus) generally followed in the W. In the E., however, it was widely rejected, notably by the so-called *Alogi, St *Dionysius of Alexandria (who argued against its Apostolic authorship on the ground of differences in style and content from the Fourth Gospel and believed it to be the work of some other John) and *Eusebius. Some subsequent E. writers and Councils (St *Cyril of Jerusalem, Council of *Laodicea, St John *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Theodoret) did not include it in the Canon, and it was omitted originally from the *Peshitta (Syriac) and *Armenian versions. This John from Asia Minor nowhere claims to be an eye-witness of the incarnate life of Christ, and he refers to the twelve Apostles in so reverential a manner (21: 14) that it is improbable that he was John the son of Zebedee.

Its bitterly hostile attitude to Rome indicates that the Book cannot be earlier than the persecution under *Nero in 64. If the '*Number of the Beast' is correctly interpreted as 'Nero Caesar', this would support a connection with that Emperor. But the Neronian persecution hardly affected Asia Minor and many date the Book from the time of the Emp. *Domitian (81–96). In that case the implication of the cryptogram may be that Domitian was regarded as a second Nero, reflecting the current superstition that Nero was not really dead, but would return (Nero redivivus) as the leader of barbaric hordes.

Many of the pictures and images with which the Book is filled doubtless have a historical reference, not always easy to disentangle. The labour that has been spent on explaining the predictions, however, has almost certainly been wasted. The aim of the Book, as of other Apocalypses, is to give assurance about God's power and purpose, in both salvation and judgement, rather than information about events to come. God's sovereignty and control of human destiny, already manifest in heaven, are guaranteed in the work of Christ and will be triumphantly effective in due time. God will preserve His servants, provided that they are faithful; the seer warns them against all idolatry, compromise with the pagan world, and slackness; and all God's enemies, heavenly and earthly, will be annihilated.

The Greek of the Book, both in grammar and vocabulary, is often uncouth. There are a few points of contact with St John's Gospel, notably in the use of the titles 'Word of God' (19: 13; cf. Jn. 1: 1) and 'Lamb of God' (Jn. 1: 29; cf. the different word at Rev. 5: 6) applied to Christ, neither of which appears elsewhere in the NT except in the Johannine Epistles. Such features could suggest a common theological background for the authors of the Gospel and Rev., but a common authorship is precluded by wide differences in eschatology, tone, and language. The political passion of the Book on behalf of the oppressed has attracted some modern readers and its social and historical background have been intensively studied in recent years. But its importance and potentially dangerous impact stem from its futuristic eschatology and the use made of it by millenarians of all periods, including *Jehovah's Witnesses and esp. fundamentalist Protestants today.

Patristic comm. incl. those by *Victorinus of Pettau, *Oecumenius of Tricca, and Andrew of Caesarea (J. P. Migne, PG 106. 215–486); important medieval comm. by *Bede, *Richard of St-Victor, St *Albert the Great, and *Joachim of Fiore. Modern comm. incl. those of W. *Bousset (KEK 6, 5th edn.; 1896), R. H. *Charles (2 vols., ICC, 1920), E. B. Allo, OP (Études bibliques, 1921), A. *Loisy (Paris, 1923), T. *Zahn (Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 18; 2 vols., 1924), E. Lohmeyer (Hb. NT 16; 1926; 2nd edn., 1953), E. Lohse (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 11; 1960), A. M. Farrer (Oxford, 1964), T. F. Glasson (Cambridge, 1965), G. B. Caird (Black's NT Comm., 1966), H. Kraft (Hb. NT 16a; 1974), G. R. Beasley-Murray (New Cent. Bib., 1974), J. M. Ford (Anchor Bible, 1975), J. [P. M.] Sweet (SCM Pelican Commentaries, 1979) and D. E. Aune (forthcoming). Collations of Gk. MSS by H. C. Hoskier (2 vols., London, 1929). B. *Weiss, Die Johannes-Apokalypse: Textkritische Untersuchungen und Textherstellung (TU 7, Heft 1; 1891). A. S. *Peake, The Revelation of John (1919). A. M. Farrer, The Rebirth of Images: The Making of St John's Apocalypse (1949). S. Giet, L'Apocalypse et l'histoire (1957). T. Holtz, Die Christologie der Apokalypse des Johannes (TU 85; 1962). A. Feuillet, L'Apocalypse: État de la question (Studia Neotestamentica, Subsidia, 3; 1963). J. M. Court, Myth and History in the Book of Revelation (1979). L. L. Thompson, The Book of Revelation: Apocalypse and Empire (New York and Oxford, 1990). R. [J.] Bauckham, The Theology of the Book of Revelation (Cambridge, 1993). W. M. *Ramsay, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia and their Place in the Plan of the Apocalypse (1904). P. S. Minear, I Saw a New Earth: An Introduction to the Visions of the Apocalypse (Washington, DC, 1968). A. Y. Collins, Crisis and Catharsis: The Power of the Apocalypse (Philadelphia [1984]). E. Schüssler Fiorenza, The Book of Revelation: Justice and Judgment (Philadelphia [1985]; collected essays). R. K. Emmerson and B. McGinn (eds.), The Apocalypse in the Middle Ages (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1992). A. Y. Collins in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 5 (1992), pp. 694–708.

Reverend (Lat. reverendus, 'worthy of being revered'). An epithet of respect applied to the clergy since the 15th cent. Since the 17th cent. it has been used as a title prefixed to their names in correspondence. Archbishops and the Bp. of Meath (as the 'Premier Bp. of Ireland') are styled 'Most Reverend', other bishops 'Right Reverend', and deans 'Very Reverend'. Abbesses, prioresses, and other nuns who have the title of 'Mother', are also styled 'Reverend' (or sometimes 'Very Reverend' or 'Right Reverend'). The *Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland is 'Right Reverend'. *Carthusian priests are an exception, all except the prior-general being styled not 'Reverend' but 'Venerable'. The legal right of Nonconformists to the title was established by the 'Keat Case' in 1876, when a faculty was ordered for the erection of a tombstone on which a *Wesleyan minister was styled 'Reverend', the incumbent having previously refused to allow it to be set up.

Revised Version of the Bible. See BIBLE (ENGLISH VERSIONS), 4.

revivalism. A type of religious worship and practice centring in evangelical revivals, or outbursts of mass religious fervour, and stimulated by intensive preaching and prayer meetings. It has been a common feature of the work of many religious bodies since the *Methodist movement of the 18th cent. under the *Wesleys, G. *Whitefield, and others. In the 19th cent. professional revivalists such as C. G. *Finney and D. L. *Moody developed techniques claimed to generate the recurrence of revivals, and some bodies, e.g. the *Salvation Army in its early days, made revivalism the principal element of all their worship. In the 20th cent. notable revivalist campaigns have been led by 'Billy' *Graham. In the USA revivalism has been credited with a considerable influence on social reform.

T. L. Smith, Revivalism and Social Reform in Mid-Nineteenth Century America (Nashville [1957]; 2nd edn., with slightly different title and new afterword, Baltimore, 1980). W. G. McLoughlin, Modern Revivalism: Charles Grandison Finney to Billy Graham (New York [1959]). R. Carwardine, Transatlantic Revivalism: Popular Evangelicalism in Britain and America 1790 1865 (Contributions in American History, 75; Westport, Conn., and London, 1978). J. [H. S.] Kent, Holding the Fort: Studies in Victorian Revivalism (1978). See also works cited under GREAT AWAKENING.

Revue Bénédictine. A Belgian periodical devoted esp. to the study of Christian Latin literature, issued quarterly from the abbey of *Maredsous. The first 6 vols., under the direction of Dom G. van Caloen, were issued as Le Messager des fidèles (1884–9).

Revue Biblique. The quarterly periodical on Biblical studies which is published (at Paris) by the *Dominicans established at the convent St-Étienne at *Jerusalem. It was founded by M. J. *Lagrange and its first issue appeared in Jan. 1892. Its contributions on matters of biblical archaeology tend to be of marked distinction.

Reynolds, Edward (1599–1676), Bp. of *Norwich. He was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and in 1628 appointed preacher at Lincoln's Inn. He had considerable sympathies with the *Puritan Movement, but, though a member of the *Westminster Assembly, did not take the Covenant until 1644. In 1647 he was one of the parliamentary visitors at Oxford, and in 1648–50 was Dean of *Christ Church; he returned briefly in 1660 as Dean before being obliged to move to Merton. He took a prominent part in the efforts made at the Restoration to effect a reconciliation between Episcopalians and Presbyterians; on deciding to conform, he was made Bp. of Norwich in 1661. He published many sermons and short devotional works which maintained a wide popularity down to the early 19th century.

Collected edns. of his works, London, 1658 and 1679; full edn. by A. Chalmers, 6 vols., ibid., 1826, with memoir in vol. 1, pp. xvii–lxxiv.

Reynolds, John. See RAINOLDS, JOHN.

Rhadagunde, St. See RADEGUNDE, ST.

Rheims. See REIMS.

Rhenanus, Beatus (1485–1547), German humanist. A native of Schlettstadt, he studied at *Paris from 1503 to 1507, where Jacob *Faber Stapulensis taught *Aristotelian philosophy. From 1511 to 1526 he lived at Basle, where he became interested in the publishing activities of J. *Froben, and from 1526 onwards at Schlettstadt, here pursuing his philosophical and historical studies. His earliest work was a biography of *Geiler von Kaisersberg (1510). Later he produced many editions of the classics and of the Fathers, e.g. of Velleius Paterculus, from a MS found by him at Murbach (1520), and of *Tertullian (1521). His studies of German antiquities resulted in the Rerum Germanicarum Libri Tres (1531), the best German work in critical historical research of the period. He wrote the earliest Life of his friend, *Erasmus, published first in Erasmus' translation of *Origen in 1536 and again in the first volume of his collected works (1540). Like him, Rhenanus at first favoured the Reformers, esp. their rejection of *indulgences and *auricular confession, but he changed his attitude when the revolutionary character of Protestantism became more apparent.

Correspondence ed. A. Horawitz and K. Hartfelder (Leipzig, 1866; repr. 1966). Selections from his Correspondence ed. R. Walter (Société Savante d'Alsace et des Régions de l'Est. Collection 'Grand Publications', 27; 1986). Eng. tr. of his Life of Erasmus in the tr. of the selected writings of Eramus, ed. J. O. Olin (1965), pp. 31–54. The primary authority is the Life by J. *Sturm (Basle, 1551). A. Horawitz, 'Beatus Rhenanus. Ein biographischer Versuch', Sb. (Wien), 70 (1872), pp. 189–244; id., 'Des Beatus Rhenanus literarische Thätigkeit in den Jahren 1508–1531', ibid. 71 (1872), pp. 643–90; id., 'Des Beatus Rhenanus literarische Thätigkeit in den Jahren 1530–1547', ibid. 72 (1872), pp. 323–76. W. Teichmann, 'Die kirchliche Haltung des Beatus Rhenanus', ZKG 26 (1905), pp. 363–81. H. Kaiser, 'Aus den letzten Jahren des Beatus Rhenanus', Zeitschrift für die Geschichte des Oberrheins, 70 (1916), pp. 30–52. J. F. D'Amico, Theory and Practice in Renaissance Textual Criticism: Beatus Rhenanus between Conjecture and History (Berkeley, Calif. [1988]). The Annuaire of Les Amis de la Bibliothèque Humaniste des Sélestat, 1985, was devoted to celebrating the 500th anniversary of Rhenanus' birth and incl. important arts. by H. Meyer and others. B. von Scarpatetti in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 1 [1985], pp. 104–9, s.v. 'Beatus Rhenanus', with extensive bibl.

Rhodes, Knights of. See HOSPITALLERS.

Rhodo (2nd cent.), anti-*Gnostic apologist. A native of Asia Minor who became, for a time, a disciple of *Tatian at Rome, he wrote under the Emp. Commodus (180–192). *Eusebius tells us of the discussions he had with the aged *Apelles, a disciple of *Marcion. Rhodo's works included a treatise against the Marcionites and a commentary on the *Hexaemeron (Εἰς τὴν Ἑξαήμερον Ὑπόμνημα).

The few surviving frags., nearly all from Eusebius, HE 5. 13, are pr. in M. J. *Routh (ed.), Reliquiae Sacrae, 1 (2nd edn., Oxford, 1846), pp. 435–46; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 5. 1331–8. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 392–4. CPG 1 (1983), p. 109 (no. 1300). See also works cited under APELLES.

rhythmical office. A form of the Divine *Office, popular in the Middle Ages, in which besides the hymns almost all the other parts except the psalms and lessons were put into metre or rhyme. It developed from the practice of enlarging on the Lives of the saints in the *nocturns by additions in rhythm, and was thus also known as a 'Historia'. The construction of such rhythmical offices was a popular diversion for monks possessed of poetic gifts. Among the better-known writers of these offices are St *Odo (d. 942) and St *Odilo (d. 1048), abbots of *Cluny, and *Fulbert, Bp. of Chartres (d. 1028).

R. Jonsson, Historia: Études sur la genèse des offices versifiés (Acta Universitatis Stockholmiensis. Studia Latina Stockholmiensia, 15; 1968).

Ricaut, Paul. See RYCAUT, PAUL.

Ricci, Matteo (1552–1610), missionary in *China. He joined the *Jesuits at Rome in 1571, and his training included the study of mathematics and astronomy. He was sent to Goa in 1578 and from there to Macao in 1582, where he began to learn Chinese. After a long period of study and experimentation, during which he gradually moved northward, he settled in Beijing in 1601. Here he gained favour at court by displaying European scientific inventions and explaining astronomy, and influence among the scholarly élite by his assimilation of Confucian classics to Christian humanist ethics in a number of apologetic and catechetical works, especially his masterpiece, T'ieñchu Shih-i (The True Meaning of the Lord of Heaven, 1595). Full Christian catechesis was kept for a later stage. Basic to his teaching was the conviction that the supreme deity of the Confucian classics was personal and could be assimilated to Christian theism. His method won converts among the Confucian scholarly class, but was less well adapted to Buddhism, Taoism, or popular Chinese religion. Criticism of his methods by other missionaries and the ensuing conflict was one of the factors in the Rites Controversy that erupted about a century later. See CHINA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Opere storiche, ed. P. Tacchi Venturi, SJ (2 vols., Macerata, 1911–13). His journals of 1583–1610, ed. P. M. D'Elia, SJ, Fonti ricciane (Reale Accademia d'Italia, 3 vols., 1942–9); Eng. tr. by L. J. Gallagher, SJ (New York, 1953). The True Meaning of the Lord of Heaven (T'ien-chu Shih-i), ed., with Eng. tr., by E. Malatesta, SJ (St Louis and Taipei, 1985). H. Bernard, SJ, Le Père Matthieu Ricci et la société chinoise de son temps, 1552–1610 (2 vols., Tientsin, 1937). J. Bettray, SVD, Die Akkommodationsmethode des P. Matteo Ricci S.I. in China (Analecta Gregoriana, 76; Rome, 1955). J. D. Spence, The Memory Palace of Matteo Ricci (New York, 1984; London, 1985). V. Cronin, The Wise Man from the West (popular biog.; 1955). Sommervogel, 6 (1895), cols. 1792–5; Polgár, 3 (1990), pp. 65–78.

Ricci, Scipione de' (1741–1810) ecclesiastical reformer. In 1780 he was created Bp. of Pistoia-Prato in Tuscany at the instance of Leopold I. He took the initiative among the Tuscan prelates in introducing into N. Italy *Josephinist doctrines and a higher standard of morals. To this end he founded in 1783 a theological academy at Prato to which he appointed professors in sympathy with his views and carried through a plan of reform at the Synod of *Pistoia in 1786. He was esp. opposed to the excesses (as he held them) of the current devotions to the *Sacred Heart. His proposals however, met with much opposition and in 1791 he resigned from his see and retired into private life. Later he became reconciled to the RC Church.

His Memorie (ed. A. Gelli, 2 vols., Florence, 1865) is the chief authority. M. Vaussard (ed.), Correspondance: Scipione de' Ricci Henri Grégoire (1796–1807) (Publications de l'Institut Français de Florence, 1^e^ sér. Collection d'Études d'histoire, de critique et de philologie, 14; Florence and Paris, 1963). B. Bocchini Camaiani and M. Verga (eds.), Lettere di Scipione de' Ricci a Pietro Leopoldo 1780 1791 (3 vols., Florence, 1990–2). Register of letters to de' Ricci from bishops and cardinals (1780–93), by C. Lamioni (Fonti Storiche Pistoiesi, 8; 1988). There is also a full Life by L. J. A. de Potter (3 vols., Brussels, 1825). B. Matteuci, Scipione de' Ricci (Studi e Documenti di Storia Religiosa; Brescia, 1941). E. Passerin, 'Il fallimento dell'offensiva riformista di Scipione de' Ricci secondo nuovi documenti (1781–1788)', Rivista di Storia della Chiesa in Italia, 9 (1955), pp. 99–131, incl. texts. C. Fantappiè, Reforme ecclesiastiche e resistenze sociali: La sperimentazione istituzionale nella diocesi di Prato alla fine dell'antico regime (Religione e Società, 14; Bologna, 1986). See also works cited under PISTOIA, SYNOD OF, esp. arts. in work ed. C. Lamioni.

Richard of Chichester, St (*c.*1197–1253), Bp. of *Chichester. He was born at 'Wych' (i.e. Droitwich), and is hence sometimes known as 'Richard of Wych'. After studying at Oxford and Paris, he became chancellor of the University of Oxford *c.*1235 and a little later, under Abp. St *Edmund of Abingdon, chancellor of *Canterbury. He accompanied Edmund in his exile and was with him when he died (1242). In 1244 he was elected Bp. of Chichester but, on the refusal of Henry III, who favoured Richard Passelew, a rival candidate, to surrender the temporalities of the see, he obtained consecration from *Innocent IV at Lyons in 1245. Only under the threat of excommunication did Henry give way. Richard was a man of deep spirituality and an excellent administrator of his diocese, where he did much to raise the standard of clerical life. He was canonized by Urban IV in 1262. His shrine in Chichester Cathedral, where many cures are said to have been wrought, was destroyed by order of *Henry VIII in 1538. Feast day, 3 Apr.

His Statutes are pr. in F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney (eds.), Councils & Synods with Other Documents relating to the English Church, 2, pt. 1, 1205–1265 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 451–67; his will, with notes by W. H. Blaauw, in Sussex Archaeological Collections, 1 (1848), pp. 164–92. An almost contemporary Life by Ralf Bocking, with account of miracles and the bull of canonization, in AASS, April 1 (1675), pp. 282–318. Also ed., with Eng. tr., introd., and some other material, by D. Jones, Saint Richard of Chichester: The sources for his life (Sussex Record Society, 79 for 1993; 1995). E. F. Jacob, 'St. Richard of Chichester', JEH 7 (1956), pp. 174–88; C. H. Lawrence, 'St. Richard of Chichester', in M. J. Kitch (ed.), Studies in Sussex Church History (1981), pp. 35–55; D. Jones, 'The Medieval Lives of St. Richard of Chichester', Anal. Boll. 105 (1987), pp. 105–29. Mrs Tout in DNB 48 (1896), pp. 202–4. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 2099–101, s.v. 'Wyche, Richard de'.

Richard of Middleton (b. *c.*1249), 'Richardus de Mediavilla', Franciscan philosopher and theologian. It is disputed whether he was French or English and very little is known of his life. As a bachelor of theology he was one of those charged to examine the writings of Petrus *Olivi at Paris in 1283. Records show him as a regent master there from 1284 to 1287, and he was in the household of Louis of Anjou, Bp. of Toulouse, *c.*1296. The date of his death is unknown. His chief writings are a Commentary on the 'Sentences' of Peter Lombard, notable for its clarity and precision, Quodlibets and Quaestiones disputatae. He had a very free mind but at a number of points he followed the teaching of St *Thomas Aquinas. He rejected the thesis that there was an immediate bond of union between the human intellect and God, the uncreated Light, and also denied the validity of St *Anselm's *Ontological Argument for the being of God. In his 'Quodlibeta' he showed a keen interest in the phenomena of hypnotism. He also held that a plurality of worlds is possible.

His comm. on the Sentences, Book 4, was pr. at Venice, *c.*1477, 1489, and 1499; the whole comm., with the 'Quodlibeta', at Brescia, 1591. Quaestio Disputata de Privilegio Martini Papae IV, first ed. F. M. Delorme, OFM (Quaracchi, 1925). R. Zavalloni, OFM, Richard de Mediavilla et la controverse sur la pluralité des formes: Textes inédits et étude critique (Philosophes médiévaux, 2; 1951). P. Glorieux, La Littérature quodlibétique de 1260 à 1320, 1 (Bibliothèque thomiste, 5; 1925), pp. 267–73, 2 (ibid. 21; 1935), p. 257. E. Hocedez, SJ, Richard de Middleton: Sa vie, ses œuvres, sa doctrine (SSL 6; 1925). J. Lechner, Die Sakramentenlehre des Richard von Mediavilla (Münchener Studien zur Historischen Theologie, 5; 1925). P. Rucker, OFM, Der Ursprung unserer Begriffe nach Richard von Mediavilla (BGPM 31, Heft 1; 1934). M. Schmaus, 'Die theologische Methode des Richard von Mediavilla', Franziskanische Studien, 48 (1966), pp. 254–65. E. *Gilson, History of Christian Philosophy in the Middle Ages (1955), pp. 347–50 and 696–8. É. Amann in DTC 13 (pt. 2; 1937), cols. 2669–75, s.v. 'Richard de Mediavilla'; V. Heynck in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 8 (1963), col. 1292, s.v. 'Richard v. Mediavilla'; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1253–5, s.v. 'Mediavilla, Richard de', each with detailed bibl.

Richard of St-Victor (d. 1173), *Victorine theologian and spiritual writer. Apparently a native of Scotland, he came as a young man to the Abbey of St-Victor in Paris. He became subprior in 1159, and prior in 1162. His most important theological treatise, 'De Trinitate', presented a complex argument, based on the nature of love, of necessary reasons for a triune deity. His other writings include many works devoted to the spiritual life (e.g. 'De praeparatione animi ad contemplationem, seu Liber dictus Benjamin minor', 'De gratia contemplationis, seu Benjamin maior', and 'De quattuor gradibus violentiae caritatis'), and to scriptural exegesis (e.g. 'Mysticae adnotationes in Psalmos', 'In visionem Ezechielis', and 'De Emmanuele'), as well as a compendium on the liberal arts, exegesis, and history ('Liber Exceptionum'), and a collection of sermons ('Sermones centum'). He followed *Hugh of St-Victor in incorporating ideas from *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite into a theology that was basically Augustinian; at the same time he insisted on the importance of demonstration and argument in matters of theology, and emphasized the folly of contentment with a mere array of authorities. His spiritual teaching greatly influenced the Franciscan school, esp. St *Bonaventure.

Collected ed. of his Opera, Venice, 1506; also ed., with brief Life by John of Toulouse, a Victorine (Rouen, 1650; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 196. 1–1378). Also by Richard are the 'Sermones centum' pr. as an appendix to the works of Hugh of St-Victor in PL 177. 899–1210; the exposition on Acts 12: 1–11 pr. under the name of *Fulbert of Chartres, ibid. 141. 277–306; Sermons et opuscules spirituels inédits, 1: L'édit d'Alexandre ou les trois processions, ed. J. Chatillon and W.-J. Tulloch, with Fr. tr. by J. Barthélemy (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité Médiévale [Bruges, 1951; all pub.]); and the Liber Exceptionum, ed. J. Chatillon (Textes Philosophiques du Moyen Âge, 5; 1958). Opuscules théologiques also ed. J. Ribaillier (ibid. 15; 1967); 'De quattuor gradibus violentiae caritatis', ed. G. Dumeige, with Ivo, Épître à Séverin sur la charité (ibid. 3; 1955), pp. 89–200; De Trinitate, ed. J. Ribaillier (ibid. 6; 1958) and, with Fr. tr., by G. Salet, SJ (SC 63; 1959). Eng. tr. of Selections from his Spiritual Writings, with introd. by C. Kirchberger (London, 1957); 'The Twelve Patriarchs' (Benjamin minor), 'The Mystical Ark' (Benjamin maior), and Book 3 of 'De Trinitate', tr., with introd., by G. A. Zinn (Classics of Western Spirituality [1979]). J. Ebner, Die Erkenntnisse Richards von St Viktor (BGPM 19, Heft 4; 1917). C. Ottaviano, 'Riccardo di S. Vittore. La vita, le opere, il pensiero', Memorie della R. Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei. Classe di scienze morali, storiche et filologiche, 6th ser. 4 (1933), pp. 411–541. A. M. Éthier, OP, Le 'De Trinitate' de Richard de Saint-Victor (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Médiévales d'Ottawa, 9; Paris and Ottawa, 1939). L. Ott, Untersuchungen zur theologischen Briefliteratur der Frühscholastik (BGPM 34; 1937), pp. 549–657 ('Die theologischen Briefe Richards von St. Viktor'). G. Dumeige, Richard de Saint-Victor et l'idée chrétienne de l'amour (1952), with bibl. pp. 171–85. D. van den Eynde, OFM, 'Les Commentaires sur Joel, Abdias et Nahum attribués à Hugues de Saint-Victor', Franciscan Studies, 17 (1957), pp. 363–72. J. Châtillon in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 593–654, s.v. 'Richard (10) de Saint-Victor'.

Richelieu, Armand Jean du Plessis (1585–1642), French cardinal, theologian, and politician. Destined at first for a miliary career, he took holy orders when his elder brother entered the *Grande Chartreuse, in order to secure the bishopric of Luçon to which his family had a claim. He was consecrated in 1607. On taking over his diocese, he enlisted the help of *Capuchins and *Oratorians, who preached missions in the parishes and sought to bring the *Huguenots back to the Church. Chosen to represent the clergy of Poitou in the States General in 1614, Richelieu gained influence with the Queen Mother and the young King, Louis XIII. In 1616 he was appointed Secretary of State, but he was dismissed on the downfall of C. Concini, whose patronage he had enjoyed. He retired to Blois and, in 1618, he was exiled to *Avignon. There he wrote Les principaux points de la foi de l'Église catholique (1617; Eng. tr. 1635) in answer to points raised by Protestant ministers, and the Instruction du chrétien (1621), the famous catechism written for his diocese, which was translated into many languages. He was recalled to Paris in 1619 through the influence of the Capuchin Father Joseph Leclerc du Tremblay, who became his close friend and adviser. In 1622 Richelieu reconciled Louis XIII with his mother and two years later he was created a cardinal by Gregory XV. He became President of the Council of Ministers in 1624, and from 1629 chief minister, a post which he held until his death. He aimed at the establishment of a centralized absolutism in France at every level and opposed both the feudal aristocracy and the political power of the Huguenots. The latter were defeated at La Rochelle in 1628 and their political privileges were abolished. In his foreign policy he aimed at securing France's frontiers and undermining the Habsburg predominance in Europe; he thus allied himself with the Protestant German princes and *Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden against the Emperor, thereby incurring the opposition of the devout Catholic party in France and incidentally impeding the progress of the *Counter-Reformation in Germany. He kept his political and religious commitments separate. In the controversy over *Gallicanism, he attempted to hold the balance between acceptance of the Pope's spiritual authority and rejection of his interference in French temporal affairs. He recognized the unorthodox character of the views put forward by the Abbé de *Saint-Cyran and his circle, who came to be known as the *Jansenists. He was Abbot General of *Cluny from 1629 and he encouraged the reform of the *Benedictine and other religious orders; he also fostered the renewal of religious practice and the training of priests. His theological position, expounded in the posthumously published Traité de la perfection du chrétien (1646), was based on reason and belief in the power of the will; although he recognized the value of the contemplative life, he attached greater importance to the active. He was a patron of art and literature and, in 1635, founded the French Academy. See also THIRTY YEARS WAR.

Les Papiers de Richelieu: Section politique intérieure, correspondance et papiers d'État, ed. P. Grillon (Monumenta Europae Historica, Paris, 1975 ff.). Richelieu's Testament Politique, first pub. Amsterdam, 1688; crit. edn. by L. André (Paris, 1947). The best edn. of the Mémoires du Cardinal de Richelieu (written after his death from his papers, first pub. 1650) is that pub. by the Societé de l'Histoire de France (10 vols., 1907–31); see also Rapports et notices sur l'édition des Mémoires du Cardinal de Richelieu, by J. Lair and others (3 vols., 1905–22). G. Hanotaux and le Duc de la Force, Histoire du Cardinal de Richelieu (6 vols., 1893–1947). Other studies by C. J. Burckhardt (4 vols., Munich, 1935–67; abridged Eng. tr. of vols. 1, 2, and 3, 1940–71), C. V. Wedgwood ('Teach Yourself History', London, 1949), D. P. O'Connell (London, 1968), M. Andrieux and others (Richelieu; Collection Génies et Réalités, 1972), and R. J. Knecht ('Profiles in Power', London, 1991). G. Fagniez, Le Père Joseph et Richelieu (1577–1638) (2 vols., 1894). V.-L. Tapié, La France de Louis XIII et de Richelieu (1952; 2nd edn., 1967; Eng. tr., 1974; with additional matter and new bibl., Cambridge, 1984); O. A. Ranum, Richelieu and the Councillors of Louis XIII (Oxford, 1963); R. [J.] Bonney, Political Change in France under Richelieu and Mazarin 1624–1661 (Oxford, 1978); J. H. Elliott, Richelieu and Olivares (Cambridge, 1984); J. Bergin, Cardinal Richelieu: Power and the Pursuit of Wealth (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1985). L. C. van Dijck, O.Praem., 'Pour une histoire du généralat prémontré du Cardinal de Richelieu', Analecta Praemonstratensia, 60 (1984), pp. 256–88; id., 'Le Cardinal de Richelieu, abbé de Prémontré', ibid. 62 (1986), pp. 150–233; 63 (1987), pp. 70–88 and 175–220. There is an attractive character study of Father Joseph Leclerc du Tremblay in A. Huxley, Grey Eminence (1941).

Ridley, Nicholas (*c.*1500–55), Bp. of London. After studying at Cambridge, the *Sorbonne, and Louvain, he became Fellow of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge (*c.*1530), chaplain to T. *Cranmer (1537), vicar of Herne in Kent (1538), and Master (1540) of Pembroke Hall. In 1547 he became Bp. of *Rochester and in 1550, upon E. *Bonner's deprivation, of London. From *c.*1535 he had had definite leanings towards the teachings of the Reformers, partly through the study of *Ratramnus' book on the Eucharist, and *c.*1546 he was a major influence in shifting T. *Cranmer's Eucharistic views away from *Real Presence doctrine. He assisted in the compilation of the BCP of 1549 and in the establishment of Protestantism at Cambridge University. Nevertheless, in 1550–1 he played the leading role in defeating J. *Hooper's attempt to avoid wearing *rochet and *chimere at his consecration as bishop. In 1553 he supported the claims of Lady Jane Grey to the Crown, and on Mary's accession was deprived of his see. After the Oxford disputations (1554) he was excommunicated, and, when heresy was made a capital offence, was burned with H. *Latimer at Oxford, 16 Oct. 1555. Like Latimer, he preached on the social injustices of his age, and a sermon he preached before the King was partly the occasion of the foundation of Christ's Hospital, St Thomas's Hospital, and Bridewell. In the American BCP (1979), feast day (with Latimer and Cranmer), 16 Oct.

Surviving works ed. H. Christmas (Parker Society, 1; 1841), with biog. notice, pp. i–xvi; selections also in The Fathers of the English Church, 4 (1809), pp. 31–267, with account of his life and martyrdom based on J. *Foxe, pp. 3–25; his A Brief Declaration of the Lord's Supper, ed. H. C. G. *Moule (1895), with biog. sketch, pp. 1–68. G. Ridley, The Life of Nicholas Ridley (1763).

Modern Life by J. G. Ridley (London, 1957). W. A. J. Archbold in DNB 48 (1896), pp. 286–90. See also bibl. to VESTIARIAN CONTROVERSY.

Ridsdale Judgement. The judgement of the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, pronounced on 12 May 1877, acc. to which Eucharistic vestments, 'alb and chasuble or cope, as distinguished from the surplice', were declared illegal in the C of E, except that copes were allowed in cathedrals and collegiate churches, and the *eastward position was permitted provided the *manual acts were not concealed from the congregation as a result. The defendant was the Revd C. J. Ridsdale, *Perpetual Curate of St Peter's, Folkestone.

The Judgement was fully reported as 'The Folkestone Ritual Case' in The Times, Monday, 14 May 1877, pp. 11–13; the official law report of the appeal is Ridsdale v. Clifton [1877], 2 PD, pp. 276–353.

Riemenschneider, Tilman (c.1460–1531), German wood-carver and sculptor. He was a native of Osterode (Harz) and lived from 1483 until his death at Würzburg, where he became Bürgermeister in 1520. He took a prominent part on the side of the insurgents in the *Peasants' War in 1525. His work, which was in both wood and stone, was marked by deep religious feeling; and now, after three centuries of neglect, it is considered among the most remarkable of the late Gothic style. In his altar-pieces he secured unity by focusing the design on a central point. In place of colour, he achieved his effects by the play of light, the texture of his material and the highly expressive faces of his figures. Among his most notable works are the Altar of the Blessed Sacrament in S. Jakobus, Rothenburg ob der Tauber (1499–1504); the tomb of Rudolf von Scherenberg (1496–9) and carvings in the Lady Chapel (1500–5) and on the High Altar (1508–10) in Würzburg Cathedral; and the tomb of the Emp. Henry II and his wife, Cunigunde, in Bamberg Cathedral (1499–1513).

J. Bier, Die Jugendwerke Tilman Riemenschneiders (1925), and other works of this author; K. Gerstenberg, Tilman Riemenschneider (Vienna, 1941; 6th edn., Munich, 1962); H. M. von Freeden, Tilman Riemenschneider (Frankfurt, 1954; 2nd edn., 1959). G. Poensgen (ed.), Der Windsheimer Zwölfbotenaltar von Tilman Riemenschneider im kurpfälzischen Museum zu Heidelberg (1955). M. [D. K.] Baxandall, The Limewood Sculptors of Renaissance Germany (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1980), pp. 172–90.

Rienzo, Cola di (c.1313–54), i.e. Nicolas, the son of Lorenzo, Tribune of the Roman People. The son of an innkeeper and a washerwoman, he passed his early years at Agnani, returning to Rome at the age of about 20. Intensive study of Roman classical authors, coupled with his own fertile imagination, led to a conviction that he was divinely inspired to liberate Rome from the tyranny of the patrician families and to bring about a rebirth of the Roman Empire. In 1343 he was part of a Roman embassy to *Clement VI which petitioned the Pope to return the Papacy from Avignon to Rome and to declare 1350 a *Jubilee Year. Clement was sufficiently impressed by Rienzo's abilities to make him a notary in 1344. In May 1347 Rienzo stirred up a popular revolution, as a result of which the people created him 'Tribune of the People'. While at first he ruled nominally in partnership with the Papal legate, he became increasingly autocratic, and it soon became clear that he wished to unite all the Italian cities under his rule, and even that he had imperial aspirations. On 1 August he bathed in the font of the *Lateran Basilica, in which, acc. to tradition, the Emp. *Constantine had been baptized, and then had himself created a 'Knight of the Holy Ghost' in an extraordinary ceremony, and issued a revolutionary proclamation that the sovereignty of the world had returned to the Roman People. This was followed a fortnight later by his spectacular coronation as Tribune, a further proclamation, and a series of decrees. In his summons to Charles of Bohemia, Louis of Bavaria, and the Electors of the *Holy Roman Empire to appear before him the following Whit Sunday, he challenged the election of Charles IV (which had been engineered by Clement VI) and the Papal right to confirm imperial elections. The Roman people soon perceived that Cola was no longer their delegate, and their violent reaction forced him to flee from Rome in Dec. 1347 to the protection of the *Spiritual Franciscans of Monte Maiella, among whom he lived for two years. In 1350 he went to Prague to deliver a prophetic message to Charles IV, who arrested him and sent him to Clement VI, who imprisoned him. But when, in 1353, Cardinal Albornoz went to Rome to restore order, Innocent VI sent Rienzo with him. He was appointed senator, and triumphantly entered the city in 1354. Once again, however, his behaviour offended the people, who rose against him and killed him while he was trying to escape. A colourful figure, Cola was a skilful orator and letter writer, and among those with whom he corresponded were Clement VI, Charles IV, Ernest Pardubitz, Abp. of Prague, and the poet *Petrarch. He is the hero of one of Petrarch's odes and of the well-known opera by Richard Wagner (1842).

Epistolario di Cola di Rienzo, ed. A. Gabrielli (Rome, 1890); Briefwechsel des Cola di Rienzo, ed. K. Burdach and P. Piur (Vom Mittelalter zur Reformation. Forschungen zur Geschichte der deutschen Bildung, 2; 5 vols., 1912–29), includes as vol. 1, K. Burdach, Rienzo und die geistige Wandlung seiner Zeit (2 parts, 1913–28). Anon. contemporary Life, once attributed to T. Fortifiocca, pub. by A. Fei, Bracciano, 1624; modern edn. by A. M. Ghisalberti (Florence, 1928); Eng. tr. by J. Wright (Toronto, 1975). P. Piur, Cola di Rienzo (Vienna, 1931), with bibl. M. E. Cosenza, Francesco Petrarca and the Revolution of Cola di Rienzo (Chicago, 1913). J. Weider, 'Cola di Rienzo', in F. Seibt (ed.), Karl IV und sein Kreis (Lebensbilder zur Geschichte der böhmischen Länder, 3; 1978), pp. 111–44. Popular studies by I. Origo (Tribune of Rome, 1938) and V. Fleischer (London, 1938); anonymous novel, with much historical material, by Sir E. Bulwer-Lytton, Rienzi, the Last of the Tribunes (3 vols., 1835).

Rievaulx (i.e. Rye Vale), N. Yorks. One of the earliest *Cistercian foundations in England. At the invitation of Thurstan (d. 1140), Abp. of *York, a colony of Cistercians, under Abbot William, was sent by St *Bernard of Clairvaux to England to start a monastery, and in 1131 Walter Espec, who himself joined the community later, provided them with a site about 20 miles N. of York. The abbey was dedicated to the BVM. It soon gained repute as a centre of devotion, learning, and agriculture, and several other foundations such as Melrose sprang from it. By the time of St *Ailred (the 'Bernard of the North'), its third abbot (1147–67), the community numbered 600. Later its importance declined and at the *Dissolution there were only 23 religious beside the abbot. Today the abbey lies in ruins, but the greater part of the exquisite Early English cruciform church remains, with many of the altars in situ.

J. C. Atkinson (ed.), Cartularium Abbatiae de Rievalle (Surtees Society, 83; 1889). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 5 (1825 edn.), pp. 274–86. M. J. Parins, 'Rievaulx: the Architecture in its first hundred years', Studia Monastica, 22 (1980), pp. 89–99, with refs. T. M. Fallow in VCH, York, 3, ed. W. Page (1913), pp. 149–53; W. H. St J. Hope in VCH, North Riding, 1, ed. W. Page (1914), pp. 494–502. C. H. Talbot in NCE 12 (1967), pp. 494 f., s.v.

Righteousness, Original. See ORIGINAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.

rigorism. In a technical sense the word is used as another name for the system of moral philosophy known as *Tutiorism. Non-technically it is employed to denote the cult of extreme asceticism and self-denial and rigid keeping of the letter of the law, and thus approximates in meaning to *Puritanism and *formalism.

Rijswick Clause. See RYSWICK CLAUSE.

Rimini, Synod of. See ARIMINUM AND SELEUCIA, SYNODS OF.

rings. Of the ring, which is commonly considered an emblem of fidelity, there have been, and still are, several kinds in Christian use:

(1) Early Christian rings. In the 3rd–4th cents. rings with Christian emblems seem to have been often worn in ordinary life.

(2) Episcopal rings. Rings are first mentioned as an official part of a bishop's insignia of office in the early 7th cent., and their use became general in the 9th–10th cents. They were emblematic of the bishop's betrothal to his church. Worn on the third finger of the right hand, they were engraved with a signet and sometimes enclosed relics (e.g. the ring of St *Hugh of Lincoln). Today the bishop's ring is of gold and usually contains an amethyst. Cardinals, abbots, and some abbesses also wear similar rings. In the E. Church rings are not worn by bishops or abbots.

(3) Nuns' rings. In many female orders, e.g. the *Benedictine and *Cistercian, a ring is conferred at solemn profession.

(4) Wedding rings. Originating in the betrothal rings used by the Romans, they were adopted by Christians at an early date, but customs regarding their use have differed widely. In England down to the end of the 16th cent. the bride wore the ring on her right hand; since then it has been worn on the left hand. The custom of wearing it on the third finger is explained by the practice of pronouncing the Trinitarian formula over the thumb and first two fingers, so that the third was reached at the 'Amen' which sealed the marriage rite. The current RC marriage ceremony envisages the use of a ring for both husband and wife, providing forms of blessing for both. In the E. Church both husband and wife are given rings.

(5) The 'Fisherman's Ring' (anulus piscatoris). A gold seal-ring which the cardinal camerlengo places on the finger of a new Pope. Engraved on it is St *Peter in a boat fishing (cf. Lk. 5: 10), with the Pope's name round it. The earliest mention of it is in a letter of Clement IV (1265). Since the 15th cent. it has been used for sealing Papal briefs. At the death of a Pope it is ceremonially broken up by a camerlengo.

(6) The 'Coronation Ring', in England placed by the Abp. of *Canterbury on the fourth finger of the Sovereign's right hand as 'the ensign of Kingly Dignity and of Defence of the Catholic Faith'.

(7) *Rosary rings. These have ten small knobs and are used for saying the rosary. They were in use in the 15th cent. and have been revived in modern times.

